

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

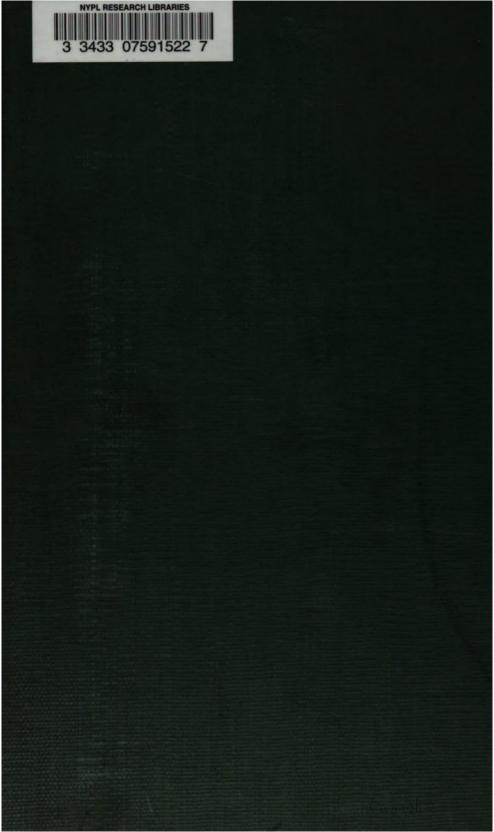

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

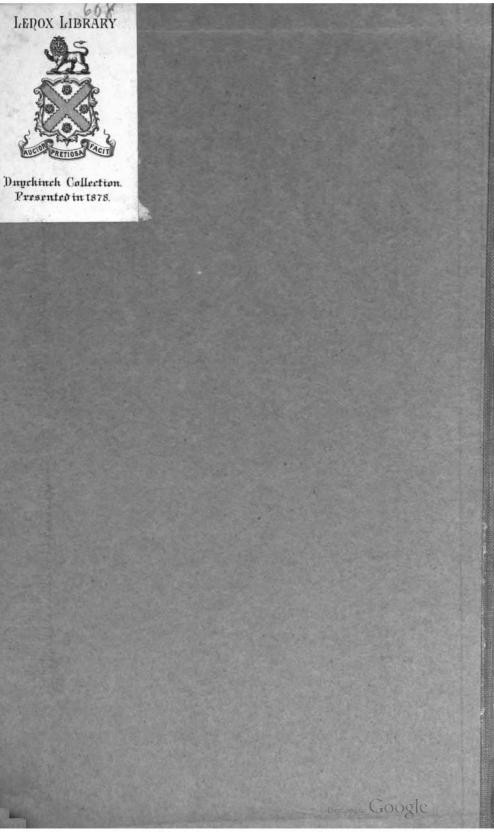

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

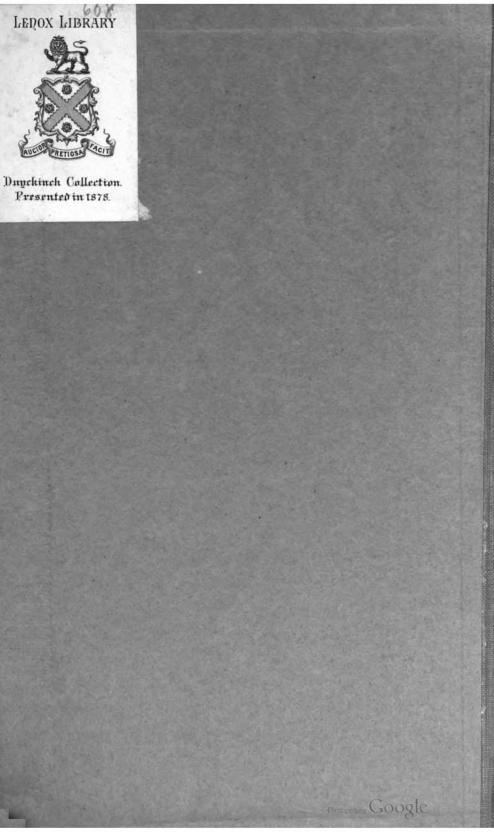

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

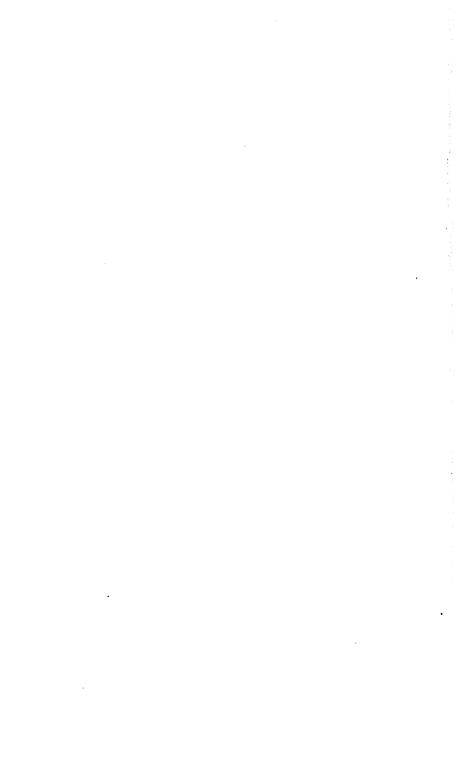

. .

Digitized by Google

.

.

· · ·

Digitized by Google

.

• •

ATTIC NIGHTS

0 F

AULUS GELLIUS:

TRANSLATED INTO ENGLISH,

BY THE REV. W. BELOE, F.S.A.

IN THREE VOLUMES.

VOL. III.

LONDON:

٠

FRINTED FOR J. JOHNSON, ST. FAUL'S CHURCH-YARD.

M DCC XCV.

Nº 1

۱

IB/

THI

ATTIC NIGHTS

0 1

AULUS GELLIUS.

BOOK XIII.

Снач. і.

An accurate enquiry into the meaning of those words which are found in the first of Cicero's Orations against Anthony—" But many things seem to happen contrary to the order of nature and of sate"."—Examination whether those two words, " fatum and natura," have the same or a different signification.

MARCUS CICERO, in his first Philippic, has left these words: " I hastened to follow him, whom those who were present did not

¹ Fate.]—Cicero's treatife on Fate has come down to us in fo mutilated a flate, that it is not eafy to collect from it what was his opinion on that fubject. Whatever were his private fentiments upon it, as a philosopher, he would speak, as an orator, in popular language; according to which, a Vol. III. B man not follow, not that I could be of any fervice (for I did not expect that, nor could I accomplifh it); but if any thing to which human nature is liable had happened to me, (for many things feem to happen contrary to the order of nature and of fate) I fhould this day leave my voice a witnefs to the republic of my perpetual attachment to its interefts." Here he ufes the words fate and nature: whether he intends they fhould bear the fame fignification, and ufes two words initead of one, or whether he has fo divided and feparated them, that nature feems to bear one meaning, and fate another, is, I think, worthy of confideration. And firft, we must enquire how man who died what we call a natural death, was faid to die according to fate; whereas an accidental death was supposed to be according to the regular course of fate or nature. Some philosophers also made fate and nature the same. Alexander Aphrodisiens concludes, after arguing the point, that fate is nothing more than the peculiar nature of each individual. He also cites Theophrastus for the same opinion.

Theophraftus, fays he, clearly demonstrates, that according to nature and according to fate mean exactly the fame.

See Lucan, ver. 91.

Deus magnufque potenfque Sive canit fatum, feu quod jubet ipfe canendo Fit fatum.

which Milton thus imitates-

Though I uncircumfcribed myfelf retire, And put not forth my goodnefs, which is free To act or not, necessity and chance Approach not me, and what I will is fate.

he

2

he can affirm that many things may happen (bumanitus) according to the order of human nature, (prater fatum) in opposition to fate, fince the plan and order, and unconquerable neceffity of fate is fo appointed, that in the will of fate all things are included, unlefs he has followed Homer's expression,—

Left, fpite of fate, you visit Pluto's realm.

There is no doubt, however, that Homer here means a violent and fudden death, which may justly feem to happen contrary to nature. But why he has called that fort of death contrary to fate, it is not our business to enquire, nor have we time for the investigation. However, it must not be passed by, that Virgil has expressed the fame opinion as Cicero upon fate, as in his fourth book, where he speaks of Elisa, who suffered death by force, Since nor by fate nor her deferts fhe fell.

As if in dying, those modes of death which are violent do not seem to come by the order of fate. But Cicero seems to have followed the words of Demosthenes, a man of equal wisdom and eloquence, who has faid the fame things of nature and fate, in his excellent oration, $\pi \epsilon \rho \epsilon$ $\sigma \tau \epsilon \rho \alpha \nu \epsilon$. " He who thinks himself born only for his parents, awaits the natural and regular order of death; but he who fancies himself born for the fervice of his country, will meet death

B 2

Digitized by Google

that that he may not fee his country enflaved." What Cicero feems to have called fate and nature, Demofthenes long before called "the natural and regular order of death," which is that fort of death which comes in the courfe of fate and nature, and is occafioned by no external force.

Снар. 11.

On the familiar conversation of Pacuvius and Accius in the town of Tarentum.

THEY who had leifure and inclination to enquire into the modes of life which learned men purfued, and to commit them to writing, have related this anecdote of the tragic poets Marcus Pacuvius and Lucius Accius. "When Pacuvius," fay they, " was an old man, and afflicted with perpetual difeafe of body, he retired from Rome to Tarentum. Accius, who was a much younger man¹, in his way to Afia, coming

* Younger man.]—According to fome authors he was fifty years younger, yet he exhibited a tragedy under the fame ædiles. Fragments remain of many of his tragedies, fome of the fineft of which are preferved in the philosophical works, ing to Tarentum, visited Pacuvius, and being politely treated, and detained by him many days, read, at the request of Pacuvius, his tragedy of Atreus. Pacuvius, they faid, remarked that his lines were fonorous and full of dignity, but that they seemed rather harsh and rugged. "What you fay," replied Accius, " is true; nor do I lament it is fo. Yet I hope that what I write in future will be better. For what we observe in fruits is true of the powers of the mind', those which at first works of Cicero, and all are collected in the fragments of the ancient Latin poets, by H. Stephens.

Paterculus prefers him to Pacuvius, though he allows this latter to be a more correct writer. Horace, giving the popular judgment of his time concerning them, fays-

Ambigitur quoties uter utro fit prius; aufert Pacuvius docti famam fenls, Acclus alti.

Quintilian repeats nearly the fame opinion of them.

* Powers of the mind.]—There are fome excellent remarks by Dr. Warton, in his Effay on the Genius of Pope, which may ferve to illustrate this opinion of Accius. He is speaking of the early figns of genius in a young man, and thus diftinguishes the effects of opposite qualities: "If his predominant talent be warmth and vigour of imagination, it will break out in fanciful and luxuriant defcriptions, the colouring of which will perhaps he too rich and glowing. If his chief force lies in the understanding rather than in the imagination, it will foon appear by folid and manly observations on life and learning, expressed in a more chaste and subdued style. The former will frequently be hurried into obscurity or turgidity, and a false grandeur of diction; the B 2 first are rough and bitter, become afterwards mild and fweet. But those which are fost and smooth, and are mellow at first, do not afterwards become ripe, but corrupt. It seems therefore that in the mind something should be left for time to improve."

B 3

Digitized by Google

۱

latter will feldom hazard a figure, whofe ufage is not already established, or an image beyond common life; will always be perfpicuous, if not elevated; will never difgust, if not transport his readers; will avoid the grosser faults, if not arrive at the greater beauties of composition; the "elequentia genus" for which he will be diftinguished, will not be the "plenum, et erectum, et audax, et præcelsum," but the "pressum, et mite, et limatum."

A remark fomewhat of a fimilar kind occurs in a fragment of Alexis the comic poet, preferved in Athenæus. It is thus translated by Mr. Cumberland, in his fourth volume of the Observer :

"The nature of man in fome refpect refembles that of wine, for as fermentation is necessary to new wine, fo is it also to a youthful spirit; when that process is over, and it comes to settle and subside, we may then, and not till then, expect to find a permanent tranquillity."

The fame idea is carried on in a fubsequent passage, which also is preferved in the fame place, and translated by the fame perfor thus :---

" I am now far advanced in the evening of life's day, and what is there in the nature of man that I should liken it to that of wine, feeing that old age, which recommends the latter, mars the former; old wine, indeed, exhilarates, but old men are miferable to themselves and others."

Antiphanes the comic poet has fruck upon the fame comparifon, but with a different turn, "Old age and wine," fays he, "may well be compared; let either of them exceed their date ever fo little, and the whole turns four."

Снлр.

CHAP. III.

Whether the words necessitudo and necessitas have diffinet meanings.

IT is a circumstance worthy of ridicule, that many grammarians affert there is a great and material difference between necessitudo ' and necesfitas; that necessitudo is a certain urgent and compelling power, necessitudo a certain law and bond of religious connexion, and this is its only fignification. But as there is no difference whether you

⁸ Neceffitudo.]---Cicero confirms the obfervations of Gellius by his ufage of thefe words. In his oration de Harufpicum refponfis, he has, "ordo rerum et neceffitudo for neceffity; and in that for Rofcius, we find magnam neceffitatem poffidet paternus maternus fue fanguis;" and in that for Sylla yet more clearly, "Si noftram neceffitatem familiaritatemque violaffet." In both which places intimacy of union muft be understood. Yet fome old grammarians still extant, insist upon the distinction of the words.

Necessarius was commonly uled for a relation. See for example Apuleius, p. 4. Price's edition.

Hunc talem quanquam necessarium et summe agnitam. &c. The following from Seneca is no bad commentary on the chapter before.us:

" Officium effe filii, uxoris, et earum personarum quasi necessitudo suscitat et ferre opem jubet. See also Festus, at the word necessarius.

B 4

fay

lay suavitudo or suavitas, sanctitudo or sanctitas, acerbitudo or acerbitas, acritudo or (as Accius in his Neoptolemus) acrisas, so there can be no reason why necessitudo and necessitas should be confidered as diffinct. In old books you usually find necessitudinem applied to fignify that quod² necessium est, but necessitas is seldom used pro 3 jure officioque observantie affinitatifve, although they who are united by this jus affinitatis familiaritati/ve are called necessarii, relations. I have, however, in that speech of Caius Cæsar, wherein he recommends the Plautian rogation, met with the usage of necessitudo in the sense of jus affinitatis. His words are these, equidem + mibi videor pro nostra necessitate, non labore, non opera, non industria de-I have written thus much upon these two fuisse. words, fince I read the fourth book of Sempronius Afellio, an old writer of history, in which he thus speaks of Paulus Africanus, the fon of Paulus : " Nam ' fe patrem fuum audiffe dicere Lucium Æmilium Paulum minus bonum imperatorem fignis

² Quod.]-That which is necessary.

£.

* Pro.]-For the law and duty of reverence and affinity.

• Equidem.]—I feem indeed, according to the nature of our relationship, to have omitted no labour, pains, or indus. try.

» Nam, &c.]..." For Lucius Æmilius Paulus had heard his father fay, that a good general would never engage flandard to flandard, unlefs the greatest necessity obliged him, or the fairest opportunity prefented itself."

collatis

sollatis decertare; nifi fumma necessitudo aut summe ei occasio data esset."

CHAP. IV.

The pleafant and wife reply of Olympias, the mother of Alexander, to her fon.

I N many of the records left us of Alexander's exploits, and a little while ago in a book of Marcus Varro, entitled "Oreftes," or "De Infania," I read that Olympias, the wife of Philip, wrote 'a very witty answer to her fon Alexander.

* Olympias wrote.]—Pluta:ch relates two different accounts of the conduct of Olympias on this point. He writes thus, " Eratofthenes fays that Olympias, when fhe brought Alexander on his way to the army, in his first expedition, told him in private the fecret of his birth, and exhorted him to behave himfelf with courage fuitable to his divine extraction. Others again affirm, that fhe wholly declined this vanity, and was wont to fay, Will Alexander never ceafe to make Juno jealous of me?" For the credit of the lady's understanding it is to be hoped that the latter is the true account. A fcandalous flory is told by fome authors, of an intrigue with Nectanebus, king of Ægypt; but this is refuted by chronological reafons. Dion Chryfostom, in his fourth oration de Regno, relates a curious dialogue between Alexander ander. When the youth thus addreffed his mother, "King Alexander, the fon of Jupiter Ammon, fends ander and Diogenes on this fubject,-" Are you that Alexander," faid the philosopher, " who is faid to be spurious ?" At this Alexander blushed, and grew angry, but restrained himself. He began, however, to repent that he had condescended to converse with a clownish, infolent man. as he then thought him. Diogenes, observing that he was ruffled, refolved to humour him, as a child at play with dice; and when he afked, "What could induce you to call me fpurious ?" " Because," replied Diogenes, " I hear that your-mother gives it out. Is it not Olympias, who fays of you, that you are not the offspring of Philip, but of a dragon, or of Ammon, or I know not what god, or man, or animal? In which cafe you must be spurious." At this Alexander fmiled, and was fingularly pleased; confidering Diogenes not only as not clownifh, but as peculiarly elegant in his manner of paying a compliment. Dion relates further, that when Alexander afked the philosopher, whether he believed this account or not, he replied that it was as yet uncertain ; fuggefting that it remained for him to prove his origin by his actions.

The following extract from Leland's Demosthenes seems also to deserve a place here:

" Flattery, and indulgence to the weakness of Alexander, who, when intoxicated with his fucceffes, conceived the vanity of being thought the fon of Jupiter, feem to have given rife to the fiftion of an enormous ferpent difcovered by Philip in firit intercourfe with his queen. The fight of a ferpent in her bed, fome of the ancients do not allow to have been fo very extraordinary, in a country where they were tame and harmlefs; and as Olympias, who was remarkably devoted to the celebration of the enthusiaftic rites of Orpheus and Bacchus, is faid to have danced in these ceremonies with great tame ferpents twining round her, fometimes interwoven with the ivy of the facred spears, or with the chaplets of her attendants.

fends health to his mother Olympias," Olympias replied to him in this manner: "I befeech you," fays the, "my fon, be at peace, do not fummon me to a court of judicature, nor accufe me before Juno; for the will furely bring a grievous punifhment upon me, when the finds it confetted in your letters that I am her hufband's harlot." This polithed wit in a wife and prudent woman, addreffed to her ferocious fon, feemed tenderly, attendants, in order to infpire spectators with the greater awe and horror. Yet henceforward, faith Plutarch, his affection fenfibly abated; and whether he feared her as a forcerefs, or imagined that fhe held a commerce with fome god, and was afraid of offending a superior rival, his correspondence with her became less frequent; and having fent to confult the Delphian oracle on this alarming occafion, he received for answer, that he was to pay peculiar honours to Jupiter Ammon, and must expect to lose that eye which had prefumptuoufly intruded on the fecret communication of a divinity with his wife. According to Justin, Olympias herfelf first suggested the account of the ferpent; and is faid by Eratofthenes, an ancient historian, to have informed her fon, as he was preparing his expedition into Afia, of the fecret of his birth. But this information was possibly nothing more than clearing up the sufpicions of his legitimacy; and affuring him that he was really the fon of Philip, whofe actions might, with all propriety, have been urged as an incitement to his fon to approve himfelf worthy of fo great a father. This fentiment feems to have been confirmed by the well known answer of Olympias to her fon's letter, in which he styled himself the fon of Jupiter for when the queen complained that Alexander made mifchief (if I may be allowed the expression) between her and Juno, I cannot conceive it in any other light but that of raillery on his fantastical vanity.

and

and by degrees, to advise him to lay aside the idle opinion, which, from his success in war, the flatteries of his followers, and his extraordinary prosperity, he had imbibed, that he was the son of Jupiter.

CHAP. V.

Of the philosophers Aristotle, Theophrastus, and Menedemus, and the graceful modesty of Aristotle in his appointment of a successfor to his school.

A RISTOTLE the philosopher, being fixty-two years of age, became fick, and weak in body, and there remained little hope of his life. The whole band of his followers then waited upon him, requesting and entreating that he would himself appoint a fucceffor to his office and school, to whom, after his decease, as to himself, they might apply themselves in perfecting those studies, in which they had hitherto been inftructed by himself. There were at that time many in his school, who were very accomplissed, but two of particular merit, Theophrastus and Menedemus'. In talents and learning these exceeded

• Menedemus.]—It feems generally agreed, that this ought to be Eudemus, no Peripatetic of the former name being known, ceeded the reft. Theophraftus was from the island of Lesbos, Menedemus from Rhodes. Aristotle replied, that he would comply with their request, as soon as an opportunity presented itself. A short time after, when all those were present who had confulted him about their future master, known, whereas Eudemus is spoken of by several authors as a favourite of Aristotle, and he was a Rhodian.

The anecdote related in this chaper is not to be found, where we might reafonably expect to find it, in Diogenes Laertius.

Perhaps, in his decifion on this queftion, it might not be impossible that Aristotle was in fome degree influenced by his local attachment to Lesbos. It was at Mytilene, the capital of Lesbos, where he established himself as a teacher. See Diog. Laertius, b. v. chap. 3. &c. and Dionys. Halicar. Epist. ad Ammon.

The Lefbian wine is mentioned in the first book of Athenzus, not as remarkable for its fweet flavour, but rather from its astringent properties, which seems to imply fome degree of tartness. Horace applies the term innocens to the wine of Lefbos.

> Hic innocentis pocula Lefbii Duces fub umbra.

He talks, in the ninth epode, of drinking it out of larger cups,---

Capaciores affer huc puer scyphos, Et Apia vina aut Lesbia.

No greater compliment is any where paid to Theophraftus, than by Cicero in his Epifiles to Atticus. Cicero was particularly delighted with the writings of this philosopher. He calls him delicias fuas, and in many places files him his friend, with many encomiums on his merit.

he

Digitized by GOO

he faid, that the wine he was drinking did not fuit his health; it was difagreeable and harfh; he must therefore look out for fome foreign wine from Rhodes, or from Lefbos He begged they would provide him with fome of either fort, and faid he would use that which agreed with him best. They haften to find, procure, and bring him When Aristotle, calling for the these wines. Rhodian, taftes it, "This," fays he, " is a ftrong wine, and palatable." He next afks for fome Lesbian, and tasting that too, " Each," fays he " is certainly a good wine, but the Lefbian has the fweeter flavour." When he faid this, it was evident to all, that with ingenuity and modefty, he had fixed not upon his wine, but his fucceffor; namely, Theophrastus the Lesbian, a man equally remarkable for the charms of his eloquence and his good conduct. Not long after, Aristotle dying, they all became the followers of I heophraftus.

Снар.

CHAP. VI.

The term which the old Latins applied to what the Greeks call accents.—That neither the ancient Romans nor the people of Attica had fuch a word as barbari/ms.

WHAT the Greeks call accents our more learned ancient writers called notas vocum, fometimes moderamenta, or accen-

Accents.]-On the very obscure subject of the ancient accents, the chief guide we have for our conjectures is, that most of the words by which they were expressed have reference to mufical found, thus revoyedia means a finging to, from π_{eos} and $\omega \delta_{\eta}$; accentus is its literal translation, from ad and cano: not a vocum, the notes of words, and moderamenta, still lead us to the fame notion; accentiuncula is merely a diminutive of accentus, but veculatio again seems to imply modulation of the voice. From these and other circumftances Dr. Forster long ago concluded, that the accent of the ancients was a mufical inflexion of the voice, of which no trace remains in the usage of modern languages : distinct from emphasis, which is the accent of the moderns, and not affecting the quantity of fyllables, which it is certain it did not. This was lost in the ancient languages themselves at their decline, and, through ignorance, confounded with emphasis, as it frequently is at prefent. After all, this is only a conjecture, which we know not how to exemplify. The Chinese, however, it is certain, have such accents to this day, by which even monofyllables of identical form are diffinguished.

tiunculas,

tinnculas, or voculationes." And that inaccuracy of fpeech, which we call barbarous; they called "ruftic," and they who fpoke with this defect were by them faid to fpeak as ruftics. Publius Nigidius, in his Grammatical Commentaries, fays, "If you use the aspirate falsely, your discourse becomes ruftic." I do not indeed find, that they who spoke with purity and propriety, before the age of Augustus, ever used that word which we have in common, "barbarismus²."

• Barbarifmus.]—The books ad Herenhium are now allowed not to be the works of Cicero; among the arguments by which this was proved, in contradiction to many great authorities, was the ufe of words not received in the age of Cicero. In this number, if we suppose Gellius not to be miftaken, we may place the word barbarifmus: for in the fourth book we find this passage, "Vitia in fermone, quo minus is Latinus sit, duo possint effe: soleccismus, et barbarifmus. Solecismus est, cum in verbis pluribus confequens verbum superiori non accommodatur. Barbarifmus est; cum verbum aliquod vitiofe offertur." Chap. 12. Gellius feems to confine barbarifm to false aspiration, the species of sufficity which Catullus ridiculed in Arrius.

Chommoda dicebat fi quando commoda vellet Dicere, et binfidias Arrius infidias. Et tum mirifice sperabat se esse locutum, Cum quantum poterat dixerat binfidias, &cé.

It fhould be observed, that in this chapter there is no mention of the Attics, which the argument gives the reader occasion to expect. Whether the Attics used the term $\beta \alpha_{\beta} \delta \alpha_{\gamma}$ $\rho_{i\sigma\mu\sigma\varsigma}$, may be perhaps a matter of doubt, but certain it is, that they used the verb $\beta \alpha_{\beta} \delta \alpha_{\beta} \delta \alpha_{\beta} \delta \alpha_{\beta}$, barbare loqui, to speak rudely, as they did arrantfur, to speak well, or like the Attics.

CHAP

CHAP. VII.

Homer in his poem, and Herodotus in his biftory; bave fooken very differently concerning the lion.

HERODOTUS has left it recorded, in his third book, that lioneffes produce but once in their life, and at that birth never more than one " whelp. Thefe are his words:

* Never more than one.]-Goldsmith, in his history of the lion, gives the report of the keeper of the beafts in the Tower of London, where feveral of these animals have bred. According to him, the lionefs goes only five months with young, " and produces never more than two at once." But the keeper could only fpeak according to his knowledge of what happened there, which agrees fufficiently with the report of Aristotle, that the number is usually two. Mr. Pennant is filent on this part of the subject, in his History of Quadrupeds; but he copies, from the author of the " (Econo-. my of Nature," an account of the inftinct of these and other wild beafts, in the thirsty deferts of Africa, that exceeds all belief, and certainly could not eafily be known or verified by observation. " There the pelican makes her neft, and in order to cool her young ones, and accustom them to an element they must all be conversant in, brings from afar, in her great gular pouch, fafficient water to fill the neft ; the lion and other wild beafts approach, quench their thirst, yet never injure the unfledged birds, as if confcious that their destruction would immediately put a ftop to those grateful supplies. Nature is full of wonders; but writers on the history of quadrupeds have been careful not to make it lefs fo than it is,"

C

Vol. III.

" The

"The lionefs, of all animals the ftrongest and the boldest, produces but one young one in her life, for at the birth of her young she loses her matrix."

But Homer fays, that lions (for fo he calls the females, in the mafculine gender, or, as the grammarians have it, the common) produce and bring up many whelps; thefe are the lines in which he plainly afferts this:

Thus in the center of fome gloomy wood, With many a ftep, the lionefs furrounds Her tawny young, befet by men and hounds.

He fays the fame thing in another place:

The lion thus, with dreadful anguish stung, Roars through the defert and demands his young,

When the grim favage to his rifled den Too late returning fnuffs the track of men.

When this difference and oppofition of fentiments between the most celebrated poet and most eminent historian greatly perplexed me, I thought proper to confult Aristotle's exquisite Treatife upon Animals, and whatever he has there written upon this subject, I have put down in these commentaries. His words are, from book 6. "That the lion copulates backwards, and is retromingent, has been mentioned before. But it copulates and produces not in every season, though in every year. It produces in the spring, and generally generally has two. When its produce is most numerous it has fix, but fometimes it has only one. It is an idle ftory which tells us of the lionefs, that when the produces her young, the lofes the future power of generating, and it arifes from the fcarcity of the lion's race, for the breed is rare, and not known in many places, except in that part of Europe which is between the river Achelous and Neffus. The lione's produces her young fo fmall, that they fearcely begin to walk till they are two months old. The lions of Syria breed five times in their life, the first time having five young ones, afterwards fewer; then they become barren. The female has no mane; this is peculiar to the male. The lion only changes those four teeth which are called ' canine,' two upper and two lower, and this happens at fix months old 2, if ² As to the fact related in the beginning of this chapter, it is wonderful that they flould not fee, according to this idea; the neceffity of a fpeedy deftruction of the fpecies; becaufe, as every pair left but one cub, every generation would, of courfe, even on the favourable fuppolition of the males and females being equal, only be half as numerous as the preecding.

Ċ 2

Снар.

Ìà

Снар. VIII.

The poet Afranius has ingeniously and pleasantly represented Wijdom to be the daughter of Use and Memory.'

W ITH great justice the poet Afranius, when writing upon the birth of Wisdom, has confidered her as the daughter of " Use and Memory." By the argument he uses, it is proved, that he who would become skilful in ³ Quintus Carolus, one of the commentators upon Gellius, takes prodigious pains to fatisfy the reader that this genealogy is inaccurate and inadmiffible; it is abfurd, he remarks, to call Wifdom the daughter of Ufe and Memory; the daughter of Ufe and Memory can be Prudence, and no other. The allegory of Afranius will not be thought the lefs ingenious or agreeable for this critic's observation. H. Stephens, in his edition of Gellius, has a very long chapter to explain fome perplexed passages which here occur, and the reader may have advantage from confulting the place. P. 110.

It may properly be observed in this place, that the ancients, and after them the moderns, were very fond of this fort of allegory. Pindar beautifully calls the day the child of the fun, $\eta \lambda i \in \pi 2 i \partial \pi$. The fame writer calls the rain the offspring of the clouds. It were endies to multiply fimilar examples, which must occur to every one at all conversant with the best writers. See on this subject Gataker, p. 103.

hum an

human affairs, fhould not confine himfelf to books, and the practice of rhetorical and logical difputations; but he must be conversant, and perfonally exercised in occurrences and business of life, and carefully fix in his memory all actions and their confequences: he must moreover, to grow wise, learn what experience teaches, not what books only, or masters, by an idle parade of words and fictitious representations, have invented for the purposes of amusement, as in a play, or in a dream. Afranius's verses are in his play cailed "Sella."

" Usus me genuit, mater peperit Memoria; Σοφιαν vocant me Graii, vos Sapientiam."

There is likewife a line to the fame purpofe in Pacuvius, which the philofopher Macedo, a man of integrity, and my intimate friend, thought worthy of being inferibed on the doors of all our temples,

Ego odi (homines) ignava opera et philofopha fententia.

For nothing, faid he, can be more difgraceful or intolerable, than that idle and lazy people, covered with a long beard ² and a mantle, fhould change

• Long beard.]—Such were those against whom Juvenal discharged his indignation in his second fatire.

Qui Curios fimulant, et Bacchanalia vivunt. C 3

Whole

Digitized by GOOGLE

change the habits and advantages of philosophy into a knowledge of the tricks of words, and cenfure with fuch eloquence those vices, in the practice of which they are fo thoroughly engaged.

Whole affected garb and manners he to contemptuoully points out.

Rarus fermo illis, et magna libido tacendi, Atque supercilio brevior coma.

These false pretenders to morality and philosophical austerity, who secretly indulged themselves in all kinds of vice, are very strongly exposed and reprobated by Lucian, Akiphron, and other fatirical writers among the Greeks.

CIAP.

Digitized by Google

Снар. IX."

What Tullius Tiro wrote in his Commentaries on the Suculæ and Hyadæ, names of ftars.

TULLIUS TIRO was the scholar and freedman of Marcus Cicero, and was his affistant in literary pursuits. He has written many books upon the usage and formation of the Latin language, and upon different and promiscuous subjects. In those books, the treatises most diftinguished are what he has called by a Greek title, πανδιατας, as if containing every kind of literary circumstance. He therein speaks thus of those stars which are called suculæ. "So ignorant were the ancient Romans of Greek literature, and of the Greek language, that those stars which are in the head of Taurus they called "fuculæ," because the Greeks call them "vadas." But vadas," fays he, " is derived not ano two var, as • Gellius, in this shapter, which is usually the cafe when he meddles with etymology, makes but an indifferent appearance. He does not fo much defend the ancient Latins as prove his own want of fagacity and judgment. How could fuculas be made from fjades? Givero himielf acknowledged the miftake as well as Tiro. Speaking of the fame ftars, he fays, noftri imperiti fuculas quafi a fuibus effent non ab imbribus nominatz. De Nat. Deorum.

Confult also Pliny, Nat. Hift. 28. b. 26. c.

Ç 4

our

our blockheads imagine, but from the word $j_{\ell i r}$, For when they rife and fall, they ftir up ftorms, fhowers, and abundance of rain, and $v_{\ell i r}$ fignifies to rain." Thus far Tiro, in his Pandectæ. But, however, our forefathers were not fuch blockheads and ruftics as to call the hyades " fuculas, becaufe $v_{\ell r}$ in Latin means fues. But for the fame reafon that the Greek word " $v_{\pi r e}$ " we tranflate " fuper," $v_{\pi \tau i \circ r}$, fupinus, from their $v_{\sigma e} \varepsilon_{\sigma s}$ we have fubulcus; nay, from their

^a Hyades.]—Some authors derive Hyades, not from but, but from Hyas, the fon of Atlas and Æthra, who being killed by a lion in the prime of life, was fo lamented by his feven fifters, that they died weeping, and were changed into these watery stars. Ovid briefly relates this story, and concludes thus:

Mater Hyan, et Hyan mæstæ slevere forores,

Cervicemque polo suppositurus Atlas.

Victus uterque parens, tamen est pietate fororum,

Illa dedit cœlum, nomina fecit Hyas.

Fafti, v. 178.

Hyginus, who gives the fame account more explicitly, fupplies also another etymology, "quidam aiunt in modum Y literæ positas, inde Hyadas diei." Some fay that they were called Hyades from being places in the form of the letter Upfilon. Hyginus, Fab. 192. Of all the derivations, that from viso, to rain, is the beft, and Ovid himfelf gives it, before he relates the fable.

Navita quas Hyadas Graius ab imbre vocat.

Hence their couffant epithets are wet, moift, rainy, and the like. Valerius Flaccus used a periphrafis of this fignification instead of their name.

Pleiades, et malidis rorantes crinibus ignem.

word

word $i\pi vos$ we get at first fypnus, and then by the relationship of the Greek y to the Latin o, fomnus. So from their $i\alpha\delta is$, are called by us first the Syades, and then the Suculæ. But those stars are not, as Tiro says, in the head of Taurus, for there appears to be no head of Taurus except those stars. But they are so fituated in that circle which is called the zodiac, that their figure and appearance presents the form of the bull's head, as the other part, and the whole representation of the bull, is formed, and as it were depicted, by the stations and bearings of those stars which the Greeks call $\pi \lambda inadas$, and we vergilias, Снар.

Снар. Х.

The etymology of foror, according to Labeo Antifius, and of frater, according to Nigidius.

ABEO ANTISTIUS cultivated with a particular attention the fludy of the civil law, and gave information publicly to those who confulted him upon legal questions. Moreover, he was skilled in polite literature, and had proceeded deeply in the fludy of grammar, logic, antiquity, and more abstruse learning. He was well verfed in the origin and formation of Latin words, and particularly applied that knowledge to the folution of knotty and intricate points of law. After his death there were accordingly published certain books entitled Posteriores, three of which fucceffively, namely, the 38th, 39th, and 40th, are full of that kind of information which tends to explain and illustrate the Latin language. And in those books which he wrote upon the prætor's edict, he has noted many obfervations, fome of which are wittily and ingenioufly imagined, as for inftance that which we find in his fourth book, " She is called foror '," fays

³ Soror.]—This etymology does not appear very probable, yet it is difficult to find a better, the origin of this word

Digitized by Google

ن م عمر

fays he, " because she is quasi feorfum nata, because she is separated from the family in which she was born, and passes over to another." Of the word Frater, Publius Nigidius, a man of great learning, gives the etymology in a manner no less ingenious and subtle. " Frater," fays he, " is quasi fert alter."

word being very obscure. Vossius is defirous to derive it from fero, to plant, and mentions also an Hebrew etymology, with which he seems much pleased; but it is difficult to give assent to any of these conjectures.

* Frater.]- There can be little doubt that the real derivation of frater is from the Greek word praimp or or alup. meaning one of the fame tribe. Yet Cicero feems to have admitted the fame etymology as that affigned by Nigidius, when he fays, in one of his familiar epiftles, that " when he left his province, he had deputed by preference any other perfon, rather than his brother Quintus, to wait for the arrival of his, fucceffor, left if he had left his brother he might feem to have eluded the decree of the fenate, by which he was commanded to depart within a certain number of days; fince it might be faid that he had not wholly departed, but had left another felf to govern for him." " Sed altero fe relicto, disceflisset." Epist. Fam. ii. 15. This, however, does not absolutely prove that Cicero had such a derivation in his mind, for any near relation might be called another felf, in a political light, as likely to proceed exactly with the fame. views, without any further reference.

Снар,

Digitized by GOO

1

Снар. XI,

The just and proper number of guests, according to M. Varro.—Of the second course; of delicacies,"

THAT is a most elegant treatife of Marcus Varro's, which is entitled, "You know not what the Close of the Day may produce," in which he defcants upon the proper number of guests, and of the custom and management of the entertainment itself. He fays that the number of the guests should begin with that of ^a Of the fatires of Varro I have fpoken in another place, The reader will find the introduction to this chapter by Gellius, almost word for word in Macrobius, Saturn. 1. 1. c. 7. Macrobius omits ferus, and gives the title thus, Nefcis quid vesper vehat. Not unlike this is the faying of Seneca, at least it involves a fimilar moral,— > Quem dies vidit veniens superbum, Hunc dies vidit veniens jacentem.

The expression occurs in Virgil, Ge. i. l. 460.

Denique quid vesper serus vehat, &c

Such also is the foripture phrase of "Who knows what a day may bring torch?"

the

the Graces, and finish with that of the Muses 2, that is, it should confift of no less than three at the feweft, and of no more than nine, when most numerous. " It is disagreeable," says he, " to have many, because a crowd is turbulent. and indeed at Rome it is fo, and the fame at Athens, where never more were affembled. The entertainment itself is composed of four circumstances, and is then quite complete, namely, if the men are elegant, if the place, and time be well chosen, and the apparatus of the feast not neglected. You should neither choose talkative guests," fays he, " nor mute ones. For haranguing is for the forum and the courts; and filence should prevail, not in an entertainment but in the bed chamber." The fubjects of conversation.

• Muses.]—This was a favourite idea with the ancients, and occurs in various forms in their best writers. A striking passage of this kind occurs in Plautus,— > Vin' ad te ad cœnam veniam Ep. Si poffum velim, Verum hic apud me cœnant alieni novem.

Say, fhall I fup with you ?

Ep. You fhould if poffible,

But I have nine to fup with me already.

Unlefs it were on fome public occafion, the number of triclinia, or couches, prepared at an entertainment did not exceed three, and as three perfons occupied each couch, this made the number of the whole not exceed nine. See Juvenal, Sat. 3.

Tertia ne vacuo cessaret culcita lecto.

he ł,

20

he thinks, fhould not be anxious or perplexing, but should be discussed with pleasantry, and without fludy, and fo far profitable as to delight, and at the fame time improve the understanding. This must necessarily be the confequence, if we confine ourfelves to the common concerns and occurrences of life, which, in the active purfuits of business we have no leifure to discuss. "As to the master of the feast," fays he, " it is necesfary not fo much that he should be a man of elegance, as that he should be free from vulgarity. and during the entertainment, it is not every thing that should be read, but such things only as are at the fame time useful and delightful." Nor has he omitted to speak of the necessary ornaments of the fecond course³. His words are thefe: " Those delicacies are the sweerest which are not fweet to excess; for there is a kind of war betwixt delicacies and the powers of digeftion." Let no one hefitate as to the meaning of the ⁸ Second courfe,]—The contents of the fecond courfe, among the Romans, comprehended every thing which is met with in our deflerts; nuts, figs, olives, apples, pears, &c. with every kind of confectionary.

The diffinction betwixt the pemma and tragema, which words occur in the conclusion of this chapter, icems to have been this; the pemma was a prepared fweetmeat, tragema was the fimply dried fruit, as for example, raifins. See on this fubject Salmafus ad Solin. p. 1325.

Pemma compositum quid et coctum, tragema simplex et sic siccatum, ut uvæ passæ, caricæ, palmulæ, et similia.

word

word (bellaria) delicacies, which Marcus Varro uses upon this occasion, for it includes every thing which appertains to the fecond courfe. What the Greeks called tpaynpata or tsppata, our older writers called bellaria. We likewise find the fweeter kinds of wine called in the old comedies by this name, where they are faid to be Liberi bellaria, the delicacies of Bacchus.

CHAP. XII.

The tribunes might arreft, but could not fummon any one. *

W E read it recorded in a certain letter of Atteius Capito, that Labeo Antiftius was particularly diftinguished by his knowledge in the laws, customs, and civil courts of the Roman people. But a certain degree of wilful obstinacy,

^a The imperium or authority of the Roman magifirates comprehended the right of iffuing edicts, of perfonal arrefts, and of citing to appear. We learn from this chapter that these rights did not belong to the same officer, and that the power of citing to appear was of a higher nature than that of perfonal arreft. See Heineccius, 578.

4

he

100

he observes, milled the man, infomuch that when Cæfar Augustus became emperor, he did not allow the justice or propriety of any act, which he could not find fanctioned by the ancient ufages of the Romans. He then relates what this fame Labeo (when fummoned by a meffenger from the tribune of the people) answered : "When," fays he, " at the infligation of a certain woman, the tribunes of the people fent Gellianus to him, defiring that he would appear and answer to the woman's complaint, he ordered him who had been fent, to return, and tell the tribunes, that they had no right either to fummon him or any one elfe. That by the cuftom of our anceftors, the tribunes of the people had a right of arrefting but not of fummoning any one; that they might therefore come and order him to be feized, but had no right to fummon him when absent." Having read this in Capito's letter, I found the fame thing afterwards fpoken of more at large in the 21st book of Varro's "Res humanæ," whose words upon the fubject I have transcribed : " In the magiftracy," fays he, " fome have the power of fummoning, fome of arrefting, others can do The power of fummoning belongs to neither. the confuls, and others of high authority, that of arrest to the tribunes of the people, and those officers who are attended by a meffenger'; but the

• Meffenger.]-Viator. I have mentioned this officer before, but probably, from this chapter, there were viatores or meflengers

the quasitors and others, who have neither a lictor nor a meffenger, have neither power to fummon, nor to arreft. They who have the right of formmoning, are also able by law to feize, confine, and carry away, and this whether the perfons are prefent, or are cited by their com-The tribunes of the people have no mand. right of fummoning. Neverthelefs, many ignorant perfons have used this authority, as if they were entitled to it 3. For fome have-ordered. not only a private individual, but a conful, to be fummoned to the forum. I myfelf, one of the triumvirs, being fummoned by Portius, a tribune of the people, did not appear: depending upon the authority of established custom, I claimed this ancient privilege; and when a tribune myfelf.

meffengers of different ranks, the principal of which were those who attended immediately upon the senate, and summoned the members from the country to attend the public business in the senate.

* Entitled to it.]-Speaking on the ulurpation of the tribunes, Bever, on the Legal Polity of the Roman State, has this firong and pertinent remark-

" As far as the tribunitian office contributed to protect the poor from the opprefion of the rich, and to keep the feveral conflituent powers of the flate within their just limits, it was certainly of fingular use in the political fystem, and deferved the warmest zealand support of every generous friend to rational liberty. But when it transfersted its original bounds, and assumed prerogatives incongruous with the nature and defign of its first appointment, it then became a fcourge and a nuisance to the whole commonwealth.

VOL. III.

D

I ordered

33

I ordered no man to be furmoned before me. nor to obey the fummons of my colleague, unlefs he thought proper." As to this right, of which Marcus Varro speaks, I am of opinion that Labeo, when a private man, acted with an idle fort of confidence, in not appearing to the fummons of the tribune. For what could be the reafon for being unwilling to obey the fummons of those, whom you allow to have the power of arrefting you? For he who by law may be feized, may also be imprisoned. But while we are enquiring why the tribunes, who have a power of using coercive measures, have not the power of fummoning, it occurs to recollection, that tribunes of the people appear to have been formerly created, not for the purpose of passing fentence, nor for taking cognifance of caufes and complaints where the parties were absent, but by their prefence, in causes, to take care that injustice be banished from their courts. Therefore the right of fummoning was taken from them, because their office was to prevent, by their attention and prefence, all acts of violence, Снд .

Digitized by Google

CHAP. XIII.

In M. Varro's books of buman things it is affirmed; that the ædiles and quæstors of the Roman people might be cited before the prætor by a private person:

WHEN I first made my appearance in public, from the retirement of books and teachers, I remember it was the fubject of enquiry among the public difputants and refpondents, in every part of Rome ', whether a quæftor of the Roman people could be fummoned to appear before the prætor. Nor did this arife from an idle fpirit of difputation merely; but a circumftance actually occurred, wherein a quæftor was to be fummoned. Not a few were of opinion, that the prætor had no right to fummon him, as he was without doubt a magistrate of the Roman people, and neither could he be fummoned to appear, unlefs he thought proper, nor be ta-

* Part of Rome.]-Romæ flationibus. Philofophers, deelaimers, and difputants were to be met in various parts of Rome; in the forum, under porticoes, haranguing a liftening multitude. Pliny has the fame expression in his Epistles: Plerique in stationibus fedent, tempusque audiendo fabulas terunt. We might fay familiarly, when people in almost every firect were disputing, &c.

D 2

keĝ

Digitized by Google

ken and arrefted, without injuring the dignity of the Roman magistracy. But I, who was at that time accurately read in the treat fes of Marcus Varro, when I found this a matter of doubt and enquiry, produced his twenty-first book of "Res humanæ." in which it is thus mentioned : " It is lawful for those magistrates, who have no power of fummoning or of arrefting, to be themfelves fummoned by a private man to appear in court. Marcus Lævinius, a curule ædile², was fummoned before the prætor by a private man; now, furrounded by public officers, they not only cannot be arrefted, but may even difmiss the people." Thus far Varro in that part of his book which treats of the ædiles; but in a former part of the fame treatife he fays, that the quæstor has neither the right of summons, nor of arrest. Each part of the book being referred to, all came over to Varro's opinion, and the quæstor was summoned before the prætor.

• Curule ædile.]—The quæstor was a magistrate inferior to the ædile, and this was the first office which any candi-: date for Roman honours could obtain. Their business was to collect the public revenues.

CHAP.

Digitized by Google

Снар. XIV.

Meaning of the term pomocrium '.

THE Roman augurs who wrote upon the aufpices, have thus defined the word "pomærium." "Pomærium eft locus intra agrum effatum per totius urbis circuitum, pone muros, regionibus certis determinatus, qui facit finem urbani aufpicii." But the most ancient pomærium, which was instituted by Romulus, was terminated by the foot of Mount Palatine. But that ^a Pomærium.]—The ancients were remarkably fuperffitious with refpect to their mode of building cities, and had a number of prepofterous ceremonies. This of the pomærium may be reckoned among them. When a city was built, a certain fpace of ground was left both within and without the walls, upon which it was deemed impious to erect any edifices; indeed it was confidered as holy ground. The pomærium of Rome was increased with the city and the empire, and it feems a litle fingular, that Julius Cæfar alone fhould not avail himfelf of the privilege which his conquefts gave him of contributing to its enlargement. The following paffage from Tacitus is fufficiently explicit on this fubject:

Quamquam magnis nationibus subactis, jus proferendi pamerii usurparint nifi L. Sylla et Divus Augustus.

On this Donatus remarks, Taciti auctoritatem et Gellii, qui idem scripsit, pluris facio.

D 3

pomarium

Digitized by Google

comarium was at different times extended as the republic encreased, and at length included many, and those too losty hills. He had a right to extend the pomarium, who had increased the territories of the Romans, by taking land from the enemy. Wherefore it has been, and continues now to be a fubject of enquiry, why, out of the feven hills of the city, as there are fix within the pomarium, the Aventine hill alone, which is neither far distant nor unfrequented, should be without the boundary of the pomærium. For neither did king Servius Tullius, nor Sylla, who had the privilege of extending the pomarium, nor afterwards Julius Cæfar, when he enlarged it, include this hill within the expressed limits' of the city. Meffala has affigned fome probable reasons for this, one of which, in preference to the reft, he himfelf approves, namely, that when Remus upon that hill confulted the aufpices on his intention of building the city, he found the flight of birds unpropitious, and was lefs fortunate in his omen than Romulus. Therefore, fays he, all those who extended the pomærium

^a Expressed limits.]—Effatos fines. Effatus feems to be a word not very eafy of explanation. Here it is undoubtedly to be confidered as a term in augury, in which fenfe it frequently occurs in Cicero. See 42d E. of 13th Book to Atticus, Opinor augures nihil habere ad templum effandum. But Cicero also uses effatum as a term in logic, or rather for one of the axioms of the academy.

excluded

Digitized by Google

excluded that hill, as if it were frequented by illomened birds. But I must not pass over fomething which I lately met with, concerning the Aventine hill, in the commentary of Elis, an old grammarian, in which it is recorded, that, as we faid before, it was formerly excluded from the pomarium, but it was afterwards, upon the authority of Claudius Cæfar, received into the boundaries, and confidered as intra-pomarian.

39

Digitized by Google

CHAP. XV.

Paffage from Meffala the augur, ascertaining who are the inferior magistrates.—That the conful and prætor are colleagues.—Observations on the auspices.—Opinion of the same Meffala on the terms ad populum loqui, and cum populo agere. —Who the magistrates are that may dismiss the comitia.

I N the confular edict which appoints the day for the comitia centuriata, this form has been from time immemorial obferved, " Ne quis^{*} magistratus minor de cælo fervasse velit."

^a There is a perplexity in this chapter which would not be eafily explained without the affiftance of H. Stephens.

What in this edition is one, was in former editions divided into two chapters, having two diftinct titles. The prefent title is erroneous, and ought to be corrected. Meffala gives no opinion upon the terms ad populum loqui, and cum populo agere. It is the remark of Gellius himfelf, and a conclution which he draws from the quotation which he has just cited from the works of Meffala.

* Ne quis.]-Let no inferior magistrate presume to take the autpices.

The terms used, and ceremonies observed in taking the auspices may be found in Adams, Kennet, Lempriere, or any of the books which treat on Roman cultoms and antiquities.

It

It has frequently been diffuted, who are the " magistratus minores." Upon which subject there is no occasion for my opinion, as the first book of Marcus Meffala, the augur, " on Aufpices," is at hand, while I am writing, and therefore I fubjoin from thence the words of Meffala him-" The aufpices of the patricians are difelf. vided into two parts; the higheft are those of the confuls, the prætors, the cenfors. But these are not all alike, or of equal power, becaufe the cenfors are not the colleagues of the conful, or the prætors, but the prætors are the colleagues of the confuls. So that neither do the confuls nor the prætors interrupt or prevent the aufpices from the cenfors, nor the cenfors from the confuls and prætors, but the cenfors among themfelves can ratify them or not, and the prætors and confuls may do the fame. A prætor, although he be the colleague of the conful, cannot by law cite either prætor or conful, as we learn from our, forefathers, and which has been observed till now; it appears also in the 13th commentary of Caius Tuditanus; because the prætor is invested with an inferior, the conful with a fuperior authority. A fuperior magiftrate cannot be cited by one of inferior authority. At this period, we who have been prætors have followed ancient cuftom in every thing which regards the prætor's elections. nor at those comitia was it usual to take the aufpices. In like manner, the cenfors are not confulted upon the aufpices with the confuls and prætors.

The leffer aufpices belong to the prætors. Therefore these are called the other magistrates. lesser, the other the higher magistrates. In electing the leffer magistrates, the office was conferred by the people voting in tribes, or more properly by the lex curiata; the higher magistrates were appointed at the centuriata comitia." From this whole raffage of Meffala it is plain who were the leffer magistrates, and why they were fo called; it proves likewife, that the prætor was the colleague of the conful, becaufe they are elected under the fame aufpices. But they are faid to hold the greater auspices, because their auspices are of higher estimation than those of others. The fame Meffala, in the fame book, upon the leffer magistrates, fays, " The conful has the power to difmifs any affembly of the people, though fummoned by any other magistrates. The prætor can at any time difinifs an affembly, unlefs called by the conful. The lesser magistrates cannot difmis an assembly. On this occasion, he who first fummons the comitia has the law on his fide, because the people cannot be dealt with in a double manner; nor, if they with to have a meeting, can any one difinits the other's affembly to prevent the people's being confulted. Yet many magistrates may hold a meeting at the fame time." This paffage of Meffala shews that the term " cum populo agere" differs from " concionem habere." The former means to collect by votes the affent OF or diffent of the people upon any question, the latter to address them without any application for their votes.

1

CHAP. XVI.

Humanitas bas not the fignification ufually given it. They who have foken most purely have used it in a more appropriate sense.

THEY who are accuftomed to observe the proprieties of the Latin language do not interpret the word "humanitas" according to the common acceptation, and as the Greeks call it $\varphi_{i\lambda}\alpha_{\nu}\theta_{\mu\nu}\pi_{\nu}\alpha}$ (philanthropy), fignifying a certain

In this claffical fenfe alfo is the word bumanity frequently ufed by our beft writers, and a profession of humanity is understood to be fynonymous with profession of belles lettres. Milton uses the adjective bumane in the fense of polished,—

> On the other fide up rofe Belial, in act more graceful and bumane,

A passage, fimilar to the one here quoted, from Varro, being now before me, I subjoin it. Varro de Re Russic. 1. 1. c. 17.

Qui præsint esse oportere, qui literis sint atque bumanitate imbuti.

Upon which Scaliger remarks, Illud literis est glossema, nam literæ et bumanitas apud veteres idem est.

ready

Digitized by Google

ready benevolence indifcriminately exercifed toward all men; but they confider humanity as what the Greeks call maideian, and what we term instruction and initiation in the liberal arts, which they who earneftly follow and obtain, may be faid to be most humanized. For the pursuit and discipline of science is given to man only of all the animals, therefore it is called "humanitas." And in this fenfe almost all books shew that the ancients used this word, and particularly Marcus Varro, and Marcus Tullius. In the mean time I have thought proper to produce an instance from Varro's first book of his " res humanæ," which begins thus : " Praxiteles, who, on account of the excellence of his art, is known to every one at all verfed in polite fcience (" paulum modo bumaniori.") Humaniori, favs he. does not fignify, as we commonly use it, mild, tender, benevolent, although ignorant of literature, for this does not agree with the fentiment; but it means, a man of any literary attainments must have known the character of Praxiteles from books and hiftory,

Снар.

Снар. XVII.

Meaning of the words inter os et offam, in M. Cato."

THERE is a fpeech of Marcus Cato, in which he cenfures the election of ædiles without the aufpices. In that fpeech are thefe words: "Nunc ita aiunt, in fegetibus et in herbis bona frumenta effe, nolite ibi nimiam fpem habere. Sæpe audivi inter os atque offam multa intervenire poffe. Verum vero inter offam at-

² There are many fimilar proverbs in Latin, all exprefive of the fame thing. Such are, multa cadunt inter calicem fupremaque labra; nefcis quid vefper ferus vehat; inter manum et mentum, &c. which may be explained by our familiar English proverb,—

> There's many a flip 'Twixt cup and lip.

Long, but no very interesting comments, may be found on these several proverbs, in the Adagia of Erasmus. The sinft is a literal translation in Latin, from the Greek proverb at the end of this chapter, which is also to be found in Zenobius, Stobzus, and many other places. There are also French proverbs of like import:

De la main a la bouche se perd souvent la soupe.

Between the hand and the mouth the broth is often fpilled.

que

que herbam ibi vero longum intervallum eft." Now Erucius Clarus, who was præfect of the city, and twice conful, a man much devoted to the fludy of ancient cuftoms and ancient literature, has written to Sulpitius Apollinaris, the moft learned man within my memory, requefting that he would tell him the meaning of those words. Apollinaris, when I was present, (for being then a young man at Rome, I attached myself to him for the purpose of instruction) wrote word to Clarus, as to a man of learning, very concisely, that the phrase inter os et offam was an old proverb, fignifying the same as the Greek sentence, Πολλα μεταξυ πελει χυλιχος και χειλιος ακρα.

CHAP

CHAP. XVIII.

THE following nambic verse is notoriously of great antiquity ':

Sopor tuparros two socar Euresia.

This verse Plato, in his Theætetus^{*}, attributes to Euripides, at which I am much surprized, for I have met with it in Sophocles's tragedy of Ajax the Locrian³. But Sophocles was born before Euri-

³ Antiquity.]—Some copies read venustatis, which seems more proper. The translation in this case would be of well known elegance.

^a Theaetetus.]—This is a firange error in Gellius. This Iambic is not in the Theaetetus of Plato, but in the Theages; but whether the miftake originated from Gellius himfelf, or was the blunder of fome copyift, is uncertain. See Gataker, 173. Stobzus does the fame, and probably on the fame authority. The meaning of the Greek verfe is, Princes become wife by affociating with wife men; the converfe of our English faying, Evil communication corrupts good manners.

• Ajax the Lecrian.]—Cafaubon, in his notes to Athenaeus, gives a catalogue of all the plays of Sophocles. This play he calls Asaς Λοθρος, or Ajax Lorarius. Probably there were two plays of Sophocles, one called Ajax Lorarius, the other Ajax Locrus. Ariftides refers the line here quoted to the play of Sophocles called Ajax Locrus. See Cafaubon, 482. ad Athenaeum.

4

pides.

picles. There is likewife another verse not less known:

Γερων γεροντα παιδαγωγησω σ' εγω.

This is found in Sophocles's tragedy called $\Phi_{U\lambda n\tau_i dts}$ ⁴, and in the Bacchæ⁵ of Euripides, and I have also met with it in the Prometheus of Æschylus. And in Euripides's tragedy of Ino, there is a verse which, except in a few syllables, is the fame as one in Æschylus,—

• $\Phi_{\nu\lambda\eta\tau\imath}\delta_{i\varsigma}$.]—Here also would be fome perplexity did not Casaubon affift us. In his annotations to Athenzus, referred to above, it clearly appears, that there was no play of Sophocles of this name, which indeed, as Casaubon cbferves, is not a Greek word. It is differently read by different commentators, fome calling it Philetides, others Philoctetes, others Philotides. Casaubon fays, the true reading is Phthiotes, or Phthiotides, and the whole of the chapter where this question is discussed is very entertaining and important.

Bacchæ.]-See the Bacchæ, verfe 193.

'The fubject of this chapter leads me neceffarily to obferve, that fimilar fentiments, conveyed nearly in the fame words, are to be found in various writers, ancient as well as modern. It is in particular true of Homer and Hefiod, of Phocylides and Theognis, of Seneca and Publius Syrus; of all which it may be remarked, in the words of Q. Carolus, Non temere judicandum eft de hujufmodi lapfibus, cum fape eadem dicta, eademque verba in diverfis auctoribus reperiantur. Sive quod alter ab altero mutuatus fit, five quod eadem diverfis in mentem venerint.

Æſchylus

OF AULUS GELLIUS. 49 Æfchylus thus,

Σιγών θ' όπε del, zas λεγων τα zaspia. Thus Euripides, Σιγαν θ' όπε δει, και λίγων ασφαλις. But Æschylus was a much older writer.

CHAP. XIX."

Of the origin and names of the Porcian family.

W HEN Apollinaris Sulpitius, myfelf, and certain other of our acquaintance were fitting together in the Tiberian library, it happened that a book was produced to us, entitled, "M. Catonis Nepotis." We immediately began to enquire who this Marcus Cato Nepos was, when a young man, who (as I conjectured from his ¹ Fulvius Urfinus has discussed at length the genealogy of the Porcian family. It appears from Plutarch and Tacitus, that the Porcian family was of Tuscan origin. See also Cicero, in his fecond book De Legibus :---Ego me, mehercule, et illi et omnibus municipibus duas esse censeo patrias, unam naturz, alteram civitatis, ut ille Cato cum esse Tusculi natus in populi Romani civitatem susceptus est.--The founder of this family was Marcus Porcius Cato, who was first called Priscus, according to Plutarch, and the cogtomer of Cato was retained by his postority.

YoL. III.

E

mode

(0

mode of speaking) was not destitute of literary attainments, replied, " This Marcus Cato is not called Nepos by a firname, but becaufe he was the grandfon of Marcus Cato the cenfor, who was the father of that Marcus Cato of prætorian rank, who, in the civil war, flew himself at Utica with his own fword; upon whofe life there is a book of Marcus Cicero, entitled, " Laus Marci Catonis," in which book Cicero fays, this Cato was the great grandfon of Cato the cenfor. Of him, therefore, whom Cicero commends, this Marcus Cato was the father, whose orations bear the title of Marcus Cato Nepos." Then Apollinaris, with great delicacy and good humour (as was usual with him when he passed any censure) addressed him; " I commend," fays he, " my young friend, your attention, who at fuch an age have been able to give us this lecture upon the family of Cato, although you are not accurate in your information concerning this Cato, about whom we are enquiring; for that Marcus Cato the cenfor had not one only, but many grand-children, from different fathers; for Marcus Cato, who was the orator and cenfor, had two fons from different mothers, and of very different ages; for when one of them was a young man, his mother being dead, and Cato himself much advanced in years, he took to wife the virgin daughter of Salonius his client, from whom was born to him Marcus Cato Salonianus, which firname. was was given him from Salonius, the father of his mother; but from the elder fon of Cato, who, in the life-time of his father, died prætor-elect, and left fome excellent books upon law fubjects, forung this Marcus Cato Nepos, the fubject of our enquiry. He was a speaker of some energy, and left many frecimens of oratory, in the manner of his grandfather. He was conful with Quintus Martius Rex, and in his confulate, vifitting Africa, died in that province. This man was not the father of the prætorian Marcus Cato, who flew himfelf in Utica, and was the object of Cicero's eulogy; nor, although this was the grandfon of Cato the cenfor, and the former his great-grandfon, was the former the father of the latter; but this grandfon, of whom we are speaking, had an elder son, Cato; not him who perished at Utica, but one who, having been curule ædile and prætor, died in Narbonenfian Gaul; but from the other man, the much younger fon of Cato the prætor, who, as we faid before, was called Salonianus, forung two fons, Lucius and Marcus Cato. That Marcus Cato was tribune of the people, and died when candidate for the prætorship. From him was born Marcus Cato, who flew himfelf in the civil war at Utica, of whom Marcus Cicero has faid, when writing his life and panegyric, that he was the great-grandfon of Cato the cenfor. You fee, therefore, that this part of the family, which fprung from the younger ion of Cato, not only E 2 differs differs in its branches but in its dates. For as that Salonianus was born, as I faid, in the latter part of his father's life, fo his defcendants alfo were much pofterior to those of his elder brother. You will eafily discover this difference, from the evidence of the composition itself, when you read it." Sulpicius Apollinaris spoke this in my hearing, which I afterwards discovered to be true, when I read the funeral commendations, and the book of commentaries upon the Porcian family.

ł

51

Снар.

CHAP. XX.

That among the most elegant writers greater attention has been paid to the modulation of words, called by the Greeks Euphonia, than to the rules and discipline of grammarians.¹

PROBUS Valerius was asked, as I learned from one of his acquaintance, whether it was right to fay bas urbis, or bas urbes, banc turrem, or banc turrim?

"Whether," replied he, " you are writing verfe or profe, pay no refpect to the mufty rules of grammarians, but confult your ear what fuits the paffage; and what the ear recommends will furely be the beft." "How," returned the enquirer, "fhould I confult my ear?" "In the fame manner," anfwered Probus, " as Virgil did,

• The fubjects discussed in this chapter must necessarily convince us, that we are able to form but an inadequate idea of the preculiar deceases and elegance of the Latin tongue. It is not easy for us to imagine how turrim, for example, by whatever words preceded or accompanied, thould be harfh to fome ears and offensive to others; but, as I have before observed, all these and fimilar diferiminations must have depended upon a variety of modulation, of which the most critical examination and knowledge of the Latin metrical compositions will not enable our most accomplished scholars to speak with any thing like decision.

who,

who, in different places, has faid urbes and urbis, according to the tafte and judgment of his ear; for in the first of his Georgics, which," fays he, "I have read, corrected by his own hand, he writes urbis with an i^2 , as,

Urbifne invifere Cæfar Terrarumque velis curam.

Change it now to urbes, and you make it fomehow more infipid and heavy. On the other hand, in the 3d Æneid, he has urbes with an es "Centum urbes habitant magnas." If you change this to urbis the word becomes trifling and spiritles. Such is the difference of combination in the meeting of the following words. Besides, Virgil uses turrim, not turrem; and securim, not securem. "Turrim in præcipitistantem;" and "incertam excussit cervice securim;"

• With an i.]-See Georg. i. 25. 26.

The various editions of Virgil read, fome srbis, others srbeis. Dryden, in his interpretation of this paffage feems to have underflood urbis to be the genitive cafe fingular, and sot the accufative cafe plural.

Whether in after times to be declared

The patron of the world, and Rome's peculiar guard.

Where he refers erroneously arbis to Rome.

There are some manuscripts which read arbes, but Heyne properly reads arbis, and thus expresses himself:

Sed urbifus auctoritate vet. grammaticorum confirmatur apud Gell. N. A 13. 20. ubi Probus ait, auris judicio urbis prelatum este a poeta pro urbes.

which

which words have, I think, a pleafanter found than if you use the letter e in each place." But he who had confulted Probus, being a vulgar man. and of an unpolifhed ear, replied, " Why the different words should be more proper and accurate in one place than another I do not understand." When Probus, with fome warmth, "Do not," fays he, " trouble yourfelf to enquire which of the two you shall use, urbes or urbis, for fince you are of that description which I obferve, it is of no confequence which you fay." With this observation, couched in these terms, he difinified the man (as his cuftom was toward stupid people) with fome degree of harshness. But I have fince met with fimilar inftances of a word written by Virgil in two different ways; for he has used tris and tres in the same passage, with that fubtlety of judgment, that should you change them, and fubstitute one for the other, and have any ear, you must perceive that you injure the fweetness of the harmony. The lines are in his 1 oth book.

Tres quoque Threicios Boreæ de gente supremâ, Et tris quos Idas pater, et patria Ismara mittit.

The usage of tres in one place 3, and of tris in

• In one place.]—Heyne, who justifies himself on the authority of Gellius in a former passage, difregards it here. In his edition we find tris in both lines. He refers indeed to this place in Gellius, but it is only to finile at the unimportance of the diffinction.

E 4

the

55 the other, you will find in either cafe used with fo much judgment and attention to rhythm, as to be most admirably adapted to each situation. And in the same book of Virgil may be found,

Hec finis 4 Priami fatorum.

Now if you were here to fay, bic finis, it becomes harfh and inharmonious, and the ear fhrinks from the change. As, on the contrary, you render the paffage inharmonious, if you change the Quem⁵ des finem rex magne laborem.

For if you read it quam des finem, you make it, I know not why, harfh and feeble. Ennius alfo has called the cypreffes rectos, by the masculine gender, contrary to common usage.

Capitibus nutanteis pinos, restofque cupress.

I fuppose the found appeared to him stronger and fuller to fay restas than restas. On the other hand, the fame Ennius, in his 18th book of Annals, uses aere fulva, instead of fulvo, not because Homer has applied a feminine adjective to it, as aspa Gassian, but because this found, I suppose, seemed more vocal and grateful to his ear. As Cicero thought it softer and more elegant, in his speech against Verres, to fay, fretu than freto.

• Hac finis.]—Some manuscripts read bic finis. See Heyne, Vol. ii. London edition, p. 236.

² Quem.]—Heyne reads guem, and takes no notice of this observation of Gellius.

" Perangusto,"

" Perangusto," fays he, " fretu divisa." It would be harsh and clumfy to fay perangusto frete. He has used a fimiliar inflexion, in his fecond oration: Manifesto peccatu, says he, not peccato. For I have found the paffage thus written in one -or two of the oldest and most reputed copies of Tiro. Cicero's words are these: " Nemo ita vivebat, ut nulla ejus vitæ pars fummæ turpitudinis effet expers; nemo ita in manifesto peccatu tenebatur, ut cum impudens fuisset in facto, tum impudentior videretur, finegaret." Not only the found of this word is here more elegant, but the propriety of its usage is approved by reason and reflection. Forhere peccatus (an act of fin) is used properly for peccatio (the habit of finning), as for inftance, hic incestus, not applying to the qui admisit, but the auod admiffum est, and bic tributus, which we call tributum, were phrases used by many of the ancients; and bic collegatus, and bic arbitratus, are used for allegatio and arbitratio; for which reafon we fay arbitratu and allegatu meo. Thus Cicero has faid, in manifesto peccatu, as the ancients faid in manifesto incestu. Nevertheles it would be Latin to fay peccate, but in this paffage it appeared more acute, and better fuited to the ear : Lucretius, with the fame attention to harmony, has applied a feminine adjective to funem, in the following lines :

Haud ut opinor enim mortalia secla superne Aurea de cœlo demisit sunis in arva.

When,

When, still preferving the metre, he might have faid, what is indeed more usual, Aureus e cœlo demisit funis in arva.

Marcus Cicero has even called the priefts by a feminine termination. He speaks of them as entifitas, and not, according to the law of grammar antistites. For although Cicero avoided the viage of objolete and unaccustomed words, yet in this passage, as if delighted with the found of the word, he fays, " Sacerdotes Cereris atque illius fani antistita." So that upon some occafions they followed not fo much the dictates of reafon, or the law of cultom, in the ulage of words, as the judgment of the ear in regulating the modulation, which they who do not feel (fays the fame Cicero, when speaking upon harmony of ftyle) I know not what ears they have, or indeed what there is in them like other men. The old grammarians have particularly noticed of Homer, that though in one place he has faid xolous; TE Inpag re, yet in another he has used not Unpar but yapar.

Των δ ως τε ψαρων νεφος ερχεται ηε χολογων.

Following not the common method, but what his attention to harmony of polition fuggested. For if you change the polition of these words, you make the sentence inharmonious.

Снар.

CHAR XXI.

Words of Titus Castricius, the rhetorician, to bis young pupils, on the impropriety of their clothes and shoes.

TITUS Caftricius was a teacher of rhetoric, who was in the highest estimation at Rome for his oratorical abilities, and for his fuccels as an instructor : he was respected ' also by the

* Respected.]-Spectatus. A note on this word occurs in the British Critic for February 1793, fo pertinent, that it would be absurd not to introduce it here. Spectatus answers to cognitus, exploratus, probatus, Daugolus, misprinted in Forcellinus dozumoting. Homo in rebus judicandis spectatus et cognitus. Cic. Orat. in Verrem, 1-2. In perfecto et spectato viro. De Amicitia, sect. 2. Utebatur medico ignobili sed spectato homini Cleophanto, Cić. pro Cluentio. Applied to things it answers to infignis, nobilis, pulcher. Aulus Gellius indeed, l. 13. c. 21. writes thus : T. Castricius, &c. &c. in mores atque literas spectatus. But we observe, first, that the flyle of Aulus Gellius is not famous for its purity, nor well adapted to panegyrick; secondly, that the phraseology of spectatus in mores is very fingular; thirdly, that mores is joined with literas; fourthly, that Hadrian, the perfon approving, is mentioned as well as Caffricius, the perfon approved; and laftly, that Caftricius professed and practifed the art of rhetoric, and therefore that his knowledge of that art could be afcertained. Upon the whole then, a perfon may be called spectatus for his moral qualities displayed in practice, for his skill in the exercise of arts, the emperor Adrian for the purity of his morals, and his attainments in literature. When I was once prefent with him (for I attended him as my mafter), he perceived fome fenators, his followers, with their cloaks and jackets, and walking in their flippers, on an holiday. " I would rather fee you in your robes," faid he; " it must at leaft be tedious to be girt up in your riding dreffes. But if cuftom has made this mode of drefs upon fuch a day pardonable, yet it is by no means decorous in you, as fenators of Rome, to walk the ftreets with your flippers" (foleatos), nor in-arts, or his probity and judgment in the conduct of bufinefs, as brought to the tell of experience. But for the mere acquifition, or the mere poffeflion, or even the mere difplay of learning, no man, we believe, is flyed fpectatus by the pure writers of Latin. We fhall juft obferve by the way, that Gefner scfers, in his Thefaurus, to the zoth chapter of Aulus Gellius inflead of the z1ft, and indeed his numerical scferences are often erroneous. Gefner, however, is not to be blamed in this inflance. The earlier editions of Gellius united the 14th and 15th in one chapter, which Stephens, Gronovius, and the later editions have divided into two. Gefner probably quoted from the Attics, or fome other ancient edition.

Digitized by Google

• Slippers.]—Solea was a flipper or fandal, fo called, becaufe it covered the fole of the foot. But the Romans wore a variety of coverings for the feet. The foleæ were of different kinds, and the gallicæ were a kind of foleæ, fo were the crepidæ, or crepidulæ. They went to feafts in the foleæ, which may therefore be called a drefs fhoe, but they put them off when they eat. To appear in their foleæ in public was deemed unmanly and coxcomical; and this feems all that is neceffary to be faid on this fubject in this chapter.

2

deed

deed is it lefs criminal in you than it was in him, whom Marcus Tullius reproved for it." Caftricius faid this in my hearing, and many other things to the fame purport, with a Roman feverity. Many, however, who heard him, begged to know why he called those perfons foleatos who wore gallicas (flippers), not foleas (fandals). But Castricius had here spoken with purity and propriety. For that whole fpecies of fhoe, by which only the bottoms of the feet are covered, leaving the other part naked, and fastened with flight thongs, they called folea, and fometimes by the Greek word crepidule. But I suppose gallicas was a new word, which had not been used long before the time of Marcus Cicero. It is used by him in his fecond Philipic, " Cum gallicis et lacerna cucurrifti." Nor do I find this word used in this fignification by any other writer of high authority; but, as I before observed, they called that fort of fhoe (which the Greeks denominated xenmidas) crepidas and crepidulas, with the first fyllable short, and the shoemakers they called crepidarios. Sempronius Afellio, in his fourteenth book of Annals, fays, " Crepidarium cultellum rogavit a crepidario futore."

Digitized by Google

CHAP. XXII.

Prayers which by the cuftom of the Romans are offered to their deities, as explained in the books of their priefts; among which they give to Mars the title of Nerienes.—The moaning of the word Nerienes, or Nerio.

THE addresses which are offered to the immortal gods, according to the custom of the Romans, are found in the books of their priess, and in many of their ancient compositions. We there meet the phrases, " Luam Saturni '," "Salaciam Neptuni," " Horam Quirini," " Jurites Quirini," " Maiam Volcani," " Herien Junonis," " Molas Martis," and " Nerienem Martis;" for fo I hear people pronounce that • Luam Saturni.]—I find these proper names thus explained in Turnebus, &c. For Luam, Turnebus proposes to read Laciam, a Latio, a name of Saturn.

Salacia is the fame with Amphierite, the wife of Neptune. Hora was the wife of Romulus. As Romulus was deified, fo his wife, Herfilia, was received into the number of the gods, and called Hora, as Romulus was named Quirinus. For Jurites we should perhaps read Curites...-Curitis is a name of Juno, which appellation was given to different goddeffes. Nereis is explained by the Greek words i forme Bakagons. The Mole were faid to be the daughters of Mars. See Turnebus Adversar. p. 366.

which

which I have last mentioned, making the first fyllable of the word long, as the Greeks do in Naperdas, fea goddeffes. But they who speak with accuracy shorten the first syllable, and make the third long. For the nominative case of the word, in old books, is Nerio, although Marcus Varro, in his fatire called sxiamaxia fays, in the vocative case, not Nerio but Nerienes, in the following lines:

Sed Anna, Perenna, Panda, te Lato, Pales, Nerienes, et Minerva, Fortuna, ac Ceres.

Where it was neceffary that the fame vocative cafe fhould be ufed. But Nerio is declined like Anio, and as they faid Anienem, fo Nerienem, with the third fyllable long; but whether it be Nerio, or Nerienes, it is a Sabine word, and fignifies courage and fortitude. So from the Claudian family, which we know forung from the Sabines, he who was diftinguished by his fortitude was called Nero. But this the Sabines feem to have derived from the Greeks, who called the finews and ligaments of the limbs $\mu e \nu \rho \alpha$, whence we call them in Latin nervos. Nerio therefore fignifies warlike power and ftrength, and a cer-

- • Courage.]-See Suctonius de Tiberio.

Inter cognomina autem et Neronis affumplit, quo fignificatur lingua Sabinorum fortis et firenuus. Among his other names he took that of Nero, which, in the Sabine tongue, fignifies boid and valiant.

tain

tain martial dignity. Plautus too', in Truculento, calls Neriene the wife of Mars, and in the character of a foldier, in this line, Mars peregre adveniens falutat Nerienem uxorem suam.

I have heard a man of fome note observe upon this paffage, that Plautus has, with too much refinement, put this false and new fentiment into the mouth of an ignorant and unpolifhed foldier. to make him suppose Nerio the wife of Mars. But he who will peruse the third of Cnæus Gellius's Annals, will find that this passage posses more of acuteness than comic humour. There it is faid, that Herfilia, when the pleaded before Titus Tatius, and befought peace, thus expressed herfelf, " Neria Martis, te obsecro, pacem dare, ut liceat nuptiis propriis et profperis uti, quod de tui conjugis c'onfilio contigit, ut nos itidem integras raperent, unde liberos fibi et suis posteris patria pararent." Here he fays " de tui conjugis confilio," alluding to Mars. By which it appears, that this was not faid by Plautus poetically only, but that Nerio was traditionally confidered by fome as the wife of Mars. But we must take notice, that Gellius calls her Neria, not Nerío, nor Nerienes. Besides Plautus, however, and Gellius, Licinius Imbrex, an old writer of connedy, in his play called Nezera, fpeaks thus:

³ Plautus soo.]—In his play called Truculentus, anglice, The Churl. The passage may be thus rendered,—

> The god of war, returning from abroad, Salutes his wife Neriene.

> > CVCT

Nolo * ego Nezeram te vocent, sed Nerienem, Cum quidem Marti es in connubium data.

But fuch is the rhythm of this verfe of fix feet, that the third fyllable in that word, contrary to the foregoing rule, must be made short; but the found of this, from the indifference which the ancients entertained upon the subject, is not worthy of much discussion. Ennius, in his 1st book, has,

Nerienem Mavortis et herclem.

And here indeed, preferving the metre, he has lengthened the first fyllable, and made the third short, (which rarely occurs). Yet I must not omit what I find mentioned in a commentary of Servius Claudius', that Nerio is faid quasi Netrio, that

• Nolo.]--

As you are to be the wife of Mars, I do not Choose you to be called Nezra, but Neriene.

Vofius intimates a doubt whether there was really a Latin poet of the name of Imbrex, or whether he may not be the fame perfon elfewhere called Licinius Tegula; for Imbrex has the meaning of Tegula:—Imbrex fit incurvum genus tegulæ.

³ Servius Claudius.]—This perfonage is mentioned by Cicero and Pliny, and his name is preferved by Suetonius Vol. III. F in that is, without paffion, with tranquillity, that under that title we might propitiate Mars, and make him tranquil. Ne is a privative particle, and as among the Greeks, is often fo used in the Latin language.

Digitized by Google

in his catalogue of illustrious grammarians, where he is called Clodius, which is the fame as Claudius. He was a Roman knight, and Suetonius obferves, that he was one of those who instruxerunt auxeruntque ab omni parte grammaticam, &c.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXIII.

The very elegant reproof of Marcus Cato, of confular and cenforian dignity, against those who are philosophers in name, and not in conduct.

MARCUS Cato, who had been conful and cenfor, when become rich from public emoluments, and in his private fortune, affirms that his country feats were unadorned, and in a rude state, even in his feventieth year, and he speaks of them in this manner: " I have neither building," fays he, " nor plate, nor rich cloaths of any fort; I have neither expensive fervants,

• The abufe of those who are philosophers in name but not in deed repeatedly occurs in ancient writers. What Cato here fays of himself, and the rude appearance of his country feats, is expressed in almost fimilar terms by Plutarch. See this referred to in the 120th Epistle of Seneca.

Docebo quomodo fieri dives celerrime poffis, quod valde cupis audire. Nec immerito, ad maximas te divitias compendiario ducam. Opus tamen erit tibi creditore ut negotiari poffis; æs alienum facias oportet; fed rolo per interceflorem mutueris, &c. &c. Paratum tibi creditorem dabo, Catonianum illud a te mutuum fumes, Quantulumcunque eft, fatis erit fi quidquid deerit id a nobis petierimus. Nihil enim mi Lucili intereft utrum non defideres, an habeas.

See also the remarks of H. Stephens on this subject and shapter.

F 2

male

Digitized by Google

male or female. If there be any thing which I have occasion for, I use it, if not, I go withoutit." He then adds, "They censure me because I am without so many things; and I complain of them, that they cannot do without them." This simple truth of Cato's, faying that he could do without so many things, and wished for nothing, more excites us to the practice of moderation, and the support of poverty, than the boasts of those Greeks who profess to philosophize, and invent terms and vain shadows of words; who affert that they posses nothing, want nothing, defire nothing, and who are nevertheless inflamed with all the emotions of avarice and appetite.

Снар.

CHAP. XXIV.

Meaning of the word Manubles .--- Observations on the propriety of using different words meaning the fame thing.

IN the precincts of the forum of Trajan there' are certain flatues gilt on every filde, reprefenting horfes and military trophies, and underfleath them is written "ex manubiis." Favorinus enquired, as he was walking in the area of the forum, waiting for the conful his friend, who was hearing caufes from His tribunal; he enquired, I fay, of us who were with him, what we fuppofed to be the meaning of that infeription. One of those prefent, a man of learning and celebrity, replied, that ex manubiis fignified "ex "preda;" and that the manubiæ were the fpoils "quæ manu captæ funt," "Although (fays Fa-

⁶ Some derive this word manubiar, which is used only in the plural number, from manus, hand, and β_{i,α_j} , ftrength, that is, spoils taken forcibly from the enemy; but whatever may be the interpretation given of the word in this chapter, it is certain that in the earlier periods of the Roman republic, manubiar was used to signify that portion of the spoils afsigned to the commander in chief, and by him applied to the fervice of the state, or to religious purposes. See Gefper.

F 3

vorinus)

Digitized by Google

vorinus) my principal, and indeed almost my whole attention has been employed upon objects of Greek literature, yet I am not fo inattentive to the Latin, which I occafionally and irregularly cultivate, as to be ignorant of this common interpretation, which explains manubia by prada. But I would ask whether Marcus Tullius, a most accurate observer of phraseology, in his speech upon the Agrarian law, on the calends of January, against Rullus, united, by an idle and inelegant repetition of terms, the two words manubias and pradam, if they fignified the fame thing, and did not differ in fome particular." Such was the accuracy of Favorinus's memory, even to a miracle, that he inftantly repeated the words of Cicero, which are fubjoined-" Pradam, manubias, fectionem castra denique Cnæi Pompeii, sedente imperatore, decemviri vendent;" and he afterwards uses the two terms together-" ex præda, ex manubiis, ex auro coronario." He then addreffed himfelf to him who had observed that manubia was the fame as prada: " And do you fuppofe," favs he, " that Marcus Cicero, in each of these paffages, would coldly and weakly have used the two terms, if, as you fay, they fignified the fame thing. Truly, he would have been liable to the fame jest as the facetious Aristophanes puts into the mouth of Euripides against Æschylus, when he fays-

2

Twice

5

Twice hath wife Æfchylus ' one thing affirmed; ' I come into the land and enter it.' To come into, and enter, mean the fame. 'Tis as though one fhould to a neighbour cry, Ufe you the pot, or, if you pleafe, the pan.

But by no means," fays he, " are fuch inftances as the $\mu \alpha \times \tau \rho \alpha$ and $\times \alpha \rho \partial \sigma \sigma \sigma_s$, those which are used by the Greek and Roman poets for the fake of ornamenting their subject by the repetition of two or more words: for of what advantage is this repetition, this recapitulation of the fame circumstance under a different name, in manubiis and in prada? Does it adorn the fentence, as it fometimes does? Does it render it more harmonious and musical? Does it add any apparent "Wife Æfcbylus,]—This kind of tautology is very frequent, particularly in the older writers, and not always without force. See, in particular, fome inflances in the facred writings; as the 18th of Luke, and the 16th of John—

"And they understood none of these things, and this faying was hid from them, neither knew they the things that were spoken."

It ill became Aristophanes, as Spanhemius remarks (see Kuster'sedition) to ridicule any one for this kind of tautology, of which he is more than once guilty. See, in particular, his Peace--- חר הלטאמו, אמו דוף דיואמו, אמו אצויסטאמי, which means, how I am pleased, delighted, and rejoiced. But, perhaps, the writers of comedy thought they had a greater licence allowed them.

F 4

ftrength

frength or weight to any acculation, as on fome occasions? namely, in the book of Cicero, which treats * de constituendo accusatore,' where one and/ the fame circumstance is strongly and effectually urged by an accumulation of words : All Sicily, if the spake with one voice, would fay this. What gold, what filver, what ornaments were there in the cities, in the habitations, in the temples?' Now, after he had spoken of the cities altogether, he added the habitations and the temples, which are themfelves contained in the cities. In the fame book he fays, in a fimilar manner-· Caius Verres, for the space of three years, continuing to lay wafte the province of Sicily, deftroyed the cities of the Sicilians, emptied their habitations, and plundered their temples." What is the reason, after he had faid ' the province of Sicily,' that he should add ' the cities of the province;' that he should specify the habitations, alfo, and the temples? and those varieties of words, laid waste, destroyed, emptied, plundered, liave they not all one and the fame power? Affuredly they have. But fince the expression of them adds to the dignity of the composition, and the copiousness of the style, although they are of the fame meaning, and fpring from one fentiment, yet they appear to be changed as they firike the ear and the mind more frequently. This ftyle of ornament, by accumulating in one charge many fevere terms of reproach, Marcus Cato the eldeft had rendered famous in his orations, as in that that which is entitled ' De decem hominibus,' wherein he accused Thermus of having put to death, at one time, ten free men: he there has made use of these words, all signifying the same thing, which, as they are illustrious specimens of oratory, then beginning to dawn, I may be allowed to cite: ' Tuum' nefarium facinus pejore facinore operire postulas, suicidias humanas facis, decem funera facis, decem capita libera interficis, decem hominibus vitam eripis, indictà causa, injudicatis, incondemnatis.' So, in the beginning of his speech in behalf of the Rhodians, before the fenate, when he was willing to defcribe too much profperity, he fpeaks of it by three terms expressive of the same meaning. These are his words: ' Scio solere plerisque hominibus in rebus fecundis atque prolixis atque prosperis animum excellere, atque superbiam arque ferocitatem augescere.' In his seventh book of Ørigins too, Cato, in his oration against Servius Galba, has used many terms to express one thing: ' Multa me dehortata funt huc prodire, anni, ætas, vox, vires, senectus, verum enimvero cum tantam rempublicam agier arbitrarer.' So, particularly in Homer there is a fplendid instance wherein the same circumstance and fentiment is repeated-

^a Taxm,]-It would be utterly in vain to attempt to give the force of this featence in English.

Jove

- Jove ⁴ from the battle's duft, and rude uproar,
- From flaughter, blood, and tumult, Hector bore.

And in another verse he speaks of ⁵ Engagements, battles, flaughtering wounds, and death.

Now, although these numerous terms import nothing more than the word ' battle,' yet the varied appearance of this one thing is charmingly and elegantly painted by a variety of terms. So too, in the same poet, the same sentiment is repeated, by the use of two phrases, with admirable effect. For when Idæus interferes between Hector and Ajax engaging, he thus address them—

Fight no more, youths, engage no more in arms.

* Jove,]-Thus interpreted by Pope-

Perhaps great Hector then had found his fate, But Jove and definy prolonged his date; Safe from the darts, the care of heaven he flood, Amidft alarms, and death, and duft, and blood.

* Engagements,]-Thus by Pope.

There war, and havock, and deftruction stood, And vengeful murder, red with human blood.

In which line it is not neceffary to fuppole, that the latter words, fignifying the fame as the former, are added and fluffed in for the fake of filling up the metre, for this would be idle and futile. But while he gently and calmly reproved the forwardnefs, and ferocity, and ardour for combat in youths, flirred up by the defire of glory, by repeating the fame thing twice, he more ftrongly fhewed the atrocioufnefs and criminality of their perfevering; he encreafed the ftrength of his cenfure by adding one word to the other, and the double addrefs delivered at the fame time made his admonitions more weighty. Nor is that repetition of the fame featiment to be confidered as cold and inanimate, namely—

With death the wooers threatened and with fate Telemachus.

Where these two terms, ' death and fate,' express the same thing. For the heinous for their meditating so cruel and so unjust an act of destruction, is powerfully expressed by the repetition of terms signifying death. But who can be so fenseless as not to discover, that the words ' fight,' and ' engage in arms,' though of the same meaning, are yet not used without some particular intention and effect; as likewise the following—

Hafte, go, soft dream.

And

Haste, go, swift Iris.

Nor,

76

Nor, as fome think, are thefe phrafes of equal meaning merely, but they are expressive of a command given to be executed with dispatchs for in that speech of Marcus Cicero against Lucius Piso, the terms three times repeated, although they may not please men of less refined taste, are not only an improvement of the harmony, but have, from the circumstance of their repetition; a beautiful and powerful effect.

" Vultus denique,' fays he, ' totus qui fermo quidam tacitus mentis eft, hic in fraudem. homines impulit, hic eos quibus erat ignotus, decepit, fefellit, impulit." What is there, fays he, of fimilitude in those phrases, used by the same author, of prede and manubiz. Truly none at all: for neither is the fentence more ornamented, by the addition of manubia, or more grand or more harmonious. But prada means one thing. as we learn from old writers, and manubia another; for prada means the substance itself of the thing taken, manubie is the money collected by the Qualtor from the fale of the plunder. Therefore Tully used each word for the fake of heaping invidious terms upon the decemviri, who were about to take away the plunder which wasnot yet fold, as well as the money arising from that which had been exposed to fale; therefore this infeription, which you are examining, " exmanubils,' demonstrates not the spoils themselves. for none of these things were taken by Trajan from his enemies, but fhews that these ornaments were were fabricated and provided from the manubia. or money arising from the fale of the spoils. For the manufia, as I faid before, ate not the spoils, but the money raifed by the question from the fale of the plunder. By what I called the quæftor must now be understood the præsect of the treasury 6; for the care of the treasury was transferred from the question to the prefect. Instances, however, may be met with, where writers of some credit sometimes accidentally, or sometimes from negligence, have used prada for manubia, and manubia for prada; and by a certain figure have substituted one for the other, which indeed is allowable, when done with judgment and skill. But they who are accustomed to speak with particular propriety and accuracy, as in that passage of Marcus Tullius, by manubias intend to express money,"

* Treafury,]-See Heineccius, p. 184.

Jamque administratio ærarii jussu Neronis suit penes præfectos ærarii, qui tamen etiam de causis siscalibus judicabant.

In the time of the emperors there was a diffinction made betwixt the public treasury and the private treasury of the prince.

Снар.

CHAP. XXV. 1

Paffage from Publius Nigiaius, in which he fays, that in Valeri, the vocative cafe, the first fyllable is to be made short. - Other observations on the right method of accenting such words.

THE following passage is from the 24th of the Grammatical Commentaries of Publius Nigidius, a man furpassing all others in variety of learning. " How," fays he, " at length, can the pronunciation be preferved, if we are left ignorant in nouns, as in Valeri, whether the vocative or the genitive cafe be expressed? For, if the fecond fyllable of the genitive cafe be expressed with greater emphasis than the first, then the last syllable is spoken without empha-But in the vocative cafe, the first fyllable is fis. emphatic, and the reft gradually lofe their emphasis." These are Publius Nigidius's directions. But if any one, now calling Valerius, fhould accent the first fyllable of the vocative case according to Nigidius's rule, he would go near to be What we call the fummus tonus, ridiculed. he calls meosudia, our accentus he calls voculatio,

* The subject of this chapter is fully discussed by Muretus, c. 8. de Linguz Lat. Pronunciatione, but the whole is of little importance to the English reader.

and

and he calls that the " cafus interrogandi," which we call " cafus genitivus." In the fame book of Nigidius we meet with this passage: " If you write bujus amici, or bujus magni, in the fingular number, let the letter i only close the word; but if you write bi magnei, bi amicei in the nominative plural, then before i, e must be inferted. So, in like manner, if bujus terrai, let i be the last letter; if buic terra, e must be admitted. So, if any one writes mei, in the genitive cafe, let him write it by i only and not by e, as when we fav mêi studiosus; when he writes mei, it must be by e and i, because it is the dative 'case." Induced to liften to the authority of a very learned man. I thought these things should not be passed over, that they may reap fome advantage who are enquiring into fuch fubjects of literature.

CHAR.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. XXVI.

THE following verfe is from the poet Parthenius :

Thauxy, nai Negei, xai Eivahiw, Mehinegery.

Virgil has imitated this line, and has, by the change of two words, made his imitation equal to the original:

Glauco¹, & Panopex, & Inoo Melicertz.

But he has by no means equalled that Homeric paffage which he copied, nor indeed given any thing like it's excellence. Homer feems to be more fimple and perfect, Virgil is more affected, and certainly lefs elegant—

Tauger d' Αλφειω, ταυger de Ποσειδαωνι. HOMER. Taurum ' Neptuno, taurum tibi pulcher Apollo. VIRGIL.

• Glauco,]-- Confult, on this passage, Lucian, the edition of Hemilerhuis, v. 3. p. 686.- Taubmannus, 156. - Macrobius, b. 5. c. 17. informs us, that Virgil made much us of Parthenius. This poet flourished in the beginning of the reign of Augustus, and wrote amatory poems.

Снл

Digitized by Google

• Taurum.]—A bull to Neptune, an oblation due, Another bull to bright Apollo flew.

CHAP. XXVII.

Sentiment of the Philosopher Panætius, from his fecond book De Officiis, in which he recommends, that men should on all occasions he careful to avoid injuries '.

THE philosopher Panætius's second book of Offices, one of those celebrated treatises which Marcus Tullius with so much labour and attention imitated, was read to us. There was written, among many other things of excellent tendency, what ought most particularly to be fixed in the mind. The import of it is this— The life of those who pais their time in business, and are defirous of being useful to themfelves and others, brings with it daily troubles and fudden dangers. To avoid these, a ready

* See a fimilar fentiment to this of Panætius in Apuleius :

Cautoque circumspectu vitam, quz multis casibus subjacet, esse muniendam.

In Seneca:

Necesse est multum in vita nostra casus possit, quia vivimus casu.

Socrates compares human life to a battle, in which an experienced foldier will not venture himfelf without a fhield.

See also St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Gorinthians, and upon other occasions, and attentive mind is necessary, fuch as they must posses who are called Pancratiastre. For as they, when fummoned to the conteil, fland with their arms ftretched forward, and guard their head and face with their hands as with a rampart, and as their limbs, before the battle commences, are prepared either to avoid the blows of the enemy or to plant their own, fo ought the mind and the attention of every prudent man to be guarded against the power and the caprice of injustice, looking forward through every place, and, upon every occasion, diligent, protected, steady, and alert, never fuffering the attention to flag, ever keeping its object in view, oppofing debate and confideration, like arms and hands, against the lashes of fortune and the snares of the wicked, left at any time an adverse and fudden attack should be made upon us when we are unprepared and destitute of defence

Vol. III.

G

³ Horace mentions this Panætius, Od. 29. l. i.

Cum tu coemptos undique nobiles Libros Panæti, Socraticam et domum, Mutare loricis Iberis Pollicitus meliora tendis.

Снлр.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Quadrigarius bas used the phrase, " cum multis mortalibus." Whether and how it would have differed if he had said, " cum multis hominibus."

AUDIUS Quadrigarius has this paffage I in the 13th of his Annals. "The affembly being difmiffed, Metellus came into the capitol with many followers (cum multis mortalibus); thence, on his way home, the whole city attended him." When this book, with thefe words, was read to Marcus Fronto, while I and fome others were fitting with him, it was the opinion of a perfon present, by no means destitute of learning, that the phrase " multis mortalibus," for " multis bominibus," was absurd and frigid, when applied to hiftory, and that it favoured too much of poetry. Fronto then addreffing himfelf to the perfon who was of this opinion, faid, " And do you, who are a man of diffinguished taste in other matters, affirm that the phrase " multis mortalibus" is abfurd and fpiritlefs? Can you imagine that this writer, whose style is fo pure and fo familiar, had no motive for faying mortalibus rather than bominibus? And do you suppose that he describes a multitude in the fame manner when he fays G 2 multis

Digitized by Google

multis hominibus, and not multis mortalibus? T_ indeed, think the matter is thus, unlefs my regard and veneration for this writer, and for every ancient composition, render my judgment blind ; that the word mortales has a far more comprehenfive and unlimited fignification in defcribing the concourse of a whole city than bomines. The compass of the words, multi bomines, may be included within a moderate number; but multi mortales, by I know not what indefcribable fcope of meaning, includes the whole race of citizens of every order, age, and fex. And as Quadrigarius wished to describe (as it happened) a mixed multitude, he faid that Metellus came cum multis mortalibus, into the capitol, speaking with more force than if he had faid cum multis bominibus." When we expressed, as became us, not only our approbation, but our admiration of what Fronto had faid, " Take care," faid he, " left you should fancy that mortales multos is to be used on every occasion instead of bomines multos, and the Greek proverb from Varro's fatire fould be applied, tor en in pan upor "." This cri-

Tor ext we φηκη μυρος,]—The meaning of this epigram is explained by Martial in his third book. In his epigram beginning with—

Unguentum fateor bonum dedifti,

Convivis heri, fed nihil fcidisti.

•••

Written to a man who had given his guefts perfumes, but nothing to eat. See also Cafaubon ad Athenzum, 292. and in particular, Erafinus, Adagia, p. 1077. In lenticulo unguentatus, faid of a perfon who makes a showy entertainment, but does not fatisfy the hunger of his guefts.

ticilm

Digitized by Google

ticism of Fronto's, though upon matters of little confequence, and fome trifling words, I thought worthy of preferving, left the accurate and fubtile diffinction of words of this fort should escape us.

CHAP, XXIX.

The word facies is not correctly used by the vulgar.

W E may observe, there are many words in the Latin language which have ceased to bear their original fignification, having passed into fome very distant or fome nearer meaning, through the power of custom, and the ignorance of those who speak without knowing the meaning of the words they use; as there are some who think that facies means only the mouth, the eyes, and cheeks of a man, which the Greeks call $\varpi po \sigma \omega \pi \sigma v$; whereas facies means the form, manner, and fabrication, as it were, of the whole body, so called a faciendo, as species from aspetu, and figura from fingendo. So Pacuvius, in his G 3 tragedy tragedy named Niptra, calls the stature of a man's body

"Ætate integrâ, feroci ingenio, facie procera virum."

" Mature, of powerful mind, and stature tall."

But facies is not only applied to the perfons of men, but to things of many other kinds. It may with propriety, if feafonably, be faid of a mountain, of the heavens ', and of the fea. Salluft has this paffage in the fecond book of his hiftory: "Sardinia, facie veftigii bumani, in the fhape of a human foot, projects towards the eaft into the African fea, becoming wider toward the weft."

* The beavens,]—This is a common mode of expression in , our own language. We fay perpetually the face for the appearance of things. Thus in the gospel of St. Luke, c. xii. ver. 56.

Ye hypocrites, ye can difcern the face of the fky and of the earth.

The verb to face is used in a fingular sense by Shakespeare:

Fair Margaret knows

That Suffolk does not flatter, face, or feign. But this was the current language of his time.

In the fecond verse of Genesis we have-

And darkness was upon the face of the deep; and the Spiru of God moved upon the face of the waters.

Horace applies the word facies to a horse :

Regibus hic mos est, ubi equos mercantur, apertos Infpiciunt, nec si facies ut sepe decora Molli fulta pede est, emptorem inducat hiantem.

But

But Plautus too, in his Pænulus, has facies for the manner of the whole perfon and complexion. His words are thefe—

But for their nurfe, describe her person to me. (quâ sit facie)

Her stature is short, and her complexion brown; Her face is handsome, and her eyes quite black.

In these words he has completely described her person. Moreover, I remember that Quadrigarius has, in his eleventh book, used facies to express the stature and figure of the whole body.

CHAP

CHAP. XXX.

Meaning of caninum prandium in Marcus Varro's Satire.

FOOLISH boafting fellow, fitting lately A in a bookfeller's shop, was praising and extolling himfelf as if he were the only man under ` heaven who could explain those fatires of Marcus Varro, which fome call Cynical, others Me-He then produced fome paffages not nippean. very difficult, which, he faid, no one could prefume to expound. By chance I turned to that book of the fatires which is entitled, Hydrocryon; and, approaching him, I faid, " Do you know, Sir, the meaning of that old fentence? The most excellent music ', if it be hidden, is worth no-I beg of you, therefore, read us a few of thing. these verses, and tell us their meaning."-" Nay, but," fays he, " do you rather read them to me, in order that I may explain what you do not understand."-" But how can I read that of which

* Excellent mufic,]-There is a Greek phrase to the same effect in Lucian-

Ουδι οφιλος απορρητα και αφαιας της Μεσικης.

A fimilar fentiment occurs in Telemachus:—He who has knowledge, and communicates it not, is like a good fword that is never drawn.

I do

I do not know the meaning? What I read will be indiffinct and confused, and may interrupt your attention." Many others, who were prefent, approving of this remark, and feeming leager for his explanation, he received from my hands an approved ancient copy of the work, fairly written; but he took it with a most tremulous and forrowful countenance. How shall I express what followed! I can fcarcely, indeed, require to be believed. Ignorant boys at school, if they had taken up that book, could not have been more he did so murder the sentences. ridiculous ; and fo miferably pronounce the words. He then returned me the book, amidst the laughter of the company. "You fee," fays he, " how bad my eyes are, and almost worn out with perpetual studies: I can scarcely catch up the points of the letters. When I recover from this complaint in my eyes, come to me, and I will read the whole book to you."-" I wifh your eyes well, Sir," faid I, " but, in the mean time, tell me fomething with which your eyes are not concerned. What is the meaning, in that passage which you have read, of the phrase " caninum prandium "?" Then did

• By the term caninum prandium, Gellius feems to underftand an abstemious dinner. Erasmus does the same: but Quintus Carolus, a commentator on Gellius, interprets it differently thus. What is here said of a dog's not drinking wine is equally true of a cat, or a mouse, or a fish. There are three forts of wine, new, old, and of middle age: new wine makes, us cold, old wine temperately warms, but wine of middle did this egregious blockhead, as if alarmed by the difficulty of the question, rife up, and, going away, faid, "You are asking no finall matter; I do not give fuch information for nothing." The words of the passage containing this proverb, are thefe: " Do you not fee that, according to Mneftheus, there are three forts of wine, the black, the white, and the middle fort, which they call carnation; but the black wine produces ftrength, the white, urine, and the middle fort, digeftion: that the new wine cools, the old heats, and the middle fort is caninum prandium, a dinner for a dog." Long and earneftly did we argue upon this trifling fubject, the meaning of prandium caninum.

89

An abstemious dinner, in which no wine is drank, is called prandium caninum, becaufe a dog drinks no wine. When, therefore, he spoke of that middle fort of wine which was neither new nor old, and many people speak as if all wine was either new or old, he meant to show, that the middle fort had no strength.—" that then," fays he, " is not to be considered as wine which neither cools nor heats you."

Refrigerare, to cool, is the fame as the availugat of the Greeks.

dle age inflames the blood, gets into the head, and makes people quarrel and fight like dogs.

Erasmus servilely follows Gellius in his interpretation of this proverb, with no original remarks of his own.

We have, in English, a proverbial phrase of "A dog's life," which is used to signify a life of hunger and ease.

BOOK

Digitized by Google

B O O K XIV.

Снар. І.

Differtation of Favorinus against those called Chaldeans, who, from the combinations and motions of the constellations and stars, pretend to foretel the fortunes of men¹.

A GAINST those who call themselves Chaldæans, or calculators of nativity, and profess, from the motion and situation of the stars, to foretel

¹ Chaldæa feems, by univerfal confent, to have been the original feat of fcience; and, as far as a clear unobftructed view of the heavenly bodies, among open plains, and an unclouded atmosphere, could fuggest or promote a knowledge of aftronomy, that branch of philosophy, being cultivated there under every natural advantage; was eminently fuccessful. That an unenlightened people, in any part of the habitable world, perceiving a change in the appearance of the firmament to be accompanied by visible alterations in the weather and the feasons, should transfer this imaginary influence to the bodies, constitutions, and fortunes of men. is by no means wonderful. Thus, in every age and every climates foretel events, I formerly heard the philosopher Favorinus, at Rome, speaking, in Greek, in an excellent climate, we find this fpecies of fuperstition invariably and almost universally predominant. We have the highest authority for believing, that the Chaldzans not only took the lead in real science, but preferved and extended their influence for a confiderable period, and to no very narrow limits. Why the term Chaldzans was afterwards univerfally understood to convey reproach, may be thus explained. The progrefs from the use to the abuse of wildom and knowledge, has at all times kept pace with the paffions and vices of the profligate. Thus of the Chaldzans there may be supposed to have exifted a meaner number, who, profituting the knowledge which they had of aftronomy, yielded to the impreffion of avarice and interest, and played upon the credulity of the weak. This appears from a multitude of paffages in ancient writers; and to this contemptible crew the prophet Ifaiah probably alluded, (fee ch. xlvii. ver. 13.) Thou art wearied in the multitude of thy counfels: let now the aftrologers, the ftargazers, the monthly prognofficators, stand up and fave thee from those things that shall come apon thee.

Digitized by GOOGLE

The Romans, under the term Chaldzi, principally referred to the adventurers from Ægypt; but it may be obferved, that their beft writers always mentioned this fortunetelling tribe with contempt, and fometimes with abomination. I mention a few inftances in which they are mentioned by Roman writers, where this quality of foretelling the future is afcribed to them.

See Cicero pro Muræna-

Erant in magna potentia qui consulebantur, a quibus dies tanquam a Chaldzis petebatur.

Horace-

Tu ne quæsseris scire nesas quem mihi quem tibi Finem dii dederint, Leucothoe : neu Babylonioe Tentaris numeros.

Agaim

cellent and fplendid ftyle. Whether he delivered his real fentiments, or spoke for the fake of exercifing or exhibiting his talents, I cannot fay; but the heads of passages, and of his arguments, as he arranged them, I have been able to remember; for, when I left the affembly, I immediately noted them down. They had principally this tendency: that the fcience of the Chaldzans was not of fuch antiquity as they wished it to appear. and that they were not the real founders of it. though they pretended to be fo; but that people of this fort were jugglers, who dealt in delufions and tricks, procuring provision and money by their lying ftories; and that, as they faw amongst men certain terrestrial objects swayed by the perception and guidance of heavenly bodies,

Again, the fame author-

Irritat, mulcet, falsis terroribus implet, Ut magus.

Juvenal-

Chaldzis fed major erit fiducia, quicquid Dixerit aftrologus credent a fronte relatum Hammonis—

The moralift will probably think it just matter of aftonifhment, that neither the progress nor refinement of knowledge, nor even the light of revelation, has at all effaced this fuperflition, nor abolished the influence of this people. There is yet a wandering race calling themselves Gypsies, and doubtless of Ægyptian origin, who, without any pretensions to science of any kind, arrogate to themselves this preternatural knowledge of futurity, and find numbers who are weak and foolish enough to believe them.

AS,

Digitized by Google

as, for inftance, the ocean', which, being the companion, as it were, of the moon, grows old, and refumes it's youth, with her; they have thence formed an argument to perfuade us, that all human affairs, great and fmall, are conducted and regulated as if bound by the ftars and constellations. But, he added, it was too foolifh and abfurd, because the tide of the ocean agreed with the progress of the moon, that we should suppose any other concern, fuch as a lawfuit concerning a conduit, or a wall between two neighbours, to be regulated by any chain from heaven; which, if indeed it could happen by any divine interpofition, he yet thought it could not be comprehended and thoroughly underftood by any compass of the mind, in the fhort and trifling space allotted to human life. Bur, he faid, that they interpreted a few things, to use his own word Taxuuepistepov, with a good deal of flupidity, for which they had no foundation in fcience, but which were loofe thoughts, conceived at random, and arbitrarily imposed, like that compass

• The ocean,]—This alludes to the phænomena of the ebbing and flowing of the tides, which perplexed the ancients, and was by them confidered as the greatelt mystery, in the circle of natural philosophy. They imputed the flux and reflux of the waters of the fea to the influence and operation of the moon only, whereas the investigations of modern philosophers, and of our Newton in particular, have fatisfactorily proved, that the tides are produced by the combination of the forces of the fun and moon; that is, that there are two tides, a folar and a lunar tide.

of

of the eyes which fees diftant objects, though blind to those which are nearer. That the great difference between the gods and men was taken away, if men had the power of foreknowing Moreover, he thought it by no future events. means clearly made out, that the observation of the ftars and conftellations was, as they inculcated, the origin of their fcience. For if the original Chaldæans, who lived on open plains, observed the motions of the stars, their orbits, and different combinations, thence calculating events, let, faid he, the cultivation of this fcience proceed, but then let it be under the fame afpect of the heaven where the Chaldzans originally were. For, continued he, the fystem adopted by the Chaldæans can no longer be in force, if any one applies it to different sections of the heavens. For who does not fee, how great a variety there is of parts and circles of the heavens, ariling from the diverging and convexities of the globe. For as the fame ftars, by which they contend that all things, • human and divine, are regulated, do not every where excite cold or heat, but change and vary them, and, at the fame time, produce in one place calm feafons, in another tempeftuous, why may they not, in like manner, affect circumftances and events, producing one thing among the Chaldzeans, another among the Getulians; one upon the Danube, another at the Nile? But it is very inconfiftent, fays he, for them to suppose, that the body and quality of air under a'different a different inflexion of the heavens, necessarily varies, and yet that upon human affairs the ftars give the fame information, though confulted from any part of the earth. Belides, he wondered also to find it admitted by every one as an axiom. that those stars, which, they fay, were studied by the Chaldzeans and Babylonians, or Ægyptians, which many call erraticas, wandering, and which Nigidius calls errones, are not more in number than they are usually faid to be. For he thought it might happen, that there were other planets of equal influence, without which, a just and determinate calculation could not be made; which, however, men could not diftinguish, either on account of their splendor or altitude. For, faid he, fome ftars are visible from fome fituations of the earth, and are known to those who inhabit there; but the fame are not feen 3 from every region, and are to fome utterly unknown. Now, as we fee only these stars, and know that they are only to be feen from one part of the earth, what end is there to that fort of calculation? or what time feems fufficient to make us understand what the junctions, or the circuits, or the transits of the stars, forebode + ? For, if a calcu-

• Not feen,]-This must necessarily happen at the poles.

• Forebode,]-Yet the Arabian and Eastern philosophens found it necessary to comply in this instance with the credulity and superstituons of mankind.

"In

calculation be made in this manner, to afcertain under what influence, afpect, form, and fituation of the ftars any one was born, fo that regularly from the beginning of his life his good or bad fortune, his manners, his disposition, the circumftances which happened to him, and the bufinels in which he was engaged, and, at length, the close of his life, may be determined, and all these things, as they had happened, be committed to writing; a long time after, when the ftars were in the fame fituation and in the fame order, it is thought the fame things would happen to others born at that time; if, faid he, their calculation be made upon thefe principles, and their fcience be built upon fuch a calculation, it can by no means merit confidence. Let them tell us in how many years, or rather in how many ages, the circle of their calculation can be made perfect. For aftrologers agree, that those stars, which they call wandering *, and which are faid to influence events, after an almost infinite and innumerable feries of years, refume the fame

" In the eaftern courts the truths of fcience could be recommended only by ignorance and folly, and the aftronomer would have been difregarded, had he not debafed his wifdom or honefty by the vain predictions of aftrology."-Gibbon.

The hiftorian above cited tells us, in a note, that Albumazar and the best of the Arabian astronomers allowed the truth of astrology.

* Wandering,]— Thefe stars were fometimes called Vage.— See Cenforinus de Die Natali, Cicero de Nat. Deorum, Maerobias, &c.

H

VOL. III.

Itation

ftation from whence they first proceeded; fo that no fystem of observation, no trace of memory, no literary record can endure for fo long a period. Another circumstance in his opinion to be confidered was, that one conftellation prefided when the man was conceived in the womb of his mother, another at the time when, ten months after, he was produced to light; and he afked how it was confistent that a different fortune fhould be attributed to the fame perfon, fince, according to their notions, the different fituation and course of the stars gave rise to different events; but from the time of marriage, when children were expected, and even when the man and woman were in cohabitation, he faid, it ought to be declared, by a fixed and necessary polition of the stars, with what qualities and what fortunes men fhould be born; and, indeed, even long before the father and mother were born, what offspring should arife, and to whom that offspring should give birth, and fo on even to infinity; fo that if that science were built upon any foundation of truth, those stars ought to have foretold an hundred years ago, or rather from the for-. mation of the heavens and the earth, how many generations of men should be born by a continued calculation, and what disposition and fortune every perfon now alive should enjoy. But how is it to be credited, that the chance and fortune, which determines the form and lituation of each

ÔF AULUS GELLIÚS. 99

tach ftar, fhould be a certain deftiny ⁵ affixed to fome one man particularly; and that the fame form, after a very long feries of years, fhould again appear, when the circumftances of the fame man's life and fortune, in fuch fhort intervals, through the gradations from one anceftor to another, and an infinite order of fucceffion, are fo often and fo varioufly pointed out, not by the appearance of the ftars, but by the perfon. Now, if this can be done, and a difference and variety is admitted, this inequality confounds the calculation which was to explore, through the fteps of antiquity, the origin of men born afterwards, and ⁵ Definy.]—Seneca, however, with all his wildom, believed the ftars to have an influence on the fortunes of men.

Videbis quinque fidera diversas agentia vias, et in contrarium præcipiti mundo nitentia : ex horum levissimis motibus fortunæ populorum dependent, et maxima ac minima proinde formantur, prout æquum iniquumve fidus incessit."

We may eafily forgive Virgil for availing himfelf of this idea to introduce the beautiful prognoftication of the death of Julius Czefar.

Cicero, in his fecond book de Divinatione; relaxes the gravity of the philosopher to laugh at these fooleries, expressing himself in such terms as these: "Ad Chaldzorum monstra venerimus-Chaldzis minime est credendum-O delirationem incredibilem.--See chapters 42, 3, 4.

It would be abfurd also not to refer in this place to a paffage in Strabo, b. 14. where we learn that there was a place in Babylon for a fect of wandering philosophers called Chaldzans; these are men who pretend to calculate nativities and tell fortunes; Strabo, however; does not speak of them as entitled to any degree of credit.

H 4

the

ICO THE ATTIC NIGHTS

the whole science is overturned. But what he thought most intolerable was their opinion that not only circumstances and events of an extrinsic nature, but even the deliberations, and the wills, and the various purfuits of men; what they aimed at, and what they avoided, the accidental and fudden impulses of their minds on the most trifling occasions, were excited and regulated from the heavens; as if, when you wished to go into the bath, then lay afide that wifh, and again refume it; all this should happen, not from any varying or changeable difpolition of the mind, but from fome necessary coincidence of wandering stars; fo that men feem not what you can call reasonable beings, but absurd and ridiculous puppets, effecting nothing by their own accord, gratifying in nothing their own will, but acting as the stars lead or drive them. As. fays he, if it could have been foretold whether King Pyrrhus or M. Curius should be conquerors in the battle, why may they not fay which will have the advantage of two perfons playing at dice or counters on a chefs board? or is it, that knowing great they are ignorant of little things?, or are finaller objects more imperceptible than larger? If, however, they choose great objects, and affirm that they are more confpicuous and more eafily comprehended, I would have them inform me, in this contemplation of the whole world, what they confider as a great great object among the trifling and fhort-lived concerns which nature allows to men; and let them tell us too, when fo minute and fo rapid is that point of time in which a man at his birth receives his deftiny, that at the fame moment, under the fame circle of the heaven, more than one cannot be born to the fame fate, and that even twins have not the fame lot in life, becaufe they are not born at the fame moment; let them tell us by what fludy or contrivance they are able to catch that inftant of fleeting time which can scarcely be feized by thought, or how they can perceive and arreft it, when they acknowledge, that in the precipitate revolution of day and night the fmallest portions of time cause the greatest changes of fortune. He finally enquired, what there was which could be advanced against the following argument? That perfons of either fex, of all ages, and born under different politions of the stars, in different countries, yet all of them, in an earthquake, or by the fall of houses, or in the siege of towns, or funk in the fame ship, should perish by the fame mode of death in the fame moment? which. faid he, never could happen, if the point of time attributed to the birth of each, had it's peculiar laws. But if fome circumstances attending the death or the life of men, though born at different times, may be faid, from certain agreements among the ftars, to be rendered equal and H 3 fimilar, fimilar, why then may not all things fo become equal, that by an union and agreement of the stars, many a Socrates, many an Antisthenes, and many a Plato may at the fame time fpring up equal in birth, in appearance, in talents, in manners, in their whole life, and circumstance of their death, which, fays he, can by no means ever be the cafe. No good reafoning can they with propriety oppose to my argument upon the inequality of men's births, and the fimilarity of their deaths; but, he faid, he pardoned them, becaufe they did not require all this. If the time, and the manner, and the caufe of man's life and death, and of all human affairs, were fixed in the heaven and in the stars, what would they fay of flies, worms, shell fish, and many other of those very finall objects of land and fea? Are they too born and extinguished under the fame laws as men, fo that frogs and gnats have the fame portion of fate allotted to them at their birth, by the motions of the stars. If, however, they were not of this opinion, he faw no reason why the power of the stars should prewail as to men, and be ineffectual as to the reft of the creation. These remarks I have thrown together in an unfinished manner, and in a very' rude style. But Favorinus, such were his talents, and fuch the beautiful flow of the Greek language, delivered them with more copiousness, more elegance, more fplendour, and a more graceful ftyle. He,

Digitized by Google

He, moreover, advifed us to beware, left these fycophants fhould creep into our confidence, because fometimes they appeared to hit upon and to express a truth. For, fays he, they speak things which you cannot lay hold on, indefinite and incomprehensible, and depend upon a slippery and circuitous mode of conjecture, they go on ftep by ftep between truth and falfhood, like people walking in the dark. Thus, by making many attempts, they come fuddenly, and without knowing it, upon the truth; or the credulity of those whom they confult being their guide, they arrive by cunning at fomething true, and thence appear to be followers of the truth, rather by the help of things which are past than of those which are to come. Whatever truths they utter proceed either from rafhnefs or cunning; but they bear not the proportion of a thousandth part to the falshoods which they relate. These observations, which I heard from Favorinus, I remember the testimonies of many ancient poets have confirmed, in which fuch delusive fallacies are exposed, as in that of Pacuvius-

Who through the deeds of future days can fee, With heaven's high ruler shall an equal be.

Accius likewife fays-

I heed no tales the wheedling augur tells, When fayings rich for fterling gold he fells.

H 4

Favorinus,

Favorinus, too, willing to deter and diffuade young men by all means from visiting and confulting these calculators of nativity, or any other perfons of that description, who professed by magic arts to foretel events, concluded with arguments of this kind. " Either," faid he, " they declare prosperous or adverse events. If profperous, and they deceive you, you will become miserable by a fruitles expectation; if they declare adverse events, and speak falsely, you will be miferable from vain fears. If they fpeak truly, and the events they foretell are inaufpicious, you thence will become miferable by anticipation, before you are fo by fate. If they promise happiness, and it should come to pass, thence will furely arife two inconveniencies; the expectation of your wifnes will fatigue you with fuspense, and hope will have cropped the flower of your expected blifs. By no means ought you, therefore, to apply to people of this fort, who pretend to foretel events."

CHAP.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. II.

Discourse of Favorinus when I consulted him upon the office of a judge.

W HEN first I was chosen by the prætors one of the judges to superintend what are called private suits, I searched after books in both languages ' on the duties of a judge. As I was then a young man, summoned from the fables of poets and the perorations of orators to preside in courts of law, that I might learn from dead counsellors that legal information which the scarcity of living authorities denied me, in all irregular proceedings and delays of court, and upon certain other legal subjects, I fought advice and affistance from the Julian ' Law, from Massiurius Sabinus, and from the commentaries of other skilful

Both languages,]—That is, Latin and Greek, this latter being the fashionable language at Rome, as French is in the different courts of Europe.

• Julian law,]—This alludes to a law of Julius Cæfar to regulate the office and duties of a judge. The reader will find the subject of this chapter, on the office of a judge, perspicuously and fully discussed by Heineccius, p. 646 of

Digitized by Google

fkilful lawyers; but, in the forms of bufinefs, as they now exift, and in the comparison of different queftions, I reaped no advantage from books of this fort; for although the opinions of judges are to be collected from the flatement of facts before them, yet they are generally preconceived, and the refult of previous deliberation, by which a judge ought to be guarded before he hears a cause in public, and to be prepared against the

of his Illustrations of Roman Jurisprudence. The judex or judge, properly so called, judged both of fact and law; but he seems to have acted under the authority of the prætor, who referred causes to be tried by three distinct orders of judges, with different privileges and authorities, called judices, arbitri, and recuperatores.

The following passage on this subject is from Gibbon-

In his civil jurifdiction, the prætor of the city was truly a judge, and almost a legislator; but as foon as he had prefcribed the action of the law, he often referred to a delegate the determination of the fact. With the increase of legal proceedings, the tribunal of the centumviri, in which he prefided, acquired more weight and reputation. But whether he acted alone, or with the advice of his council, the most absolute powers might be trufted to a magistrate who was annually chofen by the votes of the people. The rules and preeautions of freedom have required fome explanation, the order of despotism is simple and inanimate. Before the age of Justinian, or perhaps of Dioelesian, the decumes of Roman judges had funk to an empty title, the humble advice of the affeffors might be accepted or defpifed, and in each tribunal the civil and criminal jurifdiction was administered by a fingle magistrate, who was raifed and difgraced by the will of the emperor.

uncertainties

uncertainties which may produce future difficulty; as there at that time occurred to me an ambiguity fo inexplicable as to prevent my difcovering the true state of the case: A man claimed before me a fum of money, which, he faid, had been paid and counted out; but he proved it, neither by any note of hand', or record, or tablet, or witnesses, and relied on very slender arguments; but it appeared that he was a man of very good character +, of known and tried integrity, and of a most exemplary life. Many ftrong initances of his probity were produced; while he, upon whom the demand was made, was a man of no fubitance, of a base and dishonourable life, and proved to be a common lyar, notorious for his cheats and frauds. He. however, infifted, together with a number who fided with him, that the money lent, ought to be proved, in the ufual manner, by the balance of accounts, the calculation of interest, the signature of the borrower, the fealing of the deed, and the prefence of witneffes; and that, if it

³ Note of band,]—Or rather bond.—When a perfon lent a fum of mon.y, each party, debtor and creditor, mutually figned the agreement in each other's tablets, and thefe tablets were admitted in courts of juffice as evidence of the fact.

* Very good charader,]—Ferme bonum, for which I would recommend to read, firme bonum. What follows feems to juftify what I propofe, " of known and tried integrity."

were were proved by none of all these circumstances. then ought the defendant to be difmiffed, and the plaintiff condemned for calumny; and whatever was advanced concerning the life and practice of either, was to no purpofe; for this was a cafe of property before a judge deciding between two private men, and not a queftion of morals before the cenfors. Some friends of mine, whom I had confulted, men practifed in law fuits, and of some note in courts of judicature, though fomewhat inclined to precipitation from the multitude of their law business, faid, there was no caufe for delay or hefitation, but that he must be difmiffed, against whom, it was proved by none of the accuftomed forms that he had received. the money. But when I recollected the characters of the two men, one diffinguished by his integrity, the other of a most diffolute and abandoned life, I could not prevail on myfelf to difmifs him, I ordered, therefore, the day of decifion to be deferred, and went immediately from the bench to the philosopher Favorinus, to whom, being in my time at Rome, I very much attached myfelf. I told him the whole ftory of the two men, as it had been related to me; and I requested that he would give me fome inftruction on the matter which then perplexed me, and also upon other subjects likely to require my attention in the office of a judge, Favorinus having approved of the fcrupuloufnefs

. Digitized by Google

nefs of my delay, and the propriety of my folicitude, faid, " That which now caufes your hefitation may appear to be of a trifling nature, but if you wish me to give you general directions how to act in the capacity of a judge, this is by no means a proper time or place; for that discussion involves many nice and intricate questions, and requires much anxious attention and study. But to touch upon a few of the leading topics, this, above all things, is ufually enquired concerning the office of a judge : If a judge should happen to be acquainted with a circumftance which officially comes before him, and the whole matter, before it is pleaded on or brought into court, from fome other business or accident fhould be clearly proved to him, and yet not established upon the trial, ought he to pass fentence from his previous knowledge, or from the evidence produced in court? It is likewife a common fubject of argument, whether it is proper for a judge, knowing every circumstance of the fubject in difpute, if he has an opportunity of compounding the business, to lay aside his judicial character, and act the part of a common friend and a peace-maker. I know that it is likewife difputed, whether a judge, aware of what is necessary to be declared or enquired into, ought to declare or make the enquiry when he, whose interest it is to have him do so, neither thinks of nor requires it; for they fay this this is acting the part of a patron not of a judge. It is also a question, whether it be within the practice and office of a judge fo to explain and unfold, by his occasional interlocutions, the cause before him, that before the time of paffing fentence he shall be in such a manner moved by the things which are confusedly and inconfiftently related, as to indicate, by his behaviour, his real opinion. For," fays he, " those judges, who appear acute and expeditious, conceive that a matter cannot be examined and underftood unlefs the judge, by frequent questions and necessary interference, discovershis own opinion, and makes himfelf master of that of the disputants. They, on the contrary, who are reckoned more fedate and grave, deny that a judge ought, before fentence, and while the cause is pending, as often as any proposition is made, to intimate his own opinion. For, fay they, the variety of facts and arguments produced must excite different emotions of the mind; and thus, in the fame caufe, and at the fame time, he will appear to feel and to fpeak differently. But," continued Favorinus, " on these and other fuch fubjects, relative to the office of a judge, hereafter, when I have time, I will endeavour to give you my fentiments, and will relate to you the precepts of Ælius Tubero upon the fubject, which I read very lately. As to the money which you fay was etaimed before you in your judicial capacity, I advife advife you to follow the advice of that very wife man, Marcus Cato, who, in his defence of Lucius Turius against Cnæus Gellius, fays, that the cuftom handed down and observed by our ancestors, was this: If there were any fubject of difpute between two men, which could not be proved by records or witneffes, it was then enquired by the judge, who prefided in the caufe, which was the better man of the two. If they were equally either good or bad, then credit was given to the plaintiff, and the matter was decided according to his teftimony; but in this caufe which perplexes you, the plaintiff is a man of the best character. the other of the worft, and the matter is difputed between two perfons without witneffes. Give credit, therefore, to the plaintiff, and convict the defendant; fince, as you fay, their characters are not equal, and that of the plaintiff is the better."

4

Thus did Favorinus advife me, as became a philofopher; but I thought it was too prefumptuous for one of my age and little confequence to appear to take cognizance, and give judgment from the characters of the litigants, and not from the proofs of the fact. Yet I could not bring my mind to difnifs the defendant, fo I fwore that the matter was not clear to me, and was thus excufed from paffing judgment. The words of Cato, to which Favorinus alluded, are thefe: " I remember this tradition from our anceftors.

Diaitized by GOOGLE

If any one fue another for any thing, and if both are equal, either good or bad, and no witneffes appear as to what paffed between them, credit is to be given to the defendant; now, if Gellius fhould be at iffue with Turius, unlefs Gellius be a better man than Turius, no one, I think, would be fo infane as to decide in favour of Gellius. If Gellius be not better than Turius, you muft then give judgment in favour of the defendant."

Снар.

Снар. III.

Whether Xenophon and Plato were rivals, and at enmity with each other.

THEY who have written on the life and manners of Xenophon and Plato, and, indeed, upon all fubjects relating to them, with the greateft accuracy and elegance, have been of opinion that they entertained certain fecret jealoufies, and a mutual fpirit of rivalfhip, againft each other; and they have produced fome arguments from their writings, which tend to ftrengthen this conjecture. They are of this nature: that in fo many books written by Plato, mention is no where made of Xenophon; nor, on the other hand, is mention made of Plato by Xenophon^{*}, • Xenophon.]—That a jealoufy did actually exift betwixt thefe two accomplified and eminent men there can be very little reason to doubt. The affertion, however, that Xenophon no where makes mention of Plato is not true. He introduces his name in the Memorabilia, where he tells us that Socrates was a friend to Glaucon on account of Charmides the fon of Glaucon, and on account of Plato; Suxparne h sures on autor dia to Xapuidno tor Flauxwores xas dia Illatura.

Diogenes Laertius, in his Life of Plato, mentions the fame circumstance. Confult also Athenæus, book the eleventh, where the question is yet more fully difcussed.

VOL. III.

Ι

although

although each of them, and particularly Plato in his treatifes, has spoken of many of the followers of Socrates. This, too, they confider as no proof of fincere and friendly difpolition; that Xenophon, in opposition to that celebrated work of Plato on the beft fystem of government, proposed a different mode of governing a state, in a work entitled Cyropædia; and they add, that Plato was fo much hurt by this conduct, that mention being made in fome book of King Cyrus, in order to reflect on Xenophon's work he faid, that Cyrus was a fagacious and a ftrong man, but " had not by any means profited by his educa-" tion;" for these are Plato's words about Cyrus. They think, too, in addition to what I have faid, it may be alledged, that in those books of his which record the fayings and conduct of Socrates, he affirms that Socrates never did difpute upon natural causes and the laws of the heavenly bodies, and that he never touched upon or cultivated. any of those fciences which the Greeks call mathematics, and which have no reference to the proper or happy conduct of life; therefore, he fays, they are guilty of a base falsehood who attribute fuch differtations to Socrates. When Xenophon, they observe, wrote this, he hints at Plato', in whofe works Socrates difputes upon phyfical

• Plate,]—The following is from Dr. Barry's ingenious and learned treatife on the wines of the ancients : "A jealoufy phyfical fubjects, upon mufic and geometry. Now if this were to be believed, or even fufpected, in men

" A jealouly had long prevailed between Plato and Xenophon, which subsisted at the time when Plato published his Symposium. This excited Xenophon to write another, which should be not only more agreeable to his taste, and the established convivial rules, but should also afford him an occafion to vindicate the character of some of his friends; whom Plato feems to have pointed out and censured in his Sympofium; and, indeed, the latter differs from that of Plato in almost every respect.

" They had long been rivals in fame, and their opposition in fentiments appears not only in this inftance, but in two other learned treatifes; which, though nearly relative to the fame subject, yet contain a studied difference of opinion eafily difcerned in them. Xenophon fays, that Cyrus was early instructed and versed in the rules and principles of government. Plato afferts, that his education was entirely military, and that he was fo much unaequainted with them. and even with his domeflic affairs, that he committed the education of his children to women. Xenophon represents Mnemon as a betrayer of the Greeks in their expedition against the Persians: Plato not only vindicates his conduct. but greatly commends it. Many more inftances of this kind will occur to those who are acquainted with their writings; in which it is particularly remarkable, that though they were cotemporary, and wrote upon the fame fubject, Xenophon but once, and then very flightly, mentions the name of Plato, while he never inferts that of Xenophon, though it was almost unavoidable on one occasion, where he enumerates every one then present except him. Hence it is plain, that each eautiously avoided giving to the name of the other that share of immortality which the works of both of them deferve."

I 2

The

men of fuch great and dignified characters, I think it is no caufe for fuppoling they entertained enmity or envy, or that they had any contest for reputation; for fuch a difpolition is far removed from the habits of that philosophy in which these two men, according to the opinion of all, greatly excelled. What then can have given rife to this opinion? Why fuch an equality of talents, fuch a fimilarity of congenial virtues, although the disposition to contend be totally absent, necessarily creates an appearance of rivalship? For when the great abilities of two or more diftinguished persons, engaged in the fame purfuit, are equal, or nearly fo, in effimation, there arifes among their different advocates a contest with respect to their different exertions and merits: from fuch contest the flame of emulation fpreads to the parties themfelves, and the progrefs towards the fame goal of honour, when equal, or nearly fo, is liable to the fufpicions of rivalry, not from their own zeal, but from that of their friends. Thence it was that

The reader will also find further illustrations of this subject in Hermogenes de Form. Orat. ii. and in Eusebius Preparatio Evang. 14. Such emulation betwixt individuals living at the fame period, with similar and equal claims for public admiration, is neither unnatural nor uncommon. It was the case betwixt Sophocles and Euripides, as well as betwixt Hortensius and Cicero, and of ten thousand others; but, as Quintus Carolus observes, ad recentis memorize exempla ire, quia invidiam habet, non eft nostri instituti.

م مذه

Xenophon

Digitized by Google

Xenophon and Plato, the two luminaries of Socratic elegance, were thought to contend as rivals; because, among others, there was a contest to determine which was the more distinguished, and because two eminent characters, who are striving with united force, carry with them the appearance of rivalship.

Digitized by Google

CHAP.

HIS THE ATTIC NIGHTS

CHAP. IV.

Chryfiopus bas, with great propriety and skill, represented the form of Justice in glowing colours and barmonious words.

W IT H equal propriety and elegance has Chryfippus, in the first of his treatifes, entitled', wift xale xal indorns, described the mouth, and eyes, and the whole countenance of the goddes Justice, in a strong and masterly mode of

* Entitled,]-On Beauty and Pleafure-

The idea of Akenfide, in his fecond book of the Pleasures of the Imagination, greatly refembles this of Chrysippus-

The prime of age Composed her steps; the prefence of a god, High on the circle of her brow enthron'd, From each majestic motion darted awe; Devoted awe! till, chcrished by her looks, Benevolent and meek, unfading love To fila! rapture fostened all the foul; Free in her graceful hand she possed the sword Of chaste dominion; an heroic crown Display'd the old simplicity of pomp A cure her honoured head; a matron's robe, White as the functione street clouds, Her stately form invested, &c.

See also the fiction of Virtue in Xenophon, and in Silius It.

3

colouring.

colouring. He represents her figure, as he fays it ufually is by old painters and orators, thus: " Her appearance and garb is that of a virgin with a fpirited and awful countenance, with penetrating eyes, and a folemn dignified caft of countenance, equally diftant from meannefs and ferocity." And he wished to inculcate, from the fpirit of this reprefentation, that a judge, who is the minister of justice, ought to be a grave, holy, fevere, incorrupt character, unaffailable by flattery, mercilefs and inexorable toward the wicked and the guilty, zealous, vigilant, powerful, and terrific, from the force and majefty of equity and truth. Chryfippus's words upon the fubject are thefe: " She is called a virgin as an emblem of her purity, and a proof of her never having given way to wickedness; that she has never been led afide by foothing words, or by prayers, or by flattery, or by any other fnare; wherefore fhe is painted of a grave countenance, with an unshaken and earnest look, stedfastly directing her eye fo as to strike the wicked with awe, and to give encouragement to the just: to the latter, as to her friends, she prefents an agreeable aspect; to the others, an harfh one." Thefe words of Chryfippus, as they are at hand, and open to our confideration, I have more particularly noted, becaufe fome of our more delicate students in philosophy have called this a reprefentation of Cruelty rather than of Justice.

I 4

Снар.

Снар. V.

Strife and contention of eminent grammarians at Rome on the vocative cafe of " Egregius."

NE day, when I was weary with my daily tafk of making comments, I walked to the field of Agrippa' for the purpole of relaxation and amufement. There, meeting with two grammarians of fome note at Rome, I became witnefs to a very violent difpute between them; one contending that the vocative of egregius was egregi, the other infifting that it was The argument urged by the former egregie. was of this kind: "Whatfoever nouns or words," fays he, " have their nominative cafe fingular in us, the letter i coming before the laft fyllable, in the vocative cafe end all in i, as Calius Cali, modius modi, tertius terti, Accius Acci, Titius Titi, and the like; egregius, therefore, as it ends in us in the nominative, and i precedes the laft fyllable, ought in the vocative to end in i, and egregi, therefore, should be used, and not egregie. For divus, and rivus, and clivus, do not end in us, but in a double u, in order to express which a new ? Agrippa,]—This place was given to the people for a public walk by Augustus Cæsar.

letter

letter is invented, called F digamma²." The other, hearing all this, exclaimed, " Oh, you excellent grammarian, (egregie grammatice) or, if you like it better, most excellent, (egregissime) tell me then, I beg, what vocative cafe have the words inscius, impius, sobrius, ebrius, proprius, provitius, anxius, and contrarius, which end in us, with i preceding the last fyllable; modely and shame forbid me to pronounce these words according to your definition." The other, alarmed at this accumulation of words against him, became filent for a short time; but afterwards collecting himfelf, he faid, " he should retain and defend the rule which he had laid down;" adding, " that proprius, and propitius, and anxius, and contrarius, had the fame vocative cafe with adversarius and extrarius; and that in/cius, impius, ebrius, and fobrius, though lefs frequently, were certainly more properly terminated by i rather than e in the vocative." As this contest was likely to be prolonged, I fcarcely thought it worth while to attend any longer to it, and I left them in clamorous dispute, ² Digamma,]—Or double gamma, which feems to be no other than the Greek φ , and was by the Romans used for V. The Emperor Claudius inverted the F thus, \underline{J} , in medals and inferiptions.

Снар.

CHAP. VI.

Of these things which, having the appearance of learning, are neither pleasing nor useful.

Friend of mine, of fome proficiency in lite-I rature, and who had paffed a great part of his life among books, expressed a wish to affift and ornament my publication, at the fame time prefenting me with a large volume, which contained, as he faid, every kind of learning, and had been collected by him, with much labour, from many different and abstruse courses of reading, that I might extract whatever I thought worthy of being recorded. I accepted his prefent with eagerness and avidity, as if I had got possession of a cornu copie; and I shut myself up, that I might read without interruption. But the book contained, O Jupiter ! a mere collection of ftrange tales, fuch as, the name of the first man who was called a grammarian; the number of those named Pythagoras'; how many were called

* Pythageras,]---We know of twenty-eight perfons called Pythagoras, and of twenty who had the name of Hippocrates.

after after Hippocrates; and who were the fuitors which Homer speaks of in the habitation of Ulyss; the reason why Telemachus did not touch Pisistratus, who was lying near him, with his hand, but awakened him with a kick of his soot '; in what kind of cradle Euriclea put Telemachus; and why the same poet did not know a rose, but could diftinguish an olive from a rose. It contained, likewise, the names of those companions of Ulyss who were seized and torn by Scylla '; the question whether Ulyss failed by the outer passage, according to Aristarchus, or by the inner, according to Crates. Moreover,

Foot,]-The paffage in the Odyffey is-Αυταρ • Νεστορίδην εξήδεος ύπτα εγειρε» Απέ ποδι χινησας.

Literally thus: But he roufed the fon of Neftor from fweet fleep, flaking him with his heel.

Pope overlooks this peculiarity, and renders the passage----

Meanwhile Pifistratus he gently shakes, And with these words the slumbering youth awakes.

* Scylla,]—See this question, on the vanity, intemperance, , and folly of fome enquiries admirably handled in the eightyeighth epiftle of Seneca—

Quæris ubi Ulysses erraverit, potius quam efficias ne nos semper erremus? non vacat audire utrum inter Italiam et Siciliam jactatus fit ad extra notum nobis orbem, neque enim potuit in tam angusto error esse tam longus, &c.

Į€

it contained the verses of Homer called 1004npos 4, (equally balanced) and a catalogue of names, Парастихиз,

• 100 root,]-That is literally, equinumeral, from 1000. equal, and Inpos, a pebble, fuch as the ancients used in counting; which, being in Latin called calculus, gave the origin to the word calculation. It is difficult, as some of the commentators acknowledge, to attend with any patience to the extreme trifling of the old grammarians on the fubject of Homer. This is among the most remarkable instances. The Greek letters being used also as numerals, they thought it worth while to enquire, in what verses of Homer the feveral letters, caft up together as figures, produced equal numbers. These verses they called equinumeral, some of which are noticed by various authors. In this way of counting, it has been curioully made out, that , required, Romitth in Hebrew, and Aaling in Greek, form exactly the number 666; which, being the number of the beaft in the Revelations, is supposed to prove the Roman Church Anticbrift. The Romanifts have, it is true, endeavoured to take revenge, by difcovering that Martin Lauter, or Luther, counts to the fame fam : but then it must be owned, that to do fo they are obliged to give the Latin letters the force of the Greek numerals. Some of the Fathers thought the name of the Nile had a mystical reference to the year, because the letters N. 50. E. 5. I. 10. A 30. 0. 70. 2 200, make up precifely 365, forgetting that Nulos is a Greek word, and that the river was not named by Greeks. Eustathius mentions this also in his comment on Dionyhus. The more modern trifling of confructing nameral verses, purpefely to express certain dates, is at least as ingenious as these Greek fancies. In these, such letters only are counted as are numerals in the Roman method of notation. the rest are passed over as infignificant. Thus aVdaCes Mors C&Ca neCat, was supposed to mark the date of the death of Philip the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, namely, 1405. Some NapzoriXis⁵, mentioned there. Likewife what verse there is, which in every succeeding word increases

Some have been made in French, as the following infcription for a hotel built by Charles VIII.

> aV teMps dV rol Charle Le hVit CeftVI hofteL sI fVt ConfrVIt.

Which gives the date of the building, 1485. The French, it may be observed, is antiquated. It is not worth while to dwcll more upon such trifles.

³ Пapaorixis,]-line by line. This is on the principle of the acroftic; the initial letters of fucceffive lines being put together to make a word : acroftic is indeed itself of Greek derivation and origin, from aspos, an extremity, and origos, a verfe. Lustathius tells us it was remarked, that the five first lines of the last book of the Iliad form, in this manner, the word Leven, the initial words being Arto, Eorichail', Yare, Khase and Hen. It is probable that other discoveries, no lefs important, might be made on other books, were the fame attention bestowed. Cicero, in his fecond book of Divination, chap. 54, speaks of a kind of poem called, apportation "quina deinceps ex primis versus literis aliquid connectitur, ut in quibuldam Ennianis."- " When fomething is formed from the regular connection of the first letters in each verse, as in some compoled by Ennius." And he intimates that fome of the Sibylline" yerfes were fo constructed. Eusebius, in the cration of Constantine, gives a fet of verfes as taken from the Sibylline oracles, in which the initials form IHEOTE XPIETOE GEOT TIOE. ENTHE-Jefus Chrift, Son of God, the Saviour. St. Auftin. alfo mentions that fuch verses were extant. Similar in some measure to this is the formation of names from the initials of certain words. Thus, from the very words above cited as defcriptive of Christ, was formed the word IXOYE. which increases a fyllable; by what rule each head of cattle produces three every year; of the five cover-which fignifying a fifh, that animal-was confidered as mystically reprefenting Christ, and the word itself esteemed a facred term. Thus FERT, the family device of the Counts of Savoy, is explained by fome to be formed from the words Fortitudo Ejus Rhodum Tenuit, in allusion to an exploit performed by one of the family; and, in our own country, the term CABAL was formed from the names of five noblemen; Clifford, Abler, Buckingbam, Arlington, Lauderdalet " than which," fays Hume, " never was a more dangerous " ministry in England, nor one more noted for pernicious " councils." An. 1670 .- In the editions of Plautus we have arguments to each play, attributed by fome to Prifcian. which are acroftics; the first letters forming the name of the comedy of which the lines give the argument. Many fancies of this kind have been tried by idle wits. Some have made the beginnings and ends of the lines fignificant, and fome the middle letters alfo. Others have the initials of the words . in a diffich to form a name altogether, as Placentius is formed here, without the two last words, Plura Latent Animo Celata, Et Non Temeranda Judicis Ullius Scilicet, hoc volui.

But of this enough.

I have already remarked, that when the letters of two verfes, numerically confidered, denote the fame aggregate number, they are called 1004,000. Oifelius, in his note used by Gronovius, quotes two inftances from Homer. These the reader may easily refer to, both in the edition of Gronovius and that of Conrad; but as it is less common, I cannot help introducing an epigram quoted by Muretus, in his various readings,

Digitized by Google

coverings of the shield of Achilles, whether the outer one or the middle was made of gold; and what readings, from the Anthology, which tends to elucidate this subject of 100 Jupper verses-

Δαμαγοραν και λοιμον ισοψηφου τις ακυσας Εστησ' αμφυτερων τοι τροποι εκ καιοιος. Εις το μερος δε καθειλκετ' αιελκυσθει το ταλαιτου Δαμαγορε, λοιμοι δ'εδριι ελαφροτεροι.

The above epigram is a jeft upon fome worthlefs fellow of the name of Damagoras, whole name was equinameral with the Greek word for Peft. A perfon weighed in a balance Damagoras against the Peft, and found that the Peft was lighter, doubtles because the letters were fewer, though equinumeral. The numerals are caft up thus:

8	=	4		λ	==	30
æ	=	I			=	70
#	=	4 0		6	=	10
æ	=	1		۴	=	40
7	=	3		٠	=	70
0	=	79		5		200
P	=	100
a	=	I				420
5	\equiv	200
		420	•

The grammarians have given the name of Rhophalic to fuch verfes as begin with a monofyllable, and progrefively increase, as-

Rem tibi concessi doctissime dulcisonoram.

Digilized by Google

See

what names of cities and countries had undergone a change, as Bœotia, which was formerly called Aonia; Ægypt, which was called Aeria; and Crete, by the fame name Aeria; Attica was Acte, and poetically Acta; Corinth, Ephyre; the coaft of Macedonia, Æmathia; Theffaly, Hæmonia; Tyre, Sarra; Thrace, Sithon; and Seftos, Pofeidonium. Thefe and many other fuch things were contained in this book, which I inftantly haftened to return to him, and faid, "I give you joy, Sir, of this variety of learning; but take again your precious volume, which has no fort of concern with my humble fphere of literature; for this publication of mine, which you would willingly affift and adorn, feeks fupport chiefly from

See Servius in Putich. p. 1826; and Salmafius ad Solinum, as quoted by Geiner. See also a line quoted by Muretus from Homer:

a parap Atpendy poliphying articolarport

A climax of a different kind, if not afraid of diffurbing the reader's gravity, may be pointed out from from the $\Sigma \varphi_{uxec}$ of Aristophanes. See the lines corrected by Dawes in his Miscellanea Critica.—Edit. Burges.

Ατρεμας πρωτοι ΠΑΕ χατα ΠΑΠΑΕ ιπαίτι χαπιιτα ΠΑΠΑΠΠΑΕ Χωται χιζω χομιδη βροιτα ΠΑΠΑΠΑΠΑΕ ωσπερ εκειναι.

These lines are facetiously intended by Aristophanes to denote the progress of a crepitus.

that

Digitized by Google

OF AULUS GELLIUS. 129 that one line of Homer which Socrates fays pleafed him beyond all things:

Every thing either of good or ill which awaits you in your family.

CHAP. VII'.

Marcus Varro gave to Pompey, when first elected conful, a commentary, which he called, " Ifagogicum de officio senatus habendi."

CNÆUS Pompey was elected conful the first time with Marcus Crassus. When Pompey was about to enter upon his office, as, having passed his time in camps, he was ignorant of senatorial forms and the city manners, he requested his friend Marcus Varro to frame him a written directory, (Varro calls it commentarium suraywy:xev) from which he might learn the du-

• Every thing which relates to the Roman fenate, the right and manner of convoking it, and the places in which it affembled, is fo agreeably and amply difcuffed by Middleton, in his treatife on the Roman fenate, as to render my faying any thing on this and the fubfequent chapter not only unneceffary but impertinent.

Vol. III.

K

tics

ties of his office, when he convened the fenate, This book, which he had drawn up for Pompey upon this fubject, Varro fays, in the letters which he wrote to Oppianus, was loft: thefe are in the fourth book of Epiftolary Queftions. He here repeats many things on this fubject, as what he had faid before had perifhed.

The first thing he mentions is, who those perfons were by whom the fenate was accustomed to be convened : he calls them the dictator, the confuls, the prætor, the tribune of the people, the interrex, and the præfect of the city; and, except these, no other had a right of demanding a confultation of the fenate; and, as often as it happened that all thefe magistrates were at the fame time at Rome, then, according to the order in which they are arranged, he who is the first has the greatest right of confulting the fenate. He adds, that the military tribunes, who, by an extraordinary privilege, acted as proconfuls, alfo the decemvirs, who were invefted with confular power, and the triumvirs, who were appointed to regulate the flate, had the power of confulting the fenate. He afterwards difcuffed the fubject of intercessions; and he faid, that the right of interceding belonged to those only who possessed equal or higher power than those who had authority to confult the fenate. He then wrote upon the places in which a confultation of the fenate could lawfully take place; and he proved.

ed, that this could not happen but in the place appointed by the augurs, and called the temple; therefore temples were conflicuted by the augurs in the Hostilian or Pompeian hall, and afterward in the Julian, which were profane places, that the fenate might there affemble according to ancient cuftom. Amongst these remarks he obferved, that all facred houfes were not temples; that the house of Vesta was not a temple. After this he proceeds to fay, that a confultation of the fenate, holden before fun-rife or after funfet, was not according to established forms; and that they who confulted the fenate at fuch periods were liable to be called to account by the cenfors. He then speaks much upon what days were illegal for affembling the fenate; and that he who was about to convene the fenate ought to facrifice a victim and take the aufpices; and that all religious matters were to be referred to the fenate before they entered upon political fubiects, then matters of general concern to the state, afterwards the affairs of individuals. He added, that a decree of the fenate was paffed in two forms, either by the departure of those who confented, or, if the cafe were doubtful, by calling for the opinion of each; but that every one was to be feparately confulted in his turn, beginning with those of confular rank, from which rank formerly the eldeft was first asked Having faid this, he adds, his fentiments. that a new cuftom has been inftituted through intereft ; K 2 interest and partiality, by which he was first appealed to, whom the mover of the fenate preferred, though still he must be of confular dignity. He fooke likewife much upon the fubject of taking bribes, and of the fine to be inflicted upon any fenator who was not prefent when he ought to be. These and other such subjects as I have mentioned, Marcus Varro touched upon in his letter to Oppianus; but as to the two forms of conducting the confultations of the fenate, either by their departure, or by collecting their fentiments, this feems to be fcarcely confiftent with the opinion left by Atticus Capito in his Miscellaneous Observations; for in his 259th book he fays, that Tubero affirmed, that no confultation of the fenate could be regular without the form of divifion; because, in all their confultations, even in those which took place per relationem, a division was necessary; and Capito confirms this opinion. But I remember to have written more fully and more particularly upon all this business in another place.

Снар.

CHAP. VIII.

Enquiry whether the prefect of the Latin bolidays bad the right of convening and confulting the fenate.

JUNIUS denies that a præfect of the Latin holidays has a right to convene the fenate, fince he is not a fenator, and has no power of giving his opinion, becaufe he becomes a præfect at an age when he is inadmiffible to the fenate. But Marcus Varro, in the 4th of his Epiftolary Queftions, and Atteius Capito, in the 259th of his Obfervations, affirm that the præfect has the power of convening the fenate, and refers us, in oppolition to Mutius, to Capito's affent to the opinion of Tubero; "For," fays he, " before Atinius's law for affembling the people, their tribunes had the power of convening the fenate, although they were not fenators."

K 3

BOOK

BOOK XV.

Снар. І.

In the annals of Quintus Claudius it is faid, that wood rubbed with alum does not take fire.

A NTONIUS Julian, the rhetorician, had one day in particular declaimed, to the unufual delight and gratification of his hearers. His fubjects were generally of the fcholaftic kind, the work of the fame fkilful orator, adorned with the fame eloquence, but not always productive of the fame pleafure. A party of us, who were his friends, preffed round, and were attending him home', when, arriving at the Cifpian Hill, we faw a large building on fire: it was conftructed with many ^a Attending bim bome.]—It was cuftomary at Rome for men of diffinguished rank, or of superior character for eloquence or other talents, to be attended in public by a number of friends and followers. This we learn from many places in the writings of Cicero and others, and this passage also gonfirms it.

huge

ÔF AULUS GELLIUS: 135

huge wooden planks; and all the vicinity was in flames. Some one of Julian's companions immediately observed, that though the profits of farming near the city were great, yet the dangers were much greater; " and if;" faid he; " any mode could be invented to prevent houses in Rome catching fire fo eafily *, I would immediately fell my country poffessions, and purchase a fituation in the city." Julian then, with that pleafant countenance which in conversation he always affumed, " If," faid he, " you had read the 10th of Claudius's Annals, a most excellent and faithful author, Archelaus, one of king Mithridates's commanders, would have shewn you by what contrivance and skill you might prevent fire, fo that no wooden edifice, though attacked and penetrated by flames, would yet catch fire." I then enquired about this wonderful matter. He repeated, that in a publication of Quadrigarius he had found, that when, in Attica, Lucius Sylla attacked the Piræus, and Archelaus, a general of king Mithridates, de-

⁴ Catching fire fo eafily.]—See Juvenal, Sat. 3, and Johnfon's imitation in his poem called London:

Nam quid tam miserum tam solum vidimus, et non Deterius credas horrere incendia, &c.

Fires were very frequent at Rome. In Nero's time was a conflagration which continued, according to Seneca, for fix days.

K 4

fended

Google

fended it, a wooden tower, constructed to protect the besieged, though furrounded by flames, did not catch fire, because it had been rubbed by Archelaus with alum³. The words of Quadrigarius are these: "Then Sylla made an attempt, bringing out his troops, after a long time, to set fire to a wooden tower which Archelaus had constructed between them. He came, he approached the place, he put wood under it, he beat off the Greeks, he applied the flames, and after they ³ With alum.]—See a fimilar fact recorded in Ammianus Marcellinus, l. xv. c. 1.

Machinas Romanorum Perse exurere vi magna nitebantur, et assidue malleolos atque incendiaria tela torquentes laborabant incessium, ea re, quod humectis surtis et centonibus erant opertæ materiæ plures, aliæ unctæ alumine diligenter, ut ignis per eos laboretur innoxius.

The ancients had a great opinion of the efficacy of vinegar to extinguish fires, as appears from Plutarch, Sympos. 1. 3. q. 5. and Macrobius, Saturn. 1. 7. c. 6. which last writer fays-

"Quid aceto frigidius; folum enim hoc ex omnibus humentibus crefcentem flammam violenter extinguit, dum per frigus fuum calorem vincit elementi."

The great men at Rome had flaves, whofe businefs was to watch the house in the night, to prevent fire and the depredations of thieves. This we may perhaps understand from a passage in Juvenal, Sat. 14. 306.

> Dispositis prædives hamis vigilare cohortem Servorum noctu Licinus jubet, attonitus pro Electro, fignisque suis, Phrygiaque columna, Atque ebore, et lata testudine, dolia nudi Non ardent cynici.

> > had

Digitized by Google

had long attempted it, they could not fet it on fire, Archelaus had fo covered the whole fabric with alum; at which Sylla and his foldiers were aftonifhed; but as he could not effect his purpofe, he drew off his forces."

Снар. II.

Plato, in bis tract " de legibus," was of opinion, that encouragements to drink more copiously at feasts were not without their use.

A Perfor from the Isle of Crete, passing fome time at Athens, professed himself a Platonic philosopher, and wished to pass for such. He was a foolish trifling fellow, a boaster of his knowledge in Greek, and, moreover, he was so devoted to wine as to become a perfect laughing stock for drunkenness. In some entertainments which we young men regularly held every month at Athens, as soon as we had finished eating, and some instructive and pleasant topics of conversation were introduced, this man, having demanded filence, began to speak; and then, in a fort of vulgar and undisciplined rabble of words, words, he called upon people to drink, and this. he faid, he did according to the laws of Plato, as if Plato, in his treatife " de Legibus," had written most copiously in praise of drunkenness'. and had pronounced it a proper thing for grave and valiant men; and, during his harangue, he deluged all the wit he had in frequent and copious potations, affirming, that for the body and mind to be inflamed with wine proved an incentive to the genius, and a ftimulus to virtue. Plato, in his first and second book "de Legibus." has not, indeed, as this foolifh fellow conceived. commended that difgraceful intemperance which undermines and impairs the minds of men, but he has not disapproved of that more cheerful invitation to wine, which is regulated by certain bounds, and conducted by temperate prefidents and regulators' of the entertainment. For he thought that men's minds, by the moderate and proper ¹ In praife of drunkennefs.]—Confult on this fubject Plato himfelf de Legibus, l. 2. and l. 6 —See alfo Laertius, l. 3. fect. 39, where we find that Plato defired drunken people to look at themfelves in a glafs, that they might judge of their difguilting appearance : "At no time," fays Laertins, "did Plato recommend men to drink wine till they were intoxicated, except on the days facred to the god dorros to enor, the giver of wine. Thus Plato alfo expresses himfelf, and Athenzus quotes the passage, l. 3.

Digitized by Google

* Prefidents and regulators,]-Arbitris et magiftris conviviorum. This alludes to the well known cuftom of the ancients of proper relaxations of drinking, were refreshed and refitted for the duties of a fober station, and that they became thus by degrees more happy, and better qualified for the purfuit of any of their wonted objects. He likewife thought, if there were any latent errors in their affections or defires, which shame concealed, that, by the licence which wine gave, thefe were developed without any great danger, and became more obvious to correction or cure. Plato, in the fame place, fays, that these exercises are not to be shunned, in order to conquer the power of wine; for that no one can be true called moderate and temperate whole life and practice has never been tried among the dangers of diffipation and the allurements of pleafure; for he to whom all the gratifications and the elegancies of the table are of appointing a mafter of the feaft, called indifferently magister convivii and arbiter bibendi. This was sometimes determined by dice. See Horace—

Regna vini sortiere talis.

And again-

Quem Venus arbitrum Dicet bibendi.

See also in St. Matthew the passage wherein our Saviour directs the wine to be carried to the master of the feast.

The perfon thus elected was crowned with a garland, which, as all the guefts wore garlands, was probably diffinguished by fome particular ornaments. He was fometimes also called Rex, unknown,

unknown, if, unexperienced, he is led to a participation of them, either willingly, or by chance, or by neceffity, he is inftantly infatuated and feduced, his mind and his refolution give way, and he falls from the novelty of the attack. He thought, therefore, it was adviseable to frequent fuch meetings, and to contend hand to hand, as in an army, with pleafure and the indulgence of wine, that men might be fafe, not by flight or abstinence, but by vigorous refolutions and constant attention; that by proper indulgence we may preferve our temperance and moderation, and at the fame time difperfe, by warming and cherishing the mind, the attacks of frigid austerity and stupid bashfulness.

CHAP

CHAP. III.

Cicero's opinion of the particle au, prefixed to aufugio and aufero, and whether it is the fame preposition which occurs in autumo. /

Have read a book of Cicero, entitled the Orator, in which, after the author has faid that the words aufugio and aufero are compounded of the preposition ab and fugio and fero, but that this preposition, in order to make the pronunciation fofter, was changed into au, and that the words then became aufugio and aufero instead of abfugio and abfero; having, I fay, made this remark, he afterwards, speaking of the same particle, fays, " this preposition is found in no other word except thefe two." But in Nigidius's commentaries I find the word autumo compounded of the preposition ab and astumo, and autumo is contracted from abaltumo, which has the intensive fignification of " totum aftumo," like " abnumero." But with much reverence be it fpoken for this very learned man, Publius Nigidius, this appears more bold and ingenious than true; for autumo has not this fignification only, but it means dico, opinor, cenfeo, with which words that that preposition has no connection, either in the formation of the word, or expression of it's meaning. Besides, Cicero, a man of the most unwearied industry in literary pursuits, would not have faid ' that those were the only two words, if a third could have been found. But what appears most worthy of enquiry is, whether the preposition ab be changed into au, to soften the pronunciation, or whether the particle au be, like many other prepositions, derived from the Greek, as indeed we find it in that line of Homer—

'Ан сритан нен прота хан страдан хан ебекран.

² Have faid.]-The passage referred to in Cicero is this-

Quid fi etiam abfugit, turpe visum est; et abser nolue. runt; quæ præpositio, præter hæc duo verba, nullo alio in verbo reperitur.

Снар.

CHAP. IV.

Story of Ventidius Bassus, a man of mean birth, who, first, as it is related, triumphed over the Parthians.

T was mentioned in the conversation of fome I old and learned men, that in ancient times, many individuals, though of ignoble birth and mean fituations, had yet arrived at the most dignified offices of the state; nothing, however, excited more admiration than what was recorded of Ventidius Bassus. He was born at Picenum', of low extraction, and his mother, together with himfelf, was made a prifoner by Pompeius Strabo, the father of Pompey the Great, in the focial war, wherein he overcame the Afculani; and when Pompeius Strabo triumphed, he was carried with the reft before the chariot of the general, an infant, in his mother's arms. Afterwards, when he grew up, he with difficulty procured a livelihood, and that in the loweft way, by furnishing

¹ Picenum.]—Famous for its " Poma" of one kind or other—

> Cum Picenis excerpens femina pomis Gaudens.

It yet retains fome vestige of its ancient name, being called Bicenza.

VOL. III.

K 8

mules

mules and carriages to those officers who were appointed to the government of provinces, for whom he hired them. In this occupation he became known to Caius Cæfar, and went with him into Gaul. There, beenufe he conducted himfelf in that province with fome skill and dexterity, and afterwards executed fome commiffions in the civil war with punctuality and vigour, he not only was advanced to the honour of Cæfar's friendship, but elevated to the highest rank in the state; he was created tribune of the people, and afterwards prætor. At that time he was proclaimed an enemy by the fenate, together with Mark Anthony; but upon a junction of parties, he not only recovered his former dignity, but became, first, pontiff, and then conful. The Roman people, however, who had remembered Ventidius Baffus getting his livelihood by taking care of mules, were fo indignant at this, that the following verfes' were written up in the ftreets-

* Following verfes.]—The flory here related of this Baffus is to be found in a multitude of ancient writers.

It is to this man probably that Seneca alludes, when he fays, in his 47th epifile-

Erras si existimas me quosdam quasi sordidioris operæ rejecturum, ut puta illum mulionem et. illum bubulcum; nes ministeriis illos æstimabo, sed moribus.

See also Juvenal, fat. 7.

Si fortuna volet, fies de rhetore conful;

Si volet hæc eadem, fies de confule rhetor;

Ventidius quid enim? quid Tullius? &c.

Lo!

Lo! he who was the muleteer of late! Priefts, augurs, ye who know the will of fate, How came this rafeal by the confulate?

Suetonius Tranquillus records, that this fame Baffus was made governor of the Eaftern provinces by Mark Antony; and that the Parthians, invading Syria, were routed by him in three battles. He was the first who triumphed over the Parthians; and, at his death, was honoured by a public funeral ³.

³ Public funeral.]—There were three kinds of public funeral among the Romans. When a perfon was buried at the public expence, it was called, by way of diffinction, funus publicum. Other public funerals were called, indictivum cenforium, &c.

VOL. III.

L

CHAP.

CHAP. V.

Profligo often used improperly and ignorantly.

S there are many words which, through the ignorance and flupidity of people who fpeak what they do not understand, become perverted and corrupted from their right and original meaning, fo has the fignification of the word profligo fuffered a fimilar change and corruption; for as it is derived from adfligendo, and means " bringing any thing to destruction and annihilation," fo people used profligare to express (prodigere and deperdere) to deftroy, and they called " res profligatas," " proflistas and perditas," caft down and deftroyed; but now I hear of edifices and temples, though in a state of almost perfect prefervation, being in prefligato and profligata. It was with a good deal of humour, therefore, that a prætor once, of fome learning, gave the following reply to a youngfter at the bar ', as Sulpitius Apollinaris has told the ftory in one of his letters:

¹ Young fler at the bar.]—In the edition of Gronovius, barwa/culo, and it is fometimes read barbatulus. Cicero, in one of his epiftles to Atticus, uses the word barbatulus.

Concursabant barbatuli juvenes, totus ille grex Catilinæ.

•

letters: "when an impudent prater," fays he, "had made use of these words in his pleadings; ' all the causes of which you faid you would take cognizance to day, such has been your affiduity and expedition, are over, (profligata funt) one only remains,' to which I request your attention." The prætor then, with some wit, replied, "Whether the business which you say I have now transacted be (profligata) all over or not, I cannot say, but past a doubt it is all over with that which now falls into your hands, whether I hear it or not'." They, however, who wish to express the meaning which is here given to profligatum, if they speak good Latin ', use not profligatum but affestum, as Marcus Cicero, in his · Good Latin.]-See Gellius, book 3. chap. 17. where the fame observation is made. I find an acute remark in the Admonitiones Christiani Falsteri upon this subject, which vindicates Gellius from the centures of tome critics, who blame him for not calling those words pure Latin, for which there is the authority of Cicero, Livy, Tacitus, &c. Qui Latine loquuti funt, Falfterus thinks is applied by Gellius to those who lived before the time of Cicero; for example, Scipio, Cato, Quadrigarius, Metellus, Pifo, the Gracchi, &c. Cicero, in his 15th letter of the 9th book of Familiar Epifles, complains, that in his time the purity of the Latin language began to be corrupted by the introduction of a foreign jargon. His expression is, peregrinitatem in urbem Romam infusam: Gellius, therefore, seems to have been censured without fufficient reason. See the Admonitions of Christianus Falsterus ad Interpretes A. Gellii.

L 2

fpeech

fpeech upon the confular provinces. His words are thele: "We find the war (adjectum) difaftroufly proceeding, and, to fay the truth, almost ruinoufly concluded" (confectum). So, in a paffage following, "For why should Cæsar wish to remain in that province, unless it be to deliver to the republic a completion of that ruin which he hasbegun" (ut ea que per eum affecta funt, perfecta reip. tradat). So Cicero, in his Œconomics, "When now the summer declining, it is the time for the grapes to ripen in the sun" (affecta jam prope aftate).

Снлр.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. VI.

In Cicero's second book " de Gloria," there is a manifest error in what is written of Hettor and Ajax.

I N Tully's fecond book de Gloriâ there is an obvious miftake, but of no great confequence. Not every man, however, though learned, would detect this miftake, unlefs he had read the 7th book of Homer; for which reafon I do not fo much wonder that Tully committed the error, as that it was not obferved and corrected afterwards either by himfelf or his freedman' Tiro, who was a very learned man, and very attentive to every work of his patron's. There is in that book the following paffage concerning Homer: "Ajax, about to engage with Hector, expresses a wish that if conquered he may obtain funeral rites, and declares, that he would have passes and the source of the

" Beneath this tomb' a valiant foldier lies, Hector alone from him could bear the prize; Thus ever to my name fhall glory rife."

Now.

^b Beneath this tomb.]— The lines are from the feventh Iliad, and I have endeavoured literally to translate them, but I L 3 fhall shall also subjoin Pope's version, which is certainly very diffuse:

Now these verses which Cicero translates into Latin are not delivered by Ajax, nor is it he who pleads for burial; but Hector delivers them, and speaks of his opponent's funeral before he knows whether Ajax will engage with him.

Greece on the fhore fhall raife a monument, Which when fome future mariner furveys, Washed by broad Hellespont's resounding feas, Thus shall he fay: "A valiant Greek lies there, By Hector slain, the mighty mon of war." The stone shall tell your vanquished hero's name, And distant ages learn the victor's fame.

Pope does not often prefent us with such imperfect rhymea as surveys and seas, there and war.

In Homer's time the tombs of the heroes who fought at Troy were still to be seen on the shores of the Hellesponts which as Pope, in his note from Eustathius, observes, propably suggested the hint of the above lines:

Cicero's expression in his translation is,

Vitæ jam pridem lumina linquens.

He uses a fimilar one in a fragment in his book de Divinatione:

Vitai lumina linquens;

Or, as it is in Olivet's edition of Cicero, Vitalia lumina linquens.

Virgil alfo ufes the term lumina vitæ 3 Si lumina vitæ Attigerint.

CHAP.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. VII.

It is observed of old men, that their fixty-third year is either marked by trouble, or death, or some fignal calamity. An example taken from a letter from Augustus to his adopted fon Caius '.

T has been noticed by many people, and experienced by almost all old men, that the fixty-third year of life is attended with fome danger or difaster to the body, fome grievous diforder, and either with loss of life or injury of mind. People, therefore, who are engaged in the study of such things and words, call this year of life the climacteric. The pight before last, when I was reading Augustus's epistles to his grandfon Caius, and I was led on by the free and unstudied elegance of the style, easy and simple, not laboured and austere, I found this very observation upon the year I have mentioned. His letter is this: "October 9th. I falute you, my

¹ Confult Gellius, book 3. chapter 10. on the power and qualities imputed by the ancients to certain numbers, and to the number feven in particular. My note at that chapter zenders my delaying the reader in this place unneceffary.

² Augustus's epifles.]—We learn from Suctonius, that Augustus wrote various things befides epiftles, many fragments of which are collected by Rutgersius, and may be seen in the fecond book of his Various Readings, chap. 19.

VOL: III.

Caius,

Caius, as the deareft object ³ of my affection, whofe ablence from me, whenever it happens, I moft fincerely regret; but particularly on fuch a day as this my eyes are eager to behold my Caius. Wherever you now are, may you with happinefs and health celebrate my 64th birth day, for you fee I have efcaped the ufual climacteric of old men, the 63d year; and I pray to God, that whatever time may remain to me, it may be prolonged to fee your welfare; and that while the republic is in it's moft flourishing ftate, with a becoming fpirit you may fucceed to the burthens of my ftation."

³ Deareft object.]—Literally, my deareft little eye, a phrafe which was in general confidered as amorous, and is fo applied by Catullus, and other writers of that ftamp. Auguftus, it feems, ufed a method of writing letters, which rendered them entirely unintelligible, except to those to whom they were addressed. Thus, for example; he put the next letter fucceeding, as, b for a, c for b, and fo on; at the close he put two aa's for x, thus, aa.—See Rutgersfus, the place before cited, and Dio Cassion, book z. whom indeed Rutgersius quotes. The reader may also confult Suetonius in Vita Augusti, fect. 88.

Julius Cæfar alfo, as appears from the fame author, Vit. Jul. fect. 56. had fome fuch method of corresponding with his friends; he used the fourth letter (quartam elementorum literam) as d for a.

Снар.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. VIII.

Paffage from a fpeech of Favorinus, an old orator, containing an investive on luxurious entertainments, delivered by bim when he recommended the Licinian law in restraining expenses.

W HEN I read an old oration of Favorinus, a man of fome eloquence, I learnt the whole of it, that I might remember how odious are the expences and luxuries of which he fpeaks in the following manner : "Caterers and minifters of luxury deny that any entertainment is elegant, unlefs when you have eaten a great deal your difh is taken away, and fomething elfe more high and dainty is brought; for that is confidered as the higheft pitch of luxury with them, when expence and daintinefs take place of elegance. They fay, you ought not to eat the whole of any bird except the ficedula'; and they add, that your

* Ficedula.]—That the ficedula was efteemed a great delicacy at the Roman tables is fufficiently known. The ficedula was a bird like a nightingale, and its literal interpretation is a fig-eater. A long account of the mode of dreffing it may be feen in the edition of Apicius by Lifter. Martial fpeaks of the rump being of the higheft repute as a delicacy. It is certainly not the nightingale, but the beccafico, the name of which fignifies the very fame, and is flill efteemed a delicacy in Italy. See Martial, xiii. 49. who fays, as it eats grapes alfo it fhould rather be called uvedula, the grape being the more worthy fruit. The Italian dictionaries, under beccafico, have ficedula as its interpretation.

Vol. III.

LS

enter-

entertainment is vulgar, unlefs you provide fo many birds and fatted fowls, that your guefts may be fatisfied with the rumps and the hinder part; for as for the other parts of birds and fowls, they who eat them are thought to have no tafte. If luxury fhall continue to increafe in its prefent proportion, what will be left but that men fhould find perfons to eat for them, to prevent the fatigues of their meal, fince their couches of gold ² and filver, and their purple robe, are more fuperbly ornamented for the ufe of fome men, than for the altars of the immortal gods."

^a Couches of gold.] — The progress of refinement and luxury was probably much the same at Rome as in other great nations. In their infancy they were a modest, temperate, and frugal people; in their decline, voluptuous, effeminate, and profuse. In this respect, the human character in general seems much the same with the characters of nations; industry invigorates, poverty hardens, wealth relaxes, and luxury corrupts:

Rank abundance breeds.

In grois and pampered nations, floth, and luft, And wantonneis, and gluttonous excefs.

John Meursius has written a tract, which he calls Roma Luxurians, that is, on the luxury of the Romans; wherein, among other things, he mentions their couches of ivory and even of gold; that is, we suppose, gilt; for Pliny, book 33, chap. 11. spcaks of couches of filver with something like adonishment,

Сплр

CHAP. IX.

Cecilius the poet used "froms" in the masculine gender, not by poetic licence, but with propriety and by analogy.

W ITH propriety and fpirit has Cæcilius, in his Substitute, written-

" Nam hi funt inimici peffimi ' fronte hilaro, Corde trifti, quos neque ut adprehendas neque ut mittas, fcias."

Hard is the talk to guard against his wiles,

Who cheats with heart averse and hollow fmiles.

I quoted these lines in a company of young men of learning, when we were speaking of a

^a Peffimi.]—A fimilar expression may be found in Tacitus. See the Life of Agricola, 41. 1.

Crebro per cos dies apud Domitianum absens accusatus, absens absolutus est; causa periculi non crimen, aut querela læsi cujusquam, sed infensus virtutibus princeps et gloria viri, ac pessimum inimicorum genus laudantes.

Like this also is the fentiment of Achilles in Homer-

Who dare think one thing and another tell, My foul detefis them as the gates of hell.

See also Augustin de Civitate Dei, 1. 19. and Cicero de Amicitia, as quoted by Gronovius in his edition of Gellius.

character

character of this fort. One who was prefent, a grammarian of the common stamp, but a man of fome rank, faid, "What a licentious and impudent fellow was this Caecilius, to fay fronte bilaro, and not bilard, without fhrinking from fo grofs a folecifm."-" Rather," replied I, " how licentious and impudent are we, who improperly and ignorantly affert that frontem is not the masculine gender, fince the rule of proportion called analogy, and the authority of the ancients, testify that we ought to fay, not bane, but bunc frontem; for Cato, in the 5th of his Origines, has this passage: ' Postridie signis collatis a que fronte peditatu, equitibus, atque aliis, cum boftium legionibus pugnavit.' In the fame book too, Cato has retto fronte." " But," fays this half-learned grammarian, " away with your authorities, which, perhaps, you may poffefs, and give us a little reafon, which it feems you do not poffefs." Irritated a little at this expression, as was natural from my age, " Attend," faid I, " learned Sir, to my reafoning, which, however false it may be, you cannot confute. All words ending in the three fame letters as frons are of the mafculine gender, if they are terminated in the genitive like mons, Fronte.]—The word about which there is a diffute in this chapter was used in both genders by the best writers. See Nonius Marcellus.

Virgil says, frontem obscenam; Cato de re militari uses fronte longo; and coloratum frontem occurs in Plautus.

pons, pons, fons." He, on the other hand, ftill fupporting his caule, faid, ' but there are, young man, feveral fimilar words not of the mafculine gender." Every one then called upon him to mention only one; but he, throwing himfelf into different attitudes, could not open his lips, and even changed colour. I then interfered: "Go," faid I, " take thirty days to find this; and having found it, give us the meeting." So we fent away this ignorant man to hunt for a word, by the help of which he might do away the effect of the termination.

Снар. Х.

The firange and voluntary death of certain Milefian virgins'.

PLUTARCH, in his first treatife upon the foul, when speaking of certain habits which take possible possible filling of the human mind, has mentioned that the Milesian virgins (nearly all of them that were in the city) on a fudden, with-

• This flory of the Milesian virgins is also to be found in Plutarch's tract on the Virtues of Women.

The Romaus, frequent as the crime of fuicide was among them, endeavoured to mark their general abhorrence of it by difgracing the dead bodies of those who destroyed themfelves: no rites of sepulture were allowed to the felf murderer.

Virgil, in his twelfth Æneid, brands this crime with the epithet of informe-

Purpureos moritura manu descendit amictus,

Et nodum informis leti trabe neclit ab alta.

Heyne, at this paffage, calls this kind of death heroicum et tragicum, that is frequent in the accient Greek poets and tragedians. Jocasta hanged herself, fo did Epicaste and Anticlea the mother of Ulysse, and Citte and Phædra, &c. See also Bayle, in his dictionary, at the article Abdera. Montaigne also tells this story, and calls the principle which induced the Milesian virgins thus to destroy themselves a furious compact.

out

out any apparent caufe, took the refolution of dying, and that many actually hanged themfelves. As this difpolition daily increased, and no remedy could prevent their determination to die, the Milefians decreed, that the virgins who should thus hang themfelves should be carried to their funeral naked, with the fame rope that hanged them. After this decree the young women desisted from their fuicide, deterred only by the shame of meeting with fuch dishonourable interment.

Снар.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. XL

Form of the fenatorial decree for banifhing philofophers from Rome; also the decree of the cenfor, by which they were cenfured and restrained who instituted and taught rhetoric at Rome⁴.

I N the confulate of Caius Fannius, Strabo, and Marcus Valerius Meffala, a confultation of the fenate was holden concerning the Latin philosophers and teachers of rhetoric.

Marcus

• The difficulties which the art of rhetoric had to encounter on it's first introduction at Rome, are explained by Suetonius in his tract de Claris Rhetoribus, where the decree detailed in this chapter is also quoted. See also Bayle, at the article Fannius. Confult also Tertullian, p. 397, Havercamp's edition. I subscribe his words:

Quis poetarum, quis fophistarum, qui non de prophetarum fonte potaverit? inde igitur et philosophi ritum ingenii surrogaverunt; inde opinor et a quibusdam philosophia legibus quoque ejecta est a Thebzis dico, a Sparteolis et Argzis.

These Grecian states of Thebes, Sparta, and Argos, banished philosophers from among them as the corruptors of their youth. See Seneca ad Helvec. Aliquando philosophi velut corruptores juventutis abire justi sunt.

Many are of opinion that this decree at Rome was confined to the Epicureans. See Ælian, Var. Hift. 9. 12. I thus tranflate the chapter: The Romans expelled Alczus and Philifcus, the Epicureans, from their city, because they instructed the youth in many vicious pleasures. The Messenians also expelled

Digitized by Google

"Marcus Pomponius reprefented, that injurious reports were fpread concerning these philosophers and rhetoricians; it was therefore decreed that Marcus Pomponius the prætor should watch and take care that, for the good of the public and his own credit, they should not remain at Rome."

A few years after this decree of the fenate, Cnæus Domitius Œnobarbus and Lucius Licinius Craffus, the cenfors, iffued this edict for reftraining Latin rhetoricians:

"Whereas we have been informed that there are men who have inftituted a new fcience, and that to the fchool of thefe men our youth flock, while they call themfelves Latin rhetoricians, and that there the young men pafs whole days in idlenefs; now our anceftors have fixed what inftruction their children fhould imbibe, and what fchools they fhould frequent; thefe new inftitutions, therefore, which accord not with our cuftoms, nor the cuftoms of our anceftors, are neither agreeable nor proper; wherefore, to thofe who conduct as well as thofe who frequent fuch feminaries, we have thought proper expelled the Epicureans. Athenzus fays the fame, 12. 12. and fo does Suidas at the article Epicurus.

The emperor Julian also forbade the rhetoricians to teach the Christians, determined if these latter would not be pagans they should not be scholars. See the Life of Julian by the Abbé de la Bleterie.

VOL. III.

M

to

to express our disapprobation of their proceedings."

Not only in those very rude times, and when they were unpolished in Greek literature, were philosophers banished from Rome, but when Domitian was emperor they were, by a decree of the senate, driven out of the city, and banished Italy, at which time the philosopher Epictetus went from Rome to Nicopolis on account of that decree.

Ć H A PA

ÇHAP. XII.

Celebrated paffage from a speech of Gracchus, concerning his frugality and continence '.

WHEN Caius Gracchus returned from Sardinia, he addreffed himfelf to an affembly of the people in there words—

" In the government of your province I have conducted myfelf, not as confulting my own ambition, but your intereft. I had no tavern, no beautiful youths as attendants, but your fons, who were more modest at my entertainments than in fervice with their general." Afterwards he fays, "I took care that no one in the province should fay with truth that I had received a penny, or any larger sum, as a prefent, or that ^a The cenfors had profecuted Gracchus for leaving his office of quettor in Sicily before the period which the law required. This Gracchus did to folicit the tribunefhip. His oration, part of which is here quoted, made fuch an impreffion on his hearers as to obtain his acquittal.

Charifius, an old grammarian quoted by Prifcian, and preferved in Putschius, has given so much more of the speech of Gracchus as may enable us to form an idea of the whole. It must be remembered that the virtues of Gracchus were entitled to the greater commendation, because Sicily was confidered as a place of great corruption, luxury, and vice.

M 2

by

by my means any one had incurred expence. Two years have I been in your province, and if any harlot has entered my houfe, or any flave been feduced ' for my purpofes, confider me as the loweft and most abandoned of mankind; fince I was thus continent with their flaves, you may fuppofe what was my conduct toward your fons." A little further on he fays, " Thus, my countrymen, though when I went from Rome I carried my bags full of money, I brought them from the province empty; while others, who have carried out cafks filled with wine, have brought them home filled with gold."

² Seduced.]—Gronovius and all the editions have folicitus eft. There can be no doubt but it ought to be follicitatus eft; for omnium natorum, I would propofe to read, hominum natorum.

Снар.

Digitized by Google

Ċнар. XIII.

Of unufual verbs, called by the grammarians common, and used in either voice.

THE verbs utor, vereor, bortor, and confolor, are common, and may be used either way, as vereor te and vereor abs te, that is, tu me vereris; utor te and utor abs te, that is, tu me uteris; bortor te and bortor abs te, that is, tu me bortaris; confolor te and confolor abs te, that is, tu me confolaris. Testor also, and interpretor, have this reciprocal fignification. But these words are commonly used only in one way, and it is doubted whether they are ever used in the other. Afranius, in his Confobrinis, has—

Hem isto ' parentum est vita vilis liberis,

Ubi malunt metui quam vereri fe ab fuis.

Here vereri is applied in its lefs ufual fenfe. Novus, in the Ligata et Lignaria, applies the word utitur in its oppofite fenfe: "quia fupellex multa, quæ non utitur, emitur tamen;" that is, "quæ

^a Hem ifto, &c.]—Thefe lines, as they here ftand, are far from perfpicuous. Muretus, in hisVarious Readings, propofes a different reading. The meaning is, the life of parents who with rather to be dreaded than beloved can be little agreeable to their children.

M 3

ului

usui non est," which is not in use. Marcus Cato, in his 5th orig. fays, " exercitum fuum pranfum paratum cohortatum eduxit foras atque inftruxit." Confolor is likewife applied in its unusual fense in a letter which Quintus Metellus wrote, in his banishment, to Cnæus and Licinius Domitius: "When I think," fays he, " of your regard for me, I am greatly comforted, (vehementer confolor) and your fidelity and virtue are imprefied upon my mind." In the fame manner Marcus Tullius, in his 1st book "de Divinatione," has used testata and interpretata, fo that testor and interpretor appear to be verbs common; fo Sallust has the phrase dilargitis proscriptorum bonis, as if largior were one of these verbs common. Thus we fee veritum, puditum, and pigitum, not used perfonally in the infinitive mood, nor confined to the ancients alone, but adopted by Marcus Tullius in his fecond book " de Fini-" Primum Ariftippi Cyrenaicorumque bus: omnium quos non est veritum in ea voluptate qua maximâ dulcedine fenfum moveret, fummum bonum ponere." Dignor alfo, and veneror, confiteor, and teftor, are accounted verbs common, according to that paffage in Virgil-

Conjugio Anchifa Veneris dignate superbo, Curfusque dabit venerata facerdos.

Confessi aris is a phrase which occurs in the Twelve Tables, in thefe words : " Æris confeffi fessi rebusque judicatis 30 dies justi fint." In the fame tables too, is this passage: "Quæ si erit testatior libripensve suerit in testimonium fariatur improbus, intestabilisque esto."

9

² Inteftabilifque.]—This was a law term, and has two fignifications; it means both one whofe evidence could not be taken in a court of justice, who was confequently infamous; it meant also one who could not make a will. See Horace—

Is intestabilis et sacer esto.

Sat. 3. l. v. 181.

Ulpian fays, that whoever wrote a libellous poem could neither make a will himfelf, nor be witnefs to the will of another perfon. Inteftabilis was fometimes alfo ufed in another and lefs decent fenfe, though perhaps Lambin may have feen a meaning in Plautus which Plautus himfelf never intended. See the Curculio of Plautus, Act I. Scene I.

Semper curato ne vis intestabilis.

On the subject of aris confess, which fragment occurs in the fentence above, see Gellius again, book 20. c. 1.

Digitized by GOOGLE

CHAP. XIV.

Metellus Numidicus bas borrowed a new figure of fpeech from the Greek orators.

I N Metellus Numidicus's third book, containing his accufation againft Valerius Meffala, I obferved a new expression. His words are these: "When he found himself involved ' in such a charge, and faw his companions coming in tears to the senate to complain that great sums of money had been exacted," pecunias se maximas exactas appeared to me a Greek mode of expression; for the Greeks fay sustance maximas for the apyupion, he demanded money of me; and if that phrase is allowable, any one may be faid to be exactus pecuniam. Thus Cæcilius appears to have used the word in his Hypobolimæus²—

Ego illud minus nihilo exigor portorium, which is, "nevertheless, that custom-house fee is required of me."

¹ Himfelf involved.]—Quum fe sciet, a friend proposes to read quum re sciret, which may be rendered when he posi-'tively knew. H. Stephens disputes the accuracy of the title of this chapter. See the annotations at the end of his edition of Gellius, p. 59.

² Hypobolimæus,]—A few other fragments of this play have been preferved by H. Stephens, and may be found in Nonius Marcellus. To Hypobolimæus the term Æfchinus is added by Nonius Marcellus as well as by Gellius.

CHAP. XV.

The ancients used " paffis velis," and " paffis manibus," not from their own word " patior," but from " pando."

F ROM the verb pando the ancients formed paffum and not panfum, and expaffum, with the preposition, not expanfum. Thus Cæcilius in his Synariftufæ¹—

^s Synariftufæ.]—Thefe are the only fragments of this play, and are to be found no where but in Gellius, from whom they are inferted by H. Stephens in his collection.

A play of this name was written by Crates, as appears from Julius Pollux. Pliny alfo, in his 23d book, tells us, that Menander wrote a comedy called Synariftuíæ. His words are, Item apud Menandrum Synariftuíæ hoc edunt.

For difpeffis, at the conclusion of this chapter, I would rather read difperfis, and confequently derive the word from difpergo.

This fense of dispersis comis occurs in Anacreon. The lines are fufficiently elegant to be quoted--- > Ελικας δ' ελευθερως μοι Πλοκαμων, ατακτα συνθεις Αφες ως θελωσι κεισθαι.

The meaning of the quotation from Plautus is this-

You'll fhortly march, I fancy, in this pofture, Without the Metian gate, bearing along A gibbet, with your hands foread out.

Ş.

Heri

Digitized by Google

Heri vero prospexisse eum se ex tegulis Hæc nuntiasse, et flammeum expassion domi.

A woman is faid to be paffo capillo, with difhevelled hair, quafi porresto, expanfo, and we fay paffis manibus, paffis velis, in the fenfe of diductis and diftentis. So Plautus, in his Miles Gloriofus, changing a into e, as is ufual in compound words, fays difpeffis for difpaffis:

Credo ego isthoc exemplo tibi ese eundum extra portam,

Dispessis manibus patibulum cum habebis.

Снар. XVI.

Extraordinary death of Milo of Crotona .

MILO of Crotona, a celebrated wreftler, who, as is recorded, was crowned in the fiftieth Olympiad, met with a lamentable and extraordinary death. When, now an old man, he had defifted from his athletic art, and was journeying alone in the woody parts of Italy, he faw an oak very near the road fide, gaping in the middle of the trunk with its branches extended; willing, I fuppofe, to try what ftrength he had left, he put his fingers into the fiffure of the tree, and attempted to pluck afide and feparate the oak, and did actually tear and divide it in the middle; but when the oak was thus fplit in two, and he relaxed his hold as having accomplifhed his intention, upon a ceffation of the force

² The flory of Milo occurs in fo many authors, ancient as well as modern, that it must necessfarily be familiar to every reader. The learned are not agreed about the time when this man lived. Some fay he flourished in the time of Tarquinius Priscus, others in the time of Tarquinius Superbus. Salmafius, in his annotations on Solinus, has entered at length into the question, but has not cleared it up.

it

Diaitized by

it returned to its natural position, and left the man, when it united, with his hands confined², to be torn by wild beafts.

⁴ His bands confined.]—The mode of Milo's death is thus mentioned by Ovid, if indeed the Ibis be Ovid's—> Utque Milon robur deducere fiffile tentes, Nec poffis captas inde referre manus.

CHAP.

Снар. XVII.

Wby the nobler Athenian youth left off playing on the flute, which had been long the cuftom of their country '.

A LCIBIADES the Athenian, when a youth, was inftructed by his uncle Pericles in the liberal arts and fciences; and Pericles ordered Antigenides, a mulician, to be fent for to teach him to play on the flute, which was then confidered as a great accomplifhment. He applied the pipe to his mouth and blew into it, but difgufted by the deformity of his countenance, ke flung it afide and broke it. As foon as this ftory was known, by univerfal confent the fcience of playing on the flute was difcontinued. This ftory is taken from the 29th commentary of Pamphilas,

^a This anecdote is related by Plutarch, who gives as a reafon why Alcibiades refufed to learn the flute, that whoever plays on the harp might at the fame time talk or fing, but that he who played on the flute was debarred of conversation. " Let the Thebans," faid he, " play on the flute, for they know not how to converse; but we of Athens have Minerva and Apollo as our tutelar gods, one of whom threw the flute away, whilf the other ftripped off the fkin of the man who played upon it."

Digitized by Google

Снар. XVIII.

The battle in the civil war, and the victory obtained by Cæfar at Pharfalia, was mentioned and foretold by one Cornelius, a prieft, who was that day at Patavium in Italy '.

ON the day when Caius Cæfar and Cnæus Pompey engaged in Thessay, a circumstance happened at Petavium in Italy, beyond the Po, which deferves to be recorded. One Cornelius, a priest, a man

^a The circumftance of this prophecy by this Cornelius is mentioned by Lucan, b. 7. v. 192.

Euganeo, fi vera fides memorantibus, augur Colle fedens Aponus terris ubi fumifer exit, Atque Antenorei difpergitur unda Timavi, Venit fumma dies, geritur res maxima, dixit, &c. &c.

Which lines are thus rendered by Rowe-

Where Aponus first springs in smoky steam, And full Timavus rolls his nobler stream, Upon a hill that day, if fame be true, A learned augur sat the skies to view; " 'Tis come; the great event is come," he cried; " Our impious chiefs their wicked war decide." Whether the seer observ'd Jove's forky stame, And mark'd the streament's discordant streme; a man of family, honoured from his fituation as a prieft, and respectable from the fanctity of his life, on a fudden emotion of his mind exclaimed. that he faw at a diftance a most furious engagement; he then loudly vociferated, as if he were himfelf in the battle, that he observed some giving way, others preffing on, and fpoke of flaughter, flight, weapons, a renewal of the fight, and the cries of the dying. At last he exclaimed, " Cæfar is victorious." The forebodings of Cornelius at that time appeared futile and fenfelefs, but were afterwards the caufe of great furprife. Not only the day when the battle was fought in Theffaly, and the event of the battle, which he foretold, proved true, but all the changes of the day, and the order of the conflict between the two armies, were described by his emotions and exclamations.

Or

Or whether, in that gloom of fudden night, The ftruggling fun declar'd the dreadful fight, From the first birth of morning in the skies, Sure never day like this was known to rife; In the blue vault as in a volume spread, Plain might the Latian definy be read.

C M A P.

Снар. ХІХ.

Paffage worthy of record, from the fatire of Marcus Varro, entitled, περι εδεσματων.

THE number of perfons is not fmall to whom that obfervation of Marcus Varro, in his fatire againft luxurious eating, applies: "If," faid he, " you had given a twelfth part of that attention to the fludy of philofophy which you have laid out to make your baker give you good bread, you might long fince have become a good man⁺; but now, people who know the baker would give an hundred thoufand fefterces for him, while for you no one would, who knows you, give an hundred pence."

¹ A good man.]—The epithet bonus, applied to vir, was used in a variety of fignifications. Horace fays—

> Vir bonus est quis? Qui consulta patrum, qui leges juraque servat.

Vir bonus fometimes implies a wealthy man. Bona, applied to dicta, means facetious or witty fayings. In what fense it is to be underflood in this chapter it is not easy to fay; probably it is fynonymous with locuples.

The most celebrated bakers were of Lydia, Phœnicia, and Cappadocia. See Athenzus, book 3. chap. 29. Crœfus honoured the woman who made his bread with a statue of gold. See Heredotus, Clio, chap. 51.

CHAP. XX.

Circumftances of the birth, life, manners, and death of the poet Euripides.

HEOPOMPUS fays, that the mother of the poet Euripides gained a livelihood by felling vegetables', but that his father, when Euripides was born, was told by the Chaldzeans that his child would be conqueror in the public games. The father, interpreting the boy's fate literally, thought he ought to make him a wreftler; and fo, ftrengthening by exercise the youth's body, he introduced him among the young men who were to contend in the Olympic games. At first, on account of his tender age, he was not admitted to the contest. Afterwards, in the Eleusinian and Thesean contests, he engaged, and was victorious. Then, from his attention to bodily exercises, proceeding to the culture of his mind, he was a follower of Anaxagoras the physician, and of Prodicus the rhetorician, whilft Socrates was his in-

³ Selling vegetables.]—Suidas fays this account is not true; and afferts, on the authority of Philochorus, that the mother of Euripides was of a very noble family. Valerius Maximus fo far contradicts Suidas as to affirm, that the tale of the low defcent of this poet was believed by almost all learned men: Omnum pame doctorum literæ loquuntur.

VOL. III.

N

ftructor

ftructor in moral philosophy. At eighteen years old he began to write tragedy. Philochorus ' relates, that in the island of Salamis was a wild gloomy cave, which I have feen, wherein Euripides often composed ' his tragedies. He is • Philochorus.]—This was an hiftorian of great celebrity. He flourished in the time of Ptolemy Philopater. He wrote a history of Athens, was put to death by Antigonus, and is commended in the Scholia to the Ranæ of Aristophanes. See Ranæ, scene 1. act 5.

• Composed.]—Gronovius writes scriptitarit; perhaps it is misprinted for scriptitavit, or it may be scriptitaret. In the sentence which follows, for coetu we should probably read coitu.

Euripides expresses himself with great severity against the female fex in his Hippolytus. Among other things he fays-

By a fair femblance to deceive the world; Wherefore, O Jove! beneath the folar beams That evil, woman, didit thou caufe to dwell.

Again-

Perdition feize you both ! For with unfatiated abhorrence still

'Gainft woman will I fpeak,

For they are ever uniformly wicked.

I have used Mr Wodhull's translation-

That Euripides difliked women is affirmed alfo by Diogenes Laertius, who fays, that the poet had two wives, both of whom proved unchafte. See alfo the 13th book of Atheneus on this fubject. The Athenians paffed a decree, enabling every man to have two wives, in order to increase the population of their city, which had been exhausted by frequent wars.

- faid faid to have held all women in particular abhorrence, either from a natural diflike to their company, or becaufe he had at the fame time two wives, which, by the Athenian law, was allowed to people tired of one marriage. Ariftophanes notices this antipathy to women in his Thefmophoriafufæ thus—

For many crimes upon this guilty wretch;

Give him coarfe fare, for that shall suit him well

Who on the gardener's roots hath ever lived."

And Alexander Œtolus⁴ wrote these lines on Euripides:

Although thy pupil Anaxagoras

Doth for a grave and churlish pedant pass,

Let him but write, and quickly you shall know What honied strains from chanting fyrens flow.

When Euripides was in Macedonia with king Archelaus, that monarch admitted him to his intimacy; but, returning one night from visiting • Alexander (Etolus.]—A tragic poet and grammarian, who flourished in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus. Strabo has preferved three more of his verses. See also Parthenius, who, in his Erotica, inferts some beautiful verses as from Alexander (Etolus.

Νg

the

[&]quot;I'd have all women wreak their vengeance due the king, he was torn by dogs' fet on him by a rival, and died of his wounds.

The Macedonians treated his tomb and his memory with fuch refpect, that upon various occasions they fung with exultation,

" Ne'er shall thy name, Euripides, be loft."

Proud that fo great a poet had been buried in their country. So that when ambaffadors were fent to them from the Athenians, requefting that his bones might be fent back to Athens, his native land, the Macedonians unanimoufly perfifted in denying the requeft.

* Torn by dogs.] The incident of the death of Euripides is related by Suidas, and gave rife to the proverbial exprefiion of $\pi_{fo\mu\nu\rho\sigma}$ xures, which is to be found explained, with reference to this event, in the Greek proverbs extracted from Suidas, Diogenianus, &c.

The rival was fome 'courtier, who fufpected that Euripides had done him ill offices with the king, their common mafter.

Writers, however, are by no means agreed with respect to the manner of this poet's death. Some say simply that he died in Macedonia, others that he was torn in pieces by women.

The Athenians, not being able to recover the bones of Euripides, crected a statue to his honour, as is mentioned by Pausanias.

CHAP. XXI.

By the poets, the fons of Jove are reprefented a wife and polifhed, those of Neptune most r ferocious.

THE poets have defcribed the fr piter as diffinguished by th their wisdom, and their strength, as nos, and Sarpedon; while the fons as Cyclops, Cercyon, and the I represented as ferocious, cruel, an humanity, as if sprung from the

¹ Sons of Jupiter.]—If I were fev tues of thefe fuppofed fons of Ju qualities of the descendants of Ne pages with extracts from the anc: Yet the ancient mythologists we qualities they imputed to Jove him; for though on the princithat was good, and fair, and g of Venus, the Graces, the father of Mars, the god Vulcan, the god of firr while to confult Phurnu Blackwell's Letters on other writers. s very ude and

$

Sns of Jueir virtue, Æacus, Miof Neptune, eftrygons, are d deftitute of all : fea.

erally to recite the virpiter, and the contrary ptune, I might fill feveral ent poets and other writers. re not very confiftent in the , and those who sprung from le that he was the fource of all aceful, they made him the fathe Hours, &c. yet he was also of violence and Azughv On these subjects, it 4 tus de Natura Deur " Mythology, among and is worth ...n, as well as , a multitude of Снар. XXII.

Story of Sertorius; bis cunning, and the artifice be employed to keep bis barbarian foldiers together, and conciliate their good will '.

SERTORIUS was an acute man and a good general, who underftood the art of exercifing and managing an army. Upon trying occalions he would, to effect any advantageous purpole, tell a lie to his foldiers, read feigned letters, or relate to them a pretended dream; and fometimes, if it affifted him in raifing the fpirits of his men, he would talk of certain religious interferences. But his most memorable contrivance was this :---A white deer ', of most exquisite beauty and extraordinary fwistmes, was given him by a Lusitanian. He endeavoured to perfuade his followers that this animal came to him from heaven; that, infpired by the power of Diana, it conversed with him, gave him advice,

* The flory here related of Sertorius may be found at greater length in Plutarch, and its parallel occurs in the Hiftory of Socrates, of Numa Pompilius, of Scipio, and others.

• Pliny talks of a white hind; and Paulanias lays, that luch cauled great admiration in Rome.

Sertorius is compared, in the principal circumftances of his life and fortunes, to the Greek commander Eumenes. The 'name of the man who gave Sertorius his hind was Spanus.

and

and pointed out to him what was proper to be done; and if he found it neceffary to impofe any harfh commands upon the army, he declared that he took his directions from the ftag. When he faid this, all paid obedience to him as to a deity. Upon a certain day, when it was faid that the enemy were approaching, this deer, alarmed at the hurry and tumult, fled, and hid itfelf in a neighbouring marsh; and, after having been fearched for, was supposed to have perished. Some days after, news was brought to Sertorius that the deer was found. He defired the meffenger to fay nothing, threatening him with punishment if he discovered the secret. He then defired him, on the following day, to repair with the deer to a place where he would be with a party of his friends, and there let it loofe. The day following, his friends being admitted to him, he faid he had feen, in his fleep, the deer which had been killed, return to him. He then proceeded to iffue his commands as usual; when, upon a fign from Sertorius, the deer was let loofe, and rushed into his apartment. A great clamour and aftonifhment immediately enfued. Thus the credulity of these ignorant people was, upon great occasions, rendered very useful to Serto-It is related, that of the nations who acted rius. with Sertorius, notwithstanding he was routed in many battles, not one ever deferted from him, although that race of men is, of all others, most inconstant.

N 4

Снар. XXIII.

Of the ages of the celebrated hiftorians, Hellanicus, Herodotus, and Thucydides.

THE hiftorians, Hellanicus, Herodotus, and Thucydides, were in equal reputation' for genius almost at the fame time, and did not materially differ from each other in age; for, in the beginning of the Peloponnesian war, Hellanicus appears to have been fixty-five, Herodotus fifty-three, and Thucydides forty. This remark is from the 11th book of Pamphila.

² For fere laude ingenti, I would rather read pari laude ingenii. This account of the ages of thefe hiftorians can hardly be accurate, for we are told that Thucydides heard Herodotus recite his hiftory at the Olympic games, and was to much delighted that he burft into tears; on which Herodotus exclaimed to Olorus, the father of Thucydides, "Your fon difcovers a firong ardour for fcience." Now this account of Gellius makes Herodotus no more than thirteen years older than Thucydides, which brings the above fact hardly within the limits of probability.

Снар.

Digitized by Google

Снар. XXIV .

Judgment of Volcatius Sedigitus on the Roman comie writers, in his book " de Poetis."

SEDIGITUS, in his book upon the poets, has given us his opinion upon thole who wrote comedies. He tells us which poet he thinks excels the reft; and, in the following verfes, ranks them according to their degrees of effimation:

* The verfes quoted in this chapter are certainly inaccurate; but perhaps it would not be an eafy tafk to amend them.

For certare, in the first line, I would, without hefitation. read versare. The feventh is very faulty indeed, and various readings are proposed by different commentators to amend it. The best emendation seems to be pretio in tertio eft. There is a Volcatius mentioned by Cicero, but certainly not the fame with this Volcatius Sedigitus. See Burman's Latin Anthology, v. 1. 411. In these lines Attilius is preferred to Terence: but Cicero, in one of his letters to Atticus, calls Attilius, duriffimus poeta. Licinius, as quoted by Cicero, calls Attilius, ferreus scriptor. He was supposed to have translated Sophocles into Latin verse. Attilius is often confounded into Attius or Accius. The commentators on Gellius all take the alarm at feeing their favourite Terence placed to low in the catalogue. Afranius, who was cotemporary with Terence, thought him fuperior to all the Latin comic poets, and the impartial judgment of posterity has confirmed this decision.

Oft

Oft 'tis a question 'mong the critic race, What bard the palm of glory ought to grace. To clear this matter, I'll the truth reveal; From my decree fools only shall appeal: First honours be, Cæcilius, to thy name, And to thee, Plautus, next, the meed of fame; Let Nævus then adorn the third degree; The fourth is due, Licinius, to thee; Be thine, Attilius, next; then, Terence, thine What just rewards await you from the Nine; Then, Luscius, gladly I commend thy fong; Then, Ennius, thine, for thine hath flourisfied long.

Digitized by Google

Снар. XXV¹.

Of certain words which occur in the Mimiambi of Cnæus Mattius.

C NÆUS Mattius, a very learned man, has, in his Mimiambics, without impropriety and without harfhnefs, invented the word recentatur, anfwering to the Greek word avavistat. The lines in which that word occurs are thefe:

" Jam jam albicasset Phœbus, & recentatur Commune lumen hominibus & voluptas."

" Now had the fun arifen, at whofe birth New light, new joy, is fcattered o'er the earth."

Mattius, too, in the fame Mimiambics, has edulcare, to make fweeter, in the following lines:

⁴⁷ Quapropter edulcare convenit vitam, Curafque acerbas fenfibus gubernare."

" To fweeten life that rule is furely beft, Which, by indulgence, fets the mind at reft."

* The reader may see the whole of this epigram of Mat-~ tius in the Latin-Anthology of Burman, vol. 1. 630.

For fenfibus, I would propose to read fuavibus.

The two lines of Mattius, in b. 10. c. 24. these two before us, and four more in c. 9. b. 20. make this epigram, See also Macrobius, l. 1. Saturn. c. 4.

Снар.

Digitized by GOO

CHAP, XXVI.

Aristotle's definition of a syllogism translated into Latin'.

A RISTOTLE has thus defined a fyllogifm: "A fentence in which, from certain principles laid down, certain confequences neceffarily follow." The interpretation of this definition appeared not to have been ill given in this manner: "A fyllogifm is a fentence in which, from certain things agreed and allowed, fomething beyond what was allowed neceffarily follows what is already granted."

^{*} There is no better definition of a fyllogium than the following, taken from Chambers:

A fyllogifm is an argument confifting of three propolitions, having this property, that the conclusion neceffarily follows from the two premiles, fo that if the first and second proposition be granted, the conclusion must be granted also, and the whole allowed for a demonstration. Thus, for example: all vice is to be avoided; avarice is a vice; therefore avarice is to be avoided.

Снар.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. XXVII.

Meaning of the Comitia Calata, the Curiata, Centuriata, Tributa, and the Concilium, with certain observations on similar subjects.

I N the first book of Lælius Felix', addressed to Mucius, it is faid, that Labeo affirmed that these were the comstia calata, which are held for the college of priess, or to inaugurate the president of the facrifices or the flamens; that fome of these were curiata, others centuriata. The curiata were fummoned by the listor Curiatus, the centuriata by a cornicen or trumpeter². At the fame comitia, which we are accustomed to call calata, the denouncing of facred rites and testaments³ took place. There

² Lælius Felix.]—Commentators are by no means agreed who this Lælius Felix was. Some are for reading L. Ælius Felix.

² Trumpeter.]—That the people were called together by a trumpeter appears from Dioayf. Halicarnaffenfis, l. 2. "The public officers called the people together by founding trumpets made of the horns of oxen." See alfo a verfe of Lucilius, preferved in Nonius Marcellus:

Rauco concionem sonitu, et curvis cogant cornibus.

See also Propertius, l. 4.

Buccina cogebat priscos ad verba quirites.

³ Teftaments.]—These comitia were not held for the particular purpose of declaring wills; but this fort of business must necessitarily be done at the comitia calata, when held.

With respect to the denouncing of facred rites, see book 6. chap. 12.

Vol. III.

were

were three kinds of testamenta; one which took place at the calata comitia, in the affembly of the people; the fecond, when the army was drawn out in array, and the foldiers were about to engage; the third, when the æs and libra took place, and a family was emancipated. In the fame book of Lælius Felix is this passage:

" He who does not require the prefence of all, but only of a portion of the people, must fummon, not the comitia, but a concilium. The tribunes cannot fummon the patricians, nor refer to them concerning any matter, fo that these are not called leges (laws) but plebifcita, which are promulgated by the tribunes of the people; by which edicts the patricians were not restrained formerly, till Q. Hortensius, dictator, passed a law, that whatever law the commons should pass should be binding on the patricians." The same person, in another place, writes thus also:

"When the votes were given by centuries, they were called Curiata Comitia; when by the cenfus and age, the Centuriata; when from their local fituation, Tributa. The Centuriata could not be held within the pomœrium, becaufe the army must be commanded without the city ⁴, and not lawfully

* Without the city.] — This feems to require explanation. No individual was allowed to have any military command within the city. If a fuccefsful general returned home, and demanded a triumph, the fenate affembled at fome place without the city, to judge of the juffice of his claims. If thefe were granted, he was, by a formal act, allowed to have military command within the city on the day of his triumph.

The

OF AULUS GELLIUS. 191 lawfully within it. The centuriata were also held in the Campus Martius, and the army attended by way of protection, as the people were employed in giving their votes.

The Centuriata Comitia were held in the Campus Martius. Anciently these assemblies were held in arms, to guard against any sudden hostile attack; asterwards, a body of soldiers were left in the citadel, where a standard was erected: when this was taken down, the Comitia were understood to be concluded.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Cornelius Nepos was mistaken when he affirmed that Cicero pleaded for Sextus Roscius in the twentythird year of his age.

ORNELIUS Nepos was a man of great accuracy, and the particular friend of Marcus Cicero; he, however, in his first book on the Life of Cicero, appears to have fallen into an error; for he favs, that he was twenty-three years old when he pleaded his first cause in public, and defended Sextus Roscius, who was accused of parricide. Now, from the confulate of Quintus Cæpio and Quintus Serranus, at which time, on the third of the nones of January, Marcus Cicero was born, to the time when he pleaded in defence of Quintius before Aquilius Gallus, twentyfix years are found; and there can be no doubt that he defended Sextus Rofcius from the accu-Vol. III. N 8 fation' fation of parricide, a year after he had pleaded for Quintius, on which occasion he was twentyfeven years old, Lucius Sylla Felix, and Quintus Metellus Pius being confuls; wherefore Pedianus Afconius thinks that Feneftella' mistook when he faid, that in his twenty-fixth year he defended Sextus Roscius. But the mistake of Nepos is

* Fenestella flourished in the time of Augustus, and Pedianus Afconius in the reign of Vespasian.

Cicero was killed at the command of Antony, in the confulfhip of C. Vibius Panfa and A. Hirtius, on the feventh of the ides of December; he confequently lived fixty-three years eleven months and five days. Here I may be allowed to correct a typographical error in Gronovius, who for eleven months reads fix.

The following, from Middleton's Life of Cicero, feems to merit a place here,

Speaking of Cicero he fays-

". Thus adorned and accomplished, he offered himself to the bar about the age of twenty-fix, not as others generally did, raw and ignorant of their bufinefs, and wanting to be formed to it by use and experience, but finished and qualified at once to fuftain any caufe which should be committed to him. It has been controverted, both by ancients and moderns, what was the first cause in which he was engaged; fome give it for P. Quintius, others for S. Roscius: but ncither of them are in the right, for, in his oration for Quintius, he expressly declares that he had pleaded other caujes lefore it, and in that for Roscius fays only, that it was the first public or criminal cause in which he was concerned; and it is reasonable to imagine that he had tried his strength, and acquired fome credit in private causes, before he would venture upon a public one of that importance, agreeably to the advice which Quintilian gives to his young pleaders, whofo rules are generally drawn from the practice and example of Cicero."

greater

Digitized by Google

greater than that of Fenestella, unless we may fuppose that Nepos suppressed four years of his life through pure regard and friendship, in order to increase our admiration of his talents, by shewing that Cicero, when quite a youth, could deliver fo fine an oration as that in behalf of Rofcius. This, however, has been observed, and recorded by the admirers of the two great orators, that Demosthenes and Cicero were of the fame age when they fpoke their most celebrated orations. The former pleaded against Androtion and Timocrates at the age of twenty-feven: the latter, when one year younger, defended Quintius, and at twenty-feven, Sextus Rofcius: nor was the number of years which they lived very different; Cicero reached his fixty-third year, Demosthenes his fixtieth.

VOL. IIL

CHAP. XXIX.

A new figure of speech used by Piso the annalist.

THE two following modes of fpeaking are known and eftablished: "My name is Julius," "Mihi nomen eft Julio," and "Mihi nomen eft Julii." But, in the second book of Piso's Annals I have met with a third form. His words are these: "Lucius Tarquinius, his colleague, began to be afraid because his name was Tarquinius." This he expresses by "quia Tarquinium nomen" eft;" which is, as if I should fay, "mihi nomen eft Julium."

" Tarquinium nomen.]-See Livy. Cui parentes Afcanium dedere nomen. And Virgil-Æneadasque meo nomen de nomine fango.

C H A Pa

Digitized by Google

CHAP. XXX.

Whether the carriage called petorritum he a Gre-

THEY who, being tired of fome other mode of life, apply at a late period to literary purfuits, frequently, if they are of a prating turn, and of moderate abilities, expose themselves, and appear ridiculous, in the display of their learning. Of this fort was a person, who, not long ago, spoke the most refined nonsense upon the word petorrita; for when some one asked what fort of carriage the petorritum was, and of what language, he described a fort of carriage which was very foreign from the true one, and faid, the word was Greek, and that it meant, when interpreted, "flying wheels." He wished to change one letter, and to spell it petorrotum instead of petorritum; and contended, that it was so written ^a The petorritum was an open carriage with four wheels, used only by perfons of inferior rank. See Horace, Sat. 1. 1. 103.

Plures calones atqué caballi Pascendi : ducenda petorrita.

The following is from Festus de Significatione Verborum-Petorritum vehiculum Gallicum alii osce putant dictum, quod hi petora quatuor appellant; quatuor enim habet rotas,

0 2

by

by Valerius Probus. I, who have many copies of Probus's Commentaries, can neither meet with it in them, nor do I believe that Probus has used the word any where else; for petorritum is not by halves derived from Greek, but is taken entirely from the Transalpine Gauls; it is a Gallic word; it is found in Varro's 14th book on Divine Things; in which place, speaking of petorritum, Varro says it is a Gallic word; and he adds, that lanceam is not a Latin but a Spanish word.

CHAP. XXXI.

Meffage fent by the Rhodians to Demetrius, the enemy's general, when they were befieged by him, about the famous statue of Jalysus '.

DEMETRIUS, the celebrated commander, attacked the Island of Rhodes, and laid fiege to the principal and richeft town in it. That general had obtained the furname of Poliorcetes, for the skill which he manifested, and the machines he employed in the conduct of his sieges. In the course of the attack he was preparing to destroy, and consume by fire, some

^a The above anecdote is related by Plutarch in his Life of Demetrius, who is also celebrated by Pliny and by Vitruvius.

He was far from being unknown in the annals of gallantry, and the beautiful Lamia was his favourite miftrefs. She is thus made to allude, agreeably enough, to his title of Poliorcetes, in the Epiftles of Alciphron—

" Indeed, my lord Demetrius, when I fee you in the field, when I hear you among your guards, and behold you furrounded with your foldiers, and your ambaffadors, with your diadem on your head, I fivear by Venus I am ftruck with awe, and I turn from you as from the fun, left the fplendour fhould injure my eyes. Then, indeed, you juftly reprefent Demetrius, the ftormer of cities." Afterwards, fhe fays, " By Venus, this day will I, with my lute, befiege this befieger of cities," &c.

О 3

public

Digitized by Google

public buildings without the walls of the town. which were protected only by a flight guard. These buildings contained the famous picture of Jalysus, from the hand of that illustrious painter Protogenes. Enraged against the Rhodians, he envied them the beauty and the excellence of this work: but the Rhodians fent ambaffadors to Demetrius with this meffage: "What is the reason," say they, " that, setting fire to the building, you would deftroy this picture. If you conquer us, you will posses the whole town, and, by right of victory, the statue unhurt will be yours; but if you are unable to fubdue us, we defire you to confider whether it is not difhonourable, because you cannot conquer the Rhodians, to make war upon the deceased Protogenes ." Having heard this meffage from the ambaffadors, relinquishing the fiege, he spared at once the picture and the city.

۱

• Deceafed Protogenes.]—Here the commentators are at variance. Some fay Protogenes was alive and prefent at this fiege: if fo, it fhould be read, cum Protogene et mortuo; that is, with Protogenes, who is alive, and Jalyfus, who is dead. If Protogenes was dead, and the contrary cannot eafily be proved, my interpretation is right. Writers are by no means agreed who this Jalyfus was; fome affirm he was a famous hunter, others, that he was a fatyr, others again fay, that Jalyfus was a name for Bacchus.

BOOK

BOOK XVI.

CHAP. I.

Words of the philosopher Musonius in Greek, worthy to be beard, and useful to be remembered. A sentiment of equal utility spoken by M. Cate to the knights of Numantia many years before.

WHEN we were boys at ichool, I heard the following moral fentiment ipoken by Musonius' the philosopher; and I easily remembered it, because it was fo truly and clearly expressed, and included in a fhort and round fentence: "If you have accomplished any honourable purpose, though with labour, the labour

• Musonius.] — There were two or more philosophers of this name; nor can it eafily be decided which of them is here meant; certain it is, that the fentiment which is here ascribed to him deferves, both for its fimplicity and excellence, to be constantly inftilled into the youthful mind. The fame sentiment, differently expressed, may be found in various writers, ancient as well as modern. Some account of this philosopher may be found in the thirty-first volume of the Memoirs of the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres, P. 131.

04

passes,

Digitized by Google

passes, the advantage remains; but if, for pleafure's fake, you have done a base action, the pleasure flies, and the baseness remains."

I afterwards met with this fame fentiment in an oration of Cato's, which he fpoke before the knights of Numantia. If Cato's fentiment be expressed in more diffuse and weaker terms, yet it appears more entitled to our applause, because it was spoken before the other. These are his words: "Consider with yourselves if, by labour, you have done any good deed, the labour spon passes away from you, but the good deed does not leave you while you live; if, through the love of pleasure, you have done any thing dissonourable, soon shall the pleasure pass away, but the dissonour shall remain for ever,"

CHAN.

· Digitized by Google

CHAP. II'.

Order observed by logicians in disputing and declaiming.—Objections to this rule.

THEY fay there is a rule in logical difputations, that when any fuoject is difcufied and difputed on, if you are called upon to reply, you ^a To fay much upon the fubject of this chapter would be washing both my time and that of the reader; the fubtleties, of which the ancients were fo fond, to us appear what they seally are, folemn but contemptible triffings. To the examples recorded in the chapter of logical quibbles, many might be added from Diogenes Laertius, from Athenzus, from Cicero, from Lucian, and many others.

Dr. Enfield has collected many of thefe. I extract one or two from his entertaining and useful History of Philofophy:

Do you know your father? Yes.—Do you know this man who is veiled? No.—Then you do not know your father; for it is your father who is veiled.

You have what you have not loft. You have not loft horns, therefore you have horns.

If when you speak the truth you say you lie, you lie; but you say you lie when you speak the truth, therefore in speaking truth you lie.

Chryfippus wrote an immense volume upon this last quibble; and Philotas, of Cos, died of a disease contracted from his close fludy bestowed on this subject. The following mecdote also, which I transcribe from Dr, Enfield's book before you must answer by a simple negation or affirma-They who do not observe this rule, and tion. who answer, when called upon, by more or by different words, do not understand the form and proper manner of conducting a debate. Without a doubt it is necessary to observe this form in most disputations, because a controversy would be without end, and inexplicable, unlefs confined to fimple questions and answers. However, there are fome occasions upon which, if you anfwer concifely and fimply to a question, you may be drawn into a dilemma; as for inftance, if any one fhould afk, " I defire you will tell me whether you have ceased to commit adultery or not?" now, if you answer according to logical form, either affirming or denying, you will be eninared, whether you fay or deny that you are an adulterer; for fomething ought to be add-before quoted, cannot but amufe the reader: Diodorus is faid to have invented the famous argument againft motion. If any body be moved, it is either moved in the place where it is, or in a place where it is not; but it is not moved in the place where it is, for where it is it remains; nor is it moved in a place where it is not, for nothing can either act or fuffer where it is not; therefore there is no fuch thing as motion. Diodorus, after the invention of this wonderful argument, was very properly repaid for his ingenuity. Having had the misfortune to diflocate his fhoulder, the furgeon, whom he fent for to replace it, kept him fome time in torture, whilf he proved to him, from his own method of reafoning, that the bone could not have moved out of its place.

ed,

OF AULUS GELLIUS. 203.

ed, which is not in the queftion: it does not follow, that he who fays he has not ceafed to do a thing, therefore formerly did that thing; this is therefore a fallacious mode of reafoning, and can by no means lead to a conclusion that he commits adultery, who fays that he has not left off committing adultery. But what will the defenders of this rule fay when involved in that difficulty, where they must remain, if they give only a fimple answer to a question; for if I should ask one of them, " Have you or have you not, that which you have not loft ? I defire you will fay yes or no." Let him answer briefly as he will, and he must be caught. If he fays, that he has not that which he has not loft, it follows that he has no eves, because he has not loft them. If he fays that he has that which he has not loft, it follows that he has horns, becaufe he has not loft them. More properly then, and more prudently, this might be answered: " That which I had I have, if I have not loft it." But this answer is not consistent with the rule I spoke of, for it replies to more than was asked; this addition, therefore, is made to that rule, that no answer is to be given to fallacious questions.

CHAP. III.

By what means, according to Erafistratus the phyfician, if food he wanting, hunger may be in some degree, and for some time, supported. — His words on this subject.

7 HEN Favorinus was at Rome, I passed many whole days with him. His enchanting conversation took possession of my mind, and lattended him whitherfoever he went, charmed as it were by the magic of his tongue, fuch power had he of delighting, upon all occasions, by his discourse. He went once to visit a sick man, where I was admitted with him, and having converfed a good deal in Greek with the physicians who were there, upon the fubject of the patient's complaint, "Should it not feem extraordinary," fays he, " that though he had formerly a great appetite, yet, after three days prefcribed fasting, his former appetite' is loft; for the observation made

• His former appetite.]—As there is a conftant wafte of the fubftance of all animals and vegetables while living, it is neceflary that this flould be fupplied by administering of proper aliment, or they would languish, and at length die.

If vegetables are deprived of their pabulum, they droop and become flaccid. In animals, a want of sustenance excites made by Erafistratus is furely true: • The empty and open fibres of the intestines, the hollowness of cites an uncalinels in the flomach, which we denominate hunger; and this, if not attended to, is foon followed by languor and faintness. To account for this, various hypotheses have been imagined. The ancients thought this was occafioned by the open and empty tubes continuing to fuck or draw in nourishment after all moisture was exhausted. Upon this principle, the fenfe of hunger would ceafe when the veffels had had fufficient time very confiderably to diminish or perhaps obliterate their cavities. A more modern opinion is, that the gastric juice, coming in contact with the fides of the stomach when empty, vellicates its fibres, and thence excites the fenfation of hunger. This continuing a long time, the coats of the flomach become at length infensible to the stimulus, and the appetite is lost. The observation, however, is true, that by refraining too long from food the appetite becomes proftrated, and is loft; and it does honour to the ingenuity of Favorinus to have hit upon this method of curing a depraved or inordinate appetite.

Digitized by Google

On the fame fubject, the following extract from my friend Dr. Ruffel's History of Aleppo feems pertinent in this place :

"But the most remarkable of all the voluntary fasts is one of fax complete days, during which time those who fast religioufly maintain an abstinence from all kinds of nourishment, not to much as fuffering water to enter their lips, and, what they reckon almost an equal hardship, renouncing tobacco. Some, during the two first days of this fast, make their appearance in the bazar to transfast business, but confine themfelves afterwards close to the house, and pass the time in reading the scriptures or in prayer. During the two first days, they suffer both from hunger and thirst; but afterwards, the sense of hunger being blunted, they suffer chiefly from thirst. After the third or fourth day, they appear for the most gart dull and drowsy, their breath becomes in a high degree offensive.

of the belly, and the cavity of the ftomach, caufe hunger, which, either being filled with food, or contracted by continued privation, the longing defire and craving for food is extinguished.' The same Erasistratus observes too," says he, " that the Scythians, when occasion required, in order to endure hunger longer than usual, applied a very tight bandage round the belly; and they thought that by this compression of the belly hunger was prevented." These and other observations Favorinus, with the greatest affability, communicated, And when, fome time after, I read Eralistratus's first book of Distinctions, I met with the passage which I had heard Favorinus quote. His words upon the fubject are thefe: " I fupposed, therefore, from the violent contraction of the belly, a great abstinence from food had taken place; for generally, to those who abstain by choice from food, at first hunger arises, but after a time it So, a little further on, " The Scythians ceafes." are wont, when upon any occasion it is necesfary for them to fast, to bind up the belly with broad belts, in order to fubdue their hunger; for when the stomach is nearly full, or has no vacuity in it, they are then not hungry, and when offensive, and their pulse finking, is variably quick and flow. On the evening of the fixth day, at the expiration of the fast, they moisten the throat with a few spoonfuls of oil of almonds, and afterwards sip chicken broth. They return, by flow degrees, to the use of solid food, and it is a long while before they recover their former appetite."

the

the body is thus prefied together it has no vacuity." In the fame treatife Erafiftratus fays, that the intolerable power of hunger, which the Greeks call $G_{M,\mu\sigma\nu}$, (the hunger of an ox) happens more frequently on very cold days than when the weather is ferene and temperate; and he fays, he has not yet difcovered the caufes why that difeafe prevails particularly at fuch a time. Thefe are his words: " It is yet unknown, and worthy of enquiry, on account of this and other diforders of the kind, why, particularly in cold weather rather than in temperate, this fymptom appears."

Снар,

CHAP. IV.

The form of words in which the berald proclaimed war against their enemies.—The form of oath concerning military thefts.—That foldiers enrolled were, within a fixed time, to assemble in a particular place.—On what account they might sometimes be freed from their oath.

CINCIUS', in his third book de Re Militari, writes, that the herald² of the Romans, when declaring war against an enemy, threw a • Cincius.]—This perfon lived in the time of Hannibal; by whom, according to Voffius, he was taken prifoner. Befides the treatife on Tactics, which is here quoted, he is faid to have written the Hiftory of Hannibal in Greek. He is quoted in two or three places by Macrobius.

² Herald.]—Fecialis. Thefe were twenty in number, and decided upon every thing which related to the declaration of war or making of peace. All the ceremonies of doing thefe have been given in detail by Varro, Livy, Dionyfus, &c.

Every thing preceding the declaration of war was conducted in the most formal manner. The herald first went to demand compensation for injury received; this was repeated at the interval of ten days; finally, war was declared with the circumstances mentioned in this chapter.

The form of the oath, and indeed every thing which this chapter involves, will be found by the more curious reader amply discussed by Lipsius de Militia Romana.

javclin

5

Ľ

javelin into their territories, and made' use of these words: "Because the Hermundulan people, and the men of that people, have waged war against the Roman people, and thereby given cause of offence, and because the Roman people have commanded war to be declared against the Hermunduli and the men of that nation, therefore I pronounce and wage war upon the Hermunduli and the men of that people."

And in the 5th book of the fame Cincius is this paffage: " When formerly a levy was made, and troops were enrolled, the military tribune administered to them an oath in this form: 'In the magistracy of Caius Lælius, the fon of Caius the conful, and Lucius Cornelius, the fon of Publius the conful, in the army and ten miles round it, you shall, neither alone nor with confederates, commit theft, nor take away, upon any occafion, any thing of more value than a filver coin. Beyond this, if any spear, spear-staff, wooden utenfil, provender, bladder, purse, torch, whatever you may have found or carried away, not being your own, of more value than a filver coin, you shall bring it to Caius Lælius, the fon of Caius the conful, or to Lucius Cornelius, the fon of Publius the conful, or to whom he shall appoint; or you shall make known, within three days following, what you have found, or improperly taken away, or you shail restore it to the perfon you suppose to be its right owner, VOL. III. P that that you shew yourself disposed to do justice."

When the foldiers were enrolled, days were fixed for their appearance, at which time, when called upon by the conful, they answered. The oath which bound them to appear was drawn up with these exceptions; namely: "If any of the following reasons occurred, a domeftic funeral, a tenth'day feast', or any calendar celebration, which could not be observed unless he was present, an infectious disease, or an omen which he could not pass by without ablution, or an anniverfary facrifice, which could not proceed unless he were there on that day, or a lawfuit with an adverfary, and a day appointed; if any of these causes occur, the prevention is legal; but on the day after fuch hindrance, he shall repair to that district, village, or town, which has been appointed." In the fame book alfo is this paffage : " He who was abfent without legal excufe

* Tenth day feaf.]—The ferix or holydays among the Romans were either public or private. The ferix denicales were among the latter, and were infituted by way of purifying a family from the contamination of a dead body.

Funeral feasts in honour of the dead were common in all oriental countries. See Jeremiah, xvi. 6, 7. and Harman's Observations on Passages of Scripture. The object and effect of both feriæ were alike, to confole the survivors. See also Ezekiel, xxiv. 17. where we learn, that the friends of the deceased sent provisions for these funeral feasts to the house.

+--

was

was termed infrequens *."' In the fixth book we find, " The knights ranks were called the wings of the army, becaufe they were placed on the right and left of the legions, like wings upon the bodies of birds. In a legion there are fixty centurions, thirty ftandard-bearers, and ten cohorts."

• Infrequent.]—It is not easy to explain the precise meaning of this term. In the fourth book of the Stratagems of Frontinus this passage occurs:

Cum a Liguribus in prœlio Q. Politius cof. interfectus effet, decrevit fenatus uti ea legio in cujus acie chaful erat occifus, tota infrequens referretur flipendium ci ann tum non daretur, æraque refeinderentur.

Again, in Plautus, we find infrequens thus ufed:

Quin ubi nihil det pro infrequente eum mittas militia domum.

But when

His purfe is clofed, difmifs him from her fervice Like a deferter.

This is the interpretation of Plautus, and is the most probable interpretation of the word.

For the remainder of this chapter, the reader will do well to confult Lipfius, which again will receive farther illustration, to be found in the Military Antiquities of Britain, by General Roy, published by the Society of Antiquaries.

P 2

Снар.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. V.

Meaning and form of the word vestibulum.

TXTE have many words in common u'e, of whofe proper and exact fignification we are yet ignorant; but, following the common acceptation without examining it, we rather feem to fay what we mean, than really do fay it. As vellibulum is a word perpetually occurring in converfation, but by no means fufficiently underftood by those who use it without referve. I have obferved that fome, even learned men, thought the reft Bulyn was the first part of the house, which is commonly called atrium, (the hall). Cæcilius Goilus, in his book upon the meaning of words used in the civil law, fays, " that the veftibule is not educer in the house nor a part of the house, but is a vacant space before the gate of the house, through which there is an open way and accefs to the houfe, while on the right and left, between the gate and the house, which are united, to this way a fpace is left, and the gate iticif is divided from this way by an area'."

Area]—A fimilar definition of the veftibulum is given by Macrobius,—Veftibulum aream dici quæ a via domum dividit. The French have a peculiar mode of expressing a house, which has what is here represented as an area or veftibule before it; they call it entre cour et jardin.

The

The meaning of this word has caufed much difpute; and all the observations upon it that I have read have been awkward and abfurd; but I remember Sulpitius Apollinaris, a man of elegent accomplishments, fpoke thus of it: " The particle ve, like fome others, has fometimes an intenfive and fometimes a privative power; for in vetus and vehemens, the one is compounded of va and ætas, and part of it is loft, the other is derived from vi mentis. But the word vescum', which is formed by compounding the particle ve and elca, receives the power of each opposite interpretation. Lucretius uses vescum salem in expreffing an inclination to eat. Lucilius uses vefcum in speaking of fastidiousness in eating. Formerly, they who built large houses left a space before the gate that there might be a vacancy between the road and the house. Perfors who came to wait upon the mafter of the houfe ftop-

* Vefcum.]-Confult Servius on the third Georgic, v. 175.

Nec vescas salicum frondes.

Servius interprets vescas by ficeas. Our Martyn calls the vescas frondes, tender leaves. Servius quotes this line from Afranius—

At puer est voscus, imbecillus viribus.

Where vertices means this or leas, fo that the commentators are at variance about this word, fome making it eatable, others the contrary.

P 3

ped here before they were admitted, and thus neither flood in the flreet nor were actually in the houfe. Thus, from this pompous waitingplace', this (flabulatie) room to fland in, they were called veftibula, great fpaces, as I faid before, left before the doors of the houfe for perfons to wait in before they were admitted. We must remember that this word is not always used by the ancients in its original fignification, but in a fecondary one, which is not however far removed from the proper meaning, as in the fixth book of Virgil—

Vestibulum ante ipsum, primisque in faucibus Orci, Luctus & ultricis posuere cubilia curæ.

Here he does not call the veflibule the first part of the infernal habitation, although it might be

³ Waiting place.]—Among the flaves who filled the palaces of the great and opulent men at Rome were fome called fervi officiofi; thefe, according to Pignorius de Servis, always waited for orders and employment in the veftibule. This cuftom of waiting to falute the great is mentioned by most of the ancient writers, but particularly by Juvenal—

Tota salutatrix jam turba peregerit urbem, &c.

Again, the fame author-

Omnia Romæ,

Cum pretio, quid das ut Cossum aliquando salutes.

Seneca laughs at this flattering crowd and contemptible cuftom; his words are, "In pectore amicus non in atrio quæritur."

thought

ÖF AULUS GELLÍUS. 215

thought to be fo called. But he defcribes two places before the gates of Orcus, the veftibule and the (fauces) jaws, of which the veftibule he defcribes as fituated before the habitation itfelf, before the penetralia of Orcus; but the jaws he calls a narrow paffage, through which the veftibule is approached.

Снар.

CHAP, VI.

The vielims called bidentes; why fo named.—Opinions of Publius Nigidius and Julius Higinus on this fuljett.

I N our way from Greece, we touched in our veffel at Brundufium'. There a lecturer in the Latin language, from Rome, exhibited himfelf in public, having been fent for by the Brundufians for this purpofe. For the fake of amufement I attended this man, for my mind was weary and languid from the rolling of the fea. He was reading, in a barbarous and ignorant manner, the feventh book of Virgil, which contains this line:

" Centum lanigeras mactabat rite bidentes."

He defired any perfon to afk him what queffion he thought proper. Surprized at the confidence of this illiterate man, I faid, "Tell us, Sir, what is meant by bidentes?" "Bidentes," replied he, " means fheep, and they are termed laniger a, (woolly) to denote more fully that they are fheep." " Now," faid I, " we fhall fee whether fheep Brundufium.]—Whoever returned from Greece, or any part of Afia, to Rome, neceffarily put in at Brundufium. See Strabo, book 6. who deferibes the diffances and places from the coaft to Rome. Brundufium is now called Brundifi.

alone,

alone, as you fay, are called bidentes, and whether Pomponius, the poet of Atella, was wandering among the barbarians of Transalpine Gaul, when he wrote—

> Mars tibi voveo fasturum, Si unquam redierit, bidenti verre.

To Mars, when his return fhall glad these eyes, A boar of two years old I'll facrifice.

But I wish to know what you suppose to be the derivation ' of this word." He then, without any delay, but with a good deal of assure, said, that sheep were called bidentes, because they had but two teeth. "Where in the world, I beg," faid I, " have you seen a sheep which, by nature, has only two teeth? Behold a prodigy! we must perform the ceremony of ablution." Angry then with me, and disconcerted, " Propose," fays he, " such questions as are proper to put to a grammarian, for shepherds converse upon ² Derivation.]—See Macrobius, Saturnal. vi. 9. and Servius, at the fourth Æneid, line 57.

Bidens is also used for an agricultural instrument. See Georgic 2. ver. 354.

Seminibus politis superest deducere terram, Sæpius ad capita et duros jactare bidentes,

This Martyn explains to be the inftrument with two hooked fron teeth, which our farmers call a drag.

In Gruter's Inferiptions it is worth while to remark, that the expression of facerdotes bidentales occurs.

the

the teeth of fheep." I laughed at the blockhead's humour, and left him. But Publius Nigidius, in his book upon Entrails, fays, that not only fheep, but all victims of two years old, were called bidentes; but he has not explained why. But what I before fuppofed, I find confirmed in fome records treating of the pontifical office, that they. were at first called bidennes, from biennes, with the infertion of a letter; then, by use, the word became corrupted, and from bidennes was made bidentes, because that appeared of more easy pro-But Julius Higinus, who appears to nunciation. have been well acquainted with the pontifical office, in his fourth book upon Virgil affirms, that those victims were called bidentes which by their age had two prominent teeth. These are his words: " The victim called bidens should have eight teeth, and two of these more prominent than the reft, by which it is plain that they are proceeding from youth to maturity." Whether this opinion of Higinus be true or not, is to be determined, not by arguments, but by ocular demonstration.

Снар.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. VII'.

Laberius bas licentiously introduced many words; be bas also used many, the latinity of which is suspicious.

LABERIUS, in his Mimes, has ufed too much licence in inventing words; for he ufes mendicimonium and machimonium, adulterionem and adulteritatem for adulterium, and depudicavit for flupravit, and abluvium for diluvium; and, in his Cophinus he has written manuatus eff for furatus eft; and in his Fuller he calls a thief manuarius. "Manuari, pudorem perdidifti—" "Thief, thou haft loft thy fhame." Many words of this fort he invents, and fometimes ufes obfolete words, or thofe which are only fpoken by the loweft dregs of the people; as in his Spinners: "Tollet bonâ fide vos Orcus nudas in

¹ Little can be faid in way of comment on this chapter, which can poffibly entertain the English reader. Barthius has vindicated Laberius, p. 1269 of his Adversaria; so has Turnebus, and so has Rutgersus; this latter fays, that Gellius has calumniated Laberius in calling him the inventor of the word Cocco; he only borrowed it.

The term Cocio occurs twice in Plautus; once in the Afinania, and once in the Miles.

These Mimæ are mentioned by Stephens, and their fragments collected. See article Laberius, in the Fragmenta Poetarum Veterum. It is probable that which is here printed accyomantia should be necromantia.

Cato-

Catonium;" and he has the expressions elutriare lintea, & labandria, speaking of things fent to the wash, and he fays " collicior in fullonicam," and quid properas quid precurris Caldonia? and in his Rope-maker, he has " calaburriunculos," which we usually call calaburriones; and in his Compitales, malas he terms malaxas; and in his Cacomemnon, are these lines-

> Hic eft ille gurdus quem ego, Me abhine duos menses ex Africa Venientem, excepisse tibi narravi.

This is that fool who fome two months ago Received me, as I told you, when I came From Africa.

In his Mime called Natal, he uses the word " obbam" camelliam pittatium & capitium, as " induis capitium tunicæ pittacium." Moreover, in his Anna Perenna, he has gubernium for gubernater, (a pilot), planum for fycophante, (a lycophant), and nanum for pumilio, (a dwarf); however, Marcus Cicero uses planum for fycophanta, in his Defence of Cluentius. In his Mime, called Saturnalia, he calls farcimen, botulum, and uses bominem levenam for levem; and, in his Necromantia, he uses frequently costio for the old word ærulator. These are Laberius's words: " Duas uxores, hoc hercle plus negotii est (inquit Cocio sex ædiles viderat); but but in his Alexandrea he has ufed a Greek word in its vulgar fenfe appositely and properly, namely, emplastrum^{*}, neutrally, in the following passage—

Quid est jusjurandum? Emplastrum æris alieni.

* Emplastrum.]-Selmatius affigns these verses to Lucilius; their meaning is, What is an oath? Why, a way to get out of debt,

Снар.

CHAP. VIII.

Meaning of what logicians call axiom : other obfervations on the elements of logic.

WHEN I wanted to be inftructed in the rudiments of logic, it was neceffary to fludy and to know what logicians call the introductions, and in the first place to learn the axioms, which Marcus

¹ Inftructed in.]—Imbui vellemus. Thus in a fragment of Cicero, preferved in Nonius Marcellus: ad fapientiam concipiendam imbui & præparari decet.

On what is here meant by axioms, confult the various readings of Muretus, where we find that axioms were not underflood to convey the fame meaning in the ancient as in the modern fchools of logic; axiomata funt quas in fcholis hodie propositiones vocant. Cicero calls them enuntiatiores. De Fato, c. 1.

According to Diogenes Laertius, Chromachus Thurins was the first who wrote on axioms. He was followed by Chryfippus. The first Latin writer on this fubject was L. Ælius Stilo.

Every thing relating to the logic of the different fects of philofophers among the ancients will be found agreeably and perfpicuoufly compressed in Dr. Enfield's useful History of Philofophy. What can we fay, concludes this writer, concerning the whole business of dialectics, as it appears to have been conducted by the stoics, but exclaim with Seneca:

O pueriles

Marcus Varro fometimes calls profata, and fometimes proloquia. I inquired diligently for the commentary of Lælius (a learned man, and the instructor of Varro) upon these prologuia. Having met with this book in the library of the Temple of Peace, I perused it, but found nothing which gave me any inftruction or information. Lælius feems to have composed this book rather to help his own memory, than to inftruct others. I returned therefore from necessity to my Greek, where I found an axiom defined in these words, " a proposition perfect and felf-evident." I fate down to translate this, because it was expressed in new and abstruse terms, which my ears, from want of use, could not endure. But Marcus Varro, in his twenty-fourth book upon the Latin language, addreffed to Cicero, thus clearly defines it: " A proloquium is a fentence in which nothing is deficient." But its meaning will be more clearly shewn by an example; an axiom therefore, or a proloquium, is of this kind : "Hannibal

O pueriles ineptias, in hoc fupercilia fubduximus? in hoc barbam demissimus; hoc cst quod tristes docemus et pallidi.

Seneca, however, in another place, feems rather to be afraid of the alluring and fafcinating power of these purfuits.

Hoc habent fophifmata in se pessimum, dulcedinem quandam sui faciunt, et animum specie subtilitatis in ductum tenent st remorantur.

was

was a Carthaginian. Scipio deftroyed Numantia. Milo was convicted of murder. Pleasure is neither a good nor an evil." And whatever is fo spoken, as a full and perfect fentence, so that it must necessarily be either positively true or false, this by logicians is called axiom; that is, a proposition containing a perfect truth or falsehood. This was called, as I faid before, by Marcus Varro, preloquium, but by Marcus Cicero pronunciatum, which term he faid he only used, till he should be able to find a better.

But what the Greeks call ourn puttor a Eiopa, a connected axiom, fome of our writers call junctum, others connexum. This connected axiom is as follows: "If Plato walks, Plato is moved. If it beday, the fun is upon the earth." So likewife what they call JUMTETALEYMENON (involved) we call conjunctum or copulatum, and is of this kind : " Publius Scipio, the fon of Paulus, was twice conful; he triumphed, and discharged the office of censor, and in his cenforship was the colleague of Lucius Mummius." But in every inftance of this involved axiom, if there be one falfehood, although the reft be true, the whole is pronounced falfe. For if to all these truths which I have spoken of Scipio, I should add, that " he conquered Hannibal in Africa," which is falfe, all thefe things which are united with it, on account of this one falsehood, will be deemed false, because they are faid faid at the fame time. There is also an axiom which the Greeks call disCroymenor, diffinited, we disjunctum; it is of this kind: " Pleafure is either evil or good, or it is neither good nor evil;" but all things which are thus feparated fhould be contrary to each other. These opposites the Greeks call arringing and they are adverte to each other. Of things thus feparated, one should be true, the others falfe. But if it happens that of these things nothing is true, or all be true, or more than one be true, or if those which are separated do not oppose, or they which oppose are not properly contrary, then this is a falle feparation. and is called mapadis (suyusvor, as in the following proposition things opposed are not contrary: " either you run, or walk, or fland still;" for though these things are adverse to each other, yet when opposed they are not repugnant; for not to walk, nor run, nor stand still, are not contrary to each other. Those things are called contraries which cannot at the fame time be true; but you may at one time be fo circumstanced as neither to walk, nor stand still, nor run. But it will be enough to have given this little tafte of logic. I have only to add, and to urge by way of advice, that although the ftudy and attention to this science in its rudiments may prove dull, difgusting, and useles, yet as soon as VOL, III, you you have made a little progrefs, its advantage will fo imprefs your mind, that an infatiable fondnefs for it will fucceed, to which, unlefs you fix fome limits, there will be no finall danger left, among the mazes and meanders of logic, you fhould grow old, as among the rocks of the Syrens.

$26 THE ATTIC NIGHTS

CHAR!

Digitized by Google

CHAP. IX.

Signification of the term, which frequently occurs in the old books, fulque deque.

SUSQUE deque fero, or fulque deque babeo, (for both these phrases are used) is an expression to be found in the conversation of the learned in poetry, and frequently in the epistles of the ancients. But you will more readily find perfons who use this phrase, than those who understand it. Thus, many of us, who have found a few abstruse words, are in a hurry rather to apply them, than to learn their true meaning. Susque deque ferre means to be of an unmoved mind, and to pay little attention to any thing that happens; fometimes it means to neglect and despise, and has nearly the fame power as advapogue, to be indifferent. Thus Laberius in his Compitales:

⁸ Sufque deque.]—We have a common phrafe in English which exactly explains these words: we say the ups and downs of fortune or of life. It has now ceased to be confidered as elegant and correct; but our older writers used it without scruple.

VOL. III.

Q 2

Nunc

Digitized by GOOQ

Nunc tu lentus es, nunc tu fusque deque fers, Materfamilias tua in lecto adverso^{*} sedet, Servos sextantis verbis nefariis utitur.

Marcus Varro, in his Sisenna, or Tract on History, uses, quod si non horum omnium similia effent principia ac postprincipia³ fusque deque effet. Lucilius in his third Satire too:

Verum hic ludus fusque omnia deque fuerunt, Susque & deque fuere, inquam, omnia ludus jocusque, Illud opus durum ut fetinum arceffimus finem.

Aiyilinoi montes, Ætnæ omnes asperi Athones.

• Letto adverso.]—This has allusion to a peculiar custom, which is fufficiently explained in Gesner's Thefaurus. The lectus adversus was the genial or nuptial couch, and was erected adversum januae, in the atrium, opposite to the janua or principal gate. Here the mistress of the family fate at work with her maids. See an elegant introduction of this circumstance in Propertius, from Cornelia, the wife of Lepidus, who is thus supposed to address her children:

Seu tamen adverfum mutarit janua lectum Sederit et nostro cauta noverca toro, &c.

• Pofprincipia.]—This is a word of fomewhat uncommon occurrence; we find it however in Plantus:

Atque edepol firme ut quilque rem accurat luam, Sic ei procedunt postprincipia denique.

See Terentius Varro, with Scaliger's notes. The word peftprincipia again occurs in the 18th chapter of this book.

Снар.

Снар. Х.

Who those are, called proletarii and capiti censi. Meaning of the word affiduus in the Twelve Tables, with its formation'.

ONE day, when there was a ceffation of bufinefs in the forum at Rome, and a jovial feftival was celebrated, in an affembly where many

* Proletarius.] --- Thus, in Plautus, ferme proletarius is used as fynonymous with mean, vulgar, &cc.

See the Miles Gloriofus, act. iii. 1. v. 157.

Quin th iffanc orationem hint veterem atque antiquam amoves,

Nam proletarie fermone nunc quidem hospes utere.

Which Thornton thus renders :

Away now with fuch antiquated fluff,

The ordinary cant of common folks.

The proletarii 5 capite cenfi were ranked together in the fixth clafs of Roman citizens; as they were divided by Servius Tullius. See Heineccius, p. 152.—See alfo on this fubject Dionyfus Halicarnassens, from whom it appears that the proletarii were confidered as of no farther utility to the flate than by supplying it with thildren; and the sapite cenfi, qui præter caput et nomen nihil admodum in cenfu profiterentur. We find the words caput and capita used in an infinite variety of fignifications. Thus

Q3

we

many of us happened to meet, the third book of Ennius's Annals was read, in which are these lines—

" Proletarius publicitus fcutifque ferroque

" Ornatur, ferro muros urbemque forumque

" Excubiis curant."

Immediately a debate began upon the meaning of the word proletarius. I then addreffing myfelf to a friend of mine in the company well verfed in law matters, requested that he would explain the word to us. He answered, that he was a lawyer, and not a grammarian; "therefore." faid I, " you ought the rather to explain it, being, as you fay, a lawyer; for Ennius took this word from your Twelve Tables, where, if I rightly remember, these words occur: ' Affiduo vindex affiduus efto. Proletario cui quivis volet vindex efto.' Do not now suppose that we are reading one of Quintus Ennius's Annals, but the Twelve Tables, and explain to us what is the meaning of eivis proletarius." " I (faid he) might be expected to interpret this if I had learned the laws of the Fauni and aboriginal poffessors of the land; but fince fuch words as proletarii, adfidui, and we have libera capita. The legal phrase, as applied to slaves was, sos caput non babere, that is, they were nonentities. These terms also are both used by Arnobius, adversus gentes :----definite hominem proletarius cum sit classies, et sapite cum censeatur, adscribere ordinibus primis.

Senates, fenates, fell into difufe, and when fureties, under fureties, fines of twenty-pence, laws of retaliation, and trials for theft conducted cum lance & licio, have been abolished, and the whole ancient fcheme of the Twelve Tables, except that part of it relating to the fuits of the centumvirs, has, by the Æbutian law², been done away, it is neceffary for me to apply myself to the ftudy of fuch laws and words as are now in use." It happened at this moment that we faw Julius Paulus passing

• Ebatian law.]—We know nothing of this law, or of the perfon who introduced it. There is, indeed, the difputed fragment of a monument, on which Lucius Æbutius is called a tribune of the people, and commended for abohifting those laws of the Twelve Tables which were useless to the flate, and injurious to individuals. The word affidaus, which occurs in this chapter, may be better explained by, one who could pay money, qui asse dare possit.—Thus Plautus uses it in the Amphitryon:

Noctesque diesque affiduo satis superque est, Quod facto aut dicto adest opus, quietus ne fis.

Thornton has not happily rendered this passage.-He says,

This is the hardfhip of a great man's fervice, Wherefore his fervant leads a plaguy life on't; By day, lby night, there's work enough, and more, That will not let him reft.

Of alfiduus, Festus gives a different fignification.

Adfiduus dicitur qui in ea re quam frequenter agit quasi consedisse videatur. But he also adds the interpretation given above. He mentions, moreover, a third meaning, qui sumptu proprio militabat.

Q 4

by,

by, the most learned poet in my memory. We. faluted him, and begged him to explain to us the meaning and derivation of that word : " They," faid he, "who were of the lowest and poorest rank among the Roman people, and were not estimated to be worth more than fifteen hundred pieces of brass, were called proletarii 3they, however, who were rated at nothing, or a very triffing estimate, were faid to be capite cenfi; and the lowest of all rates was three hundred and feventy-five pieces: but as goods and money appeared as a fort of holtage and pledge to the republic, and was as it were a bond and fecurity for their patriotifm, fo none of the proletarii, or capite cenfi, were enrolled as foldiers, unless in some extraordinary tumult, because their domestic ties were flight, or none at all. But the proletarii were fomewhat higher, both in rank and name, than the capite censi; for in the troublesome times of the republic they were levied indifcriminately, because there was a fcarcity of recruits, and arms were provided for them at the public cost; and these forces were not called capite cenfi, but by the more aufpicious name of proletarian, from their duty, and office (prolis edendæ) of providing children; because, though they could not affift the flate much in money, yet they could fupply it with abundance of children. Caius Marius, as fome fay, in the Cimbrian war, and in very perilous times, or rather, according, to Sallust, in the Jugurthine war, first enrolled the capite cenfi as foldiers, a thing unheard of before. Adhduus (a furety) used in the Twelve Tables for a rich man, and one ready to contribute money when the exigencies of the ftate demanded it, or from his readiness to perform any duty incident to his station. Sallust's words, in his history of the Jugurthine war, concerning Caius Marius, and the capite cenfi, are these : ' he then began to enlift foldiers, not after the manner of his anceftors, nor with any regard to their ranks; but all who were willing, and chiefly the capite. senfi.' Some thought this was done through the fcarcity of proper men, and others to answer the conful's ambitious views; because he was highly honoured and applauded by that class of people, and because to one in fearch of power the most indigent perfon is the most convenient."

C SI A P.

Digitized by Google

Снар. Xİ.

Story, from Herodotus, of the destruction of the Pfylli, who lived in the deserts of Africa.

THE race of the Marsi in Italy is said to have sprung from Marsus, the son of Circe.. To the men of this race, whose families were not yet stained by the mixture of any foreign alliance, it was given, by a certain hereditary power, to become subduers of noxious serpents, and to perform wonderful cures by incantations and herbs. This same power, we see certain perfons called Pfylli posses; for an account of whose name and origin, having fearched old books, I

• I have endeavoured to illustrate the passage and cirsumstance which is here quoted concerning the Pfylli, in my translation of Herodotus, vol. ii. page 332. to this place I beg leave to refer the reader; I add, however, two passages which I omitted in that work. See Virgil, Æn. vii. 758. where the Marsi are thus mentioned—

Neque enim juvare in vulnera cautus, Somniferi et Marfis quæsitæ montibus herbæ.

See alfo Silius Italicus, l. viii. 496.

At Marfica pubes Et bellare manu et chelydris cantare foporem, Vipereumque herbis hebetare et carmine dentem.

at

Digitized by Google

at last found in the fourth book of Herodotus this flory of the Plylli; that they inhabited that part of Africa which borders upon the Nafamones: that at a certain time the fouth wind blew upon their territories with great violence and for a long time; by this wind their waters were dried up, and the P/ylli, deprived of their fupply, grievoully refented the injurious treatment, and it was decreed that they should proceed to attack the wind with arms, and to demand reparation, as from an enemy, by the forms of war. The wind, when they marched out, met them with a vehement blaft, and overwhelmed their whole force, and all their arms, beneath heaps and mountains of fand. By this incident the Plylli perished to a man, and the Nafamones took possession of their country.

Снар.

Diaitized by GOO

Снар. ХП.

Of those words which Cloatius Verrius; properly pr otherwile, has derived from the Greek.

CLOATIUS VERRIUS^{}, in his books on words taken from the Greek, has made fome obfervations which are curious and ingenious; and others foolifh and trifling. He fays, the word errare (to wander) is from egens, and produces from Homer, epp^{} ex more barrow, exergence Gaorow, exergence He likewife derives ballucinari^{*} (to blunder) from advent, whence he fays comes the word elucum, the letter a being changed into e, defcriptive of that fluggifhness and flupidity of mind which is ufual with blundering people. Fafcinum (a charm) he derives from Carrator, and fafcinare (to fafcinate) from Carrator. All this is ingenious and well enough. But in his fourth

² Cloatius Verrius.]—By fome this grammarian is called Cloatius Verus.

⁴ Hallucinari.]—See, concerning this word, Salmañus ad Solinum, p. 1279.—This critic derives hallucinari from the Greek word αλυκη. Pfellus de antiquis Medicinæ Vocabulis, —αλυκη ή μετ εκλυσιως απορια. Erotianus in Lexico—αλυκη απορια μετα χασμης, inde alucinari Latinum, ita enim hoc verbum fcribunt omnes libri veteres, &c.

."

book

book he fays, " fanerator (an ufurer) is quali quireparap, from paireolai eni to ponototepor, becaule this kind of men pretend to be compaffionate and accommodating to poor people who want money." This remark, he fays, was made by Hypficrates 3 a grammarian, who has written fome noble treatifes upon words taken from the But if Choatius himfelf, or any other Greek. blockhead, made this remark, nothing can be more stupid, for fanerator, as Marcus Varro has explained it in his book on the Latin language, comes from fanus (interest), fanus from fatus (the womb) as if from a certain womb of money, which produces and increases; and therefore he fays that Marcus Cato, and others of that age, used to pronounce fanerator without an a, like fatus and facunditas.

² Hypficrates.]—This perfon is not to be confounded with an historian of the fame name, who is quoted by Lucian.

Снар.

Digitized by GOOO

CHAP. XIII.

Meaning of municipes. Of municipium, and wherein it differs from colonia. Power and formation of this word. What the emperor Adrian faid in the fenate concerning the municipes ¹.

THE words municipes and municipia are very eafily and very commonly applied, and you never meet with a man who uses them, but he supposes that he clearly knows their meaning. But,

^a Gibbon on the fubject of this chapter has the following paffage: "The municipal cities infenfibly equalled the rank and fplendor of the colonies, and in the reign of Hadrian it was difputed which was the preferable condition, of those focieties which had iffued from, or those which had been received into, the bosom of Rome."

The historian then, referring to this chapter of Gellius, adds in a note :

"The emperor Hadrian expressed his surprize that the cities of Utica, Gades, and Italica, which already enjoyed the rights of municipia, should folicit the title of colonies; their example however became fashionable, and the empire was filled with honorary colonies."

The whole fubject of these municipia, coloniæ, &c. is difcuffed at length by Heineccius; from him we learn, that at first the municipia were confined within the limits of Italy, afterwards

But, in truth, one thing is meant and another expreffed; for who is there that, coming from any Roman colony, does not call himfelf a municeps, and his countrymen municipes, which is very far from reason and the truth. So we are in the fame manner ignorant of what and how great a difference there is between municipia and colonia; and we are apt to fuppole, that colonies are more privileged than municipal towns, Upon the errors of this confused notion the divine Hadrian has descanted very judiciously in his oration concerning the Italicenfes, among whom he was Speaking before the fenate, he faid, he born. wondered why the Italicenfes, and many other municipal bodies, fuch as the Uticenfians, while they might live according to their own cuftoms, and be governed by their own laws, fhould be anxious to be converted into colonial bodies; whereas, he relates, that the inhabitants of Prænefte requefted with the greatest earnestness of the emperor Tiberius, that from a colony they afterwards, as the Romans extended their empire and their conquests, many of the distant provinces were made municipia; but of these municipia there were three gradations of rank. See Festus at the word municipium.

The first Roman colonies were propagated in this manner: Into the first cities which Romulus conquered he fent colonies from Rome, who were confidered as a kind of garrifon, or fecurity, for the places to which they were fent.

See Adams also in his chapter on the Rights of Roman Citizens.

might

might be changed to the state of a municipality. Tiberius granted their request from gratitude; because upon their territories, and near their town, he had recovered from a dangerous sickness. The municipes, therefore, are persons who from the municipal towns are, in right of their municipality, Roman citizens, governed by their own laws, and partakers only of honorary privileges with the Roman people, and appear to be so called a munere capessendo (from taking offices'); they are bound by no compulsion or law of the Romans, except that they had placed themselves under their power. The Cærites', we learn, were

• From taking offices.]—As foon as any of these municipes chose to fix their refidence at Rome, they were called cives ingenui. Thus it might happen that the same individual, at the same time, enjoyed the highest offices of Rome, and dignities of the place which gave him birth; and Milo, when candidate for the confulship at Rome, was dictator of Lanuvium, his native city. The municipal town where a perfon was born was called patria germana, and Rome, patria communis.

* Carites.]—What Strabo fays of this people is worthy of confideration here.—See his fifth book. Speaking of the people of Italy, he fays thus of the Cærites,

The deeds of the Cærites may here be mentioned. They overcame the Gauls who had taken Rome, and took forcibly from them the plunder which the Romans had voluntarily ceded to them. They preferved also the Roman fugitives, the facred fire, and the Vestal virgins. And the Romans indeed, on their account, who at that time but badly governed the city, do not feem to have been fufficiently mindful were the first who were made a municipal body without the power of voting; they were permitted the honour of being called Roman citizens, but were exonerated from offices and taxes. on account of their having recovered and protected fome facred things in the Gallic war: hence those are called tabulæ cærites, upon which the cenfors ordered the names of those to be infcribed whom they deprived of their vote. But colonies ftand in another relationship: they have no footing in the ftate from any extrinsic right, nor do they claim it by their origin, but they are as it were offsprings of the state, and are of necessity subject to the laws and institutes of the Romans; which condition, though it be more exposed and lefs free, is yet deemed more defirable and respectable, on account of the amplitude and majefty of the Roman people, of which these colonies feem to be little copies and refemblances, and because the privileges of municipalities become obscure and obliterated from their ignorance of their proper claims, ful of the kindness they had experienced; for they gave them the rights of the city, but did not enrol their names among the citizens.

VOL. III.

Ŗ

CHAP.

Снар. XIV.

Marcus Cato thought that properare differed from festimare. How abfurdly Verrius Flaccus has explained the origin and meaning of sestimat'.

THE words feftinare and properare appear to mean the fame thing, and to be fpoken upon the fame occafions; but Marcus Cato thinks they differ, and has thus feparated them in an oration upon his own virtues:—" It is one thing properare, another feftinare. He who accomplifies a thing thoroughly, properat (haftens); he who begins many things without perfecting them, feftinat (hurries.)" Verrius Flaccus, willing to explain the reafon of this difference, fays, that feftinat comes from fando, becaufe indolent people, who can complete nothing, are more

⁸ Nonius Marcellus makes a fimilar remark about fefting and propero. If the reader can appropriate diffinct meanings to the two words, as thus ufed by Virgil, he will not, I believe, find it an eafy matter to express or define in words,

Et mediis properas aquilonibus ire per altum. Ard

Festinate, viri, nam quæ tam sera moratur Segnities.

9

prone prone to words than actions. But this appears too forced and abfurd. Nor can the first letter of a word be of fuch confequence, that on that account alone fuch different words as festimare and fari should appear the fame. It appears more probable that festimare is as it were festim effe (to be weary) for he who is wearied with hastening many things at once ceases to hasten, and becomes wearied; non properat fed festimat.

R 2

Сндр,

CHAP. XV.

Wonderful account of partridges by Theophrafius, and of bares by Theopompus¹.

THEOPHRASTUS, a very celebrated philofopher, fays, that in Paphlagonia, all partridges have two hearts. Theopompus affirms, that in Bifaltia hares have two livers.

What Theophrastus and Theopompus relate of partridges and hares is confirmed by Ælian in his Various History, but will probably meet with the ridicule it deferves from our modern proficients in natural history.

See alfo, on this fubject, Athenzus, book ix. chap. 10. by whom fome circumstances are related concerning the feathered tribe far more extraordinary. Pliny alfo, book xi. c. 37. relates, that in Paphlagonia partridges have two hearts.

.,

ÇĦAP.

CHAP. XVI.

They whole birth was difficult and unnatural were called agrippas. Of the two goddeffes Profa and Postverta¹.

THEY at whole birth the feet appeared before the head, which is the most difficult and dangerous mode of parturition, are called agrippe, from egrisudo (difficulty) and per

* The ancients imagined that those labours, in which the children prefented their feet, were necessarily difficult and dangerous. This they thought was occasioned by the arms of the children being raised, and lying on each fide of the head, and thence increasing the bulk, and confequently the difficulty of paffing through the pelvis ; but it is now known that the difficulty and danger fometimes attendant on these births only occur when the pelvis is of diminished capacity or difforted shape, or when the fectus is unufually large. When the pelvis and foctus are of the usual dimenfions, fuch births are ordinarily as fafe, and nearly as expeditious, as when the child prefents itself in its natural position. The opinion that the arms in these cases contributed to the difficulty is totally unfounded, as they are always brought down with the greatest ease as scon as the shoulders have emerged, and confequently before the head is completely engaged in the pelvis.

The goddels Profa or Prorfa was fuppoled to prefide over natural births, Poftverta over those which were the contrary pes (a foot); but Varro fays, that children are placed in the womb with their legs upwards, not like the natural polition of a man, but a tree, for he calls the branches of a tree, feet and legs, the ftock and trunk the head. "When therefore," fays he, " contrary to nature, they are turned upon their feet, and retained in the womb, with their arms extended, women are delivered with great difficulty." For the purpole of deprecating this calamity, altars were erected at Rome, near the two temples of Carmenta³, one of which was called Poltverta, the other Profa, from the different power and names of the different births, natural and the contrary.

R₃

Sce

See Salmafius ad Solinum, where also the curious reader may be entertained with a learned and fubtle differtation on the etymology of the word agrippa.

² Carmenta.]—This perfonage was fuppoled to be the mother of Evander, and to have had the gift of prophecy. After her decease fine was deified, and facred rites offered to her, which were called Carmentalia. See the eighth Æneid, v. 335.

His poluere locis matrifque egere tremenda Carmentis nymphæ monita, et deus auctor Apollo; Vix ea dicta dehinc progreffus monstrat et aram Et Carmentalem Romano nomine portam, Quam memorant nymphæ priscum Carmentis honorem Vatis fatidicæ cecinit quæ prima futuros Æneadas magnos et nobile Pallanteum.

CHAP. XVII'.

Meaning of the word Vaticanus.

W E have been told that the word Vatican is applied to the hill, and the deity who prefides over it, from the vaticinia, or prophecies, which took place there by the power and infpiration of the god; but Marcus Varro, in his book on Divine Things, gives another reason for this name. "As Aius^{*}," fays he, " was called a deity, and an altar was built to his honour in ^a The first founds which infants first articulate have often been a subject of serious argument as well as of ludicrous discussion. A story of this kind is agreeably related in Herodotus. The subject of this chapter again occurs at book xix. chap. 7. of Gellius.

² Aiss.]—See Cicero, who relates the fame fact. L. de Divinat. ii. 32. At paulo post audita vox est monentis, ut providerent ne a Gallis Roma caperetur; ex eo Aio loquenti aram in nova via confecratam.

Plutarch alfo, in his life of Camillus, fays the fame of Aius; and Livy, l. v. c. 50. and 52. where is this paffage Expiandæ etiam vocis nocturnæ, quæ nuncia cladis ante bellum Gallicum audita neglectaque effet, mentio iliata, juffumque templum in nova via Aio Locutio fieri.

At the foot of the hill called The Vatican, is the church of Saint Peter, and the palace of the Pope, each of which edifices is feparately denominated The Vatican.

R 4

the

the lowest part of the new road, because in that place a voice from heaven was heard, so this deity was called Vaticanus, because he presided over the principles of the human voice; for infants, as soon as they are born, make the sound which forms the first syllable in Vaticanus, and are therefore said vagire (to cry) which word expresses the noise which an infant first makes.

CHAP.

CHAP. XVIII.

Some agreeable things to be known and remembered, in that branch of geometry called ontixn.—Of those also called xavovixn and parteixn.

T HERE is a part of geometry, which relates to vision, called optics'; another part, relating to the hearing, is called canonic, on which musicians depend for the first principle of their art. Each of these confists of certain spaces, lines, and proportions of numbers. Optics can effect many wonderful things, as the representing in one speculum different images of the same object. A glass, placed in a certain position, shews nothing; turn it, and it shews many images. You may look straight forward at a glass, and your own image so appears, that your head is downwards, your feet upwards. This science too

¹ Optics.]—Dutens, in his agreeable and ingenious enquiry into the origin of the difcoveries attributed to the moderns, cites this chapter of Aulus Gellius to prove the proficiency of the ancients in the fcience of optics:

"Aulus Gellius having spoken of mirrors that multiplied objects, makes mention of those that inverted them, and those of course must be concave or convex glasses."

Vol. III.

RŞ

explains

explains the fallacies of vision, fo that objects feen in the water appear magnified *, and why things at a diftance appear fmaller; but the canonic science measures the compass and heighth of the voice: the measurement of its compass is called evenos (rhythm); of its height, meros (melody). And there is another branch of the canonic art called metrical) by which the position of long and short syllables, and those which are neither long nor fhort, and the modulation, is meafured by the ear, upon geometrical principles. " But as for these things," favs Marcus Varro, " we either do not learn them, or we leave off before we know why they ought to be learned; but the pleafure and advantage of them exists, when we have made great progress and proficiency beyond the principles of the art; but in learning them, they appear frivolous and difagreeable."

² Appear magnified.]—See Seneca, Qu. Nat. l. i. c. 6. I take the translation of Dutens.

The fmalleft characters in writing, even fuch as almost escape the maked eye, may eafily be brought to view by means of a little glafs bottle filled with water.

The reason he gives, as Dutens has not mentioned it, is here added.

Quia acies noftra in humido labitur, nec apprehendere quod vult, fideliter poteft.

Снар.

CHAP. XIX.

Story of Arion, from the History of Herodotus".

HERODOTUS has related the ftory of Arion the mufician in a ftyle diftinguished alike by its spirit and its smoothness; by its elegance and its perspicuity. The ancient and celebrated ² The flory of Arion is to be found in the eighth book of Herodotus, with no important variation.

The expression cobibilis, which occurs in the first sentence of this chapter, is not of very usual occurrence, it doubtless is the same as pressa.

The term also of amatum feems worthy of attention. Herodotus by no means intimates, that there was any such connection betwixt Periander and Arion as amatus will allow. A corresponding fentence is pointed out by Falsteius, in what he calls his Admonitions to those who read Gellius, from Ælian's Various History, $\Pi \tau \partial \lambda \mu \alpha i o c$ supersor size Falstra. It is not unworthy of remark, that Huetius, in his Demonstratio Evangelica, is fully persuaded that the fable of Arion is borrowed from the history of Jonah. He descends to some particulars in the comparison, which are rather ludicrous: as in the whale's belly Jonah fung a hymn, and conciliated God, so Arion did the dolphin by his lyre.

In the Anthologie Francoife I find the following anecdote, the infertion of which feems pertinent in this place :

Pierre de Chateauneuf was stopped on a journey by some robbers; celebrated Arion (fays he) was a player upon the harp: he was a Lefbian, born at Methymne. Periander, king of Corinth, held Arion in great regard and affection, on account of his art. After a time he left the king, to visit Sicily and Italy, in both which places he fo charmed the ears and the minds of the inhabitants, that he obtained at once confiderable profits, and a great share of admiration and effeem. Laden with money, and all kinds of wealth, he refolved to return to Corinth; he chose therefore a vessel and a crew that were Corinthian, as better known. and more friendly to him; but the Corinthians, having received Arion on board, and put to fea, began to confult about killing him for the fake of his wealth. He, perceiving that his death was determined, gave them his money and his goods. entreating them to fpare his life. The failors were fo far moved by his fupplications, that they refrained from putting him to death themfelves, but commanded him immediately to leap into the fea. The man, alarmed and deprived of all hope, finally requested, that before he encountered death, they would permit him to drefs himfelf, robbers; having first plundered, they were about to kill him; he entreated that before they put him to death they would vouchfafe to hear one of his fongs; they confented, and were fo delighted with his finging, that they restored him all his property. This story, fays the narrator, is worth almost as much as that of Arion.

Digitized by GOOGLC

to

to take his harp in his hand, and to fing a fong confolatory of his mifery. The cruel and inhuman failors defired to hear his mufic : he obtained therefore his requeft, and clad in his accuftomed drefs, ornamented and ftanding upon an exposed part of the ship, with a very loud voice he began to fing the strains called Orthian. Having finished his fong, he threw himself, with his harp, and in his full drefs, from the fpot whereon he had ftood finging, into the deep. The failors, taking it for granted that he had perished, proceeded on their course; but behold a wonderful and aweful circumstance took place; a dolphin fwam towards him, and receiving him on his back, carried him through the waves; uninjured in his perfon, and even his drefs, it landed him at Tænarus in Laconia, whence he proceeded to Corinth, to king Periander, to whom he prefented himfelf in the fame habit as he had been carried by the dolphin, and related to him what had happened; the king, not believing this, ordered Arion to be confined as an impoftor; but the failors were artfully interrogated (Arion being absent) whether they had heard of Arion? They answered, that when they came away, he was in Italy, in good health, and high in reputation, and the efteem of the cities, and that he abounded in profperity and wealth. As they uttered these words, Arion, with his harp and the garments in which he had cast himself into the sea, came forth:

forth; the failors were aftonifhed and convicted, and could no longer deny the fact. This ftory is related by the Lefbians and Corinthians, and in testimony of the tale, two brazen images were to be seen at Tænarus, of the dolphin carrying, and the man riding.

BOOK

BOOK XVII.

CHAP. I.

Gallus Afinius and Largius Licinius bave censured an opinion in Cicero's oration for Cælius, and what may truly and forcibly be urged in vindication of this opinion against foolish people.

A S there have appeared fome men fo monftrous as to inculcate impious and falfe opinions concerning the immortal gods, fo have there been fome too, whofe folly was fo extraordinary (among whom are Gallus Afinius', and Largus

Gallus Afinius.]—This Afinius Gallus was the fon of the celebrated orator Afinius Pollio; he was himfelf alfo an orator and a poet. He wrote a work in which he compared the eloquence of Cicero with that of his father, and gave the preference to the latter. This book had, after the death of the author, the honour of being answered by an emperor. Claudius wrote, fays Suctonius (Vit. Claud. c. 14.) Cicerenis Defensionem adversus Afinii Galli Libres, fatis eruditam, a tolerably Largius Licinius, whofe book even bears the infamous title of Ciceromaftix) that they have ventured to commit to writing a cenfure upon Martolerably learned defence of Cicero against the books of Asinins Gallus: this is according to the general account of the commentators; but it is rather more probable, that the anfwer of Claudius was directed to the work here mentioned, intituled Ciceromastix. The other performance is mentioned by Pliny the Younger, as in part the occasion of a copy of verses written by him on the subject of Cicero, but according to our ideas, far from honourable either to himself or the perfon celebrated: he says, " legebantur mihi libri Asinii Galli de Comparatione Patris et Ciceronis." The books of Asinius Gallus, in which he compares his father with Cicero, were read to me in my Laurentian villa, and his verses begin—

Cum libros Galli legerem, quibus ille parenti Aufus de Cicerone daret palmamque decuíque.

See his epiftles, b. vii. ep. 4. The death of this Gallus was very miferable :---Having excited the jealoufy of Tiberius, by paying too much court to Sejanus, he was, by a fecret order of the emperor, arrefted at the very table of Tiberius himfelf. kept alive in great milery, and finally, fays Tacitus, flarved to death, whether voluntarily or by compulsion is uncertain, The account of his arreft is well told by Brotier, in his fupplement to the fifth book of the Annals of Tacitus, cap. 17-20. on the authority of Dion. The coadjutor of Afinius Gallus in the Ciceromastix, Licinius Largus, is a man of much less fame; little is known concerning him, except what is here told. It is pleafing to remark the high veneration in which Cicero was held at Rome by men of good taste, from the epithet here given to the title of this attack, It was called, fays Gellius, infundo titulo, Ciceromaftix ; that is, called by a name not fit to be pronounced.

cus

cus Cicero, as an author who fpoke without accuracy, propriety, or elegance. There are many cenfures of theirs not worthy to be fpoken of, or of the leaft attention; but as the following is a passage wherein they appear to confider themfelves as most acute critics, let us examine their Marcus Cicero, in his defence of Cæremark. lius, fays, " as for what has been faid to the prejudice of him as a modest man, and has been urged by all his accufers, not in the form of an accusation, but with reproaches and calumnies, Marcus Calius will not take that fo much to heart as to repent (ut paniteat) that he was not born deformed." They do not think that $p\alpha$ niteat here is properly used, and even go fo far as almost to affirm that it is absurd. For, fay they, we apply the word panitere, when fpeaking of things which we ourfelves have done, or which were done with our confent and will, if those things afterwards begin to difpleafe us, and we change our fentiments concerning them; but no man can with propriety fay, he repents that he was born, or that he is mortal, or that he feels pain from any attack or wound in his body, fince in matters of this fort there is no defign or will of our own, but they happen to our bodies unfought for, and by the force and necessity of nature: thus, they fay, it was not a matter of choice to Cælius with what form he was born, of which he faid he did not repent; as if there were any any cause for repentance in it. This, they fay, is the meaning of the word, and premitet is not properly used but in matters where the will is concerned. However, our anceftors used this wordwith a different fignification, as if derived from pane and penuria; but this, not being to our prefent purpoie, shall be spoken of in another place ; but as for the usage of it in this sense, which is the common one, Cicero's application of it is not only not improper, but is in the higheft degree witty and elegant; for as the opponents and calumniators of Marcus Cælius, who was a very handfome man, made even his perfon and his beauty the caufe of infinuations against his modesty, Cicero, alluding to fo abfurd an imputation, as (that of criminating a man on account of the form which nature had given him, has deliberately applied the word with the fame error as that which he was ridiculing ; " and (fays he) Marcus Cælius does not repent that he was not born deformed," in order that by this very phrase he might reproach the accusers, and expose them to ridicule for their foolifh charge against the perfon of Cælius, as if it were a matter of choice² to him with what fort of a perfon he was born.

VOL. 111.

² Matter of choice]—This answer of Gellius is acute, but at the fame time appears to be found. The enemies of Callius objected his beauty to him, as if it had been a crime of which he was guilty; but it was a fault, fays Cicero, of which he could not be brought to repent.

As

As a concluding remark to this chapter, it may be added, that it is not improbable that Gellius had fome particular authors in view, both thofe whom he reprehends as atheiftical writers, as well as the cavillers againft Cicero. Of the former, among the Greeks, were Prodius, Protagoras, &c. and the whole tribe of Epicureans, who denied the divine providence; of the latter, many are enumerated in the Bibliotheca Latina of Fabricius, particularly Didymus and Dio Caffius.

CHAP. II.

Curfory remarks on the first book of the Annals of Quintus Claudius.

WHEN I have taken up any old book, I have always endeavoured, in order to improve my memory, to retain and recur to any paffages it contained, which might be worthy of commendation or of cenfure, and this proved a very ufeful exercise in supplying me from time to time, as occasion required, with the recollection of elegant fentences; as for instance, in the first book of Claudius's Annals, which I had read two days

² 2. Claudius.]. This is the Q. Claudius Quadrigarius often mentioned before. It is a curious inftance of one in-S 2 veterate days before, I marked, as far as I remember, the following paffage : " Many (fays he) fling away their arms, and hide themselves (inlatebrant sele) unarmed." Here inlatebrant feems a poetic, but not an abfurd or a harfh word. " While thefe things are done (fays he) the Latins with great earneftnefs ([ubnixo animo) ;" as if he had faid [ublime et supra nizo, a word which denotes no accidental force, but a refolution and confidence of mind, fince we are as it were lifted up and exalted by things we ftrive with. He bids them (he adds) each return to his own house, and enjoy (fruisci) his poffessions. This was a word not often used in the time of Cicero, and fince then very feldom indeed; and fome ignorant people have doubted whether it be Latin or not; but it is not only Latin, but more elegant and ornamental than veterate error perfifted in throughout the copies of a work, that Nonius Marcellus cites almost all the passages of uncommon words, and that in every inflance Cælius is there read. for Claudius. In the common editions of Nonius, fruifci is alfo read for frunifci. Vosfius, in his Etymol. thus derives, this word; a fruor est fruifcor et frunifcor, nempe ut jecur et jecinor, iter et itiner, dixere, fic fruor et fruinor : ac ut a fruor effet fruifci, fic a fruinor, fruinifcor, et xara ovynown frunifcor. Infrunitus has been used by Seneca and others in the fense of flupid, rude, which has puzzled the learned to make the fense accord to the derivation. The able critic abovementioned, after trying various methods without much success, is constrained to introduce frunio as derived from φ_{portow} , which confequently leaves infrumitus very ready to accept the fense of $\alpha \varphi_{pure}$.

fruor,

fruor, and as fatifcor comes from fateor, fo fruifcor from fruor. Quintus Metellus Numidicus, who appears to have been thoroughly converfant with the purity of the Latin language, writes thus to the Domitii when he was in banifhment: "They are cut off from all equity and honour; I want neither fire nor water, while I enjoy (frunifcor) the highest reputation." Nævius, in his play called Parcus, ufes the word thus:

The covetous enjoy not their possessions, While he who spares not, what he has enjoys.

"The Romans," fays he, " abound in (copiantur) arms, provisions, and great spoil." The word copiantur is a military term, nor will you often find it made use of by law writers, and it is adopted by the same figure as lignantur, pobulantur, and aquantur. He observes, that fole could is a phrase of confiderable beauty to an ear of cood and correct taste; but in the Twelve Tables, the word is thus used: "before noon hear the cause", the litigants being present: noon being past, if only one be present, give judgment in his favour; if both be present, "fol occass," at the setting of the sun, let the proceedings of the court cease." "We (says he) use the phrase, "in medium relinquemus;" the common people

* Hear the cause.]—The original is ante meridiem causam confcito. Heineccius, in his chapter de Officio Judicis, reads causam conjicito, which Turnebus also approyes.

S 3

fay,

fay, "in medio," thinking the other inaccurate ; nay, they confider it as a folecifm to fay, "in medium ponere";" and yet, if one examine this phrafe attentively, it must appear more proper and expreffive; and in Greek, this phrafe, Suran is pusor, is not improper. "As foon as it was told (fays he) that a battle had been fought in Gallos (against the Gauls) the state was alarmed." Now the expression, in Gallos, is more neat and elegant than contra Gallos, or cum Gallis, which are awkward and obsolete phrases.

"At the fame time (he continues) he was diftinguished by his person, his conduct, his eloquence, his dignity, his vehemence, his fidelity, fo that he might furely be supposed to posses (magnum viaticam) a great flock of accomplishments." This phrase is used in a new sense for great talents and attainments, and feems to be in imitation of the Greeks, who transfer the word soodion, fignifying preparation for a journey, to preparation 3 of any other kind; and often spolion has the fense of our institue, instrue, (appoint, " Marcus Manlius (fays he) whom I begin.) before mentioned, faved the capitol, and whofe affiftance, together with that of Furius the dictator, the republic of Rome found particularly (comprime) powerful and irrefiftible against the Preparation]--- Thus also in Greek, the term ra onion is used indefinitely for any kind of preparation; and in Polyznus, ra onion invite is used for the drefs of a failor.

I

Gauls ;

Gauls; he was fecond to no perfon in birth, in strength, or in courage." Adprime is a word frequently used, cum prime but feldom; it feems derived from cum primis, when used for in primis. "He has no occasion (says he) for riches (divitiis)." We fay divitias; nor is that an impropriety. for that was the regular form with many of the ancients; and there can be no reason given why divitiis and divitias are not equally right, unless people observe the new institutes of the grammarians as confecrated ground. " Herein, (fays he) lies the injustice of the Gods; the worft men prosper most; and they do not allow the best to tarry (diurnare) long with us." Diurnare is here used rather uncommonly, for diu vivere, but by the fame figure as we use perennare. "He conversed (fays he) confermonabasur with them." Sermonari appears vulgar, but is right; /ermocinari is usual, but corrupt. He faid he would not do even that, (ne id quoque) which he then advised. Ne id quoque is used for ne id quidem, an unusual expression, but very frequent in ancient authors. " Such (fays he) is the fanctity' (fantitudo) of the

• Prosper most.]-Dr. Beattie has expressed this idea with great beauty, in an elegy on the death of a lady :--

Oh death! why arm with cruelty thy power, And fpare the weed, yet crop the lovely flower.

³ Sandity of the temple.]—Speaking of Zeuxis, Cicero has $ 4 this the temple, that no one has prefumed to violate it." With no lefs propriety [antiitas and fantimonia are used in Latin, but fanctitudo has fomewhat more dignity. As Cato thought it was more forcible to use the word duritudinem than duriciem, when speaking against Lucius Veturius: "Who had known (fays he) the audacity and the hardened mind (duritudinem) of this man, when fuch a pledge (arrabo) was deposited by the Romans in the hands of the Samnites." He called the 600 hoftages arrabo, and chofe that word in preference to pignus, because the power and force of this word is here greater as well as more pointed : but arrbabo has now fallen into difufe, and arrba⁶ appears more proper, and was frequently used by the ancients. He uses this expression-" Oftentimes did they pass miserable lives in perpetual labours (in laboribus); and (he fays) this opportunity was loft in their idlenefs, (in otiis)." In each of these examples, elegance is attained by the use of the plural num-this expression concerning a temple of Juno, which the painter had adorned with the productions of his art.

Is et cæteres complures tabulas pinxit, quarum nonnulla pars ulque ad noftram memoriam, propter fani religionem, remanfit, ⁶ Arrba.]—The arrha was the earnest penny given in bargains. 'Barthius fays it is a Hebrew word : Arrabo vero vox pure Hebraica est.—Venantius Fortunatus, a modern Latin poet, calls the death of Christ arrham falutis, the earnest penny of falvation.

5

ber.

ber. " Cominius (fays he) came down by the fame paffage as he had afcended, and thus deceived the Gauls (verba Gallis dedit)." He fays, Cominius " verba dedit Gallis," though he had not fpoken to any one, nor had the Gauls, who belieged the capitol, even feen him afcending or descending; but verba dedit, means nothing more than you would express by latuit atque obrepsit. "The vallies (fays he) and fhrubberies (arboreta) were great." Arboreta is a vulgar word, arbusta more dignified. " They thought (fays he) that the perfons in the citadel and those without held communication and counfel together." Commutationes is here used not very commonly, but not improperly or inelegantly, for collationes, conferences, communications.

I noted down at my leifure these few things from that book, as my memory, after reading it, fupplied.

Снар.

CHAP. III.

Observation from Varro's twenty-fifth book on Human Affairs, where he interprets a verse from Homer contrary to the received opinion.

IN one of those conversations where we have often discussed the inventions of human fagacity for common use, a young man of some learning observed, that in Greece, the use of the word sparti was for a long time unknown, and was introduced there, many years after the fall of Troy, from Spain. One or two ill-bred and ignorant men, such as the Greeks call ayoganon (coarse), who were present, ridiculed this observation by laughing, and faid, that he must have perused a copy of Homer in which this line was wanting—

" Kai dy depa sesyne new xai smapta hehurtai."

He in his turn angrily replied, "it was not my copy that wanted this line, but it was you who wanted an inftructor, if you fuppofe that oracera there fignifies what we call fpartum," (a rope). At this they laughed ftill louder, nor would have ceased, unless Marcus Varro's twenty fifth book had had been produced by him, in which Varro makes this remark upon that line in Homer. ^{tr} I think that $\sigma\pi\alpha\rho\tau\alpha$, in Homer, means no otherwife fpartum, (a rope) than the word $\sigma\pi\alpha\rho\tau\alpha\sigma$, which fignifies a kind of broom ^a, faid to grow about Thebes. The Liburnians had then no

• Zmapres.]—When Cadmus fowed the dragon's teeth, and armed men arole from the foil, these were called $\sigma \pi \sigma e_{\ell}^{0} o_{\ell}$, or fowed, from having been thus produced. I confess I am by no means fatisfied whether $\sigma \pi a \rho \tau o_{\ell}$ in this place alludes to them or not; if it does, what follows is pertinent. Five of these furvived the mutual flaughter by which the greater part was deftroyed. Ovid fays, Quinque superstitibus, quorum suit unus Echion.

Five remained, of whom Echion was one. The other four are named by Apollodorus, Bibl. iii. 1. and by the Scholiast, on the Phoenifia of Euripides, v. 949. they were Udans, Chthonius, Hyperenor, and Pelor or Pelorus. The Scholiast cites Æschylus as authority for these names. They are all fignificant; Udeus and Chibonius both mean earth-born; Echion fignifies a ferpent; Hyperenor denotes great strength and courage; and Pelorus great bulk. Echion, continues the Scholiaft, married Agave, daughter of Cadmus, by whom he had Pentheus. It was the boaft of the nobleft families of Thebes that they were descended from these Sparti. or Gegenes, as they were also called. It was a common opinion. that the defcendants of this race bore a natural mark, in the form of a lance, upon the body; to this Aristotle alludes : Aoyzne in Popus Inginis; " the fpcar borne by the Gegenes," where he is speaking of natural marks. Poet. xvi.

• Broom.]-Of which broom a kind of cable appears to have been made. On the fubject of this letter confult Salmafius ad Solinum, 264. edit. Paris, 1629.

knowledge

knowledge of ropes, for they chiefly fecured their fhips with thongs, while the Greeks ufed hemp, coarfe flax, and other plants, which they called $\sigma\pi\alpha\rho\tau\alpha$." Since fuch is Varro's opinion, I doubt whether the latter fyllable in that word ought to be acutely accented, unlefs that words of this kind, when applied in their proper inftead of their ufual fignification, are diffinguifhed by a difference of accent.

CHAP. IV.

What Menander faid to the poet Philemon, by whom be was often undefervedly overcome in poetical contefts. Euripides also was often vanquished in tragedy by very mean writers.

T. Hrough interest, and the power of party, Menander was frequently overcome in the dramatic contests by Philemon', a writer by no means

* Philemon.]—Quintilian alludes to the fame circumstance respecting the preference given to Philemon. After praising Menander very highly, he adds, "habent tamen alii quoque comici, fi cum venia legantur, quædam quæ possis decipere, et præcipuè Philemon, qui, ut pravis sui temporis judiciis, Menandro sæpe prælatus est, ita consensu meruit means his equal. Menander meeting him once by chance, faid to him, "Tell me, I requeft, and excufe me for afking, Philemon, do you not blufh when you carry away the prize from me?" Varro fays that Euripides, though he wrote feventyfive tragedies, was victorious only in five contests, while fome very stupid poets were decreed conquerors. Some fay that Menander left one hundred and eight, fome one hundred and nine comedies. I have met in a book written by Apollodorus, an eminent author, these lines upon Menander. The book is intituled Chronica:

From Diopeithes of Cephifium

He fprung, and fifty years and two he lived, And wrote an hundred comedies and five.

meruit credi fecundus." " The other comic writers, however, if read with indulgence, have fome passages worthy of felection, and particularly Philemon, who, as he was frequently, by the false judges of his own time, preferred to Menander, is by general confent allowed the next in merit to him." Infl. x. 1.

So difficult is it to preferve impartiality in human decifions of any kind, that we here find intereft and corruption interfering even with the contefts for poetical honours: thus, we are told, that Pindar was adjudged inferior to Corinna. Contefts of this kind were of great antiquity in Greece. Plutarch, in the fifth book of his Sympofiacs, fays, that prizes for eloquence were given by Achilles at the funeral of Patroclus, and by Acaftus at that of his father Pelias. In the decifions upon comedies at Athens there were originally five judges, whence Suidas cites this proverb, ar with spilw yoragi, fc. xuilat, "it depends upon the five judges." The fame number of judges prefided also in Sicily an fuch occafions.

The

The fame Apollodorus informs us in the fame book, that of these one hundred and five plays, only five were rewarded with the prize.

CHAP. V.

It is by no means true what some superficial students of rhetoric have supposed, that Cicero, in his book on Friendship, used a vicious argument, the ambiguous for the acknowledged. The whole of this investigated and explained.

CICERO, in his dialogue intituled Lælius, or de Amicitia, wifhes to inculcate, that friendfhip is to be cultivated not from motives of intereft, and the expectation of advantage, but to be ardently purfued, and efteemed for a quality inherent in itfelf, which is replete with virtue and honour, although no affiftance or advantage fhould be reaped from it. He has expressed this fentiment in these words, which he puts into the mouth of Caius Lælius, a wise man, and the particular friend of Scipio Africanus: "What advantage can Africanus expect to derive from me, or I from him; but I am attached to him from my my admiration of his virtue, while he has conceived a regard for me, perhaps, from fome favourable opinion of my manners, and habit has increased our attachment; but although many and great advantages have proceeded from this, yet our affection did not flow from such expectations; for as we defire to confer benefits without hope of a return (for we do not fell benefits usuriously, but confer them from a natural propensity to liberality) fo we are of opinion that friendship is a valuable attainment, not from the expectation of any profit, but from the benevolence produced by itfelf."

This paffage happened to be read in a company of learned men, when a fophiftical rhetorician of fome note, who was skilled in each language, and well versed in those little turns and witticifms which the logicians called $\tau_{i\chi\nu\nu\alpha\nu}$, (artificial) practice, and having withal talents for disputation, faid, he thought that Cicero had used an argument which had neither proof nor illustration in it, but was in fact a part of the question itself; and he called this error by fome Greek terms which he had learned, appire fa- $\tau 2\mu i \nu \nu^{2}$ auti the spectrum, (" an instance taken from ³ Toxonon.]—I do not find any illustration of this term better than that which is given in the notes to the Variorum.

ApproCollupson, &c.]....This is what is called in English begging the question; by the logicians, petitis principii. Wallis from a difputed point, inftead of a proved one"); " for," fays he, " Cicero quoted men of liberality and benevolence to confirm a difputed point relative to friendship, when in fact the usual and proper fubject of debate is, if a man act with liberality and munificence, with what intention or defign is he liberal and munificent: it is either becaufe he expects a return, and wishes to excite him to generofity upon whom he confers the benefit, which is a frequent cafe; or it is because he is by nature prone to liberality, and benevolence and munificence are in themfelves gratifying to him, a thing which very rarely happens." He thought that arguments should be proved, or very clear, and by no means difputable. He faid " that figure was called anoder Eis, ' (illustration) by which doubtful

Digitized by Google

١.

Wallis defines it thus: "Quando affumitur id quod erat probandum, five eisdem verbis id fiat, five quæ tantundem fignificant, aut quæ præfumunt quod erat probandum." "When that is affumed which was to be proved, whether it be done in the fame words, or in equivalent expressions, or fuch as prefuppose the matter in dispute;" as if, fays Watts, "A papiss thould pretend that his religion is the only catholic religion, and is derived from Christ and his Apostles, becawje it agrees with the doctrine of all the fathers of the church, all the holy martyrs, and all the christian world throughout all ages: whereas this is a great point in contess, whether their religion does agree with that of all the ancients and the primitive christians or no." Logic, iii. 3.

³ Aπoduξıç.]—Quintilian uses this as a Latin word, calling it apodixis, l. v. c. 10.

Hanc

ful or obscure questions were made clear by plain and undoubted truths; and that in order to prove what was faid of friendship, he ought not, as an argument or illustration, to have taken these men of liberality and munificence. By the fame fiction and shew of reason, friendship itself may in its turn be quoted as an argument, if any one should advance that men ought to be generous and liberal, not through the hope of gain, but from affection and the love of honour. Such a reasoner too might fay-for as we embrace friendship not for the fake of advantage, fo we ought to be munificent and liberal, not through the hope of meeting a return. He might indeed argue thus; but neither can friendship be adduced as an argument for liberality, nor liberality for friendship, when either of them is the subject of dispute." Thus did this logical artist harangue, and, as fome thought, with skill and learning; but in truth he was ignorant of the meaning of these terms; for Cicero calls a man beneficum and liberalem in the philosophical fense of the word, not one who, as he fays, deals in benefits with ufury, but one who confers a favour without any fecret view to his own advantage; he by no means therefore used an obscure or ambiguous argument, but one plain and perspicuous, for if Hanc, et ab epicheremate differre Cæcilius putat, folo genere conclutionis, et esse apodixin imperfectum epicherema, &c.

Vol. III.

Т any

any one be really generous and liberal, we do not enquire into his motives. He takes a very different name, who, in doing fuch acts, looks more to his own advantage than that of his neighbour. and this reprehension might have made some advance even upon this fophist, if Cicero had faid any fuch thing as this; for as we all beneficently and liberally, not looking for any reward. To act beneficently might appear poffible even to a man not generally beneficent, if the action were performed through fome accidental circumstance, rather than from any fixed principles of generofity; but when he fpeaks of munificent and generous people, meaning only those whom we have mentioned, he immediately (and, as the proverb fays, without wetting his feet) furnishes a direct and express refutation to the arguments of this very learned man.

Снаг.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. VI'.

It is not true what Verrius Flaccus, in his fecond book on the Obscurities of M. Cato, has said concerning the servus receptitius.

MARCUS CATO, when proposing the Voconian law, made use of these words r " A woman at first brought with her a vast dowry, ⁸ Pompeius Feftus feems exactly to have copied Verrius Flaccus in this point. He fays, receptitium fervum Cato in fuafione legis Voconiæ eum ait, fignificat qui ob vitium redhibitus fit—ubi irata facta eft, fervum receptitium fectari atque flagitare virum jubet." Nonius Marcellus adopts the opinion, and nearly the words, of Gellius. This fenfe of recipio is admitted by the civilians, and well illuftrated by Gronovius in his notes on Seneca's Confolatio ad Marc. c. x.

The passage quoted from Plautus by Gellius, is in the Trinummus, act. 1. fc. 2. l. 157.

Donatus, in a note on the Afinaria of the fame author, fays; that dotalis fervus means the fame thing; the lines there are:

Dotalem fervum Sauream uxor tua Adduxit, cui plus in manu fit quam tibi.

Saurea the flave, Tour wife brought with her on her marriage, has More money in her hands than you have, Sir.

TR

ТM

276 THE ATTIC NIGHTS dowry, and yet retains a large fum of money which fhe does not entrust to the power of her hufband, but fhe lends him that money; afterwards, in a fit of rage against him, she orders a flave of her own (fervum receptitium) to go and importunately demand the money of her hufband." We debated about the term fervus roceptitius, when immediately Verrius Flaccus's Illustrations of Cato's Obscurities were enquired for and produced. In his fecond book, we find that a worthless flave, one of no value, who on any fale was given into the bargain, one who was returned, and taken again on account of fome fault, was called receptitius; " therefore," fays he, " a flave of this defcription was ordered to follow the husband, and demand the money, that his chagrin might be the greater, and the infult more intolerable, when a flave of the bafeft character dunned him for money." But if there be any who are led by the authority of Verrius Flaccus, with reverence to fuch be it spoken, that fervus recepti-

The hufband was fupreme mafter over all the other flaves of the houfe; but this was under the government and direction of the miftrefs only.

Two of these flaves are mentioned by name in Suetonius; one in his 23d chapter of Illustrious Grammarians.

Remmius Palemon, an ancient grammarian, was, it feems, of this defeription. Succonius calls him Mulieris Verna. The name of another of these flaves occurs in the 19th chapter of the Hiftory of Augustus.

Ad extremum Telephi mulieris fervis nomenclatoris.

lius,

tius, upon the occasion on which Cato speaks, means fomething very different from the explanation given by Verrius Flaccus; and this is obvious to any one; indeed the matter is past all doubt. When a woman gave her dowry to her hufband, then whatever possessions of her own the retained, not transferring them to her husband, these she was faid recipere, which we fay of things which at fales are kept back and not fold. Plautus uses this word in the follows ing line of his Trinummus: " Polticulum hoc recipit, cum ædes vendidit," that is, a part of the premises behind the house he did not sell but retained. Cato too, withing to defcribe a woman as very rich, fays, "She makes over to her hufband a large dowry, and yet retains a great fum of money." Out of this possession which fhe retains, fhe lends money to her hufband; when in a rage she determines to have the money back again, the appoints her own flave to demand it, that is, a peculiar flave, whom with part of her fortune fle had retained, and had not made over with the reft of her dowry; for this was an office in which a woman could not employ a flave of her hufband's, but her own. I pafs over other arguments by which I could defend my opinion, for they are felf-evident, both Verrius's opinion and my own; but let every one adopt that which he thinks beft.

T 3

Снар.

Снар. VII.

These words in the Atinian law, "QUOD . SUBRER-TUM . ERIT . EJUS . REI . ÆTERNA . AUCTORI-TAS . ESTO," seem to P. Nigidius and Q. Scævola to have regard both to the past and the future.

THE old Atinian law contains these words: "If a theft shall have been committed, let the authority to take cognizance of the thest be perpetual." Who would suppose that the law has any other reference than to the future? But Quintus Scævola fays, that his father, and Brutus, and Manilius, men of high reputation for learning, enquired and doubted whether this law prevailed in cases of future thest only, or of those also already committed', because the words "fubreptum

• Already committed.]—Cicero, whole authority might have been decifive with Sczvola and his friends, cites this very law, among others, as a proof that it is contrary to all legal cuftom to give laws a retrofpect to things done before they were enacted.

Cedo mihi leges Atinias Furias ipfam ut dixi Voconiam omnes præterea de jure civili, hoc reperies in omnibus statuj jus, quo post eam populus utatur.

In Verr. act. ii. l. 1. c. 22.

He is cenfuring Verres for using both fecit and fecerit in decree, in order to give it a retrospective force, reptum erit," appear to point to each tenfe, the prefent and future. Publius Nigidius, the most learned of the Romans, has noticed this doubt of theirs in the twenty-fourth of his Grammatical Commentaries; and he also questions the certain demonstration of the time; but he speaks very briefly and obscurely, so that you may observe he puts down hints rather to affift his own memory, than for the benefit of his readers. He feems. however, to fay thus far, that the verbs effe and erit, when placed by themfelves, hold and preferve their tense, but when joined with a preterperfect they lofe their own power, and pass into that of the preterperfect. When I fay in campo eft (he is in the field), in comitio eft (he is in the affembly), I speak of the present tense; and when I fay in campo erit (he will be in the field) I fpeak of the future tenfe; but when I fay fasture est, scriptum est, subreptum est, although est be a verb of the prefent tenfe, it is confounded with the preterperfect, and lofes its prefent fenfe: fo likewise, says he, if in this law you divide and feparate the two words subreptum and erit, as to understand subrestum erit like certamen erit, or facrificium erit, then the law will appear to have reference to the future; but if you confider them

See

See what Rutgerfus in his Various Readings has faid on abis chapter of Gellius, p. 263. The date of this law cannot eafily be afcertained; it is only certain that it exifted before the sime of Scævola, Brutus, and Nigidius.

T 🕯

Į۵.

Digitized by Google

fo joined and mingled together, as that fubreptum erit be one word, formed by one tenfe in the paffive voice, then by this word is meant no lefs the preterperfect than the future tenfe.

CHAP. VIII.

At the table of Taurus the philosopher it was usual to discuss questions of this kind; why oil will often and easily congeal, wine seldom, acid hardy ever, and that the waters of rivers and fountains freeze, the sea does not.

AURUS the philosopher, when I was at Athens, generally entertained me at his house. When evening began, which was there the usual time of supping, the substance and foundation of his meal confisted in one difh of Ægyptian lentil, with a gourd cut very small into it. This being brought and put upon the table, one day when we were waiting and expecting supper, he defired the boy to pour some oil into the difh; this boy was an Athenian lad, better than eight years old, very lively, and full of the spirits natural to his age, and abounding in the wit of his country: he he carelefsly held the empty earthen cruet up to his face, as if oil was in it; he then takes and turns it, and beats it against every part of the dish, but no oil passed; the boy then eyes the cruet in a furious manner, and shaking it with double vialence, turns it upon the difb. When we all by degrees laughed at this, though in a low tone, the boy faid in Greek, and with a good deal of elegance, " Do not laugh, there is oil enough ; but you do not know how cold it was this morning : the oil is congealed by the froft." " Rafcal (favs Taurus, finiling) go this inftant, and fetch fome oil." And when the boy went out to buy oil, he bore the delay without anger. " The difh (fays he) wants oil, and is now in a state of great fermentation; but let us ftop a little, and fince the boy has informed us that oil is accustomed to congeal, let us confider why it is that oil frequently and eafily becomes frozen', and wine fo ·feldom."

• Becomes frozen.]—This curious queftion does not appear to be even yet entirely refolved. It is tolerably well agreed that liquidity depends upon the interpolition of a certain quantity of heat or fire between the component particles of any body, which, when that quantity is withdrawn or leffened, coalefce and become fixed; but why fome Bodies become fixed fooner than others it is not ealy to fay. The gravity of the fluid is not the caufe, as Taurus conjectures; for rectified fpirits of wine, which are lighter than olive oil, can hardly be frozen by any means. Gellius himfelf was, therefore, nearer to the truth. The freezing of the fea in feldom." He addreffed me, defiring my opinion. I replied, "that wine, I fuppofed, lefs eafily congealed, becaufe it contained certain particles of heat, was by nature more fiery, and therefore called by Homer $\alpha 100\pi\alpha$ outor (black wine ') and not, as fome people fuppofed, on account of its colour." "It is," replied Taurus, "as you fay, for it is plain that wine when drank, warms the body; but oil too contains the fame particles of heat, and no lefs power in warming the body; befides, if the warmer things be lefs eafily frozen, it follows that the colder bodies are foonest con-in high latitudes is now fo well known, that we cannot but think it extraordinary to fee the veracity of Herodotus quefitioned upon this point. See my note on that author, b. iv. ch. 28. where I have adduced a paffage of Macrobius, taken in part from this of Gellius, in which that author pretends that it is only the river water flowing into the fea which freezes, not the water of the fea itfelf.

Digitized by Google

* Black wine.]—Erneftus on Homer, Il. i. 462, where this epithet first occurs, calls the interpretation of it by Gellius a false refinement, and afferts, that Homer meant to speak of the deep colour of the wine as a proof of its goodnes. Clarke puts in his note generofum v num, as if he was inclined to adopt the interpretation of Gellius. Riccius, in his s7th Differtation on Homer, fays, "potifimum vero niger color in yino celebratur ab Homero, qui passim assora enver laudat;" but Riccius copied that passage and all that follows it from Feithius, stealing his very words. See Feith. Antiq. Hom. iii. 2. § 3. Now as the name of Feithius does not appear in the preface of Riccius, these thefts, which probably are frequent, cannot well be justified.

Ţ

gealed ;

gealed; but vinegar is of all things the coldeft, and yet never is congealed; is there not then fome cause of quicker coagulation in the lightnefs of oil? for those things appear more prone to coagulation, which are lighter and lefs fubstantial. And (fays he) it is worthy of enquiry, why the waters of rivers and fountains are hardened by the froft, while the whole fea is incongealable? However, Herodotus the historian, contrary to the opinion of all who have examined the fubject, writes, that the Bosphorus or Cimmerian fea, and that whole fea called the Scythian, is coagulated and ftopped up by the froit." While Taurus was speaking, the boy returned, our mess ceased its fermentation, and it began to be time for us to eat and hold our peace.

Снар

CHAP. IX.

Of certain marks of letters found in J. Calar's epiftles; of other fecret fymbols taken from ancient history. Of the Lacedamonian scytale.

THERE is extant a volume of letters from Julius Cafar to Caius Oppius and Balbus Corvinus, who in his absence managed his affairs. In fome of these epiltles, particular letters are found unconnected with fyllables, and placed as you would suppose without any defign, for from these letters no words can be completed; but it was an agreed plan between them fo to change the position of letters, as to give one the place and power of another, while in reading its proper place and power was reftored to each; but the different fubstitution of these letters was, as I faid before, agreed upon by the perfons who ' engaged in this hidden mode of communication. Probus the grammarian has left fome curious observations and comments upon the occult meaning of the letters found in Cæfar's epiftles. The ancient Lacedæmonians, when they wanted to conceal and involve in mystery the public difpatches fent to their generals, left, if intercepted, 2 their their councils might be known to the enemy, wrote their letters in this manner :- there were two thin oblong twigs, cut of an equal length, and trimmed fo as to refemble each other: one was given to the general when he went with the army, another the magistrates kept at home under their authority and feal; when they withed. to carry on a private correspondence, they bound a piece of leather of moderate thickness and fufficient length round the twig, in a regular and fimple manner, fo that the ends of the leather which was bound round the twig met and were joined; within this leather they wrote letters transverily, the lines running from the bottom to the top. This leathern tablet, with its letters thus inferibed, rolled round the twig, they fent to the general who was aware of the device, but the unrolling of the tablet rendered the letters imperfect and mutilated, and divided the parts and heads of them, by which means, if the tablet fell into the hands of the enemy, they could collect nothing from it: but when he to whom it was addreffed received it, applying the fellow twig in his poffeffion to the end of the tablet, according to previous directions, he bound it round, and thus the letters uniting, by means of the fame imprefiion of the twig, were made perfect, and rendered the letter whole, undamaged, and eafy to be read. This kind of epifile the Lacedæmonians called · fcytale. " fcytale⁷. I have read too, in an old hiftory of Carthage, that fome great men there (whether Afdrubal or fome other I do not recollect) adopted this mode of concealing a letter written upon fecret fubjects: he took fome new tablets not yet covered with wax, and cut letters in the wood, then covered them in the ufual way with wax, and fent them, as if not written upon, to his friend, to whom he had given previous intimation of his defign. His friend then rubbed off the wax, and read the letters plainly cut upon the " Scytale.]-The scytale was used on various occasions : we frequently find it mentioned on the recal of Lacedæmonian generals. Nothing can be given more explanatory of the manner of using it than this passage of Gellius; but it may be pleafing to fee his account confirmed by another authority. Plutarch fays, " they command him (Lyfander) home by their fcytale, the nature and use of which was this; when the magistrates gave their commission to any admiral or general, they took two round pieces of wood, both exactly equal in breadth and thickness; one they kept themselves, the other was delivered to their officer; fo that when they had any thing of moment which they would fecretly convey to him, they cut a long narrow scroll of parchment, and rolling it about their own staff, one fold close upon another, they wrote their business on it. When they had written what they had to fay, they took off the parchment and fent it to the general-he applied it to his own staff," &c .- Life of Lyfander. A similar account is given by the Scholiast on Thucydides, i. 131. This very fimple and inartificial mode of concealing their important orders, plainly illustrates the low flate of the arts of ingenuity at Sparta.

wood.

Digitized by Google

wood. There is recorded also in the monuments of Grecian hiftory another scheme, profound indeed, and not to be expected, invented by barbarian cunning. Hiftiæus² was a man of fome distinction, a native of Asia. King Darius at that time ruled over Alia, and this Hiltizeus, when he was in Perfia with Darius, wanted to fend, in a fecret manner, fome private information to one Aristagoras, and he hit upon this extraordinary mode of writing: he shaved off the hair from the head of one of his flaves who had long had bad eyes, as if for the fake of curing him, he then marked the fmooth part of his head with letters, writing there what he wilhed to express. He detained the man at home till his hair grew, and when that was done, he bade him go to Ariftagoras, and, fays he, when you arrive, tell him from • Hiftigues.]—See Herodotus, v. 35, and the note on that paffage in my translation. The anecdote is also related among the firatagems of Polyznus. The firatagem of the veblets would have been more artfully conducted if the contriver had written fomething on them when waved, calculated to miflead, and to prevent all fuspicion of the concealed writing; but the ancients feem to have been so little versed in artifices of this kind, that any fhallow trick would fucceed. Czefar's fecret writing would probably have been very eafy to a modern decypherer. It may, however, be remarked, that Probus the grammarian, here mentioned as explaining those marks, is the first decypherer on record. He left a work also on the abbreviations used by the Romans in inferiptions, which is ftill extant; it may be found in the Authore: kingue Latime.

Digitized by Google

me,

me, to shave your head as I have done; the flave, as was ordered, went to Aristagoras, and delivered his master's message; Aristagoras, thinking fome end was to be answered, did as he was defired, and the letters were discovered.

Снар. Х.

What Favorinus thought of those verses of Virgil, in which he imitates Pindar in his description of the conflagrations of Ætna. The verses of both poets on the same subject weighed and examined.

Remember when the philosopher Favorinus went in the hot weather to the villa of a friend near Antium, and we visited him from Rome, he ' made

It is not eafy to commend the tafte either of Gellius or Favorinus in thefe remarks upon Virgil. Heyne very properly defends his author, and fays, that Favorinus cenfured the poet, ut philofophum magis quam criticum poeticâ elegantiâ imbutum agnofcas. Nam neque Pindarum exprimere, multo minus ad verbum transferre, voluit aut debuit Virgilius, neque lyrico et epico poetæ idem rerum verborumque dilectus effe poteft. Excurf. xv. ad Æn. 3. Scaliger dedicates the chief part of the fourth chapter of his fifth made these observations upon Pindar and Virgil: "The friends and intimates," fays he, "of Virgil, in the records they have left us of his talents and his manners, relate, that he produced his verses as a bear produces her young; for as that beast puts forth her young half-formed and missingen, and then by licking her offspring brings it into form, fo the produce of his genius was at first rude and imperfect, but afterwards, by attention and polishing, he gave it correct and regular features.

fifth book of Poetics to the defence of Virgil againft the objections of Favorinus, into which he enters diffinctly and very much at large. Pontanus had undertaken the fame tafk, but Pontanus is accufed by Scaliger and others of having defended Virgil coldly and inefficiently. It is indeed hardly credible, that any perfon of even a common fhare of tafte fhould read the animated and fublime defcription of Virgil, and confider it as an unfinified paffage, which he had not yet formed into fhape; nor is there certainly any appearance that he had intended to copy Pindar exactly. The extravagant terms of reproach with which the chapter of Gellius ends are as ill placed as they are coarfe and vulgar.

With respect to the anecdote related here, that Virgil ordered his manuscript to be burned, consult Pliny, l. vii. c. 30.

Divus Augustus carmina Virgilii cremari, contra testamenti ejus verecundiam, vetuit.

Servius, in his introduction to the Æneid, relates the fame fact, with this addition, that Augustus ordered Tucca and Varius to correct and examine the manufcript, but to make no additions.

It is necessary to fay, that I have used West's translation of Pindar, and Dryden's of Virgil.

IJ

Vol. III.

" That

"That this was the true remark of a man of excellent judgment, the thing itself plainly proves; for what he has left completed and polished, and what has received the last proof of his correct approbation, abounds in every poetical beauty; but those parts which he put by, for the purpose of future correction (which he could not give them, however, being prevented by death) are by no means worthy of the reputation and tafte of fo elegant a poet. On this account it was, that when, oppressed with disease, he found death approaching, he entreated most earnestly of his friends, that they would destroy the Æneid, becaufe it was not in a fufficiently finished state : but in all his works, that passage appears most to want correction which describes mount Ætna: for as in the defcription of the nature and the flaming of that mountain he aims at rivalling the poetry of the old bard Pindar, he has used expreffions like Pindar's; and though the latter be deemed too bombaftic and fwelling in his ftyle, Virgil is yet more fo. In order, however, that I may make you judges in the matter, I will repeat Pindar's description of mount Ætna, as far as my memory will allow me:

Now under fulph'r'ous Cuma's fea-bound coaft, And vaft Sicilia, lies his fhaggy breaft,

By inowy Æ na, nurle of endless frost,

The pillar'd prop of heaven, for ever prefs'd;

Forth

Forth from whole nitrous caverns isluing rife

Pure liquid fountains of tempestuous fire, And veil in ruddy mists the noon-day skies,

While, rapt in fmoke, the eddying flames expire,

Or, gleaming thro' the night with hideous roar, Far o'er the red'ning main huge rocky fragments pour.

I now fubjoin the lines of Virgil, which are better in the commencement than in the conclufion—

The port, capacious and fecure from wind, Is to the foot of thund'ring Ætna join'd; By turns, a pitchy cloud fhe rolls on high; By turns, hot embers from her entrails fly, And flakes of mounting flames, that lick the fky;

Oft from her bowels maffy rocks are thrown, And, fhivered by the force, come piece-meal down;

Oft liquid lakes of burning fulphur flow, Fed from the fiery fprings that boil below.

Now (fays he) in the first place, Pindar has been more attentive to truth. He defcribed the thing as it was, and as it ufually appeared, and as he faw it with his eyes: by day, Ætna vomited fmoke, by night, fire. But Virgil, while he is labouring for grand and fonorous words, confounds times and feafons without difcretion. U_2 The

The Greek, imitating the pouring out of fountains of fire and streams of smoke, and the dark and fpiral volumes of flame rushing into the fea. has beautifully represented them as fiery inakes; but Virgil, withing to express the 'poor xanvsai- $\theta_{\omega\nu\alpha}$, has clumfily and extravagantly called it atram nubem turbine piceo et favilla fumantem. and has harfhly and without fkill translated xparas, globos flammarum. When he fays, fidera lambit, he makes an addition, without increasing the force; and this too is unintelligible, and altogether inexplicable, that he should fay of a black cloud fumare turbine picea et candente favillà (that it fmokes with a pitchy whirlwind and fhining ashes) for things white are not wont to smoke or to be fhining, unlefs any one should use candenti vulgarly and improperly in the fenfe of boiling, instead of fiery and shining; for candens is derived from candor, not calor. But when he talks of scopulos eructari, of rocks belching and lifting themfelves, then being melted, and groaning, and rolled in the air, this is what Pindar never wrote, and what no man ever thought of, and is of all abfurdities the most monstrous."

CHAP.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. XI.

That Plutarch, in his Sympofiacs, defended the opinion of Plato, relative to the ftrusture and use of the sophagus' or gullet, and of the canal which is called the trachsea arteria, or windpipe, against Erasisfratus the physician, using the authority of the ancient physician Hippocrates.

PLUTARCH and other learned men have observed, that Plato was reproved by Erafistratus, a noble physician, for afferting that what we drink first went into the lungs, and having fufficiently mossified them, passed through numerous channels, and flowed to the bladder; and that Alcæus was the author of this error.

Eralistratus fays there are two little canals or pipes going from the back part of the mouth downwards; that through one of them³, whatever

* Efophagus.]—The word rouaxe, whence the Latin ftomachus, is used by the old Greek writers for any narrow paffage^oor channel leading to a cavity. Hippocrates calls the neck of the bladder and of the uterus flomachos, but it is now confined to the æfophagus or gullet, which leads from the mouth to the ventriculus or flomach, properly fo called.

• Of them.]—The upper part of the gullet, which expands into a wide pouch, is called the pharynx. The food and drink ever we eat or drink is carried first into the gullet, whence it defcends into the ftomach, where it is altered and digested, and that the drier excrementitious portion paffes from thence to the bowels, the moifter by the kidnies to the bladder; and that through the other channel, which is called the trachæa arteria, the air paffes into the lungs, and back again through the noftrils and mouth; through this pipe alfo there is a paffage for the voice; and left the meat and drink, which are intended to go into the ftomach, should fall from the mouth, and slip into the channel through which we breathe, and by injuring it occasion the passage for the air to be ftopped, nature has placed, at the orifice of the two paffages, a moveable valve, called the epiglottis 3, which opens and shuts alternately. This valve, while we are eating or drinking, covers and defends the windpipe, left any part of our food should slip into it and suffocate us; no moifture therefore can pass into the lungs, the orifice of the windpipe being covered. And this is the opinion of Eralistratus the physician against Plato; but Plutarch, in his Sympofiacs, fays, that first enter the pharynx, and thence defcend through the zfophagus or gullet to the stomach.

firit

³ Epiglottis.]—This is one of the five cartilages that compose the larynx or upper part of the trachæa arteria; it covers the glottis or chink through which the air passes in refpiration, and, besides the uses here assigned it, affists in modulating the voice in finging, speaking, &c.

3

Hippocrates

Hippocrates was the author of the opinion which is attributed to Plato. The fame doctrine was alfo taught, he adds, by Philiftion of Locris, and by Dioxippus the disciple of Hippocrates, two ancient and noble phyficians; they taught that the epiglottis, which Erafistratus mentions, is not placed at the mouth of the windpipe, totally to exclude every part of what we drink from paffing that way, for a certain portion of fluid feems neceffary to moiften and nourifh the lungs⁴, but to act as a barrier, prohibiting every thing from entering that way which might be neceffary for the fupport of the body; thus all the folid part of our aliment is prevented from entering the windpipe, and compelled to defcend by the gullet, but the fluid is divided, and part of it admitted into the lungs, and part into the ftomach; and the portion that is permitted to pass through the

• The lungs.]—This opinion, that part of what we drink defcends into the lungs for the purpofe of moiftening and fupporting them, which was held by Hippocrates and other ancient phyficians, is known to be erroneous, as the membrane that lines the trachea arteria is fo delicate, that wine or any irritating liquor falling upon it occcafions the moft violent coughing, and even endangers fuffocation; it is alfo unneceffary, nature having furnifhed the inner furtace of the bronchia, or air-veffels of the lungs, in common with every other cavity or hollow part of the body, with innumerable pores or orifices, which are constantly breathing out a moifture to prevent the cavities becoming dry and coalefcing, or their being injured by friction, or rubbing upon one another.

U 4

Digitized by Google

windpipe

windpipe into the lungs is not allowed to defcend rapidly and at once, but flowly and gradually, and the remainder is turned into the paffage leading to the ftomach.

CHAP. XII.

Of those subjects called by the Greeks adoxs, disputed by Favorinus for the sake of exercise.

N OT only the fophifts of antiquity but even philosophers aimed at paradoxical fayings, which the Greeks call ατοπυς και αδοξυς υποθεσεις ', and

• Adožes, imoScouss.]—Certain modern writers of Latin have been much addicted to this species of exercise for their ingenuity. There is a volume printed in Holland, which contains the praise of a flea, by Cælius Calcagninus; of a louse, by Daniel Heinss; of the gout, by Cardan and Birckheimer; of the quartan fever, the very subject of Favorinus, by Menapius; also of blindness, mud, smoke, an ass, an ews, deassing, and darkness, by various other learned men. The author who wrote on the quartan fever copies the passage of Gellius at the end of this chapter, but without acknowledgment; he quotes the same Greek verse, adding, quod fic à quibusdam vertitur:

I_I fa ies quandoque parens quandoque noverca est. Quid est ergo, quod miserè afflictemur, aut quod impotentes feramus and even Favorinus himfelf often fpoke in these paradoxes, either thinking them fit fubjects for the exercise of his genius, or because he chose to practife fubtleties and fubdue difficulties by ufe. When he laboured to find fome praise for Therfites, and pronounced a panegyric upon a fourthday fever, he certainly difplayed wit, and no common ingenuity, upon each of these occasions, and has recorded what he faid in his books; but he produces Plato as a voucher for his praises of fever, who advances, as Favorinus reports, " that he who after a fourth-day fever has recovered his ftrength will thenceforward enjoy ftronger and more conftant health." On this fubject the following fentiment contains a witty and not inelegant turn; this line, fays he, is established by the approbation of ages :---

One day is like a mother bland and kind, The next a furly ftepmother you'll find.

feramus cafum febris quartanæ? quum numeros dierum infelicium et malorum fuperetur à felicium et bonorum, et inter quofque paroxyfmos intervallum quietis toto biduo continuatæ interveniat." This is faid with much lefs ingenuity and point than it ftands in Gellius.

Aλλοτι μητρυιη.]-This verfe is in Hefiod. Εργ. κ. Ημ. v. 825. Apostolius has it as a proverb, Cent. ii. § 56. who only fays upon it, ιπι των ποτε ευημερώττων αλλοτε δε δυσημεgurtur, " on those who fometimes have good and fometimes bad days." Erasmus also has it, but does not particularly illustrate it.

The

[«] Αλλοτε μητρυιη ² πελει ήμερα αλλοτε μητηρ.»

. 298

The meaning of this is, that every day cannot be fair, but that one is fair and another otherwife; and as it happens in human affairs, that things are alternately good and bad, how much more fortunate is that fever in which two good days intervene, and there is but one stepmother to two mothers.

CHAP. XIII.

The particle quin, how many and what are its significations. Often used with obscurity by the ancients.

THE particle quin, which grammarians call a conjunction, feems to connect a fentence by various means: one while it is ufed when we fpeak, as it were, chiding, or afking a queftion, or exhorting, as quin venis? (but do you come?) quin legis? (but do you read?) quin fugis? (but do you fly?) it has another meaning when we affirm a thing, as, there is no doubt (quin) but Marcus Tullius is the most eloquent of all men; and it has yet another meaning, when we fo compound it, as that it appears contrary trary to what was before faid, as, " Ifocrates did not therefore refuse to plead, because he did not think it useful and honourable (quin id utile & honeftum exiftimarit.)" 'A fimilar inftance of this occurs in the third origin of Marcus Cato: " haud cos co postremum scribo, quin populi & boni & ftrenui fient; I do not mention them last, because they are not a refpectable and a ftrong people." Marcus Cato too, in his fecond Origin, has ufed this particle in a fimilar manner: " Neque fatis habuit, quod eum in occulto vitiaverit, quin eius famam proftitueret; nor was he content with privately calumniating him, fo as not to defame his reputation openly." Moreover, I observe that Quadrigarius, in the eighth book of his Annals, has used this particle with great obscurity; I quote his words: " He came to Rome, vix fuperat, quin triumphus decernatur : he fcarce prevails that a triumph fhould not be decreed." In the fixth of the Annals too is this passage: " pene factum esse quin castra relinque-'rent, atque cederent hofti; it was within a little that they did not leave their camp and yield to the enemy." I am aware that any one may fay, and fay truly, that there is no difficulty in the application of this word, for quin is every where put for ut, and this is plain, if you only fay. " Romam venit, vix superat, ut triumphus decernatur:" fo in the other passage, pene factum effe ut castra, &c. They indeed who are fo Vot. III. UĹ quick quick and ready, may adopt this commutation of words which they do not underftand, yet let them do it, when the occafion permits, with modefty. No man, however, will underftand the fignifications and different powers of this particle, unlefs he know that it is a compound and copulative one', and that it not only has the power of uniting, but of adding a certain fignification. All this, which would be the fubject of too long a differtation, he who has leifure may find in the grammatical commentaries of Publius Nigidius.

Digitized by Google

* Copulative one.]-Gellius does not explain himfelf, but there can be no doubt but that he must mean that quin is a word compounded of qui and ne, as other grammarians explain it. Thus Voffius in his Etymology fays, quin, xar' arexonne, ex quine, ut seu ex sive. Quine autem ex qui et ne pro non. Sane qui aut quin taces, quin domum is, quid aliud dicit quam qui non taces, vel qui non domum abis? atque hic quidem est adverbium jubentis vel hortantis; ac par ratio cum est conjunctio, nam cum dico non dubito quin fit vesturus, idem est ac qui five quomode non fit venturus, i. e. "quin is made by apocope from quine, as feu from five: but quine is composed of qui and ne, for not. Thus, whoever fays, quin taces? quin domum is? what does he fay, but why are you not filent? why do you not go home? In this fense quin is an adverb of command or exhortation. The interpretation is the fame when it is a conjunction : for when I fay, I do not doubt, quin fit wenturus, it is the fame as if I were to fay, I do not fuspect that or how he should not come." Gellius therefore is justified in wondering how quin could be substituted for ut.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIV.

Select and elegant fentences from the Mimes of Publius'.

PUBLIUS was an author of Mimes, and was effecemed fuperior to Laberius. The feverity and arrogance of Laberius fo difgufted Caius Cæfar, that he profeffed to approve of the Mimes of Publius, in preference to those of Laberius. The fentiments of this Publius are for Publius.]-This was Publius Syrus, from whole Mimes more good and useful fentences are still preferved than can be found in all the dramatic poets extant. He has had the honour of being strongly praifed by Seneca, in whose works very many of his fentences are preferved. He fays, "How many of the most eloquent verses are hidden in the Mimes? How many of those of Publius are fitter for the buskin than the flipper?" Epift. 8. In another paffage he fays, " Publius, fuperior in genius both to tragic and comic writers, whenever he gives up the follies of the Mimes, and that language which is directed to the upper gallery, writes many things not only above that species of writing, but worthy of the tragic bulkin." The fentences of this author have been collected alphabetically into a most valuable volume, and illustrated by excellent notes, full of parallel paffages from ancient writers, by Janus Gruter. The collection confifts of 852 fentences, all iambics, and all of this proverbial kind. Some among them are however attributed to Seneça himfelf, and fome to other writers. the the most part elegantly expressed, and well adapted to common discourse. Some of these are comprized in single lines, which I have thought proper to subjoin :

Tis a bad fcheme, which cannot bear a change. Who gives to worth, receives a benefit. Bear without murmurs what you cannot fhun. He who hath too much power will ufe it ill. A gay companion is a vehicle. Of all good names, frugality's the worft. Heirs have a weeping eye and merry heart. Patience too oft provoked becomes dire rage. The fool blames Neptune and yet goes to fea. So deal with friends as tho' they might be foes. Who bears one infult but invites another. By too much logic truth is often loft. Who handfomely denies half grants your fuit.

Снар.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. XV.

Carneades the academic purified him/elf by bellebore, when about to write against the dogmas of Zeno. Of the nature and healing powers of white and black hellebore.

CARNEADES the academic being about to write againft Zeno the ftoic, cleanfed his body with white hellebore, left any of the corrupt humours of the ftomach fhould fly up into the head, and weaken the powers of the mind; with fuch care and preparation did this man of the moft fhining talents proceed to refute the opinions of Zeno. When I tead this circumftance in Greek, about the white hellebore, I enquired what it was: I then found that there were two forts of hellebore', very different in their colours,

* Two forts of hellebore.]—There are ftill two plants known to the modern botanifts by the names of white and black hellebore; but fo imperfect are the defcriptions left by the ancients, even of the plants most highly esteemed by their physicians, that it is not possible to determine whether either of those which now bear the name corresponds with those to which they gave it. Of the black hellebore, an eminent botanist fays, "whether our hellebore be the same species as that faid to grow in the island of Anticyra, and about lours, white and black; but this diffinction of colours is not perceptible in the feed, nor in the plants, but in the root. The ftomach and upper belly is purged by the white, in the about mount Olympus, fo frequently alluded to by the Latin poets, is no eafy matter to determine. From the accounts of Tournefort and Bellonius, who botanized these places, a fpecies of this plant was found in great plenty, which the former fuppofes to be the hellebore of Hippocrates. It differs from the species known to us by having a large branched stem, and also by its effects, for he found that a fcruple of the extract brought on violent spaims and convulfions." Wood ville's Medical Botany .- We are told alfo by the fame author: " It feems to have been principally from its purgative quality that the ancients effeemed this root fuch a powerful remedy in maniacal diforders, with a view to evacuate the atra bilis, from which these mental diseases were fupposed to be produced; but though evacuations be often found necessary in various cases of alienations of mind, yet, as they can be procured with more certainty and fafety by other medicines, this catholicon of the ancients is now almost entirely abandoned." The white hellebore belongs to quite a diffinct genus of plants from the black, according to the Linnæan fystem, and is also called veratrum. The identity of this plant with the ancient is no lefs doubtful than that of the former, or perhaps even more fo. The application, therefore, of what was faid of the hellebores of the Greeks, to those known to us, can only be admitted as a matter of probability. The effects of the white hellebore also are so violent and deleterious, that few modern phyficians venture upon the use of it. Both kinds were faid to grow at Anticyra; but the black was more commonly employed, as accounted fafer; but when Hippocrates mentions hellebore fimply, without an epithet, he means the white.

form

form of emetics; by the black, the inteffines or lower venter is purged; but both have the power of expelling those noxious humours which are caufes of difeafe : there is however fome danger, left in deftroying these causes of disease, the principle of life too should be destroyed, and left by . opening every paffage through the body, the man, exhausted from the want of support from nourishment, should perish. But Pliny the elder relates, in his Natural Hiftory, that hellebore may be taken with great fafety in the island of Anticvra²; for when Livius Drufus, tribune of the people, laboured under that diforder which is called the falling-fickness, Pliny fays that he failed to Anticyra, and there drank hellebore, and was cured. Besides, we read that the Gauls, in hunting, dipped their arrows in hellebore, becaufe animals fo killed are more tender food; but from the contagion of the hellebore, the wounds made by their arrows are faid to spread farther than ufual.

* Anticyra.]—The passages of Horace, in which Anticyra is mentioned, are universally known: they all imply that the person concerning whom it is mentioned requires some process to cure him of infanity.

Paulanias, Strabo, and Pliny, differ about the geographical polition of Anticyra. See Paulanias, Phoc. c. 36.— Strabo, l. 9.—Pliny, l. 25. c. 5.

Vol. III.

Снар.

CHAP. XVI.

The ducks of Pontus had the power of expelling poison. King Mithridates's knowledge in antidotes of this kind.

I T is faid of the ducks bred in Pontus, that they live generally upon poifon. Lenzeus, a freedman of Cnzeus Pompey, records, that Mithridates king of Pontus, who was very experienced in phyfic and in medicines of this fort, was accuftomed to mix' the blood of these ducks with ¹ To mix.]—This quality of the blood of Pontic ducks. is mentioned alfo by Pliny, Nat. Hift. xxix. 5. by Diofcorides, and Scribonias Largus, and the application of it by Pliny, xxv. 2. Many receipts have been left by the ancients as the famous antidote of Mithridates, but from their entire difagreement concerning the materials, and the total inefficacy of most of the compositions with respect to the consequences afcribed to them, we may naturally suppose, either that the whole story is fabulous, which it feems to be, or that his receipt remained a fecret with himself. Serenus Sammonius fays it was found when his papers were feized by Pompey, and was fo simple that the conqueror laughed at it.

Bis denas rutæ frondes, falis et breve granum,

Juglandesque duas totidem cum corpore ficus.

Twenty leaves of rue, a little falt, two walnuts, and two figs. This with drugs, which operate as an antidote to poifon; and their blood, he adds, is extremely powerful in effecting this. "The king himfelf," he fays, "by the perpetual application of fuch medicines, was guarded against the fnares laid for him at entertainments; nay, he even knowingly, and to make experiment of fome violent and rapid poifon, often drank it off, and without injury; wherefore, when he was conquered by the Roman people in battle, and fled to the farthest part of his kingdom, having determined to die, and tried to destroy himfelf, but in vain, by means of the strongest poifons, he fell upon his fword. The celebrated antidote, mithridatics, is named after this king."

This mixture he took every morning with a little wine. Pompey might well laugh were this true, and his phyfician would have laughed fill more. Much about Lenzus and Mithridates may be found in Pliny's Nat. Hift. xxv. 2. He calls him Pompeius Lenzus.

X 2

Снар.

JOB THE ATTIC NIGHTS

CHAP. XVII.

Mitbridates, king of Pontus, Spoke the language of twenty-two nations. Quintus Ennius Said of himself, that he had three hearts, hecause he understood Greek, Oscan, and Latin.

QUINTUS ENNIUS faid he had three hearts', becaufe he underftood the Greek, the Ofcan, and the Latin languages; but Mithridates, the famous king of Pontus and Bithynia, who was overcome by Cnæus Pompey, underftood the languages of twenty-two nations that were under his government, and converfed with perfons of all these nations without an interpreter; and when he spoke to any of them, he used their language with as much propriety as if it had been his own.

• Tria corda.]—Hieronymus Columna, the author of the Life of Ennius, prefixed to the edition of his fragments, repeating this account, adds, " refpiciens fortaffe ad tri-corporis Geryonis figmentum, qui à plerifque fophifta trium linguarum peritià infignis fuiffe perhibetur," " alluding perhaps to the fable of the threefold Geryon, who is by many related to have been a fophift fkilled in three languages." The conjecture is foolifh enough, and the interpretation of the fable not very probable.

Снар.

Digitized by GOOGLE

Снар. XVIII.

Marcus Varro relates that Sallust the historian was taken in adultery by Annæus Milo, beaten with rods, and dismissed on paying a fine '.

MARCUS VARRO, a man of great authority and weight in his writings and life, in his publication, intituled, "Pius," or "de Pace," records that Caius Salluft, the author of that grave and ferious composition, in which he

* There is very strong evidence that Sallust, notwithstanding the affectation of feverity in his writings, was a man of a very diffolute life. For this adultery, which was with the daughter of Sylla, and various other exploits of a fimilar kind, he was expelled from the fenate, in the year of Rome 703 or 4, by the cenfors Appius Claudius Pulcher and Lucius Calpurnius Pifo; but Julius Cæfar was his friend, and pro-Dably affociate in his debaucheries; by him he was made quæftor the year following, and reftored to fenatorial dignity. One of the evidences against him is the ancient Scholiast on Horace, 1 fat. ii. 41. Lenzus, mentioned in chap. 16. attacked him violently, for having in his writings given a bad character of Pompey, the patron of that author ; he called him lastaurum, et lurconem, et nebulonem, popinonemque-a debauchee, a glutton, a knave, and a fot. See Suetonius de Illust. Gram. c. 15, where he gives an account of Lenæus.

Lactantius has this expression concerning Sallust :

Quod quidem non fugit hominem nequam Sallussium, qui ait, &c. "Sed omnis nostra vis in animo et corpore sita est, animi imperio corporis servitio magis utemur." Recte si ita vixisset ut locutus est; servivit enim sœdissimis voluptatibus.

Yol, III,

X 3

has

has exercifed the feverity of the centorial office , in taking cognizance of crimes, being taken by Annæus Milo in adultery, was well fcourged, and, after paying a fum of money, difmiffed.

* Cenforial office.]—Notiones cenforias exerceri. — The word notio is formally applied to the cognizance taken by cenfors, and exerceri alfo is a term of authority.

CHAP. XIX.

What Epistetus was accustomed to say to those who with debauched and vicious babits attached themselves to philosophy. Two salutary words, the use of which be recommended.

I Heard Favorinus fay, that Epictetus the philofopher remarked, that most of those who profess to be philosophers were of this cast, are rs mearrent $\mu e \chi e^{i}$ rs $\lambda e \gamma e iv$, philosophers as to precept, but without practice; but that is a more fevere remark which Arrian, in his books upon the Differtations of Epictetus, fays he used to make, and which he has left us there in writing. When he faw a man without shame, perfevering in wickedness, impudent in his vices, and haughty in his language, and at the fame time attending to the study and pursuit of philosophy, an observer of nature, a logician, one who balanced theorems and folved problems, he would not not only exclaim aloud, but to his exclamations would often add thefe reproofs: " Oh man! whither are you cafting these things; confider whether the veffel be clean'; for if you throw them where there is nothing to receive them, they are loft; if they are fuffered to putrify they become urine, or vinegar, or fomething worfe." Certainly nothing can be more fevere or more true than the words in which this greatest of all philofophers defcribed learning and philofophy falling upon a base and degenerate man, as into a dirty and polluted veffel, and becoming changed and corrupted, and as he more forcibly expresses it, being turned into urine, or any thing more The fame Epictetus, as I have heard filthy. from Favorinus, used to fay there were two vices grievous and fhocking above all the reft, namely, want of patience and want of continence; when we cannot endure evils which ought to be borne, nor refrain from pleasures which we ought to refift: " therefore," fays he, " whoever remembers these two words, and takes care to regulate himfelf by them, will be for the most part irreproachable, and will lead a The two words are, ' bear, very quiet life. and forbear'."

¹ Veffel be clean.]—There is a striking refemblance between this passage and our Saviour's reproach to the Phanisees, of making clean the outside of the cup, while the infide of the man's heart was neglected.

X 4

Снар.

CHAP. XX.

Words taken from the Symposium of Plato, which in their numbers and connections are skilfully, barmoniously, and fitly composed, for the sake of exercise, imitated in Latin¹.

THE Symposium of Plato was read before the philosopher Taurus. In it are the words of Pausanias, pronouncing, among the other guests, in his turn, the praise of love I admired the lines fo much that I resolved to ² There is fomething in the title of this chapter, as it flands in the best editions, certainly quite inconfistent with the extreme modefty of the author, expressed at the latter end of the chapter. This is very justly obferved by Oifelius, though Gronovius, who feems to feize every poffible opportunity of centuring that commentator, pretends to deny it. Oifelius would omit the whole title as fpurious; but there is a much easier remedy, that of inferting a fingle word. This not only removes the objection, but renders the construction more natural and perfect. This word is composita, or fomething equivalent, to be inferted after apteque; it will then run thus : verba sumpta ex Symposto Platonis, numeris coagmentisque verborum scite modulateque apteque composita, exercendi gratia in Latinam orationem versa. Scite modulateque et apte is the reading of the early editions. The common reading makes Gellius fay, that they are here skipfully, harmoniously, and fitly translated by himself. I have given the title according to the conjectural reading.

remember

3

remember them, and they are, if I miltake not, as follows: " Every action is of fuch a nature that in itfelf it is neither good nor bad; fuch as for inftance to drink, or to fpeak, or to argue, as we are now doing; not one of these things is in itfelf honourable, but becomes fo by the manner in which it is done; a thing well done becomes a good and honourable action, one not well done a base action. So it is of love; for every kind of love is not honourable, or worthy of commendation; but he is fo who directs his attachment properly." When these words were read, Taurus faid to me, "Here, you rhetorician (for fo he called me when I was first received into the class. thinking that I came to Athens only to puzzle myself about rhetoric) do you observe this sentence, how full of meaning, how luminous, and connected it is, and comprised in certain short yet complete terms, coming round to the point whence they started ? Can you produce from any of your orators a fpeech fo happily, fo harmonioufly put together? But the elegance of the ftyle I suppose you confider but as a secondary object; for we are to make our way into the very depths of Plato's mind, progreffively to advance to the height of the grandeur of his fentiments; we are not to turn ourfelves out of the way, to enjoy the pleafant flow of his style, and the choice elegance of his expressions." This admonition of Taurus, upon the harmonious periods of Plato VOL. III. X 5 not not only did not check, but encouraged us in aiming to transfer the elegance of the Greek into Latin terms; and as fome little vile animals are prone through petulance to imitate what they hear and see, so did we express our admiration of Plato's writings, which we attempted not to rival, but as it were to make draughts and copies of it, fuch as this, which we formed from those " Every act," fays he, " is of fuch very words. a nature, that in itself it is neither good nor bad : as what we are now doing, viz. drinking, finging, difputing; for as no one of these actions is in itself honourable, but becomes fo by the manner in which it is done, an action rightly and honourably done becomes a good action, if ill done, an Thus it is with love; for not every evil one. kind of love is honourable or worthy of commendation, but that which disposes us to love honourably."

Сндр.

CHAP. XXI.

At what times, between the building of Rome and the fecond Punic war, the celebrated Greeks and Romans flourisched.

IN order that I might have fome knowledge of ancient times, and illustrious characters in those ages, left perchance I should in discourse make fome observation upon the age and life of some of these great men, like that ignorant sophist who lately proclaimed aloud, that the philosopher Carneades was presented with a sum of money by Alexander the son of Philip, and that Panætius the stoic lived with the elder Scipio; to guard

¹ This chapter, containing fo many fynchronifms of Greek and Roman hiftory, is of very great importance, but like other chronological matters is attended with difficulties in particular parts. In feveral inflances, Gellius will be found to be miftaken in feveral years of calculation; in others, his positions are at least disputable. We may always in such sufficients fulpect the errors of transcribers in writing figures as among the causes of disagreement. It would be difficult, and a subject for a very long work, to discuss the particulars of all these points, but by comparing the coincidences with the tables of the best chronologers, it will easily be seen that Gellius does not always agree with those who are considered as the best authorities, myfelf

Digitized by Google

myfelf therefore from thus confounding ages and times. I made fome extracts from the books called Chronicles, treating of those times, in which Grecian and Roman characters, diftinguifhed by their talents or their power, flourished, from the building of Rome to the fecond Punic war. These extracts, which were made upon different occasions, I have reduced to fome fort of order : nor was it my object, with accurate care and attention to compose a catalogue of illustrious contemporaries in the two nations, but that these Attic Nights might be forinkled here and there agreeably with these flowers of history. In this account I have thought it fufficient to speak of the times in which a few of these characters existed, from whose dates it will not be difficult to guess at the periods of those who are not here mentioned. I shall begin with the famous Solon, fince, with regard to Homer and Hefiod, it is plainly, the opinion of all writers that they lived either at the fame time, or that Homer was rather the more ancient. but that both lived before Rome was built, while the Silvii were masters of Alba, about 160 years after the Trojan war, according to Caffius's Annals, in the first of which he speaks of Homer and Hefiod, and about 160 years before the building of Rome, as Cornelius Nepos fays, in his first Chronicle, of Homer. We learn that Solon, one of the celebrated wife men, wrote the Athenian Athenian laws in the thirty-third year of the reign of Tarquinius Priscus, king of Rome; but Pilistratus was the tyrant of Athens when Servius Tullius reigned, before which time Solon went into voluntary banishment, because no credit was given to him when he foretold the tyranny of Pifistratus. After this, Pythagoras the Samian came into Italy, in the reign of Tarquin's fon, firnamed Superbus; and at the fame time Hipparchus, the fon of Pififtratus, the brother of Hippias the tyrant, was flain at Athens by Harmodius and Aristogiton. Cornelius Nepos fays, that Archilochus began just then to be celebrated for his poetry, when Tullus Hoftilius was upon the throne. It is recorded, that in the 260th year after that, or not much more, the Persians were routed by the Athenians in the famous battle of Marathon, under Miltiades, who after that victory was condemned by the people' of Athens, and died in prifon. Then flourished at Athens Æschylus, the celebrated writer of tragedies. About this time, at Rome, the people created for themfelves, by an infurrection, tribunes and ædiles; and not long after, Caius Martins. Coriolanus, being thwarted and irritated by the tribunes of the people, went over from the republic to their enemies the Volscians, and made war upon the Romans. A few years after this, Xerxes was routed by the Athenians and the greater part of Greece, under the conduct of Themistocles.

ţ.

Themistocles, in a naval engagement, and put to flight, near Salamis; and four years after this, in the confulship of Menenius Agrippa and Marcus Horatius Pulvillus, in the war against the Veientes, 360 Romans of rank, with their families, were furrounded by the enemy near the river Cremera, and were cut off. Near this time. Empedocles, of Agrigentum, became celebrated as a natural philosopher; at the same time it appears, the decemviri were appointed to draw up a code of laws, by whom ten tablets were first completed, and afterwards two more added. Then began the Peloponnesian war in Greece, of which Thucydides has written the hiftory; it began about 323 years after the building of Rome, at which time Aulus Posthumius Torquatus was dictator, who beheaded his fon for engaging the enemy contrary to his orders. The Fidenates were then at war with the Romans. The characters diftinguished in those times were, Sophocles and Euripides as tragic poets, Hippocrates as a physician, and Democritus a philosopher; to these, Socrates the Athenian fucceeded, fomewhat younger, but who lived in part of their time. From this period, when the military tribunes governed the Roman republic, to the year of the building of the city 347, the thirty tyrants were placed by the Spartans over the Athenians; and a few years after, Socrates was condemned to death at Athens, and killed by.

by poifon in prifon. Near that time Marcus Furius Camillus was dictator at Rome, and overcame the Veii. Not long after happened the war of the Senones, in which the Gauls took the whole of Rome, except the capitol; and foon after that, Eudoxus the astrologer was celebrated in Greece, and the Lacedæmonians were conquered by the Athenians, under Phormio, at Co-At this time, Marcus Manlius, who had rinth. prevented the Gauls in their attack from fcaling the capitol, was convicted of an intention to feize upon the government, and being condemned, was, as Varro relates, thrown headlong from the Tarpeian rock, or, as Cornelius Nepos affirms, fcourged to death. In the feventh year after the recovery of the city, it is recorded, that Aristotle the philosopher was born. A few years after the war with the Senones, the Thebans, commanded by Epaminondas, overcame the Lacedæmonians at Leuctria; and a short time after that, by the law of Licinius Stolo, confuls were chosen at Rome from the people, whereas before it had not been legal for any perfon, unlefs of patrician rank, to be conful. In about the 400th year from the building of the city, Philip, the fon of Amyntas, and father of Alexander, role to the throne of Macedon, at which time Alexander was A few years after this, the philosopher born. Plato visited Dionysius, the last tyrant of Sicily ; and a little time after, Philip defeated the Athenians nians in a great battle at Cheronea, from which battle Demosthenes fought fafety by flight, and when he was reproached for this difgraceful flight, he replied in the following well-known verfe:

> He who fights and runs away, May live to fight another day.

Philip after this is flain by a confpiracy, and Alexander, fucceeding to the government, paffed over into Afia and the Eaft to fubdue the Perfians. Another Alexander, whole firname was Moloffus, came into Italy to make war upon the Romans; for now the reputation and the valour of the Roman nation began to grow illustrious among foreign people; but he died before the war began. We are told that this Moloffus, when he came into Italy, faid he invaded the Romans as a nation of men, while the Macedonian Alexander went to the Persians as to a nation of women. Soon after, Alexander of Macedon, having fubdued great part of the East, and reigned eleven years, died; and not long fubfequent to that, died the philosopher Aristotle, and then Demosthenes. About this time the Romans were engaged in a difastrous and protracted war with the Samnites, and the confuls Titus Veturius and Spurius Posthumius, in an unlucky fituation at Caudium, were furrounded by the Samnites, and being compelled to pafs under the yoke, departed under the ftigma of a difgraceful treaty.

After

Digitized by Google

AULUS GELLIUS. DF 121

After nearly the 470th year from the foundation of the city, war was begun with king Pyrrhus; at that time Epicurus the Athenian, and Zeno the Citian, philosophers, were in repute; then Caius Fabricius Luscinus and Ouintus Æmilius Papus were cenfors at Rome, and removed Publius Cornelius Rufinus from the fenatorial order, and they affigned as a caufe for thus difgracing him, that they had found him uling ten pounds of plate at an entertainment. In the 490th year from the building of Rome, Appius, firnamed Caudex, the brother of Appius Cæcus, and Marcus Fulvius Flaccus, being confuls, the first Punic war was begun; and not long after. Callimachus, the poet of Cyrene, in Alexandria, was in reputation in the court of king Ptolemy. Rather more than twenty years after this, peace being made with the Carthaginians, in the confulate of Claudius Cento, the fon of Appius Cæcus, and Marcus Sempronius Tuditanus, Lucius Livius, first began to exhibit plays at Rome, 160 years after the death of Sophocles and Euripides, and about 52 years after the death of Menander. Quintus Valerius and Caius Manilius fucceeded Claudius and Tuditanus, and in their confulship, Varro relates, in his first Treatife on the Poets, that Quintus Ennius the poet was born, who in his 60th year wrote his twelfth book of Annals, which Ennius himfelf speaks of in that book. Five hundred and nineteen years after

VOL. III.

Y

after the building of the city, Spurius Cervilius Rug1, by the advice of his friends, was the first perfon who divorced his wife becauffe fhe was barren, fwearing before the cenfors, that he married for the purpole of having children. In the fame year, the poet Nævius exhibited plays, whom Marcus Varro, in his first Treatife on the Poets, fays, ferved in the first Punic war, which Nævius himfelf fays in the poem he wrote on that war; but Servius affirms that Portius Licinius was the first poet at Rome; he fpeaks of him in these lines—

When Rome with Carthage waged her fecond fight,

The Roman Muse first ventur'd on her flight.

About fifteen years after, war was commenced against the Carthaginians, and not very long after, Marcus Cato flourished as an orator, and Plautuz as a dramatic poet. At this time Diogenes the Stoic, and Carneades the academic, and Critolaus the peripatetic, were fent to Rome by the Athenians to transact public business with the senate. A little time after, Quintus Ennius flourished, and then Cæcilius Terence, after that Pacuvius, in whose old age, Accius, and then Lucilius, yet more famous for his fatires on the works of others: but we are proceeding too far, having fixed as the boundary to our observations the second Punic war.

BOOK

BOOK XVIII.

CHAP. I.

Disputations between a floic and a peripatetic philosopher, Favorinus being arbiter, in which they enquire bow far virtue avails to make life bappy, and bow far bappiness consists in those objects which are called extraneous.

HERE were at Rome two friends of Favorinus, philosophers of some note, one a follower of the peripatetic doctrine, the other a ftoic. I was once present at a dispute between these men, carried on with much pertinacity, when we were guests of Favorinus, at Oftia. We were walking on the shore, towards evening, in the fpring: here the ftoic affirmed that the life of man could be rendered happy by virtue alone, and perfectly miferable only by wickednefs, although every corporal, or, as it is called, external good, should be wanting to the virtuous man, and poffeffed by the wicked. The peripatetic on the other hand allowed that life could only be be made miferable by vice and wickednefs, but he by no means thought that virtue alone was fufficient to render life completely happy, fince the poffeffion of our proper limbs, health, a good perfon, an eftate, a good character, and other things relating to the body, as well as the goods of fortune, appeared neceffary to the perfection of happinefs'. Here the ftoic loudly replied, exprefing

Y 4

* Neceffary to the perfection of bappines.]—Martial's defeription of a happy life, in his celebrated epigram, "Vitam quæ faciunt beatiorem," l. x. ep. 47. enumerates nearly the fame particulars as are here faid to be required by the Peripatetics. This epigram has frequently been imitated in English. By Cowley, very coarfely and carelessly, near the end of his Discourses, by way of Essay, in worse and profe : and no better by Fenton, in Nicboll's Collection of Poems, vol. iv. p. 58.—The following much neater version is by an anonymous writer in the fame volume, p. 115.

To enjoy your life in happines, My friend, the ways and means are thefe: Descended wealth. 2 fruitful farm. An house by fite and structure warm. Still void of strife; your dress still plain, But unaffected, neat, and clean ; Alike at peace in head and heart, And vigorous health in every part; Truth without craft; a friend or two-Just fuch, and only fuch as you; A table with cheap plenty fpread, Where health, and no difeafe, is fed ; Still fober nights, yet free from cares: A bed that luft nor forrow fhares, Where pleafing daily labours give Unbroken fleeps from ten to five; preffing his furprize that he should advance two opposite positions; "For as wickedness and virtue were opposed to each other, and a miferable and an happy life, he did not preferve the power and nature of an opposite in each, who supposed that vice alone had power to render life miferable, and yet contended that virtue was not fufficient to make it happy. And herein (faid - he) lies the inconfiftency and contradiction, that the man who professes that life can by no means be made happy if virtue be wanting, fhould at the fame time deny that virtue is fufficient for happiness, if that alone be possessed, and should thus take from virtue when prefent, that credit which he acknowledges to be her due when abfent." " Then (fays the peripatetic, with much pleafantry) give me leave to ask you, do you call that an amphora of wine which wants a congius of the measure?" " By no means (replied the ftoic) can that be called an amphora which wants a congius." Upon this the peripatetic retorted, " then the congius ought to be called the amphora, fince when that is wanting it is no amphora, when that is added it is complete. Now if it be abfurd to advance that a congius makes an

From

> From further views entirely free, But, as you are, content to be; And thus, while all your hours are paft, Nor fears, nor withes for your laft.

> > ¥ 3

amphora,

Diaitized by

amphora, it is equally abfurd to fay, that life is made happy by virtue only, because if virtue be wanting, life never can be happy." Then Favorinus, turning to the Peripatetic, "your argument (fays he) about the cafk of wine, is a fophistry. difcuffed in books; but (as you know) it is rather a witticilm than a proof or an argument, for if a congius be wanting, it happens that the amphora has not its just measure; but when it is added, that measure does not make the cask, but fupplies its deficiency; but virtue (as the Stoics fay) is not merely an addition or a fupplement, it is itself equivalent to an happy life, and therefore makes life happy, becaufe life is only happy when that is prefent." Thefe and other arguments yet. more minute and intricate they discussed, according to their different notions, making Favorinus the arbiter. But as night approached, and darkness began to thicken, we departed, attending Favorinus into his houfe.

CHAP.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. II.

What fort of questions we used to discuss in the Saturnalia at Athens, with some intricate sophistries. and amusing anigmas.

7 E celebrated the Saturnalia at Athens with mirth and moderation, not, as they fay, relaxing our minds; for Musonius affirms, that to give a loofe to the mind is as it were to lofe the mind; but we indulged ourfelves a little in the ingenuous pleafantries of lively conversation. Α large party of us from Rome, on a visit to Greece, and who attended the fame lectures and the fame mafters, met at the fame fupper; then he, who in his turn gave the entertainment, proposed, as a reward for the folution of a question, some old Greek or Latin book, and a crown of laurel, and introduced as many queftions as there were perfons prefent. When he had proposed them all, the turn of each to fpeak was decided by lot. The queftion being folved, the crown and reward was presented; if not folved, it was carried on, to be obtained by the next, according to lot, and if no one could folve it, the reward and crown was dedicated to the deity in whofe honour the festival was celebrated. The questions debated were were of this fort: fome difficult fentence from an old poet of agreeable rather than of ferious perplexity; fome fact of ancient hiftory; the elucidation of fome axiom derived from philofophy, improperly become common; the inveftigation of fome word of unufual occurrence, or fome obfcurity in the tenfe of a verb, the meaning of which is obvious. Of thefe queftions, I remember feven, of which the firft was the repetition of fome verfes in Ennius's Satires, in which one word is elegantly ufed in many different ways, as for example :—

Y 🖌

POOL

Nam qui lepidé ' poftulat, alterum frustrari, Quem frustratur, frustra eum dicit, frustra esse, Nam qui sese frustrari, quem frustra sentit, Qui frustratur, is frustra est, si non ille est frustra.

• Nam qui lepide, &c.]—The ancients fometimes indulged themfelves in this false taste of running the changes on words of one origin. Thus Plautus in his Captives has—

Qui cavet ne decipiatur, vix cavet, cum etiam cavet, Etiam cùm cavisse ratus, sæpe is cautor captus est.

Of modern jingles of this kind, none is more celebrated than the following, which Wallis gives in his English Grammar, both in French and English, and afterwards in a Latin translation, with an ample comment:

Quand un cordier cordant, veut corder une corde, Pour sa corde corder, trois cordons il accorde : Mais, si un des cordons de la corde descorde, Le cordon descordant sait descorder la corde.

Is

The

The fecond queftion was, how we fhould interpret what Plato, in the republic which he planned in his books, fays, that wives fhould be in common, and that the rewards of great captains and warriors fhould be the kiffes of boys and virgins. The third queftion was, the fallacy of the following fophiftry, and how it is to be explained. "That which you have not loft^{*}, you have; horns you have not loft, therefore you have

In English thus:

When a twifter a twifting will twift him a twift, For the twifting his twift, he three twines doth intwift, But if one of the twines of the twift do untwift, The twine that untwifteth, untwifteth the twift.

To which that author adds eight more of his own original conftruction.

² Quod non perdidifi, &cc.]—Moft of these logical quibbles had more credit given to them by the ancients than they deserved; the authors of many of them are recorded; they were diftinguished by appropriate names, and were often the subject of private discussion. This of the horns is by Diogenes Laertius attributed to Eubulides, a disciple of the Socratic Euclid. It was commonly called ceratine, from x1925, a horn. His name is mentioned with it by an old comic poet:—

O บัตราราหอร & EuGuridas หยุณาแลร เอนาแล.

The fallacy of the argument is perfectly evident; for it afferts univerfally what is only true of fuch things as we have once had. Diogenes attributes alfo to Eubulides the fophifms called mentions, fallens, Electra, occultata, forites, and calwa; yet most of these are also attributed to Chrysippus. It seems little worth while to enquire the true authors of such idle fubtilities.

horns."

d by GOOGLE

horns." Alfo another fophiftry: "What I am, that you are not; I am a man, therefore you are not a man." The next was the folution of this fophifin: "When I tell a lie, and acknowledge it, do I tell a lie, or do I fpeak truth?" We had afterwards the following queftion; "For what reafon are the patricians accuftomed to entertain each other at the Megalenfian feftivals, the common people at those of Ceres."

In like manner it was debated, "What poet of the ancients had used the phrase verant, for vera dicunt (they fay true)." The fixth question was, "What fort of herb is the asphodel which Hesiod speaks of thus:-- Νηπιοι εδ' ισασιν ότω πλεον ήμισυ παντος Ουδ'όσον εν μαλαχή τε 3 ασφοδελω μεγ'ονειαρ.

And what Hefiod meant when he faid that half was more than the whole?" The last quef-

³ II λ 107 $i\mu$ 107 π aílog.] — Thefe two lines convey a celebrated recommendation of moderation; the former being pointed againft avarice and rapacity, the latter recommending fimple and frugal diet. Plato, in his third book of Laws, fpeaking of the kings of the Argives and Meffenians, who by their rapacity ruined themfelves and others, "Were they (fays he) ignorant of what Hefiod fays with the utmoft juffice, that half is often more than the whole, when to take the whole is dangerous, but the half is moderate; for he thought moderation as much preferable to cxcefs, as any good thing is to another that is inferior to it."

Erasmus treats at large on this passage as an established proverb.

2

tion

tion was, "Of what tenfe are the verbs scripferim, venerim, legerim, of the præterperfect, or future, or both." These topics were then debated and explained in the order which I mentioned, each drawing a lot, and we were all presented with a book and a chaplet, except for one question which was upon the word verant; no one remembered that word to have been used by Quintus Ennius, in the 13th of his Annals, in the following verse:—

Satin vates verant ætate in agunda.

The chaplet therefore for this question was dedicated to Saturn, the god of that festival.

CHAP.

by GOOGLE

Снар. III.

What refpet *Æ*schines, in the oration in which be accused Timarchus of incontinency, said the Lacedæmonians judged to be due to the wise suggestion of a very profligate citizen '.

EXAMPLE SCHINES, the most acute and fagacious of all the orators who flourished among the Athenians, in that fevere and acrimonious speech, wherein he pointedly and violently ac-

* Taylor's Preface to this Oration of Æschines against Timarchus may be confulted by the more curious reader, as from Hermogenes, Hefychius, Synefius, &c. he has collected every fact explanatory of the character of the perion accused, and every circumstance which can illustrate this memorable oration. This is stated to have been the first occasion of the enmity betwixt Æschines and Demoschenes: certain it is, that the morals of Timarchus were in the highest degree vicious and depraved, yet he had all the qualities of a profound and accomplished politician, and was by no means without skill in military affairs. Notwithstanding his reputation for these and other talents, this accufation, ut in his rebus fieri folet, fays Taylor, prevailed, and the name of Timarchus has become in fuceeeding ages proverbially ignominious. The term a Timarchus was applied by the Greeks, that is the more modern Greeks, to an individual totally corrupt. This oration is mentioned alfo in fimilar terms by Lucian and by Plutarch.

cuied

rused Timarchus of incontinence, favs, that a certain man gave the following honourable and useful counsel to the Lacedæmonians, being himfelf a chief in that state, diftinguished by his virtue, and advanced in age: " The Lacedæmonians, (faid he) were debating a question in which the advantage and credit of the state were concerned, when a man role to deliver his fentiments, notorious for the baseness of his life, but at the same time poffeffing all the talents of an accomplished orator. The counfel he gave refpecting what ought to be done was fo convincing, that it received general approbation, and a decree was about to be paffed according to his opinion; when, with great vehemence and indignation, there arose one of those leaders, whom the Lacedæmonians revered as judges and directors of the public councils, diftinguished by his age and the dignity of his character : . What reafon (he exclaimed) Oh Lacedæmonians! will there be to hope that this city and flate can any longer remain fecure and invincible, if we employ the counfels of fuch men as this; if this counfel be wife and meritorious, I befeech you, let us not fuffer it to be difgraced by the pollution of its flagitious author.' Having faid this, he called upon a man^a celebrated for his fortitude and juftice,

• Called upon a man.]—The fame fact is related by Plutarch with fome variation; he imputes to the ephori what Æschines

JOOQL

tice, but of mean talents as an orator, and defired him, by the confent and requeft of all, to deliver, in the beft manner he could, the fentiments of the eloquent fpeaker, in order that no mention of him being made, the decree of the people might pafs in his name who had laft fpoken. The advice of this very prudent old man was followed, and thus the falutary counfel took place, while the name of its bafe author was changed."

Æschines here ascribes to an individual, but whoever suggested such a measure, we must certainly rather admire its discretion and its policy, than its justice.

CHAP. IV.

How Sulpitius Apollinaris laughed at one who afferted that he alone understood the history of Salluft, by enquiring the meaning of incertum stolidior an vanior'.

WHEN we were young men at Rome, and, having changed the prætexta and the toga virilis, were looking out for masters of deeper knowledge,

• This is a very intereffing chapter, and threws confiderable light upon the cuftoms and mangers of the Romans. We ٩ knowledge, we were by chance among the bookfellers in the fhoe-market, when Apollinaris Sulpitius, a man in the memory of us all, pre-eminently learned, ridiculed a boafting fellow, who read Salluft for money, and played upon him with that elegant kind of raillery which Socrates ufed to the fophifts'; for when he afferted that he was the

We learn from it in particular, that it was not unufual for critics and grammarians to give public lectures on fome popular author, to which probably all were indifcriminately admitted on paying a certain fee: we may learn alfo, from the remarks of Gellius, and the wicked wit of his friend Sulpitius Apollinaris, that this tafk was not often undertaken, and confequently not attended, by men of the greateft eminence for parts and learning. Such meetings probably refembled our fpouting clubs, as any one appears to have propofed what queftion he pleafed, and the circumftance may have given rife to the improvifatori of modern Rome, who for a trifling fum of money will, on any given fubject, pronounce a number of extemporary verfes.

This chapter also informs us that Gellius, was of noble sank, for the prætexta was only worn by the noble youths of Rome.

• To the fephifis.]—Cicero alludes to the talent of Socrates.

Socrates de feipfo detrahens, indifputatione plus tribuebat iis quos volebat refutare, ita cum aliud diceret atque fortiret, libenter uti folitus est, ea diffimulatione quam Græci summar vocant. Acad. Quest. 1. iv. c. 5.

Something of this kind is related of Socrates, in Ælian's Various Hiftory. Perceiving that Alcibiades was vain of his riches and eftates, he difplayed to his view a map of the earth.—Shew me Attica, fays the philosopher. Alciblades obeyed. Shew me your eftates, fays Socrates. The young Athenian the only' man who could read and explain Salluft, and openly boafted that he not only critically fearched into the outer skin, and obvious meaning of his fentiments, but into their very blood and marrow. Apollinaris professing to embrace and reverence his learning, " Very opportunely (fays he) my good master, are you come with the blood and marrow of Sallust's words; for vesterday I was asked the meaning of those words in the fourth book of his history, where, speaking of Lentulus, he fays, it is very uncertain, stolidiorne effet an vanior." Salluft's words are thefe: "At Cnæus Lentulus patriciæ gentis collega ejus, cui cognomentum Clodiano fuit, perincertum stolidior an vanior, legem de pecunia' quam Sylla emptoribus bonorum remiserat exigenda promulgavit." Apollinaris therefore affirmed that this question was asked him, and that he could not folve it, namely, what were the different meanings

Digitized by Google

Athenian confessed he could not find them.—What, replied the moralist, are you so vain of what is in fact no portion of the earth.

³ Only man.]—There is an epigram preferved in the first volume of the Latin Anthology, which turns upon this idea:

De Var. Catone grammatico et poeta

Furius bibaculus,

Cato grammaticus Latina Siren

Qui solus legit ac facit poetas.

Where foiss legit feems to mean the only man who knows how to read them.

of

Digitized by Google

of stolidior and vanior? for Sallust appeared to have feparated and opposed them to each other, as if they were unlike, and not the fame fpecies of defect; he therefore requested that he would instruct him in the meaning and derivation of The other, with a grin upon his counteboth. nance, and with a turned-up lip, shewing how much he defpifed the fubject of enquiry and the perfon who enquired, " I (faid he) am accuftomed to investigate and unfold the marrow and blood of old and recondite words, not those which are in daily use with the vulgar, for he must needs be more foolifb and vain than Cnæus Lentulus himfelf, who does not know that vanity and levity are the fame fpecies of folly." Having faid this, he left off abruptly, and was preparing to depart; we, however, detained him, and preffed him, as did more particularly Apollinaris, to expatiate more fully and openly upon the difference, or, if he thought proper, the fimilarity of the two words, and he entreated that he would not grudge this information to one defirous of instruction. He. however, plainly perceiving that he was laughed at, pretended to have business, and left us. We afterwards learned from Apollinaris, that the meaning of vanus was not according to the vulgar ulage, delipiens, or bebes, or ineptus; but as the most learned of the ancients used it, as mendax and infidus, and they opposed levia and inania to gravia and vana; but men were called solidi, not fo Vol. III. much 2 much fignifying fulti and excordes, as tetri, molefti, illepidi, which the Greeks called $\mu o \chi \theta \eta e o i$ and $\varphi o e \tau i x o i$; and he added, that each of these words, with their derivations, were found in Nigidius's publications, which I have noticed, having fought for and found them, in order that I might infert them in these commentaries, and which I think E have formewhere or other already introduced.

Снар. V.

Quintus Emnius, in bis seventb book of Annals, bas written quadrupes eques, and not as many read, quadrupes eques '.

I T happened that at the house of Antonius Julian the rhetorician, a man of respectability and of great eloquence, myself and some of his friends were amusing ourselves in literary pastimes, and such ingenuous festivities, at Puteoli.

^{*} The lines quoted in this chapter from Virgil, are to be found in the third book of the Georgics, v. 115.

The poet may properly enough apply to the horfeman that which his kill or management obliges or teaches the horfe to do.

Information

Information was brought to Julian, that a reader, a man of learning, with a very mufical voice, was reciting to the people, in the theatre, the Annals of Ennius. Let us go, faid he, to hear this Ennianift, whoever he be (by which name he chofe to call himfelf.) We found him reading, amongft vaft clamours of applaufe, the feventh book of the Annals; and we heard him very diffinctly pronouncing thefe lines—

Denique vi magnâ quadrupes equas atque elephanti

Projiciunt sefe.

Having read a few verses more, he departed, with the loud applaufes of the whole affembly. Then faid Julian, as he paffed out of the theatre, "What think you of this ftranger and his quadrupes equus? for thus he reads it :---

Dénique vi magnâ quadrupes equus atque elephanti

Projiciunt sefe.

Do you suppose, if his instructor had been a man of any value, that he would have faid quatrupes equus, and not quadrupes eques? that Ennius fo wrote it, no one at all attentive to ancient learning has ever doubted." But when some of the company faid, that they had read (every one with his schoolmaster) quadrupes equus, and wondered what was the meaning of quadrupes eques,

Z 2

eques, " I would have you (fays he) my good young men, read Quintus Ennius as accurately as Virgil did, who, imitating this verfe in his Georgics, has put equitem for equum in the following lines :—

Frema Pelethronii Lapithæ gyrofque dedere Impofiti dorfo, atque equitem docuere fub armis Infultare folo, & greffus glomerare fuperbos.

In which place, unlefs any one interpret it abfurdly, equitem can only fignify equum; for most of the ancients called the man who rode, and the horfe on which the rider fate, equitem; therefore the term equitare, which is derived from eques, is applied both to the rider and the horfe moving under him. Thus Lucilius, a man eminent for his knowledge of the Latin language, uses the phrafe equitare,' in the following verses:

Queis hinc currere equum nos atque equitare videmus,

His equitat curritque; oculis equitare videmus.

And again, 'Ergo oculis equitat.' However (continued he) I was not content with these examples; and in order that it might appear beyond all doubt and dispute, whether Ennius wrote equus or eques, I procured with great trouble and expence, for the fake of examining this one verse, an edition of the first and oldest antiquity, with the emendations of Lampadion, and I there found found it was written, not equus but eques." Julian made these and other observations to us with much learning and great good nature; but I afterwards met with them also in his works.

CHAP. VI.

Ælius Meliffus, in the book entitled "De Loquendi Proprietate," which he at first calls a cornucopiæ, has afferted what is not worth memory or mention, presuming that there is a great difference betwixt matrona and materfamilias.

EXAMPLE 10 MELISSUS ' was a man in the higheft repute, within my memory, among grammarians, but in matters of literature he had more boafting and fophiftry than real talents. Befides many other publications, he wrote a

* Ælius Meliffus.]—There were feveral illuftious Romans of this name. Lenæus Meliflus is mentioned by Suctonius among his eminent grammarians; Caius Meliffus was the friend of Mecænas, and was entrusted by him with the care of regulating the public libraries in the Octavian Porch. See Gronovius. The Meliflus here mentioned was a cotemporary of Gellius, and probably a defendant of the former.

Ζ3

book

342 T

THE ATTIC NIGHTS

book which, when it was published, was thought very learned : its title held out a great allurement to readers; it professed to be on correct fpeaking. Who could fuppole that he fpoke properly, unlefs he had thoroughly ftudied Meliffus? In that book is the following paffage: " She is called matrona " who has had one child, the who has had more is called materfamilias, as a fow when the has had one litter is called porcetra, when many, scropba." We are left, however, to confult the augurs, whether this remark of Melifius be a thought and conjecture of his own, or whether he had read it in fome other author. With regard to porcetra, he has certainly the authority of Pomponius³, in his comedy which has that title ; but that matrona

^a Matrona.]—There were different kinds of marriage contracts among the Romans, upon a careful attention to which much depends with respect to the understanding of local circumstances and private manners. The reader will do well to confult that part of Heineccius which discuffes the subject of Roman marriages, where the difference betwixt the matrona and the materfamilias is diffinitly pointed out. The legal marriages were called the usus, the confarreatio, and the comptio; and it is certain from the best authothorities, that the wife who was married without regard to one of these observances was matrona, but not materfamilias, whatever number of children she might have. The diffinition therefore here specified by Meliss is neither correct nor fufficient.

³ Pomponius.]--There were two Latin poets of this mame, one Lucius Pomponius, who is the one here alluded to,

Diaitized by GOOGLC

Grong is not used except to express one who has had one child, and materfamilias, one who has had more, he can produce no authority from writers of antiquity. This in short seems the more probable, and which accurate explainers of ancient words have affirmed, that she is properly called matrona who is married to a husband, as long as the remains in that state, although the may have no children, and the is so called from the word mater, which though not yet obtained, the has the hope and chance of obtaining, whence that state is called matrimony; but the only is called *materfamilias*⁴ who is in the hand to, and a writer of comedies; the other, Publius Pomponius, a writer of tragedies. H. Stephens has preferved fragments of both. Stephens mentions a play of the former called Porcaria, but not one of the name of Porcetra.

* Materfamilias.]—This word feems to be used by Plautus merely as fyr.onymous with uxer, without any difcrimimation of the kind abovementioned:

Nunquam enim nimis curare possiunt suum parentem filiæ; Quem æquius est nos potiorem habere quam te possidea pater

Viros nostros, quibus tu voluisti esse nos matresfamiliás,

Thus translated in Thornton's Plautus:

Children can never take too tender care Of a loved parent ; whom thould we effeem More dear than you, and next to you our hufbands, Of your own choice.

The reader will perceive that this translation is hardly marked enough.

Z4 .

of

of her husband, and under his direction, or the direction of him under whose authority her husband is, for she comes not only into wedlock, but into the family of her husband, and the fituation of his heir,

CHAP. VII.

In what manner Favorinus reproved one who was unseasonably enquiring concerning the ambiguities of words. The different significations of the word CONCIO¹.

M Y friend Favorinus happening to meet, near the temple of the Carmentæ, with Domitius, a man of learning, and an eminent grammarian at Rome, but firnamed the infane,

• H. Stephens is at confiderable pains to prove the title to this chapter fpurious and corrupt, but he exerts himfelf to little purpole, for it does not at all matter whether the title of the chapter tells the reader how Favorinus treated Domitius, or how Domitius behaved to Favorinus.

There is a great deal of truth in these harsh words put into the mouth of Domitius; and it is obvious enough, that with all his talents and accomplishments, this Favorinus, the friend and favourite of Gellius, discovers on various occations a great deal of pedantry.

from

Digitized by GOOgle

om his ferocious and churlish disposition, faid to him (I was with Favorinus at the time) " Pray tell me, master, have I done wrong in calling (dynoyopias) address to the people, when I wished to express it in Latin, conciones? for I am not fure, and I wish to know, whether any one of the ancients, who were attentive to propriety of fpeech, called an oration by the word concio ?" " Sir (replied Domitius, with a fierce. voice and countenance) there is nothing good to be expected when you diftinguished philosophers think of nothing but words and authorities for words; but I will fend you a book, wherein you will find what you want, for I, a grammarian, am occupied in the fludy of morality and the rules of life, but you, philosophers, are, as Cato calls you, dead gloffaries '; you collect, and read over and over old filthy records. foolifh and trifling as the words of old women hired for mourners. I wish our whole race were mute, diffionefty would then lack its inftrument of mifchief." When we had left him, "We addreffed this man (fays Favorinus) at an unlucky moment, for he feems to me to be in the paroxyim of fome dileafe; observe, however (adds he) that this waywardness of disposition, which is called melancholy, does not happen to

• Dead gloffaries.]-Mortuaria gloffaria. It is fometimes real mortualia; the latter term occurs in Plautus : hæc non funt non nugæ non enim mortualia.

Vol. III.

little

346 THE ATTIC NIGHTS

little and weak minds; but there is fomething of elevated affection in it', and strong truths are often spoken, though without any regard to time or feason. What now is your opinion of his remark upon philosophers? Would it not have been thought worthy of remembrance, if Antifthenes or Diogenes had fpoken it?" He fent, however, the book foon after to Favorinus, as he had promifed; it was, I think, a publication of Verrius Flaccus, in which queftions of this fort were discussed; that lenatus expressed the place of the affembly, and the perfons who formed it; that civitas denoted the fituation, the town, the government, and the multitude; that tribus and decuriæ were used for the place, the government, and the inhabitants; and that concio fignified three things, namely, the tribune from which the oration was delivered, the affembly of the people ftanding round, and the fpeech itfelf. As Marcus Tullius in his fpeech against Quintus Metellus fays, " I ascended (in concionem) the tribune, a concourse was affembled;" and in his Orator he fays, " I often heard the affemblies (conciones) exclaim, when my words appeared particularly in point, for their ears wait, that the fentence may be fitly bound together by well-placed words." This word fignified also an affembly of the people, and the speech itself, which was not proved by examples taken from that book, but, at the re-

³ Elevated affection.]—Literally heroic affection. The expression and fentiment is from Aristotle.

queit

queft of Favorinus, we afterwards found proofs of these various fignifications, both in Cicero, as I before observed, and in the most elegant of the ancient writers; but what he most wanted, namely, to find concio used for the speech itself, the title of one of Cicero's books exhibits, which is called by Tully himself (" contra concionem Q. Metelli") which means only an oration against the speech of Q. Metellus.

CHAP. VIII.

The opointer exercises and openentwise, and other things of this fort, which are confidered as ornaments of composition, are trifting and puerile; this shewn from the verses of Lucilius.

LUCILIUS has exposed with great wit, and ridicule, in his fifth Satire, those literary affectations, fuch as words ending in a fimilar manner, or of an equal number of fyllables, or otherwise like or equal to each other, by the immoderate and unseafonable use of which foolish people, who wish to appear Isocratics', excite difgust;

• Ifocratics.]—In other words, followers of Ifocrates. This perfon reckoned among his difciples a long catalogue .

Digitized by GOOG

348 THE ATTIC NIGHTS

difguit; he has fhewn how flupid and childifh they are in that paffage, wherein he complains to a friend that he had neglected to vifit him when fick:

- Quo me habeam pacto tametsi non quæris docebo,
- Quando in eo numero maníti quo in maxima nunc est
- Pars hominum, ut periisse velis, quem nolueris cum

Vifere debueris. Hoc nolueris, & debueris, te Si minus delectat, quod $\alpha \tau \epsilon \chi \nu \epsilon \nu$ Ifocratium eft: 'O- $\chi \lambda \eta \epsilon \omega \delta \epsilon \epsilon$ que fimul totum ac $\sigma \nu \mu \mu \epsilon \epsilon \epsilon \alpha \times \omega \delta \epsilon \epsilon$. Non operam perdo, fi tu hic.

of honourable names; among others were Hyperides, Iízus, Xenophon, Theopompus, Naucrates, &c.

The following character of Ifocrates from Quintilian, which I give in the translation of Patfall, feems to deferve a place here: "Ifocrates, in a different kind of eloquence, is fine and polifhed, and better adapted for engaging in a mock than real battle. He was fludious of all the beauties of difcourfe, and had his reafons for it, having calculated his eloquence for fchools, and not for contentions at the bar. His invention was eafy; he was very fond of graces and embellifhments; and fo nice was he in his composition, that his extreme care is not without reprehension."

Yet Cicero observes of Isocrates, that in what the peculiarities of his art confisted is not evident. Cicero's words are : Magnus et nobilis rhetor Isocrates, cujus ipfius quam constet esse artem non invenimus.--He adds ; Discipulorum autem atque corum qui protinus ab hac sunt disciplina prosecti, multa de arte præcepta reperimus.

De Invent. Rhet. ii. 2.

Diaitized by GOOGLE

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

Signification of the word infecendo, in M. Cato; and that infecendo is preferable to infequendo, though many think otherwife.

IN an old book which contained an oration of M. Cato de Ptolemæo contra Thermum, was this paffage.—" Sed fi omnia dolo fecit, omnia avaritiæ atque pecuniæ caufa fecit, ejufmodi fcelera nefaria, quæ neque in/ecendo, neque legendo, audivinus, fupplicium pro factis dare oportet." Enquiry was made concerning the word in/ecendo. Of thofe who were prefent there was one who was a real fcholar, and one who was a fciolift; thefe two entered into a difpute, and the grammarian afferted that it ought to be written in/equendo and not in/ecendo, fince it has the meaning of in/equens, and we use in/eque for proceed, in the imperative, as in/equere. Thus in Ennius:

Infeque musa, manu Romanorum induperator, Quod quisque in bello gessit cum rege Philippo.

The other, a man of real learning, faid, there was nothing wrong, but that infecendo was correct and proper, and that attention was to be paid to Velius Longus,

ato THE ATTIC NIGHTS

Longus', an accomplished man, who, in his commentary on the use of old words, has faid, that in Ennius we should not read inseque, but insece. Thus by the ancients, what we call narrationes was termed settiones. Varro also thus wrote the line of Plautus in the Menæchmi :

Hæc nihilo mihi videntur effe fectius, quam fomnia.

Such was their controverfy. I am of opinion that Cato used infecendo, and Q. Ennius infece, without the u, for I found in the Patrensian library a work of Livius Andronicus, of undoubted antiquity, called the Odyssey, in the first verse of which this word was written without the u:

Virum mihi Camena insece versutum.

From the verfe of Homer:

Андеа ной еннете Маса политропон.

A book of this age and credit juftifies my confidence. As for the verse of Plautus, where settius quam fomnia occurs, this is of no great weight. The antients, I believe, faid in/ece rather than in-

* Velius Longus.]-This is fometimes, but erroneoufly, written Verrius Longus.

There feems but little to observe concerning this chapter, but that the antients appear to have used the terminations que and ce indifferently, as bujusce and bujusque, cujusque and sujusce.

leque,

Digitized by GOOGIC

feque, because it was softer and more harmonious; but both have the same meaning. The words fequor, and festa, and fecutio, differ in the manner of using them; but whoever shall thoroughly examine them will find their origin and formation the same. Learned men, and translators of the Greek words, ander pois envent passa, and of estate num pois passas, think the word dicere means the same as infequi, for, say they, in envent v is doubled, in estates it is translated; for that very word entry, which signifies verba, they say can only be derived from encodas and estative. For the same reafon our ancestors used to call relations and difcourses infestiones.

Снар.

352 THE ATTIC NIGHTS

Снар. Х.

Those perfons are mistaken who imagine, when inquiring into the state of fever, that it is the pulse of the vein, and not of the artery, that they feel.

URING the heat of the fummer I retired to the country house of Herodes, in the territory of Attica, at a place called Cephifia, diversified with groves and rivulets. While there, I was feized with a violent diarrhœa, accompanied with fever. At this place, when Calvifius Taurus the philosopher, and feveral of his followers, who came from Athens to visit me, were met, the phyfician of the village, who was fitting by me, began to explain to Taurus what the nature of the complaint was that I was afflicted with, and with what degree of force, and at what intervals the fever made its return; then in the course of his argument, having faid I was mending, he added, and you, Taurus, may fatisfy yourfelf of this if you will lay your finger upon the vein. When the learned men who were with Taurus had heard the physician speak in so illiterate and improper a manner, calling the artery the vein, attributing his error to ignorance, they began to whifper to each other, and to fignify their difapprobation difapprobation by their looks; which when Taurus observed, turning with great mildness, as his cuftom was, to the physician, "we have no doubt, worthy Sir," he faid, " that you are not ignorant of the diffinction between arteries and veins; you know that the yeins have no power of moving themfelves, and that we only examine them for the purpose of drawing away blood, but that the arteries, by their motion and pulfation, fhew the ftate of the health, and the degree of intenfenefs of fever; but it is eafy to fee that you fpoke rather with a view to accommodate yourfelf to the common mode of difcourfing, than through ignorance of the nature of the veffels, and you are not the only perfor I have-heard fpeaking fo incorrectly, calling the artery the vein; let us then have the pleafure of feeing that you are more expert in curing difeases than in discoursing upon them, and may the gods blefs your endeavours." When I reflected afterwards upon the circumstance of the physician being reproved for speaking incorrectly, I confidered that it was not only indecent for a phylician, but for any perfon, who has been liberally educated, to be ignorant of the structure of those parts of our body which are not difficult of investigation, and which nature has made eafily intelligible, that we might be enabled to take the necessary precautions for the prefervation of our health, and therefore whatever time I could fpare from my neceffary avocations

VOL. III.

Aa

cations I employed in reading fuch medical books, as I thought were beft calculated to furnish me with instruction upon those subjects. Amongst these, with many other matters not foreign to the purpose, I remember to have read on the subject of the veins and atteries nearly to the following purport. A vein, called by physicians $\alpha\gamma\gamma\pi\sigma$ ', is receptacle for the blood, mixed and blended with the vital spirit, in which the blood is in a ² Ayystor.]—The antients called all the veffels of the body by this name. Machaon applies it alfo to the bag that contains the foctus in utero. Angeiologia is that part of anatomy which defcribes the veffels, veins, arteries, lymphatics, lacteals, &c.

The antients appear to have had very confused notions of the blood veffels; they were originally called by one name (veins) and the term artery was confined to the alperia arteria, or wind-pipe: at length it was observed that some of the veffels had a motion or pulsation, others not; those that were endowed with motion were supposed to be filled with spirit or air, which they were thought to receive from the lungs, and were called arteries; the veffels without motion, and carrying blood, were called veins. Hippocrates thought that the veins were derived from the liver, the great fountain of blood, as it was then imagined ; the arteries from the heart, which received its spirit or air from the vessels of the lungs; but he is not every where confistent with himfelf. In his book de Carne, he describes the veins and arteries as derived from the fame fountain. " Duz • enim funt a corde " venz cavz, et hzc quidem arteria, illa vero vena cava no-"minatur. Arteria vero calidi plus continet quam vena " cava, et spiritus penus est."

* Hippoc. Oper. Om. Ferio. p. 250. tom. 1.

much

Digitized by Google

OF AULUS GELLIUS. 355 much greater proportion than the fpirit; an artery, on the contrary, is a receptacle for the vital fpirit blended and mixed with the blood, but in which the fpirit predominates. $\Sigma \varphi v \gamma \mu o s$, pulfatio, or the pulfe, is the natural and involuntary motion, or contraction and dilatation of the heart and arteries; by the antient Greek writers it is called the fyftole and diaftole of the heart and arteries.

Снар. XI.

Verses of Furius Antiates ignorantly censured by Cafellius Vindex; which verses are subjoined '.

I Cannot agree with Cæsellius Vindex, the grammarian, though in my opinion he is by no means defitute of learning. He had hastily and ignorantly affirmed that Furius, an old poet,

* The fourth line of the verfes quoted from Furlus, I would amend thus. What can the meaning poffibly be of "Hic fulica levis," without faying any thing of the falfe quantity? I would therefore read "fic fulica levius."

Fulica is a fea fowl, and this will make the line not only intelligible, but the figure very poetical : " Thus, lighter than a fea fowl, the veffel fkims along the main."

Aaa

difgraced

356 THE ATTIC NIGHTS

difgraced the Latin language by forming fuch words as thefe, which to my ear appear not inconfiftent with poetic elegance, nor vulgar or unpleafant to be fpoken, as fome of thofe are, which celebrated writers have harfhly and coarfely introduced. The words of Furius which Cefellius has cenfured are thefe: he applies the term lutefcere to the earth when it became muddy; darknefs coming over like night he expresses by nottefcere; to recover wonted strength by virefcere: he describes the wind curling the fea, and making it shine, by the word *purpurat*²; and to become rich he calls opulefcere. But I have supported the lines from Furius's poem.

Sanguine diluitur tellus: cava terra lutefcit. Omnia nottefcunt tenebris caliginis atræ. Increfcunt animi, virefcit vulnere virtus. Hic fulica levis volitat fuper æquora claffis: Spiritus Eurorum virides cum purpurat undas. Quo magis in patriis poffint opulefcere campis.

• Purpurat.]—The term purple is frequently applied to the fea by Homer, in the fease of clear and fplendid. See Falfterus.

Vox purpureum & purpura non femper pro illo eximie rubente colore, fed etiam quandoque pro nitore illo qui in optimis coloribus efflorescit, fumitur.

Снар.

CHAP. XII.

The ancients had the cuftom of changing verbs attive into verbs paffive '.

I T was formerly confidered as an elegance in composition to substitute words possible fing an active for a passive signification, and vice versa. So Juventius in one of his plays: "Pallium un^a Barthius, Taubmannus, and Rutgerfius, will fupply the more curious and inquisitive reader with pertinent illustrations of this chapter.

The commentators have been greatly divided whether it thould be read Juventius or Terentius. Some manufcripts have juventus. See Barthius Adverf. 1026.

Many inftances might be eafily adduced of fimilar usage of the active for the paffive yerb. Thus in Virgil :

> Tum prora avertit et undis Dat latus.

Where avertit is used for avertitur.

Nox humida cœlo

Præcipitat.

Where præcipitat is used for præcipitatur, &c.

Cicero also fomewhere has rerra 'movet for terra movetur. Confult Rutgerfius, Var. Lect. p. 439.—Who, in vindication of the reading of Juventius, affirms, that the passage here quoted, does not exist in Terence.

Aag

Digitized by GOOGIC

guit

358 THE ATTIC NIGHTS.

guit face ut fplendeat." Is not this much more elegant than if he had faid, "ne maculetur?" Plautus too in the fame manner, "quid eft hoc? rugat pallium, amictus non fum commodè." Plautus has likewife ufed pulveret, not to fignify to make dufty, but to become dufty.

" Exi tu, Dave, age,

- " Sparge, mundum effe hocce veftibulum volo;
- " Venus ventura est nostra. Non hoc pulveret."

In the Affinaria too, he fays, contemples for contempleris :

" Meum caput contemples fiquidem e re confultas tuâ."

Cnæus Gellius likewife in his Annals fays-" After the tempest [edavit (fettled) Adherbal facrificed a bull." Mark Cato too in his Origines, - "Eodem convenæ complures ex agro acceffitavere, eo res corum auxit." Varro, in the book which he addreffed to Marcellus on the Latin language,-"In priore verbo graves prosodiæ, quæ fuerunt, månent, reliquæ mutant," which is very elegantly put for mutantur :" this also appears to be the cafe in the fame Varro's feventh book of his Res Divinge: " Inter duas filias regum quod mutet inter Antigonam & Tulliam eft enim advertere." But we find in almost all ancient authors instances of verbs paffive being used for active ones, of which I now remember a few, as muneror te for munero, significor fignificor for fignifico, facrificor for facrifico, adjentior for adjentio, fameror for famero, pigneror for pignero, with many others, which in the course of reading will frequently be found.

Снар. XIII.

Reply made by Diegenes the philosopher to one who attacked him with an impudent sophism '.

W E were celebrating the Saturnalia at Athens in an elegant game of this kind, when many of us, engaged in the fame literary purfuits,

² A curious incident occurs in Athenzus, book x. c. 12. which may be inferted here as illustrative of the contents of this chapter:

It was cuftomary at Athens to impose a certain penalty on those who could not give the folution of an ænigma; they were obliged to drink up a goblet of wine.

Again, in the fame chapter :

The ancients confidered the art of expounding ænigmas as a proof of having received a liberal education; they were generally introduced as a part of the entertainment. The reward, the author observes, was what an ingenuous mind would have blushed to receive; the penalty for not folving them was, to drink a goblet of wine.

Aa 4

The

soo inc midning

purfuits, were affembled to pass away our time: we discussed questions of wit called [opbi/mata; every man flung them before the company like fo many dice, and the prize for folving, or the penalty for being unable to folve the queftion, was a fefterce. This money being collected by one in capacity of a waiter, an entertainment was provided for those engaged in the game. The questions were of this fort, although in Latin, they appear inelegant and aukward : "What fnow is, hail is not. Snow is white, therefore hail is not white." There was a fimiliar one to that: "What a man is, a horfe is not. Man is an animal, therefore a horfe is not an animal." It was his part, who was called by the caft of the die

The above rewards and penalties refer to queffions and riddles of a lefs honourable nature. There were others introduced only among men of fcience and accomplifhments, and involved fome fubtleties of philofophy or of grammar: the reward in fuch a cafe was a garland; they who did not folve them were compelled to drink a goblet of wine mixed with falt.

A cuftom prevails in this country, in drinking parties, of impofing a fine of a bumper for any fuppofed offence againft the decencies of the banquet, and for more atrocious crimes offenders are occafionally made to drink a glafs of falt and water; doubtlefs a cuftom borrowed from the high claffical authority fpoken of above.

A fragment of Antiphanes, in the above mentioned book of Athenæus, adds, that the culprit in these cases was compelled to drink his falt and water without taking breath, and with his hands tied behind him.

3

to

to unravel the queftion, to declare in what part of the fentence, and in what word the fallacy confifted; if he did not declare this, no reward was given him, he was fined a fefterce, and that fine went towards furnifhing the entertainment. But I muft relate the facetioufnefs with which Diogenes repaid a fophifin of this kind, propofed in contempt by a logician from the Platonic fchool. When the logician began, "What I am, that you are not." Diogenes agreeing, he added, "I am a man." To this likewife Diogenes affented. The logician then concluded, " therefore you are not a man." "This (returned Diogenes) is falfe; and if you would have it true, you muft begin your propofition with me."

CHAP.

Digitized by Google

Снар. XIV.

What number HEMIOLIOS is, and what EPITRITOS, which words our countrymen have not ventured to translate into Latin '.

THE Greeks have certain ways of expressing numbers, for which we have no words in Latin. They who have written in Latin upon the fubject of numbers have used Greek terms, for they were unwilling to risk the absurdity of coining words in our tongue; for what word could express bemiolius or epitritus, which contains in itself a whole number and its half, as three to two, fifteen to ten, thirty to twenty. Epitritos is that which contains a whole number and its third part, as four to three, twelve to nine, forty to thirty.

It is worth while to notice and remember these terms expressive of number, because, unless they are understood, the most subtle calculations in the writings of philosophers cannot be understood.

^a Gronovius informs us in his note, that Vitruvius rendered the Greek word ημιολιο, by the Latin fefquialterum, and επιτριτο, by tertiarium. The old gloffaries interpret επιτριτο, by fefquitertium.

Снар.

CHAP. XV.

M. Varro has made a remark on bexameter verses of too minute and trifling a nature ¹.

IN long verfes called hexameters, and in iambics of fix feet, they who fludy metre have obferved, that the two firft feet and the two laft may confift of fingle words flanding by themfelves, but that the middle ones cannot; but that they always confift of words divided, or mixed and confused. Varro in his grammar fays, he has obferved in the hexameter verfe, that upon all occasions the fifth half foot finishes a word, and that the first five feet have equal power toward completing the verse with the other feven; and this, he fays, is contrived by a certain geometrical ratio.

⁸ The meaning of what is here not very clearly faid, is, that the third foot of an hexameter verfe cannot form a word of itfelf; but this is abfurd, and was not attended to by the beft poets. Muretus in his Various Readings points out feveral verfes, both in Latin and Greek, in which this was not obferved. One of them may be fufficient here:

Concutitur tum sanguis viscere persentiscunt.

This line is in Lucretius, and fanguis, the third foot, is a word by itfelf.

BOOK

364 THE ATTIC NIGHTS

BOOK XIX,

CHAP. I.

The answer of a certain philosopher, who was asked why he became pale in a ftorm at sea.

I N our way from Caffiopia' to Brundufium we paffed through the Ionian, a fea violent, vaft, and agitated with ftorms. During the whole first night of our voyage a very stormy fide wind filled our veffel with water. At length, after much complaining, and sufficient employment at the pump, daylight appeared, but brought no diminution of our danger, nor ceffation 'of the storm; but the whirlwinds seemed increasing, and the black sty, and the balls of fire, and the clouds, forming themselves into

* Caffiopia.]—Called alfo Caffope, a town on the coaft of Epirus. There were others of the fame name in that vicinity. See Palmer's Defcr. Græc. Antiq. p. 262, &c.

frightful

frightful (hapes (which they called Typhons) appeared hanging over us ready to overwhelm the ship. In the company was a celebrated philosopher of the ftoic fchool, whom I had known at Athens, a man of fome confequence, and rather. diftinguished for the good order in which he kept his pupils. Amidit all thefe' dangers, and this tumult of fea and fky. I watched this man attentively, anxious to know the state of his mind, whether he was dauntless and unalarmed. I observed that he expressed no fear nor apprehenfions, uttered no complaints like the reft, nor gave into their way of exclaiming; but in palenefs and terfor of countenance he differed but little from his neighbours. When the fky grew clear, and the fea became calm, a certain rich

² Typhons.]-Pliny describes in formidable terms both the Ecnephias and Typhon, two kinds of hurricane or whirlwind, b. ii. c. 48 .- Of all phænomena of this kind, none is more alarming to the failor than the waterfpout, which happens fometimes in the Mediterranean. Tournefort has defcribed one very forcibly. Many have been the folutions offered for this furprifing appearance. M. Buffon fuppoles the kind of fpout there defcribed to proceed from the operation of fire beneath the bed of the fea, as the waters appear greatly agitated at the furface. Some have accounted for it by fuction, as in the application of a cupping glafs to the fkin. Thefe are peculiar to the fea, but typhons of a fimilar kind have also been experienced by land, of fuch violence as to strip houses of their roofs, and to do incredible damage, catching birds and other animals in their vortex, and dashing them with violence to the ground. Greek

366 THE ATTIC NIGHTS

Greek from Afia approached the ftoic; his wealth was proved from his expensive appearance, his quantity of baggage, and his train of "What is the reason (faid he, in a attendants. bantering humour) that when we were in danger, you, who are a philosopher, were afraid, and looked pale, while I was neither afraid nor pale?" The philosopher, doubting a little whether it was worth while to make any answer : " If (faid he) in so violent a storm. I did discover a little fear. you are not worthy of being told the reafon; but that follower of Aristippus shall give you an answer for me, who, upon a similar occasion, being afked by a man much like yourfelf, why, as a philosopher, he was afraid, while he feared nothing, replied, that there was not the fame caufe for fear in one as the other, for the prefervation of a worthlefs coxcomb was not an object worthy of much anxiety, but that he was concerned for the fafety of an Ariftippus." With this reply the ftoic got rid of the rich Afiatic. But afterwards, as we were approaching Brundufium, and the winds were appealed, I alked him, "What was that caufe of fear which he had refused to relate to him who had fo improperly addreffed him?" He then with kindness and politeness faid to me, "Since you are desirous of knowing, hear, or rather read, and you will believe it the more readily, and remember it the better, what the original founder of the stoic feat fect thought of that short-lived but necessary and natural fear." He then produced to us, from a little bag, the fifth book of Epictetus's Differtations', which, according to Arrian's arrangements, no doubt agree with the writings of Zeno and Chryfippus. In this book, which was written in Greek, we found a passage to this effect: " The vision of the mind, which philosophers call phantalies, by which the mind of man, on the first appearance of an object, is impelled towards the perception of that object, are not voluntary or controuled by the will, but obtrude themfelves upon men by a certain power inherent in themselves; but there are also degrees of allent which they call oursaradiseis, by which these appearances are known and judged of; these are

* The fifth book of Epictetus.]- This is a firong testimony in favour of Arrian, though the fifth book, whence these words are taken, is no longer extant. We have at prefent only four, in which this paffage does not occur. The floics having invented for their wife man an elevation above the reach of nature, were obliged to devife these subtleties to escape the reproaches to which they would of course be exposed, when unexpectedly they were furprised in feeling as much weaknefs as other people, or perhaps more. The first appearances of things, as they ftruck the mind without reflection. were called garragias (fantafies) and confidered as partly deceptions. Epictetus fays in his Enchiridion, where m שמסא קמשאמסות דותצמת עואודה והואוזמי לא קמאמסות וריו ברו, במו w mailus to pamouson, ch. 5. In every difagreeable appearance, exercise yourself to fay, this is merely an appearance, or fancy, and not exactly as it feems.

voluntary

voluntary and under the controul of the wills of men ; therefore, when any terrible found, either from heaven, or from the fall of any building, or a fudden meffenger of unexpected danger, or any thing of that fort occurs, the mind even of a wife man cannot but be moved a little, and fhrink, and fuffer alarm, not from a preconceived opinion of any evil, but by certain rapid and unexpected attacks which overturn the power of the mind, and pervert the reason. In a little time, however, the wife man disapproves of these phantalies, these terrors of the mind; that is, he does not give his affent to them, he does not acknowledge the propriety of the impression they make ; he cafts them away, he renounces them; nor does there appear to be any thing in them worthy of exciting alarm. And herein they fay, is the difference between the mind of a wife man and that of a fool: a fool fancies things are as they appear to him on the first impulse of his mind, fhocking and alarming, and by an affent of his mind he admits and gives way to them, for the floics use the word mposemido Ealer in their discussions of this subject; but a wife man, although he be for a fhort time moved to paleness and alarm of countenance, yet does not give way, but retains the dignity and firmnefs of that opinion which he ever held concerning fuch objects, as of things by no means to be dreaded, though exciting momentary alarm by falle appearances pearances and vain terrors." Such was the opinion of Epictetus the philosopher, as we found from the decrees of the Stoics contained in that book. From which I have drawn a conclusion, that in such cases as I have mentioned, we are not to suppose a man foolish or ignorant because he turns pale, or grows as it were white; but we are to allow, that in the fudden impulse, he rather gives way to human infirmity, than that he really believes things to be what they appear.

CHAP. II.

Of the five senses; that two of them are more particularly common to the beasts.

M EN have five fenfes, which the Greeks call $\alpha_{i\sigma}\theta_{n\sigma}\varepsilon_{is}$, by which mental and bodily pleafure feems to be purfued: the tafte, the touch, the fmell, the fight, the hearing. From all of thefe, the enjoyment of any immoderate degree of pleafure is deemed bafe and difgraceful; but of all pleafures, according to the opinion of wife men, that is confidered as the most difhonourable, which is derived from the too Vol. III. B b great 370 ' great use of the taste and the touch; and those men who particularly devoted themselves to the indulgence of such beastly pleasures, the Greeks call axodases and axgares, words of the deepest reproach. We call them incontinent or intemperate; for if you would have a closer translation of axodases; it would still be a new word; but the two pleasures' derived from the taste and the touch, gluttony and debauchery, are alone common to man and beast; therefore he who was addicted to these pleasures, was numbered with beasts and wild animals. The pleasures fpring-

THE ATTIC NIGHTS

" Voluptates due.]-Seneça, as a Stoic, is still more rigorous, and condemns all pleasures, as fit only for inferior animals. " Voluptas bonum pecoris eft. Magnam vitam facit titillatio corporis? Quid ergo dubitatis dicere, benè esse homini, si palato benè est? Et hunc tu, non dico inter viros numeras, sed inter homines, cujus summum bonum saporibus, ac coloribus, ac sonis constat ? Excedat ex hoc animalium numero pulcherrimo ac diis fecundo, mutis agregetur animal pabulo natum." Epift. 92. " Pleasure is the gratification of a beaft. Can the external delight of the body produce an exalted state of life ? Why then not declare at once that a man is of necessity well off when his palate is fo? And can you reckon that perfon in the clafs, I do not fay of men, but of human creatures, whole chief good confifts in taftes, in colours, or in founds? Let fuch a one fecede from this class of fuperior animals, inferior only to the gods, and be numbered with the dumb brutes, as a creature born only to eat."

The diffinction of the Peripatetics here recorded, is, however, more accurate, and gives a good folution of the doubt propoled, why fome pleafures are held more particularly bale than others.

4

ing

۱

ing from the other three fenfes appear to be exclufively appropriate of man. I fubjoin the words of Aristotle upon this subject, in order that the authority of a great and illustrious man may deter us from fuch difgraceful pleafures :- " Why are they called incontinent * who indulge to excess in the pleasures of the touch or the (For both they who are immodetafte ? rate in venery and in the enjoyments of luxury are efteemed incorrigible. Of the luxurious, however, fome find gratification in the tongue (or palate) and others in the throat, whence the wish of Philoxenus to have the throat of a crane.) On the other hand, why are they who are exceffive as to the pleafures of the fight and hearing not called incontinent? Is it because the delights afforded by the touch or tafte are common to us with other animals; and, being thus common, are therefore the most dishonourable, and chiefly or folely objects of reproach? So that we cenfure a man who is addicted to them, and call him incontinent and incorrigible, for being overcome and enflaved by the meaneft of pleafures. Now, there being five fenfes, other animals are gratified only by the two above mentioned; but from the reft they receive either no gratification at all, or they receive it by accident.

² Incontinent.]—In the original arrarus. I know no better word in English; yet incontinent is specific and limited, as it were, to want of chassity. In Greek, arrarus is generic. Again, arodaoros I have rendered incorrigible; yet to an English ear, abandoned, is far better.

VOL. II.

Bb 2

Who

. .

Who then, retaining any degree of regard for the dignity of human nature, would delight in the purfuits of venery and gluttony, which are common to the fwine and the afs? Socrates obferved, that many men lived for the purpofe of eating and drinking; but that he eat and drank for the purpofe of preferving life; but Hippoerates ³, a man of extraordinary wifdom, faid of venery, ^c that it was a fpecies of that virulent diforder which we call epilepfy. His words are thefe; The substate purports and purports.

* Hippocrates.]—What is here afcribed to Hippocrates, is given by Galen, and Clemens of Alexandria, to Democritus; and as it appears not in the works of Hippocrates mow extant, it is possible that Gellius wrote incorrectly from memory. Be his account right or wrong, it is literally and fervilely transcribed by Macrobius.

CHAP. III.

That it is worfe to be commended coldly, iban to be violently cenfured.

F AVORINUS the philosopher affirmed that it was worse to be slightly and coldly praised, than to be vehemently and heavily attacked. "For (faid he) the man who accuses and calumniates you, in the same proportion that he does it with acrimony, by so much is he considered as unjust and hostile 5 to to you, and often therefore meets with no credit; while he who praifes you grudgingly and without effort, appears to have a bad theme, and paffes for a friend of one whom he wifhes to praife, but cannot find a proper fubject of his panegyric¹."

¹ Nothing can be more accurate than the diffinction of Favorinus. This was exactly the fpecies of treachery objected by Pope to Addifon, who would, as he infinuates-

Damn with faint praife, affent with civil leer, And without fneering teach the reft to fneer. Willing to wound, and yet afraid to ftrike, Just hint a fault, and hefitate diflike; Alike referv'd to blame, or to commend, A tim'rous foe, and a fufpicious friend.

Prol. to Satires, v. 201.

Thus, among the fentences of Syrus, and others, collected by Gruter, we have,

Qui benè dissimulat citius inimico nocet.

Снар.

374 THE ATTIC NIGHTS

CHAP. IV.

The reason why the belly is relaxed by any fudden fright; and coby fire provokes wrine.

A RISTOTLE's Physical Questions is a book replete with every kind of ingenuity and elegance. He there enquires how it happens, that when the fudden apprehension of any great event comes upon people, violent commotions often take place in the belly ? and why he who stands long before the fire, feels a disposition to discharge his urine? "The cause (fays he) of the belly being depressed by fear, is, that fear always produces cold', he calls it (ψ uxeensintixm) which power of cold drives all the blood and warmth

² Quod timor omnis fit algificus.]—This mode of folving a problem is very common with Ariftotle: he fuppofes a certain general effect, and then deduces the particular phenomena from it; but unfortunately the general polition is arbitrarily affumed, is in itfelf difputable, and as difficult to account for as the thing enquired. Thus, for inflance, that fear in general is productive of cold, is in itfelf a very doubtful axiom; and if true, it may as well be afked why fear produces cold, as why the fpecified effects take place from it. Modern philosophers perhaps do not much better underfland the nature of these effects on the human frame, but they are more cautious in attempting to pronounce about them.

entirely entirely from the skin, and at the fame time causes paleness in those who fear: and that blood," add he, " driven inwards, stirs up internal commozions."--On the frequent provocation of urine by fire, his words are these: " The fire disloves the substance contained in the bladder, as the sun loosens the show."

CHAP. V.

An extract from Aristotle, importing that fnotewater is very pernicious to drink, and that crystal is formed from fnow ¹.

IN the hottest seafon of the year, myself and certain other intimates and friends had met at Tyburtum, the country seat of an opulent friend.

^a The fubject of this chapter is alfo difcuffed in Macrobius, book vii. chap. 12. A volume might eafily be written, were I to attempt to enumerate all that has been faid on the properties of fnow. Bartholinus wrote an express treatife to prove its virtues; he entitles it De Nivis Ufu Medico; and afferts that fnow tends to the prolongation of life, and prevents a multitude of difeafes. Snow-water is the fole drink of the people of Norway in winter; and as the Norwegians are a hardy and long-lived people, it is probable that fnow B b 4 poffeffes friend. We were students in rhetoric and philofophy, and there was amongst us a good man, well instructed in the Peripatetic school, and a zealous follower of Aristotle. He restrained us from drinking water melted from fnow, with much feverity: he cited the authority of many celebrated physicians, and above all of Aristotle, a man most distinguished by his universal knowledge. From him he affirmed, that fnow-water was highly beneficial to corn and trees, but was unwholefome as a drink to men, and produced confumptions, and by degrees other diforders, and for a long time fixed them in the bowels. Thus far he spoke with wildom, with a kind intention, and with earnestness: but as there was still no ceffation of drinking fnow-water, he produced from the library at Tyburtum, which being in the temple of Hercules; was well furnished, a book of Aristotle, and laid it before us. " Trust then (faid he) at least, the words of this wifest of men. and ceafe to fport with your health." In that posses of the possibility of the

Non potare nivem, fed aquam potare rigentem De nive, commenta est ingeniofa fitis.

book

book it was written, that fnow-water was very destructive to drink, for that it had been coagulated with more folidity than that which the Greeks call crystal. The reason affigned for this was, that as water is hardened by the coldness of the air, it follows that an evaporation takes place, and a certain thin air is expressed and emitted from it. But (faid he) the lighteft part of it is evaporated, and that which remains is the heavier, and more grofs and unwholefome, and being beaten by the impulse, becomes like white froth. But there is a plain proof that the wholefomer part is diffipated and evaporated, because the quantity is fmaller than it was before it congealed. I have extracted and added a few of Aristotle's own words from that book .- " The reafon why fnow from water or ice is pernicious, is, that from all water congealed, the thinneft part is diffipated, and the lighteft evaporates. A. proof of it is, that it becomes lefs in quantity than it was before it was congealed; the moft wholefome part of it therefore having escaped, of courfe what is left must be worfe."-When we had read this, we gave due honour to the great Aristotle, and ever fince I have fworn war and vengeance against fnow. Others, according to their different feelings, concluded a peace.

CHAP.

CHAP. VI.

That flame impells the blood outward, but fear checks its circulation '.

N the problems of the philosopher Aristotle, is this passage: "Wherefore do men from shame look red, or from fear turn pale, these affections being fimilar? Is it because, in people

• The quefiion introduced in this chapter is also discussed at length in Macrobius, book vii. chap. 11. Blushes, from whatever physical cause they arise, and whether they denote modesty or guilt, have been very useful instruments in the fervice of the poets, but have perhaps been never more successfully employed than by our Shakspeare, in the following passage:

I have mark'd

A thousand blushing apparitions

To flart into her face-a thousand innocent shames In angel whiteness bear away those blushes.

The idea that fear occasions paleness, whether it be true or not, has been applied to fimilar purposes in poetical description. The following passage in Smollett's Ode to Independence, is equal to any thing of the kind:

Far in the frozen regions of the North, A goddefs violated brought thee forth, Immortal Liberty—whofe look fublime Hath blanch'd the tyrant's check in every varying clime.

afhamed,

Whamed, the blood flows from the heart to all parts of the body, fo as to ftop upon the furface; but in people afraid, it rufnes from all quarters toward the heart?"—When I read this at Athens with my mafter Taurus, and afked his opinion of the matter—" He has told us (fays he) properly and truly what happens when the blood is diffufed, and when contracted; but he has not faid why this happens. For it remains yet to be enquired, why fhame diffufes the blood, or why fear contracts it, fince fhame is a fpecies of fear. The philofophers define it thus :

Shame is the fear of just reproach."

Снар. VII.

The meaning of the word OBESUM, and feme other old words.

JULIUS PAULUS the poet, a man of character and of claffical learning, had a fmall paternal feat on the Vatican hill: here he often invited us, and kindly entertained us with fruits and the produce of his garden. After a mild autumnal autumnal day, when Julius Celfinus and myfelf had fupped with him, and had heard at his table the Alceftes of Lævius', and were returning to the city with the declining fun, we reflected upon the rhetorical figures, the new ufages of certain words, and the ftriking paffages in Lævius's play. As each word occurred which was worthy of notice, as far as our memory could fupply us, we made ufe of it. The paffages which then prefented themfelves were thefe :--

Corpore, inquit, pectoreque undique obejo,

Ac mente exfensà tardigenulo senio oppressum.

Here we noticed that obefum, which he uses to fignify thin, elegant, is applied rather with propriety, than according to usual custom; vulgarly and improperly it means fat and bulky. We observed likewise, that he fays, obliteram gentem, for obliteratam – and he calls enemies who break their treaty fadifragos, not faderifragos. The blushing Aurora he calls pudoricolorem, and Memnon nosticolorem, & forte, dubitanter; and from the word fileo, he speaks of filenta loca, and

* Lævius]—Many editions read Nævius; but it is certain that it was Lævius who wrote a tragedy called Alcestes, on the model of the Alcestes of Euripides: so also did Accius and Ennius. This Lævius is before mentioned by Gellius, book ii. c. 24. See H. Stephens on this chap. p. 112 of his edition—for filiceo he proposes to read filicio, from filex, filicir; fikcius means flinty, hard-hearted.

pulverulenta,

pulverulenta, and pestilenta; and carendum, carendum tui. instead of carendum te; and magno ipete, for He has also put the word fortescere for impetu. fortem fieri, dolentiam for dolore, and avens for He also uses caris intolerantibus for intolibens. lerandis, and manciolis for tenellis manibus, and quiescam seliceo and fiere impendio infit for fieri impense incipit, and accipitret for jaceret. We amufed ourfelves with noticing thefe among various Lævian particularities : but other s, which appeared likewife foreign from common ulage, and too highly poetical, we paffed over; fuch as what he fays of Neftor, whom he calls trifeclifenex, and dulcioreloquus. The fwelling and vaft waves he calls multigrumis, and of ftreams congealed by frost, he fays they are tegmine onychino. Many inftances also there are, wherein he has used paraphrastic expressions; as for instance, where he calls his calumniators [ubduEti [upercilii carptores.

Снар.

CHAP. VIII.

An enquiry whether the words ARBNA, C.ELUM, triticum, are ever used in the plural number; and whether quadrigis inimicitiis, and other words beside, are ever found in the fingular number.

THEN I was a youth at Rome, before I went to Athens, when I was free from masters and lectures, I often visited Fronto Cornelius, and enjoyed the advantage of his converfation, which was diftinguished by its purity, and replete with excellent information. It invariably happened, that as often as I faw him, and heard his conversation, I came away better instructed and improved: as for inftance, when on a certain day he made fome flight remarks on a trivial fubject, but one not entirely unconnected with the fludy of the Latin language. When a certain friend of his, a man of learning, and a diftinguished poet, faid, that he had been cured of the dropfy by the application of " calentes arenæ;" Fronto, playing upon the word, replied, "The difease indeed you are free from, but you are troi bled with the complaint of vicious speaking; for Caius Cæfar, the perpetual dictator, the foninin-law of Cnæus Pompey, from whom is derived the family and the name of the Cæfars, a man of excellent talents, and diffinguished bewond all others for his purity of style, in those books ' De Analogia,' addreffed to Marcus Cicero, has advanced that the usage of arenas is a corruption : for that arena is no more a noun of multitude than calum or triticum. On the other hand, the word quadrigas, although it be one carriage, is yet a body of four horfes voked together: and he thinks ought always to be used in the plural number, as the words arma, and mania, and comitia, and inimicitias. And now, my dear poet, have you any defence to fet up, which may prove that what you have faid is not corrupt ?"---"As to the word calum, replied the other, and triticum, I do not deny that it should always be used in the fingular number; nor are arma, and mania. and comitia, to be confidered otherwife than always as nouns of multitude. I shall confider however about inimicitia and quadriga, whether I shall give way to the authority of the ancients concerning them: with respect to quadrige, probably I may; but why fhould not Cæfar fuppofe that inimicitiam, like inscientiam, and impotentiam, and injuriam, were used by the ancients, and may be used by us? for Plautus, the ornament of the Latin language, has used deliciam in the fingular He fays, mea voluptas, number for delicias. mea mea delicia; and Ennius, in that famous book of his:

Eo ingenio natus sum, amicitiam : Atque inimicitiam in fronte ' promptam gero."

-But who, I befeech you, has written or faid that arenas is bad Latin? And I beg, that if Cæfar's book be in your possession, you would order it to be brought, that we may observe with what confidence he fays this. The first book De Analogia being then produced, I committed to my memory from it these words: having remarked that neither calum, nor triticum, nor arenam, could be used in the plural number. " And do you think (he adds) it happens from the nature of these things, that we fay unan terram, and plures terras, and urbem, urbes, imperium, imperia? Nor can we convert quadrige into a fingular, nor arena into a plural noun."-After reading these words, Fronto faid to the poet, " Are you fatisfied that Cæfar has decided upon this word plainly and directly enough?" The poet,

In fronte.]—A fimilar expression occurs in Apuleius: "More hoc et instituto magistrorum meorum. Qui aiunt hominem liberum et magnisicum debere in primori fronte animum gestare."

Thus also we fay in English, he carries his honest meaning on his brow. The idea is beautifully expressed in Romeo and Juliet:

> He was not born to fhame : Upon his brow fhame is afham'd to fit, For 'tis a throne where honour may be crown'd Sole monarch of the universal earth.

> > ftruck

ftruck with the authority of the book, " If (faid he) there were any appeal from Cæfar, I should be inclined to appeal in the prefent cafe; but fince he has omitted to affign the reafon for what he has faid, I beg of you now to tell us, what objection you think there is to faying quadriga and arena?" Fronto replied, " Quadrigæ is confined to the plural number, even though there be not more horfes yoked than one; for it is derived from the yoking of four horfes, quafi quadrijuga. And certainly, when you fpeak of fo many horfes, you ought not to comprize them in the fingular number. The fame rule is to be observed with regard to arena, though a different kind of word : for as arena in the fingular, means a multitude, an abundance of fmall particles which compose it, arenæ is improperly and ignorantly ufed, as if that word required amplification, which is never to be used in the plural number. But (fays he) I do not propose this opinion as if I were the author * and prompter of it, but that I might ² The author.]—Fundus in the original. See on this word Turneb. Adversar. iv. 12. and Plautus in the Trinum: t. 1. 6.

Nunc mihi is propere conveniendus est-ut quæ cum ejus filio

Egi, ei rei fundus pater fit potior.

Which passage Thornton thus translates :

'Tis proper I should meet him with all speed, That so the compact 'twixt his son and me

May, by the father's fanction, be confirm'd.

Vol. III.

Сċ

not

-386 THE ATTIC NIGHTS

not leave that of Cæsar, so learned as he is, without support; for though calum is always used fingularly, that is not the cafe with mare and terra, pulvis, ventus, and fumus. And why do old authors fometimes use inducias and ceremonias in the fingular number, but never ferias, nundinas, inferias, and exequias? Why has mel, vinum, and words of that fort, a plural, whilft lac has not? These things cannot be examined and thoroughly investigated by men of business, in so populous a city; nay, I fee you are fatigued with what I have already faid, anxious I fuppole to complete fome other business. Go then, and enquire at your leifure, whether any old orator, provided he be of claffical authority, or any poet, or in thort any writer of eminence, has used quadriga and arenas."-Fronto advised us to search for these words, not, I fuppofe, becaufe he thought they were to be met with in old books, but that he might excite in us a fpirit of reading, by the purfuit after uncommon words. What appeared therefore most extraordinary was, that we found quadriga in the fingular number in that Satire of Varro, called Exdemetrius: but as to arenas in the plural, we looked for this with lefs zeal, because, except Caius Cæsar, no learned man (as I indeed remember) has used it.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. IX.

The elegant retort of Antonius Julianus to fome Greeks at an entertainment'.

A Young Afiatic of equefirian rank, of a promifing difpofition, polifhed manners, a good fortune, with a turn and tafte for mufic, gave an entertainment to his friends and tutors, in celebration of his birth-day, in the country. There came with us on this occafion Antonius Julianus, the rhetorician, a public teacher of youth, a Spaniard by birth and in his accent, but a man of eloquence, and well acquainted with ancient hiftory and ancient learning. When we had finifhed eating and drinking, and the time for conversation was come, he defired that the finging men^{*} and women might enter, whom he knew ⁶ We learn from this chapter that it was cuftomary among the ancients, both in Greece and at Rome, to celebrate birthdays with mirth and feftivity. Indeed the writings of the poets of both nations abound with fo many allufions to this circumftance, that it is as unneceffary to fpecify, as it would be endlefs to enumerate them.

² Singing men.]—That the ancients had these among their other flaves, may be understood from various passages in Horace, as well as in other writers:

> Ille virentis et Doctæ pfallere Chiæ, Pulchris excubat in genis.

Vol. III.

Cc2

Sec

knew his pupil had provided, and of the beft talents. Afterwards, when the boys and girls made their appearance, they fung in a pleafant manner fome odes of Anacreon, fome of Sappho, and fome love-fongs, which were very fweet and beautiful; but we were particularly pleafed with fome beautiful lines of the old Anacreon, which I have fubjoined, in order that this my troublefome and reftlefs undertaking might find fome relief in the fweetnefs of poetical compositions :

I fummon, Vulcan, all thine art, Not to forge the fword or dart; For what are fwords or darts to me, Or what the mailed panoply? No; make me fo immenfe a bowl, That in it waves of wine may roll. I'll have no ftars, or wains, or figns, But round it carve me cluft'ring vines. Boötes hath no charms to pleafe, Nor care I for the Pleiades. Let blufhing grapes, in mimic pride, Cling round the maffy goblet's fide; The god of wine let Cupid meet All golden—and the work's complete.

See Pignorius de Servis .- Prudentius has this paffage ;

Num propter lyricæ modulamina vana puellæ, Nervorumque fonos, & convivale calentis Carmen nequitiæ, patulas deus addidit auras.

I

Many

Digitized by Google

Снар. ХІІІ.

That the Greeks call those vaves, whom we call PUMILIONES, dwarfs.

T happened that Fronto Cornelius, Feftus Pofthumius', and Apollinaris Sulpitius, were engaged in conversation in the veftibule of the palace; I was standing with fome others, who paid great attention to their discourse upon literary subjects; then faid Fronto to Apollinaris, "Inform me, Sir, I intreat you, whether it is with propriety that I omitted to call men of very low statute nanos, and preferred calling them pumiliones. I remember to have seen this word applied to them in old books; but I thought nanos a vulgar and a barbarous word." "It is true (replied Apol-

* Feftus Postbumius.]-It is by no means clear what Festus is here intended. Barthius seems to think, p. 53, that this is the same with the Julius Festus mentioned by Macrobiu3, Satur. iii. c. 8.

We learn from this, as well as other places in ancient writers, that it was customary for the learned men and philosophers to meet and converse on subjects of science, under vestibules and porticos. Barthius is at some pains to explain the fragment of Cinna preferved in this chapter; he tells us that in some manuscripts it is written, not bigis, but binis nanis.

Vol. III.

linaris) linaris) this word is frequently used by the vulgar. but it is not a barbarous word, and has a Greek origin; for the Greeks called those men varage who were of fuch low and diminutive stature that they fcarce flood above the ground. They used this term from the etymology of the word, which agrees with its meaning; and if my memory fails me not, it is used in Aristophanes's comedy of the Annanc; but this word would be naturalized by you, and planted in a Latin colony. if you will condefcend to use it; and indeed it would be much more worthy of approbation than many introduced by Laberius into the Latin language, which are very low and inelegant." Then Festus Posthumius, turning to a Latin grammarian, a friend of Fronto Apollinaris, fays, * He has told us that nanos is a Greek word ; do vou now inform us whether it be Latin, and in what author it is found ?" The grammarian, a man well versed in ancient literature, thus replied : " If it be no facrilege (faid he) to fpeak my opinion, whether any word be Greek or Latin, in the prefence of Apollinaris, I dare affure you Festus, fince you ask me, that this is a Latin word, and is to be found in the poems of Helvius Cinna, no vulgar or unlearned poet." He then cited the verfes, which, as I chance to remember, I have added:

> " At nunc me Geniana per falicta Bigis rheda rapit citata nanis."

> > CHAP.

CHAP. XIV.

Marcus Varro and Publius Nigidius, the most learned Romans of their age, were cotemporaries with Cæsar and Cicero. The treatises of Nigidius did not become popular, on account of their obscurity and subtlety '.

THE age of Marcus Cicero and Caius Cæfar had few men of diftinguished eloquence; but with respect to various learning, and the different sciences which adorn humanity, it boasted of the two columns of genius, Marcus Varro and Publius Nigidius. The records of knowledge and learning which Varro left, are in every one's hands; but Nigidius's treatises are not in common use, being neglected from their obscurity and subtlety; as those passages which I read in what he terms grammatical commentaries: from these I have made fome extracts, by ⁶ It feems odd to fay that there were few eloquent men in the time of Cicero, for there were a great many. I am therefore inclined to think with the elder Gronovius, that there is an error in the text, and that for viros paucos, we fhould read viros non, or viros haud paucos.

The talents and learning of Varro and Nigidius have been in numberless places, as the reader will remember, the subject of our author's praise.

Dd 2

way

way of example of his ftyle. In his differtation upon the nature and order of those letters which the grammarians call vowels, he has these words, which I leave unexplained for the fake of exercifing the minds of my readers. " A and O always lead, I and U always follow, E both leads and follows : in Euripo it leads, in Æmilio it If any one supposes that U leads in follows. Valerius, Vennonias, Volusius, or that I leads in jampridem, jecur, jocum, jucundum, he will be miltaken, because these letters when they lead are not vowels." In the fame book alfo is this paffage: " Between the letters N and G, another power is introduced, as in the words anguis, and angaria, anchora, increpat, incurrit, and ingenuus: in all these words not the true but an adulterate N is used; for the motion of the tongue proves it not to be the true N; if it were that letter, the tongue would touch the roof of the mouth." In another place he fays, " I do not fo much accufe the Greeks of ignorance for writing a from o and y, as for writing a from e and i. The former they did from poverty, the latter they were not compelled to by any caufe."

BQOK

Digitized by Google

BOOK XX.

CHAP. I.

Argument between Sextus Cæcilius the lawyer, and Favorinus the philosopher, upon the laws of the Twelve Tables ',

SEXTUS CÆCILIUS was eminent for his knowledge, experience, and authority in every thing which concerned legal difcipline and fkilful

A differtation on the fubject of the TWELVE TABLES of the Roman laws, might be eafily protracted to an infinite length; they have exercised the judgments and employed the pens of the ableft writers on morals, politics, and legiflation; it may perhaps be fufficient for the English reader's purpose to be briefly informed of the more material circumstances concerning them.

The foundation of the laws of the Twelve Tables may be traced to the laws of Solon. In the year of the city 299, the fenate decreed that three ambaffadors fhould be fent to Athens, not only to copy Solon's laws, but generally to examine into the conflictutions of the different flates of Greece. In confequence of this measure, ten men, called the decem-viri.

Dd 3

ful interpretation of the Romans laws. It happened, as we went to falute Cæfar, the philofopher viri, were appointed to felect, from these and other fimilar institutions, a body of laws for the Roman people.

The decemviri enacted laws which were at first infcribed on ten tables; two were afterwards added, and notwithflanding that these laws were subsequently altered, and became in time obsolete, certain it is that the principles which they inculcated ever remained, and were confidered as the fundamental basis of the Roman law, through the whole extent of that mighty empire; every noble youth got them by heart; every individual, whose object was diffinction in the fludy and pursuit of Roman jurisfprudence, confidered them as the necessfary commencement of this labours.

They were infcribed on brafs, and infpended to the public view. Some however affert, that they were engraved on wood, and others on ivory; but as Gibbon judicioufly remarks, wood, brafs, and ivory might be fucceflively employed.

The fragments of these tables may be found collected in a great variety of authors, of whom see a catalogue in Heineccius, Ant. Rom. Juris. p. 6. The book which I have examined on this subject, is that of Step. Vin. Pighius.

This note may properly enough be concluded with the following extract from Gibbon:

"Whatever might be the origin or the merit of the Twelve Tables, they obtained among the Romans that blind, and partial reverence which the lawyers of every country delight to beflow on their municipal inflitutions. The fludy is recommerded by Cicero as equally pleatant and influctive: 'They amufe the mind by the remembrance of old words and the portrait of ancient manners; they inculcate the foundeft principles of government and morals; and, I am not afraid to affirm, that the brief composition of the decemvirs furpaffes in genuine value the libraries of Grecian

OF AULUS GELLIUS. 407.

pher Favorinus approached him in the area of the palace, and converfed with him whilft I and Grecian philosophy. How admirable,' fays Tully, with honeft or affected prejudice, ' is the wildom of our anceftors, We alone are the masters of civil prudence, and our superiority is the more confpicuous, if we deign to caft our eyes. on the rude and almost ridiculous jurisprudence of Dracon, of Solon, and of Lycurgus.' The twelve tables were committed to the memory of the young and the meditation of the old; they were transcribed and illustrated with learned. diligence; they had escaped the flames of the Gauls; they fublished in the age of [ustinian; and their subsequent loss has been imperfectly reftored by the labours of modern critics. But although these venerable monuments were confidered as the rule of right and the fountain of juffice, they were overwhelmed by the weight and variety of new laws, which,. at the end of five centuries, became a grievance more intolerable than the vices of the city. Three thousand brass plates, the acts of the fenate and people, were deposited in the capitol, and fome of the acts, as the Julian law against extortion, furpaffed the number of an hundred chapters.

"The decemvirs had neglected to import the fanction of Zaleucus, which fo long maintained the integrity of his republic. A Locrian, who propofed any new law, flood forth in the affembly of the people with a cord round his neck, and if the law was rejected, the innovator was inflantly flrangled." Decline and Fall, &c. v. viii, p. q.

It may not be improper to add, that to the fragments of these Twelve Tables appeal has always been made as to the oldeft specimens of the Latin language. See Hor. Ep. 1. 2. 1. 23.

Sic fautor veterum et tabulas peccare vetantes, Quas bis quinque virum fanxerunt, fœdera regum, Vel Gabiis vel cum rigidis æquata Sabinis, Pontificum libros, annofa volumina vatum Dictitat Albano mufas in monte locutas.

D d 4

many

many others were present. Mention was made on that occasion of the laws of the decemvirs. which ten men, chosen for that purpose by the people, composed, and wrote upon twelve tab-These laws Sextus Cæcilius, who had inlets. quired into and examined the laws of many cities. declared were drawn up with elegance and all possible concisences. " This (replied Favorinus) may be the cafe in the greatest part of these laws. for I have read the Twelve Tables with no lefs avidity than 1 perused Plato's ten books on laws : vet fome of them are thought very obfcure, fome trifling, fome too harsh, others too lenient, or by no means, as they fay, confiftent." " As to their obscurities (fays Sextus Cæcilius) we must not attribute them to the fault of the composers, but to the ignorance of inattentive copiers, although they too may be free from blame, who do not understand what is written; for length of time will obliterate the meaning of words and cuftoms, by which words and cuftoms the purport of the laws are to be comprehended, for these laws were framed and written in the three hundredth year after the building of Rome, from which time to this day not much less than feven hundred years have elapfed. What can be thought harfh in those laws, unless you think that law harsh which punishes with death, any judge or legal arbitrator convicted of taking a bribe? or which delivers any thief taken in the fact to the fervitude of him him upon whom the theft was committed? or which allows any one to kill a nightly robber? Tell me, I beg, you who are fo anxious in the. purfuit of wildom, tell me, do not you think either of these crimes deserving of death; either the perfidy of the judge, exposing to fale his oath, contrary to all laws human and divine, the intolerable audacity of an open robber, or the treacherous violence of a nightly plunderer?" " Do not (fays Favorinus) enquire of me what I think, for you know, that according to the ulage of my fect I rather examine than determine; but the judgment of the Roman people is not trifling or defpicable, and they have thought these laws too fevere against crimes which they yet allow fhould be punished; they have indeed fuffered them, from their fanguinary tendency, to become obfolete, and die away with difuse and old age; they have also reprobated that law as too rigid, by which, if any perfor. under an indictment is unable from difease or age. to appear in court, no litter is allowed him, but. he is taken up, put on horfeback, and like a dead body as it were conveyed to the prætor's tribunal. When fick and unable to defend himfelf, why should he thus be given into the power. of his adverfary? I faid alfo, there were fome. laws much too' lenient; does not that appear fo to you which is intended to punish common injuries ? If any one have injured his neighbour, let him him be fined twenty-five pieces of brafs? Who is there fo poor that the penalty of twenty-five pence would deter him from injuring any one? which law your friend Labeo complained of in his book upon the Twelve Tables. Lucius Neratius, fays he, was an infamous fellow, and of great brutality; he took delight in ftriking a free man in the face with the palm of his hand : a fervant followed him with a purfe of money, and whenever he ftruck a man, he ordered, according to the law, twenty-five pence to be counted out to him; for which reafon, fays he, the prætors thought proper to fuffer this law to become obfolete, and appointed perfons to redrefs cafes of fimilar injury. Some alfo of thefe laws, I obferved, appeared inconfiftent, as that law of retaliation, the words of which, if my memory does not fail me, are thefe: ' If any one hath broken another's limb, unlefs fatisfaction is made, retaliation shall be had.' Now, not to mention the cruelty of revenge, a just retaliation cannot take place; for fuppofe he whofe limb is fractured infifts on retaliation, how, I ask, can he contrive to break the limb of the other exactly in the fame manner? In this occurs at first fightan inexplicable difficulty : if the other shall have broken his limb unintentionally, it ought to be retaliated unintentionally; for a chance blow and a premeditated one do not fall under the fame predicament; for in the execution of this law, law, how can any one imitate an undefigned action, when he has authority only to act undefignedly? but if the fact have been committed with defign, the criminal will not fuffer himfelf to be more deeply or feverely wounded, and by what weight or measure this can be avoided I do not understand: moreover, if retaliation have taken place in a greater degree, or in any degree different, it will become an act of abfurd cruelty, as an indictment may be brought on the other fide for mutual retaliation, and a perpetual contention of this fort must arise. As to the cruelty of cutting and dividing the human body, if a debtor be brought to justice at the fuit of many claimants, it difgufts me to think or to fpeak of it; for what can appear more favage, what more flocking to humanity, than that the limbs and joints of a poor debtor should be lacerated by a very fhort procefs of butchery, whereas now their goods are exposed to fale." Then Sextus Czcilius, embracing Favorinus-" You are (favs he) the only man within my knowledge, skilled with equal accuracy in the Grecian and Roman history; for what philosopher is so intimately and thoroughly acquainted with the principles of his own fect, as you have shewn yourself to be with the laws of our decemvirs; but I request you to depart a little from this lofty mode of difputation, and laying alide your zeal for argument, attentively confider what it is you have been cenfuring; furing; do not despise the antiquity of those laws, because the Romans have generally ceased to use them; for you cannot but know that the occafions upon which laws are framed, as remedies for the bad morals of the times, or to answer state exigencies, and for present advantage, are in perpetual effervescence, perpetually new modelled, and never permanent; nay, like the face of the fky, or the fea; they are ever varying with the feasons of human events and of fortune. What feemed more falutary than that law of Solon for . determining the measurement of land? what more useful than the Voconian law for regulating the fortunes of women? what was thought fo neceffary for the purpole of checking the luxury of the citizens as the Licinian, the Fannian and other fumptuary laws? yet all these are obliterated and overwhelmed by the opulence of the state, as by the waves of a foaming fea; but how is it that which of all others is in my judgment a most humane law, should to you appear cruel, which provides a carriage for an old or a fick man. when called into court? The words of the law are thefe: ' If one call another to justice, and difeafe or age prevent his appearance, let the appellant provide him a beaft; if he refuse to come, let him provide no litter;' but you, perhaps, think that by difease is here meant a grievous fickness with a violent fever and ague, and that a beast of burthen means any one animal - capable capable of carrying him, and therefore you furpofe it cruel for a fick man, lying at home, to be dragged on the back of fome beaft to a court of justice; but this, my Favorinus, is by no means the cafe, for the difeafe alluded to by the law is not a fever, nor any other which justifies alarm, but rather fome weaknefs or indifpolition, and not any dangerous complaint; nay, thefe lawgivers in another place speak of a complaint which carries with it a power of materially injuring the patient, not fimply as a complaint, but a noxious difease; and the word jumentum (beast of burthen) does not bear merely the fignification which we give it, but means any vehicle which was drawn by cattle yoked together. Our ancestors derived the word a jungendo. The litter (arcera) was a covered carriage inclosed on every fide, like a large cheft, supplied with blankets, in which very fick or old men were conveyed in a reclining posture. Where then appears the hardship, if a vehicle be allowed a poor man fummoned into court, yet unable to appear from fome circumstance either of helplessnefs or lamenefs, though he fhould not be allowed the delicacy of a litter, fince the conveyance was fufficient for his purpose. They did this, that the excuse of fickness might not produce perpetual pretext for delay in people doubtful of their cause, and defirous to postpone their fuits. Observe too, relative to the penalty of twenty-twenty-five pence for injuries; they did n out all injuries for fo triffing a fum; yet. was this fmall fum a great weight of bra the affes circulated at that time weighed a t but they punished heavier crimes, fuch as ing a bone, not only of a free man, but of a by a heavier penalty; but for fome offence put in force the law of retaliation, which you, my friend, cenfured rather unjuftly. contended with fome facetioufnefs, that it w confiftent, fince the revenge could not be par with the crime, nor (as you fay) cou limb be broken exactly like another. It i my Favorinus, that circumftantial retaliation very rarely take place, but the decemvirs v to check and extinguish any violent atter wound another, thought it might be ref by terror. Nor if any one broke the l another, and was unwilling to buy off the retaliation, did they think fuch cognizan to be taken of the matter, as to confider w it was done willingly or otherwife; bu either inflicted punifhment by retaliation e or by an equivalent retaliation; but they wifhed that the fame pain of mind fhould cited, and the fame force exercifed in br the fame part of the body, for it is the m of fatisfaction that is to be accomplifhed, a the extent of the accident. Now if this be as I explain it, your arguments on the reta 3 retaliation are rather ingenious than true; but fince you think this kind of punifhment cruel. what hardship, I beg, is there, if the fame thing be inflicted on you, which you have inflicted on another, particularly when you have the power of compounding the matter, and need not fuffer retaliation unless you choose it? What prætorian edict can be more laudable than this, in taking cognizance of injuries ? You must also remember, that this law of retaliation is necessarily fubject to the difcretion of the judge, for if the accufed perfon, unwilling to compound, refufed to fubmit to the judge pronouncing fentence of retaliation, the judge, after weighing the circumstances of the cafe, fined him a fum of money : therefore, if the composition required was too hard, and the law too fevere to the criminal, the feverity of the law became reduced to a penalty of money. It remains now to fpeak of that which appeared most cruel to you, the incision and division of the body. By the practice and cultivation of every species of virtue, the Roman people, from a trifling origin, role to a great eminence of power; they respected above all things integrity, and, whether public or private, held it facred. With this fpirit the nation gave up its confuls, the greatest men of the state, to the enemy, as hoftages for the public faith. On this account they confidered a client, profeffedly received under protection, as nearer than their relations, relations, and to be defended even against the own kindred; nor was any offence deemed mor heinous than for any one to have been prove guilty of defrauding a client. This degree of faith our anceftors fanctioned, not only in publi offices, but in contracts between private mer and particularly in the borrowing and interchang of money, for they thought this temporary relie to poverty, which every fituation of life fome times wants, ruined, if the perfidy of debtor escaped without fevere punishment; when there fore the debt was acknowledged, thirty days wer allowed for the purpofe of collecting money to pay it, and those days the decemvirs called justi, a if a certain ceffation of the law took place, during which time no legal fuit could proceed again them. Afterwards, in failure of payment, the were funimoned before the prætor, and accufer by their profecutors; they were then put in fet ters. Thefe, I believe, are the words of the law "To perfons (and their property) convicted o debt, let thirty days indulgence be granted; after wards lay hands on him, bring him to justice unlefs he give fatisfaction; or if any one mak refistance, bind him and bring him in a halter, o in chains, of neither more nor lefs weight that fifteen pounds; if he choofe, let him maintai himfelf, if not, let the perfon who binds him, giv as many pounds of corn a day as he choose to have.' In the mean time a power was grante of compounding, and if they did not agree, criminals were confined fixty days, in the course of which time they were brought before the prætor on three fucceeding court days, and the amount of their debt was declared ; on the third court, they were capitally condemned, or fent beyond the Typer to be fold; but they rendered this punishment of death terrible by its shew of horror, and loaded it with new terrors, for the fake, as I faid, of rendering credit facred; for if there were more than one accufer, the laws permitted them to cut and divide the convict's body. And left you should think that I fear the odium of the law being infifted on, I will repeat its words: ' On the third court day, let them cut it into parts; if they have cut more or lefs, let the division be without fraud." Nothing indeed can be more favage or cruel than this appears to be; but a cruel punishment was decreed, that they might never be obliged to have recourse to We now fee many people accufed, and in it. fetters, because profligate men despise the punishment. I have never read or heard of any man being diffected according to the ancient law, whole feverity was not to be flighted. Do you think, Favorinus, if that punishment decreed by the Twelve Tables against false witnesses had not become obfolete, and that now, as formerly, any one convicted of perjury was thrown from the Tarpeian rock, we should see fo many as we do VOL. III. Ee guilty

AIO THE ATTIC NIGHTS

418 THE ATTIC NIGHTS guilty of the crime? The feverity of a just punifhment is frequently the caufe of a cautious and proper mode of life. The ftory of the Alban, Metius Sufetius, I, who read few books of hiftory, well remember. He had perfidioufly broken a treaty made with the king of the Romans, and was torn to pieces by two horfes, to which he was bound, dragging different ways. This, no one denies, was an unheard of and cruel punishment; but observe the remark of the most elegant of poets:

Thy word is facred, Alban, keep it ever." When Sextus Cæcilius had thus difcourfed, with the approbation and applaufe of Favorinus, and of all prefent, it was faid that Cæfar made his appearance, and we feparated.

CHAP. II.

The meaning of (fiticinem) a trumpeter, in Ca

HE word fiticines occurs in the orati Marcus Cato entitled veteri, ubi novus venerit." He uses sticine. liticines, and tubicines; but Cefellius Vinc his Commentaries, fays, he knows that the liticines play on the inftrument called lituus, the tubicines on the tuba, but as to the fiticines, he ingenuoufly acknowledges he does not know what their inftrument is; but in the collection of remarks by Capito Atteus, I find those perfons called fiticines, who are accustomed to play on an inftrument, apud fitos¹, that is among the dead and the buried, and that they had a particular kind of pipe.

Sitos.]—Perfons who were in any way buried, were properly faid to be fiti; they were not fepulti unlefs they had obtained the full rites of Roman fepulture, the body burnt, and the afhes collected. The Cornelian family at Rome perfifted in the old cuftom of burying the body without burning till within the time of Cicero; hence, fays that writer, Ennius properly applied the exprefion, fitus, on the tomb of one of that family, Scipio Africanus. The first of the patrician Cornelii, fays he, who had his body burnt, was Sylla. The epitaph of Scipio Africanus there alluded to, was this:

> Heic est ille fitus, quoi nemo ceivi', neque hostis Quibit pro facteis reddere operæ pretium.

Here is he plac'd, to whom nor foe nor friend Can give a praife his life did not transcend.

The words of Cicero are, "Declarat etenim Ennius de Africano, beic est ille stuur. Vere nam stiti dicuntur ii qui conditi sunt. Nec tamen eorum ante sepulcrum est quam justa facta, et corpus incensum est." De Leg. iii. 22. He adds, that those merely buried were also faid in early times to be bumati, though the expression was afterwards extended to all who were sepuli.

Ee 2

Снар.

CHAP. III.

Wby L. Accius the poet, " in Pragmaticis," calls ficinniftas an obscure word.

W HAT common people call ficiniftas, they who are better informed call ficinniftas, with a double n. The ficinnium ' was an ancient kind of dance. They who now ftand ftill and fing, formerly danced when they fang. L. Accius has ufed this word " in Pragmaticis." They were called ficinniftas, fays he, nebulofo nomine, an obfcure word. He ufed the word nebulofo, I prefume, becaufe he did not comprehend the meaning of ficinnium.

^a Sicinnium.]—Sicinnis was a fpecies of dance ufed by the Greeks to accompany the fatyric poetry. It is faid by Athenzus to have been fo named from its inventor Sicinnus, who, according to fome authors, was a barbarian, according to others a Gretan.—Athen. 1. and 14. Silenus, in the prologue to the Cyclops of Euripides, the only fatyric drama extant, fays:

ώμων κρόδος Σικινιδων Όμοιος ύμιν νυν τι, χ' ώτι βαχχιώ Κωμοι συνασπιζοιδις Αλθαιας δομυς Περοητ', αοιδαις βαεδιτων σαυλυμινοι;

-Do my Sicinnian founds Ás lively touch you now, as when you went With Bacchus' train rejoicing, and with lyres Striking gay numbers, to Althæa's houfe?

Some have endeavoured to derive ficinnis from ximple, but unhappily enough.

Снар.

CHAP. IV.

Attachment to players was diffonourable and reproachful. A paffage from Aristoile upon that fubjet.

A Certain rich youth, a pupil of the philofopher Taurus, was attached to and delighted with the company of players ' and muficians. The Greeks call these people " artificers of Bacchus." Taurus desirous of drawing off this youth from

* Players, &c.]-Gerard Vossius, who is feldom incorrect in his accounts of the ancients, fays, that actors were highly efteemed among the Greeks, but held in a very low light by the Romans. Inft. Poet. ii. 10. As a proof of the former affertion, he mentions that Æschines the prator was originally a player; but the inftance is rather unfortunately chofen, fince this very occupation is made a fubject of reproach against him by his antagonist Demosthenes, in his oration for the crown, who more than once calls him, in contempt, w reiraywiisa, "You low actor;" and Suidas fays expressly, Αισχινής 10 πολλοις σχωπίεται ύπο Δημοσθινός ώς ύποreilas rearudiur-" Aschines is often reviled by Demosthenes " as having been a tragic actor." With respect to the Romans, it is true that in the early times of the republic actors were despised; but Æsopus and Roscius were held in high honour, and were noticed and efteemed by the first men in Rome. Thefe, however, it may be faid, were only illuftrious exceptions. The profession in itself was never held honourable in either country. The reasons given by Arif-Ec 3 totle from the company and intimacy of these players, pointed out to him a passage from Aristotle's Universal Questions, and defired him to study them daily. "Why are the artificers of Bacchus for the most part worthless people? Is it that they are little accustomed to the pursuit of wisdom and philosophy, and the greatest part of their life is confumed in the necessary occupation of their art, and much of their time is spent in intemperance and poverty, each of which is an incitement to wickedness?"

totle are very found; and the fame caufes have continued in all ages and countries to produce the fame effects; they who make themfelves exceptions to this general rule are the more to be honoured, as they preferve their dignity of character in a fituation very likely to undermine it.

One of the reproaches of Demosfhenes to Æfchines on his original profession is, " ανθεωπιον υδων εξαρχης ύγιες πεποιηκος, υδ' ελευθεςον αυτοτζαγικος πιθηκος, αευζαίος Οιιομαυς." " A fellow that from the first never did any thing good or worthy of a free man; a mere tragic ape, a rustic Ænomaus," &c. cap. 71.—In chap. 79 and 80, he still more fully expatiates on this low origin of his rival, and comparing himself with him, fays, "You danced; I furnished the entertainment—you were an actor; I a spectator—you were hissed off; I was among the hisser," &c. Many other farcasims on the same subject are thrown out in every part of that oration.

CHAP:

Снар. V.

Specimens of letters which are faid to have paffed between king Alexander and the philosopher Ariftotle'.

THE philosopher Aristotle, the instructor of Alexander, is faid to have had two kinds of lectures, which he delivered to his pupils, one of which he called exoteric, the other acroatic. Those were called exoteric which involved the study of rhetoric, logical subtleties, and a knowledge of politics; those were called acroatic, ³ The fubjects difcuffed in this chapter, and the anecdote with which it concludes, must be necessarily too familiar to every reader to justify my detaining them by any tedious note.

The diffinction of Aristotle's lectures and followers, as here specified, was not the invention of that philosopher, but was probably borrowed from the Ægyptians, among whom there were public and secret doctrines, as well as among the Persian Magi and the Indian Brahmans.

Plutarch relates at length the anecdote here recorded in his hiftory of Alexander, and it may alfo be found in Stanley's Lives of the Philosophers. The letters themselves have always been justly admired for their dignified simplicity.

Acroamatic difcourfes are those, fays H. Stephens, which cannot from their depth be understood without hearing the speaker viva voce, and acroatic books are those which contain such difcourses.

VOL. III.

Ee4

which

414 THE ALLIC NIGHTS

which had concern with a more profound and recondite philosophy, and which related to the contemplation of natural objects and dialectic discussions. To the cultivation of this science which I have called the acroatic, he gave up the morning in the Lyceum; nor did he admit any perfon to this lecture till he had previoufly made examination concerning his talents, his elementary knowledge, and his zeal and industry in the pursuit of learning. The exoteric lectures he delivered in the fame place, in the evening, to all young men that chofe, without exception: this he called destivor megimator, the evening walk, the other iwfivor, the morning walk; for he fpoke on each of these occasions walking; and he fo divided his books, containing remarks upon all these subjects, that part of them were called exotèric and part acroatic. These latter, as foon as king Alexander knew that he had published, although he at that time held almost all A fia under his arms, and was overpowering king Darius by his attacks and victories, yet amidst all thefe toils he wrote to Aristotle, complaining that he had done amifs in having made public those acroatic lectures, in which he had himfelf been instructed; " for (fays he) in what other circumstance can I excel the rest of the world, if the things which I have learned from you be made common? for I would rather excel in learning than in power and wealth." Ariftotle thus replied to him: "The acreatic books, which which you complain are made public, and not hidden as fecrets, know that they are neither published nor hidden, fince they will be intelligible only to those who have my exposition of them." But I have fubjoined the fpecimens of their correspondence taken from a publication of Andronicus' the philosopher, and I cannot but much admire the fine texture of elegant brevity which diftinguishes each epiftle. " Alexander to Aristotle, health. You have not acted well in publishing your acroatic lectures; for wherein shall I hereafter excel, if the instructions which I have received from you be made common to all: for I would rather excel in the most honourable, than in the most powerful acquisitions. Farewel." " Aristotle to king Alexander, health. You have written to me concerning my acroatic lectures, thinking that they ought to be preferved and not communicated; know that they are communicated, but not made public; for they are in the possession only of those who hear me. Farewell." Studying how to express the phrase, EUVETON YES HON (for they are in the possession of) in one word, I have found no other mode than that adopted by Marcus Cato in the feventh of his Origines, where he fays, " Itaque ego cognobiliorem cognitionem effe arbitror."

² Andronicus.]—This Andronicus was called Andronicus the Rhodiau; he was a Peripatetic philosopher, and wroto commentaries upon Aristotle.

I

Снар.

Снар. VI.

Enquiry whether HABEO CURAM VESTRI, OF HA-BEO CURAM VESTRUM, be most proper ".

I WAS afking Apollinaris Sulpitius, whom I attended when I was a young man at Rome, by what rule the following phrafe was ufed, " babeo curam veftri," or " mifereor veftri," for the cafe in which veftri is ufed appears to be the nominative. He replied, " What you now afk, has been with myfelf a perpetual fubject of enquiry; for it feems that we ought to fay not veftri but veftrum, as the Greeks do, επιμελεμαι υμων, and xndopas υμων, in which inftance, υμων is more properly veftrum than veftri, which is the nominative cafe, or, as you call it, the cafus restus. However, I find in many inftances, noftri

¹ These lines, from the Cheat of Plautus, occur in the, beginning of act the first, and are thus rendered by Mr. Warner:

If from your filence, Sir, I could but learn With what fad cares you pine thus wretchedly, Gladly I'd fave the troubling of two perfons, Myfelf in afking, you in anfwering.

With refpect to the terminations westrum and westri, it is usual in all modern grammars to use them indifferently, and to say westrum vel westri.

and

and vestri used, and not nostrum and vestrum. Lucius Sylla, in his second book of Annals, fays, "Quo si fieri potest ut etiam nunc nostri vobis in mentem veniat. Nosque magis dignos creditis quibus civibus quam hostibus utamini, quique pro vobis potius quam contra vos pugnemus, neque nostro neque majorum nostrorum merito nobis id continget." Terence too in his Phormio:

" Ita plerique ingenio fumus, omnes nostri nosmet pœnitet."

And Afranius in his Togata:

" Nescio quid nostri miseritus tandem Deus."

And Laberius in his Necromantia:

Dum diutius detinetur, nostri oblitus est.

There is no doubt but each of these phrases, nostri oblitus est, and nostri miseritus est, is spoken in the same case as mei miseritus est, and mei oblitus est; but mei is the interrogative case, which the grammarians call the genitive, and is declined from ego, of which the plural is nos. Tui in the same manner comes from tu, and its plural is vos; for so Plautus has declined them in his Pseudulus, in the following lines:

Si ex te tacente fieri possem certior, here, Quæ miseriæ te tam miserè macerent, Duorum labori ego hominum parsissem lubens, Mei te rogandi, & tui respondendi mihi.

Plautus

Plautus here derives mei not from meus, but from ego, as if you should fay, " patrem mei," for " patrem meum," as the Greeks use " TOV TATEDA μ_8 ." By the fame rule you may defend Plautus's ulage of labori mei, for labori meo, which though not common, is perfectly proper. This rule applies to the plural number likewife, which Gracchus used, when he faid, " milereri vestrum," and Marcus Cicero, " contentio vestrum," and " contentio noftrum;" according to which Quadrigarius, in the nineteenth of his Annals, has these words : " C. Mari et quando te nostrum & reipublice miserabitur ?" Why then should Terence use, " pænitet nostri," and not " panitet nostrum ;" and Afranius, "nostri miseretus," instead of " nos-11.11m ?" I can conceive no reason for this, except the authority of antiquity, which paid little attention to accuracy of fpeaking; for thus oftentives vestrorum has been made use of for vestrum, as in that line from Plautus's Mustellaria:

" Verum illuc esse maxima pars vestrorum" intelliget."

Where most people would fay vestrum; fo fometimes too vestri is called vestrum; but doubtless he who is defirous to speak with the most forupulous propriety would fay vestrum rather than vestri; most unseasonably therefore have they acted, who in many passages of Sallust have corrupted the purity of his composition; for where where Salluft wrote—" Sæpe majores vestrum miferti plebis Romanæ," they have erased vestrum, and substituted vestri, which blunder has been now regularly admitted into various copies. I remember Apollinaris told me this, and I noted what he said at the time it was spoken.

CHAP. VII.

Different opinions of the Greeks on the number of Niobe's children'.

THE variety of accounts to be met with among the Greek poets about the number of Niobe's children is really ridiculous; for Homer fays fhe had twelve boys and girls, Euripides that fhe had fourteen, Sappho gives her eighteen, Bacchylides and Pindar twenty, whilft other writers affirm that fhe had but three.

¹ The names of the Greek poets mentioned in this chapter are fufficiently familiar, except perhaps that of Bacchylides. Of this perfonage Suidas gives the following account: he was a native of Cos, a relation of the lyric poet Simonides, and a writer of lyrics himfelf. He wrote verfes in praife of Hiero, and fome of his fragments have been preferved.

Снар.

430 THE ATTIC NIGHTS

CHAP. VIII.

Of things which appear to have a fympathy with the rifing and waning moon.

A NNIANUS' the poet, in his Falifian farm, ufed to celebrate the time of the vintage with mirth and pleafure. At this feafon he invited me and fome other friends; a large quantity of oyfters' was fent for our fupper from Rome:

• Annianus.]-This perfonage flourished in the time of Trajan: he is mentioned before, book vii. chap. 7.

² Oyfters.]—The effect of the moon on objects animate and inanimate was in the zges of ignorance and fuperflition almoft indefinite. It has been the province of philofophy, chaftened and improved by experiment, to afcertain these influences, and to confine them within their proper limits.—" Thou knoweft an oyfter may be croffed in love," fays the poet; but that they decreafed with the decreafing moon is, I should suppose, alike difficult of proof and of belief.

All that Gellius here fays concerning the eyes of cata originates without doubt in what Plutarch observes of that animal in his tract of Isis and Ofiris. What is intended by the commentary on Hesiod cannot so well be imagined. The expression of Plutarch in the above-mentioned tract is this:

"The true reason why the priests abominate and avoid onions is, that the onion is the only one of all plants which increases in bulk as the moon decreases."

The

OF AULUS GELLIUS. 431

Rome: when they were placed before us, and, though numerous, were poor and thin; "the moon (fays Annianus) is now growing old, on which account oyfters, like other things, are meagre and out of order." When we enquired what other things became poor as the moon decreased, "Do you not remember (fays he) what Lucilius fays?

Luna alit oftrea, & implet echinos, muribus fibras & pecu addit.

Shell-fifh and oyfters with the moon increase; And mice and cattle strengthen with her growth."

The Œlurus was certainly among the Ægyptian deities. See Juvenal, 15. 7.

> Illic cœruleos, hic pisces fluminis, illic Oppida tota canem venerantur, nemo Dianam.

It is not poffible to make any meaning of cœruleos. Brodæus propofes to read illic œluros.

See Herodotus, b. 2. where a whimfical account is given of the methods taken by the ancient Ægyptians to prevent the growth of cats. To these superflitions of the Ægyptians Milton thus alludes:

> Often there appeared A crew who under names of old renown,

Ofiris, Ifis, Orus, and their train,

With monstrous shapes and forceries abused

Fanatic Ægypt and her priefts to feek

Their wandering gods disguised in brutish forms,

Rather than human, &c.

And

432 THE ATTIC NIGHTS

And the fame things which thrive with the increafing moon fall away as the moon decreafes. The eyes of cats, according to these changes of the moon, become larger or finaller; but the most remarkable circumstance is what I read in Plutarch's fourth commentary upon Hessiod. The onion grows and buds as the moon decreases, but dries up while the month is young. This, according to the Ægyptian priests, is the reason why the Pelusiotæ do not eat an onion; because that is the only herb which observes changes of diminution and increase opposite to the increase and waning of the moon.

CHAP.

OF AULUS GELLIUS, 433

CHAP. IX.

A paffage which pleased Antonius Julianus, from the Mimiambi of Cnæus Mattius.

A NTONIUS JULIANUS faid his ears were gratified by the found of fome words introduced by Cnæus Mattius, a man of learning, fuch as the following, which he related from that author's "Mimiambics:"

" Sinuque amicam reficere ' frigidam caldo.

" Columbatim 2 labra conferens labris."

H¢

* Reficere.]—For reficere, as it cannot be admitted confiftently with the metre, Voffius would read reficit. I would propose refice.

² Columbulatim.]—This is a very favourite image with the ancient Latin writers of amatory verfes, as well as of the moderns who professed to imitate them.—See Martial:—

Amplexa collum bafioque tam longo Blandita quam funt nuptia columbarum.

The Basia of Johannes Secundus abound with fimilar paifages. The idea is however peculiar to the ancients, at least I do not remember to have feen it imitated either in French or English. The similies borrowed from the fondness of turtles, are of a very different kind. Where Shak-

Vol.	III.	Ff	fpeare

434 THE ATTIC NIGHTS

He thought likewife the following fentence elegantly formed:

" Jam tonfiles tapetes ebrii fuco,

" Quos concha purpura imbuens venenavit."

And this alfo:

Dein coquenti vafa cuneta dejettat, Nequamne sitamenta pipulo poscit.

fpeare fays, "Like to a pair of loving turtle doves," I am not certain whether the image of tendernefs intended to be imprefied, is not borrowed from the foft and melancholy tone remarkable in the notes of this bird.

CHAP.

Снар. Х.

Meaning of the phrafe, ex jure manum consertum¹.

THE phrafe, "ex jure manum confertum," is taken from old pleadings; it was ufed in all law-fuits, and is now introduced before the prætor. I was afking a grammarian of fome note in Rome, what was the meaning of thofe words? He, looking at me with contempt, replied, "You either miftake me, or you are jefting; I am a grammarian, not a lawyer. If you want to know any thing of Virgil, Plautus or Ennius, you may enquire of me." "Well, Sir,"

^a The literal meaning of manum conferere, is to fight hand to hand, and is taken from war. In the legal actions to which this chapter alludes, the contending parties are faid to have croffed two rods before the prætor, as if emblematical of an engagement, and the party who was overcome refigned his rod to his adverfary. According to the laws of the Twelve Tables, the prefumption in controversies of this kind was always in favour of the possessor. The term vindicia, which occurs in the conclusion of the chapter, is alfo a law term, not very cafily to be rendered in English, and about which indeed commentators are greatly at variance. Vindicia is by fome interpreted to be the rod which the two parties broke in pieces in a feigned conteft before the prætor. Vindicias dare, is to give possession of the matter in difpute. All these particulars are sufficiently illustrated by Adams, in his Roman Antiquities.

Ff 2

faid

ATTIC NIGHTS THE A 36

faid I, " the paffage I enquire about comes from Ennius." He, wondering at a fentence fo foreign from poetry, declared that it was no where found in Ennius; I however repeated these lines from the eighth book of his Annals; for it happened that I remembered the passage more particularly than any other lines :

Pellitum è medio sapientia, vi geritur res. Spernitur orator bonus, horridus miles amatur. Haud doctis dictis certantes sed maledictis. Miscent inter sese inimicitias agitantes, Non ex jure manum confertum, fed mage ferro Rem repetunt, regnumque petunt, vadunt folidâ vi.

When I had repeated these lines from Ennius, " Now," faid the grammarian, " I believe you, and would have you credit me when I fay that Ennius learnt this not from his poetical studies, but from fome lawyer; and you may have them explained from the fame fource whence Ennius learnt them." I took the advice of this master, when he recommended it to me to apply for that information from another, which he ought to have given me himfelf; and I have thought proper to infert in these commentaries, what I have learnt from lawyers and their books, becauje people who live in bufinefs, and in the world, ought not to be ignorant of the common terms which express a civil fuit at law. Manum conferere is applied to the fubject of difpute, whether 9 ther an eftate or any thing elfe, when the opponents each took hand. This ceremony of fixing the hand together on the fpot where the fubiect of difpute was, which took place in the prefence of the przetor, according to the laws of the Twelve Tables, whereon was written-" Si qui in jure manum conferunt;" if any fix the hand together according to law; but afterwards, when the boundaries of Italy were extended, the prætors being fully engaged in giving judgment and other business, were much troubled to superintend these causes where the subject of dispute was diftant, and it was decreed by a bye-law, contrary to the Twelve Tables, that the litigants should no longer fix the hand together in the prefence of the prætor, but that one should fummon the other, according to law, to fix the hand together upon the fubject in difpute. Vifiting together the difputed land, each took up from it a portion of land, this they produced in the prefence of the prætor, and plead for that clod as for the whole eftate. Ennius, therefore, willing to express that here was no legal dispute before the prætor, but the real violence and efforts of war, compared this fixing of the hand, and innocent contest, which takes place betwixt the tongues and not the arms of men, with warlike and fanguinary violence.

OF AULUS GELLIUS. 437

Ff3

Снар.

•

CHAP. XI.

Meaning of the word SCULNA in Varro'.

PUBLIUS LAVINIUS's book is not unworthy the attention of the curious; its title is, "De Verbis fordidis." that which is vulgarly called fculna (a mediator) fays he, is as it were *feculna, which people more attentive to elegance call *fequeftris. Each word is formed from *fequor, becaufe either part follows the faith of him who is chofen to prefide over them. Publius Lavinius remarks, in the fame publication, that the word fculna is ufed by Marcus Varro in that differtation entitled "Catus." That which was left in cuftody of a mediator was expressed thus, with an adverb, *fequeftro, positive. Cato fays of Ploterus againft Thermus:

Per deos immortales, nolite vos fequestro ponere,

^{*} The reader will receive material illustration on the fubject of this chapter, by confulting the Adversaria of Barthius, p. 1270.

IN PEX.

E

The Figures preceded by a small n, refer to the Notes at the N. B. bottom of the pages.

А.

ABDERAME, the Moor, ftory Aius, the god, iii. 247 Albinus, Aulus, ii. 291 of, ii. 22, n. 2 Alcibiades, ftory of, mi. 173 Abundance, the occasion of want, ii. 160 Academics, how different from the iii. 9, n. 1 n. 2. Pyrrhonians, ii. 285 Accents of the ancients, iii. 15, n. 1 iii. 9 Accius the poet, ii. 89, n. 2. iii. 41 n. 1 Acroflic, antiquity of the, iii. 125, tween, iii. 423 Aljenus, ii. 13. ib. n. 1 n. < Actions, quality of, depends on cirtaking fire, iii. 134 cumítances, iii. 313 Amaracus, i. xv, n. 16 Actors, ii. 68, n. 1. iii. 421 -----, anecdote of one, ii. 68 Adoption, cultom of, i. 331 Adultery, punishments of, ii. 258, 259, n. 3 i. 161 Adverbs, ii. 369, 371 Adiles, curule, i. 238, n. 1. 268, n. 2. iii. 36 - of the people, ii. 210, n. 1 n. 2 Æditimus, meaning of, ii. 354 Ælius, L. i. 144, n. 4. ii. 37, n. 1 - Cato, i. 236, n. 9 i. 328 Æmilius, 2. i. 200 Annianus, ii. 70 Ænigmas, ii. 345 -, curious cuftom respect-42, 11. 3 ing, at Athens, iii. 359, n. I Æsop, i. 172. ib. n. 1 Afranius the poet, ii. 219 Age, respect paid to, i. 128 n. 1 -, distinctions of, ii. 271 Ff4

Agnomen, what, i. 54, n. 11 Agrippa, fignification of, iii. 245

Alexander, continence of, ii. 21

- -, on the birth of, ii. 144,
- -, his letter to his mother, and Ariftotle, letters be-

Alum faid to prevent wood from Ambarvales, fratres, ii. 20

Aminiguity of words, ii. 300

Ammonius Saccas, i. 290, n. 2

Analogy and anomaly in language,

Androchus and the lion, i. 317

Andronicus the philosopher, iii. 425,

Anger, observations on, i. 95

- Annals, diftinguished from history,
- Antiquity, childifh fondnefs for, 1.

Anton, M. anecdote of, ii. 81

- Apion, Pliftonices, i. 317. ii. 21, 73,
- Apollinaris, Sulpitius, ftory of, iii. 334 Apologies,

Apologies, ii. 291

Appius, Cacus, ii. 210, n. 2

Approbation, on expreffing, i. 283. ib. n. 2 Arcefilaus, the philosopher, i. 194

- Architas's wooden pigeon, ii. 222
- Arcopagites, ii. 348, n. 1
- Argei, il. 231, n. 15
- Arim . spi, ii. 147
- Arion, ftory of, iii. 251
- Arificas, ii. 145, n. 2
- Ariflephanes, quotation from, i. 67
- by, i. 191, n. 8 Aristotle, letter from Philip of Macedon to, ii. 144
- ceffor, iii. 12
- tween, iii. 423
- Arifloxenus, i. 262, n. 3
- Artemifia, ttory of, ii. 240
- Arteries and veins, opinions of the ancients refpecting, iii. 352
- Arvales, fratres, ii. 20
- Afellio, Sempronius, i. 126
- Afinius Gallus, iii. 255, n. 1
- Afpirate, on the use of the, i. 103 Affiduus, meaning of, iii. 229, 231, n. 2
- Aftrologers, iii. 91
- Atellanus, what, ii. 261, n. 3
- Atimian law, remarks on the, iii. 278
- Atque, fignification of, ii. 272
- Atta, Quinctius, ii. 77, n. 3
- Augurate, high dignity of the, i. 54, n. 10
- Augustus, style of, ii. 260, n. 1 , wrote his letters in cypher,
- iü. 152, n. 3
- Avarice debilitates both body and mind, i. 178
- Avarus, whether fimple or compound, ii. 209
- Axioms, what fo called by the ancients, iii. 222

В.

Babrias, i. 175, n. 2

Bacchylides, iii. 429, n. 1 Bakers, iii. 176, n. 1 Barbari/mus, not used by the ancients, iii. 1 5 Barbers sbops, places for news of old, ii. 71, n. 3 Baffus, Ventidius, iii. 143 Baths, Roman, magnificence of, i. 178, n. 1 Battle of Pharfalia foretold in Italy, iii. 174 Beards, cuftoms relative to, i. 192. ib. n. 2. 193, n. 3 Beauty, female, remarks on, i. 30$ Beds of the Romans, ii. 331, n. 4 Bidentes, fignification of, iii. 216 Birthdays celebrated by the ancients; iii. 387, n. 1 Births, numerous, ii. 196 Blu/bing, iii. 378. ib. n. 1 Bonus, use of, iii. 176, n. 1

Books, fine titles of, i. iv. x, n. 3

- -, purchased at great prices, i. 225 -, publicly burnt, first instance of,
- i. 288, n. 1 Bravery, fignal inftance of, i. 196 Brutiani, who, ii. 206
- Bucepbalus, i. 286
- Buxton, Jedediab, extraordinary memory of, ii. 125, n. 1

С.

Cabal, etymology of, iii. 126, n. 5 Cadmus, ftory of, iii. 267, n. 1 Cacilius the poet, i. 151, n. 1 Cacilius, Q. bravery of, i. 196 Calius, Antipater, ii. 193, n. 2 Carites, account of the, iii. 240, n. 3 tabulæ, iii. 241

Cefar, Julius, tyranny of, i. 33, n. 6

- n. 4
- thanked by the fenators, ii. 367, n. 10

Cajellius Vindex, strictures on, ii. 48 Calends

Digitized by Google

- Calends, ii. 361, n. 1
- Callifratus, i. 212 Cameleon, strange stories of the, ii.
- Campanians, arrogant and luxurious, i. 89, n. 3
- Caninum prandium, iii. 88
- Capite cenfi, what, iii. $29
- Capito, Ateius, i. 157, n. 1
- Capitol, by whom founded and rebuilt, i. 120, n. 3
- Carmenta, iii. 246, n. 2
- Carneades, ftory of, iii. 303
- Carthaginians, cruel cultom of the, i. 216
- -, spirit of the, ii. 269
- Castricius, Titus, iii. 59
- Cato, M. defence of an expression of, i. 127
- -, ftory of, i. 258
- -, his oration for the Rhodians defended, ii. 51
- -, eloquence of, ii. 205
- -, remarks on a paffage of, ii, 226
- , philosophy of, iii. 67 - Nepos, iii. 49
- Catullus, drinking fong from, ii. 113, n. 2
- Celebrated men of Greete and Rome, comparative chronology of, iii. 315
- Cenfor, office of, i. 253, n. 1. 265, 276, n. 280, 334, n. 5. ü. 116
- -, remarks on the, i. 282, n. 3
- Chaldeans, iii. 91, n. 1. 99, n. 5
- Chateauneuf, P. de, ftory of, iii. 251, D. 1
- Child, one, spoken of in the plural number by the ancients, and why, i. 125. ib. n. 1
- Children, on the duties of, i. 113
- -, privileges attending three, i. 223, n. 7
- -, on the management of, i. 279
- -, number of, born at once, ii. 196
- -, should be fuckled by their mothers, ii. 320

- Chilo, the Lacedæmonian, anecdotes of i. 10, 18
- Chinefe, accents of the, iii. 15, n. 1 Christians, early, on the treatment of, i. 320, n. 4
 - -, edict of Julian, respecting the, iii. 161, n. 1
- Chrysippus on providence, ii. 1
- on fate and freewill, ii. 5
- Cicero, plagiarisms of, i. 12. ib. n. 3 -, remarks on paffages in, i. 13. 19. 30. 133. ili. 1. 147. 149.
 - 255.270
- -, his oratory, ii. 199 -, miftake of Gellius respecting. ii. 249, R. 1
- –, ftory of, ii. 359
- -, age of, &c. iii. 191
- Cincius, iii. 208, n. 1
- Cinerus, ii. 37, n. 2
- Civil commotions, neutrality criminal in, i. 123
- Claffici, and infra claffem, fignification of, ii. 87
- Claudius, Servius, iii. 65, n. 5
- Clients, what, i. 48, n.
 - -, how confidered by the Row mans, iii. 415
- ClimaEterics, i. 207, n. 4
- Cloatius Verrius, iii. 236
- Cognomen, what, i. 54, n. 11
- Colonies, first Roman, how propagated, iii. 239, n. 1
- Colours, and their names, i. 164
- Comitia, iii. 189
- Command, whether to be obeyed scrupuloufly, i. 56
- Compitalia, ii. 261, n. 2
- Concio, fignifications of, iii. 344
- Consertum, ex jure manum, iii. 435
- Confiellations, on the names of fome of the, i. 142
- Conjular man, who fo called, i. 4, n. 2
- Confuls, regulations of precedence between the, i. 129
- Continence, inftances of, ii. 21
- Coruncanius, i. 41, n. 2
- Corvinus, Valerius, story of, ii. 171
- Cotyla, what, i. 213, n. 2
- Courtezans, ancient cuftoms of. i. 35, n. 3. 269, n. 2

Courtezans,

Courtezans, divine honours paid to, ii. 18, n. 1. 20

Craffus Mutianus, P. anecdote of, i. 58

Cretans, warlike mufic of the, i. 45 - invented the pyrthic dance,

i. 46, n. 5

Crimes not the lefs because others commit them, ii. 243

Critolaus, ii. 292, n. 1

Crafus, ftory of the fon of, i. 303 Cronus Diodorus, epigram on, ii. 301, n. 1

Crowns, military, i. 195

Ctefias, ii. 146, n. 4

Curius, i. 41, n. 2

Cypher, uled by the ancients, iii. 1 52, 1. 3. 284

D.

Day, how reckoned by the ancients, i. 182.

-, divisions of the, i. 184. n. 2 Days, unlucky, i. 326.

Death, opinion of Epicurus on, i. 116, and note

-, induced by fudden joy, i. 216 Declaimers, empty, ii. 187

Deities of the ancient Romans, i. 311. iii. 62

Delight, what, i. 168. ib. n. 2

Demades, ii. 296

Demetrius Poliorcetes, ftory of, iii. 197

- Democritus reported to have deprived himfelf of fight, and why, ii. 238
- Demosihenes, remarkable for neatnels of drefs, i. 23 — defended from accusations of bribery, ib. n. 1. ii. 193. n. 2

– and Lais, ftory of, i. 35

- ----- remarks on, i. 167. iii. 193 ----- quitted Plato for Calliftratus, i. 212
- unable to speak before Philip, ii. 128

Denarius, value of the, i. 226, n. 3 Deprecor, meaning of, ii. 38 Diagoras, ftory of, i. 217

Die prifini, &c. ii. 260

Diffidence not uncommon amongit ancients of celebrity, ii. 128

Dimidias and Dimidiatus, difference between, i. 213

Diogenes, i. 136

-, stories of, ii. 297, D. 1. iii. 10, n. 1. 359

- Discipline of the Romans, firich, i. 57
- Di/putations, public, at Rome, iii. 35, n. I
- Divinatio, particular use of the word, i. 105
- Divorce, i. 242
- Dogs, young, eaten by the Romans, i. 190, n. 5
- Dolabella, ftory of, ii. 347
- Dolptin, in love with a boy, ii. 73

Draco, 11. 314

Drefs, men diftinguished for neatnefs of, i. 23, 24. ib. n. 2

- Drinking long, ii. 114, n. 2
- parties, ancient origin of a modern cultom in, iii. 360, n. 1
- Dryden's Plutarch, strictures on, ii. 294, n. 2
- Ducks, Pontic, had the power of expelling poilon, iii. 306

Dumb men speaking suddenly, instances of, i. 303

Duest vice funo, meaning of, i. 291

Ε,

- Earthquakes, the ancients ignorant, of the caule of, i. 169
- -----, ancient superstitions respecting, i. 170. 248

Eclipfes, caufes of, not regarded by the ancients, i. 171

Education of Roman youths, i. 22, n. 4

Effeminacy centured, i. 194

Egyptians permitted theft, ii. 317 Elegant, ule of the term, ii. 277

- Enfield's History of Philosophy, i. 7, n. 4. 37, n. 1
- Ennius, imitation of Euripides by, ii. 282

- faid he had three hearts, hecaufe caufe he understood three languages, iii. 308

Entertainments, reading a part of,
i. 82, n. 2. iii. 30
, remarks on, iii. 28
Ephorus, i. 209, n. 1
Epicbarmus, 1. 65
Epifetus, i. 126
iii. 311. 367
iii. 311. 367
wrote five books of differtations, iii: 367, n. 3
Epicurus, i. 116. 118
Epigrammata, what, i. 89, n. 1.
Epitaphs of three poets, written by themselves, i. 89
Etruscan soothfayers, story of the,
i. 246
Etymology, i. 73. 94, n. 8
Euclid, the Socratic, anecdotes of, ii.
26, 27, n. 1
Eupolis, i. 65
Euripides, iii. 177
Ewil, neceffary, ii. 3
Example of others, no excuse for crimes, ii. 243
Exigor, ule of, iii. 168

F,

- Fabius Meximus and his fon, ftory of, i. 102. 101. n. 3
 - -- Dorso, anecdote of, ii. 30, n. 1.

---- Pictor, ii. 227, n. 3

- Fatle, antiquity of, i. 172, n. 1 Fabricius, C. i. 41, n. 2. 69. 200
- -----, Luscinus, story of, i. 252 Faces hidden in the toga by Romans who wished not to be known, ii. 81, 11. 2
- Facies, proper fignification of, iii. 85 Fascination, i. 148

Fate, ii. 5

- Fathers, at Rome, had unlimited authority over their children, i. 52, n. 7. 101, n. 2. 333
- -, refpect to be paid by, to ions when magistrates, i. 100
- Favifa, meaning and etymology of, i. 119

Favorinus, i. 16, n. 7

- Fear, why the belly is loofened by, iii. 374
 - why palenels is occasioned by, iii. 378

Feriæ præcidaneæ, i. 251

- Fefinare differs from properare, iii, 242
- Fidus optatus, i. 104, n. 2
- Figulus, Nigidius, i. 255. 271
- Fines amongst the Romans, ii. 274 Finger, the fourth, of the left hand,
- fuperstitions respecting, ii. 216, ib. n. 1
- Flavius, Cn. ftory of, ii. 25
- Flora, festival of the goddefs, ii. 176, n. 3
- Flutes, the warlike music of the Spartans, i. 43
- -, why rejected by the nobler youth of Athens, iii. 173
- Fortitude, ii. 344 Forums, Roman, ii. 173, n. 5
- Frater, etymology of, iii. 26
- Free will, ii. 5
 - Freezing, observations on, iii. 280
 - Friends not to be relied on for aflistance, i. 173
 - Friendsbip, how far justice may give way to, i. 10
 - –, value of, iii. 270
 - Frons, properly masculine, iii. 155 Fronto, Cornelius, i. 164, n. 1
 - Frugality of the ancient Romans, i. 157
 - Fulvius, anecdote of the wife of, i. 87, n. 4
 - Furins Antiates, vindication of, iii, 355
 - Furtum conceptum & oblatum, what, ii. 316, n. 3

G.

- Gabius Basfus, i. 106, n. 2
- Galba, Sergius, breach of faith of, i. 86, n. 2
- Garlands worn at drinking bouts, i. 268, n. 2
- Geometrical terms, i. 77
- Gestation, period of, i. 218

Gibbon

Gibbon recommended for an account of the Roman laws, i. 129, n. 2

-----, remarks on, i. 169, n. 1. 332, n. 3

- office, i. 282, n. 3
- Girding the loins explained, i. 44, n. 4
- Gladiators, ü. 59, n. 10. 344

with Cicero's, ii. 199

-----, Tiberius, i. 126

Grammar lefs attended to than found by the ancients, iii. 53 Grief, defended, iii. 398 Gueßs, proper number of, iii. 28 Cypfies, iii. 93, n. 1

H.

Halcyon days, i. 206, n. 2 Hannibal, Haidrubal, and Hamilcar, how pronounced, i. 251 Hannibal's farcaim against Antiochus, i. 393 Happines, what, i. 118. iii. 323 Head not covered in public by the Romans, ii. 67, n. 1 Hegefas, ii. 146, n. 7 Hellanicus, iii. 184 Hellebore, white and black, ufes of, iii. 303 Heralds, Roman, iii. 208, n. 2 Hercules, stature of; i. 2 -, origin of the proverb, ex pede Herculem, i. 3, n. 3 -, on the worship of, ii. 286, n. 1 Hermippus, i. 212, n. 1 Herodes Atticus, i. 4, n. 1

Herodotus, iii. 184

Hefied, whether older than Homer, i. 209

Hexameter verses, remarks on, iii. 363

Hiftery, on writing, i. 269

- Homer, whether older than Hesiod, i. 209
- -----, country of, i. 210

Horfes, most famous, of antiquity, i. 202, n. 1

Hortenfius, the orator, a fop, i. 24

Hofia succidance, & præcidance, i. 249

Humanitas, fignification of, iii. 43

Hunger, means of supporting, fii.

Husbands, patience recommended to, i. 71

Hyginus, J. i. 60. 79

Hypficrates, the grammarian, iii. 237

I.

Illaudatus, fignification of, i. 110

- Inducia, meaning and etymology g of, i. 92
- Infrequens, fignification of, iii. 211, n. 4
- Inheritances, Roman laws respecting, ü. 29, n. z

Innumerus, applied to verse, what, i. 90, n. 4

Infecendo preferable to infequendo, iii. 349

Intra, how used by the Romans, ii. 361

Ingonus, ii. 146, n. 3

Ifocrates, iii. 348, n. 1

Italy, etymology of, ii. 274

J.

Janus medius, i. 69, n. 2 Joy, fudden, death occasioned by, j. 216

Judges

Judge, office of a, iii. 105 Jupiter, ceremonies of the prieft and prieftels of, ii. 227

-, fons of, diftinguished for virtue, iii. 181

Juffice, description of, iii. 118

K.

Knights, Roman, ii. 116. iii. 211

L.

Labeo Antifius, i. 50. 55. iii. 31

- Laberius, i. 33, n. 6. ii. 133. iii.
- 219
- Lacedemonians. See Spartans
- Lastantius's Epitome not long difcovered, ii. 1, n. 1
- Lais and Demosthenes, story of, i. 35
- Language, on analogy and anomaly in, i. 161
- Larentia, Acca, ii. 19
- Latin, old, borrowed from the Æolic dialect of the Greek, i. 74. n
- Latium, what fo called, i. 245, n. 2 Laws, observations on, iii. 408
- Legions, Roman, iii. 211
- Letters, remarks on fome, iii. 403
- Levitas, fignification of, ii. 80
- Lex, what, ii. 246. ib. n. 1
- Libraries of the ancients, i. 225, n. 1. 11. 42
-, national, wanting in England, ii. 43, n. 2
- Lifter, etymology of, ii. 333
- Life, like iron, ii. 279
- Lightning, ancient superstitions reipecting, i. 246
- Lion, gratitude of a, i. 317
- Ipoken differently of by Homer and Herodotus, iii. 17
- Literary affectations, iii. 347
- Lituus, fignification and etymology of, i. 301
- Loquacity, i. 62
- Love, female, ii. 240
- -, Plato's remarks on, iii. 313

Loveforgs of the ancient Latins, in. 190

Lucilius, the poet, ii. 390, n. 2

- Lucretius, Virgil borrowed whole verles from, i. 80
- Luxury, remarks on, i. 293, n. 1. ii. 94. iii. 153. 176
- Lying, and telling a lye, different, ii. 299
- Lyre, the warlike mufic of the Cretans, i. 45

Lyfias, style of, i. 107

M.

- Magistrates, Roman, authority of the, iii. 35. 40
- Muncinus, Hostilius, story of, i. 267 Manner of doing things, importance of, iii. 313

Manubie, what, iii. 69

- Marriage, i. 26. 244. 308
 - -, Roman modes of, i. 184, n. 3. iii. 342, n. 2
- Marsi, account of the, iii. 234
- Marvel, A. anecdote of, i. 61, n. 3 Mask, theatrical, account of the, i.
- 299, n. J Matrona, and mater-familias, dif-
- tinction between, iii. 342
- Mattius, Cn. words coined by, iii. 187
- Mature, fignification of, ii. 217
- Megalenfian games, i. 158, n. 2
- Megara, ii. 26, n. 1
- Meliffus, Ælius, Lenzus, and Caius, iii. 341, n. 1
- Memory, observations on, ii. 151, n. 1
- -, extraordinary example of, ib.
- Menageries, how called by the Romans in different ages, i. 139
- -----, by whom introduced amongst the Romans, ib. n. 1
- Menander, paffages in, corrected, i. 153. 155, n. 8
- –, anecdote of, iii. 163 Menippus, i. 72, n. 3. 135
- Metelius Numidicus, i, 26. D. I. ii. 18, D. I

Meteling

Metellus Numidicus, his thoughts on matrimony, i. 26 Milefian virgins, ftory of the, iii. 158

Military rewards, i. 122, n. 1. 15

- punishments, ii. 214
- ----- ierms, ii. 215
- 🛁 laws, iii. 208
- Mille, followed by a verb fingular, i. 58
- Mills of the ancients, i. 191, n. 7
- Milo, death of, iii. 171
- Mind, on the powers of the, iii. 5
- Minerva's robe, i. xi, n. 4
- Missile weapons, more effectual when
- projected upwards, ii. 135 Mitbridates fortified himfelt against
- poifon, iii. 306
- , his antidote, ib. n. 1. understood twenty-two languages, iii. 308
- Monks, antiquity of, ii. 147, n. 10 Monfirous births, anciently thrown
- into the fea, ii. 152, n. 14.
- Montaigne fingularly deficient in memory, ii. 125, n. 1
- Moon, things influenced by the, iii. 430
- Moral fentiment, beautiful, ili. 199 Mortales used with propriety for
- homines, by Quadrigarius, iii.83 Mothers exhorted to fuckle their
- own children, ii. 320
- Municipia, municipes, iii. 238 Mufic, medical efficacy of, i. 268
- , on the science of, iii. 249
- Mufical instruments, sympathetic vibrations of, ii. 159
- Musonius, i. 283, n. 1
- Mys, the flave of Epictetus, a philosopher, i. 236

N.

- Nævius, the poet, i. 89, n. 2. 191, n. 8
- felf, i. 90
- Names, ancient laws respecting, ii. 142
- Nanus, a good Latin word, derived from the Greek, iii. 401

- Naples, healthy, ii. 187, n. f
- Nepos, Cornelius, mistake of, iii. 191
- Neptune, fons of, ferocious, iii. 181
- Nequitia, fignification of, ii. 80
- Neutrality in civil commotions criminal, i. 123
- Nigidius, P. i. 211
- Niebe's children, iii. 429
- Nomen, what, i. 54, n. 11
- Nouns, declensions of, i. 271. 336. ii. 183. iii. 78. 120. 382
- Numbers, superfitious notions respecting, i. 205

-----, Greek terms of, iii. 362

Ö.

- Oätbs, ancient, i. 80, n. 3. ii. 286 , religioufly observed by the Romans, ii. 105
- , men and women used different, ii. 286
- Obefity, anciently accounted difgraceful, ii. 116, 117, n. 2
- Obesum, meaning of, iii. 379
- Obnoxius, what, ii. 100
- Obfolete expressions, affectation of, i. 41. ii. 283
- Esophagus, opinions of the ancients respecting the, iii. 293
- Etolus, Alexander, iii. 179, n. 4
- Olive-tree, change in the leaves of the, at the folitices, ii. 158
- Olympias, the mother of Alexander, her witty reply to her ion, iii. 9
- Oneficritus, ii. 146, n. 5
- Opilius, Aurelius, i. 94, n. 7
- Opfimathia, ii. 238
- Optics, skill of the ancients in, iii. 249
- Ofus, a termination always fignifying excels, 1. 255

Ρ.

- Pacuvius, M. the poet, i. 90, n. g. ii. 89, n. 2
 - ------, epitaph of, i. 91
- iii. 4

Palm,

Palm, peculiar quality of the, i. 195 Pastcratiofi, what, i. 217, n. 3 Papirius Pretextatus, story of, i. 86 Paradoxes, iii. 296 Parcus, etymology of, i. 229 Perents, on the authority of, i. 113 -. See Fathers. Partim, use and fignification of, ii. 224 Paffions, floics and peripatetics con-Itantly difputing about, i. 95, n. 3 -, advantageous, iii. 398 Paulus, Julius, i. 83 Pellex, what, i. :43 Perus, what, i. 233 Peregrinus, the philosopher, ii. 121, n. 1 Pericles, anecdote of, i. 14 Peripetetic and a floic, difpute between, in. 323 Perfona, etymology of, i. 299 Petorritum, a Gailic word, mi. 195 -, what, iii. 195, n. 1 Phadon, of Elis, i. 135 Philip, of Macedon, ii. 143 -, his letter to Aristotle, ii. 144 Philippides, i. 216 Philochorus, i. 207, n. 1. iii. 178, n. 2 PhiloLaus, the fift who taught the world's revolution on its axis, i. 225, n. 2 Philofopbers, many were flaves, i. 135 -, moft, poor, i. 137, n. 4 -, drets of, ii. 139 -, falle, ii. 251. iii. 21. 67. 310 -, banished from Rme, iii. 160 Phyliognomy, i. 37, n. 2 Pigeon, wooden, ii. 222, 223, n. 3 Pignoriflapio, ii. 79 Pifo, new figure of speech by, iii. 194 Planipedes, what, i. 48, n. 8 Plato, ityle of, i. 107 - gave a great price for fome books, i. 225 -, on the abuses of false philofophy, ii. 251 - and Xenophon, rivals, iii. 113 5

Plautus, epitaph of, i. 90

- of, i. 186
 - a bakehouse, i. 190
- Players, not respectable amongst the Greeks and Romans, iii. 4214 ib. n. 1
- Pleafure, opinions of the ancients respecting, ii. 153
- ed bafer than others, iii. 369
- Plebifitum, what, ii. 246. ib. n. I
- Plerique omnes, fignisication of, ii. 131, n. 1

- ------- centures of Epicurus, i. 116. 118
- Poets, hard fate of, ii. 278, n. 2
- Poifon, flow, antiquity of the notion cf, ii. 11, n. 2
- Polus, the player, anecdote of, ii. 68 Polystepbanus, ii. 146, n. 6

Pomærium, what, iii. 37

- Pompey, theatre of, ii. 194, n. 3
- Pompylus, i. 136
 - Porcian family, origin and names of the, iii. 49
 - Pistverta, the goddefs, iii. 245, n. 1
- Prænomen, what, i. 54, n. 11
- Prapetes, fignification of, ii. 15
- Præter propter used by Ennius and others, iii. 393
- Prætcxta, what, i. 86, n. 3
- Prætors, iii. 35. 41
- Praife, cold, more injurious that fevere censure, iii. 372
- Prayers of the Romans, iii. 62
- Prepositions, prefixed to words, obfervations on, i. 133. 273. ii. 70. iii. 141
- Privilegium, what, ii. 246
- Pro, ule of the preposition, ii. 280
- Probus, the grammarian, the first decipherer, iii. 237, n. 2

Profligacy,

Profligacy, contempt flown to, by the Lacedzemonians, iii. 332 Profligo, improper use of, iii. 146

Prolet. rii, what, iii. 229

Prologue spoken by Laberius, ii. 133, n. 1

Properare differs from festinare, iii. 243

Profa, the goddels, iii. 245, n. 1 Protagoras, i. 288

_____, ftory of, i. 305

Proverbs, i. viii. xiii, n. 10. xiv, n. 12. 3, n. 3. 14. 36. ib. n. 4. 39, n. 8. 62, n. 1. 64. 110, n. 6. 152. 153. 202. 204. 206, n. 3. 246. 337. ii. 122, n. 1. 181, n. 6. 218, n. 2. 295, n. 2. 331. 340. iii. 45. 84. 88. 180, n. 5. 269. 274. 330 ungue leonem, origin of the, i. 3, n. 3.

Providence, arguments for, ii. 1

Prudence recommended, iii. 81

- Psylli, ftory of the, iii. 234
- Piolemy Philadelphus, anecdote of, ii. 43, n. 2
- Publius Syrus, iii. 301, n. 1

Pulfe, miltake of a phylician refpecting the, iii. 352

Punishment, reasons for, ii. 34

- Putum, fignification of, ii. 13
- Pyrrbic dance invented by the Cretans, i. 46, n. 5

Pyrrbo, ii. 283, n. 1

- Pyrrbonian philosophers, ii. 283
- Fyrrbus, ftory of, i. 200
- Pythagoras, discipline of the school of, i. 37
- i. 261

Q.

Ruadrigarius, Q. C. i. 32, n.4. 68 fions of, iii. 259

Quaftor might be fummoned before the przetor, iii. 35

Quibbling, i. 7, n. 4. iii. 201. 327. 360 Quiefes, pronunciation of, ii. 37 Quin, ule of, iii. 298

- Quoad vivet, and quoad morietur, fignify the fame, ii. 115
- Quotations, false or partial, ftrictures on, ii. 48, n. 1

R.

- Raifin wine made by the ancients, ii. 258, n. 2
- Reading, part of the amufements at the feats of the ancients, i. 82, n. 2. iii. 30
- Reconciliations between eminent men, ii. 349
- Regulus, story of, ii. 11
- Religiofus, true fignification of, i. 255
- Remmius Palæmon, iii. 276, n. 1
- Rescirc, fignification of, i. 138
- Rete, and flumina retanda, fignification of, ii. 312

Rhetoric forbidden to be taught in ancient Rome, iii. 160

- Rbodes, ii. 51
- Rhophalic verse, iii. 127, n. 5 -
- Rings, ancient fashions respecting, ii. 216
- Rivers, largeft, according to the ancients, ii. 212
- Regatio, what, ii. 246
- Romans, ancient, frugality of the, i. 157
- _____, piety of the, i. 170, n. 3
- i. 314. iii. 334, n. 1. 401, n. 1 , drefs of the, ii.
- 84. iii. 59 dainties of the,
- ii. 94. iii. 30. 153, n. 1 ------, fpirit of the, ii. 269

-----, classes of, ii. 271, n. 1

Rome, ufually quitted in the fummer, ii. 187, n. 1

Romulus, ftory of, ii. 306

Rubige,

Rabigo, a god worshipped by the Romans, i. 249, n. 2

s.

Sacellum, not a compound, ii. 29 Salluft, his imitation of Demothenes animadverted on, i. 167 —, remarks on the style of, i. 269 -, defence of an expression of, ii. 266 --, character of, iii. 309, n. t ----, explanation of a pailage in, iii. 337 --, corruptions of, iii. 428 Saltem, ule of, ii. 369 Salutation, ancient cuftom of, i. 231, n. i Santra, ii. 37, n. 3

Sceptics, ii. 282

- Scipio Africanus, i. 192. 276. ii. 21.44
- Afiaticus, ii. 108
- Scribes, ii. 24, n. 1. 25
- Sculna, what, iii. 438
- Scytale of the Lacedzemonians, iii. 284
- Sea, on the waves of the, i. 176
- Second fight, inftance of, iii. 174
- Self-denial, observations on, i. 98, n. 1
- Senate, Roman, forms of the, i. 258. ii. 350, n. 2. iii. 129. 133 Senatores pedarii, what, i. 227
- Seneca, ii. 328. ib. n. 1
- Senfe to be regarded as well as found, ii. 303
- Senfes, remarks on the, ii. 69. ш. 369
- Sepulsus, fignification of; iii. 419, n. 1
- Sequestris, sequestro, iii. 348
- Serpent, enormous, ii. 9
- Serpents fubdued by certain people by incantations, iii. 234
- Sertorius, ftory of, iii. 182
- Servilius Geminui, ii. 334
- Servus receptitius, what, iii. 275
- Sextary, what, i. 213, n. s
- Ships, ancient kinds of, ii. 26g
- Sibylline books, i. 78

Voli III.

Siecius Dentatus, extraordinary vas lour of, i. 121 Sicinnium, ficinnistas, iii. 410

- Sigillaria, i. 104, n. 2. 291, n. 2
- Signs, antiquity of, i. 291, n. 2
- Sin, impolicy of, ii. 356
- Siticines, what, iii. 418
- Situs, fignification of, iii. 419, n. 1 Slaves, laws refpecting buying and
- felling, i. 238. ii. 66 -, ftate of, amongst the an-
- cients, i. 320, n. 4. ii. 201, n. g. -, fervus receptitius, what, iii. 275
- Sheeves not worn by the early Romans, ii. 84
- formerly marks of gentility in England, ii. 85. n. i
- -, whence the expression, a fleevelefs errand, ibid.
- Slingers of the ancients, ii. 136. n. 1
- Snow-water pernicious according to Aristotle, iii. 375
- Socrated, patience of, i. 71
 - -, self-denial of, i. 98
- injured by Arittophanes, i. 191, n. 8
- -, anecdote of, ii. 130, 2d n. 1
- Solecijm; etymology of, i. 31, n. 2
- -, strictures on the word, i. 335
- Solon, defence of a law of, i. 123
- Song, well applied, iii. 251; n. 1
- Sopbiffs, i. 290, n 2. 305. ib. n. 1. 308. 11. 190
- Serer, etymology of, iii. 26
- Setadici, what, ii. 78, n. 4
- Sdteri.us, ii. 331, n. 4
- Sotion, i. 35, n. 1
- Spartans used flutes, not trumpets, in battle, i. 43
- of wine; ii. 306, n. t
- Spartol, the men fprung from the dragon's teeth fo called, iii. 167, n. 1
- Speaker, anciently often named himfelt first, i. 4, n. 3
- Speltatus, ule of the word, iii. 59, n. 1

Spensippus,

Digitized by Google

-Speufit pus, i. 226, p. 5 Squallere, fignification and etymology of, i. 111 Stadia explained, i. 2, n. 2 Stars, on the names of fome of the, i. 142. in. 23 Statius, a servile name, i. 282 Stilo, Ælius, ii. 249, n. 1 Stoic, true, diffinguished from the falle, i. 4 - philosophy, ii. 337. iii. 398 and peripatetic, dispute between, iii. 323 - in a ftorm, iii. 364 Stribligo, or ftrobiligo, fignification of, i. 335. ib. n. 1 Style, remarks on, ii. 88. 302 Suada, the goddels of eloquence, ii. 329, n. 2 Subtleties, verbal, i. 7, n. 4 Suicide not encouraged by the Romans, iii. 158 Sulpicits, Servius, i. 119 Sumptuary laws of the Romans, i.1 57 - Adam Smith's remarks on, i. 160, n. 6 Sun dial, the first crected in Rome, i. 188, n. 1 Superesse, meaning of, i. 81 Superstitions, i. 202. ib. n. 2. 205. 246. iii. 37, n. 1 Susque deque, iii. 227 Syllogifm, iii. 188 Sympofiacs of Taurus, ii. 31

Т.

Talent, Attic, value of the, i. 226, n. 6 Talkativenefs, i. 62 Tarratia, Caia, ii. 18 Taurus, the philosopher, i. 95, n. 2 anger, i. 95, his reply on anger, i. 95, ftory of, i. 100 Tautobgy, iii. 71 Terence, ii. 89. 90, n. 2 Tertium and tertio, remarks on, ii. 192 Teffera, ii. 270, n. 2 Teflamentum, not a compound, i. 29 -, three kinds of, iii. 100 Theft, laws respecting, ii. 92. 119, n. 3. 314 , oath taken by the foldiers concerning, iii. 209 Theophraftus, ii. 128 Theopompus, ii. 242, n. 2 Thurydides, age of, iii. 184 Tides, iii. 94, n. 2 Timarchus, iii. 332, n. 1 Timon, of Phlius, i. 226 Tiro, Tullius, firictures on, ii. gr Torquatus, T. Manlius, ftory of, ii. 178 Trachea, opinions of the ancients on the use of the, iii. 193 Tranflation, remarks on, ii. 161. ib. R. I. 310 Trees, lucky and unlucky, ii. 230, n. 9 Tribune, paymaster, ii. 79, n. 1 -, authority of the, iii. 31 Trifling, ii. 32. iii. 122 Triones, fignification of, i. 144 Truft, breach of, anciently deemed theft, ii. 93 Twelve tables, on the laws of the, ii. 119, n. 3. -iii. 405 , hiftory of the, iii.

U.

405, n. 1

Undus, the termination, ii. 307 Urine, why fire provokes, iii. 375 Ufuscapio, ii. 79

v.

Verbin

Verbs, frequentative, on the pronunciation of, ii. 156

—— common, iii. 166

- active put for passive, iii. 357
- Vescus fignification of, iii. 213
- Veflals, i. 50. ii. 19, n. 2
- Vestibulum, what, iii. 212.
- Vejiri and vestrum, remarks on, iii. 426
- Vexare, meaning of the word, i.
- Victims called bidentes, what, iii. 216
- Virgil, true reading of a paffage in, i. 79
- Lucretius, i. 80
- , remarks on fome expressions of, i. 104. 107. 130. 235. 301. ii. 15. 112. 123, n. 1. 169. iii. 53. 214. 340
- n. 4.
- —— ftory of, ii. 112
- ----- on his imitations of Greek poets, il. 162. iii. 20. 288.
- _____ anachronisms of, ii. 233, 234, n. 3
- Vision, on the nature of, i. 324
- Vivaria, what, i. 139
- Voconian law, ii. 87, n. 2
- Foice, whether a substance or not, i.

Vortices, ii. 3, n. 2

W.

War, Roman form of declaring, iii. 208

Warlike mulic of the Lacedæmonians, i. 43

Waterspouts, iii. 365, n. 2

Weapons, various kinds of, ii. 264

Whirlwinds, iii. 365, n. 2

Winds, ancient Greek and Latin names of the, i. 145 affect the fea differently, i. 176

- Wine, on the use of, amongst the ancients, ii. 257. ib. n. 1
-, raisin, made by the ancients, ii. 258, n. 2
- ----, aniwer of Romulus respecting, ii. 306
- of Lefbos, iii. 13, n. 1
- Wifdom, the daughter of Use and Memory, iii. 20
- Wives, power of hufbands over, ii. 258
- Woman incapable of keeping a leeret, i. 87, n. 3
- and fon, story of a, ii. 347
- Women of Rome abstained from wine, ii. 257. ordered by law to kiss their relations, and why, ib. did not use the same oaths as the men, ii. 286
- ------ of Greece not allowed to indulge in excels of wine, ii. 257, n. 1

------ France, ii. 258, n. 2

- Wonderful things, ii. 147. iii. 244 Wood rubbed with alum faid not to take fire, iii. 134
- Words, on the ule of, ii. 76, n. 1.
- with opposite fignifications, ii. 174. 352
- ----- natural figns of things, ii. 207 ----, influence of cuttom on, ii. 365, n. 6

-, old, meaning of fome, iii. 379

X. '

Xanthippe, i. 71 Xenopbanes, i. 209, n. 1 Xenopbon and Plato, rivals, iii. 113

2.

Zeno, anecdote of, ii. 6, n. 1

Digitized by Google

.

 \sim

ADDENDA ET CORRIGENDA.

Vol. I.

Page 52. 1. 1. for seventeen, read seven.

106. l. 3, for divinat, read divinit.

124. Note, "fevere law." Plutarch's word is raegatoywrator. This perhaps should rather have been rendered, most unreasonable and disproportionate.

133. for propositions, read prepositions.

- 144. Note. Manipli.—Here the fcazon is defective in a fyllable, to remedy which Turnebus propofes to read ite after manipili. Again, Æli is a falfe quantity, fo Heyne timidly and doubtfully propofes to read ⁴ filo." See his note.
- 146. for alleaviture read allenvining.
- 155. for un, read 151.
- 171. for Deii, road Dii.
- 172. for geste, read gesta.
- 188. for Anictinum, in note, 1. 3 from the bottom, read Arietinum.
- 189. for Solinus ad Salmas, read Salmafius ad Solin.
- 225. Note, for Halberotadt, read Halberstadt.
- 255. Note, for adversarii, read adversaria.
- 256. for reliquendo, read relinquendo.
- 300. It may be added, that some derive persona from migi Gum, which is nearly as probable as any.
- 315. for aread areas.
- 330. for America, read Armenia.

VOL. II.

Page 22. for folutionis, read folutioris.

The formation of these words ending in mentum, is from the supines, as thus-moni-tum, monu-men, mentum, with men inferted, and tum sometimes rejected, and sometimes prefixed.

Page

- Page 66. A very learned friend who has examined this queftion of the fervi pileati very carefully, writes to me thus on the fubject:
 - These flaves were not of a higher order; they are diffinguished from the bare headed, but not ser above them.—The case was this:
 - If I exchanged a flave with the pileus, it told you the buyer, that I the feller was not refponfible. In general, the pileati were new untried flaves, for whom the mafter could not answer; and those for whom he did answer, or the non-pileati, were those he had long possessed, and often used.
 - 78. There are extant many monkish verses of this fort.
 - 85. There is a book on the Use of Gloves, by a John Nicolai, published in Germany, in 1701; and a great deal on this subject may be found in the Curioficies of Literature, published by D'Israeli.
 - 103. What I have rendered to bear up boldly, is, on recollection, hardly forcible enough; it rather means to be fo difengaged from one thing, as to be wholly ready for another. Thus in Horace, femper vacuus; and thus also, vacare philosophia, means to be intent on philosophy alone. This
 - vacare adverfum adverfarios, may mean, " to be thoroughly prepared against his adverfaries."

110. for availed but only, read availed only.

113. for xiom, read xim.

127. for " nor I do," read " nor do I."

137. for incardefcit, read incandefcit.

144. Aradoxns rather means fuccession to the conduct of public affairs,

150. for regi, read tegi.

169. for quænam, read quæram.

- 176. The word fabulofus fhould have been here explaincd; it means a man much talked of.
- 180. Struck with grief is hardly forcible enough; it means, with a mixture of grief and rage. Thus in Virgil, the expression of fævi doloris conveys a fimilar idea.
- 205. The expression of opicas occurs in Aufonius. See his Professiones, 22.

Exesas tineis opicalque evolvere chartas.

Page

- Page 215. The orbis may be thus diffinguished from globus the one was fixed and stationary, the other flying here and there.
 - 229. for a body, read a dead body.
 - 260. for fantoribus, read fautoribus.
 - 270. for 5010, read 3015.
 - 308. fer becoming of, read becoming in.
 - 310. for dicare, read dicam.
 - 316. for goods fought, read goods were fought.
 - 348. The fory here related is quoted by Meurfrus, and occurs in lib. i. chap. 17. Ethicorum Maj. Ariftot.

Vol. III.

- Page 2. 1. 3. note, for according, read contrary.
 - 13. note, for Apia, read Chia.
 - 15. Romæ stationibus.-See Horace, sat. iv. l. 1.

Nulla taberna meos habeat neque pi a libellos.

- On which the following Vet. Schol. is produced by Baxter:
- Negat fe libellos suos edere bibliopolis qui stationer vel armaria circa pilas vel columnas habebant, & in pilis epigrammata scribebant poetæ qui non tradebant bibliopolis.
- Thus the stalls or shops of booksellers were, it seems, called stations, from whence the English word stationers is well derived.
- 84. for heri, read here.
- 167. for fariatur, read fari iatur. This emendation is proposed by Salmasius, and is certainly right.
- 173. for Pamphilas, read Pamphila.
- 194. for Julio, read Julius, and for Julii, read Julio.

230. for ferroque, read feroque.

262. for scolion, read spodiator.

319. for Leuctria, read Leuctra.

342. The Romans diffinguished between matrimonium and nuptiz. A woman by use entered into matrimonium, and she was then matrona. The coemptio and confarrentio made way for her to become come not only matrona, but materfamilias. The coemptio and confarreatio produced the juffæ nuptiæ; but in all three cafes she was matrona.— As a woman without children was called matrona, from the hope of having them, so vidua was applied to an unmarried woman.

An te morantur virgines viduæ domia

Occurs in the Agamemnon of Seneca,

Page 360. I am probably wrong in translating a manuario by "a waiter." I was milled by finding, book xvi. c. 7. that Laberius ufcs manuarius for a lightfingered thief. It was a term at play, and the as was that by which the collufores manum, i. c. jactum redimebant. See Gefner. Quafi ex plumbis manibus collecto, fays Torcellinus, in V. and goes on--refpicit autem ad vices ladendi feu jactus, qui ab Augufto apud Sueton. c. 71. manus dicuntur. In the paffage from Suetonius, fi quas manus remifi cuique exegifiem, &c. The manus unclaimed by Auguftus, is the money loft after an unlucky throw. Cafaubon. Perhaps therefore the paffage in Gellius fhould be rendered, for fimiliar, read fimilar.

" Like money given by the players for the throw."

- 395. Præter propter. Præter is excefs, propter, that which it approaches. Thus we fay in English a little beyond the nail, or below it. We are beyond the right mark. See Gesner and Salmasius.
- 416. I fhould have referred the reader in this page to Dr. Taylor's Differtation.

Digitized by Google

ļ

۰.

