PREFACE

This Index embodies an attempt to make more accessible the riches of Spenser's poetry. Nothing of quite the same design and scope has yet appeared. The title—A Subject-Index to the Poems of Edmund Spenser—is the best that I could devise, but fails to give a wholly adequate idea of the work. It is an index in so far as it includes the names of persons, places, animals, and things, whatever, in fact, has a function and definite meaning—whatever, in the compiler's judgment, would be likely to prove of interest to the student of Spenser and his age. It partakes also of the nature of a dictionary, in that it includes brief explanations, allegorical and otherwise, whenever such explanations seem necessary.

In its present form the Index is the result of long-continued experiment and of discussion with scholars in the Spenserian field. It had its inspiration in a graduate course in Spenser at Yale, and was undertaken at the suggestion of Professor Albert Stanburrough Cook. The materials were gathered in the first instance by personal study of Spenser's text, and afterwards supplemented by the published investigations of scholars.

The first draft was well-nigh completed when, in 1915, Osgood's Concordance to Spenser made its appearance. The work was then subjected to a thorough revision, which resulted in a notable gain in fulness and serviceability. The Index strictly conforms to the Concordance in such matters as readings, spellings, and abbreviations, so that students who accustom themselves to the one may be able to use the other without the necessity of learning a second set of symbols.

The alphabetical order has been consistently followed, not only in the disposition of subjects, but in the arrangement of headings within the individual articles. For ease of reference this method undoubtedly possesses certain advantages. It does, however, involve an occasional awkwardness, because of the inversion necessary to bring into prominence the appropriate head-word.

The so-called Cambridge text, edited by R. E. Neil Dodge,¹ has been adopted as a basis, in preference to the Globe² and Oxford³ editions. In citing quotations I have followed the order of the Cambridge text, except that the Faery Queen, because it furnishes the bulk of the references, invariably comes first. The Doleful Lay of Clorinda is here admitted to the canon of Spenser, since it has at last been authoritatively assigned to him. In the citations the aim has been to avoid extremes, whether of fulness or of meagreness. Sometimes Spenser's very words are reproduced; sometimes the substance of a passage is briefly summarized. References of sufficient importance to be recorded, though not requiring particularization, are grouped at the end of the articles under the word 'Mentioned.'

Since this is not primarily a word-index, but a subject-index, I have not thought it necessary to record all the variations of spelling. The student who is interested in this feature of Spenser's poetry may find what he seeks in the Concordance. For head-words and quotations I have normalized and modernized the spelling, in general using the index-form preferred by the New English Dictionary. Occasionally, however, when I have felt that something was to be gained by preserving the exact form of Spenser's language, I have not hesitated to do so from any fear of inconsistency. Words invented by Spenser, for which there is no modern equivalent, are entered under the spelling most commonly used. Frequent cross-references are employed, so that little difficulty should be experienced in locating a word.

The allegory of the Faery Queen has proved rather difficult to manage. It has not seemed necessary to identify every character of the poem, as some would do, with one or other of the figures who made the Elizabethan period illustrious. Allegorical interpretations are, however, admitted whenever there seems to be sufficient evidence to support them. Explanations by the compiler, whenever they do not immediately follow the head-word, are enclosed in parentheses.

A detailed analysis has been made of the progress of the various figures that move through the pages of the Faery Queen, something never before consistently attempted. This feature should prove useful, since the stories of knights and ladies are frequently so confused that readers

. . . wander too and fro in waies unknowne;

So many paths, so many turnings seene,

That which of them to take, in diverse doubt they been.

It need hardly be said that I have availed myself freely of the researches of other investigators. Some of my borrowings have been acknowledged in the appropriate places in the text. I wish, however, to mention here the works that have been of the greatest help: the editions of the complete works by Todd (1805), Child (1855), and Dodge (1908); of the Faery Queen, Books 1 and 2, by Kitchin (1890, 1895), and by Winstanley (1914, 1915); of the Shepherds Calendar, by Herford (1897); of the Four Hymnes, by Winstanley (1907); Osgood's Concordance to Spenser (1915); Sawtelle's Sources of Spenser's Classical Mythology (1896); Langdon's Materials for a Study of Spenser's Theory of Fine Art (1911); Harper's Sources of the British Chronicle History in Spenser's Faerie Queene (1910); Joyce's Spenser's Irish Rivers (Fraser's Magazine, March, 1878); Osgood's Spenser's English Rivers (as yet unpublished).

Assistance during the preparation of the Index has been freely given by many hands. The preliminary work was undertaken by my wife, and at various other times she has shared in the labor of compilation. I am particularly indebted to Professors Albert Stanburrough Cook, Charles Grosvenor Osgood, and Lane Cooper, upon whose unfailing interest and advice I have all along been privileged to draw; whatever value the Index may possess is in no small measure due to their suggestions and kindly criticism; they have also generously shared in the labor of proof-reading. Finally I wish to express my gratitude to the Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences, under whose auspices the Index is published, for providing a subvention; and to the Yale University Press for courtesies while the work has been passing through the press.

It is perhaps too much to expect that Spenser will ever be a popular poet, but with the widening of our knowledge of him, to which every new bit of investigation contributes, he is likely to have a larger and more sympathetic audience. Evidences have not been wanting of late that he is about to come into his own. The publication within the last few years of numerous articles by scholars on both sides of the Atlantic has greatly enlarged the province of Spenserian scholarship, and indicates an awakening of interest in the poet's poet. Much, however, still remains to be done before the time is ripe for a Dictionary of Spenser as complete and definitive as Toynbee's Dante Dictionary. Meanwhile, I venture to express the wish that this Index may bring nearer that greatly desired consummation, and contribute to a fuller understanding and truer valuation of the poet's work as a whole.
