

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

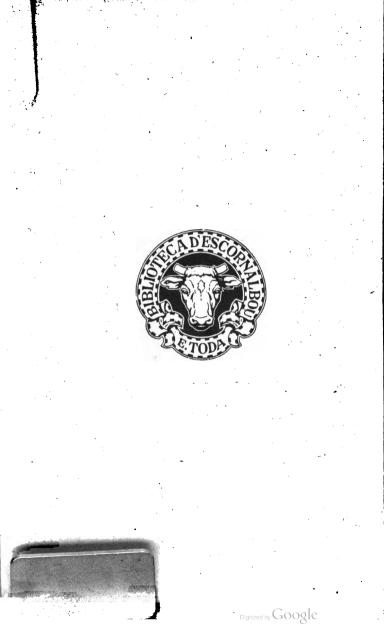

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

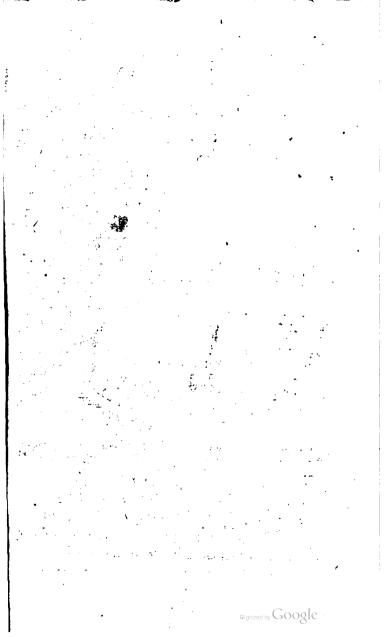

-

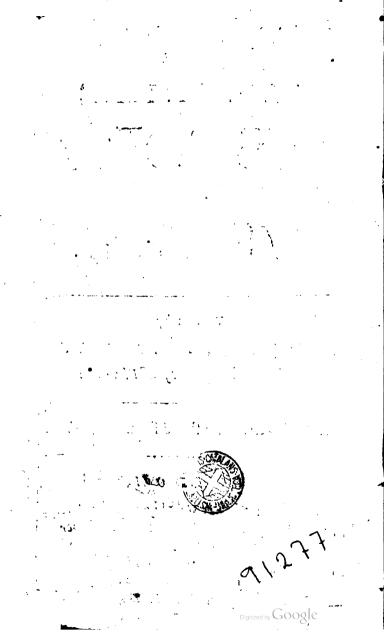

.

Tis I alone can teach you to make warre. I know what greatest Conquerrers knew, & are; I fill the Brests of greatest Potentates. I give them Lawes to governe their Estates. Digitized by Google

ТНЕ FLORENTINE HISTORY ÍN VIII Books Written by Nicholas Machiavel Citizen and Secretary of Florence. Now exactly Translated from the Italian. LONDCN, Printed for Charles Harper, and John Amery, and by them fold at the Flower de Luce, and at the reacock, both against S. Dunstans Church in Fleet-freet. 1674. Digitized by Google

TO THE

Most ILLUSTRIOUS Prince JAME S Duke of MONMOUTH, &c.

May it please your GRACE,

His Hiftory has been in all times fo univerfally famous, and the Author of fo great

Reputation, that if it hath efcaped (as I hope it has) any abuse of mine in the Translation, A 3 there

The Epistle

there needs no farther Apology be made for it ; and I am difcharged from that part of the Task, usually required in Dedications; and that other new mode of making addresses of this kind, feem rather Panegyricks to the Patron, than relate to the matter in hand, I may more justly wave, having aspired to lay my Endeavours at the feet of so Illustrious a Prince; nothing by me to be faid or invented, can add the least grain to the weight of your Renown and Reputation. And though this History may in some measure seem unsuitable to your Grace, whole innate Bravery very in the Field, may be apt to contemn the Cowardile of the . times here treated of : yet it may not be altogether unpleasant to observe the Policies, Devices and Stratagems, wherewith these Princes and Common-wealths endeavoured to compass the ends they could not by force or valour attain to, which are here fo plainly and faithfully defcribed, that they may well ferve as fo many Land-marks to avoid the Rocksof Deceit, and so far prove useful to the most Gallant Prince alive.

Dedicatory.

But far be it from me to attempt the informing your Graces A 4 Judgment,

The Epistle Dedicatory.

Judgment, which has been enhightned by fo many great and glorious Experiences. I mult of all your Princely Virtues have recourfe only to your Clemency, hoping, that (with the worth of the Author) will procure mine a favourable acceptance, and plead a pardon for this confident Addrefs made by

Your GRACE'S

-3 m - 3 4.7

Left) arrest

Moft Humble and moft

Obedient Servant.

M. K.

THE

ТНЕ

E M

Writen by the Author,

 \mathbf{O}

R

Nicholas Machiavel

To his

Florentine Hiftory.

Had once an intention, when first I defigned to write the Florentine affairs both within and without the City, to begin my Narration from the year 1434, at which time the Family of the Medici, by the great deferts of Cosmo and John his Father, aspired to more authority than any other in Florence: For I thought all actions before that time had been particularly related by Messer Leonatd di Arrezzo, and Mesfer Poggio, two most Excellent Historians.

ans. But after a diligent perusal of their works, in order to observe their way and method; and by imitating them render this Hiftary more pleasant to the Reader. I perceived that in writing the Florentine transactions, with Forreign Princes, and people they had been very exact; but incivil discords and intrinsick diffentions (and the causes fram whence they (prung) they had in one part been quite filent, and in the other so brief, that the Reader could reap neither pleasare nor profit : which I imagine they did either, becanfe they thought those actions so inconfiderable, that they were unworthy to be committed to memory, or else out of fear of offending these descended from them, of whom they were to discourse, who by the relating them, might perhaps be justly scandalized : Both which reasons (with respect be it spoken) appear unworthy of Noble Spirits; for if any thing thing teaches or delights in a Hiftory, it is the particular description of things; and if any reading be profitable to Citizens that govern a Common-wealth, it is that which sets down the reason of animosities and divisions in their City, that growing wife by others damage, they may preserve themselves united. For if any examples have power over us, those certainly of our own Commonwealth have the greatest, and do likewise more redound to our advantage. And if any Republick fell into remarkable divisions, those of Florence are most notable, for most other Commonwealths we have any knowledge of, have been content with one division, whereby according to accidents they bave either added to, or ruined their City. But Florence not content with one, bas run into many. In Rome (as is notoriously known) after their Kings were expelled, there happened a disunion between tween the Nobles and Plebeians, which continued till their ruine. So Athens, and so all other Common-wealths which in that time flourished. But in Florence there first happened division between the Nobles themselves, then between the Nobles and the People, then among the People and Plebeians, and whenever any of these parties got the upperhand, then they divided among themfelves : which divisions caused so many executions, banishments and ruineof Families, as are not recorded to have ever happened in any other City. And in truth, in my judgement there need no better argument of the power of our City, than what may be deduced from thefe divisions, which were capable to annihilate the greatest and most populous City : Yet ours feem'd Hill to increase, such was the virtue of those Citizens, and the prevaillency of their judgement and valour to aggrandife them-them [elves and their City , that they who remained untainted, could by their virtue more exalt it than the malignity of those accidents, which would bave diminished any other, could oppress it. And doubiless had Florence been fo bappy when it first shook of the Yoak of Empire to bave established such a form of Government, as might have maintained it united. I know no Commonwealth, either Ancient or Modern, would have been superiour or equal to it in arms or industry. For it is remarkable that after they bad driven out the Ghibellines in such multitudes, that Tuscany and Lombardy swarmed with them, the Guelfs and those which remained in the City, in that war against Arezzo, a year before the battail of Campaldino, raised of their own Citizens twelve bundred men at Arms, and twelve thousand foot; and afterwards in the War against Phillip Visconti

Visconti Duke of Milan, when they were to follow their industry, and not make nee of their own Arms (for their men were consumed) they spent in five years, which that war lasted 3500000 Florens, and yet when that war was ended (not content with peace) to boaft the power and riches of their City, they went and befieged Lucca. I cannot therefore imagine why any spould think these divisions deserve not a particular description, and if thafe noble Authors were restrained by the fear they had of offending the memory of those they were to discourse of, they were much mistaken, and appear not to have perfectly underftood the ambition of men, and the defire they bave to perpetuate their own and their Ancestors names, not remembring, that many not having the means to acquire fame by any good or glorious a-Sions, bave set their wits on work to qain gain it by wicked and facinorous exploits, nor confidering that actions that bave grandeur in themselves (as all matters of State and Government bave) however they are asted, or whatever success they have, bring men more bonour than blame. Upon confideration of which things I changed my defign, and refolwed to begin my History from the Original of our City. But becaufe 1 have no intent to invade any other mans Province, I sball make a particular description until the year 1434, of such things only as have bappened within the City, faying no more of affairs without than what is necessary for the better understanding of those within, and after 1434, I shall particularly describe both one and the other : And moreover to the end, this History may the better in all times be understood, I sball set down by what means Italy came under those Potentates which then governed, all all which things as well Italian as Florentine will be comprised in four Books. The first briefly relating all the accidents of Italy, from the declination of the Roman Empire, to the year 1434, the second beginning from the Original of the City, shall continue till the war with the Pope after the driving out the Duke of Athens. The third shall end with the year 1434, and the death of Ladiflaus, King of Naples, where the fourth beginning we fball from that time to this present, particularly defcribe all things that bave happened, both within the City of Florence and without.

THE

THE Florentine

In eight

Written by

NICHOLAS MACHIAVEL.

BOOK

Ic people inhabiting the Regions Northwards Northern He from the rivers Rbyne and people cafed Danube, living in a health- themselves ful clime and apt for Ge- multinudese neration_oft-times increase to fuch vast multitudes,

Digitized by Google

that part of them are constrained to forfake their Native Conntry, and feek new places to dwell in. The Order observed when any of these Provinces would disburden themselves of their inhabitants is to divide into three parts, disposing things to, that ach part have its equal number of Nobilifië the deftruaion of the Roman Empire.

The Viligoths infeft the Empire :

Overcome by Theodo-Gm.

tie and Commons, of rich and poor. Then, that part to whole lot it falls, goes to feek its fortune, and the others (ealed ovone find fit down; md enjoy their the caule of native foil. These people were they, who destroyed the Roman Empire, to which the Emperors themselves contributed; who by forfaking Rune whe ancient fast of the Empire aid fering memfaves at Conftantimore, did extremely weak in that part of the western Empire, as well for want of their care and observance, as by exposing it to the rapines both of its own Ministers and their Endmies. And indeed the ruine of fuch an Empire founded upon the blood of so many valiant men could never have been effected where there had been less neg-lect in the Princes, less treachery in their Ministers, or lefs power and obstinacy in the affailors; for not one people alone, but many were they conspired to this ruine. the first that Pafeet the Cimbrians over-come by Marits) came from those nor-thern parts, to infest the Roman Empire were the Villgoths, or in plain English the Western Goths. Who laker some skirmithes on the Confines of the Empire, did by Grant' from the Emperors, for a long time keep their flation on the banks of the Danube, and though at divers times, and upon divers occasions they affailed the Roman Provinces, yet they were always by the Imperial powers repulled, and at last glorioufly vanquiffied by Ibeodofius : to that reduced reduced under his obedience, they made no more a King over themfelves, but contented with the flipend allowed them, lived and made war, under his Enfigns and command. But Theodofine slying, and leaving his two fons Arcadins and Hononin heirs to his Empire, but neither to his valour nor Attempts of fortune, the times were changed with the Gildon Raf-Prince. Theodofine had committed the suitern. charge of the Empire to three Governours giving Rufinm the Lievtenancy of the East, Stilicon that of the West, and to Gildon Affrica : all which after the decease of the Emperour, sought not how to govern like faithful Ministers, but how to possels (like Princes,) those parts left them in charge. The deligns of Gildon and Ruffinus were crushed in the very egg; but Stilicon who knew better how to diff femble his intence, fought to gain a confidence with the young Emperours, and in the mean while fo embroiled their estates, that he might with more ease afterwards feife them. To make therefore the Viligoths their enemies, he councelled them no more to give them their usual stipend. And not thinking them fufficient of themfelves to disturb the Empire, he contrived things fo, that the Eurgundians, Franks, Vandals and Alans, all Northern people, and ready to remove their habitations. should affail the Roman Provinces. The Aldric King Visigoiks deprived of their wonted provi- of the Vijis tion, to put themselves in a better posture gotto. B 2 of

Book I.

and dyes, and Anianiphu fucceeded.

of revenging fuch an injury, created Alarie their King, and turning their Forces upon the Empire after various accidents, having Sacks Rome, fpoiled all Italy, took and fack'd Rome. In the height of victories Alaric dyes, and Autaulphus fucceeds him, who takes to wife Placidia, fister to the Emperours, and upon that alliance enters into league with them to relieve France and Spain, which Provinces the Vandals, Burgundians, Alans and Franks (upon the encouragements above mentioned) had invaded. The Iffue of which was, that the Vandals who had possessed themselves of that part of of Spain called Batica, being vigoroufly affaulted by the Vifigoths, and almost despairing of any relief, were by Boniface, then Lieutenant of Africa, invited over to pof-fels that Province; for having himself turn'd Rebel, he was fearful, least his treafons should be discovered to the Emperours. These motives easily encouraged the Vandals Vandals pof- to undertake the enterprize, who under the selle Africk. Command of Genseric their King, made themselves Lords of Africk. Mean while Theodofius fon to Arcadius fucceeded to the Empire, who having but fmall regard of the Western affairs, gave opportunity to the Northern people to settle themselves in their conquests. Thus the Vandals began to Lord it in Africa, and the Alans and Visigoths in Spain, and the Franks and Burgundians not only feized upon Gaule, but gave names to the feveral parts by them poffeffed

Alases and Viligo ks Spain. Franks and Burgundians Gaul possessed, whence one was called France and the other Burgundy. These happy successes moved more people to attempt the deftru-Gion of the Empire, and another nation called Humas, possessed themselves of Pa-Humas enter nonia a Province lying just on this fide the Permaie. Danube, which from them has ever fince born the name of Hungary. And it happened as an addition to these diforders that the Emperour seeing himself beset on all fides (was forced, to leffen the number of his enemies) fometimes to make peace with the Vandals, fometimes with the Franks, whereby the barbarous nations grew still more powerful, and the glory of the Empire decreased; nor was the Island of Britain (now called England) secure in this in the Sangeneral calamity, for the Britains affraid of ones those people who had posseffed themselves of France, and feeing no way how the Emperour could defend them, called to their assistance the Angli, a people of Germany. These Angli under their King Vortiger undertook the affair, and having first defend- who fire ed them, soon after drove them out of the their Land Island, placing themselves there, and from their own name calling it England, whole And they old inhabitants thus driven from their na- polleds themfelves of tive foil, grew desperate, and though they Briany. could not defend their own Countrey, refolved to feife upon another; To which end with all their families they paffed over that Sea now called the Channel, and pof-$. felling themselves of those Countries next the the opposite those, called them after their own name Britany. The Human who as we full before had feated themfelves in Pan-

٢

Attila invades Italy; b

6

:

Belieges Aquilegia,

Attila

dyeth.

nomia, confederating with other people, called Lopides, Ernles, Thringians, and Ostrogather (as in their language they call the Eastern Gothe) determined to feek new Habitations. And finding no entrance into France already defended by the barbabarous people, marched into Italy under Antila their King, who fome time before to ingrofs to himself the whole Soveraignty, had put to death his Brother Bleda, thereby becoming to power ful that Andarie King of the Zepides, and Velamir Ring of the Offroger and him homage. At his arrival in Italy, Amila belieges Aquilegia, before which he lay two whole years without any molefation, and whileft he was in that leaguer, defininged the whole Country about it, difperfing all its inhabitants, which gave the first beginnings (as shall in due time be told) to the City of Venice. After the taking and defitoying Aquilegia, and many other Cities, He turned his forces towards Rome, the fpoil of which he forbore, at the earnest prayers of the Pope, to which he paid fuch reverence and refpect, that leaving Haly, he returned into Aufirsta and there dyed. After his decease Velamin King of the Offrogoths with the chief of the other nations took atms against Tenrie and Euries his fons, and killing one, forced the other with his Hunns to repais the Danube.

Danube, and return into their own Countrey ; the Oltrogoths & Zepides leating themfelves in Pannonia and the Hernley and Trringians on the faither bank of the Danube ; Attila having left Italy, Valentinian the Emperour of the well endeavoured to re-flore it to the Empire; and the more conveniently to defend it from the Barbartan's Falentinien power, forfakes Rome, and makes Ravenna venue the These Calamities were the occasi- Imperial his feat. on that, the Emperours who refided at Conftantinople, had many times granted the pof-feffion of it to others, as a thing full of hazard and expence, and the Romans had as often, without his permittion (feeing themfelves abandoned) either of themselves created an Emperour to defend them, or lome perion of Authority amongst them had usurped that dignity. As at this time Maximu the Roman happened to do after Va- Maximu ulentinian's death, forcing moreover Endo- surps the zia that had been his Wife, to marry him ; who impatient to revenge fuch an injury, and not enduring to fubmit to the marriage of a private Citizen, being her felf born of Imperial blood, secretly encourages Genferic Genferic in-King of the Vandals, and now Lord of Af- vited into frica to invade Italy: shewing him both the Italy by Eneafinels and advantage of the Conquest. He enticed with the hopes of Prey, foon comes, and finding Rome forfaken, facks it, and sacks Rome. stays in it fourteen days; he takes and pillages likewife many Towns in Italy; and having loaded himfelf and his Army with plunder

B 4

Digitized by Google

plunder returns into Affrica ; the Romans again returned to Rome ; and Maximus dead, they create Avisa a Roman, Emperour. In longer process of time, and after various ac-Error In- cidents in Italy and abroad, and the death of feveral Emperours, the Empire of Constan-simple fell to Zenon, and that of Rome to Oreftes, and Augustulus his fon, who by cunning had seized the Empire; and whilst he defigned to maintain it by force, the Erules and Turingians (who as I faid before, had seated themselves on the farther side of the Danube) uniting under Odoacer their Captain, came into Italy, and into the places by them deferted, entred the Lombards (a Northern people likewife) under the Conduct of Godolius their King who became (as in due time shall be faid) the last Plague of Italy, Odoacer thus come into Italy, overcame and flew Oreftes near to Pavia, and Augustulus fled, After this Victory, that Rome might feel a change of Title as well as Master, Odoacer forbearing the title of Emperour, caules makes him himself to be Riled King of Rome, and was felf King of the firlt of the Cheifes of those people now running up and down the World to feek habitations, that fetled in Italy, for all the o-thers either out of fear that they could not hold it (fuccour from the Eaftern Em-pire being fo near at hand) or for fome other hidden cause had only plundered it, and The state of fought fome other place of Refidence. Upon the whole, the ancient Roman Empire was in thefe times reduced under these Princes. Zenon perour of the Eaft.

Digitized by Google

Ød acer invades Italy

Róme,

the Roman

٦,

· · · 1

non who reigned in Constantinople, commanded the whole Eastern Empire, the Ofmogoths were Lords of Mifia and Pannonia. The Vificoths, Swenes and Alanes held Gafcony and Spain; the Vandals, Africa; the Franks and Burgundians, France; and the Hernles and Inringians, Italy. The Kingdom of the Offrogoths was now descended to Theodoric Nephew of Velamir ; who, be- Theodoric ing in league with Zenon Emperour of the King of East, fent him word that his Oftrogoths oftregate thought it hard measure, that they, who were fuperiour to all other people in Valour. should be inferiour in Empire; and that it was impossible for him, to restrain them within the bounds of Pannonia; therefore, fince he was necessitated to let them take Arms, and feek new abodes, he thought fit first to acquaint him with it, to the end he might provide for them by granting them peaceably fome Territories, where with his good favour, they might live more happily and commodiously. Whereupon Zenon partly for fear, and partly out of a defire to drive Odoseer out of Italy, gave Theodoric leave to has the En march against him, and take possession of leave to Italy. Who, foon departing from Panno-march im mia (where he left the Zenidar and la list). nia (where he left the Zepides, a people his allyes) and coming into Italy, he kills Odo. acer and his Son; and after his Example, takes the Title of King of Italy, chooling makes him-Ravenna for his Seat, out of the fame mo- felf King of. tives which had formerly perfwaded Valentinian to refide there, Ibeodoric was a man both both in war and peace most excellent; for in the one he was always Conqueror, and in the other a great Benefactor to his Cities and People ; he distributed his Offrogoths with their Captains throughout the Countrey, to the end that in war they might command them, and in peace govern them. He enlarged Ravenna, reflored Rome, and except military Discipline admitted the Romans to all dergees of Honour, he kept within their bounds (and that without any tumult of war, but by his fole authority) all those barbarous Kings who had thared the Empire, he built Towns and Fortreffes between the point of the Adriatick Sea, and the Alps, the more eafily to impeach the paffage of any new Barbarians that might come to infelt Italy. And had not fo many virtues been towards his later end fullyed with fome cruelty, occasioned by jea-Toulie of State;) which the deaths of Simmachur and Boerins two holy men are tellinonies an) his memory had in all points been worthy of renown and honour; for by his virtue and goodnels, not only Rome and Italy, but all other parts of the Weltern Empire (freed from the continual embroils of war, which for to long a term of years they had undergone by rea-fon of the inundations of to many barbarous nations) were relieved and reduced unto good order and happy effare. And certainly if any times may be termed miferable in Italy, or in those Provinces overrun

N of S76.3 Marin Jate

.

1.1.1

run by the Barbariams, they were those which paffed between the Reigns of Homrius and Arcadins, and his, for if it be well confidered what dammage it is to any Common-wealth or Kingdom to change its Prince or Government : not by any extrinfick force, but by civil discord, and how by little variations, Kingdoms and Commonwealths, though never fo potent run to ruine : it will afterward be eafie to conceive how much Italy and other Roman The 6d s. Provinces did in those times fuffer, which the of lin-Ŋ. not only changed their Government, but their Laws, Customs, manner of Living, Religion, Language, Habit and name; each of which things afunder (how much more then all together) are able to make the most resolute heart (that shall but think of them without either feeing or enduring them) to tremble. From hence sprung the ruine and the rife, the fall and increase of many Ciries. Among those that were ruined were Aquiteia, Lunt, Chiufi, Popolonia, Fiefole and many others, among those were new built were Venice, Siena, Ferrara and Aquila, and many other Towns and Cattles, which for brevity fake, I ottilt. Those which from small ones grew great, were Florence, Genoua, Pila, Milan, Naples and Bolognia, to which may, be added the tuine and reftoring of Rome, and many other Cities destroyed and rebuilt. Among these devastations, and this new, people sprung up new tongues, 'as is evident

11

dent by the language now in ule in Spain, France and Italy, which being a mixture of the native language of those nations, with the ancient Roman, has begot a new Dialect of speech. And besides not only Provin-ces, have changed their names, but even Lakes, Rivers, Seas and men, France, Spain, and Italy being full of new names, quite different from the former; for example to omit many other, the Po. Garda and Archipelago, have names now utterly difconfonant from what was given them by the ancients; men likewife from Cefar and Pompey are come to be called Peter, John and Matthew, but of all these variations. the change of Religion was not of the least moment, for the use and cultom of the ancient faith ingrafted in men, firugling and firiving with the miracles of the new, most dreadful discords and tumults were raised amongst all people, and certainly had the Christian Religion been united the difor-ders must have been much lefs, but whilest the Greek Church, the Roman, and that at Ravenna, frove against each other, and Hereticks befides opposed the Catholick Doctrine, it fadly disturbed the whole world, witnefs Africa, which endured more calamities by the Arrian Sect, with whom the Vandals complyed, and believed in, then by either their avarice or natural cruelty. So that men living in fuch a circle of perfecutions, bore in their eyes the terror of their hearts, for belides the infinite nite miferies they underwent, many knew not how to flye to the refuge of the Almighty, on whom all the diffreffed depend. for the greatest part being doubtful to what God to have recourfe, despairing of all rehef and fuccour, miferably dyed. Theedoric therefore deferves no finall praile for having been the first, could give a stop to all these mischiefs, infomuch that in the eight and thirty years that he reigned in I-taly. he reftored it to fuch fplendor that its former desolations were scarce perceivable. But he dead, and the Kingdom defcended to Atalaric fon of his daughter Amalafonta, Malarie the perverseness of fortune not yet quite his of ite-allayd, Italy in a very (hort time fell into the fame . plunge of misfortunes it had formerly groaned under. For Atalaric foon after his Grand-fathers death, and that the Government remained in his mother, was betrayed by Theodatus, who was called in Betrayed by by her to be her affiftant in the Govern-Theodatus. ment of the Kingdom, he having flain her, made himfelf King, and by that means Makes binbecoming odious to the Offrogoths, gave Alf King occasion to the Emperour Justinian, to hope he might drive him out of Italy, to which end he deputes Bellifarius his Ge-neral who had already fubdued Africa, and General for either driven out the Vandals, or forced the Empethem to fubrit. Bellisarins had all rour. that time poffeffed himfelf of Sicily, from whence passing into Italy, he takes Naples and Rome. The Gaths incenfed at these loffes

Thesedatus flain, and Visigetes -Kine

ŧÁ

Bellifarine recalled.

Totils King of the Gothe;

ġ

biffes kill theit King Theodatus whom they thought the occasion of them, and in his place chofe Vitigetes, who after fome firuglings was by Bellifarine belieged in Ravenna, and taken; but ere Bellifarius could to the full purfue this victory he was recalled by Justinian; And John, and Vitalia, confti-tuted in his fread, perfons quite different from the other, both in courage and conduct. Whereupon the Goths taking heart, created Ildoveldus, then Governour of Verons their King. After whom (for he was kill'd) came Totila to the Kingdom, who gave such shocks to the forces of the Empire, that the recovered Infrany, and reduced the Emperors Captains to the defence of the last cast, of all that Bellifarius had recovered; which made Justinian ver folve to fend him again into Lealy, who returning but with Aender forces, rather i loft that reputation he before had got, then gained any new. For Totila whileft Bellin Jorins with his Army lay encamped at Offia; Takes Rove in the very face of him took Bome, but feeing he could neither fafely hold, wor defert it, he for the most part difmantled it, driving out the people, and leading away the Senators Captive, and flighting Bellifas rius marched into Calabria to meet those forces that came to his recruit. Bellifaring feeing Rome thus deferted, made an honourable attempt, for entring the ruines of Rome with all imaginable celerity he began to rebuild the walls of it, and recall the inhabitants.

Book I.

inhabitants. But fortune was aver le to this his noble enterprize, for Julinian, being at that inflant affailed by the Partbians. once more recalled him, and he in obedj- Belijarine ence to his Lord, deferts Haly, leaving that ed. Province to the difference of Totile, when foon retakes Rome : but treated it not now with the former crueky, for at the intreaty of S. Benediki, a man then in great not · putation for his bolines, he Arone rather to restore it.. Mean while Justinian having made peace with the Parthian, defigned to fend a fresh Army to the relief of Italy, but was diverted by the Invations of the Selavonians, a new: Northern people, who having passed the Dimube, were entered in-Hyris and Ibracia : So that Jetila was in a manner the fole possesfor of Italy , but Instinian having overthrown the Selaron niam, fends his Army thicher under the command of Norfetes, the Eunlich, a main Norfetes fere most expert in war : who arriving in Italy, into Italy. defeats and kills Totila, and whileft the ner maining Goths made their tetrest tor Ravie. creating there Teja their King, Narfetts pofleftes himself of Rome, and after manching towards Teja, fights bim near Notete, and and overthrows and kills him. By which vis Grory the very name of the Goths was exa tinct in Icaly, who for about ferently years from Theodorick their full King, to Tija; had there Lordedit. No fooner was Italy freed from the Gaths but Jullinian dyed, Jullinians having Justin his fon his Successor, whos Death. counfelled counfelled by his wife Sophia recalls Narferes out of Italy, and fends Longinus in his flead. Longinus followed the method others had done before, refiding in Ravenna: but

Dokes firft in Italy.

belides that, he imposed a new form of Government; not conflituting Lieutenants of Provinces as the Goths had done, but making Chiefs of every important City under the Title of Dukes, And in thefe kind of diffributions he honoured Rome no more than any other place; for taking a-way the Confuls and Senate (which till that day had continued) he reduced it under the Command of a Duke; whom he yearly fent from Ravenna, and called it the Roman Dutchy : and to the Emperours Lieutenant who governed all Italy, he gave the file of Enarch. This division much facilitated the ruine of Italy, and contributed to the Lumbards possessing themselves of it with the more celerity. Narfetes was highly incented against the Emperour for taking from him the Government of a Province he had conquered with his own Blood and Valour ; & the more, because Sopbia not content with the injury of having made him be recalled, had added fcornful and reproachful terms to it, giving out that the would have him fet to spin amongst the other Eunucks. Infomuch that Narfeter, Iwelling with rage and Indignation perfwades Albonim King of the Lombards, then reigning in Pannonia, to come and possels himself of Isaly. The Lombards had, as we have faid before, feated themfelves

Albenine King of the Lembards

18

of Florence.

Book L

themselves in those Territories on the banks of the Danube, deferted by the Hernles and Taringians when their King Odoacer led them into Italy; where, having forme time refided, and their Kingdom descending upon Alboinus a bold and warlike man, they passed the Danube, and encountring Comundus King of the Lepides then policifed of Pannonia, overthrew and flew him: Amongst the Captives Alboints finds Rofsmund the Daughter of Commundus, and taking her to wife becomes Lord of Pannonia. but out of a bruitilk fiercenels in his nature, he makes a drinking cup of Comundus's skull, and out of it used to carouse in memory of that victory. Invited now by Narfetes, with whom he had been in Invited int league during the Gothick war, he leaves Norfites. Pannonia to the Huns, who as we have faid, were after the death of Attila returned into their own Countrey, and comes into Italy, which finding to ftrangely divided, he in an instant possesses himself of Pavia, Milan, Verona, Vicenza, all Tufcany, and the greatest part of Flaminia at this day, called Romania. So that by thele great and fudden victories judging himfelf already Conquetour of Italy, he makes a folemn feast at Verona, and in the heat of wine growing merry, caules Comundus's skull to be filled full of wine, and would needs, have it presented to Queen Rofamind, who fate at table over against him, telling her to loud that alk might hear, that in fuch C a tima

191

a time of mirth he would have her drink with her father; those words were as fo many darts in the poor Ladies bolome, and confulting with revenge. The bethought her felf, how Almachildis a noble Lombard. young and valiant; courted one of the La-dies of her bed-chamber, with her the contrives, that the thould promise Almachildis. the kindnels of admitting him by night to her chamber; and Almachildis according to her allignation being received into a dark room, lyes with the Queen, whileft he thought he lay with the Lady, who after the fact discovers herself, offering to his choice either the killing of Alboinus, and enjoying her and the Crown; or the being, made his facrifice for defiling his bed. Almachildis confents to kill Alboinus; but they, feeing afterwards their defigns of feizing the, Kingdom prove unfuccefsful, nay rather, fearing to be put to death by the Lombards. (fuch love bore they to Alboinus) they. fled with all the Royal Treasure to Longinus, at Ravenna, who honourably received them. During these turmoils, Julin dyes, and Tiberius was made Emperour in his flead, who employed in the Parthian, war could give no relief to Italy, which made Longinus think, it a convenient time, for him by means of Rosamund and her treasure to make, himfelf King of the Lombards and all Italy, he confults with her about it, and per-Swades her to kill Almachildu, and marry. Fim, which the accepting, prepares a cup of poilon

Alboinm death.

poston and with her own hand gives it Amachildis, as he came thirty out of the Beth, who having drank half of it, and finding it beginsto work inwardly; fufpe-Cing what it was, forces Rofammed to drink thereft, fo that in few hours both dyed ;and Lougiane buft his hopes of being King. Mean while the Lombards affembling in-Ravia, which they had made the principal lest of their Kingdom, choic Olefin King who rebuilt Inels deficoyed by Narfaris took Rimini, and aknost all the other Towns as far as Rome; but in this course of victory dies. This Clefis was to cruel, clefs King not only to firangers, but to his own Low of the Low bards, that they terrified with the regal bards. power, would no more create a Ring, But hade choice among themfelves of thirty Thirty Dukes or Captains to govern. The relait Dukes, of which determination was the caufe that the Lombards never became masters of all Italy, that their Dominions never reached. farther than Beneventum, and that Rome, Ravenna, Cremona, Manina, Padua; Mon-Selice, Parma. Bolonia, Faenza, Tarli and Cefani did many of them for a long time defend themselves, and fome of them never came under their Dominion, for the want of a King: made them lefs apt for war, and when afterwards they did create one, the time they had been free had begot in them a humour of being lefs obedient, and more rone' to diforders among themfelves, which first put a flop to their victories, and at at length drove them: out of Italy. "The affairs of the Lombards being therefore in. this condition; Longinus and the Romans made peace with them, upon the terms that both parties should lay down Arms, and each possels what they held. About this time the Popes began to grafp a larger: authority than ever they had done, for the first successors of S. Peter beingreverenced by all men for their miracles and holy life. the Christian Religion spread so far by their example that Princes were constrained L to avoid confution in the world) to yield of bedience to it. The Emperour therefore being become Christian, and having left. -Rome, and seated himself in Constantinople, it followed (as we have faid in the beginning) that the Empire fell to decay, and the Church of Kome did the more eafly flourish. Notwithstanding which, untilthe coming of the Lombards (whileft all Italy was subject to the Emperour or Kings) the Popes never affumed any further authority, than what the Reverence paid to their Doctrine and Piety gave them ; In' all other things they submitted either to the Emperour or King, and fometimes were by them put to death, and as their Ministers called to account for their actions. But that which made them gain a potency, and be looked upon as of some moment in the affairs of Italy, was Theodorick King of the; Goths choosing Ravenna for his feat; for Rome being left without a Prince, the Row mans 3...;

C 2

The growth of the Popes Authority.

mans for their refuge took occasion' to yield obedience to the Popes : yet by this means their authority increased not very much. only the Church of Rome obtained the precedency of that of Ravenna. But after the coming of the Lombards, Italy being divided into feveral parts, gave the Popes opportunity of becoming more brisk : for they being as it were the head of Rome, both the Emperour of Confantinople and the Lombards had to much respect for them, that the Romans, by means of the Popes, treated with, and made leagues with Longinus and the Lombards, not as Subjects but allyes. And thus the Popes fometimes fiding with the Lombards, and fometimes with the Greeks increased their own power and dignity. And the ruine of the Eastern Empire fucceeding (which happened about these times under Heracless the Emperour, the Selavonians before-mentioned again invading Iliria, and having mastred it, calling it after their own name Sclavonis, and other parts of the Empire being first overrun by the Perfians, then by the Saracens, who under Mabomet broke out of Arabia, and lastly by the Turks, Syria, Africa and Egypt being lop'd off from it) the Popes having no more that Empire (now grown fo weak) to fly to for refuge, and on the other fide the power of the Lombards dayly increating, they thought it high time to seek out new friends, and accordingly had recourse to the Kings of France for sup-C 3 post, 2

Digitized by Google

3

post. So that all the wars thereafter made by the Barbarians in Italy were at the Popes infigation, and all the Armies that infelied it were for the most part called in by them, which course they have continued even to And this is it, bas still these very times. kept Italy weak and divided, therefore a difdouring things following, we shall not treat farther of the fail of the Empire. now quite laid on the ground, but of the growth of Papacy, and of those other prinsipalites, which had the rule of Issly from that time till the coming of Charles the Eighth, fetting forth how Popes first by excomunication, and then by them and umsitogether grewat once to be terrible, and to be reverenced, and how by ill using both the one and the other, they have utterky loft the first, and stand (as to the last) at others differention. But to return to she matter in hand : Grigory the third coming to the Papacy, and Afolphus to the Kibgdom of Lombardy, the last contrary to all agreements, leizes Ravanna, and makes war upon the Pope. Whereupon Gregory for the reafons before recited, relying no longer upon the Emperour of Constantinopte now for weakened, nor upon the faith of the Londerds lo often violated, fends for aid to King Repin the Second, who from Lord of Aufria and Brabant was become King of France, not fo much by his own perforal valour as that of his father Charles Martel and his Grandfather Pepin. For Aftotphe King of Lombardy feizes Ravenna. Pope Gregoty. ctaves aid of Pepin King of France.

of Florence.

For Charles Martel being Regent of that Kingdom, gave that memorable defeat to the Sarazens near Tours on the river Loire. wherein above two hundred thousand, of them were flain, whereupon Pepin his fon fortified with his fathers, reputation, and his own virtue, became afterward King of that Countrey. To whom Pope Gregory (as we have faid) fent for aid against the Lombards, which Pepin promifed to lend him, but defired first to fee him, and be honoured with his prefence. Wherefore Gregery went to France, palling through Popeone. the Territories of the Lombards his ene- 7 post mies, without any stop or molestation, fo much was the veneration then paid to Religion: Gregory coming into France was highly honoured by that King, and fent back with an Army into Italy. who befieged the Lombards in Pavia, whereupon Altolphus much fireightened, was forced to come to an agreement with the French ; and they granted them peace at the Poper interceflion, who would not have the death of his enemy, but rather that he should be converted and live. But Pepins, Forces once returned to France, Altalphus kept not the league, whereupon the Pope had again recourle to King Pepin, who fends a new Army into Italy, overthrows the Lombards, takes Ravenna, and against the mind and will of the Greek Emperour, gives it to the Pope, together with all the Lands belonging to that Exarchate, adding to them the Defidering gets the Kingdom of Lombardy.

Is with his children taken prifoncr by Charles the Great.

Charles made Empegoar ;

- X ...

the Country of Urbin, and the Territory of La Marca. But Astolphus upon the configning over these Lands dyes, and Defiderive a Lombard Duke of Tuscany taks arms to feize the Kingdom, craving aid of the Pope, and promising him his friendship, who accepting the offer, granted his affistance, whereupon all the other Princes fubmitted. And Defiderins was at first faithful to his word, and perfected the confignation of those Lands to the Pope, according to the agreement made with King Pepin, nor came there any more Exarch from Constantinople to Ravenna, but it was governed at the Popes Arbitriment. Pepin foon after dyed, and his fon Charles fucceeded him, this was he who for his excraordinary feats of war was firnamed the Great, or Charlemain. In the mean time Theodorus fucceeded in the Papacy, he fell at variance with Defiderins, and was by him befieged in Rome : whereupon the Pope had recourse to Charles for fuccour, who passing the Alps, belieges Defiderius in Pavia, and taking him and his children, fends them prisoners into France, going himfelf forward to visit the Pope at Rome, where he pronounced that the Pope being the Vicar of God, was not to be judged by man, and the Pope and people of Rome made him Emperour. And whereas the Emperours used to confirm the Popes, the Emperours now in their Election begun to stand in need of the Popes, and then came the Empire to loose in point of Honour, and

of Florence.

and the Church to gain and increase, fo that by degrees it's authority more and more increased over temporal Princes The Lombards had now been two hundred twenty two years in Italy, and were reputed firangers in nothing but in name. And Charles minded to regulate Italy, which was in the time of Pope Leo the Third, was content they fhould dwell in the places where they were born, and called that Province after their name Lombardy. And becaufe they should bear a Reverence to the Roman name, he would have all the adjoining Countrey once subject to the Exarchate of Ravenna, stiled Romania, belides he created his fon Popin King of Italy, whole Makes jurifdiction extended as far as Beneventum, fon Perin and all the reft belonged to the Greek Em- Roma perour, with whom Charles had entred into alliance. Pascal the first was at this time advanced to the Papacy, and the Priests of the Church of Rome to have a nearer and First could closer correspondence with the Pope, and tutton of to qualifie themfelves for electing him, to Cardinals. adorn their power with a more eminent title, began to call themfelves Cardinals, and arrogated fo much to themfelves, especially after having excluded the people of Rome from any voice in the election, that feldom was a Pope chosen out of their number; whereupon after the death of Pafeal, Enge-nius the Second was created Pope from the the second Title of Cardinal of Sancia Sabina. And Pope. Italy (now fallen into the hands of the French) names.

Book

Charles the Emperour dies, and

Lewis for-ceeds.

331

•• Minulphus the firftGerman Emperour.

, i.

.....

Bérengarius King of Italy ; Beats the Hunns,

Remarits Emperour of the Eaft.

a . 14

Frence) changed formewhat of its manners and cuftorns. The Popes having affumed a fupremacy in Temporalities, and the Frence having introduced the Titles of Earls and Marqueffes, as Longinus Exarch of Ravenna did that of Dukes. After Tome Popes Offeree, (or hogs mouth) was ad-vanced to the Papacy, who because of the when Popes bruitishness of his own name, took that of first changed Sergius which gave original to the change of names fince used by all Popes at their election. Mean while Charles the Emperour dyed, and Lewis his fon Iucceeded in his ftead, after whole deceale, arofe luch difference among his children, that the Empire in the time of his Nephews, was fnatch'd away from the house of France, and transported to the Germans, the first German Emperour being called Ainulphus. Nor did the family of Cherles by their own dif-cords only lole the Empire, but likewile the Kingdom of Italy; for the Lombards taking courage to oppressed the Pope and Romans , that the Princes not knowing whither to fly for refuge, were necellitated to create Berengarius Duke of Fritli King. Thefe accidents encouraged the Hunas, who inhabited Pannonia to affail Italy, but lofing, the Battle to Berengerius, they were by him forced to return into Pannonia, or rather into Hungary, for fo was that Province from them now called. Romanu was at this time Emperour of Constantinople, having usurped that Empire from Constantine_ fumine, whole Admiral he had been : And braule upon that revolution, Paglis and Calabria which (as we have faid before) were subject to that Empire, had rebelled, enraged against them, he licensed or permitted at least the Saracens to invade those sale ling; Countreys, who once entred, not only polleffed themfelves of those Provinces, but attempted the expugnation of Rome. But the Romans (fince Berengarius was employed in their defence against the Humes) inade Alberigo Duke of Infcany their General and by his valour and conduct faved Rome from the Saracens, who railing their Seige, planted themfelves in a Rock or Fortreis upon mount Gargano, and there Lorded it over Paglia and Calabria, and oppreffed the reft of Italy, Thus fadly was Italy in those times afflicted; towards the Alps waffed by the Huns, and towards Naples by the Saracens. Long did it endure thefe pangs under three Berengarius's fucceffively, during all which time the Pope and Church were forely diffrested, not knowing whit ther to address themselves for relief, by reafon of the diffentions of the Western Princes, and the weakness of the Eastern Empire, The City of Genona and all that Coaft were milerably ruined by the Saracens, whence forung the first enlargement of Pifa, Her Pye. whither multitudes of people driven from gnew states their habitations fled. These things hapvened in the year of Christ 931. But Othe de son of Henry and Matilda, and Duke of Saxony

Sexony being chofen Emperour, a man of great prudence and reputation ; Agabitus then Pope, befought him to come into Italy, and deliver him from the Tyranny of the Berengarius's. The Estates of Italy stood then in this posture, Lombardy was under Berengarius the Third, and Albertus his fon. Tuscany and Romania were governed by a Lievtenant of the Emperour of the West, Puglia & Calabria were partly subject to the Eastern Emperour, & partly to the Saracens. In Rome two of the Nobility were yearly created Confuls, who governed according to the Ancient Custom, having joyned with them a Tribune or Prefect of the People. They had a Council of xii, who yearly appointed Superintendents to the Towns under their charge. The Popes had in Rome, and in all Italy more or lefs authority acing as the Emperors, or thole most in power favoured them. Otho the Emperour came then into Italy, and deprived the Berengarii of that Kingdom they had enjoyed for fifty five years reftoring the Pope to his Dignity. He had a fon and a Grand-child both called likewife Otho, who one after the other fucceeded him in the Empire. And in the time of Otho the Third, Pope Gregory the Fifth being expelled by the Romans, Otho comes into Italy and re-tores him. And the Pope to revenge himfelf on the Romans, took away their autho-rity of creating the Emperour, and gave it to fix Princes of Germany, three Bishops Mentz, appointed.

*38

Electors of the Empire

Mentz, Triere and Cologne, and three temporal Princes, Brandenburgh, the Palatinate, and Saxony. This was in the year 1002. After the death of Othe the Third; Henry Duke of Bavaria was by the Electors created Henry Data Emperour, and twelve years afterwards, choin crowned by Pope Stephen the Eighth, both Henry and Simeonda his wife were perfons of a holy life, which is apparent by the many Temples endowed and built bythem ; among which was the Church of S. Miniate near the City of Florence. Henry dyed anno 1024. to whom succeeded Conradue of Swevia, after him Henry the Conradius of Second, he came to Rome, and there being Heavile Sea Schifm in the Church of three Popes he could put them all down and caufed Clement the. Second to be chosen. Italy was now governed partly by the people, and partly by the Princes, and partly by the Ministers of the Emperour's amongst whom the chief. and him whom all the reft had recourse to, was called Chancellour. The most potent. among the Princes was Godfrid and the Countels Matilda his Lady, daughter to, Beatrice, fifter to Henry the Second, the and her husband possessed Lucca, Parma, Reggio and Manua, together with all that, is now called the Patrimony of S. Peter. The ambition of the people of Rome was, a fore thorn in the fides of the Popes. though they had formerly made use of the, Ropes power to refcue them from the Emperours; but after having got the rule of the the Chey, and reformed is according to pleasure, they as fuddenly became enemies to the Popes: and more injuries did they receive from that people, than from any of ther Christian Prince. Nay in that very: time that the Popes with their excommuni-L cations made all the West tramble, did the people of Rome fland out in Rebellion, and the contest on either fide was, who should take away the others reputation land authority: To expires which Nicolas the Second. being advanced to the Papacy, as Gregory? the Fifth had taken from the Romans they power of creating Emperours, to Nicolas) deprived them of having any concurrence in the election of Popes, which he ordaincit flowed belong to the Cardinals only And not content with this, he made a compace with the Princes of Galabria and Apalla; upon terms we fhall tell hereafter it by which he conftrained all Officers fent from the Roman throughout their jurildia ations to pay their obedience to the Boper and fome of them he difplaced. After thes death of Wicolas, was a schilm in the Ghundhij for the Clergy of Lombardy would in not fibring to Alexander the Second, electric ed at Romes bat chofe Gadilan of Rannad Antipope. Himy who abhoried the poweri of the Popes, gave warning to Alexander to mountes the Papacy, and fummon'd the Cardinals into Germany to choole a new! pope - Whereby he became the first Prince that felt the anguist of spiritual wounds; for Nicolar the Second, Pape.

Schifm in the Church.

Book I. of Fl

of Florence

for the Pope called a new Council at Rome, and deprived Henry of his Crown and Em-And some of the people of Isaly fided pin. with the Pope, and lome with Henry, And hence forung first up the faction of the Guelfs and the Ghibellines, to that Italy. now at quiet from barbarous innundations begun to tear out, its own Bowels, Henry thus excommunicated was forced by Henry as his own people to come into Italy and Popes bare-foot and bare-leg d, on his knees askid. the Pope gardon, which was done in, the year 1080, and yet there happened a freh, contest between the Pope and Henry where upon the Pope again excommunicates him and the Emperour fent his fon called liker communi-wile Henry, and by the help of the Roman, one who hated the Pope, believed him in his Whereupon, Robert Guifcard adri Gaffle. vances out of Pregling to his relief, and Henry, not ftaying for him returns alone into Ger-The Romans, continued full ohtin. many. nate, whereupon Rome was again lack'd by Robert, and reduced once, more into thois heaps of ruines from whence formany Popes, had before reftored it, And becaules from this Robert began the order of the ford fift the Kingdom of Naples, it will not be fur. Founder of perfluous to give a concile narrative of his dom of Ne-Actions and Nation. Those discords which der. happened amongst the Heirs of Charlemain, (of which we have before spoken) gaves incouragement to a Northern people called, Normans, to invade France, and they polfeffed feffed themselves of that Countrey which at this day from them is called Normandy. Of these people some came into Italy, in the time that that Province was at once infelted' by the Berengarii, Saracens and Fluines, and possessing themselves of fome Lands in Romania, did during all those turmoils valiantly maintain them. Irancred one of those Norman Princes had feveral fons, and among others William called Ferabar; and Robert firnamed Guifcard, and the tumults of Italy were now in some measure ceased. Yet the Saracens held Sieily, and made dayly inroads on the Sea--coafts of Italy. Whereupon William enters and Salernum, and with Melarchus the Greek that was the Emperous Lieutenant in Puglia and Calabria, to invade Sicily, and' in cale that they fucceeded, it was agreed that tach hould have a fourth part both of the fpoil and of the Countrey. They had happy fuccels; and driving out the Saracens, poffeffed themfelves of Sicily. But after the victory, Melarchus privily bringing in a a strong party of Greeks, takes pofferinon of the Island for the Emperour, and only divides the fpoil's which mightily discontented William, but he smothered his resentments, fill he had a fitter opportunity, and came out of Sicily with the Princes of Salernum and Capua, but as foon as they had parted from him to go home, William returns not unto Romania, but turning alide' towards towards Puglia, and prefently takes Melfi, and from thence in a fhort time in despite of all the power of the Greek Emperour, makes himfelf Lord of all Apulia and Calabria, over which his brother Robers Guiscard reigned in the time of Pope Niebolas the Second. And because there happened some difference betwixt him and his Nephews about the inheritance of that State, he made use of the Popes authority to compole it; which the Pope willingly complyed with him in, defirous to gain Robert to defend him against the German Emperours, and the infolency of the people of Rome, which he afterwards did, when as, we have before declared, he at the inftance of Gregory the Eighth chafed Henry from Rome, and tamed that people. To Robert succeeded Roger and William his fons, to whole Do- Roger and minion was joined Naples and all that Coun- William fors try between Naples and Rome, and after- Guije.rd. wards Sicily, of which Robert made himfelf master, and after that again William going to Constantinople to marry the Emperours . Daughter, Roger fell upon his Estates, and took them; heightned by which new acquists, he was the first of that line who Roger first of made himself be called King of Italy : that line but afterward contenting himfelf with the King of Itatitle of King of Puglia and Sicily, he was the first gave name and beginning to that Kingdom, which is still maintained within the antient limits, though it hath often changed changed not only blood, but nation; for the Norman race decaying, that Kingdom fell to the Germans, then to the French, then to the Arrogonians, and is at prefent pof-feffed by the Flemmings : Urban the Second was now come to the Papacy, who being hated in Rome, and not thinking himfelf fafe in Italy by reason of its divisions, undertook a noble Defign, and going into France with all his Clergy, and gathering together multitudes of people in Antwerp, by an Oration he made against the Infidels, he so stirred up the minds of men, that they determined that war against the Saracens in Asia, which enterprife and all other of like kind that afterwards happened were called Croifado's. because all that went, wore upon their arms, or upon their upper garments a red The heads of this undertaking Crofs. were Godfrey, Eustachius, and Adolvin of Bulloign, Earls of Bolonia, and one Peter a Hermit much renowned for his piety and prudence, to whom many Princes and much people flock'd with monies, and many went voluntarily to this war without expecting any pay (fo much could Religion prevail in the hearts of men) moved thereto by the Example of their Captains and Leaders. This enterprife was very glorious in its beginnings, for not only all Afia minor, but Syria and part of Egypt fell into the hands of the Christians, and this it was gave birth to the order of Knights of Jerufalem, which at this day are reigning and refiden r

Digitized by Google

· TE

The Holy War.

22

Knights of Jernfalem.

refident in the Island of Rhodes, the only krong Bulwark against the Turks. These Templers. now fprung up likewile the order of Knights Templais, who by realon of the levelness of their manners foon fell to detay. In progress of time lundry accidents happened, whereby many whole nations as well as particular perfons because famous. In favour of this enterprife went the Kings of England and France, the Nobles and people of Pifa, Venice and Genard, who all gained a high reputation, fighting a long. time with various facceffes against Saladine the Saracon Sultan; but in the end his valour and the Christians differtions rob'd them of all that glory, they had at first attained to, and after ninety years they were driven out of all that they had with fo much honour and to happily recovered. After the death of Urban, Paschal the Second Paschal the was created Pope, and Henry the Fourth ad- focond Pope. vanced to the Empire. He comes to Rome feigning a Friendship for the Pope, but af--terwards puts the Pope and all his Clergy in Prilon, nor would he release them, till full power was granted him to dispose of the German Church as he pleased, about this time dyed the Countels Mathilda, and left the Church heir to her Effates. After the . death of Pascal and Henry succeeded divers Popes and divers Emperours, till fuch time as the Papacy came to Alexander the Alexinder Third, and the Empire to Frederick the Pore. Swede, firnamed Barbaroffa. The Popes Fred. Birhad perour. D 2 - had all these times along been much perplexed by the Emperours and People of Rome, but their vexation was in the time of Barbaroffa mightily increased. Frederick was an excellent Soldier, bnt of fo haughty a spirit, that he could not endure to yield to the Pope; yet at his Election he came to Rome to be crowned, and returned peaceably back into Germany: But he held not long in that quiet temper, for returning into Italy, to reduce fome Towns in Lombardy, had refused him obedience, it happened at the fame time that the Cardinal of St. Clement, a Native of Rome, divided himself from Pope Alexander, and by a Junce of Cardinals was created Pope. The Emperour Frederick lay then encampted at Cremona, to whom Alexander fending to complain of the Anti-pope, received answer, that they should both appear before him, and then he would give fentence which of them should be Pope. This answer difpleased Alexander, and because he observed Frederick inclinable to favour the Antipope, he Excommunicates him, and flees to Phillip King of France. Mean while Frederick pursuing the War in Lombardy, takes and difinantles Milan, whereupon Verona Padua, and Vicenza made a League together against him for their common defence. During these transactions the Anti-pope dyes, and the Emperour in his flead creates Guido of Cremona. In this Interval of time, the Romans by reason of the Popes abfence,

An Aptipope in Italy.

The Antipòpe dyes and another fet up.

fence, and the impediments the Emperour net with in Lombardy, had reaffumed fome authority, and went about requiring Homage of those Towns had formerly been their subjects. And because the Insciolans would not submit to their Authority, attempted to force them to it; but they, being affifted by Frederick, fell upon the The Romans Romans Army, and routed them with fo deficated by horrible a flaughter, that Rome was never lance. fince either fo rich or populous. However Pope Alexander was returned to Kome, hoping he might be very secure there, because of the Enmity the Romans bore to Frederick, and of the Enemies which he had in Lombardy. But Frederick laying afide respect of all things elfe, goes and encamps before Rome, where Alexander stay'd not his coming, but flees for refuge to William King of Puglia, who remained heir of that Kingdom after the death of Roger. But the Plague getting into Frederick's army, forced him to raile his Siege, and return into Germany : 'And those Towns of Lombardy which had confpired against him, the better to oppress Pavia and Tortona, which held on the Imperial fide, built a City to be the feat of the War, which they called Alexandria, in honour of Pope Alexander and fcorn of Frederick. Guide the Anti-pope likewife dying, John of Fermo was fet up in his ftead, who protected by the Imperial party, refided in Montefia fconi : Mean while Pope Alexander was gone to Infulum, invited thither by that people, that D 3 that by vertue of his Authority, they might be the better defended from the Romans. Ambaffadors Hitter came to him Ambaffadors from to the Pope Henry King of England, to let him know that their King had not any hand in the mas Becket. death of St. Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, as was publickly reported. Whereupon the Pope feat two Cardinals into England to enquire into the truth of things ; and though they could not find the King in any manifest fault, yet because of the infamy and feandal of the fin, and for that he had not honoured him as he deferved, they put him to this penance, that Convoking together all the Barons of his Kingdom, he thould clear himfelf upon Oath before them, and befides fhould prefently fend two hundred Solders paid for a whole year to Jerusalem ; and should himself be obliged with as great an Army as he could raile, to go there in perion before three years expired. And further, that he should annul all acts any way infringing the liberty of the Clergy, and give confent that any of his Subjects that pleased might appeal to Rome : All which conditions were accepted by Henry, and that great King submitted to a sentence. which a private man would now blush to foop to. But though the Pope exercifed fuch authority over Princes fo far diftant, yet could he not reduce the people of Rome to obedience, whom he could not prevail with to grant him relidence there, though he promised, not to meddle with any bur Ecclefi-

Digitized by Google

King Henlion-

38

· Ecclebastical affairs, so much are appearmaces more dreaded at a distance then nearer hand. Frederick mean while was returned into Italy, and whilft he was preparing new War against the Pope, all his Prelates and Lords declared they would forfake him, unless he would reconcile himfelf to the Church ; So that he was confirained to go and adore the Pope at Venice Frederick where they came to accord. By which a- fibrilits to greement the Pope deprived the Emperour the Pope. of all Authority over Rome, and nomi-nated William King of Sicily and Puglia for his confederate. And Frederick of a temper not able to live in quiet, goes to the Holy Land, to wreak that rage and ambition up. Go to the on the Mahometans, which he fail'd of haveing fatisfied against the Vicar of Chrift. But And dyes in coming to the River Cydnus, and delighted the way. with the clearness of its Streams, he went to wall himfelf in it, and of that diforder dyed. Frederick thus dead, the Pope had only the contumacy of the Romans to contest with. And after many disputes about the creation of Confuls, it was agreed that the Romans should elect them according to their ancient Cultoms, but that they should not enter upon the Magistracy, till they had fworn fealty to the Church; this agreement made Jobn the Anti-pope flee to Montauban, where he foon after dyed. Mean while William King of Naples dyes, and the Pope The Pope defigns to poffels himfelf of that Kingdom; defigns to fize the that Prince having left no other Male-Chil- Kingdom D 4

39

;

dren of Naples.

dren but Tancred his bale Son. But the Barons would by no means confent to the Henry Son of Pope, but would have Tancred for their made Empe- King. Celestine the Third was now Pope, who defirous to fnatch that Kingdom out rour. of Tancreds hands; contrived to make Henty Son of Frederick Emperour, and prothiled him the Kingdom of Naples, upon condition he should restore to the Church those Lands appertained to it; and to make the matter more easie, he takes out of the Monaftery Constance the Daughter of Willi-And King of Nayles. am already well stricken in years, and gives her Henry to Wife. And thus paffed the Kingdom of Naples from the Normans, who had been the Founders of it to the Germans. Henry the Emperour having first setled the affairs of Germany, comes into Italy with his Wife Constance, and his Son of about four years old, called Frederick, and without much difficulty makes himfelf master of the Kingdom ; Tancred being already dead, and having left hehind him only an Infant Henry dyes, called Roger. Sometime after, Henry dyes in Sicily, and Frederick fucceeds him in the Kingdom 5 'And in the Empire Otho Duke of Saxony, made to by the favour of Inno# cent the Third, but as foon as he had got the Crown, contrary to all imagination, Othe Becomes an Enemy of the Popes, Teizes on Romania, and prepares to invade the Kingdom: whereupon the Pope Excommunicates him, and he being forlaken by all, the Electors chose Frederick King of

40

of Naples Emperour. Frederick comes to Frederick Bane for the Crown, but the Pope refules ples Empeto crown him, fearful of his power, and rour. wishing rather to drive him out of Italy, as he had driven Otho. Whereupon Frederick in anger goes into Germany, and after many battails with Otho overcomes him. Mean time Innocent dyes, who befides other his famous works built the Hospital of the Holy Ghoft at Rome, to him fucceeded Honorious the Third, in whole time fprung up the Orders of St. Dominick and St. Francis in the year M CC XVIII. This Pope Crowns Frederick, and John descended from Baldwin King of Jernsalem (who was with the remnant of the Christians in Alia. and yet held the Title) gives him his Daughter to wife, and for a Dower configns to him the Title of that Kingdom. whence it comes, that whoever is King of Naples, stiles himself King of Jerusalem. In Italy they now lived after this manner: The Romans made no Confuls, but in fread The State of of them they made fometimes one, fome- luly. times more Senators. The League likewife continued that was made amongst the Cities of Lombardy against the Emperour Frederick Barbaroffa, which were Milan, Brescia, Mantona, with most part of the Cities of Romania, and befides them Verona, Vicenza, Padoua and Trevigi. On the Emperours part were Cremona, Bergamo, Parma, Reggio, ' Modena and Trent. The other Cities and Castles of Lombardy, Romania and Marca Irevigi-

Trevigiana took according to the necessity. of the times now one part, now the other. There was come into Italy in the time of Osho the Third one Ezelmo of whom remained in Italy, one Son that begot another Ezel-He being rich and potent, addreffed. 1110. himfelf to Frederick the Second, who (as has been faid) was become enemy to the Pope, he took Veruna and Mantons; difmantled Vicenza, garrifon'd Padua and defeating the army of the Colleagues, takes his course towards Inscany. Infomuch that Exelmo had fubdued all Marca Trevigiana; but he could not Master Ferrara, it being too well defended by Azone d' Efte, and those people the Pope had in Lombardy. Whereupon raifing his Seige, the Pope gave that City in Fee to Azone d' Efte, from whom are descended the present Lords of it. Frederick flay'd at Pifa, defirous to make himfelf Lord of Infcany, and by firing to diflinguish between his friends and enemies, he Tow'd those feeds of division which occationed the ruine of all Italy: For the factions of the Guelfs and the Gbibellines multiplyed; Those who followed the Church being called Guelfs, and those who fided with the Emperour Ghibellines, in Pistoya were these names first heard. Frederick des parting from Pifa, wastes and destroys the Territories of the Church ... So that the Pope having no other remedy, fets on foot the Croifado against him, as his Predecessors had done against the Infidels: And Frederick/

The Factions of the Guelfs and Gbibellines multiply, deried, that he might not in an inftant be forfaken of his people, as Frederick Barbarolla, and other his Ancestors had been. hires great numbers of Sarazens, and to oblige them to his fervice, and erect to himfelf a Bulwark in Italy, firm enough to withstand the Church, without fear of the Popes curfes ; he gives unto them Nesera in the Kingdom of Naples, that having a refuge of their own, they might with more fecurity ferve him. Innocent the Fourth Innocent the was now come to the Popedom, who fear- Fourth ful of Frederick, first goes to Genous, and thence to France, where he calls a Council at Lyons; to which Frederick determines to go, but was with-held by the Rebellion of Parma, from the Seige of which being repulled, he goes into Tufcany, and thence to rederick Sicily, where he dyes, leaving his Son Con- Resperour rade in Suevis, and in Puglis, Maufred born Nepts dyes. of his Concubine, whom he had made Duke of Beneventum. Conrade comes to take poffeffion of the Kingdom, and arriving at Naples dyes, leaving only Couradine an Infant, and then in Germany. Wheneupon Manfred first as Protector of Conradine, gets that Manfred his State into his hands, and afterwards giving bafe fon gets out that Comradine was dead, makes himfelf the King-King, both against the will of the Pope, and the Neapolistans, whom he forced to give their confent. Whilft the Kingdom laboured under these calamities, many troubles were raifed in Lombardy by the Gnelfe, and the Gbibelline Factions. For the Guelfe's ftood Pope.

42

Book I.

Purfues his fathers enmity a-Bainft the Church.

44

The Pope creates Charles of of Naples.

He arrives et offia.

food up for the Popes Legate, and the Gbibellines for Ezelme, who was possesfeld of almost all Lombardy beyond the Po. And because in the heat of the War Padona had rebelled, he put to death twelve thoufand Paduans, and before the War was ended dyed himfelf, at about thirty years of age, after whof death all the Towns by him poffeffed were free. Manfred King of Naples purfued the Enmity of his Anceftors against the Church, and held the Pope, who was now called Urban the Eighth, in continual trouble and torment, in fo much that to tame him, he fet on foot the Croifado against him, and went to Perugia to attend their coming in to him ; but perceiving that people earne in very flow and faintly, 'he concluded that to overcome -Manfred, more certain helps would be requifite, he therefore seeks the favour of France, Anjon, King and to that end, Charles of Anjon, brother of Lewis King of France, he creates King of Sicily and Naples, and encourages him to come and take possession of that Kingdom. But before Charles could get to Rome, the Pope dyes, and in his stead Clement the Fourth was got into the Chair; in whole time Charles with thirty Gallyes arrives at Oftia, having given order to his other people to come by Land. Whilft he ftay'd in Rome, the Romans to gratifie him, made him Senator, and the Pope installed him in the Kingdom, on condition that he should yearly pay to the Church fifty thousand Florines, and

of Florence.

and withall made a Decree that neither Charles nor any other holding that King-dom should be capable of being Emperours: Charles marches against Manfred, defeats and kills him near Beneventum, and fo becomes Lord of Sicily and Naples. But Conradine to whom by his fathers will that Scepter belonged, having gathered a great power in Germany, comes into Italy against Charles, with whom he fights at Taliacozzo, is defeated and flees, but in his flight being known, is taken prisoner and flain. Italy was now quiet till Adrian the Fifth fucceeded to the Papacy, and Charles being Adrian the now at Rome, and governing the City by virtue of his Senators office, the Pope not able to endure his greatness and power retires, and makes Viterbo his refidence, from whence he folicits the Emperour Rodolphus to come into Italy against Charles. Thus the Popes often out of specious pretences of their care of Religion, but oftener out of their own natural Ambition, never ceased calling fresh forces into Italy, and stirring up of new wars; and no fooner had they made any Prince powerful, but they repented it, and fought his ruine, not permitting any to possels that Province, which by reason of their own weakness they could not enjoy, And Princes flood in aw of them, because . fighting or flying they always overcame, if they were not by fome wile or other oppeffed ; as were Boniface the Eighth, and some others, who under the colour of Friendship

Friendship were by the Emperours made prifoners. Redolphus could not come into Italy, being staid by the war he had in Bobemia. 'Whileft things flood thus, Adrian Nicolas the dyes, and Nicolas the Third, of the Family third Pope ; of Orfini is made Pope, who contrived all ways imaginable to leffen the power of Charles, and managed things to as to make the Emperour complain that Charles kept a Governour in Talcany, and favoured the Guelf Faction, which fince Manfred's death had been by him revived in that Province : Charles yielded to the Emperour, and withdrew his Governour, and the Pope fent one of his Cardinal Nephews Governour for the Empire : whereupon the Emperour in return of this Honour reftored Romania to the Church, which had by his predeceffors been taken from it, and the Pope made Bertolds Orfini Duke of Romania : and now judging himfelf potent enough to look Charles in the face, he first took away his Office of Senatour, and made a Decree that none of Royal Blood should hereafter be Senators of Rome. He had next a mind to Inatch Sivily from Charles, and to that end held a private treaty with Peter King of Ar-Treats privately with ragon, which afterwards in the time of his Arragon to Succeffor took effect. He defigned likefrom Charles wife to make two Kings of his own Family, one in Lombardy, and the other in Tuscany, whole power might be lufficient to defend the Church from the invation of the Germans, and infolencies of the French already ready in the Kingdom. But with these thoughts he dyed, and was the first of the Popes that gave fuch visible testimonies of his natural ambition, and who under colour of feeking the Churches advantage, fought only honours and riches for himself and his! And as in the times hitherto paft, no mention is made of any Nephews or Kindred of the Popes, fo for the future the Popes Ne-History will be to full of them that we shall show not fail to meet even with their own chil- on firth pat-dren; nor can the Popes now have any ferred and thing more to tempt them, but as they enriched. have defigned all along to these times to make principalities hereditary, fo now to contrive to make the Papacy fo. Indeed true it is that principalities by them erected are feldom long lived, becaufe the Popes generally living themfelves but a very thort time, though they plant never fo well, yet their plants not having time enough to fpread and fasten in the root, having but slender hold must needs upon the first guft of wind flag, and wanting that virtue which should uphold them, fall. To Nicolas fucceeded Martin the Fourth, who being of the French nation favoured Charles his Marin the party, and in requital Charles fent his Forces elebth Pope. into Romania that had rebelled, and being encamped at Furli, Guido Bonafi an Aftrologer gave directions that at a fignal given by him the people (hould fail on upon them, blomuch that all the French were taken or flain. In this time the practice fet on foot

47

Machiavel's Hiftory

Book I.

The French Sicily. The Aragomans feize the Ifland.

18

Rodulphus ties of Italy their freedom.

Boniface the eighth Pope foot by Pope Nicolas with Peter King of Arragon was brought to effect, for the Sicilians massacred all the French they found; maffacred in and Peter made himfelf Lord of the Island, under pretence it belonged to him in right of his wife Contance the daughter of Manfred; but Charles providing for war in order to the recovery of it'dyes, leaving behind him Charles the Second, who in that war was made prisoner in Sicily, and to regain his liberty, promifed that he would again deliver himfelf up prisoner, if with-in three years time he did not prevail with the Pope to invest the Kings of Arragon with the Kingdom of Sicily. Rodulphus the Emperour though he could not come alls the Ci- into Italy, yet to gain the Empire some reputation there, fends his Embassadour with full authority to make all those Cities free that would purchase it; whereupon many bought it, and with their liberty changed their manner of living. Adolphus of Saxony fucceeded in the Empire, and in the Papacy Piero del Murone who was called Pope Celestine, who being a Hermit, and of a firict and holy life, after fix months refigned, and Boniface the Eighth was elected. The Heavens that knew there would a time come that Italy (hould be freed from the French and Germans, and be left entire in the hands of Italians, fo that the Pope if foreign obstades were once wanting, could neither establish nor hold his power, raised up in Rome two mighty families, the Calonness lonnefi and the Orfini that with their power The Pope and vicinity they might keep the Papacy at feels to rea bay ; whereupon Pope Soniface who knew ine all the this well, endeavoured utterly to extirpate the family of the Colonefi, and belides having excommunicated them, bandied the Croifado against them, which, if it damaged them, damaged the Church much more; for those arms which by faith and charity would do wonders, being by felf ambition turned against Christians, lose their edge and vittue: and thus the immoderate defire. of fatisfying their own appetite, made the Popes by degrees difarm themfelves. He alfo deposed two of that family, which were Cardinals; and Sciarra the chief of the Family (in a difguife) flying, was taken by the Catalonian Corfairs, and put to the oar, but afterwards coming to be known in Marsellis was sent to Philip King of France, who flood excommunicated and deprived of his Kingdom by Boniface: and Philip confidering that in open war against the Pope, Princes either came off lofers, or run great hazards, had recourse to cunning, and diffembling to make an agreement with the Pope, he fends Sciarra privately into Italy, who arrived at Anagnia where the Pope then was, and getting his friends together by night, took him, and though foon after the people of Anagnia refcued and fet him at liberty, yet neverthelefs out of mere vexation to be fo taken, he dyed Boniface was the first that established Dyes mad mad. the E

•

Clement the Fifth, Pope.

Harry of Luxembourgb Emperour.

the Jubilee, anno1300, and ordered the celebrating it every hundredth year. About thefe times happened great troubles between the Guelf and Gbibelline factions, and becaufe I-taly feemed forfaken by the Emperours, many Cities became free, and many were u-furped by tyrants. Pope Benedici reftored the Cardinal Colonefe the hat, and abfolved Philip King of France ; To him fucceeded Clement the Fifth, who being a French man removed the Court into France 1306. During thefe things dyed Charles the Second, King of Naples, to whom fucceeded Robert his fon, and to the Empire was elected Harry of Luxemburgh, who came to Rome to be crowned, though the Pope was not there. Sad troubles arole in Lombardy by reason of his coming, for all those that were driven out, whether Guelfs or Gbibellines, being returned again into their own Cities, and striving again to drive each other out, they filled Italy with war and tumult, do whatever the Emperour could to prevent it. Parting from Lombardy by way of Genona, he came to Pifa, where he begun to contrive how to refcue Tuscany from King Robert, but not able to do any thing, he goes forward to Rome, where he stayed but few days, for being driven out by the Orfini, encouraged by King Roberts favour, he returned to Pifa, and that he might more fecurely war against Tuscany, and withdraw it from under King Roberts yoke, he caufed Frederick King

King of Sicily to invade it, but whileft he was hoping to posses Tuscany, and take it away from Robert, he dyed. To whom fucceeded in the Empire Lewis of Beveris. And in the interim Jobs the two and twentieth Lews of Became to be Pope, during whole time the rour. Emperour cealed not to perfecute the Jobs the two and Guelfs, and the Church, whole chief defen- two and ders were King Robert and the Florentines, Pope. whence arole mighty wars managed in Lombardy by the Visconti against the Guelfs, and in Tuscany by Costruccio of Lucca a-gainst the Florentines. But because the Fa-inily of the Visconti were those that laid the foundation of the Dutchy of Milan, first Dutes one of the five principalities that after go- of Milan. verned Italy: I think it convenient to make a larger inquisition into their original. After the league in Lombardy, which we have before mentioned, made by feveral Cities to defend themselves from Frederick Barbaroffa, Milan, restored from its ruines, to revenge the injuries it had received, joined it self in that league, which bridled Barbaroffa, and for a time kept the Church party in heart and life ; and amidst the calamities of the war that enfued, the Family de la Torre became most potent in that City, and daily increased in reputation, while the Emperours authority was but feeble in that Province : but Frederick the Second coming into Italy, and the Ghibelline Faction growing potent by means of Ezelmo, and that hamour spreading in every City. Amongst thofe Ez those who in Milan were leaders of that party was the Family of the Visconti who chased those de la Torre out of that City, yet ere they had been long expelled, by agreement made between the Emperour and Pope, they were reftored to their Countrey. But the Pope being with his Court gone into Fance, and Harry of Luxemburgh coming into Italy to go fetch the Crown at Rome, was in Milan received by Maffeo Vifconti and Guido de la Torre, the two heads of those Families; and Maffeo defigning to make use of the Emperour to drive Guido out of Milan, which he judged easie to do, because he was of the contrary faction, took occafion from the grievances and complaints of the people at the tyrannous deportment of the Germans, and warily went about encouraging every one, and perfwading them to take arms and free themfelves from the flavery of those Barbarians: and when he thought he had disposed all things to his purpole, he cauled by one of his confidents a turnult to be raifed, whereupon all the people took arms against the German name; and no fooner was the alarm given, but Maffeo with his fons and all his confederates arming themselves, ran with speed to Harry, telling him how this tumult arofe, from the Family de la Torre, who not content to live privately in Milan had taken that opportunity to fack it, to gratifie the Guelfs of Italy, and make themselves Princes of that City; but that he should be of good courage for for they and their party if he were minded to defend himfelf, were ready to run all hazards to fecure him ; the Emperour believed all that Maffeo told him, and joining his forces to the Visconti's, set upon those de la Torre (who were dispersed up and down the City to appeale the tumult,) and those they could light of they flew, and the reft, having difpoil'd them of their goods, banished ; thus remained Maffeo Visconti as Prince in Milan, and after him Galeazo and Azo, and after them Lucinus and John, John became Arch-Bifhop of that City, and Lnclinus (who dyed before him) left Isfue, Barnaby and Galeazo, but Galeazo, dying foon after, left behind him John Galeazo, called the Count of virtue; who after the death of the Arch-Bishop, treacherously slew his-Uncle Barnaby, and remained the fole Prince of Milan, and was he who first bore the title of Duke; of his iffue remained Pbilip, and John Maria Angelo, who being flain by the people of Milan, the State remained to Philip, who left no Isfue-male, and fo was this Government transferred from the Family of the Visconti's to that of the Sforza's, in the manner, and for the reasons which shall in due place be declared. But to return where we left off, Lewis the Em-perour to give reputation to his party, and Emperor to to take the Crown, comes into Italy, paf-draw money fing through Milan, and having occation to Milanefer, kvy some money among the Milaneses, imprisons makes a show of giving them liberty, and the Vijconti. puts. E 5

53

Pifa and Lucca rebel.

John King of Behemia comes into Italy.

puts the Visconti in prison, whom afterwards by means of Caftruccio of Lucca, he released, and going to Rome, the better to difturb the peace of Italy, he makes Peter Cornara Antipope, by whole reputation and the Vifconti's arms he hoped to weaken the oppoling parties of Tuscany and Lombardy ; but Castruccio dyes, and his death was the principal caule of Lewis his ruine, for Pifa and Lucca rebelled against him, and the Pisans sent the Anti-pope prisoner to the Pope In France, and the Emperour despairing of the affairs of Italy, returns into Germany : No fooner was he gone, but John King of Bohemia comes into Italy, invited by the Gbibellines of Brescia, of which and Bergamo he makes himfelf master: and becaule his coming was by the Popes confent (though the contrary was pretended) the Legate of Bolonia favoured him, judging it a good expedient against the Emperours return into Italy. By this accident the face of things in Italy were quite changed, for the Florentines and King Robert feeing the Legate favoured the attempts of the Gbibellines, became enemies to all those, to whom the Legate and King of Bobemia were friends : and without respect either to Guelf Ghibelline drew in many Princes into or league with themfelves; amongst whom were the Visconti, those de la Scala, Philip Gonzaga of Mantoua, those of Carrard, and those D'este, whereupon the Pope excommunicated them all, and the King doubtful of

of this League, went home to recruit his Army, and returning again with greater force, yet found the enterprife very diffi-cult: whereupon terrified, to the great diffeasure of the Legate, he returned into Bobemia, leaving only Reggio and Modena garrifoned, and recommending Parma to Marschie, and Peter de Ross, who were very potent in that City. He being gone, Bolo-nia entred into the League, and the Confe-derates divided among themselves four Cities, which still remained on the party of Church, agreeing that Parma should be gi-ven to those della scala, Reggio to Gonzaga, Modena to the D' Este, and Lucca to the Florentines. But in the Enterprise of taking these Towns many broyls enfued, which were most of them at length composed by the Venetians. It may possibly appear The rife of ftrange to fome, that among fo many acci- Venice. dents which happened in Italy, we have fo long deferred to make any mention of the Venetians, they being a Common-wealth, both in point of Rule and Power, to be celebrated before any other Principality of Italy. But to take away any such cause of wonder; I will go back to far, that every one may understand, what were its beginnings, and why they deferred, for fo long a time, the concerning themfelves in the affairs of Italy. Attila King of the Huns befieging Aquilegia, its inhabitants after having a long time defended themselves, despairing of their bety, carrying off their moveables in the beft best manner they could, sheltred themselves upon a great cluster of uninhabited Rocks.at the point of the Adriatick Sea. The Paduans likewife feeing the fire brought almost to their own doors, and fearing after the taking of Aquilegia, Attila would fall likewife upon them, all their moyeables of most value they carried likewife into the fame Sea, to a place called the High-bank, whither they fent likewife their Wives, Children. and old Men, keeping only the young Men in Padona to defend it. In like manner those of Montfelice urged by the fame fear, came to feek shelter in those Rocks, But Aquilegia taken, and Attila having spoiled Padona, Montfelice, Vicenza, and Verona, those of Padona, and the most powerful of the others, continued to inhabit those Marshes that were about the High-bank. And in like manner all the people about that Province, which was anciently called Venetia, driven by the fame accidents, fought a refuge in those Marshes, and so forced by neceffity; they forlook pleafant and fruitful places, to go and inhabit in places wild and barren, and wanting all manner of neceffary conveniencies. But having people enough in an inftant gathered together, in a very fhort time they made those places, not only habitable but delightful; and conftituting Laws and Orders among themselves, among all the Ruines, and Rapines which Italy groaned under, lived quiet and fecure, and in a flort time grew erew to power and reputation; for befides the forementioned inhabitants, many of the Cities of Lembardy fleeing from the cruelty of Clefis, King of the Lombards, took fan-duary here, which added no finall increase to this City. In fo much, that in the time of Pepin King of France, when at the Popes intreaty he came to drive the Lombards out of Italy. In the Articles agreed on between him, and the Greek Emperour. the Duke of Beneventum, and the Venetians paid Homage to neither, but in the midft of both, enjoyed their own liberty. Moreover, as neceffity had driven them to live among the Waters, fo (no more relying now upon the Land) it forced them to bethink themselves how they might honestly live, and thereupon trading with their Ships to all parts of the World, they flockt their City with fundry forts of Merchandize, which others wanting, begot a neceffary and frequent concourse of people thither : Nor thought they for a good while of any other Dominion, but fuch as might be most commodious for their Trade, and therefore poffeffed themfelves of many Ports in Greece. and Syria; and upon the paffages made by the French into Afia (because they made use of their (hipping) the Island of Candia was configned to them. And whilft they lived in this manner, their name grew terrible upon the Sea, and respected through all lealy, so that few controversies happened, anymade arwhich they were not made Arbitrators. bitrators of all differen-As ces

E 4

55

56

Book I.

As particularly in this difference which arole among the Confederates on account of the Territories to be divided amongst them, who referring the matter to the Venetians. the Visconti had alligned them Bergamo and Brefcia. But in process of time, having added to their Dominion, Padoua, Vicenza and Trevigi, and afterwards Verona, Bergamo and Brefeia, and in the Kingdom, and Romania, divers other Cities; hurried on with a defire of rule, they grew into fuch an e-Rimation of their power, that they not only appeared terrible to the Princes of Italy, but even to remoter Kings : Whereupon all confpiring against them, they had in one day taken from them all that Dominion, they had in fo many years, with fuch infinite exbence of blood and treasure been gaining. And though indeed in these latter times they have regained fome part, yet having recovered neither that reputation, nor power, they live (as do all the other Princes of Italy) Benedit the at the difcretion of others. Benedit the Twelfth was now advanced to the papacy, and imagining he had utterly loft the pof-feffion of Italy, fearing left Lewis should make hhnfelf Lord of it, he determined to make a League with all those which had usurped the Lands that formerly paid obedience to the Empire, and to the end he might, make them ftand in fear of the Emperour, and bind them the firmer to the defence of Italy; he made a Decree, that all the Tyrants of Lombardy thould poffels the Lands

Twelfth Pope.

38

Lands they had usurped, by just Title : But the Pope dying, during this concession, Eltment the Sixth confirmed it. And the Emperour feeing with what liberality the Pode had given away the Lands of the Empire. that he might not be lefs liberal then he, in disposing the goods of others, he gave to all the Tyrants, that had usurped upon the Territories of the Church, all their Lands, to hold them by Imperial Authority, by which means Galeotte Maletesti, and his brethren, became Lords of Rimini, Pefaro and Fano. Antonio of Montefeltirs of Marca and Urbine ; Gentile of Varano. of Camerina; Guido de Polenia of Ravenna; Siniboldo Ordelaff of Furli and Cefena. John Manfredi of Faenza. Lodovico Aledofi of Itnola. And belides these many other Territories, so that of all the Lands belonging to the Church, few but had a new Prince 3 which, even till the time of Alexander the Sixth, kept the Church very weak, but he in our times with the ruine of their defcendants reftored its Authority. The Emperour when he made this Conceffion was at Trent, and gave it out, that he had a defign to pais into Italy, which occasioned great Wars in Lombardy, by which the Vifconti became Lords of Panna. About this time dyed Robert King of Napler, leaving behind him Robert King only two grand Daughters of his fon dyes. Charles's (who was dead a little before bim) and willed, that the eldeft, which was alled Joan, should inherit the Kingdom, taking taking for her Husband Andrew fon to the King of Hungary his Nephew. Andrew lived not long with her, but the murdered him, and marryed another of her Coufins, Lewis Prince of Taranto. But Lewis King of Hungary to revenge his Brothers death, entred Italy with an Army, and drove Joan and her Husband from the Kingdom. About this time a very memorable thing happened at Rome. One Nicholas di Lozenze, Chancellor in the Capitol, drove the Senators out of Rome, and made himfelf, under the title of Tribune, head of the Roman Common-wealth, and reduced it to the primitive form of Government, with fo much reputation of Justice and Virtue, that not only the adjacent Territories, but all Italy fent Ambaffadors to him: In fo much that the ancient Provinces feeing Rome as it were born again, raifed up their heads, and fome moved by fear, others by hope gave honour to it : But Nicholas himfelf notwithstanding fo mnch reputation, of his own accord in its very beginnings forfook it, for not having a foul large enough to bear fuch a weight, without being opposed by any body, he fecretiv fled, and went to Charles King of Bohemia, who by order of the Pope(in fcorn and contempt of Lewis of Bavaria had been elected Emperour) and he to gratifie the Pope, fent him Nichelas priconer. It followed not long after in imitation of this, that one Francisco Barocegli took upon him the Tribuneship, and drove out out the Senators, fo that the Pope as a quick remedy to suppress him, takes Nicholas out of prison, and sending him to Rome, restores him to the office of Tribune, who having thus regained the command of the State, puts Francis to death. But the Co-lonnefi becoming his enemies, he was him-felf foon after flain, and the Senators reftored. Mean time the King of Hungary having expell'd Queen Joan, returned into his own Kingdom; but the Pope who. had much rather have the Queen his Neigh-bour, than that King, wrought fo, that he refored to was content to reftore her Kingdom, dom. provided Lewis her Husband would be content with the Title of Taranto, and not be called King. Now came in the year The Jubilee 1350, and the Pope thinking good that decreed on the Jubilee ordained by Pope Boniface the year. Eighth for every hundred years, should be reduced to fifty, decreed it accordingly, for which kindness and benefit, the Romans were content that he should fend four Cardinals to reform the Government of that City, and make Senators according to his pleasure. The Pope likewise pronounced Lewis of Taranto, King of Naples, for which favour Queen Joan gave Avignion, that Avignion was part of her inheritance to the Church. siven to the About this time dyed, Luciino Visconti, whereby John Archbischop of Milan re-state of Milan in State of Milan with the Tuscans and his Neighbours, whereby he still grew more powerful. After

A memorable accident at Rome.

Cardinal Ægidius rethores the Churches

Viban the Fifth Pope.

Gregory the Twelfth Pope.

After him remained of that flock his Nephew's Barnaby and Galeaze : But fhortly after Galeaze dyed, leaving John Galeaze his fon, who divided that State with Barnaby. In these times Charles King of Bo-Innecent the bernia was Emperour, and Innocent the sixth Pope. Sixth Pope, who fent into Italy Cardinal Ægidins a Spaniard born, who by his valour and conduct, not only in Romagnia and Rome, but also throughout all Italy reatation. Rored the reputation of the Church. He recovered Bolonia, which the Archbishop of Milan had taken : forced the Romans to accept one forreign Senator, which the Pope was every year to fend them; made an honourable peace with the Visconti; routed and took prifoner Sr. John Hawkwood, an Englifhman, who with four thouland Enghih made war in Tufcany, in behalf of the Gbibellines. Whereupon Urban the Fifth fucceeding to the Papacy, and hearing of fo many Victories, he determined to vifit Italy and Rome, whither likewife came the Emperour Charles, and after fome few months flay, Charles returned to his Kingdom, and the Pope to Avignion. After Urbans death was created Gregory the Twelfth, and because Cardinal Egidins was dead, Haly turned into its wonted diforders, by reason of the confederacy of divers Towns against the Vifconti : In fo much, that the Pope fent first a Legat into Italy with fix thousand Britans, and after coming himfelf in perfon, brought again the Court ťO to Rome in the year 1376 after feventy one years being in France : But he being dead. Urban the Sixth was created, and foon after Two Porce at Fondi by ten Cardinals, who alledged Urban not to have been duely chosen, was Clement the Seventh created. In these times the Genoueles, who for many years had lived under the Government of the Vifconti, rebelled, and between them and the Venetians fucceeded a most important war about War be the Island Tenedos, by which all Italy was tween Gedivided. In this war were Artillery first Venice. made use off, lately found out by the Germans: and though the Genauese had once the better of it, yet the Venetians came off . Victors at last, and by the Popes intermif-fion made peace. In the year 1381 arose a Schifm in the Church, as we have faid before, wherein Joan Queen of Naples fided with the Schifmatical Pope, whereupon Urban caufed Charles of Durazzo delcended of Joan Queen the blood Royal of Naples, to make an at- of Naples extempt upon her Crown, who coming took pell'd by away her Kingdom, and poffeffing himself Darses of it, forced her to flee to France. The King of France angry hereat, fends Lewis of of Anjou into Italy to recover that Kingdom Anjou inva-for the Queen, drive the Pope out of Rome, and seat the Anti-pope in the Chair : but Lewis in the heat of this enterpize dyes, and Dyes. his people defeated and broken, returned into France. In the mean time the Pope went to Naples, where he imprisoned nine Cardinals for having adhered to France and the Antipope pope: afterwards he grew angry with the King, because he would not make one of his Nephews Prince of Capua, and diffem-bling an indifferency for it, he requested Nocera for his dwelling, where afterwards he fortified himself, and prepared to deprive the King of his Kingdom, whereupon the King took the Field, and the Pope fled to Genoua, where he put to death those Cardinals he had made prisoners. Hence he went to Rome, and to gain himself reputation, created eight and twenty Cardinals. About this time Charles King of Naples went to Hungary where he was made King, and soon after dyed, having left his wife with Ladiflaus and Joan her children at Naples. About this time likewife John Galeazo Visconti having flain Barnaby his Uncle, and seised the State of Milan. not fatisfied to have thus made himfelf Duke of all Lombardy, he aimed likewife at Tufcany, but when he just thought to have fnatch'd the Dominion of it, and afterwards have made himfelf be crowned King of Italy he dyes. To Urban the Sixth fucceeded Boniface the Ninth, and Clement the Anti-pope dying at Avignion, Benedici the Thirteenth was fet up. There were in these times great multitudes of Soldiers in Italy, English, Germans and Britains, brought thither partly by those Princes, who at fundry times had come into Italy, and partly fent by the Popes when they refided at Avignion. With these for a long time

Charles King of Naples dycs.

64

The Schilm in the Church continues.

time the Italian Princes used to bandy one another, till at length flarted up Lewis of Conio, a native of Romagnia, who formed a company of Soldiers, and calling them S. Georges band, did in a fhort time by their & Georges] Band. Valour and Discipline take away the reputation of the strangers, and planted it among his Italians, of whom afterwards the Princes of Italy made use when they warred together. The Pope having some diffention with the Romans left the City. and went to refide at Seefi, where he staid till the approaching Jubilee of 1400, at Jubilee of which time the Romans (that the Pope for 1409, their advantage might return to the City) were content to accept a new foreign Senator of his choice and fending, and that he should fortifie himself in the Castle of S. Angelo, upon these conditions being returned to Rome, to enrich the Church, he Popes re-decrees that every one entring into a vacant wire to Benefice, should pay a years revenue to the Rome. Chamber. After the death of John Galeazo Duke of Milan though he left two fons, John Maria Angelo and Philip, that estate was divided into fundry parts, and in the troubles that enfued John was flain, and The State of Philip for fome time thut up in the Rock ded. Pavis, whence by the fidelity and valour of the Governour he escaped. Amongst others that feized on the Cities possesfed by their father was William de la Scala, who being a banished man had faved himfelf undet the protection of Francis of Carrara Lord F

6ŝ

.

Lord of Padua, by whole help he gained the Territory of Verona, which he enjoyed but a short time, for by the orders of Francis he was poisoned, and the City furprised, whereupon the Vicentines who under the banners of the Visconti had lived fecure, fearing now the growing power of the Lords of Badna, yielded themfelves up to the Venetians, in whole quarrel the Venetians waged war against him, and first took from him Verona and then Badua. Mean time dyed Pope Boniface, and Innocent the feventh was elected, whom the people of Rome belought to render up the Fortreffes, and reftore their liberty, to which the Pope not confenting, they called unto their aid Ladiflam King of Naples. Afterwards coming to an agreement the Pope returned to Rome, whence for fear of the people he had fled to Viterbo, where he made his Nephew Lewis Earl of the Marca, dying afterwards, Gregory the Twelfth was elected, with condition to relign the Papacy, whenever the Antipope should renounce it; and for encouragement of the Cardinals, to make tryal if the Church could be reunited. Benedict the Anti-pope came to port Veneri, and Gregory to Lucca. where many things were debated, but nothing concluded, fo that the Cardinals of both parties forfook them, and as for the Popes, Bennet went into Spain, and Gregory to Rimini. Whiles the Cardinals with the favour of Baldaffare. Coffa Cardinal and Le-

Innoceent the Seventh, Pope.

Gregory the Twelfth Pope-

Digitized by Google

gate

gate of Bolonia, call a Council at Pife, Alexander where they create Alexander the Fifth Pope, the Fifth who prefently excommunicates Ladiflage, Pope. and invests Lewis of Anjan with that Kingdom, and regether with the Venetiane, Genonefes and Florentines , and Baldaffane Coffa the Legat, make war upon Ladiflaw. and take from him Rome; but in the heat of this war Alexander dyes, and Baldoffere Coffa was created Pope, who took the name of Jobn the three and twentieth : He lease Jobn the three and ing Bolonia where he was created, comes to twentieth Rome, and there finds Lewis of Anjon come Popewith an army out of Province, and giving battle to Ladiflans, overthrew him, but not able to purfue the victory for want of guides, the King in a fhort time rallyes, recruits, and retakes Rome, and the Pope fled to Bolognis, and Lewis into Province : And the Pope confuking how to leffen the power of Ladiflans, brought it to about that Sigifmond King of Hungary was elected Em- sigifmond perour, whom he encouraged to come into King of Italy, and had parly with him at Mantous, Emperour. where they agreed upon furmoning ageneral Council to reunite the Church, that it might be the better able to withstand the power of its enemies. There were at this time three Popes, Gregory, Bennet and John, Three which made the Church feeble, and of no Popes. reputation. Constance a City of Germany was made choice of for affembling the council of Council, contrary to the intentions of Pope Constance. Jun; and though by the death of Ladi-[[411

67

flaw the occasion that made the Pope move for a Council were taken away, yet now having obliged himfelf he could not refufe to go, but having been some few months at Compance, and too late perceiving his errour, he attempted to escape, for which he was cast into prison, and forced to relign the Papacy, Gregory one of the Anti-popes likewife by publick instrument renounced it, and Bennet the other Anti-pope refusing to do fo was condemned for a Heretick. At last forfaken by his Cardinals, he was likewife constrained to renounce; and the Council created Ode of the house of the Colonni Pope, who was afterwards called Martin the Fifth; and thus the Church be-Marin the Fifth crea-: came united, after having for forty years ted Pope by been divided among feveral Popes. Philip Visconti was (as we faid before) during these troubles in the Rock of Pavia: but Fantino Cane dying, who, during the divifions of Lombardy had made himfelf Lord of Verfetli, Alexandria, Novarra and Tortona, and gathered together mighty riches, having no children he left his wife Beatrice his Heir, and willed his friends to procure, that the might marry Philip, by which Philip vif. match Philip grown powerful, fegains Mi-contiregains lan, and all the ftate of Lombardy: and afterwards as a token of his gratitude for fuch great benefits (a trick usual with all Princes) he accuses his wife of Adultery, and puts her to death : however grown very potent, he begun to bethink himfelf of making

Martin the the Council.

the State of Milan.

ĥ.

making war with Infeany, and profecuting the defigns of his Father John Galeazzo. Ladiflans, King of Naples, had at his death left Joan his Sifter, befides his Kingdom, a mighty Army under the command of the experteft Leaders of those times, among the principal of which was Sforza of Contigmola, reputed in feats of Arms very valiant. The Queen to avoid the flander of having too much kindness to one Pandolfello a young man the had brought up, took to Husband Jacob della Mareia a Frenchman, of the Royal Line, upon condition that he should content himself to be called Prince of Tarantum, and leave to her both the Title and Government of the Kingdom; but the Soldiers as foon as he came to Naples, called him King, whereupon grew great variance, and at last war between Husband and Wife. and oft-times overcame they one another : but at the last the Queen remaining setled in her Estate, became an enemy to the Pope; whereupon Sforza to reduce her to neceffity, and that she might throw her self into the bolom of the Church, when the least, imagined it deferts her fervice; whereupon feeing her felf on a fudden difarmed, and knowing no other remedy, the has recourfe for fuccour to Alphonso, King of Arragon and Sieily, and adopting him her fon, entertains for her General Braccio de Montone, a man of no lefs reputation in Arms than Sforza, and a fure enemy of the Pope, haveingusurped Perugia, and some other Territories F 3 tories of the Churches. Peace afterwards enfued between her and the Pope, but King Alphons fo fearing left the thould treat him as the had done her Husband, began to make himfelf Mafter of the strong-holds. But fhe being cunning, prevented him, and fortified her felf in the Rock of Naples : Thus fuspitions arising between them, brought them at length to open Arms, and the Queen with Sforza's alfiltance, who was returned into her fervice overcomes Alphonfo, and drives him from Naples, and withal cancelling his adoption, adopts Lewis of Anjou, whence forung up a new war between Braccio, who had embraced Alphonfo's quarrel, and Sforza who favoured the Queen. In the pursuit of this war Sforza palling the River Pefeara was drowned, fo that the Oueen was once more left defencelefs, and had been driven out of the Kingdom, had not the been affifted by Phillip Visconti, Duke of Milan, who forced Alphonfo to return to Arragon. But Braccio nothing daunted at Alphonso's forfaking him, continues the war against the Queen, and having befieged Aquila, the Pope not judging Braccio's greatnels at all convenient for the Church, takes into his pay Francis the fon of Sforza, who marches towards Braccio at Aquila, routs and kills him. Braccio left behind him his fon Odo, from whom the Pope took Perugia, and left him the State of Montene. But not long after he was slain fighting in Romania for the Florentines, ſo to that of all remained of Braccio's Commanders Nicholas Piccinino had the most reputation.But because we are now coming to relate things neighbouring upon the times I defigned to treat of, and that what remains imports to nothing more than the war maintained by the Florentines and Venetians -2gainst Phillip Duke of Milan, which shall be related when we come to treat, particular-ly of the Florentine affairs. I shall here proceed no farther, only briefly fum up in what condition Italy with its' Princes and The State of Armies flood, in those times we are now Italy in these writing of. As for the prime Estates, times. Queen Joan the Second held the Kingdom of Naples; La Marca the Patrimony, and Romania, partly paid obedience to the Church, and in part were by its Vicars or Tyrants usurped, as Ferrara, Modena, and Reggio, by the Efti. Faenza by the Manfredi, Imola by the Alidoffi, and Furli by the Or-delaffi, Rimini and Pelaro, by the Malatefi, and Camerino by those of Varano. In Lombardy, part was fubject to Duke Phillip, and part to the Venetians; for all those who held particular Territories in it were extinct, except the house of Gonzaga, who were Lords of Mantona. The Florentines were Lords of the most part of Tustany, only Lucca and Siena lived under their own Laws. Lucea under the Guinigi, Siena free. The Genovefe fometimes free, sometimes subjeft to the French Kings, or to the Visconti, lived unregarded, and accounted among F 4 the the leffer Potentates : All these principal Potentates fought not with, nor employed any Armies of their own. Duke Phillip. thut up in his Chamber, & without fuffering him felf to be feen by his own Ministers managed his Wars. The Venetians addicting themselves to acquisitions on the Land, stifled that reputation had made them to glorious upon the Sea, & following the Cultom of other Italians, made war under the con-The Pope not becoming duct of others. Armour, as being head of Religion, and Queen Joan being a woman, followed out of ncceffity what others did by election. The Florentines likewife fubmitted to the fame necessity, for having by their frequent divisions exhausted their Nobility; and that Common-wealth being fallen into the hands of men bred up in Merchandize, they followed the Orders and Fortunes of others, fo that the Arms of Italy were either in the hands of the leffer Princes, or of men of no Estate: for the leffer Princes not moved by Glory, but that they might live more richly and fecurely, undertook Commands. And the others having been trained up in Arms from their Youth, not knowing any other Trade fought by this way to advance themselves, either to Riches, Honour or Power. Amough the most famous of these were Carmignuola, Francis Sforza, Nicholas Piccinino brought up under brascio, Agnolo of Pergola, Laurence and Micheletto Attenduli, Tartaglia, Giaccopacçio, cio, Ceccolino of Perugia, Nicholas of Tolentime, Guido Torello, Antonia of Ponte and Hera, and many other, with these were those Lords of whom I have above spoken, to whom were joyned the Barons of Rome, Orfini and Colonnefi, with other Lords and Gentlemen of the Kingdom, and of Lombardy, who making war, their subsistance had contracted a kind of League and intelligence together, and reduced it to a perfect Trade, with which temporifing as they pleased; it happened most an end, that whoever made war, both parties came off loofers. And in fine, they reduced it to fuch a degree of baseness, that any ordinary Captain that had but a dram of the Ancient Honour revived in him, would to the wonder of all Italy (who had fo little Wit as to honour them) load them with fcorn and reproaches: of these floathful Princes, and these vile Arms must my History be full. Before I descend to which, it will be neceffary (as in the beginning I promifed) to return to make a relation of the Original of Florence, that every one may plainly perceive and see the posture in which that City in those times stood, and by what means, (amidit fo many troubles, which for a thou-fand years together befel in Italy) it came into that Estate and Condition.

THE

Florentine Hiftory

Written by

NICHOLAS MACHIAVEL.

BOOK II.

Mongft many other great and advantagious Orders and Rules of ancient Commonwealths and Principalities, which are in these our times utterly extinct, was that, by virtue of which, from time to time, many Citres and Towns were new founded or rebuilt: for nothing can be more becoming, the moft excellent of Princes, or the beft ordered of Commonwealths, nor more beneficial to any Province, than the building of Towns, where men may affemble and live together, either for conveniency of defence, or for encouragement of Trade and Husbandry: Which those people of old might the more easily do, because it was their custom to fend into Countries, whether conquered or waste, new Inhabitants, A a which •2 which they called Colonyes : For befides that by this course and order new Towns' were built, it also the better fecured their Conquests, peopled the waste places, and by well distributing inhabitants throughout the Provinces maintained them with greater facility, whence it followed that as men lived in more commodiousness, many Provinces the more and more they multiplyed, and were still readier to offend, and abler to defend : Which Cuftom being at this day by the great fault and error of Princes and Common-wealths quite left off, the weaknefs, and fometines ruine of Provinces enfues; for this Order alone is that, which makes Empires secure, and Countries, as I have faid maintain plentifully their Inhabitants: for that Colony placed by any Prince in a Country, newly poffeffed by him, is like a Watch-tower, and guard to keep the reft in obedience. Nor without this Order can any Province that is full inhabited fubfift, nor preferve its Inhabitants in any orderly diffribution, for all places are not alike healthful or apt for Generation, whence must succeed, that in one place Inhabitants will abound, and in another be deficient, and if there cannot be a way found to withdraw them from places, where they are. too numerous, and plant them where they want, that Province will in a fhort time grow ruinous, for one part of it by reason of the scarcity of Inhabitants will be defart, and the other by having too many, must needs needs grow poor. And becaufe Nature cannot fupply this defect, 'tis neceffary that indufiry be added; for unhealthful Countries have often been made wholfome, hy a multitude of men flocking at one inftant to inhabit them, for they by culture cleanfe the earth, and by their fires purge the air, remedies which Nature cannot provide. A demonstration of which we have in the City of Venice, which feated in a Marish, and unhealthful place, by the great concourse of Inhabitants thither in an inftant, became found and healthful; Pifa, likewife by reafon of the malignity of the Air was never well replenished of Inhabitants, till Genena and its Sea-coafts were infefted by the Seracens, which occasioned that those men driven from their Native Countries, fled thither in fuch shoals, as made that City at once populous and powerful : wherefore this order of fending Colonies failing, conguered Countries, are with more difficulty kept in obedience, waste Lands never planted, nor those that abound eased. Whereby many parts of the World (and especially Italy) are become in respect of ancient times, defart, all which has happened and does happen, because Princes have no true defire of Glory, nor Commonwealths, any Order that may deferve praise. But in old times, by realon of these Colonies, new Cities were oftentimes founded, or those The Origialready founded grew great. Among which mi of Finwas the City of Florence, which had its be-A 2 2 ginning sinning from Fiefole, and its increase from Colonies. Most true it is, (as Dente and John Villani demonstrates) that the Citizens of Fiefale (seeing their Town seated on the very fummity or top of the Mountain) to the end their Markets might be the better frequented, and those who came thither with their Merchandize, be encouraged by conveniencie, had appointed their Market-place not upon the Hill, but on the Plain, between the foot of the Mountain and the River Arno : Thefe Markets were, as I judge, the first occasion of raising any buildings there, the Merchants defirous, as I suppose, to have Ware-houses and shelter for their Commodities, first creeting them, and Time and Trade perfecting them, fo that at length they became fubstantial buildings. And afterwards when the Romans had overcome the Cartbaginians, and thereby put Italy into a fecurity of not being disturbed by foreign Forces, they were extremely multiplyed. For men never put themselves to any streights or difficulties, unless when necessity constrains them to it, fo that whereas the fear of war forced these willingly to live in strong and mountainous places, that fear once past, convenience and advantage draw's them more willingly down to inhabit places, more Domestick and easie. That fecurity therefore which by the reputation of the Roman name was foread throughout Italy, might eafily give an increale crease to those habitations already begun, to as to reduce them into the form of a Town, which in the beginning of it was called Arnina : There arole afterwards civil wars in Rome, first between Marins and Sylls, then betwixt Cefar and Pompey, and foon after between Cefers murderers, and those 'that fought to revenge his death: From Sylla therefore in the hift place, and afterwards from those three Roman Citi- site zens, who after revenging Cefar divided the Tri the Empire amongst them, were Colonies Colonies fent to Fiefole, all or the most part of Florence. which erected their habitations in the plain adjoining to the town already begun, which with this augmentation appeared now to be fo full of Buildings, men and all other civil order, that it, might well be reekoned among the Cities of Italy. But from whence it derived the name of Florence, there are various opinions, forte will have it fo called Various from Florinus one of the chiefest or Leaders bout the of the Colonies, others will not have it at same of Flor first called Florentia, but Fluentia, because rence. leated upon the flood Arno, and summoning Pliny for a witness, who says the Fluentini are near to the Flood Arne, which may be falle, because Pliny's design was to fhew where the Florentines were feated, not how they were called, and that word Fluentini is very probably corrupted, becaufe Frontinus and Cornelius Tacitus who wrote almost in the times of Pliny call it Florentia, and the people Florentini, for even then in the the times of Tiberius it was governed according to the customs of the other Cities of Italy, and Tacitus relates there came Florentine Embaffadors to the Emperour to befeech him, that the waters of the pools might not be opened upon their Countrey, nor is it reasonable to think a City in the fame time (hould have two names, I therefore firmly believe it was always called Florence, by what ever occasion it came to be named fo. And fo likewife by what ever occafion it took its original, it had certainly its birth under the Roman Empire, and in the times of the first Emperours began by Historians to be recorded; and when that Empire was afflicted by Barbarians, Florence likewise was by Totila King of the Oftrogoths destroyed, and after two hundred and fifty years rebuilt by Charlemain, from which time until the year of Chrift, 1215. it ran the fame fortune with those who had the command of Italy, the first of which were the descendants of Charlemain, then the Berengarii, and lastly the Emperours of Germany, as in our general discourse we have fet forth; nor could the Florentines in those times grow great, or act any thing worthy of memory, by reason of the po-tency of those to whose Empire they submitted. Notwithstanding in the year 1010 on S. Romulus day, a great Holy-day among the Fiefolani, they took and razed Fiesale, which either they did by consent of the Emperour, or because in the time from the

Digitized by Google

2

Deftroyed by Totils, and rebuilt by Charlemain;

the death of the one, to the election of the other more freedom might be used : but after that the Popes affumed more authority in Italy, and the power of the German Emperour decayed; all the Cities of that Province behaved and governed themfelves with lefs reverence to their Prince, infomuch that in the year 1080, and in the time of Harry the Third ; Italy was reduced between him and the Church into a manifest division, notwithstanding all which, the Florentines until the year 1229 kept themselves united, obeying the Conquerour, and feeking no farther Empire than their own fecurity. But as in our bodies the later infirmities happen, the more dangerous and mortal they are; fo Florence, by fo much the later it came to be infected with the Factions of Italy, by fo much the more violently was it afficied with them : The occasion of the first division is very notable and much celebrated by Danse and The first Div vision in other writers. I will therefore be very Florence. brief in the relation of it. There were in Florence among other potent families, the Buondelmonti's and Uberti's, and nigh unto them lived the Amadei and Donati. There was in the family of the Donati a . widow very rich, and who had a daughter of an excelling beauty, and most charming afpect, whom in her private thoughts, she had defigned to marry to Signior Buondelmonte, a young Gentleman, and head of that Family; this defign of hers, whether through Bb through negligence, or out of a belief it was yet time enough, she had never discovered to any, till it happened that a marriage was treated and agreed on between Meffer Buondelmonte, and a daughter of one of the Amadei, at which this Lady was mightily diflurbed, yet hoping that her daughters beauty might ere the marriage were folemnized prevent it, feeing Meffer Buondelmonte coming alone towards her houfe, she gets down to the door, her daughter following her, and as he paffed by stopping, him, I am glad indeed (faid the) that you are now marrying, though I had referved this daughter of mine purposely for you; and therewithal pushing open the door let him fee her, the Gentleman flartled at the beauty of the young Lady, which was indeed extraordinary; and confidering neither her blood nor fortune, was inferiour to hers to whom he was contracted, kindled immediately in his heart fuch a fierce defire of enjoying her, that forgetful of his word and plighted faith, nor thinking of the injury he did in breaking it, nor dreading the fad confequences might attend on violated promifes, makes answer, fince you, fays he, have referved her for me, I fhould be most ingrateful (whilest it is yet time enough) if I should refuse her; and so without any farther delay he married her : As foon as this business was known, the family of the Amadei were filled with rage and indignation, and those of the Uberti being link'ď links to them in Affinity, joyned now likewife with them, and affembling together great numbers of the Kindred, they concluded luch an injury, was not to be born without shame and reproach, nor to be revenged with lefs then the death of Meffer Buondelmonte. And though fome of them did discourse and argue the mischiefs might ensue. Moscha Lamberti told them that he that deliberated many things never concluded any; adding withal that known proverb, a thing once done has got a head. Whereupon they gave the conduct and charge of this Murder to Mofeba Lamberti, Stratti Uberti, Lambermiccio Amadei, and Oderigo Fifanti. These on Easter day in the Morning at the hour of the refurrection, concealed themfelves in one of the Palaces of Amadei, Scituate between the Old Bridge and Church of St. Stephen, and whill f Signior Buondelmonte patied the Ri- signior Bu-ver upon a white Horfe, carelely and like flain. a man that believed fuch injuries, as flighting Marriage-vow's, were eatily to be forgotten; he was by them affaulted at the foot of the Bridge under a Statue of Mars and flain. This affaffinate divided the whole City, The city dis and one part joyned with the Buondelmonti, vided upon and the other with the Uberti. And because it. those Families were very powerful in Houses, Cafiles and men, they skirmished many years together without being able to expel one the other, and their enmities and hared, though never pacified, were fome-Bb 2 times

Which. produces the faction of Guelfes and Ghibeltimes,

How the feveral Families fided.

times appealed by truce, and by this means (according to new accidents) fometimes they were quiet, and at other times enraged. Vext with these troubles was Florence, till the time of Frederick the Second, who becaufe he was likewife King of Naples, perfwaded himfelf that he might augment his power over the Church : and to establish his Authority the better in Tuscany, he favoured the Überti and their followers, who ftrengthened by his countenance drove out. the Buondelmonti. And thus our City (as all Italy had for fometime before been) was divided into Guelfes and Ghibellines. Nor do I think it impertinent to fet down the Families, that were followers of one and the other Faction : Those who adhered to the Guelfes were. The Buondelmonti, Nerli, Roffi, Frescobaldi, Gberardini, Foraboschi, Bagaesi, Gindalotti, Sachetti, Manieri, Lucardefi, Chiaramonti, Campiobbesi, Cavalcanti, Giandonati, Gianfigliazzi, Scali, Guallerotti, Importuni, Bostichi, Tornaquinci, Vecchietti, Tofingbi, Ariguccii, Agli, Sitii, Adimari, Bifdo-mini, Donati, Pazzi, Della Bella, Ardinghi, Theobaldi and Cerchi. Those who fided with the Gbibellines, were the Uberti, Mannelli, Ubriachi, Fifanti, Amadei, Infanganti, Malefpini, Scholari, Gindi, Galli, Caprar'di, Lamberti, Soldameri, Cipriani, Tofchi, Anueri, Palmerini, Migliorelli, Pigli, Barrucci, Cattani, Agolanti, Brunelleschi, Caponsachi, Elasei, Abbati, Tedaldmi, Guiachi and Galigari: And moreover, both to one fide and the other other of these Noble Families, many Families of the Commons joyned themfelves. That this pestilent division infected the whole City. The Guelfes thus driven out, The Gueffes retreated into the Vale of Arno above the expelled City, where they had many ftrong Fortreffes, the Vale of which in the best manner they could they down defended against the power and force of their Enemies. But Frederick dying, thofe who were the calm and indifferent men in the City, and who had most credit with the people, bethought themselves that it The City re-would be much better to reunite this City, united. than by fomenting their divisions ruine it, and fo effectually brought matters about that, the Guelfes (waving all injuries) returned, and the Ghibellines (laying alide all fuspitions) received them. And thus united, And form they began to think it high time to fettle orders for a form of liberty, and put themselves into making a posture of defence before the next Empe- Free State. rour gained any power : Whereupon they divided the City into fix Parts, and chole for their Government twelve Citizens, two for every fixth part, which they called Antiani, or Aldermen, and changed every vear. And to remove all occasions of cavil in giving judgement, they elected two forreign Judges, one of whom they stiled the Captain of the people, and the other the Podestà or Mayor, who were to determine all causes happening among the Citizens, as well civil as criminal. And because no Rule nor Government can be fafe or fettled Bb 3 till

11

tary Orders.

Their Mill- till a defence be provided for it, they eftablished twenty Colours for the City, and threefcore and fixteen for the Country, un der which they lifted all the Youth, giving frict orders that every one should repair ready armed to his Colours upon any summons from his Captain, or the Aldermen. And they varied their Colours according to their Arms, for one fort of Enfign had the Crofs bows, and the Targets another, and every year at Whitfortide they gave the Enfigns to new men, and chose, and gave Com-mand to new Heads or Chieftains of the whole Milinia. And to give more majefty to their Army, and knowledge to every one, whither, if repulled in battle, they might repair for refuge, and being rallyed. again make head against the Enemy, they had a large Chariot drawn with two Oxen, covered with red, on the top of which was a white and red Banner planted. And to give yet farther Magnificence and glory to their Arms, they had a Bell called Man. tinella, which continually founded a month before they drew out their Forces, to give warning to the Enemies to prepare themfelves for their defence. So much gallantry had men in those days, that whereas now the affaulting an enemy by surprise, is accounted a prudent and generous act, they thought nothing more vile and reproachful. This bell they likewife carryed with the Army, by which they fet their Watches, and gave Signals to their Sentinels. Upon thefe bravery.

Their Standard.

thefe Civil and Military Constitutions did the Florentine's found their liberty, nor can it be imagined to what authority and power Florence in a fhort time attained, not only becoming Head of Tuscany, but accounted among the chief Cities of Italy, and had possibly rifen to a vaster height, had not fresh and frequent divisions still afflicted it. Under this Government lived the Flo- Their fird rentines ten years, in which time they forced act. the Piftolefi, Aretini and Sanefi, to make peace with them, and raising their Camp from before Siena took Volterra, difmantled feveral Cities, and carried away the Inhabitants to Florence. All which enterprizes were made by counfel of the Guelphes, who were able to do much more then the Gbibellines, as well because these last were hated by the people for their proud carriage, when in Frederick's time they governed, as because the others fided with the Church, which was (more then the Emperour) then beloved; for with the help of the Church they hoped to maintain their liberty, and under the Emperour they feared to lofe it: Yet the Gbibellines, feeing their Authority The Gbibel-decay could not be quiet, but sought op-lines con-portunities to refume the rule over the the state. State; which they thought was put into their hands, when they law Manfred, fon of Frederick become Lord of the Kingdom of Naples, and that he had much battered the power of the Church. Wherefore they held private intelligence with him Bb 4 t0

13

cited and take Arme.

LA

The State . overturned by help of Manfred ples.

to regain their own authority, but could not carry things to close, but that their pra-Gices were discovered to the Antiani : The Uberti Whereupon they cited the Uberti, who not only refused to obey, but taking Arms fortified themselves in their Houses. At which the people enraged took Arms, and with the help of the Guelphes made them retreat out of Florence, and with the whole Ghibelline party take shelter in Siena. From whence they fent for aid to Manfred, King of Naples, and by the industry of Meffer Farniata of the Uberti, the Guelphes were King of Na- by the forces of that King defeated near the River Arbia, with fo dreadful a slaughter, that those who escaped from this rout fled not to Florence (judging their own City loft) but to Lucca for refuge. Manfred had made Count Giordano General of the Army, he fent to aid the Gbibellines, a man in those times of great reputation in Arms. He after the Victory goes with the Ghibellines to Florence, and reduced the City abfolutely under the obedience of Manfred, annulling the Magistracy, and every other Order in which there appeared the least form of liberty ; which injury imprudently executed, was entertained with the Universal hate of the people, fo that from being enemies to the Ghibellines, they were now become utter abhorrers of them, from whence in time their ruine enfued : And the necessity of the Kingdom, calling Count Giordan back to Naples, he left the Count Guido Novello, Lord

Lord of Casentino, Vicar Royal in Florence, The rath He calls a Council of Ghibellines at Empoli, debated. where it was generally concluded that to preserve the power of the Gbibelline party in Italy, it was neceffary to raze Florence, as the only City, likely (having its people all Guelfes) to recover strength to the Church This cruel fentence given against party. to noble a City, was neither by Citizen nor opposed by Friend (fave only Meffer Farniata of the Uberia Vberti) opposed, who openly, and without any Palliation defended it, telling them, That he would never with so much pains have run through fo many perils, had he had other thoughts than to have lived in his native Country, and that he was fo far now from quitting what he had to eagerly fought after, or refusing what Fortune had thrown upon him, that he would become (rather than fubmit to it) a fiercer Enemy to thole that should defign it, than he had ever been to the Guelphes; and if any one afraid of his Country fought its ruine, he doubted not to defend it with the lame valour, wherewith he had chafed out the Guelphes : Signior Farniata was a man of great courage experienced in War, head of the Gbibellines, and much effeemed by Manfred, fo that his authority ended the dispute, and they began to confult of other ways, how to preferve the power in themfelves. The Guelphes who fied to Lucea, warned by the . Luccheses fearful of the Earls threats, went to Bolonia, whence by the Guelphes of Parma,

The Guelphs ma they were invited against the Ghibelfled to Lnc-ca, go to affift those at Parma.

And the Pope gives them his Banners.

Florence in part reftored.

lines, and by their valout having overcome all their enemies, had their Estates given them: fo that mounted to tiches and honour, and hearing that Pope Clement had called in Charles of Anjon to take away the Kingdom from Manfred, they fent Ambaffadors to the Pope to offer him their affiftance. And the Pope not only received them, but gave them his own Banner, which the Guelphs ever fince bore in their Arms, and are the fame still used in Florence. Manfred was foon after by Charles deprived of his Kingdom and flain ; notice of which being arrived among the Guelphs at Florence, their party grew brisker, and the hands of the Gbibellines were weakned. Whereupon they, who together with Earl Guido, governed Florence, judged it requifite by fome good offices to gain that peo-ple, they before had incenfed with fo many injuries, but those remedies (which had they, been applyed in due time and order, might have helped, now when coming from necelfity) wrought not any good effect, but on-ly hastned their ruine. Yet thinking to The State of gain the peoples friendilip, and draw them to their party, they reftorted to them part of those Honours, and that Authority they had taken from them, and chole thirty fix of the Commons of the City, who with two of the Nobles called from Bolognia, they appointed to reform the Government of the City. These as soon as they met, divided vided the City into Trades, and over every Trade appointed a Magistrate, who was to administer Justice to those under his charge. To every one of these companies they appointed a Banner, that under that they might parade, when ever there was occasion of fervice; these at first were twelve Companies, feven greater and five lefs, afterwards the lefs came to be fourteen, fo that they were in all, as they are at prefent, twenty one. The thirty fix Reformers proceeding to other matters for the common good, Earl Guido to encourage and pay his Soldiers, defigned a Tax to be laid on the Citizens: in which he found fo much difficulty, and averseness in the people, that he durft not attempt by force to levy what was already imposed. And thinking now the Government loft, he that himfelf up with the Chiefs of the Gbibellines, and determined to take forceably from the people, what too imprudently he had granted them : And as they were getting their forces into order, the thirty fix being affembled, and the Alarum being given, whereat they affrightned, retired to their houses, and prefently the Banners of the Companies were spread, and many armed men gathered about them. And hearing how Earl Guido, with his party were at St. Johns, Earl Guido they rendevouzed at the Holy Trinity, and of Firence. made Jobn Soldanieri their Leader. The Earl on the other fide, hearing where the people were, advanced to fight them : Nor did did the people shun the skirmish, but encountred their enemies near the place now called the Lodge of the Tornaquinci, where the Earl was repulled with the flaughter of many of his men, and thereupon fo daunted, that he began to fear least the enemy thould by night affail him, and finding his men beaten and out of order kill him. And fo ftrongly did this imagination work in him, that without feeking any other remedy, he determined rather to fave himfelf by flight than fight, and contrary to the advice of the heads of that Faction, goes with all his people to Prato : but affoon (as finding himfelf in a fecure place) he had cashiered his fear, he saw his error, and would fain have mended it the next morning, and at break of day returns with all his people to Florence, to enter that City by force, which his cowardife had deferted : but his defigns failed him, for that people, who might perhaps have found it a hard matter to have forced him thence, with eafe now kept him out; fo that with grief and shame he goes to Cafentino, and the Ghibellines returned to their Villages. The people thus remaining conquerous by the encouragement of those who loved the common good, they next confulted the reunion of the City, and recalled all the Citizens as well Guelfs as Gbibellines which had been expelled : thus returned the Guelfs four years after there being driven out, and the Ghibellines were also pardoned their late late fresh injury, and restored to their Countrey, but were flill violently hated both by the Guelfs, and the people, for those could not cancel the remembrance of their Banishment, and these too well kept in memory their tyranny, whileft they lived under their Government: fo that neither one nor the other could have quiet minds. And whileft Florence was in this wavering condition, a rumour was spread abroad that Conradine Nephew of Manfred was coming with an Army out of Germany to the conquest of Naples, whereupon the Ghibellines began to fwell with hopes they might once more regain their authority; and the Guelfs confulted how to fecure themfelves from their enemies, and fent to Charles for aids to defend themfelves from charles and Conradine in his paffage; the coming of the Garifi. these forces from Charles made the Guelfs become infolent, and fo affrighted the Gbibellines, that two days before their arrival, without flaying to be driven out they fled. The Ghibellines gone, the Guelf's made new They make orders for the Government of the City, new rales of and chofe twelve heads, which should offi- in Florence. ciate in the magistracy for two months, whom they called not Aldermen, but Goodmen; next to them was a Council of eighty Citizens, which they called the Credenza, and after them one hundred and eighty Commons, thirty for every division, and these together with the Credenza, and the the twelve Good-mon they called the General

The City once more reunited.

ral Council. They fetled befides another Council of one hundred and twenty Citizens, Nobles and Commons, by which they gave perfection to all things debated in the other Council; and which disposed of Offices in the Common-wealth ; this Government thus established, the faction of the Guelf's further fortified themselves with Magistrates and other Officers that they might with more authority defend themselves against the Gbibellines, whose goods they divided into three parts, the one of which they affigned to the publick, the next to the Magistrates of the Divisions, called Captains, and the third to the Guelf's in recompence of the loffes they had fu-Rained : The Pope likewife to uphold the faction of the Guelfs in Tuscany, makes King Charles Imperial Vicar of Tuscany. Thus the Florentines by virtue of this new Government, maintaining their reputation within, by Laws, and without, by Arms, In the interim the Pope dyes, and after a long dispute which lasted two years, Pope Gregory the Tenth was elected, who having long refided in Syria, and being there at the time of his Election, unacquainted with the humours of the Factions did not look upon the Guelfs with that esteem his predecessors had done; and therefore being come to Florence in his paffage to France, thought it the office of a good Paftor to reunite the City, and fo far contributed to it, that the Florentines were content

The Guelfs divide the Gbibellines

Pope Gregory not fo kind to the Florentines.

20

Book II. of Florence.

content that the Syndicks or Commissioners of the Gbibellines (hould be admitted to mediate their return ; and though the matter was concluded upon, yet the Gbibelines were fo terrified that they durft not come home; the fault of all which the Pope hid upon the City, and in anger excommuni- Eucon cates them, under which contumacy they and inscense lay all the life of that Pope, but after his the Fifth abdeath they were by Innocent the Fifth abfolved. Nicolas the Third of the house of Orfini was next exalted to the papacy, and becaufe the Popes were always jealous of those who grew potent in Italy, (fo that though by the Churches means and favour they arrived to their greatnefs, yet they always fought to humble and abase them) thence forung the original of those many tumults and variety of troubles that enfued. for the fear of one grown firong, made the Church interpose a weaker, and as soon as he was railed to power, fearing and feared, they strove again to level him : this made one Pope fnatch the Kingdom from Manfred, and give it to Charles, and this made another, grown jealous of him, feek his ruine, for now Nicolas the third moved by this miftrufful humour, by the Emporours means cauled Charles to be removed KingChorles from the Government of Tufcany; and in from the to that Province under the Imperial Com-of Tajcanyis million was fent Latinus the Popes Legate. and the Florence was at this time in a very deplora- Popes Le-be condition, for the Nobility of the Guelf thitter. Faction nicatesthem. folves them.

Faction were grown infolent, braving and fearless of the Magistracy, so that every day murthers and other violences were committed, and the offenders escaped unpunished, being still favoured by some one of the Nobility; to bridle these inconveniences and riots, the heads of the people thought it convenient to call home those were fled, which gave opportunity to the Legate to reunite the City, and the Ghibellines returned, and instead of the twelve Governours they made fourteen, of each party feven, who were to rule a year, and be elected by the Pope. Florence fubmitted two years to this Government, till Pope Martin a Frenchman held the chair, who reftored King Charles to all that authority Nicolas had deprived him off; whereupon of a fudden the Factions were again revived in Tuscany, for the Florentines took Arms against the Emperours Governour, and as well to deprive the Ghibelline's of the Government, as to bridle the Nobility ordained a new order of Government : it was now in the year 1282, and the City Companies, fince Magistrates were assigned New fort of them, and banners given them, were grown into great repute, whereupon by their own authority they ordained that inftead of the fourteen, there should be three created, under the name of Priors, who should have the Government of the Republique for two months, and might be chosen out of the Gentlemen, or Commons, provided they were

22

Government

New Facti-

nne.

were Merchants or Tradelinen : reducing afterwards the first Magistrates to fix, that out of every Ward there might be one, which order was continued till the year 1342, that the City was reduced into quarters and the Priors made nines though in that Interval of time by realon of fundry accidents they fometimes made twelve. This Magistracy occasioned (as in time will appear) the ruine of the Nobility, who were by the people upon various occasions first excluded, and afterwards without any manner of refpect oppressed : to which the Nobles themfelves at first contributed, by not fcorning to be united to the people, and each party too eagerly coveting to fratch the Government one from the other, they all loft it. They appointed this Magistracy a palace for their continual refidence. it having formerly been the cuftom for the Magifirates and Councils to affemble in the Churches, they likewife honoured them with Sergeants and other necessary Minifters, and though at first they only called them Priors, yet for the greater Magnificence they added afterwards the stile of Lords, terming them the Signery. The Florentines were now for a while quiet at home, during which they made war with the Arctivi, because they had chased out the Floren-the Guelf's, and in Campaldino they happily with the A-overcame them. And the City increasing in men and riches, they thought fit likewise And enlarge to calarge their walls, and brought them their walk. into Cc into the compais they now are, for at first its Diameter was only that fpace between the old Bridge and S. Laurence : War without and peace within had almost extinguish'd the Factions of Ghibellines and Guelfs; only those humours (naturally incident to all Cities) between the Nobility and the people were here inflamed, for the people being defirous to live according to Law, and the Nobles ambitious of Command, it is not poffible they can ever agree together. This humour whileft the Ghibellines kept them in awe was not discovered, but as foon as they were tamed, it broke violently forth, and every day some of the people were injured, and the Laws and Magistrates were not powerful enough to vindicate them, for every Nobleman with his Kindred, Friends and Followers defended himfelf from the power of the Priors and Captains: the Heads therefore of the Companies defirous to remedy this inconvenience, made provision that every Signory at the entrance into their Office, should create a * Galfoniere of Justice out of the Commons, who should be ready with his Standard and men at Arms to affift Juffice wheneveriby the Priors or Captains he was called, the first chosen was Ubaldo Ruffeli, he brought forth the Standard, and pull'd down the house of Galetti, because one of that Family had kill'd a Commoner in France, 'twas easie for the companies of Tradefinen to make this order, for the enmities Differitions between Nobles and Commons.

23

* The mord fignlfies a Standardbrarer.

mities among the Nobles were awake, and they flept, never thinking of the provision made against them, till they faw the feverity of this Execution, which ftroke a terrour into them at first, but yet foon after they returned to their infolencies, for fome of them being always of the Lords Priors, they had opportunities of hindring the Gonfaloniere from doing his Office; and besides that the accufer wanting Tellimony could find none durft bear witnefs against the Nobles, fo that in a thort time Fibrence fell into the fame difordets, and the people still received from the great men the fame injuries; for the Judgment was gentle, and the fentence flowly or never executed : whereupon the people not knowing what courfe to take; Gianodella Bella of most noble blood, but a lover of the liberty of the City, encouraged the heads of the companies to reform the Government, and by his advice they ordained that the Gonfaloniere should tefide with the Priors, and have four thoufand men under his command; they likewife incapacitated all the Nobles of fitting Severe Laws among the Lords Priors, bound all the ac-Nobility. complices and acceffaries of the crime in the fame punishments with the principal, and made publick fame fufficient Testimony to give Judgment : by these Laws which they called the Ordinances of Justice, the people gained a mighty reputation, and Giano della Bella as great hatred, for the Noblesbore him not a little ill will, as the de-Cc 2 firover stroyer of their power, and the rich Citizens envied him, as thinking he had too. much authority, which upon the first oc-cation was fully demonstrated. It happened that a Commoner was in a scuffle flain. wherein many Nobles were together, and becaule Meffer Confo Donati who was amongh. them appeared the boldeft, the crime was attributed to him : wherefore the Captain of the people took him, but however matters went, either that Confo was not guilty, or that the Captain durst not condemn. him, acquitted he was, which acquitment, highly displeased the people, so that taking, Arms, they run to Giana della Balla's house, and befought him he would be a means to fee those Laws observed, which himself had invented ; Giang who defired that Cor-In thould be punished never made them lay down their Arms, as many thought he ought to have done, but advised them to go to the Signory to make their complaint, and defire right to be done, upon which the people enraged (judging themselves wronged by the Captain, and flighted by Giano) went not to the Signory, but to the Captains Palace, and took and fack'd it, which action mightily displeased the Citizens, and those who fought the ruine of Giam, laid all the fault upon him, and fo among. the Lords that composed the succeeding. Signory, there happening fome that were his enemies, he was accused to the Captain as a mover of the people to infurrections. and and whileft his caule was debating, the people armed themselves, offering to defend him against his enemies the Lords; Giand would not make trial of these popular favours, nor commit his life to the Magiftracy, for he knew the malice of one, and the inconstancy of the other; so that to take away from his onemies an opportunity of injuring him, and from his friends of difobliging their Countrey, he determined to depart, and to give place to envy, and to to free the Citizens of the fears they had of him, and leaving that City, which with fo much trouble and hazard he had freed from the flavery of the great men, he caft himfelf into voluntary exile. After his departure the Nobility began to conceive hopes of recovering their Dignity, and judging their misfortune to have accrewed by their Divisions, uniting themselves, sent two of their number to the Signory, whom they believed favoured them, to defire them to be content to moderate in fome measure the feverity of fome Laws made against them; which demand, affoon as it was discovered, firted up the minds of the people, for they were doubtful least the Lords thould grant their request, and thus between the defire of the Nobles, and fulpicion of the people, arms were on both fides taken up ; y and comthe Nobles made head in three places, at S. more take Johns, in the new Market, and in the place Arms. called Mozzi, and under three Leaders, Meser Forese Adimari, Messer Vanni de Mozzi Cc3

25

27.

Mozzi and Meffer Geri Spini, and the people in mighty numbers flock'd to their Colours, under the palace of the Lords Priors, who then dwelt near the Church of Proculue : and because the people had fome fuspicion of the Signory, they deputed fix Citizens to govern with them : whileft both parties thus flood prepared for the skirmish, fome as well of the people, as of the Nobles, together with fome religious men of great repute went between them to mediate a pacification, putting the Nobles in mind, ¢¢ That the honours they were deprived of, " and the Laws made against them were oc-" caligned by their own pride, and haughty " carriage, and that now to take Arms to " repeal by force, what their own difcords 25 and ill managements had cauled to be e-66 nacted against them, could produce no 23 other effect than the rpine of their Countrey, and the making their own condition " worle, that the people were superiour to " them both in numbers, hatred and riches, " and that that Nobility by which they " thought themfelves fo far advanced above others, was but an empty name, " when men came to blows, for the Noble " mans fword cut no deeper than the Comcc mons, nor could Titles defend them a? gainft multitudes. On the other fide they represented to the people, " That it " was not convenient to purlue victories to " extremes, nor wildom to force men to " delpair, for he who hopes no good, fears nø

A pacification endeavoured.

" no ill. That they ought to confider " that the Nobility were the men, who in " times of war had honoured that City, " and therefore it was not juft'to perfecute' " them with so much hatred; and as the " Nobles had eafily condefcended to be de-" prived of enjoying the supreme Magistra-" cy. but could not endure it should be in " every ones power to drive them at plea-" fure out of their Countrey, it was highly " convenient to mitigate formething of " that unlimited severity, and by such a " good Office make them lay down their "Arms: that it was but a vain prefum-" ption to attempt the fray in confidence of " their numbers, fince it had been often " feen the many had been overcome by the " few. The people were in many minds, fome would needs fight as a thing that muft one day be done, and therefore it was better to do it now, than to ftay till their enemies were stronger, alleadging that if they could believe that the mitigation of the Laws could content the Nobles, it would do well to mitigate them, but their pride was fuch, that they would never be at quiet till they were forced to it : others wifer and more peaceably inclined, were of opinion that the moderating of the Laws was of no great importance, but coming to a bickering of utmost concern to both, infomuch that their opinion prevailed, and it was enacted that in acculations against Noblemen, proof by witneffes was neceffary : laying herenpon Cc4 down

Book II.

Arms laid down, but jealoufies continue. down their arms both parties fill remained full of fuspicion, and fortified themselves with Caffles and Arms; and the people reformed the Government, reducing it to a leffer number, out of an opinion they had that those Lords were favourers of the Nobility, the chief of those remained were Mancini, Magolotti, Altoviti, Peruzzi and Ceretani. The State thus fetled, for the greater magnificence and fecurity of the Lords, in the year 1298 they founded their palace, and made a Court of the houles formerly belonging to the Uberti. At the fame time likewife they began to build the publick prifons, all which buildings were in few years finished; nor ever was the City in a more magnificent or happy condition than now, abounding in men, buildings and reputation, the trained bands of the City being thirty thousand, and those of the Country feventy thousand ; all Tuscany partly as Subjects, partly as friends obeyed And though between the Nobles them. and the people there still remained some grudge and jealoufie, it never produced any malignant effects, but they lived in peace and union, which happy tranquility had it not been disturbed by new enmities within, need have doubted nothing from adroad, for the City flood then upon fuch terms as made it fearles either of the Emperour or its own Exiles, and might yye power with any other State in Italy: but those mischiefs which could not be done from abroad, were were by inteffine diffentions executed. There were in Florence two Families, the New differ Cerchi and the Donati, both of them in tions in Nobility, Riches, and men very powerful, between these, being Neighbours, some difguas had happened, but not fo great as to bring them to extremities, and pollibly Threese they might have been quite extinguished, on from had not the ill humours by other accidents Piene. been augmented. Among the Prime Families of Pippia was that of the Cancellieri, it happened that Lori, Son of William; and Geri, Son of Bertaccio, all of that Family being at play fell to words; and palling farther, Geri happened to received a flight wound, which accident much displealed Meffer William, who imagining by humility to remove the fcandal increased it : For he commanded his Son to go to the Father of the wounded Gentleman, and ask him pardon; Lori obeys his Fathen But this act of to much humanity fweetned not at all the bitter mind of Bersaccio, but caufing his fervants to lay hold on Lori, to add the more contempt to the action, he caufed his hand to be cut off upon a Dreffer: withal adding, Go back to thy Father, and tell him that wounds are to be falved with steel, and not with words. This barbarous cruelty fo much enraged Meffer William, that he made all his friends take arms to revenge it, and Bertaccio armed likewife to defend himfelf : and not only that Family, but the whole City

Book II.

The great quartel of the Bianchi and Netir

City of Pistoia was divided: And because the Cancellieri were descended of Signior Cancelieri, who had two wives, whereof one was named Biancha(which fignifies White) those descended of her called themselves Bianchi, and the other to take a name contrary to that, called themfelves Neri (which fignifies Black.) There happened many fatal bickerings between them with great flaughter of men, and raine of houses, and not finding a way to reconciliation among themfelves, weary of doing mischief, and defirous to put an end to their difcords, or by dividing others with them, increase them, they came to Florence, and the Neri having had acquaintance with the Donati, were by them favoured ; whereupon the Bianchi, that they might have a powerful prop to uphold them against the Donati, had recourse to Mr. Verid Cerchi, a man no way, nor in any quality inferiour to Meffer Corfo Donati. The humour thus brought from Pistoia, revived and increased the ancient hatred between the Cerchi & Donati, which was already fo apparent, that the Lords Triors, and many good Citizens were every minute in doubt left they should come to arms, & with themfelves divide the whole City. They therefore addreffed themfelves to the Pope, befeeching him by his authority to apply that remedy, to thele growing humours, which it was beyond their power to do: the Pope fends for Meffer Veri, and charges him to make peace with the Donati, at which he feems much to wonder, telling him him that he had no enmity with them, and becaule making peace preluppoles a war, he did not understand how peace was to be made, fince there was no war between them. Veri therefore returning from Rome without any other conclusion. the humours fwell'd to fuch a height, that they were ready upon any flight occasion, as foon afterwards they did to break out. It was in the month of May when on Holy-days they ufe publick fports, and Dancing in the Streets of Florence, and fome young Gentlemen, as well of the Donati as their friends, being on horfe-back, flood to fee fome women dance near the Place of the holy Trinity, whither foon after came fome of the Cerchi, accompanied with many other Gen-. tlemen, and not knowing the Donati that were before them, but desirous to see the fport spurr'd up their Horses amongst them. and a little crouded upon them, at which , the Donati thinking themselves affronteddrew their swords, and the Cerchi bravely answered them, and after many wounds given, and taken on both fides, they parted. This diforder was of every fad confequence Florence d. for the whole City, as well people as Nobi- vided into Bianchi and lity was divided, and the parties took the Neri. hames of Bianchi and Neri: The heads of the Bianchi were the Cerchi, and to them adhered the Adimari, the Abbati, part of the Tofinghi, Bardi, Roffi, Frescobaldi, Nerli, and Mannelli : All the Mozzi, Scali, Gerrardini, Cavalcanti, Malespini, Bostichi, Giandonati.

Book II.

donati, Veechieti, and Arrignezzi. To their many Families of the people, and all the Ghibellines in Florence adhered, fo that for the mighty number that followed them, they had, as it were, the whole Government of the City. The Donati on the other fide were Chiefs of the Neri, and with them joyned that part of the abovementioned Families which followed not the Bianchi, and besides all the Pazzi, Bifdomini, Manieri, Bagnese, Tornaquinci, Spini, Buondelmonti, Gianfigliazzi, Bruncelleschi, nor did this contagion only infect the City, but the whole Country likewife was divided. Whereupon the Captains of the Divisions, and whoever was a lover of the Gnelbbs. and the republick began to fear left this new division should, together with the ruine of the City, revive the power of the Gbibellines, and fent again to Pope Boniface to confuit of a remedy, unless he would have that City, which had always been the Buckler of the Church, ruined or turned Gbibelline. Whereupon the Pope fends Matthem d' Aquasparts, Cardinal Portnese, Legat to Florence, who because he found the Bianchi high and flomackful, for that they being the greater party food 'leaft' in aw, he goes in: anger from Florence, and excommunicates' it; fo that he left the City in a greater confusion than it was before his coming thicher. And now all menhaving heart-burnings in their brefts: It happened that at a Funeral where there were west a great many of the Cerebi and Dorseti. they came to words, and thenee to blows, though this happened to be only a turnul e. and foon appealed : But every one being returned to their houses, the Cerchi refolved to affault the Donati, and with great sum-bers went to fearch them out; but by the valour of Meffer Corfs they were reputied, and many of the people wounded ; the City was all in Arms; the Lords and the Laws were trampled on by the fury of the Stronger; the wifeft and best Citizens lived in jealoufie and fear; the Domati on their part feared the most, because they could do the leaft; therefore to provide the best they could for themselves, Meffer Carlo affembling with the other Heads of the Neriand the Captains of the Divisions agreed to reques of the Pope, that one of the Blood-Royal might be fent to reform Flarence, hoping by that means to overcome the Bianchi. This affembly and debate was told to the Priors, and by the adverte party, aggravated as a confpiracy against the liberty of the City; and both parts being in Arms, the Signory (of whole number Danta then was one) by his counfel and prodence took heart, and armed the people, to whom many out of the Country joyning they at length forced the Heads of both, parties to lay down Arms, and confined Meffer Corfs Donati, and many that took part. . with the Neri: and to show that they. were not partial in judgement, they likewife wife confined fome of the Bianchi, all which foon afterwards upon their pretences of honest occasions they released. Meffer Corfo with his adherents, becaufe they thought the Pope favourable to their party, went to Rome, and the requests they had before made in writing to the Pope, they now by word of mouth renewed. There happened then to be in the Court of Rome; Charles of Valois, brother to the King of France, who was invited by the King of Naples to make an invation of Sicily. The Pope therefore thought convenient (being fo earnestly preffed by the expulsed Florentines fled thither) that till the feafor were more proper for the Sea, he should go to Florence. Charles accordingly comes, and though the Bianchi, who now ruled all were jealous of him, yet being Head of the Gnelphs, and fent by the Pope, they durft not obftruch his coming, but to engage his friendfhip, gave him authority to dispose of the City at his pleafure. Charles having this Authority, Arms all his friends and confederates, which created fuch a jealousie in the people, that he defigned to deprive them of their Liberty, that every one took Arms and flood in the entrance of their houles. to be in readiness if Charles made the least motion. The Cerchi, and the Heads of the Bianchi (having been fometime Heads of the Republick) had by their proud behaviour made themselves universally hated, which encouraged MefferCorfo, and others' fled

The Pope befought to finde a remedy to compose these bloody differentions.

Book II:

Digitized by Google

Charles of Valois fent

by the Pope to Florence. Book IL fled thence with him, to return to Florence. the rather because they were favoured by Charles, and the Captains of the Wards. And when the City, out of fear of Charles, was all in Arms: Corfo with his fled friends, and many others that fol--lowed him, entred Florence without any impediment : And though Veri de Cerchi was advised and encouraged to oppose him, yet he would not do it, faying that the people of Florence, against whom he came. should chastife him, but it fell out quite contrary, for he was received and not chastifed by them, and Meffer Veri to fave himself constrained to flee, for Meffer Corfo, as foon as he had forced the gate of Pinti, The New drew up at great St. Feters, a place near to :prevail. his house, and having got together multitudes of friends and people, who defirous of novelty flockt to him, first cleared the Prisons of all that either upon private or publick accounts were imprisoned; then he forced the Lords to return as private perfons to their houses, and chuse new ones. from among the people favourers of the Neri : And for five days imployed his forces in facking the houles of the principal men of the party of the Bianchi. The Cerebi and And the Biother Chiefs of their faction were gone anchi flee. out of the City, and retired into firong places, feeing Charles against them, and the most part of the people their enemies. And whereas before they would never follow the advice of the Pope, they were forced to Machiavel's Hiftory Book II.

Nuntio makes a fickle recontilistica.

to flee to him for fuccour, reprefenting to him that Charles was come to breed division. and not to unite Florence. Whereupon the Pope fent again his Legat Matthew de Aqua-The Popes Sparta, who made peace between the Cerchi and Donati, and confirmed it by new alliances and intermarriages, but being defirous that the Bianchi (hould likewile have thare in office and command; the Neriwho had got the Government into their hands, would not adthit it, whereupon he departed from Florence with as little fatisfaction, and no lefs anger than before, leaving the City for its dilobedience excommunicated. So both factions continued still in Florence, and both discontented. The Ners seeing their enemics to near them were angry and jealous, left with their ruine they should fnatch asain from them their Honours and Authority. To which anger and natural jealoufie, they added new injuries. Meffer Nicholas Cerebi, with many of his friends, going to his Effate in the Country, was by Simon. Son of Meffer Corfe Donati met at the Affrican Bridge and affaulted, the fray was bloody, and doleful to both fides in the end, for Nicholas was flain, and Simon dyed next night of his wounds. This scuffle disturbed the City afresh, and though the party of the Meri were most in the fault, yet were they by those then governed and defended. And before judgement was given, there was: a configuracy discovered to have been held by the Bianchi with Rever Ferrance, a Baron

Book IL

of Florence.

Baron of Charles's, with whom they had plotted to be reftored to the government, which thing came to light, by Letters written from the Cercbi to him , though it was the opinion of many that the Letters were counterfeit, and produced by the Donati to varnish over that difrepute they had got by the death of Nicholas : However the Cerchi were all confined, together with all their followers of the Faction of the Bianchi (amongst whom was Dante the Poet) their goods put to fale, and their houses razed to the ground ; Those that faved themselves, with many Ghibellines that adhered to their party, went up and down to fundry places, with new troubles seeking out new Fortunes. And Charles having done what he charles recame to do at Florence, returned to the Pope turns for to, pursue his enterprize against Sieily; In Rome. which he proved neither wifer nor honefter than he had been in Florence ; fo that in the end with difgrace and the loss of most of his Army, he returned into France, Florence after Charles his departure lived very quietly : Only Meffer Corfo was unquiet within himfelf, because he held not that degree in the City he thought becoming him. But on the contrary, the Government being popular, he beheld the administration of affairs committed to many much his inferiours, and incited by these troublefome paffions, he caft about how by an honeft pretence he might justific the dishonesty of his hearty calumniating many Citizens who Dď had had had the administration of publick monies, as if they had converted it to their private ale, and proposing it as convenient to find them out and pursifi them. This opinion was feconded by many, who had defires like his, towhich was added the ig-rance of many, who believed Meffer Carfo moved to this out of love to his Country : On the other fide, the wronged Citizens having the favour of the people, defended themselves, and after muny disputes, to blows they came. On one fide were Meffer Corfa, and Meffer Lottieri, Bishop of Florence, with many Nobles and fome Commons; and on the other fide, the Signiory with the most part of the prople, fo that the fcomfle was in many parts of the City at unce. And the Signiory feeing what hazard they were like to run, fent to Laces for zid, and prefently all the people of Lacca wene come to Florence, by whole authorizy things were for the prefent compoled, the tumults quieted, and the people fetled in their State and Liberty, without any punifhment of the Authors of the Sedition. The Pope had heard of these Turnules in Florence, and fent his Legat Nicholas de Prato thither ; he being a man both for his Birth, Degree, Learning and Manners of great reputation, gained prefently fo much credit, that they gave him authority to reform and settle the State as he pleased: And becaufe he was a Native Ghibelline, he defigned to reftore those were banifhed. But

39

. New civil broils in Florence.

łđ

The Pope fends Nicholas de Prato Legat to Florence.

But he first thought fit to gain the Commons, and therefore reftored the ancient companies of the people, which order much increated their power, and quelled that of the great men. Thus the Legat thinking he had obliged the multitude, deligns next to reftore those were fled, and after trying many ways, was not only unfuccelsful in them all, but fell under fuch jealoufies of those that governed, that he was forced to depart, & full of indignation returned to the Pope, leaving the City of Florence in confusion, and excommunicated. Nor was it only with one evil humour, but with many that this City was infefted, there being at one time the factions of the Nobles and People, of the Guelphes and Gbibellines, and of the Bisuchi and Neri. And now again was the whole Town in Arms, and continual skirmithes happened. And the first that moved this new broil were the Medici, and the Junii, who in favour of the Rébels had disclosed themselves to, and joyned with che Legat : So that there was now fighting in many parts of Florence at once. And to A great fire add to these miseries happened a fire, which in Florence. broke out first in the Gardens of St Michael in the Abbots house, and from thence spread it self into the houses of the Caponfacebi, and burnt them, together with the houses of the Mozzi, the Aniceri, the Toschi, Cipriani, Lomberti and Cavalcanti, and all the new Market, from thence it got into the fireet, called Porta Santia Maria, and burnt Dd 2 it wi th

1304.

burnt the houses of the Gerardini, Pulci, Amadei, and Lucardefi, and with these so many more, that the number amounted to 1700 or more. It was the opinion of many, that in the heat of the fcuffle this fire happened by chance : But others affirmed that it was kindled by the Abbot Neri Prior of St. Peter Scarraggio, a diffolute fellow given over to all wickedness, who feeing the people ingaged in fighting, defigned to act a villany, not to be remedied whilft men were otherwise imployed; and that his mifchievious intent might have the better fuccefs, he threw the fire into his conforts house. It was in the year 1304, when Florence was thus afflicted with fire and fword. Meffer Corfe, only among fo many tumults was not in Arms, judging he might by keeping quiet; the eafier come to be made Umpire between both parties. when weary of fighting they (hould incline to an agreement : yet they laid down their Arms, more because they were glutted with mifery, than that they had any defire of Union, the only event was, that the Rebels did not return, and that the party favouring them had the worft of it. The Legat returned to Rome, and hearing of these new troubles, perfwaded the Pope that if he would unite Florence, he must fend for twelve of the principal Citizens to come to him, whereby what nourished the mischief, being removed, it would be the easier to extinguish it. This this council the Pope accepted, and the Citizens fummoned, obeyed; among whom was Signior Corfo Donati: after whole departure, the Legate let those were fled out of the City know, that now was their time (whilft the Flurentines were deprived of their chiefes) to return, whereupon the Rebels making all the force they could, came The Rebels to Florence, and entring by the wall not attempt to yet quite finished, marched as far as S. Jobn's policisthemplace. Twas remarkable that those who city. but a little before had fought for their return (when unarmed they entreated to be reftored to their Countrey) now feeing them return armed, and endeavour to polfels the City by force, (fo much did they e-fteem common good, before private friendthip) took arms against them, and uniting" themselves with the rest of the people, forced them to return from whence they came. These people lost their delign by But are releaving part of their men at Lastra, and not pulled. staying for Tolofetto Uberti, who with three hundred horse was to come from Pisteia, for they thought celerity rather than ftrength was to get them the victory: So it often happens in enterprizes, that delay takes away the opportunity, and haft the power. The Rebels gone, Florence relapied into its old Divisions, and to take away the authority of the family of the Cavalcanti, feized by force on the Stinche, a Caftle schuate in the vale de greve, anciently belonging to that Family; and because Dd 3 thole

Digitized by Google

42

43.

44.

those that were taken in it were the first that were put into the prildns newly crecked, they called those prilons from the name of the place whence they were brought, the Stimbe, which name they to this day retain. The heads of the Republick reftored likewife the companies of the people, and gave them the banners, under which the companies of the Trades first drew together, and they entituled the chiefest of them Standard-bearers of the Companies, and Col-leagues of the Lords, and appointed them to affift the Signory against tumults with their arms, and in peace with their Council; to the two ancient Rectors or Governours they joined an Executioner, who together with Gonfalonieri, or Standard-Bearers were to proceed against the infolengies of the great men. In the mean time the Pope dyed, and Million Corfo and the others were returned, and the City might have lived in peace, had it not been afresh diffurbed by the reflets mind of Corfo. This man to gain himfelf reputation was always contradictory to whatever was the opinion of these in authority, and fill made his own authority comply with what-even he faw was the inclination of the peobles and of all differcions and novelries he was the head, and to him for affiltance run all those who defined to ubtain fome extraordinary thing, wherefore many Citizens of repute hated him, and this hatted inpreased in such manner that the party of the

the Neri fell into open Division, for Cerfs valued himself on his private power and authority, and his adverfaries on the Common-wealths; but fuch was the awe his prefence carried with it, that every one feared him; however to lift him from the peoples favour they took a fure and ready course, which was by spreading abroad that he defigned to usurp the Tyranny, and that it was the caffer to perfwade them to, becaule his course of life exceeded all moderate and civil bounds, which opinion increafed, because he now married a daughter of Ugaccio of Faginola, head of the Gbibellines and Bianchi, and very powerful in Infrany; affoon as this marriage came to be known, it gave fuch heart to his adverfaries, that they took arms against him, and the people were to far from defending him that most of them joined with his enemies : the heads of his advertaries were Roffa della Tofa, Pazzini de Pazzi, Geri Spini, and Berte Branellefebi, thefe with their followers gathered together in Arms before the Palace of the Lords, and by their order put in an acculation to Peter Brance Captain, of the people against Meffer Corfo, as a man who by the alfiftance of Uguccie fought to make himfelf Tyrane; upon which he was cited, and prefently for contempt adjudged a Rebel: nor was there any longer time fpent between the acculation and the fentence than the space of two hours: Judgment thus given, the Dd 4 Lords

45

His hould

affaulted :

His brave

Defence.

Machiavel's History

Lords with the company of the people, with banners flying went to find him out. Meffer Corfo on mean while, though he faw himfelf forlaken by many of his own Corfe Donaii friends, fentence given against him, the condemned; Lords with their Authority, and multitudes of his enemies coming to affault him, was not at all daunted, but fortified himself in his house, hoping that Uguccio whom he had, fent to, would come and relieve him : His house, and all the ways to it were barricadoed by him, and fo well defended by the friends that adhered to him, that though the people were fo numerous they could not overcome them, however the skirmish was hot, and many killed and wounded on both fides; and the people feeing they could not by open ways overcome him, posses of the next adjoining houfes, and by breaking through places not at all miftrufted, entered his houfe, Corfs now feeing himfelf encompassed with enemies, and trufting no longer to Uguccio's help, refolved fince he despaired of victory, to try if he could fave himfelf; whereupon he and Gerrard Bonduci, with many others of his valiant and faithful friends, charging furiously upon the people forced their way through them, and got out of the City by the Gate of the Crois ; however they were purfued by fo many, that Gerrardi was on the African Bridge by Boceacio Canicculli flain, and Meffer Corfo by fome Catalonian horfe in the Signory's pay at at Rovezano overtaken, and made prisoner, but in his return towards Florence, that he might not be gazed upon by his victorious enemies, or perhaps torn in pieces by them, he fuffered himself to fall off his horse, and Corfe Domewas by one of those had the Guard of him "" Besth. difpatch'd, his body was taken up by the Monks of S. Salvi, and without any pomp buried : fuch was the end of Meffer Corfo, from whom his Countrey and the Neri had received many good and evil Offices, who had he had a more quiet mind, his memory might have been more happy ; yet deferves he to be enrolled among the bravest Citizens our City can boaft off : 'Tis true, his Factious and reftles' spirit made both his Countrey and his confederates forbear conferring honours on him, had elfe been his due, and proved at last both the cause of his own death, and of much mischief to them: Uguccio coming to aid his fon in Law, hearing at Remoli how he was oppreffed by the people, and judging he could not do him any good, that he might not do mischief to himself, returned back. Meffer Corfo dead (which happened in the year 1308) the tumults ceafed, and the City lived in peace till fuch time as they heard that the Emperour Harry was coming into Italy with all the Florentine Rebels, whom time Rebels he had promifed to reftore to their Coun- coming with Harry the trey, whereupon the heads of the Com- Emperour. monwealth thought fit to leffen the number of their enemies, and to that end determined

47

The Llorentimes crave aid of Robert King of Neples.

18

The Empeperour fits down before Florence.

Venecio ĥ.

nd.

mined that all who had not by special name been banished, should be recalled, so that there remained fill excluded almost all the Gbibellines, and fome of the Bianchi, among which were Dante, Alighieri, the children of Veri de Cerchi, and Giano de Bella : they fent moreover for aid to Robert King of Naples, and feeing they could not obtain it as friends, they gave him the City for five years, on condition that with his Forces he fhould defend it : the Emperour coming, took the way of Pifa, and fo by the Sea-coaft to Rome, where he was crowned, 1312. and afterwards determining to tame the Florentines, comes by the way of Permgis and Arezzo to Florence, and fits down at the Monastery of S. Salvi, within a mile of the City, where he staid fifty days without doing any thing, infomuch that defpairing of disturbing the Government and State of that City, he goes to Pifa, where he makes an agreement with Frederick King of Sivily to invade the Kingdom of Naples, and being marched thither with his Army, in the height of his hopes of a victory, and King Robert's fears of ruine, at Bonconvento he dyes. It happened a while afterwards that Uguecia de Faginala becomes Lord of Lord of Pi- Pifa, and prefently after of Lucca, where he was put in by the Ghibelline party, and now with the help of these two Cities. did great damage to his Neighbours, which the Florentines to free themfelves from, defired of King Robers that his brother Peter might might command their Forces : whileft Ugrees on the other fide ceased not to enlarge his Dominion, and by force or ftratagem had in the Vale of Arno, and in the Vale of Nirrole taken many Towns and Caffles: and fitting now down with his Forces before Monte Catini, the Florentines thought it necessary to relieve it, and not let this fire confume their whole Territory, raifing to that end a great Army, they marched to the Vale of Nievole, where they engaged with Uguccio, and after a sharp encounter were routed, here dyed Peter the Kings Parr the brother (whole body could never be found) Kings Broand with him more than two thousand men were flain : not had Uguccio's fide any caufe to rejoice at the victory, he losing his fon, and many of the chief Leaders of his Ar-The Florentimes after this loft RIY. Arengthened their Towns within, and the King fent them for their General the Count de Andres, whom they called the new Count An-Count, by whose deportment, or because rai of the it is natural to the Florentines, that all Go-Florentines vernments grow irkfome to them, and every accident divides the City, notwithftanding the war they had with Ugaecio, the City was again divided into Friends, and ementies to the King; the chief of the ene- The city amies were Simon della Tofa, the Magolotti gain divided with fome of the Populacy that were fuperiour to others in the Government, these fent into France and Germany to leavy men, and fetch Captains, that at their arrival they

49

Book II.

they might drive out the Earl, that was Governour for the King; but as fortune would have it, they could get none, yet they left not off, but feeking affiftance every where, though they could not from France nor Germany have any, they prevailed at A-gobbio, and having first driven out the Count, brought in Lando of Agobbio, and made him Bargello or Executor, giving him the ampleft power any had ever had over the Citizens; this was a ravenous and cruel man who with. his Soldiers marched up and down the Countrey, putting to death one or other at the will and pleafure of those that had elected him; and grew at last fo infolent, that he stamped false money of the Florenvine coin, whileft no body durft question or oppose him, to such a height had the dif-cords of Florence railed him, a great, 'tistrue, but miferable City, whom neither the remembrance of their past Divisions, nor the fear of Ugueccio, nor the Authority of a. King could keep constant. The Kings friends and opposers to Lando and his followers, were Nobles or wealthy Commons, and all Guelfs, yet because their Adversaries had the Government in their hands, they could not without great danger discover themfelves, but having determined to free themselves from so vile and tyrannical oppreffion, they writ privily to King Robert, that he should make Count Guido of Buti-Kings Lieu- folle his Lieutenant at Florence, which the King gave prefent orders for (and though the Lando of Agebbio's Tyranny.

50

Guide of Butitolle the tenant at Florence.

Book II.

the Lords were the Kings oppofers) yet the adverse party durst not, because of the excellent qualities of the Earl, refuse him, yet he had not much authority, for the Signory and Standard-bearers of the Companies favoured Lando and his party. Whileft " they lived under these afflictions in Florence, the Daughter of Albertus Emperour of Germany, came to Florence in her way towards Naples, whither the was going to Charles the Son of Robert her Husband ; the was very honourably received by the Kings. friends: who complained to her of the fad condition of the City, and the tyrannies of Lando, infomuch that before the parted, by her means, and those of the Rings party, the Citizens united, and Lando was deprived of his Authority, and (glutted with blood and plunder)fent back to Agobbio.In the Reformation of the Government, the Signory was for three years prorogued to the King, and because there was already seven Lords elected of those of Lando's Faction, they chole fix of the Kings, and fome Mugiftracies were held with only thirteen Lords, but afterwards according to cuftom, they brought them again to fourteen. In'or about this time the Signorys of Luccarde Pifa were taken from Uguccio, and Caftraccio Caftruc- Caftruccio cani Citizen of Lucca became Lord of them, Lord of Luc who being a young man, bold and coura- ca and Pifan gious, and withal fortunate in his undertakings, in a very fhort time became head of all the Gbibellines in Tufeany, whereupon the Florentines sines laying alide their civil-difcords, confulted how to ftop the growth of Castruccie's greatnels, and defend themselves against the power he had already attained to: and because the Signory should better deliberate and weigh all affairs, and with greater authority execute them, they chole twelve Citizens, whom they called Good-men, without whole counfel and confent the Lords could do nothing of importance : The time of the Government, alligned to King Rebert was now expired, and the. City becoming Prince over it felf, re-effablifted the ancient and ufual Governours and Magistrates : the great fear they stood in of Capraccio kept them united, who after many feats done by him against the Lords of Lorsigians, belieged Prato; whereupon the Flosentines refolving to relieve it, thut up their shops, and the people marched out twenty thousand Foot, and fifteen hundred Horse :" and to weaken Castruccio, and Arengthen themselves, they made Proclamation, That whatever Rebel Guelf should come to the re-Sief of Prate, he thould after that Action was over, be reftored to their Countrey, whereupon above four thousand Rebels came in: This fo great Army, fo quickly brought to Prate daunted Castruccio in fuch manner, that without truffing to the Fortune of a Fight, he retreated towards Lucca: whereupon grew a difference in the Florentine Camp, between the Nobles and people: These would have followed him, and by falling

The Flaren. sines afraid ofCaftruccio.

He belieges Prato.

Difference in the Florentine Camp.

Book IL of Florence.

falling in his rear have deftroyed him. Thole would return, alleadging that it was enough to have put Florence in danger to deliver Prate, which was well enough to be born with, whileft they were confirained by necellity, but now that was taken away, it was not at all convenient to tempt fortune, where the loss might be great, and the advantage could be but funall. Thus, they not agreeing, the bufinels was referred to the determination of the Londs, who met in their Council with the fame difference between people and Lords, which being underflood in the City, the rabble tumultuously assembled in the great place, uttering many reproachful words against the Nobles, till they for fear confent to the purfuit of Cafernecie, but the reformion being taken too late, and an willingly, the energy had time to fecure himfelf in Lucca: this diforder to enraged the people against the Lords, that they would not permit their word paffed by Proclamation to the Rebels (though done by their own order and confent 1 to be performed, which the exiles having fome hints of, that they might anticipate this refolve, they prefented themselves before the City gate, to enter Florence in the Front of the Army, which matter being forefeen, they were by those which still remained in Flarence reputied, but to fee whether they could have that by fair means, which they could not get by force, they feat eight Ambaffadours baffadours, to put the Lords in mind of their promife; and faith given, and to confider the dangers they had run through out of hopes, to have that promife made good to them; and though the Nobles (who thought themfelves, and their honours obliged in this caufe, becaufe they had particularly promifed what the Lords had pro-chaimed) laboured as much as they could in their behalfs, yet the Pique, the generality of the people had taken (that fince they had not overcome Castruccio in fight, they could not pretend to it) was fo univerfal, that they could not obtain it, which was a heavy blur and diffonour to the City. And many of the Nobles were fo incenfed at it, that they attempted to gain that by force, which they could not do by perfwation, and agreed privately with the Out-laws, that they should come armed to the City and they within would take Arms in their affistance, but the plot was discovered before the appointed day, in fo much that the exiles found the City in Arms, and in order ready to ftop those without, which fo frighted those within, that not one durft take Arms, fo that hopelefs they retreated, and gave over the enterprize. After their 'departure it was moved, that condign punishment should be inflicted on those, who had been the guilty cause of their coming, but though every one knew who were the delinquents, none durst name or accuse them : Wherefore that the truth truth might be known without refpect, it was ordered, that in the Council they should write down the Delinquents names, and privately give the writing to the Captain of the people, by which means acculations were given in against Amserigbo Donati Tegbiaio Frescobaldi, and Lotteringbo Gerardini, who finding a more favourable Judge than possibly their faults deferved, were only fined. The Tumults which were raifed in Florence, by the Rebels coming to the Gates, made it appear, that one Chief was not enough for the Companies of the people, and therefore for the future they would have three or four Leaders for each Company, and to every Standard-bearer, they added two or three, which they called Pennoniers, to the end, that in time of neceffity, where all the Company was not . to be drawn together, part of it might be employed under one of the Leaders, and part under others. And as it happens in all Republicks, after some accidents, old Laws are repealed, and new ones enacted ; whereas formerly the Lords were created from time to time, the Signiory and their Colleagues now fitting (to amply he and enlarge their power) enacted, that they and their fucceffors should continue forty Months, whose names they put into a purse, and every two months drew them, but before the term of forty Months was past, many of the Citizens doubting that they were not in the purfe, there was a new imburfation Ee

55

* The word ugnifies ajoyning or coupling together.

1325.

The Florentines determine to affault Piftoia.

fation required. From this beginning forung the order of chuling out the of purle. the Magistrates both within and without the City, whereas, first, at the end of their Magistracy, by the fucceeding Council they were chosen : These and the names thus put into the purfe, they afterwards called * Souittini; and because every three. or at most every five years only it was done, they conceived it eased the City of much trouble, and took away many occafions of Tumults, which at the creation of every Magistrate, by reason of the number of Competitors usually happened, which diforders not understanding how otherwife to prevent, made them make choice of this way, not forefeeing the defects that lay hid under such slender conveniencies. It was now the year 1325, and Castruccio having possessed himself of Pistoia, grew fo potent that the Florentines fearful of his greatness, resolved before he was well fetled in the Dominion of it, to affault it and refcue it out of his clutches. And among their Citizens and Friends, they levied twenty thousand foot, and three thoufand horfe, and with this Army they encamped against Altopascio, that by taking that, they might cut off all relief from Piltoia, the Florentines were fuccessful in taking this Town, and from thence proceeded towards Lucca; wasting the Country; but by reason of imprudent management and infidelity in their General, they made little little progress : Their present General was Raimond of Cardona, who having observed the Florentines very liberal of their liberty, fometimes having yielded it to the King, fometimes to the Legat, and fometimes to men of meaner quality, he thought by rcducing them to fome necessity, it might probably happen that they might make him Prince : Nor did he forget to put them often in mind to grant him the fame authority in the City, that he had in the Field, alleadging that otherwife, he could never have that obedience, which was requisite for a General. And because the Florentines confented not in this, he let flip those opportunities, which Caltruccio laid hold of, for in the mean time those aids promised by the Visconti, and the other Tyrants of Lombardy arrived; and now grown potent : Raimond, who before for want of fidelity could not overcome, now for want of prudence knew not how to fecure himfelf, but moving flowly with his Army, was by Catruccio near Altopascio affaulted, and after a bloody battel totally routed, where many Citizens were taken and flain, and among them Meffer Raimond himfelf; on whom Fortune justly inflicted this punishment, which his fallhood and evil counfels had deserved from the Florentines. The damage Castruccio did the Florentines in plunder, prifoners, ruines and burnings canhardly be related, for without any oppofition, he for feveral months over-run their 'Ee 2 CounCharles Duke of chofen Lord of Florence.

36

Calabria

Machiavel's History

Country; and for the Florentines it feem'd enough after fuch a loss to fave their City; yet were they not fo cow-hearted, but they made great provision of money, hired Solders, and fent to their friends for aid, but against such an enemy no provision was sufficient : They were therefore constrained to chuse Charles Duke of Calabria, Son of King Robert their Lord, if they would have him come to their defence, for that Family being used to Lord it over Florence, chose rather their obedience than their friendship: but Charles being engaged in the war of Sicily, and not at leifure to come and take possession of his Lordship, sent Walter, by Nation a Frenchman, and Duke of Athens. He as Lievtenant to the Lord took poffeffion of the City, and ordained Magiftrates at his will and pleasure, yet was his deportment fo modeft, and in a manner contrary to his Nature, that every one loved him. Charles as foon as the Sicilian Wars were ended, with a thousand horse comes to Florence, where he made his entrance in July 1326, whole presence put a stop to Caltruccio's into the Florentine inroads Country, or at least awed him fo, that he could not make them fo freely: but whatever reputation he gained abroad, he loft within, and those injuries and damages, their enemies were ftopt from doing, their friends did at home, for the Signiory now acted nothing without the Dukes confent, and he raifed four hundred thousand Florins rins upon the City, notwithstanding by agreement, he was not to exceed two hundred thousand. So heavy were the loads wherewith he or his Father daily oppreffed the City. And to these grievances new jealousies and fresh enemies were joyned; for the Gbibellines of Lombardy were fo allarm'd at the coming of Charles into Instany, that Galeazzo Visconti, and the other Tyrants of Lombardy, with money Lenis Duke and promifes prevailed with Lewis Duke of Saviera of Baviera, who against the Popes will had marches inbeen created Emperour, to make an expedition into Italy. He comes into Lombardy, and from thence into Italy, and with Castruccio's aid makes himfelf Lord of Pifa, where refreshed with money, he marches towards Rome, which made Charles hafte from Florence, (being in fear for the Kingdom) and leave Meffer Philip de Sagginetto his Lieutenant. Caltruccio after the Empe-rours departure makes himfelf Lord of Pifa, and the Florentines by a cunning plot and contrivance took from him Piltoia. which prefently Castruccio fits down before and befieges, where he kept his ground with fo much valour and obstinacy, that though the Florentines made many attempts to relieve it, and oft-times with their Army made thow of making inroads into his own Country, to draw him off thence, yet they could never, either by force or cunning make him raise his seige, so eagerly he defired to chastife the Pijtoians, and to Italy.

· Digitized by Google

59

Ee 2

Machiavel's Hiftory Book. II.

Caftruccio retakes Pi-

60

And dyes.

Charles of Calabria dyes at Naples. and baffle the Florentines; fo that at laft the Piltoians were constrained to accept him for their Lord : which though it was a great addition to his glory, yet was dearly purchased, for at his return to Lucca he dyed.. And becaufe Fortune rarely gives cither good or evil fingly, Charles Duke of Calabria, and Lord of Florence dyed about the fame time at Naples. So that the Florentines beyond their expectation were in one inflant delivered from the fear of the one, and Tyranny of the other ; who having thus recovered their freedom, reformed the City, and vacating all the Orders of counfels, created two new, one of three hundred Citizens, Coinmoners, and the other of two hundred and forty Nobles and people mixed, the first of which they called the Council of the people, and the other the Common-council. The Emperour at his arrival at Rome, created an Anti-pope and enacted many things against the Church' and attempted many others unfuccefsfully? So that at last he went thence with dilgrace. and comes to Pifa, where either fome, Jother way affronted, or for want of pay eight hundred Germane Horfe revolted, and on Monte Chiaro upon the Ceruglio strengthned themfelves; thefe as foon as the Emperour was gone from Pila towards Lombardy, furprized Lucca, driving out Francis Caffracani, left there by the Emperour; and hoping to make fome advantage of this feilure, they offered that City to the Florentines

Lucca offered to the Florentines for twenty thouland Florins ventines for twenty thousand Florins, which by the advice of Simon della Tofa was refuled, and it had been well for the City, had the Florentines been constant in their determination, but as they foon after varied their minds provedvery hurtful; for,as now for fo fmall a price they might have been peaceably possessed of it, and would not, afterwards when they would have had it, they could not, though they would have bought it at a much vafter rate; but it happened in this as in their change of Government, which the Florentines often altered to infinite damage. Lucca thus refused by the Floren-Lucca times, was bought by Gerardine Spinola a bought by Genomefe, for thirty thousand Florins. And Spinola, because men are less eager, after what they may have then what they cannot obtain, as foon as ever they heard of Gerardines bargain, and confidered at how easie a rate he had it; the whole people of Florence were enflamed with a mighty defire of having it, condemning both themfelves, and them that had discouraged them from buying it. And to gain by force what they would not purchase with money, they sent their forces to prey upon and spoil the Lucchese Territories. The Emperour in the interim was gone out of Italy, and the Anti-pope, by order of the Pifans fent prifoner into France. And the Florentines after the death of Castruccio, which happened in 1328, till 1340 were quiet within, and only attended their affairs abroad, and in Lom-Ee 4

Digitized by GOOGLC

61

Florence adorned with new Buildings.

1334.

A great flood in Florence.

otts of diffe-Tchce.

Lombardy, by reason of the coming of John King of Bobemia, & in Iuscany upon account of Lucca they had many Wars. They likewife adorned their City with new buildings, erecting the Tower of Sancia Reparata, by the advice of Giotto, a famous painter in those times, and in the year 1334 happened an extraordinary over-flowing of the River Arno, infomuch, that in fome places of Florence the Waters role above twelve yards, whereby part of the Bridges, and many Buildings were ruined, which with great charge and industry, they strove to repair. But in the year 1340 new occasions of diffe-New occasi- rence happened. The richest of the Citizens had two ways to increase and maintain their power. The one was by ordering in fuch manner, the imburfations of Magi-firates, that it should always light upon them, or fome of their friends; the other to be Chiefs in the Elections, that they might be afterwards in their judgements favourable to them. And so highly did they effeem this fecond part, that two Rectors or Governours not fufficing them, they many times for their own ends brought in a third; and now they had in an extraordinary manner brought in under the title of Captain of the Guard Meffer James Gabriel of Agobbio, and given him all manner of Authority over the City. This man in complyance with those that governed, did multiply injuries, and among others affronted Meffer Piedro de

Book II.

of Florence.

de Bardo, and Meffer Bardo Frescobaldi. These being of the Nobility and Naturally proud, could not put up an affront from a Aranger, who was in the wrong, and who only in complyance of a few people that governed had abused them, wherefore to revenge themselves, both of him and the present Governours, they formed a confpiracy, in which many Noble Families, and some of the people joyned, displeased with the Tyranny of those fat now at the Helm. They had defigned among them- A piet a felves, that every one of them should affemble as many armed men as they could in their houses, and at the time of Mattins on All-Souls day, when the people were difperfed in the feveral Churches to pray for their dead, fall on, kill the Captain, and the heads of the Government: and fo with new Lords and new Orders reform the State. But because in perilous attempts, the longer they are debated on the more difficulties appear, and confequently they are the more unwillingly undertaken : it generally happens in confpiracies delay of execution begets a discovery. Thus Andrea Bardi being one of the Confpirators, fear of punishment happened to have more power over him than hopes of revenge, whereupon he discovered all to James Alberti his kinfman; James to the Priors, and they to the Governours; and because the danger was nigh (All-Souls day being at hand) they judged it hazardous to delay, but adviled vifed the Lords to ring out the Bell, and fummon the people to Arms. Taldo Valori was Standard-bearer, and Francisco Salviati one of the Lords : These being of the Bardi's relations withftood the ringing out of the Bell, alleadging it was not convenient on every flight occasion to Arm the people, because the Authority of the unbridled multitude never did well; and that Tumults were eafily raifed, but hardly quelled. And therefore it were more judicious first to examine the truth of the matter, and civily punish the offenders, than adventure their Chastisements tumultously, and upon a fingle relation, hazard the ruine of Florence. Which reasons were to far from being allowed of, that with villanous and reproachful words, the Lords were forced to make the Bell be rung out. At the found of which all the people gathered in Arms to the Piazza. And on the other fide the Bardi and Frescobaldi, seeing themselves discovered, that they might overcome with glory, or dye without shame, betook themfelves to Arms, hoping to defend that part of the City, on the farther fide of the River, where their houfes flood relying on the help they hoped to receive from the Nobles in the Country, and other their friends: But this their defign was prevented by the people, which inhabited that part of the City, who took Arms for the Lords. Whereupon feeing this interpolition, they retreated into the Street, where the Bardi dwelt dwelt as ftronger than any of the reft, and that they vigoroufly defended : James of Agobbio knowing all this confpiracy made against him, fearful of death, in fright and amazement kept himself in the midst of his armed men, near the palace of the Lords; but the other Governours who were lefs faulty had more courage, and efpecially the Podesta, or Mayor, who was called Meller Maffeo da Mazzadi. This brave Gentleman coming into the hotteft of the skirmifh, on the other fide the bridge R abaconte, and entring amidst the swords of the Bardi, made a fign to parley with them; and the reverence they bore to the perfon of the man, to his good manners, and other excellent qualities, made them in an instant forbear fighting, and quietly liften to him, who with grave and modeft words blamed their Rebellion, and thewed them the danger in which they were, if they yielded not to the force of the people, giving them hopes that they should afterwards be heard. and favourably judged, and promifing to be a mediator for compatition to their fo reasonable provocation : and then turning to the Lords perfwaded them that they would not strive to overcome with the blood of their own Citizens, nor judge any The Rebels unheard. And fo far he prevailed that the favourably Bardi and Frescobaldi without any oppositi- means of the on left the City, and retired to their own Ca- Porefta. files; they gone, and the people having laid down their Arms, the Lords proceeded only againft gainst those of the Families of the Bardi them made made.

Book II.

66

Yet fome of and Frescobaldi, that had taken Arms, and them made to devest them of all power, they bought Example. to devest them of all power, they bought Severe Laws from the Bardi the Castles of Mangona and Verina, and by a Law enacted that no Citizen should possess any Castle within twenty miles of Florence : fome months after Stiato Frescobaldi was beheaded, and many others declared Rebels; nor were those who governed content to have overcome the Bardi and Frescobaldi, but as all men ufually do, the more authority they have the worfe they use it, and the more infolent they grow, whereas before one Captain of the Guard afflicted Florence within, now they chose another with unlimited authority to torment the Countrey without, fo that none they were jealous of, could inhabit either in Florence or abroad ; which fo much incenfed all the Nobles against them, that they were even ready to fell the City and themfelves for revenge, and waiting only for an opportunity; it happened well, and they used it better. By reason of the many troubles of Tuscany, and Lombardy, the City of Lucca was fallen into the hands of Mastino della Scala Lord of Verona, who (though by contract he was to confign it to the Florentines) yet being Lord of Parma, and judging himfelf able to keep it, he had not done it, but flighted his word, and broke his Faith; whereupon the Florentiees to revenge themfelves, joined with the Venetians, and reduced him . to

The Commons incenfe the Nobles to their damage.

Maftino Lord of Verona gets Lucca.

to the very point of loling his whole effate. vet all the advantage Florence got in the end, was the fatisfaction of having recovered Mattino : for the Venetians (as all that allve themfelves with the weaker do) after having gained Trevigi and Vicenza(without any refpect to the Florentines) made peace : but sometimes after the Visconti Lords of Milan having taken Parma from Matino. he thinking now he could no longer hold Lucca, offered it to fale; the Florentines and the Pisans were the chapmen bid for it, but in driving the bargain, the Pifans feeing that the Florentines as the richer would carry it, applyed themfelves to get it by force, and with the aid of the Visconti took the Field; the Florentines however drew not back, but compleated their purchase with Majtino, paid part of the money down, and time buy for the reft gave Hostages, and went to take possession: Naddo Ruciellai, John Bernardine de Medici and Roffe di Ricciardo were fent, who entring Lucca by force, had the possession delivered them by Mastino's people; yet the Pisans purfued their enterprize, and with all imaginable industry fought to gain it by force, and the Florentines to raife the fiege : and after a tedious war the Florentines with the expence of money, and purchase of shame were driven The Florenout, and the Pifans became Lords of Luc- unt by the The loss of this City (as in fuch cafes Pifan. ca. it always happens) made the people of Florence mad at their Governours, and in all places them, villifying their Authority and evil Councils. At the beginning of this war, the administration of the war was given to twenty Citizens, who made choice of Mr. Rimini di Malatesta for General of the expedition; who with little courage and lefs prudence had managed it, and because they had fent to Robert King of Naples for aid, that King had fent them Walter Duke of Athens, who by the will of Heaven that was preparing the enfuing miffortunes arrived in Florence, just in the time that Lucca was utterly loft : whereupon the twenty feeing the people enraged, bethought themfelves of electing a new General; imagining by fuch election both to revive their hopes, and to bridle or take away the occasion of their calumniating them : and fince all caufe of fear was not yet past, and that the Duke of Atbens could with more Authority defend them, they first chose him Confervator, and afterwards Captain General of their Ármies. The Nobles who for the reasons abovementioned, lived in discontent, being many of them well acquainted with Walter (when formerly in the name of Charles of Calabria, he governed Florence) thought now the time come, that they might with the ruine of the peoples liberty quench the fire in their own houses, believing they had no other way to tame the people that had oppreffed them, but by fubmitting themselves under a Prince

The Flores Lucca of Maftino.

Walter Duke 1 of Athens 1 feut agin to Florence.

AŔ

The Noblse encourage him to make himfelf Prince places and publick meetings they rail'd at

Book II. of Florence.

Prince, who fenfible of the virtues of one party, and the infolencies of the other, would bridle this, and cherish that: adding to this the hopes of what they should deferve from him, when by their means he had obtained the principality: they had therefore many private meetings with him, perfwading him to take the Government upon him, and offering him their utmost affiftance; and to the Authority and encouragements they gave him, lome Families of the Commons, joined theirs, as the Per-ruzzi, Acciavoli, Antellesi and Bonacorfi, who owing more than of themselves they were able to pay, were covetous of other mens goods to discharge their debts, and by enflaving their Countrey, thought to free themselves from the flavery of their Creditors. These perswalions stirred up the ambitious mind of the Duke to a greater defire of Rule, and to gain himfelf the reputation of being just and fevere, and by that means win favour among the people, he profecuted the mannagers of the Lucchefe The manawar, and John de Medici and Naddo Ruc- gers of the Lucchese cellai, and William Altoviti he put to death, War punifiand many he banished, and more he fined. ed. These Executions extremely affrighted the middle fort of Citizens, only the Nobles and Plebeians were pleased at them, these because it is their nature to rejoiceat michief, those because they faw themselves in a way of revenging fo many injuries the people had done them : and even as he paffed fed the ftreets, they with loud voices praifed the Frankneis and Generofity of his mind, and publickly encouraged him to examine and punish the frauds of the Citizens. The Authority of the twenty thus came to nothing , and the reputation of the Duke augmented, and the awe of him increased, and many to honour him, caufed his Arms to be painted upon their houses, nor wanted he any thing of Prince but the Title: and now thinking he might fecurely do what he lift, he fent to let the Senators know, that he judged it for the good of the City, that they should leave the Government freely and abfolutely to him, and (fince the whole City were wellpleafed with it) he defired their confent likewife : the Senators (though they had long before forefeen the ruine of their Countrey) were much allarmed at this demand, and though they knew their danger, yet not to be wanting to their Countrey resolutely denyed it. The Duke had to make the greater show of Piety and Devotion, chosen for his residence the Con-s vent of the Friars Minors of the Holy Crofs, and defirous to bring his malignant defigns to effect, he cauled Proclamation to be made, That all the people should ap-pear before him in the Piazza of the Holy Crofs, on the morning following. This Proclamation startled the Senators more than his Demands had done, and they got together with those Citizens, whom they judged lovers of their Countrey, and of Liberty,

69

Liberty, not daring (as knowing too well the Dukes power) to apply any other re-medy than prayer and perfwasion, and determining to try, fince their Force was insufficient, if entreaties could make him defift from the attempt, or at least make his Tyranny the easter; whereupon part of the Lords went to him, and one of them fpake after this manner. We come bisber, Great Sir, to The Addres you, moved first by your Demand, and fince by the of the Lorda Proclamation you have made to affemble the to the Duke people : for it is apparent to us, that you would to diffiwade in an extraordinary manner affame that him from the Tytenor which by ordinary ways we cannot grant you; nor is it our intention with any Force to oppose your Defigns, but only to demonstrate bow beavy the load is, you lay upon us, and bow perilom the action you undertake; that you may at all times remember our Counfels, an well as theirs, who not for your advantage, but to wreak their own malice bave advised yon to this. You attempt to enflave a City, that has always lived free; for the Authority we have formerly granted to the Royal Blood of Naples, was as Companions, not as Servants. Have you confidered of what influence and importance the very name of Liberty is in this Gity? which no power can tame, no time consume, nor no merit counterpoise : Do but think Sir, what Forces are necessary to keep in bondage such a City; those firangers you have entertained will not suffice, those within, you cannot rely upon, for they who are now your Friends, and have advised you to Ff thić

Machiavel's Hiftory Book II.

this attempt, when with your Authority they bave quelled their enemies, will feek your Destruction; that they may make themfelves Princes. The Plebeians in whom you confide, will upon the leaft accident that can befal, revolt from you, So that you may reasonably fear in a foort time to have the puble City your enemies, to the mine both of it and your felf: nor is there in nature any, remedy to prevent this ; for those Lords may make their Dominion focure, mbo baving but few enemies, can with death or banifoment root them out, but where the batted is universal, no security can be found, for you not knowing whence the evil will orife; he that fears every man, can affure bimfelf of none, or if you try to do it, you but aggravate the dauger, for those which remain (more enflamed with hate and anger) will be more ready for revenge : that time is not able with its Iron weth to devour the defire of Liberey is most certain, for it has often been known so bave been realfumed in a City that bad never themsfelves tafted it, but had only a memory kept alive bow their Fathers loved it, and once racovered, shey have preferved it with all obstinany and bazard, and had they not been put in mind of it by their Anceftors, the publick Palmes, the Seats of the Magiftracy, and the Badges of the free Orders would have recalled to memory, things which with all earnestnefs of defire must needs be again wished for by all Citizens. What can yau pretend your Alis Shall be, to counterpoise the sweetness of Liberty, or to extinguish in mon a desire of returning

Book II.

ing to their former freedom? the adding all Tuscany to this Dominion would not do it: no! though you should every day return triumphant over our enemies, for the Glory of all. this would not accrue to us, but to you : and though your manners were hely, your deport-ment kind, and your judgment just, yet would not all these be sufficient to install you in the peoples love; nay if you think they could free you from their bate, you would be deceived, for to him thats accustomed to live unbound. Fetters of Gold are heavy, and Silken Cords pinch; befides, for a good Prince violently to detain a Government, is impossible for it becomes a neceffity that be either grow violent too, or that one or both run to ruine: Tou mult therefore refolve either with an extremity of violence to keep in awe this City (which, Cittadels, Guards, nor Forreign Friends will. not be enough to do) or else content your self with that Authority me have given you, to which we exhart you by remembring that that Dominion only is durable, which is voluntary, and do not (blinded by a little Ambition) be hurried into that Precipice, where not being able either to stand or climb bigher, you must meeds to your own, and our great damage fall. These words did not at all move the ob- The Duke aurate heart of the Duke, who told them not meved with the that it was not his intention to take away Lords the Liberty of the City, but reftore it, for freeches. disunited Cities only were slaves, but united free. That if Florence by his means were delivered from Ambition, Parties and Factions. Ff 2

Book IF.

Factions, he should not take any away, but give it new freedom, that not of his own ambition, but the interceffion of many Citizens led him to this attempt, and therefore they would do well to content themfelves with what others confented to : as for the dangers which he might pollibly encounter he contemned them, for it was the part of a difhoneft man to leave doing good for fear of evil, and of a coward to give over a glorious enterprise, because the event was doubtful; but he hoped to carry himfelf fo, that they in a short time should believe they had truffed him too little, and feared him too much : whereupon the Lords a- . greed, (feeing they could do no other ways) that the morning following the people should affemble in the place before their Palace, by whole Authority they would give the Duke the Government for one year, with the fame conditions were once given to Charles Duke of Calabria. It was the eighth day of September, and in the year 1342, that the Duke accompanied by Meffer John de Tosa, and all his conforts, and many other Citizens went to the place, and together with the Lords went up to the Ringbiera (fo they call the platform at the foot of the Palace of the Lords) where they read to the people the agreements made between him and the Senators; but when they came to the reading of that paffage, that for one year they gave him the Government, the people cryed out amain, For Life

1342. The Duke of Atbeni made Lord of Florence.

Life, for Life ; and Francisco Ruftichegli one of the Senate rifing to speak, and mitigate the tumult, his words were drowned with the out-cryes of the people, to that by the peoples confent not only for a year, but for ever, he was chosen Lord, and taken and carried through the multitude, who ecchoed out his name through the whole City. It is cultomary that he who has the Guard of the Palace should in the absence of the Senators be lock'd within it, and Riveri de Gotto now had that charge, he corrupted by the Dukes Friends, without any violence offered, let him in, and the Senators daunted and difmayed, returned to their houses, and their Palace was by the Dukes Family fack'd, the Standard of the people torn in piece and his Arms let flye upon the Palaces, which was look'd upon with extreme vexation and grief by all good men, but with great delight by those who either through ignorance or malice had confented to it. The Duke thus poffeffed of the Go- The Duke vernment, to take away all Authority from makes new those who had used to be defenders of Li- and annuls berty, prohibited the Lords from meeting old ones. in the Palace, and affigned them a private house, took away the Standards from the Gonfalonieres of the Companies of the people, annulled the orders of Justice against the Nobles, fet all prisoners free, recalled the Bardi and Frescobaldi from Banishment. and forbid any one carrying Arms: and the better to defend himfelf from those within, made Ff 2

Digitized by Google

75

4

76

made friends of those without : Highly obliged the Aretines, and all other Towns fubject to Florence, made peace with the Pilans, though he was made Prince to con-tinue the war with them. Took the affignments from those Merchants, who in the war of Lucca had lent the Commonwealth money : Increased the old Taxes. and imposed new, deprived the Lords of all their Authority, and his chief Rectors of Mighters were Meffer Baglione of Perugia, Meffer William of Scefi, from whom, and Meffer Cerettieri Bildomini, he took counfel. The Taxes he had laid upon the Citizens were heavy, and his judgements unjust, and all that uprightness and humanity he had feigned ; was turned into cruelty and pride ; and that he might not govern better Without than within, he conflituted fix Rectors br Governours over the Country, who tob'd, fpbil'd and oppressed, the Country people. He grew jealous of the No-bles, though they had been to affiftant to him; and that he had reftored many of them to their Country, for he could not imagine that generous fouls, who used to live as a free Nobility, could be content to obey him. 'He therefore addicted himfelf to oblige the Plebeiant, hoping by their fayour and forreign force to maintain his Tyranny. And when the Month of May was come, in which the people used to feast, he formed several Companies of the Prebeinns, and meanelt of the people, of whom one one part went fealting throughout the City, and the other with great pomp received the Feafters. As foon as the Fame of his new Lordship was spread abroad, many of the French Nation addreffed themfelves to him, to all which he gave employs as the people, he had the most confidence in : So that Flerence in a short time became not only fubject to the French, but even to their Habits and Customs: for the Men and Women, without any refpect to civility or hame, followed their Fathions; but that which fretted mens minds most of all, were the violences offered by him and his, to women. Thus then the Citizens lived full of inward indignation, leeing the Majesty of the State ruined, it's Orders destroyed, it's Laws annulled, and all honeft conversation corrupted, all civil modefty extinguished; for those who used never to see any Regal Pomp, could not but with grief behold themselves in every fireet, encompatied with Guards of Horfe and Foot ; and that which made their grief and shame more poinant, was that they were to honour him, whom they above all the world hated : To which fear and terror was added, feeing the frequent Executions and continual Taxes, wherewith he confurned and impoverished the City, which fear and indignation of the people were well known and dreaded by the Duke, yet he made no flow, but feemed still to believe himself beloved : Whence it happened that Matthem Morozzo, either Ff4 either to gratifie him, or free or relcue himfelf from the danger, having difcovered how the Family of the Medici, and fome others had confpired against him. The Duke not only forbore making any inquifition into the matter, but put the informer to a miserable death : by which act he difcouraged those that would have given him advice how to fecure himself, and created intelligence to those who fought his ruine. He likewife caused Bettini Cini's tongue to be cut out, and that with fo much cruelty that he dyed of it, only for railing at the Taxes he had imposed on the people, which barbarisms begot heart-burnings in the Citizens, and extrem hatred of the Duke: for that City which had lived under a Cuftom of doing and faying any thing they pleafed,. could not endure to have their hands bound, and their mouths flopt. In fhort, these difgusts and animolities grew to that height, that not the Florentines only (who neither know how to be free, and yet cannot endure to ferve)but the most fervile Nation in the world would have hazarded all to have regained their freedom; and thereupon many Citizens of all qualities, refolved either to recover their Liberty, or lofe their lives. Three Con- And in three parts by three forts of Citipiracies at zens, three conspiracies were formed, to wit, of the Nobles, Merchants and Mechanicks, moved (belides the universal and general caule) from the Nobles thinking they had not advanced the State, nor themfelves piracles at the Duke.

Book IL

78

Digitized by Google

iŋ

79

in it : The Merchants that they had loft its and the Artificers that they wanted trading-Meffer Agnolo Accisivolo was now Arch-bithop of Florence, who in all his Sermons had magnified the Dukes actions, and made . him gracious in the eyes of the people. But now fince he faw him Lord', and beheld his Tyrannies, he was confeidus to himfelf of being a betrayer of his Country. And to gain absolution for that fault, he believed the best remedy was, that the hand which had made the wound should heal it; and of the chief and ftrongeft comfpiracy, became himfelf the Head : In which were the Bardi, Roffi, Frescobaldi, Scali, Altoviti, Magolotti, Strozzi, and Maneini; of the fecond were Chiefs Mefer Manno, and Corfo Donati, and with them the Pazzi, Caviciali, Cerchi and Albizzi: Of the third was Head Antonio Adimari, and with him the Medici, Bordini, Racellai, and Aldobrandini. These last thought to have flain him near the Palace of the Albizzi, where, ras it was imagined he was to come and see a Horse-race: But he not going thither, that failed; they determined then to affault him as he paffed about the City: But this was found difficult, because he always went well guarded and armed, and every day changed his walk, fothat it was impossible to lye in ambush for him in any certain place : They confulted alfo to kill him in Council, but 'twas then confidered, that though they should effect it, itory Book II.

it, the confpirators must remain at the difcretion of his Guards. Whilft these things were debated amongst the conspirators, Antonio Adimari difcovered the whole matter to fome of his Friends at Siena (hoping to. gain fome aid from thence) openly declaring to them that part of the confpirators, and affuring them the whole City was disposed to regain their lost Liberty. Whereupon one of them disclosed the matter to Francisco, Brunelleschi, not out of in-tention to discover it, but out of a belief that he was likewife of the plot. Brunellefchi terrified for himfelf, and hating the others, told all to the Duke; whereupon Pagolo de Mazzecchi, and Simon de Monte reppoli were taken; who confelling the quantity and quality of the Confpirators, affrighted the Duke, and he was advised that he should rather fend for them friendly than arrest them; for if they fled, he might without any fcandal or diffonour fecure himfelf by their banishment. The Duke therefore fent for Antonio Adimari, who confident of his companions immediately appeared ; and he being detained, the Duke was by Meller Francisco Brunelleschi, and Meffer Uguccione, Buondelmonte advided thathe thould with his Soldiers fcoure the ftreets, and whoever he took put to death : but this way he could not approve of, judging his Forces too few for fuch an adventure, he pitcht therefore on another, which if it succeeded, made him secure of his

The plot difcovered.

Book II.

his enemies, and strengthened his own power. The Duke had made it a Cufforn, when any matter of weight occurred to fend for the Citizens, and ask their advice. Having therefore now first lent out to get forces in readiness, he makes a list of three hundred Citizens, and fends out his Serieants to warn them in under pretence of adviling with them; deligning when he had orice got them in his clutches, either to put them to death, or closely imprison them. The detainour of Anthony Adimari, and the drawing together of his forces, which could not be kept lecret, lo startled the Citizens, especially the guilty, that the boldeft of them denyed to appear. And because eveiv one had read the lift, they went to feek each other out, heartning themselves up rather to dye like men with Arms in their hands, then be led like Sheep to the flaugh-ter : fo that in few hours every party of the Confpirators had difcovered their inteptions one to the other, and determined the day following, which was the 26 of July . 1343, to raile a Tumult in the old Market, and thereupon taking arms, call out the people to Liberty. And accordingly the next day at nine a clock, the time appointed, they all took Arms, and the people likewife at the cry of Liberty armed themfelves, and each party fortified themselves in their own Streets under Banners, with the peoples Arms in them, which the Conspirators, had cauled privily to be made: All 1343.

Digitized by Google

9†

All the Heads of the Families, as well Nobles as people met and fwore to their own defence, and the death of the Duke -(except only fome of the Buondelmonti and Cavalcanti, and those four Families of the Commons, that had confented to make him. Lord, who together with the Beccai, and the Rabble of the people, ran armed into the Piazza to defend the Duke.) Upon this rumour the Duke fortifies the Palace. and his men that were lodged in divers parts came out mounted on Horfe-back, to get into the Piazza, and in feveral places, were met with, fought and flain; yet about three hundred Horfe got thither. The Duke was in doubt whether he should fally out and fight his enemies, or defend himfelf in the Palace. On the other fide, the Me-dici Cavicciulli Ruccellai, and other Families, which had been most oppressed by him, doubting left if he should issue out. many that had taken Arms against him would revolt, and prove his friends, refolving to deprive him of that opportunity of adding to his power, made head and affaulted the Palace : Upon their advancing, those Families of the Commons, which had fided with the Duke, seeing him thus briskly affaulted, changed their minds, fince the Duke had changed his fortune, and all joyned with the Citizens, fave only Uguesione Buondelmonte, who went to the Palace, and Jobn Cavalcanti, who retreating with some of his conforts into the New Market

Book II. of Florence.

Market, leaping upon a stall, intreated the people, who passed armed by towards the Piazza, that they would undertake the defence of the Duke, and to frighten them, he boafted his own power, and threatned them all with death, if they continued obstinate to oppose their Lord; but finding he neither could get any of them to follow him, nor that any of them took notice of his infolence to chaftife it; feeing his labour in vain, he would no longer tempt Fortune, but retired to his own houle. Mean while the Bickering in the great place, between the forces of the Duke and the people was hot; and though the Palace gave all the aid it could to the Dukes party, they were overcome, and fome of them fubmitted to their enemies, and others, leaving their Horfes in the Palace fled. Whilst they thus fought in the Piazza : Corfo, and Amerighe Donati of the peoples fide, broke open the Stinche, burnt the Mayors Recods, and those of the publick Chamber, fack'd the houses of the Rectors or Governours, and all those Ministers of the Dukes they could light on they flew. Mean while the Duke feeing he had loft the Piazza, had all the City his enemies, and no hopes of help attempted by an act of kindness to gain the people : And fending for the Prisoners, with fweet and obliging words he releafed them, making Antonio Adimari (though much against his will) Knight, he caused his Arms "to be taken down from the Palace, and put up

The Citizens take order to new, model the State-up those of the prople: Which things being done too late, and out of due order, as forced and done by confirmint flood him in little flead; for he had fill the difcontent to behold himfelf clofe blieged in the Palace, and to confider that by grafping too much he had loft all, and must in few days dye either by Famine or the Sword. The Citizens to give form again to their State, retired to Santia Reparata, and created fixteen Citizens, one half of the Nobles, the other of the People, who together with the Archbishop had all manner of Authority given them to new Model the State, they likewile chole fix to execute the office of Potestà or Mayor till one should be chosen. There were come into Florence to aid the people many from other parts, among which were divers from Siena with fix Amhaffadours, men much honoured in their Country, These mediated fome agree-ment hetween the Duke and People. But the people refused all manner of accord, unless first they had delivered up into their hands Mefer William Scefi, and his Son, together with Meffer Cerettieri Bildomini. To this the Duke would not concent; but at length threatned by the people belieged with him, he yielded. Certainly the lpite appears greater, and the wounds are more shaftly that are made by a people, recover-ing their Liberty, than by those defending Meffer William and his Son, were delivered as a prey to thousands of their enemies, his

Book II.

of Florence.

his Son not yet eighteen years of age; yet The could neither his youth, beauty, nor inno- of the poor cence fave him from the fury of the mul- etc. titude; they fell npon them both, and those who could not wound them living, wounded them dead ; nor was their cruelty fatified with hewing them in pieces with their fwords, but they tore them with their hands and teeth ; and that all their fenfes might bear a part in their revenge, having first heard their groans, seen their wounds, touched their torn limbs; they would like wife have their tafte gratified, that their outward parts being before fatisfied, their ftomachs might be fatiated likewife : but if this outragious madness made them exceed all bounds of cruelty to those two poer Gentlemen : It was kind to Meffer Ceretieri, for the multitude tyred with executing 1. 21.0 their bloody rage upon thole two, quite for-got him, who no more ask'd for, flayed still in the Palace, and at night was by some of his Friends and Kinfmen conveyed into a place of fafety. The people having wreakt An accord their revenge in the blood of thefe two, made. came to this agreement, That the Duke with all his people and goods (hould depart in fafety, he renouncing all manner of elaim to Florence, and that as foon as he was got out of their Dominion, he should at Casentino fign the renuntiation. In this manner on the 6th. of August he departed from Florence, accompanied by many Citizens, and at Cafentino (though very unwillingly) willingly) he ratified the renuntiation, nor had he kept his word, had not Count Simon threatned to carry him back to Flo-This Duke was (as his Government tence. rather of the teltifies) covetous and cruel, difficult of accefs, and proud in his answers, he defired the flavery, not the good will of men, and therefore chose rather to be feared than loved : Nor was indeed his prefence lefs contemptible than his manners, for he was of stature but low, and fwarthy of complexion, his beard long and thin; fo that every part of him deferved hatred : and in ten months time, his evil cuttoms had driven him from that Government, which the ill counfels of others had railed him too. These accidents happening in the City, gave opportunity to the Towns subject to the Florentines to affume their Liberty, fo that Arrezzo, Castiglione, Pistoia, Volterra, Colle, and St. Gunigiano rebelled, and the Florentines by recovering their Liberty, taught their fubjects to do the like, and with the driving out of the Duke fucceeded the loss of their Territories : The fixteen Citizens and the Bishop thought it more convenient to please their subjects by peace, than to make themfelves enemies by war, and show'd themselves as well fatisfied with their Liberty as with their own : wherefore they fent Ambaffadors to Arezzo to re-nounce all command they had over that City, and to make a League with them, that fince they could not value themselves upon them

Duke of Atbens,

r rebel.

them as fubjects, they might do it as friends, with the other Towns they agreed likewife in the best manner they could, striving to keep them their friends, that they being free, might help to maintain their Liberty. This management, as it was prudently devifed, fo it had happy fuccels: For Arrezzo ere many years past returned under the Florentine government, and the other Towns flood out but few months : Thus many times we the fooner, and with lefs charge and expence obtain things by feeming to flight them, than by profecuting them with violence and obstinacy. Things quieted thus abroad, they applyed themselves The Florento fettle affairs at home, and after forme dif-putes between the Nobles and people, it was bone. concluded that the Nobles should have one third part in the Signory, and in all other offices one half; the City was, as we have faid before, divided into fix Parts or Wards, whereupon there were fix Lords, one of every Ward cholen, unlefs upon fome accident they chofe twelve or thirteen, but foon after they were again reduced to fix; yet it was thought fit to regulate the Government in this point, as well becaufe the VVards were not evenly distributed, as because now giving a part to the Nobles, it was convenient to encrease the number of the Lords. Wherefore they divided the City into quarters, and out of each chose three Lords or Senators, they abolished the Goufdoniere of justice, and those of the Companies of the people, and in the place of the twelve good men, they created Eight Counfellors, four of each degree. This order GE order of Government established, the City might have been quiet, if the Nobles had been con-

Book II

New Diffention between Nobibility and people.

The Bilhop

mons.

tent to live with that modefty requisite in civil conversation, but they acted clean contrary, for when private men, they would have no Companions; and when Magistrates, they would be Tyrants, and every day produced fome ex-ample of their pride and infolency; which mightily difguited the people, who were grieved to see that for one Tyrant destroyed, a thousand were sprung up. Thus infolency on the one fide, and regret on the other dayly in-creasing, the heads of the people represented to the Bishop the haughty deportment of the Nobles, and their fcornful carriage towards their fellows in office, and therefore perfwaded him to mediate a way that the Nobles might be content with other offices, and leve the Magiftracy of the Signory to the people only. The Bishop was naturally just, but good natured, easie to be turned to one fide or the other, which made him first at the instance of some of that Princes friends favour the Duke of Athens, and afterwards by the inftigation and advice of fon e Citizens conspire against him : he had in the reformation of the State favoured the Nobles, and now thought fit to favour the people, moved for the Comby the reasons alleadged by those popular Citizens, and thinking to find in others the same unstedfallncis himfelt was subject to, perswaded to bring the matter to agreement, and fummoning the fixteen whole Authority was not yet extinct, in the belt manner he could he exhorted them to yield the administration of the Signory

of Florence.

nory to the people, promifing thereby the quiet of the City, or otherwife its ruine and destruction. This discourse strangely incensed the No-bles, and Meffer Ridophus de Bardi with bitter words reproved him, calling him a man of little words reproved him, calling him a man of little iy reproved faith, and reproaching his friendship to the Duke by Ridolyto Bardi. as fickle, and his confpiracy against him as trai-terous, concluding that those honors which they had with danger gained, they would, though with danger defend, and departing with the others enraged at the Bishop, he gave account of what had paffed to his companions, and to all the Families of the Nobles, the Commons likewife told their minds to the others : and whilft the Nobles were forming forces to defend their Authority, the people thought not fit to ftay till they were got in order, but run armed to the Palace, crying out that they would have the Nobles renounce the Magistracy, the tumult-and noife was great, and the Lords chofen from among the Nobles faw themfelves forfaken; for the Nobles feeing all the people in Arms durit not come out, but every one kept within their houses; so that the popular Lords having first used means to quiet the people, affirming their Colleagues to be good and modest men, not able to prevail upon less terms, they fent them home to their own houses, whither with much ado they were brought with fafety ; the Nobles thus thrust out of the Palace, they took away the of-fice likewise from the four noble Counsellors, and afterwards made twelve, all of the people ; and to the eight Lords that remained, they made a Gonfaloniere of Juffice, and fixteen Standardbcarers Gg 2

He is tharp-

The foolifh Attempt of Anires Sirozzi.

Tie Nobles arm.

4.

bearers of the Companies of the people, and in fuch mannner reformed the Councils that the whole power of Government remained in the arbitriment of the people. When these things happened there was a great scarcity in the City, fo that both the Nobles and the poorer fort of people were at once difcontented, these for hunger, those for having lost their Authority ; which accident encouraged Meffer Andrea Strozzi to hope he might usurp over the Liberty of the City : he fold his corn at a much cheaper rate than others, whereupon multitudes flocked to his house, so that he took at last the boldness to mount one morning on horfeback, and with fome of these behind him to call the people to Arms, and in a little time got together above four thoufand men, with which he marched to the Palace of the Lords, and demanded entrance, but the Lords with threats and arms beat him off the place, and by Proclumation fo terrified the peos ple, that by little and little every one went home to his own house, leaving Meffer Andrea alone; who very hardly by flight ekaped out of the Magistrates hands. This accident though rash and foolish in it felf, yet made the Nobles hope they might one day force the people, fince the Plebeian rabble were at differed with them, and that they might not lofe this occasion they refolved to ftrengthen themfelves with all affiftances possible, to regain by reasonable force what by unjust force had been taken from them ; and into fuch a confidence of victory they grew, that they publickly provided Arms, forcifyed their houses, and feat to their friends in Lombardy

Lombardy for aid : The people likewife together And the with the Lords made their provisions, arming people also. themselves, and demanding affiftance from Science and Perngia : and now the friends of cither fide appeared : the whole City was in arms, the Nobles had on the largest fide of the City made head in three places, at the house of the Caviacciulli, near S. Johns, at the house of the Pagsi and Donati at great S. Peters, and at that of the Cavaleanni in the New Market. Those on the other fide Arno, had fortifyed themfelves on the bridges, and in the freets where their houses stood; the Nerli defended the Bridge of Carraia, the Frescobaldi and Manuelli that of the Holy Trinity, the Roff and Bardi the old Bridge. and that of Rubisonte: on the other fide the Commons were affembled under the Standard of Justice, and the Banners of the Companies of the people; and things being in this posture, the people thought not fit any longer to defer the scuffle, the first that moved were the Medici and Rondinelli, who affaulted the Caviaceinelli at the entrance from S. Johns place to their houses, here the skirmilh was hot, because from the Towers they were pelted with Stones, and from below wounded with Crofs-bows. This Battle lasted three hours, and still the people increased, to that at length the Caviaccialli feeing themfelves oppressed by multitudes, and no fuccour coming, grew faint, and yielded themfelves to the power of the people, who faved for them their Goods and Houses, only took away their arms, which they divided among fuch of their Friends and Kindred, among the Commons as were difarmed armed: having in the first affault come off Victors, they next fell upon the Donati and *Paz-*zi, whom they easily overcome, being much weaker than the former, there remained now on that fide the river the Cavalcanti only, who were very frong both in men and scituation. notwithstanding feeing all the Standards march against them (when three of them only had conquered the other) without making any great defence they yielded : now were three parts of the City in the peoples hands, there remained only one in the hands of the Nobles, but that the hardeft to come by, as well by reafon of the ftrength of those that defended it, as for its fci-tuation, being fenced with the river Arno, fo that there was no way but forcing the Bridges which were fortified in the manner before defcribed, yet the old Bridge was first stored, which was gallantly defended, for the Towers were armed, the passages barr'd, and the Turn-pikes guarded with stout and couragious men, to that the people with great loss were repulfed, feeing therefore here their labour loft, they next affaulted the Bridge Rubiconte, but finding the fame difficulty, leaving a Guard of four Colours to keep these two Posts, they affaulted the Caraia, and though the Nerli manfully defend it, they could not fustain the shock of the people, this Bridge (for want of Towers to defended it) being the weakest, and the Capponi and other Families of the Commons, affaulting them behind, fo that oppressed on every fide they forfook their Turnpikes, and gave way to the people, who after this overcame the Roffi and Frescobaldi

Frescobaldi for now all the people on that fide Arno joined with the Conquerours, there then remained only the Bardi, whom neither the ruine of the reft, nor the uniting of the whole people, nor the small hopes they had of any succour could terrifie, but they chofe rather to dye with their Arms in their hands, and fee their houses fack'd and burnt, than submit themselves to the difference of their enemies; and fo obfinately defended they themselves, that the people feveral times attempted in vain to beat them either from the old Bridge, or the Rubaconte, but were still with the slaughter, and wounding of many of their men repulsed. There had some time before been a street made, which led from the Roman way by the houses of the Pitti to the wall upon S. Georges hill, by this way the people fent fix Colours with orders to give the affault on the back-fide of the Bardi's Houles: this made their hearts fail them, and gave the people an intire victory, for when those who had the guard of the Turnpikes heard their hou- The people fes were assaulted, they abandoned their Posts, lute victory and ran to defend them; thus the' Turnpike upon the old Bridge was taken, and the Bardi put to flight on all fides, who by the Quarateli Panzamess and Mozzi were received, but the people (especially the rabble) greedy of prey spoiled and sacked their houses, and pulled down, and burnt their Palaces with fo much distempered rage & madness,that the most despiteful enemy of the Florentine name, would have blush'd to have made such ruines. The Nobles thus overcome, the people reformed their State; and and because there were three degrees of people, the wh, the middle fort and the Plebeians; they ordained that the richeft Rank of Citizens thould have two chosen to fit in the Signory, the middle fort three, and the poor the like, and the Gonfaloniere was fometimes of one, and fometimes of the other, belides all the Laws against the Nobles were re-enacted, and to weaken them the more, many of them were ranked and mixed among the people, This ruine of the Nobles was fo great and to depreffed their party, that never afterwards durft they take Arms against the people, but lived ever after more humble and submissive; by which means Florence grew vile and abject, loking both its reputation in matter of Arms, and all Generofity of manners. The City after this blow lived in quiet till the year 1543, in the course of which time happened that memorable Pestilence, which John Boccafe has described with fo much Eloquence, and in which Florence lost ninety fix thousand souls. The Florentines likewife made the first war with the Visconti occasioned by the Ambition of the Arch-Bilhop, then Prince of Milan : and though the Nobility was destroyed, yet Fortune failed not by new divifions, to create new troubles.

THE

THE FLORENTINE FLORENTINE HISTORY: Written by Nicholas Machiavel, Citizen and Secretary of Florence. The Third Book.

HE natural and implacable Enmities between the Nobles and Common people, occalioned by the define those have to Command, and the regret these have to Obey, are the only Fountains' from which all the Miferies which befal a City flow. For, from this contradiction of Humours, all other disturbances in a Common-A a a wealth brought it felf to those terms, that without having a Prince it could not longer fupport its own Greatness ; Florence was fallen for low, that any prudent Lawgiver might model it linto what form of Government he pleafed. Which things, by reading the former Book, may in part be clearly difcerned ; and having already thewn, The foundations of its Liberty, with the causes of its Divifions; and how the Factions of the Nobility and people, ended with the Tyranny of the Duke of Athens, and the ruine of the Gentry, there remains still to recount the Pickeerings between the Citizens and Plebeians and what effects they produced-The power of the Nobility tamed, and the War with the Arch-Bilhop of Millan ended, one would have thought there had not been left in Florence any occalion of feandal or division; but the ill fortune of our City, and its want of good Orders, permitted a difference to arife between the Families of the Albizi and Ricci, which divided Florence noi lefs; than that first of the Bnondelmanti and Uberti L and afterwards of the Donati and Cerchi had done it. The Popes, whole Seat was now in France, and the Emperours, whole contiant relidence was now in Germany, to maintain their Reputation in Italy, at diversitimes had of divers Nations, fent multitudes of Souldiers thither : Infomuch, that at this time there were English, Dutch, Britans, and many oshers. These (the Wars ended) being left without Kamity between the Albizi and the Ricci in Florence.

Book III.

Book III. of Florence.

without pay or entertainment, under a banner of Fortune, forced now one Prince, and then another, to come to Compolition with them. And in the year 1353, comes one of these Companies into Infeany, commanded by Monfigneur Reale, a Frevincial, whole coming frightned all the Citics of that Province; and Florence did not only on the account of the Publick make provition of Defence, but many private Citizens, and among them, the Albizi and Ricci took Arms for their particular fafety. These two had an implacable grudge in their hearts, and contrived all ways ('the better to raile themselves to the Principality) how to oppress each other; but yet they had not proceeded to blows, only they contended in the Magistracy, and in the Counsel. The City then being, upon this occalion, all in Arms, there happened a Fray in the Old Market, where multitudes of People (as is ufual in like cafes) were affembled, and the Noife increating, word was carried to the A fight Ricci, that the Albizi would affault them ; like to happen by and to the Albizi, that the Ricci were com- a falle ing to fall upon them. Upon which the Rumour. whole City rife, and the Magilitates had much ado to rettrain either of the Families, or hinder that fight, which by chance only, and neither Parties fault, was falfly rumoured. This accident (though a flight one) added fuel to the fire of their fectet anger and malice, making each Party with more diligence endeavour and feek to gain himfelf

A'aa 3

6

Machivel's Hiftory Book III. felf Affociates and Friends. And because the Citizens, by the ruine of the Great men were reduced to fuch an equality, that the Magistrates were had in much greater Reverence than before ; they refolved by the ordinary way, vvithout any particular violence to opprefs each other. We have declared before, that after the victory of Charles the first, the Magistracy was created vvholly out of the faction of the Guelfes, fo great authority had they gained over the Ghibellines ; but Time, various Accidents, and new Divisions, had to blotted out the memory of that influtution, that many descended from the Ghibellines, got to be of the prime Ministers of State. Whereupon Uguccio de Ricci laboured to get the Law against the Ghibellines renewed , the Albizi (according to the opinion of many) being defcendants of that Faction; their Family having, many years before, been Natives of Azezzo, and from thence come to dwell at Florence. Upon vvhich Uguccie thought, that by renewing that Law he fhould thrust the Albizi from the Magiftracy, concluding himfelf from that Claule, That any one descended from a Gbibelline fhould be condemned, if he took upon him the office of a Magiltrate. This delign being discovered to Peter the Son of Philip of the Albizi, he determined to fecond it, leaft by fingly approving it, he should declare himself a Gbibelline. And this Law, thus (by the others Ambition,) revived, initead of .12 -

Book III.

of Flotence.

of taking away, added reputation to Pefer The Laws Albiens, but vivas the caule of many mil- guilding, chiefs that enflued. For no Law can be seried. more huntful and dangerous to a Commonweakh, then that which looks into times paft: -Prin therefore by favouring the revival of this Law, made vyhat his Enemies defigned a hindrance to be a ftep to his Greatnels; for becoming Principal of this new Order. he ever after affinned more Authority, being the fole Favourite of this nevy faction of Guelfes. And becaule no Magilirate vvas appointed to fearch out vvho vvere Ghibellines; and fo this Law became of little flead, he took order that the Captains vyere appointed to make Inquilition after the Chibellines, and having found them out, admonifi them, that they fould not take any Magistracy upon them; hence all those in Florence, who wvere made incapable of beating ativ Offlet, vvert called Ammoniti The dim-(or the Administical.) The Captains in a what, and fhort time grown bold in their nevv Charge, vvithout any kind of telpect, not only admonified these who deferved it, but whoever they thought fit; as their Avarice or Ambition led them: And, from the Year 1397, vilien this Order first began, to 1357. the Year 1366, above tovo hundred Citizens vvere admonified Whereby, the Captains, and the Faction of the Guelfer, vvere become to potent, that every one honoured them for fear of being admonifhed; and especially the Heads of them, which were Aaa 4 Peter who.

Machivel's Hiftory Book III. Peter Albizi, Messer Lapo de Castiglionebio.

Oriccio de Ricci Arives to mitigate them and Charles Strozzi. And though this infolent kind of proceeding displeased many, yet none were more afflicted than the Ricei, confcious to themselves of being the Authors of this diforder; by which they beheld the Commonwealth ruined, and their Enemies (the Albigi) contrary to their intent, grown more powerful. Wherefore Uguccio de Ricci coming to be one of the Lords, ftrove to put an end to those miferies, which he and his Affociates had given a beginning to: And by a new Law provided, that to the fix Captains of the Wards three fhould be added; of which, two to be chosen amongst the meanest Handicrasts. enacting, That all declared Gbibellines. fhould by twenty four Citizens, Guelfes, deputed in manner of a Grand Jury, be confirmed by full Verdict; Whereby the Captains Authority was formewhat qualified, and the trick of Admonishing began to grow cold : however the Factions of the Albizi and Ricci ftood each upon their Guard, and in all Laws, Enterprizes or Counfels, were out of a particular hate, to each other contradi-Under these diftempers they labou-Ctory. red from the Year 1366 to 1371, when the Faction of the Guelfes recovered its power. There was of the Family of the Buondelmonti a Catalier called Messer Benchi; who for his Valour in the War against the Pilans, was made one of the people, and confequently capable of being elected, and and fitting among the Senators: but when hexpected to take his place in the Signory, a Law was made, that no Noble-man, though made one of the people, should exercife that Office. This act mightily angred Meffer Benobi, and joyning him. fif with Peter Albizi, they determined with the admonition, to cruth the meaner people, and keep the whole Government to themfelves. And by virtue of the favour Meffer Benchi had with the Ancient Nobility, and Peter Albizi with the powerful Commons, they revived the power of the Guelph Faction, and by a new Reformation of the Wards, ordered matters fo, that the Captains and twenty four Citizens were at their difpole: So, that now they grew bolder with their Admonitions than ever before, and the House of the Albizi, as heads of this Faction, still grew greater. On the other fide, The Ricci, with their Colleagues, were not wanting to hinder. their proceedings as much as in them lay; fo that both lived in continual jestoufie, each daily fearing their ruine : For these Causes, many of the Citizens, firred up out of love, A mentine to their Country, met together in the of the Church of St. Peter Scheraggio'; and rea- commons foning about these diforders among them- present felves, the Senate came thither, to whom, ditorders. one of the greatest Authority amongst them, fpoke in manner following. We were The Speech 'many of us doubtful, molt Worthy Lords, of one of of affembling our felves together upon a them to Publick

Publick occasion by private orders, thinking we might be centured as too prefumptuous, or condemned as too Ambitions; but confidering that many Citizens, with-'out any notice taken of them, not for any Publick beacht, but to latistie their own private Ambition, do daily in Streets and Houses conferr together : We judged, That if they who affembled themfelves to confult the ruine of the Common-wealth are not afraid, they ought lefs to Rand in fear whole meeting is deligned for Publick good and advantage; nor care we what others judge of us, fince they effect not at all our Cenfures of them. That love (most Worthy Lords) which we bear our Country first affembled us here, and has now invited you hither, to realon of those Milchiefs already grown too great among us, and which violently increase in this our Republick, and to offer you our affi-france to remedy them. In which, you may (though the undertaking be difficult) fucceed, if laying alide private Interest, you will with publick Power make use of your Authority. The common diftemper of all the Cities of Italy, has (Worthy Lords) infected, and does still infect our City: for fince this Province withdrew it felf from under the yoak of the ⁶ Empire, the Cities in it (for want of a ⁶ powerful bridle to curb them) have not ordered their Estates and Government as free, but like people divided into Sects and

Book III.

and Factions: Honce (prungall those Milchiefs, and all those Disorders which afflict them. There was not at hift any union or friendship among the Citizens, unless among those, combined together in fome private Malice, or wickedness against their Country. And all fear of God, and refpeet to Religion, being banifhed from a-' mong men, Oaths and Faith-plighted are become of no farther avail, than as they redound to Profe, and Men make use of then, not to keep them, but that they may with more facility deceives and the more eatie and fecure the cheat is, the more glary and praise is gained: Thus Wicked mon are applauded as Industrious, and the Good approached as Pools And the truth is, that in whatever, either of it felf is Infectious, or can infect others is forouded and amailed together. The Young mon and Idle, and the Old Lafcivious; and every Sox, and every Age is corrupted with ovil Manniers = to which, good Laws (over-ruled bin bad Cufromes) can afford no remedy. Hunce arifes that Avarice we behold in our Citizens; and that appetite, not of true Glory, but of reproachful Honours, which begee have, enmity, difcord and faction; and thefe are the Parents of Death, banifnment, oppretion of Good mon, and exaltation of Bad. For the Good, relying upon their Innocency, feek not like the Wicked extraordinary means of Defence and Honour, and 10, undefended and

. T.I.

and unregarded, are ruined. From Exam-'ple of which springs the love of Parties, and the fame creates their power; for the wicked out of Avarice and Ambition, and . the good out of neceffity follow them: 'and what is most of all pernicious is, to fee the Authors and movers of these Seditions, cloak their ends and intentions 'with a pious Name; for though they be 'all enemies of Liberty, they all opprefs us under colour of fetting up an Aristocracy, or a Democracy. For the reward of Victory which they aim at, is not, to have the glory of having freed the City, but the latisfaction of having o'recome others, and usurped the Principality; whither ' having once reached, what Act is there fo unjust, so cruel, or so Avaritious, which they will not attempt. Thus Laws and Ordinances are made for private, not for publick Intereft. Hence War, and Peace, and Alliances are contracted, not for ge-'neral Glory, but particular fatisfaction; and if other Cities are fullied with these fpots, ours is blotted all over; for the Laws, Statutes, and Civil Edicts, are not made or enacted in order to the peoples freedom, but according to the Ambition 'of that Party has got the upper hand; " whence it follows, that one Party driven' out, and one Faction extinct, another prefently starts up. For in that City that would maintain it felf by Parties rather 'than by Law, as foon as any Party comes to remain in it without any opposition, it mult of necessity divide within it felf; for it cannot defend it felf from those poculiar Acts, which for its own fafety it at first esta-'blifhed. And this to be a Truth both the An-'cient and Modern divisions of our City tefti-' he. Every one thought (the Gbibellines once 'destroyed) the Guelphs might for a long time have lived in honour and happines. Yet foon after they were divided into Bianchi. and Neri. At last the Bianchi overcome, 'yet the City never was free from Factions. 'Sometimes we were fighting in favour of the Exiles; formetimes to decree the quar-' rel between the Nobles and People: and at length (giving others what we our felves. could not, or would not possels in quiet), we fubmitted our Liberty first to King, Robert, then to his Brother, then to his, 'Son, and last of all to the Duke of Asbens., 'Yet in no litte or condition could we find. repose, but were like people who could 'neither agree to live in Freedom; nor be, ' content with Servirude. Nor were we a-, " fnamed (fo far are our very Conftitutions, "disposed to Division) whilst yet we lived under the Kings Authority, to postpone the Majetty of a Prince, to the government of a Vile man born in Agobbio. For the 'Honour of this City we should forbear any 'mention of the Dike of Athens, whole "Cruel and Tyramical carriage thould have , made us Wile, and taught us how to live: 'Vet, no fooner was he driven hence, but outr

12

to

The Lords moved with the Peoples reprefeneation of Affairs ; and appoint a Committee of Safary.

" changed , you may now by applying bet-" ter Rules, hope for better Success; for the . Malignity may with prudence be over-"come, by putting a bridle to the Ambition of Diffurbers ; abolifhing those Laws which are the Nourishers of Sedition, and ena-" Cring fuch as are congruous to true Civility and Liberty. And apply your felves 'as foon as you can, to do it by the gentle 'and favourable affiftance of Laws, leaft if 'you delay, men be constrained to do it by force of Arms. The Lords touched to the quick with what they were before Confcious of, and moved with their Authority and Exhortations, gave Commission to 56 Citizens to provide for the fafety of the Commonwealth. It's most true that. many heads are more proper to keep firm and stable good Constitutions, than to in-Thefe Citizens confulted vent nevy ones. more how to quell the prefent Factions, than to remove opportunities or occalions of future Divisions; and at length attained neither to one nor the other; for occalions of nevy Factions they took not away, and from these vohich they watcht over , they railed up one more potent, and dangerous to the Republick. However, three of the Family. of the Albizi, and three of the Ricci (of which Peter Albizi and Uguccio Ricci vvere. two) they made incapable for three years, of bearing any Office in the Magistracy, (ex-cepting, that on the Party of the Guelphs.) They likewife prohibited all Citizens entring the

of Florence.

the Palace, unless in fuch times as the Magiltrates Sat. They enacted, that whoever was beaten, or had their Goods unlawfully detained, might, by Petition, accuse the Parties to the Councils, and having Convicted them, leave it to their Sentence. This Order took away all power from the Faction of the Ricci, and increased that of the Albizi; for although they were equally marked, yet the Ricei fuffered the molt. For though Peter were fhut out of the Palace of the Lords, yet that of the Guelfes, where he had the greatest Authority, was open to him, and it he and his Followers were before warm in giving out their Admonitions, they now grew throughly hot; and to this ill disposition new disgusts were added. Pope Gregory the Eleventh fat now in the Chair, and reliding in Avignion, governed (as his Predeceffours had done) Italy by his Legates, who being generally proud and Covetous, had afflicted many Cinies. One of these being about this time at Bilonia, took occasion from the Famine which was that year in Florence, and thought to make himfelf Lord of Tofcany, and not only forbore to fupply the Florentines with Provision, but to put them out of hopes of any Harvest: for no sconer did the Spring appear, but rope's " he invaded them with a great Army, hope-Legate in-ing he might, finding them difarmed and rence. half starved, eatily subdue them. And poftibly he had sped in his Enterprize, had not his Army been Treacherous and Mercenary. For Bbb

For the Florentines seeing no other remedy, gave his Souldiers 130000 Florins, and made them relinquish the Attempt. We may begin Wars when we please, but cannot end them to; This War begun by the Ambition of the Legate, was continued by the Revenge of the Florentines, who entred into League with Meffer Bernaby, and all those Cities which were Enemies to the Church; and they created a Council of Eight Citizens to manage this War, giving them power to act without Appeal, and tines make fpend without Account. This War against the Church, notwithstanding that Uguccio was dead, somewhat railed up the heads of the Faction of the Ricci, who had allwaies in opposition to the Albizi favoured Meffer Barndby, and disfavoured the Church ; and the more, because the Council of the Eight were all Enemies to the Family of the Guelphs; which made Peter Albizi. Messer Lapo de Castiglionchio, Charles Strozzi, and many more, confult together how they might offend their Enemies. And whilit the Eight made War, they admonished. The War lasted three years, and determined not but with the Popes death; and was managed vvith fo much Valour and Univerfal fatisfaction, that the Magistracy was every year prorogued to the Eight, and they vvere called Saints, though they flighted Excommunications, and spoiled the Churches, and forced the Clergy, fo much greater value fet those Citizens of that time upon their

The Floren. Wat againft the Church.

18

their City than their Souls, letting the Church understand, that as its Friends they could defend it, so as its Enemies they could atflict it : for they made all Romania, La Marca, and Perugia rebel: But whilft they made fo fuccessful a War against the Pope, they could not against the Captains of the Wards and their Faction defend themselves; for the Envy the Guelphs bore to the Council of Eight, gave an addition to their boldness, so that to omit what they did to other Noble Citizens. they could not abstain from injuring fome of the Eight themselves. And to such Arrogance were the Captains of the Wards arrived, that they were more feared than the Senatours, and with lefs reverence were Addresses made to these than to them, and more was the Palace of that Faction in Efleem than theirs, infomuch that there came no Ambassadours to Florence, but who had Commission to the Captains. Pope Gregory then being dead, and the City having no more Wars abroad, yet lived within in great Confution, for on one fide the Arrogancy of the Guelphs was infupportable, and on. the other they could perceive no way to quell it; but they judged it a forced-put to come to a tryal by dint of Sword, and fee which of the two Parties could prevail. On the Guelphs fide were all the Ancient Nobles, with most of the ablest Citizens, among whom as we faid Meffer Lapo, Peter and Charles were the principal: On the Bbb 2 other other were all the meaner fort of the People, of whom the Leaders were the Council of Eight, Commissioners of the War, Messer George Scali, Thomas Strozzi, to whom the Ricci, Alberti and Medici adhered. The remainder of the Multitude, as is ufual in fuch cafes, joyned themfelves with the discontented Party. The Chiefs of the Fa-Ation of the Guelphs began to think their Enemies strength formidable, and their danger great, whenever a Signory chancing to be chosen out of their Enemies, should prefs down the Ballance: which thinking good to prevent they met together, where they diligently examined the state of the City, and their own Condition, and upon the whole, it appeared to them that the Admonifhed (being increased to fuch Numbers) had laid fuch a load of Infamy upon them, that the whole City was become their Enemies. To which they faw no other remedy, but as they had taken their Honours from them, fo to drive them out of the City, possessing themselves by force nament. of the Palace of the Lords, and feizing all the Government into their own hands; in Imitation of the Ancient Guelphr, who had never lived securely in the City, had they not chafed thence all their Adverfaries -Every one agreed to the thing, but they difagreed in the time. It was now the Year 1378, and the Month of April, and Meffer Lapo thought it not fit to delay time, affirming nothing to prejudicial to Time as Time, Gadyhs plot to feize he Go.

The

1378.

Book III. of Florence.

Time, efpecially to them, confidering that in the next Signory, Silvester Medici might cafily be made Gonfaloniere, whom they knew an Enemy to their Party. On the other fide Peter Albizi was for fome time of respit; for he judged it neceffary to have some Forces in a readiness, and those could not be well gathered together without discovery, and a discovery must needs be very dangerous; he therefore proposed the deferring it till St. Johns day near at hand; at which time, that being the folemnest Festival the City kept, such Multitudes would be running thither, that they might hide whom and as many as they pleased; and to secure them from the fear of Sylvester he would admonish him, and least that should not do, he put into the Election one of the Fraternity of his guarter, fo that drawing out the Lots (the Purfes being empty) the Lot might proba-bly light on fome other of his Companions. Upon this then they determined, though Messer Lapo was much against it, judging Delay dangerous, and alledging, that no time in the World was ever convenient in all points; fo that he that waits till every thing falls to his mind, must either never attempt any thing, or if he does attempt, do it to his difad vantage. They therefore admonifhed the Fraternity, but it would not do, nor could they hinder Silvester from being cholen; for the Council of Eight perceiving the Trick, prevented the Chang from Bbb 3 being being drawn. Silvester de Alammano de Medici was thereupon allow'd for Gonfaloniere. He being of one of the greatest Families among the people could not endure to fee the Commons oppressed by a few Rich mens and having in himfelf determined to fupprefs this Infolency, feeing the Plebeians favourable to him, and many of the Richelt of the People inclinable, he communicated his defign to Bennet Alberts Thomas Strozei. and Meffer George Scali, who promifed to bring him all the help they could. They therefore privately formed a Law which renewed the Orders of Justice against the Grandees, retrenched the power of the Captains of the Wards, and made way for the Admonished to be recall'd to their Dignities: and that in the fame time they might make tryal and obtain, having tirk the Colledge, and then the Councils to debate with, and Silvefter being Provok (which degree, for the time it laits, makes him as it were a Prince of the City,) on the fame morning Summons the Colledge and Councils; and first to the Colledge, apart from the other, proposes the Law to be enacted; which, as a new thing, met with fo much diflike, that though the Number affembled were but few, he could not obtain it. Whereupon Silvefter feeing, that Force was the readiest way to get it granted, he pretends to go out upon a neceffary occasion, and ere any one was aware of him. hyes him to the Council, and mounting on 22

21

Digitized by Google

3

Book III.

of Florence.

a place where every one might fee and hear him. tells them : That be thought he bed been chosen Gonfaloniere, not to be Indge of private Causes, for which ordinary Judges were appointed, but to watch for the Commonwealth, to correct the Infolence of the Migbty, and temper those Laws, by the abuse of which, the Republick was now running to ruine : Ibat be bad with diligence and Care weighed these things, and as far as in him lay, made due provision ; but the Malignity of men opposing bis just Intentions, bis pyper of doing Good was taken away, and they might bear, but could no more debate it. Wherefore, seeing he could no longer be belpful to the Commonwealth, he knew not why he spould hald that Magistracy, which either indeed be did not deserve, or at least, others thought he ded not; and therefore be would retire home . that the People might choose in bis place, one of great er Virtue, or better Fostune than bimself. And concluding these words, he swent out of the Council towards his Houle. Thefe who were in the Council, and privy to the matter, and others defirous of Novelty. prefently raifed a Rumour, to which the Lords and the Colledge ran; and feeing their Gonfaloniere going away, vvith Intreaties and Authority they ftopt him, and made him return into the Council, which vvas now in a Tumult. And many Prime Citizens vvere threatned vvith Injurious words, among vyhom Charles Strozzi vvas by an Artificer taken by the throat, and he would Bbb 4 have have killed him, had not the standers by with much ado refcued him: but he that most of all encouraged the Tumult, and drew the City to Arms was Bennet Alberti. vyho from the Palace vyindows vyith a loud voice cryed out to Arms, and prefently the vyhole place yvas full of Armed men : Whereupon the Colledge, vvho first of all upon Intreaty vvould not yield, now threatned and terrified, consented. The Captains of the Wards at the same time had affembled a great many Citizens in their Palace. to Confult, vvhat they should do to defend themselves against the Orders of the Lords. But vohen they heard the Alarum, and understood vvhat vvas determined in Council. every man fled to his Houfe. However, let none raife an alteration in a City, upon a fond belief, that he can ftop it when he pleafes, and reftrain it as he lift. 'Twas Silwefter's intention by creating this Law, to quiet the City, but it fucceeded otherwife ;. for the Humours once moved had in fuch a manner incenfed every 'one, that the Shops vvere not opened: but the Citizens fortified themselves in their Houses, and many hid their Goods in Churches and Monasteries, as if all feared an approaching danger. The Company of the Artizans Affembled, and each body chose them a Syndic; vvhereupon the Priors Summoned their Colledge and those the Syndics, and had a vyhole days Confultation how the City might, to every ones fatisfaction, be quieted; but being of different different Judgments they could not agree. The day following the Artizans drew forth their Banners, vvhich the Lords hearing. and doubting vvhat might follow, Summoned the Council to confult a remedy: but fcarce vvas it Affembled, and the Rumour fpread abroad, but prefently the Enfigns of the Trades, and Multitudes of Armed men following them, vvere in the place. Whereupon the Council, to give the Trades and People wherewith to content their hopes, gave general power, vvhich they call in Florence BALIA, to the Lords, the Colledges, and the Eight, the Captains of the Wards, and the Syndics of the Trades, to reform the State for the best advantage to the Publick: But whill this was concluding, fome of the Companies of the Trades, together with the Rabble, (fct on by those who defired to revenge the late Injuries received from the Guelphs) feparating themfelves from the reft, fackt, and burnt the Palace of Meffer Lapo de Cajtiglionchio; who, Lavo castias foon as he heard the Signory was attempt- gloncho's House ing fomething against the Ordinances of the burnt by Guelphs, and faw the People in Arms ; ha- the reoving no other remedy, but either to conceal ple. himself, or fly; first hid himself in the Mo-nastery of the Holy-Cross, and thence in a Fryers Habit fled to Carentino, where he was often heard repent, that ever he had confented to Peter Albizi, and to rail at Peter, for having moved the forbearing to feize the Government till St. Johns Day. But Feter

24

Book III. of Florence.

25

Machivel's History Book III.

Peter and Charles Strozzi, in the first be-ginning of the Tumults, hid themselves, believing (they once over) they had Kindred and Friends enough to fecure their stay Messer Lapo's House burnt, in Florence. (for Mischiefs are hardly begun, but easily Many orher Hoarun on) many other Houses were, either out of general Hatred, or private Malice, fackt and burnt : And, that they might have Companions that with more skill in Villany might affift them in plundring other mens Goods, they broke open the publick Prifons, afterwards they fackt the Monastery of St. Agnolo, and the Convent of the Holy Spirit, where many Citizens had hid their Goods. Nor had the publick Treasury scaped the hands of these Thieves, if by their respect and reverence to one of the Lords, it had not been defended, who on Horfe-back, with many men at Arms following him, in the best manner he could, opposed himself to the rage of the Multitude. At length, the popular Fury fomewhat mitigated, what by the Authority of the Lords, and what by the approach of Night; the day following the Balia extended their Favours to the Admonished, but on condition they should they should not for three years bear any Office in the Magistracy. They annulled all Laws made by the Guelphs, in prejudice of the Citizens. They proclaimed Rebels

Lapo de Castiglionchio and his Conforts with fome others generally hated. After which, the New Lords were declared, to whom w2S fes burnt.

Digitized by Google

The Multitude appesfed.

Book III.

of Florence.

was Gonfaloniere, Lewis Guiccardine, which gave great hopes of putting a ftop to all Tumults, because every one had an opinion they were Peacable men, and lovers of the publick Repofe: Yet the Shops were not open'd, nor did the Citizens lay down their Arms, but kept frong Guards up and down the City : wherefore the Lords received not the Magistracy without the Palace, with the usual Pomp, but within, and there too whithout the observation of any Ceremony. These Senares judged nothing of more concern could be done in the beginning of their Lordenine Magifiracy, than pacifying the City ; where- to quier fore they made them lay down their Arms, the City, open their Shops, and feat those Countrymen the Citizens had called in to their Affistance home ; they placed Guards in many places of the City, fo that, if the Admomilhed could have been quiet, the City had The Adbeen at Peace ; but they were not content monified canfe of to flay three years for their Honours, info- new stars. much, this the Frades once more drew together in their favour, and demanded of the Senare, that, for the good and quiet of the City, shey would enact, that for the future no Citizen, in no time, either of the Senate, the Colledge, or Fraternities, the Captains of the Wards, or Confuls of the Trades, thould be Admonified as Ghibaline; and that moreover new Purfes should be made of the Guelph Party, and the Old ones burnt. These demands were not only by the Lords of the Senate, but by all the Coun-

Digitized by Google

27

The Gm-

falmier's

the Peo.

Speech to

Councils prefently accepted: So that now it was generally thought these new raised Tumults would be stopt too; but because men can never be fatistied with recovering their own, but are greedy likewife to feize fomewhat of other mens in Revenge; those whole hopes and Stock lay in these diforders, put it in the Peoples heads, That they could never be fafe unless many of their Enemies were driven out and destroyed: which being represented to the Lords, they fummoned before them the Magistrates of the Trades, with their Syndics, to whom Lewis Guiccardine, Gonfaloniere, Spoke in this manner: Had not these Lords, and I together with them, known long time fince the Fortune of this City, that as foon as Wars are ceased abroad they must begin at home, we should have much wondred at these Tumults that have happened, and taken them more to beart : but, because things we are accustomed to, bring less trouble along with them, we bave born the past Riots with patience; effecially, fince they were without any fault of eurs began, and boping they, according to former Examples, would have an end, when we had complyed with you in so many great and weighty Demands; but, Seeing that you are not Appealed, nay, rather that you would we acting fresh Injuries against the Citizens, condemning them to Exile and Death, our difpleasure is increased with your Injustice: And truly, bad we believed that in the time of our Magistracy, this our City, either by Opposing or

Book III. of Florence.

or Complying with you, must have been ruined, we had either by Death or Banifoment freed our felves from these Housers. But indging we were to meet with men that had in them some Humanity, and love to their Country. we willingly undertook the Magistracy, believing that our Clemency would over-rule your Ambition. But now we find by Experience, that the more humbly we deport our felves to you, and the more we grant yon, the pronder still you grow, and the more extravagant are your Demands. And if we tell you this, 'tis not to offend you, but to make you take it into confideration; for we would have another tell you what pleases you, but we must tell you what is for your good. Tell me now upon your bonejty, tell us What is it you can Civily defire of us, which we have not granted ? You would have the Captains of the Wards Authority taken away; Done it is. You would have the Purfes burnt, and reformed ones to be made; We have confented to it. Ion would have the Admonifhed reftored to their Honours; The request is admitted. At your defire, we bave pardoned those that burnt and fackt the Honfes, and have feut into Baughment many Honourable and worthy Gitizens, only for your fatisfaction. The power of the great is to please you, by new Laws reftrained. What end will you put to your defires, or bow long will you abuse your Liberty? Are you not moved, to behold us with more patience bear the Defeat, than you the Viliory? To what will thefe Divisions bring this City ? Do not you

29

30

Machivel's Hiftory Book III.

you remember bow, when you were once divided, Castrucchio a mean Citizen of Lucca. over-awed you: That the Duke of Athens e private Leader, fubjetted you? but when you were United, not an Arch-bishop of Millan, nay not a Pope could do it; but after Some years Wars were forced to defift with (hame. Why will you, with your Discords in time of Peace, enflave that City, which fo many powerful Enemies in time of War left free? What can you expect from your Divisions but Servitude? or, What hope from the Goods you bave stollen, or shall steal, but Poverty? For you have taken from those, who with their Industry maintained our whole City; whom foiling of their Goods, you spoil the City of ber Nourishment ? For those who have seized them, being ill-get-Goods, will never know bow to keep them; whence of necessity must follow Hunger and Poverty in the City. I, and these Lords, Command yon, and if Honour will permit it, Intreat you, that you would once Settle your minds, and reft satusfied with what we have enacted in your favour; or, if yon would yet have any thing more, defire it Civilly, and make not your Demands with Arms and Tumult: for sobilit you are just and reasonable, you shall alwaies be pleased; give not then opportunity to Wieked men, at your Coft and Charge, and under your Prote-Elian, to ruine this your Country. Thefe words (because they were true) touched those Citizens to the Soul, and they kindly thanked the Gonfaloniere, for having acted-

Book III. of Florence.

of Florence.

, acted with them like a good Lord , and with the City like a good Citizen, offering ready Obedience to whatever was committed to them. And to put them in a way to perform their Promife, the Lords deputed two Citizens for each of the Chief Magistracies, who together with the Syndics of the Trades, were to Confult of what was neceffary for establishing publick Peace, and refer it to the Lords. Whill these Another things were in Agitation, arole another Tu- Temalt mult, which more than any of the former than the disturbed the Common-wealth. Most of the former. Burnings and Robberies happened the days preceding, were committed by the very fcum of the People; and those who had been the boldeft and forwardeft among them stood in fear, that when the greater Differences were quieted and composed, they should be called to account, and punished for their Villanies, and, as it alwaies happens, be left forfaken by those who had let them on: to which was added, the Hatred which the Labouring people bore to the Wealthy Eitizens, and Masters of Trades, not believing themselves to well fatisfied for their labour as they justly deferved. For in the time of Charles the First, when the City was divided into Trades, every one had a Mafter or Governour; and it was enacted. that in all Civil Caufes those Masters should be Judges between the Inferiour people of that Trade. These Trades, as we have faid before, were at first but XII; in process of time

32

Machivel's History Book III.

time they came to be XXI, and grew to fuch power, that in fevy years they took upon them the Government of the vyhole City. And, becaufe among them there vvere fome Trades more Honourable, and fome lefs, they vvere divided, and VII vvere called the Greater, and XIV the Lefs. From this Division, and other Causes before recited, fprung the Arrogance of the Captains of the Companies; for those Citizens vyho had Anciently been Guelphs, and under vyhofe Iurisdiction that Magistracy vvas alwaies Sworn, alwaies favoured the people of the higher Degrees, and perfecuted those of the Meaner, with their Friends and Defenders; and hence arofe the many Tumults we have related amongli them; but because, ordinarily, many of those Handicrafts, to which the Meanest of the People applyed themfelves, vvere annexed to the bodies of other Trades, without having particular Companies of their own Arts, but submitting themselves according to their various mysteries to others; it often happened out that when either they were not fatisfied for their labour, or thought themfelves any way oppreffed by their Matfters, they had no other refuge, but to the Magistrate of that Trade which governed them, whom they thought did not do them equall Iustice : and of all the Companyes that had fuch people under them, the Wool-trade had the most, which was the richest, first, and most powerful of all, and which by their industry fed, and does feed, the greatest part of the meaneft.

Book III. of Florence.

meaneft and labouring people. The Plabeians then, as well those of the Woollen-Drapers-Company as of the others, being mightily enraged for the reasons above expressed, and withall, full of fear for the Riots and Robberies they had committed, met many times together by night, discourling the Matters' had happened, and laying before one another the danger they were in; where one of the boldeft, and of the greateft experience, to animate the reft spoke thus: Were we now The to confult, whether me were to take armes to speech of Plebean burn, and rob the boufes of the Citizens, or to encouviolate the Churches, I thould be one of those rage his should judge it fit to be first confidered, and villany. poffibly advise it as better, to be content with quiet Poverty, then hazardous Gain ; But fince Armes are taken up and many wijchiefs done, Itbink our busines is to confult how we may not bere leave off, or if we do, how we that! fecture our felves for what's past. I am of the mind, were there nothing elfe to reach us, Neceffity it felf does it, Tou fee all the City filled with Complaints, and Hatted against us; the Citizens confulting, and the Lords contriving with the Magistrates : believe me, They are enacting Halters, and studying snares, to entrap us. Iwo things we are therefore to look to; First, That we may not for what's done, be to morrow punished, and then, That we may bereafter live with more liberty and satis-Jacion then formerly : To the first, "Tis in my Judgment convenient, that to procure pardon for our former Faults, we Commit new, adding Ccc

Book III.

ding Mischief to Mischief, doubling our Robberyes, and Ruines, and endeavouring to en-gage what Companions we can, for where all offend, none are punished; and small Faults. are corrected, but great Crimes rewarded ; for, where many Suffer, few seek Revenge: General injuryes being born with more patience, then particular ones. The multiplying then of our Mischiefs, will be the meanes to get no pardon and let us in a path to arrive at those Sweets of Liberty we defire. And in my mind, the purchase is certain, for those who should binder us from it are divided and Rich; their. Divisions will give us the Victory, and their Riches, (becoming ours) maintain it Nor. let that Antiquity of Blood, with which they upbraid m, affright you : All men baving bad the same beginning, are equal in Blood; and all made after the fame manner? Let's be all stript naked, and we shall appear the same. Put us in their Cloaths, and them in ours, and without doubt we shall look like Nobles, and they like Labourers, for nothing but Poverty and Riches makes a difference among men. It greives me to bear, that many of you are troubled in Conscience for what's already done, and are loath to do any more; and certainly, if it be true, you are not the men I took you for; for neither Conscience nor Infamy should terrify you; those that overcome (let them overcome bow they will) have no reason to be ashamed ; A fig then for Conscience; shall we that are in daily fear of being starved or thrown into a Goal, be frightned with a story of Hell ? If you bað had but observed the course of the World, you would perceive, that all they which have attained to great Wealth or Power, bave got it, either by Frand or Force, and what they have thus usurped by Deceit or Violence, to mask the wisionfness of the Action, they call by the title of Honeft gain, and those who for want of wit, or tenderness of Conscience, escheme these courses, are alwayes beggers and flaves; for the faithful Servant must alwaies be a Servant, and Honest men always poor : none free themselves from Servitude, but the faithless and the bold ; nor from Poverty, but the rapacious and fraudulent : For God and Nature has so distributed the Fortunes of men that more are inclined to Rapine than Industry, and more disposed to do mischief than to do good. Hence proceeds it that men devour one another, and he alwayes comes by the worft, that dares the leaft. We ought, therefore to make use of that power Fortune puts in our bands, which could never be offered us in a better time the Citizens being still divided, the Senators fearful, the Magistrates Terrifyed, so that it is an easy matter, before they unite and gather Courage, to oppresitem: Whereupon we shall remain absolute Lords of the City, or at least owners of so much as will enable us not only to procure pardon for our past Offences, but authorize us to threaten new. I confes the attempt is bold, and dangerous, but where neceffity pinches, Boldness is judged prudence, and men never weigh Danger in great attempts ; for those enterprizes that are begun with Danger, end with Glory; and we ne-Ccc2 ver ver can escape out of one Danger, but by another: And fure, when we behold Prifons, torments, and Death preparing, we ought rather to fear their infliction on us, then think our felves secure, for the pains are certain, but the fafety donbeful. How often have I beard you complain of the Coveroufness of your Superidurs, and the Injustice of your Magistrates ? Now is the time, not only to free your selves from them, but to advance your selves to such a Superiority over them; that they shall have more reafon to complain, and fear, than you. But the Opportunity which time bas brought is is flying away, and in vain ; when it is once past shall we strive to recall it ? Tou see the preparations of our Enemies, let us prevent them in their very Thoughts; for the first of us that gets to Arms, will doubtless be the Conquerone, to the ruine of his Enemy, and advancement of his own Party; whereby many of us thall get Honour, and all Safety. These persuations fet their minds a boiling, which were before hot enough for any Mischief; whereupon they determined to take Arms, as foon as they had drawn more Accomplices to their Party, binding themfelves by Oaths to fuccour each other, when ever any of them should be oppressed by the Magistrate. Whilst they were thus preparing to defiroy the Republic, their defign was diffeovered to the Lords; wherefore they got one Simon of the Piazza into their hands, from whom they learnt the whole Confpiracy, and how the day following the Riot

Book III.

ż6

Book III.

of Florence.

Riot would begin. Whereupon, feeing their danger, they fummoned the Colledges, and thole Citizens, who, together with the Syndics of the Trades, were to confult about the uniting of the City: The Evening was come upon them before all were Affembled, and the Lords were then by them advised to fend for the Confuls of the Trades, who all with one confent Counfelled them, That all the men of Arms in Florence should be drawn together, and that the Standardbearers of the People should, in the Morning early, be with their Companies Armed in the place before the Palace. One Nicholas of Sanfriano was putting in order the Clock of the Palace; whilf Simon was Tormenting, and the Citizens were Affembling, and having understood what the matter was, returning to his Houle, he filled all the Neighbourhood with the Clamour, infomuch that on a fuddain, in the place of the Holy Spirit, there were above a thousand men Affembled. This Rumour prefently fpread among the other Confpirators, and Great St. Peters, and St. Lawrences, were in an inftant filled with Armed men. Whilft at the approach of day, which was the 21 of July, there appeared not above Eighty men at Arms in the Piazza to fide with the Senators, and not one of the Standardbearers; for they hearing the whole City was in Arms, were afraid to fur out of their Houfes. The first Band of the Plebeians that possessed the Piazza, were those Ccc 3 whò who had Rendezvouz'd at Great St. Peters ; ar whole Arrival the men at Arms moved not: Prefently the reft appeared, and not meeting any Oppolition; with loud and terrible Out-cries demanded the Prisoners from the Signory, and to have them by Force, fince they were not furrendred; they fell to burning the Houle of Lewis Guiccardine; whereupon the Lords, for fcar of worfe, refigned them up; and having got them, they took away the Standard of 7nflice from the Executor, and under it burnt the Houles of many Citizens, perfecuting all whom for private or publick Reafons they hated; and many Citizens, to wreak their private Malice and Revenge, particular Injuries led them to the Houles of their Enemies: for there needed no more, than Crying-out amidst the Multitude, To such a House, or such an House, and he that carryed the Standard turned towards it. Having done a great deal of Mischief, to allay it with some worthy Act, they made Silvester de Medici, and so many other Citizens Knights, that the whole number amounted to 64, among whom were Bennet end Anthony Alberti, Ibomas Strozzi, and fuch like of their Confidents, though many likewife they made by force : but that which in this Accident was very remarkable, was, To fee them burn many Houfes, and make the Owners the very fame day Knights, (fo close did their Favours follow their Injutics) whereof Lewis Guiccardine, Gonfaleniere 5 x.

37

Machivel's Hiftory Book III.

of Florence. Book III.

- ...

niere of Justice was one: The Lords in the midft of fo much Tumult, feeing themfelves Abandoned by the men at Arms, the Heads of the Trades, and their own Standardbearers, were aftonished; for none purfuant to the Orders given came to their affiftance, and of fixteen Standards, only that of the Golden Lion, and that of the Com and Calf, with John Cambi appeared: And thefe stayed but a short time in the Piazza, for feeing no others follow them, they likewife marched off. The Citizens on the other fide, beholding the Fury of this raging Multitude, and the Palace forfaken, kept fome within their Houfes, others followed the Armed Croud, that they might the better, being amongst them, defend their own and their Friends Houles. Thus their power The Regrew ftronger, and that of the Lords de- ftronger, This Tumult lasted all day, and and the creafed. night corning on, they ftopt at the Palace of weaker. Meffer Stephano, behind Saint Barnaby's Church. Their Number was above fix thousand, and before dawn of Day, they with Threats made the Trades fend in their Enfigns. Morning being come, with the Standard of Justice, and the Enfigns of the Trades, they came before the Podesta, or Mayors Palace, and the Podesta refuting to give them possession, they fought and overcome him. The Lords willing to come to any Composition with them, lince they could not tell how to quell them by Force, fent for four of their Colledge, and im-

Ccc4

39

Digitized by Google

ployed

ployed them to the Mayors Palace to understand their minds, who found, that the Heads of the Plebeians, with the Syndics of the Arts, and some Citizens, had already determined what they would demand of the Senate: whereupon, Accompanied with four deputed by the Rabble, and these following Demands they returned to the Se-Ibat the Company of Wool-Mernate: chants might not hereafter have a Forraign Judge. That three new Corporations of Trades should be erected; one for the Carders and Dyers, the other for the Barbers, Hofters, Taylors, and other fuch kind of Merchants, and the third, for the poor Labouring • People; and that for these three new Corporations, there should alwaies be chofen two Lords, and for the fourteen leffer Corporations Three. That the Senate thould provide Halls for thefe New Corporations to meet in. That none entred under these Bodies Corporate, should be forced to pay any Debt under two Ducats for this two years. That the Bank should remit their Interest, and only the Principal be paid. Ibat those who were Contined and Condemned, should be pardoned. That all the Admonifhed should be reftored to their Dignities: With many other Advantages which they aked for their Favourers or Favorites; and on the contrary, many of their Enemies to be Confined and Admonished. Which Demands, though they were shameful and dishonourable to the Commonweath.

The high Demands' of the Multirude.

:

wealth, yet for fear of worle were accepted by the Senate, Colledges, and Council of the People; but to give them perfection, it was requisite they should be confented to by the Common Council, which (because in one day they could not affemble two Councils) they agreed to refer to the next; and the Artizans appeared content, and the Vulgar fatistied, promifing, if they gave perfection to that Law, all Tumults should ceafe. The next Morning, whilft the Common Council was debating the Matter, the Multitude, voluble and impatient, marched under their former Colours into the Piazza with loud fhouts, and horrible Out-cries, affrighting both the Council and the Lords: Upon which Guerriante Marigiculo, moved more out of Fear than any other private Paision, went down, under pretence of guarding the lower Gate, and fled to his House; but he could not pass out so privately, but he was taken notice of by the Rabble and known: yet they did him no injury; only the Multitude at fight of him Cryed out with one voice, That the Lords fhould all leave the Palace, or elfe they would kill their Children, and burn their Houfes. Mean while the Law was determined, and the Lords were returned into their Chamber, and the Council gone down, but neither, daring to go out of the Lodge, nor pais the Court, despairing of the lafety of the City, they made a stand; such Villany was there in the Multitude, and fo much wretchwretchedness or fear in those, who might have either bridled or suppressed them. The Lords were likewife, in Confufion, doubtful of the prefervation of their Country, feeing themfelves forfaken by their own Guards, and not by any one Citizen, either with their Aid or Council Supported. Whilst they thus stood uncertain, either what they might, or what they ought to do, Thomas Strozzi, and Bennet Alberti, moved to it by their private Ambition, delirous to be Mafters of the Palace, or becaufe indeed they believed it the best way, perswaded them to yield to this popular Violence, and return as private men to their Houfes. This, Counfel given by them who had been Heads of the Tumult, made Alamanno Acciainoli, and Nicholas de Bene, two of the Lords (though the reft yielded) exclaim against them, and taking a little heart, told them, That if the reft would go, they could not help it; but they would not lay down their Authority till their time was expired, unlefs vvith it they laid down their Lives. Their Diffenting increased the Lords Fear, and the Peoples Rage , fo that the Gonfaloniere, chooling rather to quit his Magiltracy with fhame, than hold it with danger, recommended it to Thomas Strozzi, who condu-Sting him out of the Palace, conveyed him to his own House. The other Lords in like manner, one after another departed : Whereupon Alman and Nicholas, that they might not be judged more Couragious than Wife, feeing feeing themselves left alone vvent away alfo; and the Palace remained in the hands of the Plebeians, and of the Eight Commillioners of War, vvho had not yet laid down their Office. There vvas one Michael de Lando a Comber of Wool, vvho, vvhon the Croud entred the Palace, had the Standard of Justice in his hand. This Fellow bare-foot and fcarce Michael de a Rag to cover him, leaps up the Stairs, with comber all the Rabble following him, and getting of Woot. upon the place vyhere Lords used to give falsuere. Audience, he makes a fland, and turning to md Lod, the Multitude : Tou fee, fays he, that this by the Palace in yours, and this City in your hands; what is none your opinion here they shall be diffofed ? To vvhich, they all made Anfwer, That they would have him to be Gonf aloniere, and Lord, and that he should govern them, and the City, as he thought ht: He was an understanding vvitty Fellow and more beholding to Nature than Fortune; and therefore accepting the Authority, he determines prefently, to quiet the City, and put a ftop to the Tumults, and to keep the People employed, and gain time to put himfelf in order; he commands Search to be made for one Ser Nuto, whom Meffer Lapo de Castiglionchio had deligned for Bargello, or Head Sergeant: Upon which Commission, most that were about him And, to begin that Government with ran. Inflice, he had got by Favour, he made Clamation that none should dare to burn or Treal any thing; and, for a Terrour. cauled caufed a Gibbet to be erected in the Piazza. And to give a beginning to the Reformation of the City, he annulled the Syndics of the Trades, and made New; deprived the Lords and Colledges of the Magistracy, and burnt the Purfes of Offices. Mean vyhile, Nute vvas by the Multitude brought into the Piazza, and hanged by one foot on the Gibbet, and every one flashing a piece from him, there was in an inftant nothing left but The Council of Eight, during his Foot. this, (believing themfelves, fince the Lords were departed, Chief Magistrates of the City) had already defigned New Lords, which Michael understanding, sent to tell them, that they should presently depart the Palace; for he would let every one know, how, without their Counfel, he knew how to govern Florence. He after Affembled the Syndics of the Trades, and created a Signory of Four for the Labouring people, two for the Greater, and two for the Leffer Trades. Besides this, he made a new Squittini, or Imborfation for Choice of Magistrates, and divided the State into Three parts; one whereof related to the New Arts, the other to the Leffer, and the third to the Greater. He gave Meffer Silvester Medici the Rent of the Shops upon the Old-Bridge, and to himfelf the Podestaria, or Bailywick of Empolis and to many other Citizens, and many of the Common People he gave beneficial Gifts; not fo much to reftore them pargof what they had given him, but that they might might be at all times ready to defend him from Envy. Yet the People began to think, The Yeothat Michael in Reforming the State, too commented much fided with the Wealthy Party, and with Mithat they had not to great a fhare in the do the Government as was fitting, or rather, ne- Anna. ceffary for them, to maintain and defend themfelves in it : Whereupon, sparr'd on by their habitual Boldnets, they again took Arms, and in a Tumultuous manner gathering to their Colours, come into the Piazza, and Require the Lords to come down to the Ringhiera (or place of Audience) to Michael, feeing Debate of New Matters. their Arrogance, not to Enrage them more, without otherwise hearing what they would have, blamed their manner of coming to ask any thing : Exhorted them to lay down Arms, and then should easily be granted them, what the Signory could not Honourably by Force concede. At which, the Multitude entaged against the Palace, went to St. Maria Novella, where they Conflituted among themfelves Eight Chiefs, with Minifters, and other Orders, which paid them Reverence and Respect: So that there was now two Sects in the City; and it was under two different Governments. The Chiefs. of the Plebeians determined among themfelves, that alwaies Eight chosen from the Companies of Trades, ihould dwell with the Lords in the Palace, and that, vvhatever vvas debated by the Signory, fhould be by them confirmed. They took away from Silvefter

The Lords driven out of the Palace.

نصا اسه

Silvester Medici , and Michael Lando . all that in their former Concellions they had beftowed on them, they affigned over to many of their own Offices, and other fup-plyes, that they might the better maintain their port and dignity, having concluded thefe things, they fent them to the Lords, requiring they might be contirmed by the Councils, with an affurance they would have them done by Force, if by fare means they could not obtain them. Those who brought them performed their Commission to the Lords with great boldnefs, and greater Prefumption, reproaching the Gonfaloniere with the Dignity they had conferred on him, and how ungrateful he had been in managing those Honours they had bestowed on him, with fo little refpect towards them. And from these injurious words, proceeding to threats, Michael could no longer endure fuch Arrogance; but remembring more the Degree he then held, then his low and mean Condition, refolved to punish in an extraordinary manner fuch extraordinary Infolence, and drawing his Sword, He had by his fide, he first grievously wounded him that spoke, and then caused them all to be bound and Thefe things were no fooner imprisoned. known, but the multitude were enflamed with anger; and believing they might force that to be done with Arms in their hands, which Difarmed they could not obtain, with Tumult, rage, and fury they Armed themfelves, and made ready to affail the Lords. On . . . Z.

Michael wounds and imprifons the peoples Mcsiengers.

46

14:

e mened See e de Me e de Lantratika tense

Book III. of Florence.

On the other fide, Michael forefeeing what would happen, determined to prevent it, and judging it more for his Honour to affault others, then flay for his Enemy within the Palace Walls; and be forced like his Predeceffors, with difhonour to the place, and thame to himfelf to fly, He gathers togethet a great number of Citizens, who were already come flocking thither, fentible now of their former errours, and mounting on Horfe-back followed by many men at armes, goes to St. Maria Novella to fight his Enemy. The Rabble who (as we faid before) had made the fame refolves at the fame time that Michael parted from the Palace, were advancing towards it, and it happened fo, that taking feveral waies they met not one the other:whereupon Michael curning back, found the Piazza possessed, and that they were en- And roms deavouring to take the Palace; and engaging the tabble. with them, after a hot skirmish he routs them, drives fome of them out of the City, and the reft forces to throw down their Arms, and run and hide themselves. This Victory obtained, the Tumults were appeafed by the fole valour of the Gonfaloniere; who for Courage, Prudence and Honefty, Michael exceeded all the Citizens of histime, and Lander's deferves to be Chronicled among those few commenthat were ferviceable and Benchcial to their dations. Country ; For had he had either a difhoneft or Ambitions mind, the Common-wealth had utterly loft it's Liberty, and fallen under a much worfe Tyranny, than that of the Duke

Machivel's Hiftory Book III.

Duke of Arbens. But his goodnels would not permit a thought in his Bren contradictory to the publick good, and by his prefe dence he governed things to, that most of his Party had confidence in him, and the reft he by force could quell : which put the Pleboians in fear, and made the berter fort of Tradefinen bethink themfelves and confider how great their Ignorance had been, that they who had tamed the Pride of the Nobles, were become supporters of the fourn of the people. When Miebael gained this victory over the Rabble, the new Lords were already drawn; whereof two were of fuch vile and abject quality, that it begot a defire its all men to free themfelves from this Infamy. And on the first day of September, when the new Lords were to enter upon the Magifira-... sy, the place being full of Armed men, as foon as the Old Lords were come out of the Palace." a Cry was ralled among the Armed men, in a tumultuous manner, that they would not have any of the Plebeians Lords. Whereupon the Signory, to fatisfy them, deprived those two of the Magistracy - of which, one was called Tyra; and the other Baroccio, in whole places, Meffer George Schall, and Francis Michael were cholen : They annulled likewife the Corporations of the meaner fort of people, and from those under them (except Michuel di Lando, and Lewis Pucchio, and fome others of better Quality) took all manner of Offices. The Honours they divided into two parts; Whereof, one to the Greater.

Greater and the other to the Leffer Trades. was configned : Only of the Lords, they would always have five of the meaner Artificers, and four of the greater. Trades ; and the Gonfaloniere, sometimes of one and sometimes of another. The Government thus fetled, put the City in a prefent pollure of Quiet. And though the Government was taken out of the hands of the Rabble, yet did the Mechanicks of meaner Quality remain Superior in power to the Citizens of higher degree; to which, these were constrained to submit to take away from the loofe Multitude the favour of the Handicrafts, by fo contenting them ; which was likewise fawoured by those who defired, that they should be afflicted, who under the Name of the Guelph Faction had fo much tormented the City: And, because among the Favourers of this fort of Government, Messer George Scali, Meffer Bennes Alberti, Meffer. Silvester Medici, and Messer Thomas Strozzi, were the Chief; they feemed, in a manner, as Princes of the City. These things thus managed and Governed, the Divilion between the Prime Citizens, and Merchants of meaner Trades (begun by the Ambition of the Ricci and Albizi) was confirmed , which produced, in feveral times afterwards, fad effects; of which, because we shall have occasion hereafter often to make. mention, we will call one the Popular Fa-, The Popuction, and the other the Plebeian (as, for far and the most part, hitherto, we have observed Factions, Ddd to to do.) This Government lasted three years. and was much perplexed with Deaths and Banifhment; for those that Governed. because of the many Male-contents within and without, lived in very great Jealousie. The Male-contents within, were still attempting, or at least, the Government believed they were attempting, fome Novel-. ty. Those without, having nothing to restrain them, sometimes by means of that Prince, and sometimes of this Commonwealth, differfed and fowed Sedition fometimes in one Party, and fometimes in ano-There was at this time in Bolonia. ther. Gianazzio of Salerno, Commander of the Forces under Charles of Durazzo of the Blood Royal of Naples ; who defigning an. expedition against Queen Joane, this his General, was by the favour of Pope Urban. (an Enemy to the Queen) admitted into that City. There were then at Bolonia many that had fled out of Florence, who kept a ftrict Correspondence both with him and Charles: Upon which account, those who Governed Florence lived in the greater Jealoufie, and with eafe believed any Calum- . nies, railed of the Citizens they suspected, Whilst the minds of men were in this Fear, and Sufpension, was discovered to the Ma-. gistracy, how Gianazzo de Salerno was defigned to prefent himfelf before Florence, with those that were fled out, and that many within were to take Arms in their be-, half, and furrender to them the City. Uponthis

Cenfpi-ICY IR

7

50

Book HI.

of Florence.

this Acculation, many were accused; for the principal of which were norminated Peter Albizi, and Charles Strezzi, and next several them Capriani Mangion, Meffer Jacopo Sac- Nobles chetti, Meffer Donato Barbadori; Philip Citizene Strozzi, and John Anfelmin: All which Accused, (except Charles Strozzi that fled) were taken; and the Lords, to the end none should take Arms, in their Favour deputed Moffer Thomas Strozzi, and Meffer Beanet Alberti. with a fufficient number of Sculdiers, to have the Guard of the City. Thele Citizens thus taken, though upon any Teftimony or Circumfiances, they could not be. found Guilty, infomuch that the Captain would by no means Condemn them : Yet condemtheir Enemies in fuch manner firred up the ned and ? People, and moved them to to much Rage Executed. and Madnels against them, that they forced Sentence of Death to be passed upon them. Nor did the greatness of his Family any thing avail Peter Albizi ; Nor that Antient reputation of his which had once made him feared and Honoured, above any other Citizens of Florence, And had once perforaded a certain Citizen, vyhofe Gueft he was at a great Invitation, either, As his Friend, to oblige him to a more kind, humble deport- ... ment in fuch a height of Greatness ; or, As his Enemy, to threaten him with the volubility of Fortune, to fend him a filver Cupfull of Confects, under which, he had hid a great Iron Spike; which, being discovered, and feen by the reft of the Guetts, was in-Ddd 2 terterpreted as an Admonition to him, to ftop and fix the Wheel; for Fortune having brought him to the very top of it, it was impossible, if it continued its Circle and Career, but he must fall to the very bottom : which Interpretation, first by his Ruine, and afterwards by his Death, was fully verified. After this Execution, the City remained full of Confusion, for both the Conquerours and Conquered flood in doubt : but. the most malignant Effects were produced from the Eears of those that Governed; for every flight Accident made them afflict with new Injuries the suspected Party, either Condemning, or Admonishing, or fending their Citizens into Banishment; to which may be added, the making New Laws for support and strengthning of their Government: All which things were profecuted with Injustice and Injury to those, their Faction had any Jealoutie of; to which end, they created a Council of XLVI, who, together with the Lords, vvere to purge the State of fuspected Persons. These Admonifhed XXXIX Citizens, and many People they made Noble, and many Nobles they degraded. And, to enable them to withstand any Forraign Power, they took into their pay Sir John Hankwood, an English man, of great Reputation in Arms, and, who had formerly made War in Italy, under the Pope, and other Princes. The Reafon of their Fears from abroad, arole from the Intelligence they had, that feveral Com-

52

Siz Tohn Hankw hized by the Floren. sinet.

Book III. of Florence.

Companies of Men at Arms, drawn together by Charles of Durazzo, in order to his Expedition against Naples, were in a readinels, and that great numbers of Banished Florentines were joyned with them : To oppose which Dangers, belides the Forces they had levied, they provided themfelves with mony : And Charles, at his coming to Azezzo, received from the Florentines 40000 Ducats, upon promife not to molest them. After which, he purfued his Expedition, and happily possessed himself of the Kingdom of Naples, fending Queen Joan prisoner into Hungary. Which fuccess of his, bred new Jealousies in those vvho ma-" naged the State of Florence; for they could not believe, their Mony could have such power over the King, as to stifle that Ancient Friendship his Family had alwases born to the Guelpb Party, whom they had vvith fo many Injuries oppreffed. And this Jealoufie increating, Injuries increafed with it, which did not extinguish but enflame it, so that most part of the City lived under great anxiety and Tribulation : To which, the Infolencies of George Scali, and Thomas Strozzi contributed, vvho vvith their Authority over-awed the Magistracy, every one standing in fear, least by the Plebeians favour they might be by them oppressed; for their Government, not culy to Good men, but even to the Seditious, appeared violent and Tyrannical. But that the Infolency of George might one day come to Ddd 3. an

53

an end, It happened that John de Cambio accufed a Fellow Citizen, of having held Intelligence against the State; but the Party being found Innocent by the Captain, the Judge would have inflicted the fame punishment upon the Accuser, which the Accufed had been liable to, had he been found Guilty; and when Meffer George could neither by his power nor prayers prevail for his pardon, he with Messer Thomas Strozzi, went with a great multitude of Armed Men, and by force delivered him, facking the Palace of the Captain, and constraining him (to fave his life) to fly and hide himfelf. Which Action begot fuch a Hatred in the whole City against him, that his Enemies thought they might eatily crush him, and not only deliver the City out of his hands, but out of the hands of the Plebeians, who, for three years past, had subjected it to their Arrogance. To which the Captain gave a fair opportunity, who going to the Lords, as foon as the Turnult was over, told them; That be had willingly undertaken that Office, to which their Lordships had Ele-Eted him, because he thought be was to serve Just men, who would take up Arms in De-fence, and not in Opposition of Justice : but now, having bad experience of the Government of the City, and its manner of living; That Dignity he had readily embraced, out of bopes to gain Honour, Safety, and Advantage, he as readily laid down, to avoid Shame, Danger, and Damage. The Captain vvas encouencouraged by the Lords to continue in his Charge, who heartned him with Promifes of Recompence for past Losses, and Security for the future; and withdrawing a part of them, they privately confulted with fome others of the Citizens, whom they knew lovers of their Country, and vvho lav not under the least Suspicions of State; with whom they Concluded, That a good Opportunity was offered to free the City out of the hands of Meffer George, and the Plebeians; the Generality being by this last Infolence utterly alienated from him. Wherefore they thought it best to make use of it, before the Angry minds of the People were letled; for they knew the Favour of the Multitude was won and loft by every little Accident : Judging it withal neceffary, for the Management of the Affair, to draw Meffer Benedetto Alberti to their Party, without whole confent they thought the Enterprize too Hazardous. Messer Bennet was very Rich, Just, Kind, and a lover of the Liberty of his Country, and a Difaffector of all Tyrannical waies : So, that it was no difficult matter to gain him to condescend to the ruine of Messer George. because the Reasons which had made him an Enemy to the Prime of the People, and to the Faction of the Guelphs, were only their Infolencies and Tyrannical Demeanour. And now, finding the Chiefs of the Plebeians were grown like them, he had for sometime discontinued Acting with Ddd 4 them,

Book III.

55

Meller

George

Scali Se-headed

Machivel's History Book III.

them, and the Injuries vyhich had been done to many Citizens, were utterly without his Confent and Advice. Meffer Bennet, and the Masters of the Trades, thus drawn to their Party, they provided themfelves of Arms, and Meffer George vvas taken, but Meffer Thomas fled : And the next day George was Beheaded , with fo much Terrour to his Party, that not a man durft ftir to refcue him; rather every one run to gaze at his fall: Whereupon, he feeing himfelf brought to Die before that People, vvho but a vvhile before adored him, he complained of his ill Fortune, and acculed the Frowardness of the Citizens, which had forced him to comply with, and honour a Multitude, who never vvere capable of Gratitude. And feeing Meffer Bennet Alberti among the Armed men, he faid to him: And can you, Mr. Bennet, confent that this Injury be done to me, which I would never have permitted to be done to you? But I pro-nounce this end of my Mifery, to be the beginning of yours. And with these Repinings he dyed, in the midft of his Armed Enemies, who rejoyced at his fall. Some of his neerest Friends were soon after put to Death, and fome torn in pieces by the People. The fall of this Citizen disquieted the whole City; for many at his Execution had taken up Arms in favour of the Signory and Captain of the People; and many others out of Ambition, or private Jea-loutie. And, because the City vvas full of differing differing Factions, they all had different ends, and each defired before they laid-down Arms, to accomplish them. The Ancient Nobility, called Grandees, (and fo we shall hereafter call them in distinction from the New Nobles of the people) could not fupport or endure their being deprived of all Honours, and therefore by all politible vvaics applyed themselves to the recovery of them. They therefore Armed themfelves, to reftore the Authority to the Captains of the Wards or Divisions: the Nobles of the People, and the Prime Trades were diflatistied to share the Government with the meaner Tradefmen, and Rabble of Plebeiant. On the other fide, The Inferiour Trades, fought rather to add to, than fuffer their power to diminish, and the Rabble feared to lofe their new Corporations: from which Differences there arole many Tumults in Florence in a years space ; sometimes the Grandees took Arms, fometimes the Popular Nobles, fometimes the Inferiour Trades, and with them the loofe Multitude; and many times, in divers parts of the Town, all of them were in Arms at once : vvhereupon, happened several Skirmithes between them and the Guards of the Palace; for the Senate fometimes yielding, and fometimes fighting, ftrove all the waies they could to remedy to many Inconveniencies: Infomuch, that after two Par- * A file# liaments and more * Balia's created to Re- Magina-cy with full form the City. After many Loffes, La- Authony. bours, bours, and grievous Dangers, they established a Government, by which, all those which had been confined, fince Silvefter Medici was Gonfaloniere, were reftored ; they took away all Priviledges and preheminencies which had been grafited by the Balia in Restored the Guelph faction to all 1377. Dignities, and honours; Took away from the New trades their Corporations, and government; distributing them among the Companies they were formerly placed under: They removed from the Inferiour Trades the choice of the Gonfaloniere of Justice, and from one half reduced them to a third Share of Dignities, and those of the highest quality they made them altogether incapable of. Whereby, the Faction of the popular Nobles of the Guelpbs reaffumed the Authority; and the Plebeians, who had been the chief Managers of the state, from the year 1378, to the year 1331, when this Novelty happened, loft it. Nor was this Government lefs impious to the Citizens, nor lefs hurtful in its foundations than that of the Plebeians For many popular Nobles who had been. had stirred in the defence of that, and many of the heads of the Flebeians were confined; among whom was Michael di Lando, who, all the benefit his Authority had been Author of, when the unbridled Multitude Licentiously ruined the City, could not preferve him from the rage of this Faction, fo ungrateful was his Country to him for all his good Offices ! Into which Errour, becaufe

Divisions in the Cisy, taking occation from his Executi-OD.

Princes

58

1381.

Eook III.

Princes and Common wealths many times fall, it occasions that men terrifyed with fuch kind of Examples, no fooner begin to grow fenfible of their princes ingratitude, but they fludy how to offend them. These Banishments and Executions, as they alwayes diffpleafed, fo now they afflicted the Spirit of Meffer Bennet Alberti, who publickly, and privately, condemned them: Whereupon the Prime men concerned in the Government, feared him; for they effeemed him one of the Principal Friends of the Plebeians, and believed, he had confented to the death of Meffer George Scali, not out of any diflike to his manners, but that he might remain without Competitor in the Government; both his words and Works added afterwards fuel to this Jealoutie; So that all the Faction in power turned their eyes towards him, to watch an opportunity of opprelling him. Whilft they flood upon these Terms within, Affaires abroad were not very difficult ; by Aftaires abroad were not very diment y by that which follows the people were more feared than hurt; for about this time Lewis Lewis of of Anjon came into Italy to reftore the King- Anjon par-dom of Naples to Queen Joan, and drive plas out Charles of Durazzo: His paffing by frights the put the Florentines in great fear, for Florentines. Charles, as is usual among old friends defired their Affiftance ; and Lewis defired , (as it is Cufformary with those who feek New Alliances,) they would ftand Neuter. Whereupon, the Florentines, to make a shew of fatisfying Lewis, and helping Charles, difdifinified Sr. John Hankwood from their Service, and fent him to Pope Urban, who was Charles his friend : which Cheat was eafily discovered by Lewis, who highly resent-ed this injury of the Florentines. And whilft the War between Lewis and Charles was maintained in Apulia, there came fresh fuccours to Lewis out of France, who arriving in Tofeany, were by the Banished Aretines brought into Arezze; which fided with those who governed for Charles. But as they were defigning to Change the Government of Florence, as they had done that of Arezzo, happened the death of Lowis ; and A flaires in Apalia and Tofcany changed conutenance; for Charles fecured himfelf of the Kingdom, he had almost lost, and the Florentines, who were almost doubtful of being able to defend Florence, got Arezzo buying it of those people which held it for Lewis. Charles having thus fetled Apulia goes for Hungary, fallen to him by Hereditary Succeffion, leaving his wife in Apulia, with Ladiflaus and Joan, his Children; of whom, more in due Seafon. Charles gained Hungary, but was foon after Slain; there were folemn Feasts kept in Florence for this Success, fo that never City rejoyced more at their own Victory es: Here as well the private as publick Magnificence appeared for many Families in their Feaftings ftrove to vye with the publick : But they which in pomp and Mag-nificence exceeded all others, were the family of the Alberti; For the Feafts and Tournay ments

They get

60

Book III.

ments made by them, feem'd rather becoming a mighty Prince, than a private Family: which joyning Envy to the Jealoufy the flate before had of Meffer Bennet, was the caufe of his ruin : For those who were in power could not be fatisfyed with him imagining every minute fome opportunity might happen; to make him with the favour of the factions, regain his Reputation, and drive them out of the City. And whilst they were in these doubts, it happened, that he being Gonfaloniere of the Companyes, there was drawn for Gonfaloniere of Justice, Meffer Philip Magolotti his fon in law, which redoubled the fear of the Heads of the state, judging it added too much Power to Meffer Bennet, and exposed the State to too much danger. And defirous to remedy it without Turnult, they encouraged Befe Magolotti, his Confort and Enemy, to lightly to the Lords, that Messer Philip not being yet arrived at the Age required, to exercise that degree, could not obtain it. The matter was examined before the Lords, and part out of Hatred, and the reft not to give Offence, voted Meffer Philip incapable of that Dignity 3 and in his stead was chosen Bardo Mancini, a man quite averse to the Plebeian Faction, and an utter Enemy to Meffer Benedetto : Infomuch, that as foon as he was fetled in his Magistracy he called a Balia, who, in Super-Meller Baund . viling and reforming the state, Bamilhed semilar Messer Benedetto Alberti, and Admonifhed all nifhed. the reft of the family, except Meller Antho-

6ť

#y.

62

Machivel's Hiftory

Book III.

to his coaforts before his de parrure.

nv. Meffer Bennet, before his departure, called together all his Conforts and Friends. and seeing them fad and full of tears told His speech them: You fee (my good Lords, and Fathers) bow Fortune bas oppressed me, and threatens you; neither am Istartled at it, nor ought you to monder; for it ever happens thus to men, who, among a great many Wicked, strive to be Good, or would support what many seek to destroy. Love of my Country made me joyn with Sylvester Medici; and fall off from George Scali; and the very fame thing made me bate the Customes of those that now Kule, who, being above chaftifemeut, have scorned Reproof. And I am content with my Banifbment, to free them from the fear they had not of me only, but of all that they know are senfible of their Wicked and Tyrannical Government. I am not molested nor vexed at it; for those Honours my Country, when free gave me. the servant cannot take away, and I shall always find more Delight in the memory of my past life, then the infelicity of my Exile can bring of diffleafure. It grievs me indeed, that my Country should become a prey to a few, and be forced to submit to their Tyranuy, and Avarice: And I am grieved for you, because I fear that these Evils which this day end in me, will begin in you, and that they mill perfecute you with greaterTyranny then they have perfecuted me. Refolve with your felves therefore, to bear a mind stedfast against all Misfortunes, and carry your felves so, that if any adverfity befall you (as much certainly will) the World may may know you Innocent, and that by any fault of yours, you have not deserved it. After this leave taken, to gain as much Reputation of Goodness abroad as he had done at home, he went to visit the Holy Sepulchre, ue dies and in his return thence dyed at Rbodes. Toda. During these Distempers, the Family of the Alberti was not alone affronted and injured. but many other Citizens vvere Admonished, and Banished; among vvhom vvere Peter Benini, Matthew Alderosti, John and Francis de Bene, John Benci, Andrew Adimari. and with these a great number of Mechanicks. Those that were Admonished vvere the Cononi, Benini, Rimicoi, Formiconi, Corbizi, Manelli, and Alderotti. It vvas Cuftomary to create the Balia for an affixed time ; but those Citizens having done what they vvere deputed for, thought it decent, though the time yvere not expired, to Refign. These men therefore, having, as they thought, fatisfied the State, would, according to Cuftome, have refigned : which, the Multitude understanding, ran Armed to the Palace, defiring, that before they religned, many others might be Banished, and Admonifhed; which highly displeased the Lords, vvho entertained them with fair Promifes till they had gathered firength sufficient, and then made them, for Fear, lay down those Arms, which fury had made them take up : yet , to fatistic a little this raging Humour, and to moderate the Power of the Plebejane, they enacted, That whereas they

Book III. of Florence.

63 for with

Milan.

they had a third part of the Honours, they fhould only have a Fourth: And that there might alwaies be in the Signory Two men stedfast to the State, they gave Authority to the Gonfaloniere of Justice, and to Four other Citizens to make Purfes of Chofen, pickt men, whereof two to be drawn for every Signory. The Government thus fetled, fix years after it was first Ordained. vyhich vvas in the year 1381, the City lived in great quietness within it felf, till the year 1393; during which time, John Galeazo Visconti, called the Count of Virtue. having flain Meffer Barnaby his Uncle, and by that means become Prince of all Lombardy, thought he might by Force become King of all Italy, as he had, by Treachery, made himself Duke of Milan. And in the year 1390, waged a brisk war with the Florentines .. which in the Management was fo variable, that oftentimes was the Duke himfelf in Danger, and oftentimes upon the point of destroying the Florentines, who had certainly, had he lived, been loft; though they made a flout defence, and to be admired at for a Common-wealth. And the end proved as advantagious as the War had been Dreadful: For when the Duke had taken Bolonia, Pifa, Perugia, and Siena, and had made ready a Crown to Crown himfelf King of Italy, in Florence, he Dyed : Death not fuffering him to enjoy his: past Victoryes; nor the Florentines to feel their prefent loffes. Whilst this War was on

Eook III.

of Florence.

on foot with the Duke, Meffer Majo Albizi, whom the Death of Peter, had made an Enemy to the House of Alberti, was drawn for Gonfaloniere of Justice : And the humours of the Factions being full kept awake, Majo (though Bennet was dead in Exile) determined, before he laid down the Magistracy, to revenge himfelf on the reft of that Family; and took the opportunity from one, who, being examined about Intelligence held with the Enemy, named Albert, and Andrem Alberti. These were presently taken, at which all the City grew Angry ; whereupon the Senate Arming, called a Parliament of the People, and Constituted a Balia, whereby many Citizens were Banished, and new Imborstation for Choice of Officers made. Amongst the Banished were almost all the Alberti: there were likewife many of the Mechanicks admonifhed, and put to Death; whereupon, incenfed by fo The Rab-many Injuries, the Multitude rook Arms, Arms, that they might no longer behold their Honours and Lives thus taken away. Part of them came into the Piazza, and another part flockt to the Houfe of Meffer Veri de Medici, who, after the death of Silvester, remained Head of that Family: to those which came into the Piazza, the Lords, to hull them alleep, gave them for their Heads [with the Enligns of the Guelphs, and the People in their hands Meffer Rinaldo Gianfigliazzo, and Messer Donato Acciaivoli, men above any other of the popular Party, Eee grate-grateful to the Plebeians. Those who went to the Houfe of Veri de Medici, beg'd, He would be pleafed to accept the Government. and free them from the Tyranny of those Citizens, who were Deftroyers of all Good men, and perverters of the Common--weal. 'All that have made any Record of these Times agree, that had Messer Vori been as Ambitious as he was Good, he might in this Conjuncture, without any blndrance, have made himfelf Prince of the City: For the heavy loads, that were right or wrong, laid upon the Inferiour Mecha-'nicks, and their Friends; had fo enflamed their Souls to Revenge, that they wanted mothing to fatishe their defires, but a Head to Lead them: Nor wanted there fome to put Meffer Veri in mind what he might do; for Antonio de Medici, who had long before had some particular Animolities against him, advised him to accept of the Dominion of the City, to which Meffer Veri, made Answer, As thy Threatnings, when my Enemy, made me not afraid ; neither (hull - thy Counfels, as my Friend, abuse me. And 'turning towards the Multitude, he exhorted them to be of good-heart, for he would be their Defender, if they would be advised by him : And going in the midit of them into the Piazza, and from thence, up the Palace to the Lords, he spoke to them in this manner : Ibat be bad no reafon to be troubled, that be had lived in fuch a manner that the People of Elurence loved him; but it

Book HI. of Florence.

ł

it grieved bim, that they had an opinion of bim which his past life bad not deserved : for, bouing never made appear any symptoms of being Factions or Ambitions, be knew not from whence is proceeded, that they foould imagine him a fomenter of Sedition, like an Unquies max, or an Unrper of Government, as one Ambitions. He therefore prayed their Lordhips, Ibat the Ignorance of the Multitude bould not be imputed as a Crime to bim., for that he had, as far as possible be could, brought them under their Power: Remembring them withal, That they found use their Fortune moderately, and rather choose a small Victory with the Jafety of the City than an intere one with its Ruine. Mosser Veri was prayed by the Lords, and exhorted to make them lay down their Arms, and that afterwards they would not fail to do what He and other Citizens should advise them : Upon which, returning to the Piazza, and his Brigade being joyned with thole led by Molfer Rinaldo, and Meller Donato, he told them, all : That be bad found in the Lords an excellent disposition to do them good; that mamy things had been spoken of to that purpose, but by reason of the portness of the time; and the .absence of the . Magistrates could not yet be concluded. In the mean time he prayed them to Lay down their Arms, and Obey the Lords: giving them bis word, that Gentlones, rather than Pride, and Prayers rather than Ibreats would move them, and that they Rould not mant either Honour or Safety, if ibey Eee 2

they would be rul'd by him. Infomuch, that upon his word they all returned to their Houses. Arms thus by them laid down. the Signory first Armed the Piazza, and then lifted Two thousand Citizens faithful to the State, and divided them equally under Banners; giving Command, that they fhould be in a readinefs, whenever they were called to their Allistance, and forbidding all that were not Lifted to Arm themfelves. These Preparations made, they Confined, Banished, and put to Death many of the Mechanicks, of those who had shewed themselves forwardest in the last Tumult. And, because the Gonfaloniere of Justice fhould have more Majesty and Reputation, they ordered, That none under 45 years of Age should exercise that Office. To fortifie the State, they likewife made other provisions, insupportable to those against whom they were enacted, and by all ho-/ neft Citizens, even of their own Party, abhorred; for they judged no State fafe or fecure, that was to be defended with fo much Violence. And, not only those of the Alberti, who remained in the City, but "the Medici, who lookt upon themfelves as Deceivers of the People; and many others, were extreamly afflicted at it. And the first that fought to oppose it was Meffer Donato di Jacopo Acciaivoli, This Gentleman, though he were very Great in the City, and rather Superiour than Companion to Meffer Majo Albizi; who for the things

Book III. of Florence. 69. things done in the time of his being Gonfaloniere, was lookt upon as it were, Head of . the Republick, could not live well Grished among fo many Male-contents, nor make (as many do) a private Benefit of the publick Damage; he therefore determined to make tryal if he could reftore the Exiles to their Country, or at least, the Admonished to . their Degrees. And he went about while pering in the Ears of feveral Citizens, this his Opinion; demonstrating how there was no other way to quiet the People, and . purge the humours of the Factions; Nor stayed he for any thing, but to be drawn for one of the Lords to put this his deliberation in practice: And, because in all our Gions Delay feems tedious, and Haite is dangerous, he grew inclinable to avoid tedioufness to hazard the danger. There were of the Lords, Michael Acciaivoli his Confort, and Nicholas Ricoveri his Friend : Whereupon Meffer Donato thought, that having fuch an Opportunity he ought not to lofe it, but defired them to propole a Law to the Councils containing the Reltitution of the Citizens; they perfwaded by him spoke to their Companions, by vvhom they were Answered, That they were not to propole new things vvherein the Success was dubious, and the Danger certain. Whereupon Meffer Donato having tirth in vain tryed all other vvaies, told them in Anger, That fince they would not accept the offer made, to Reform the City quietly, it il.ould be Eee 3 do c done by Arms. Thefe Words to much difpleafed them, that Communicating them to the Heads of the Government, Meffer Donato vivas Cited, and appearing, was by those, by whom he had delivered the Embaffy, Convicted, and thereupon Confilied to Barretta. Alamah, and Anthony Medici, with all of that Family defcended from Meffer Alaman, were likewife Banishied; together with many ignoble Mechanicks, Bur of Credit among the People! which things happened two years after the Govern-" ment had been Controuled by Meffer Mafor The City being in this politire, with many Male-contents vvithin, and many Banilled men abroad, there happened to be among the Exiles at Bolonia, Picchio Caviccialli, Thomas de Ricci, Antonio de Me-dici, Bennet Spini, Anthony Girolami, Chri-stopher Carlone, vvitti two other of mean Condition, all Young men, Couragious, and ready to Attempt any thing to return into their own Country: to them fecret Intelligence vvas given by Piggitho, and Baronio Caviccinli, vvho lived Admonified in Florence, That if they would come into. the City, they would privity receive them into their Houles, from vvhence, making a Sally, they might kill Maso de Albizi, and call the People to Arms; vvho being difcontented, vvould be ready to take the Alarum, especially, fince they knew they should be seconded by the Ricci, Adnicari, Medici, Mannelli, and many other Familyes. Hartned with this ho- some of the Bandiper, on the fourth of August, 1397, they is mer came into Florence, and being privily en- Florence. tred, as they were appointed, They lent a-."197. bout to observe Messer Maso, refolving with his death to begin the Tumult ; Meffer Majo comes out of his House, and stopsar. an Apothecaries, neer great St. Peters: Corfa, who had the Charge of watching him, informes the Confpirators, who prefently. taking Arms, came to the place, but he was gone. However, not daynted for having failed in this first defign, they turned towards the old Market, and killed one of the Adverse party, and thereupon giving. the Alarm, Cryed out to the people to Armes, Liberty, Liberty; and let the Tyrants. Thence turning towards the new Mar-. dye. ket, at the end of the fireet Calimaza, they flew another; And following with the fame Cryes their way, and none taking Arms, they retreated to the Hall Nighittofa ; where getting on a high place, and having a great multitude about them, who came rather to fee them than to affift them, they cryed out to the People with loud voices to Arm, and free themselves from that Servitude which . was to hateful to them, affirming that the oppression and grief of the Male-contents of the City, rather than any particular Injury dana to themsfelves, had moved them to attempt their Delivery. And that having beard, that many of them prayed to God to give them an apportunity of revenging them slues, which they E ee 4

ny

Book III. of Florence.

Machivel's Millory Book III.

they would be ready to do whenever they had a. Head to lead them, they much woundred that baving now Heads to lead and defend them They stood like men amazed, maiting till these that came to give them Freedom were put to Death , and their flavery red ubled : That it was firange, that they, who upon the Smallest Injury, were wont to fly to their Arms, could now Juffer so many of their Citizens to be Banifbed, and fo many Admonifhed, and not at all be moved when it was in their Power and Arbitriment, to reftore the Exiles to their Country, and the Admonifhed to their Digni-All which words, though true, did ties. not one jot move the Multitude; either because they were Fearful, or because the Death of those two had made the Murtherers odious; So that the Deligners of this Tumult, feeing neither their Words, nor Deeds would move any one of the Multitude, too late perceiving how dangerous it is to ftir up a people to Liberty, who are determined to Serve, defpairing of any fuccefs in their Enterprize, they retreated into the Church of St. Keparata, where they thut themselves up, not to fave their Lives, but delay their Death. The Lords trouble 1 at the first Rumour had Armed, and lock'd up the Palace; but when they heard the bulinefs, and understood who they were that moved this Disturbance, and where they were shut up, they were again well assured, and fent the Captains with many Armed men to take them : So, that without much trouble

Book III. of Florence.

trouble the Church-doors were broke open. and part of them, defending themselves, flain, and part taken ; who being examined, there was none other found guilty, but Barrovio, and Pigiello, Canicciulli, who together with them were put to Death. After this accident fell out one of greater importance... The City had in these Times, as we faid before, Wars with the Duke of Milan, Conference who perceiving open Force did not fuffice to er. oppress it, had recourse to policy, and by the means of fome banifhed Florentimes (of . which all Lombardy was full) contrived a plot, to which many within were privy ; in which it was agreed, That on a certain day. from the places most adjacent to Florence, a great Number of the Banditi, Skil'd inArms, thould by the River Agno enter the City. and running first (accompanied with their -Friends within) to the houses of the Chief Ministers of State, kill them, and Reform the State as they pleafed : Among the Confpirators within was one of the Kieci, called Sammians and as it generally happens in Conspiracies. That a few will not do, and a great many discover it, whilst Semmiato Strove to pick up Companions, he found an Answer; he revealed the matter to Silvefter Cavicintii, whom he thought the Injuries of his Friends would have made faithful; but prefint Fear wrought more upon him then future Hopes, fo that he went and discovered the whole plot to the Lorde ; who cauling Saminiato to be taken, forced him by torments

Book III.

torments to dealare the whole particulars of the defign; but of the Confpirators, not one was taken but Thomas Davis, who coming from Bolonia, not knowing what had happened in Florence, vvas as foon as he Arrived, laid hold on : All thereft, woon the apprehending of Saminiata, affrighted, Saminiato and Thomas punished, acfled cording to their deferts, The Balia of, feveral Citizens was conflituted with Authority, to make Inquisition after Delinquents ... and feaure the state: They made Rebels fix of the Family of Ricci, fix of the Alberti, two of the Medici, three of the Seali, two of the Strozzi, Bindi Altoviti, Barnard, Admiari, and many Trades-men, They Admonifhed like vife all the families of AL berti , Ricci , and Medici , for ten years, excepting fome fevr of them : and among those of the Alberti, Messer Antonio was not Admonished', being looked upon as a Peacable man. It happened, that the fear and jealoufie of this Plot not being yet quite blown over, there was a Monk taken, who had been observed, whilf the Confpinators were contriving, their Bulineffes to go often to and again from Bolonia to Florence : He Confessed' that he had brought feveral Letters to Meffer Antonio; whereupon he was prefently taken, and though from first to last he denyed it, he was Convicted by the Monk, fined in a Sum of Mony, and Banished to three hundred miles distance from the City, And, because the Alberti

Digitized by GOOGLC

A Balle Conflituted.

Book III. of Florence.

Alberti daily put the State contribuble; thei 1 Banifhed, all of that Ransidy above fifteen years of Age. This Accident The prened in the year 1400 , and two years afterwards 1400. dyed John Galbazzo Duke of Milani winofs) Death ('as we faid before) put amond ref that Was which had lafted inches yours w In which time, the Government having going more Authority, being now without Husmies abroad or at home, made that glotious Antempt upon Bill , which they but they won; " and remained quiet within chunklives rillt the year 1433: Only, in the year 14 partie 1412. Atberti, having broke thele Confinements, a New Balta was fet up against chem, which with new Laws; and Provinensy, Arengther ned the State, and perfocated the albumis with the Sword! About that I dans | Links wife, begun a Wat with Isadotan Thing of Naples, which in the yoay 'salusi ended with King of the life of that King; and the King having Keles. at first in that War the worst of it, yeilded to the Florentines the City of Cortona, of which he was Lord's but a little after, recruiting his Forces, he renewed the War. which proved more dangerous than the first; and had it not ended with his death. as did that with the Duke of Milan, the King had brought Florence in no lefs danger of lofing her Liberty, than did the Duke. Nor did this War with the King end with lefs good Fortune than the other; for, when he had took Rome, Siena, all la Marca, and Romagnia, and wanted nothing but Florence

Florence to open a way for his Forces to march into Lombardy. And thus, Death was to the Florentines a better Friend than any other they had, and more fortunate in faving them than all their Valour. After the death of this King, the City was quiet within and without, for Eight years. At the end of which time, together with a War against Philip Duke of Milan, the Fa-Gions Iprung up anew, and were never appeafed till the ruine of that State, which, from the year 1361, to the year 1434, had reigned, and with fo much Glory waged to many important Wars, adding to their Dominions, Arezzo, Pifa, Cortona, Livorne, and Montepulciano. And greater things had they done if the City had kept themselves United; and had not again firred up the Ancient Humours, as in the next Book shall be more particularly related.

The End of the Third Book.

Digitized by Google

1

THE

FLORENTINE

HISTORY,

Written by

Nicholas Machiavel.

BOOK IV.

T I E S, and effectally those which are well ordered (and whose Administration is, by way of Republick) often alter their State and Government, not 'by distinction of Liberty and Servitude (as many think,) but of Servitude and Licentionsines; for Liberty is only a Name, reverenced indeed by all, but Licentionsines is A a a a the the thing effected by the Chief of the People, and their Servitude fought for by the Nobles: They fall being infected with an Ambition, which would not willingly be Subjected either to the Laws of God or Man. True it is that when there happens (which is very rare) by the good Fortune of a City, that a good, wife, and powerful Citizen attains to the Gommand, who will Ordain fuch Daws as may either quiet (or, at least, restrain from doing Mischief) these Humours in Nobles and People; then fuch a City may be truly called Free, and that Government firm and lafting ; For being formeted an 300 Daws , and found Ordi-nances, there is not to much necessity afterwards of any mans particular Virtue to maintain them. With fuch Laws and Ordinances have many Ancient Commonwealths gwhole Sovernments were longliv'd) been endowed. And fuch Laws and Orders have ever been, and still are, wanting in those who are ever and anon varying their States from Licentious to Tyramical. For in fuch, by reafon of the powerful Friends on one fide, and the other, there can be no fledfafinels; one being appleafant to Good men, and the other to the Wife; one may cafily do Ill, and the other can very hardly do Well; in the one, Infolent men have too much Authority, and in the other, Fools ;, and it is not only requifite, but neceffary, that both the one and the other be maintained by the Virtue or Fortupe E E E

Book IV. of Florence.

Fortune of one man; by whole Death it may either dwindle to nothing, or by his continual Adversity prove unprofitable. fay therefore, that the Government, which in the Year #38#, had beginning (in Florence) from the Death of Meller George Scali, proceeded first from the Valour of Meffer Mafo de gli Albizi, and afterwards by that of Nicholin Unano was maintained. The City lived from the year 1414, to the year 1422, very quietly; for King Ladishave dead, and the State of Lombardy divided into leveral parts, there was nothing, either within or without, of which they food in fear. Next to Niebolas de Uzano, the chief Citizens of Authority were, Bartholemen Valore, Nero Nigi, Meffer Reinald Albizi, Neri di Gino, and Lapo Nicholini. The Factions railed by the Differents be-. tween the Albiziand the Risci, were afterwards with to much Scandal revived by Meffer Silvefter de Medici , that nothing oould suppress or quiet them . And though that which was universally favoured, Ruled only three years, and in the year 1381-was vanquilhed; yet, the greater part of the City being infected with that Humour , it could never guite be extinguished. ?Tis true, That the frequent Parliaments, and the continual Perfectutions of the Heads of it from the year 1981 to 1400, reduced it almost to nothing. The Chief Families which , as Leaders of that Faotion were performed, tweeterthe Alberti, Rieci, and Medici, Aaaa 2

73

Machivel's Hiftory Eogk IV.

Medici, who were more than once spoiled both of their Goods and Men; and if any remained in the City, all Honours were taken from them; which stroaks not only humbled that Party, but in a manner confumed them. Yet there still remained in the minds of men, a memory of the Injuries received, and a define of Revenge : which (because they had not power fuitable to their wills) they kept lockt up in their Those popular Nobles, who peacbreafts. ably Governed the City, committed two Errours which were the ruine of their Government : First, That by a continuance of Rule they grew Proud and Infolent ; and the Second, That by reason of the Envy they bore one another, and, for having had too long possession of the State, they begun to grow Negligent, and not have that watchful Care over those who might offend them, as they ought: they therefore, by their Corrupt Manners, daily reviving the Hate of the People, and not watching after new Seditions because they did not fear them, or fomenting them by the Envy they '. bore each other, the Family of the Medica came to regain Authority. The first among whom, that began to rife again, was John di Ricci. This man having poffessed himfelf of great Riches, and being Naturally Courteous and Liberal, by Conceffion of those which Governed, was advanced to the Supream Magistracy; which was by the Publick received with to much joy, the

of Florence. Book IV.

the Multitude thinking they had now got a Defender, that the wileft and most prudent were (not without caule) jealous of it, because they faw the Ancient Hymours again begin to take life : Nor was Nicholas Uzane wanting to advertife of it the other Citizens, representing to them how dangerous it was to cherish one of so universal a Reputation, and that it was easie to grush Dif. orders in the Egg, but hard remedying them when they were full batcht and flown. That he knew John had many parts and endowments superiour to Silvester : but Nicholas was not at all listned to by his Equals, who envyed his Reputation, and defired rather some Allistance to depress him. These Humours thus set a working in Florence, and fecretly gathering to a Head, Philip Visconti, fecond Son of John Philip Vis-Galeazzo, being by his Brothers death be- Duke come Lord of all Lombardy, and imagining feeks himfelf able enough for the Attempt, he Peace had a mighty delire to make himfelf Lord with the of Genoua, which now under the Dukedome of Messer Thomas de Campo Fregoso, lived free; but he was somewhat distrustful of bringing that, or any other Enterprize to perfection, if he first concluded not a new League with the Florentines, the Reputation of which only he thought would be sufficient to procure his fatisfaction. He therefore fends his Ambatfadours to Florence to demand it. Many Citizens were of Advice not to grant it (who yet wished Aaaa 3 a

Digitized by Google

5

Machivel's Hiftory Ecck IV.

- 20 5

a continuance of that Peace which had for many years been maintained betwixt them) for they knew the Advantage and reputation, would accrue to him by it, wh.lft the City reaped little or no benefit; others were of opinion to grant a new League, and in it impose such Conditions upon him, that if he paffed them, his evil intentions might be discovered, and they (if he should break the Peace) more justly make War against him; but however things were argued, a Peace was concluded, whereby Philip promifed, not to concern himfelf in any thing on this fide Pannars or the river Magra. This accord made, Philip takes Brefchia, and foon after Geneva, contrary to their opinion who in Florence had advifed the Peace : for all men thought Breschia would be defended by the Venetians, and that Genova would defend it felf. And because in the Agreement made by Philip with the Duke of Genova, he had referved Serazama and fome other Towns on this fide the Magra, with Covenant, That whenever he would alienate them, he should be obliged to sell them to the Genovefe: Philip by this means had violated the Peace, and he had belides entred into League with the Legat of Bolonia: which matters very much angred our Citizens: And made them (doubtful of New Mischiefs) prepare New Remedies. Which diffurbances coming to Philips Knowledg, he fends Ambaffadors to Florence, either to justify himself, or to make an effay of the Florentines

Digitized by Google

He takes Brefichia and Geneva

1

6

And violates his Peace with Florence:

i.

Book IV. of Florence,

Florentines defignior elfe, to luil them in Secarity;pretending to be furprized at the Jealoufies they had of him, and offering to renounce any thing done by him, that might beget

the least sufpicion. Which Ambaffadours, the City did nothing elfe but divide the City for one divided. part (and those the men of most Reputation in the State), judged it convenient to Arm, and be in a readinefs, to counter any defignes of the Enemy, for when these preparations were made, if Philip remained quiet, War was not begun but Peace provided for : but others, out of envy to those that governed, or fearful of the War, were of opinion they ought not to fulpect a Friend too lightly nor had he done any thing deferving to much Jealousy. But they knew very well that the creating the ten, and the hiring Souldiers, was bidding defiance to le great a Prince to the ruin of the City, without any hopes of advantage; it being unpossible for us, whilst Romania lay between to become Lords of any thing we fhould conquer, and, we not being in a Condition to attempt any thing on Romania, because of the Neighbour-Hood of the Church. However their Authority who were for preparation of War, prevailed o- They pre-ver theirs who were for a fullen peace, and War. they created the Ten, listed Souldiers, and levyed new Taxes. Which because they were laid heavier on the Inferiour People than the wealthier Citizens, filled the City full of heart-burnings, and every one condemned Aaaa 4

ł.

Machivel's Hiftory Book IV.

demned the power and Ambition of the great ones, acculing them that to latisfy their own appetites, and to oppress and Do-mineer over the People, They had raised an unneceffary War. They were not yet come to an open breach with the Duke, but affaires stood in a very ticklish posture, for the Duke at the request of the Legat of Bolonia (who stood in fear of Messer Antonio Bentivoglio who being driven out of the City held a Caftle of Bolonia) had fent fome of his forces thither, which bordering on the Dominions of Florence, made that state jealous of the intent, but that which startled every one, and became the greatest occasion of the War, was the Dukes expedition to Furli. George Ordelaffi was Lord of Furli, who dying left Theobald his Son under Guardianship of Philip: And (though the Mother jealous of fuch a Guardian) had fent him to Lemis Alidoffo, Lord of Impla, her Father; yet the was forced by the people of Imola, to perform the Will of the Dead, and to relign him again into the hands of the Duke; whereupon, Philip, to give the less suspition, and better conceal his intentions, commanded the Marquels of Ferrara, to fend Guido Torella with a competency of forces to take (as his Deputy) possession of the Government of Fur-is, and thus fell that Town into Philips power; which Wars when (together with the fending forces to Bolonia) it came to be knownat Florence, facilitated the Determinations nations of War, though ftill they found great oppolition, and Juhn de Medici publickly difwaded them: urging that though they were . eettain of the Dukes ill intentions, yet were it better to ftay till he gave the affault, then first to attempt him; for in that cale the War would, in the judgment of the Princes of Italy, be as juditable on the Dukes part asours: Nor could they fo reafonably demand those Amiliances, which otherwise they might, if his ambition were first dilcovered ; and that, with other Hearts, and other Forces (hould they detend their own then other mens. The other Party alleadged, That it was folly to stay for an Enemy in their own Houles, but bravery to go meet him ; that Fortune is kinder to the Affailer than the Defender ; and that the damage would be lefs (though the charge might be greater) to make their Enemies Country the Seat of War, than their own. Whereupon this opinion prevailed, and it was determined, That the Council of Ten frould use all possible means to redeem the City of Furli out of the Dukes hands. Philip feeing that the Florentines would fristch' from him those things he had undertaken to defend, laying alide all Respects, fent Agnolo of Pergola with the body of an Army to India, to the end, that that Lord being buffed in his own Defence, might not be at leifure to fuecour his Nephew. And Agnold coming mear Inola, whilit the Florentine Forces were yet at Madigliana, the Seafon Seafon being fo wharp, that the Ditches of the City were frozen, he one night took the Town, and fent Lewis prifener to Mi-The Florentines seeing Imola lost, and lan. the War broke out, fent their Army to Furli, who laid Siege to the City, and streightned it on all fides. And because the Dukes Forces (hould not unite to relieve it. they had taken into Pay Count Alberigho. who. from the Town of Zoganara, overrun the whole Country as far as Imola. Agnolo of Pergola, feeing he could not fe-curely relieve Friuli, our Forces had fo ftrongly begirt it, refolves to attach Zoganara; judging, That the Florentines would not let him take that Town, and if they would relieve it, they must raise their Siege before Furli, and with some difadvantage come to a Battle. He therefore constrained Duke Alberigho's men to come to Conditions, Ibat if they were not in fifteen daies relieved by the Horentines, they would furrender. This News foon arrived both to the Florentine Camp, and City; and every one being defirous the Enemy should not carry away fuch a Victory, became the Occalion of their gaining a much greater : For the Camp raifed from before Furli to relieve Zoganara, almost as soon as they came to engage with the Dukes Forces, were routed, not fo much by the Valour of their Enemies, as by the Bitterness of the weather; for ours having marched for feveral hours in very deep dirt, and through violent

Digitized by Google

The Plan rentines totally routed, Book IV.

of Florence.

lent Rains, came wet and weary to encounter a fresh Enemy, that easily overcame them. Yet in fo great a Discompture, famous throughout all Italy, died no more but Signior Ladovico Albizi, and two more of his pecple, who falling off their Horfes were strangled in the Mud. The whole City of Florence was infinitely afflicted at the News of this Defeat, but principally those Great men who had advised the War, who now beheld their Enemies frong, and ... themselves difarmed, destitute of Friends, and the People averse to them, and in all places with bitter and reproachful words reviling them, complaining of their heavy Taxes laid on them to make a War without caufe, and uttering fuch Taunts as thefe: What did they only create the Ten to fright The Peethe Enemy? How bravely they have relie- ple mure ved Furli, and refcued it out of the Dukes mur. hands? Its apparent now what their Arms and Determinations were; not to defend our Liberty, which is indeed their Enemy, but to increase their own Power, which God has justly diminished. Nor is this the only Enterprize for which they have burthened the City, for (belides many others) that against King Ladislaus was just like it. Whither will they now fly for help? to Pope Martin, harraffed by them for Braccio's fake? to Queen Joan, whom by abandoning they have forced to caft her felf into the arms of the King of Arragon ? With many other scoffing Expressions, usual with 28

Machivel's Hiftery Book IV.

an Angry people : Wherefore the Lords thought convenient to assemble many of the Citizens, who by good words might quiet these Commotions of the Multitude: to whom Meffer Rinaldo de Albigi (the eldeft Son of Meffer Majo, who by his own virtue, and the memory of his Father, afbired to the Chief Degrees in the City) foke at large : Remonstrating, Ibat it was not prudence to judge of things by the Effects, for many times things well advised meet with croß Events, and things ill advised succeeds but if ill Counfel were praifed for its Success, it would be an oncouragement to Errour and prove very burtful to b Commonwealth because Evil Counsels are seldome bappy. So likewife should we blame a prudent Undertaking, because it had not a joyful Event, me fould discountenance Citizens, and make them unwilling to freak what they think. Then he explained to them the necessity of undertaking the War, and that if it had not been carryed into Komania, it would have been brought into Tofcany : but fince it was the will of God their Aimy was defeated, the loss would be the heavier, the more that they forfook it. But if they would turn their faces to ortune, and apply those Remedies they might, they would neither be very sensible of the Loss, nor the Duke of the Victory. And that they fhould not be caft down at the future Charge and Taxes; for that the former being rationally to grow lefs, the Burthen of the latter

Book IV. of Florence.

latter would be much eafed, for that fewer preparations may ferve for Defence than Offence. In the end, He exhorted them to imitate their Fathers, whole minds no Adverfity being able to daunt, they had ever defended themfelves against what Prince foever. Upon which, the Citizens perswaded by his Authority, entertained Count Odo, Count Odo the Son of Braccio, into their pay, giving Braccio, him for Superintendent or Governour, Ni- calentaincholas Piccinnio a Fosterer Braccio's, and Florentine, of the greatest Reputation of any man that ever fought under his Colours, to whom they joyned many other Leaders, and moun-ted again many of their own men that had loft their Horfes. They appointed likewife Twenty Citizens to levy a new Tax, who taking heart upon perceiving, how much the Great men were cast down for the last Defeat, laid it on them without any manner of refpect. This Oppression grievoufly offended the Principal Citizens, who at first were so Civil as to bear their load without much Repining; but when the Injustice of it began to be generally complained of; they began to confult how to eafe themfelves; which coming to the knowledge of many, the Councils nor only obfiructed it; whereupon they, to make the bitternels and hardihip of it be more effe-Qually felt, and to render it more odious, ordered the Exactors of it, with all Severity, to collect it, giving authority to kill any one that thould oppole the Publick Ser-

13

Sergeants. From whence happened many difmal. Accidents; as, the flaying and wounding feveral Citizens : So that many feared things would have come to Blood. and every prudent man dreaded fome future Evil; the great men (ulcd to be Respected) not able to endure, being thus trampled on, and others defirous that every one should be equally Charged. Wherefore many of the Chief Citizens confulted together, and concluded it negaffary to refume the Go-vernment, for that their want of Diligence and Care had given men Courage to reprove publick Acts, and encreafed the boldnels of those who used to be Heads of. th P lebeians. And, after feveral times difcourling thefe things among themfelves, they refolved upon a fudden meeting all together, and affembled in the Church of St. Stephen more than Seventy Citizens, by the leave of Meffer Ridolfi di Fidi, and France Gianfigliazzi, who then fat as Lords. John de Medici met not with them, either because he was not Summoned (they being jealous of him) or, because he would not (differing from them in Judgment) meet. Meffer Kinaldo de Albizi spoke to them all, and fet forth the flate of the City, and how by their Negligence it was returned into the power of the Plebeians, from whom it had, in the year 1381 been delivered by their Fathers. He put them in mind of the wickedness of that Government, which Ruled from 1377 to 80, and that by

Digitized by Google

Speech of Rinaldo de

Book IV, of Florence.

by it, there were none there prefent but had either a Father or a Grandfather flain; how they were falling into the like Dangers, and the City relapsing into the like Diforders; for the Multitude had already laid a Tax at their own pleasure, and would ere long (if not by Force, or Law restrained) create Magistrates at their own Arbitriment, whereby one Party would live licentioufly, and the other in danger, or under the Tyranny of fome one whom they fhould make Prince. Thereupon affirming, that every one who loved his Country, or his Honour, ought to refent it, and call to mind the Valour of Bardi Mancini, who redeemed, with the ruine of the Alberti, the City out of those dangers that then encompassed it: and fince, the occasion of this boldness affumed by the People, proceeded from the numerous Squittini, or Imborfations, by the Negligence of those that ordered the Purfes, whereby the Palace became tilled with new and Rafcally Fellows, he concluded there was no other way to remedy it, but by refloring the Government to the Grandees, and taking away the Authority of the Inferiour Arts, reducing the Fourteen Companies to Seven, whereby the Flebeians would have less power in the Councils, as well becaufe their Numbers would be diminished, as because the Authorities of the Grandees would be augmented, who out of their ancient Malice would still hate them: Affirming it an act of of Phildence to know how to make use of Men, according to different Occasions; for If their Fathers had made use of the Plebrians to root out the Infolence of the Grandees, now the Grandees were grown Humble, and the Plebeians Infolent, it were haft to bridle their Infolence with the help of those. And that this buliness might be mataged either by Policy or Power, to either of which they might have easile recourse; for fome of them being of the Magiffrates of the Itn, might, without much difficulty, bring Forces privily into the City. Meffer Binaldo was praifed, and his Counfel approved by every Body. And Niebolis Urano among others faid, That all that had been spoken by Messer Rinaldo was true, and the Remedies good and certain, provided they might be applyed without manifest Division of the City, which would follow of it felf if they would draw John de Medici to theit Party; for he concurring with them, the powers of the Multitude being without a Head, could do no great Injury; but without his concurrence there was no effecting it but by Arms, which he thought havardous, both becaufe they might not over-come, or if they did, might not enjoy their Victory modefly; refrelling their memories with their own past Records, and how they would not, when they might with eale have done. it, remedy these Inconveniences whereas now, there was no way left of doing it (without hazard of greater danger) but but by gaining him. Commillion was therefore given to Meffer Rinaldo to confer with John, and endeavour to prevail with him to joyn with them: The Gentleman performed his Commission, and in the most obliging terms he could invent, exhorted him to be Affistant to them in this Enterprize, and not by favouring a Multitude increase their boldness, to the ruine of the Government and of the City. To which John John do Answered, That he believed it the Office Medici's of a wife and good Citizen, not to alter the Rinaldo accultomed and usual Orders of the City, Albiri. there being nothing exposes men more than the Change of them; for those variations mult offend many, and where numbers are discontented, ill Accidents may well be daily teared. That in bis Opinion this defign of theirs was in two things very pernietens t First, By the giving Honours to those who baving never had them will ofteom them los, and net baving them have les reason to complain ; And the other, By taking them from shofe who being accultamed to enjoy them, will never be at reft till they get them reftored. And thus, the injury down to one Party mill feem much greater than the benefit done to the other : le that the Authors of it will gain but few Friends , and many Enemies ; and the latter will be much more ready to injure them, than the others to defend them. Men being naturally more prane to revenge Injuries than requite Kindneffes, becaufe this bringe Damage mith it, and the other Pleasure and Profit. Then

Book IV.

Then particularly addressing himself to Meffer Kinaldo ; And you (faid he) bad you well weighed the Events of things, and under what vizards of Deceit men wilk in this City, would not be fo bot in the determination; for whoever Counfels you to it, when with your Power they have taken away the Authority from the People, will with their affiitance, whom you mutby such an injury make your Enemies, take away yours from And it will bappen to you as it did to ¥0K. Meffer Bennet Alberti, wb) confented by perfrontion of those, who bid us kindness for bim, to the ruine of George Scali, and Thomas Strozzi. and foon after mis by those very people that had perfreaded bim to it, fent into Banish nent. He therefore exhorted him to a more mature deliberation of the Matter, and that he would imitate his Father, who having gained an univerful Reputation with the People, flighted the malignant tempers of the few. He therefore advised, That vyhoever had lefs than half a Florins Tax to pay, should be left to his own Choice to pay or no: And, that on the daies the Counall affembled, every man should be secure from his Creditors; Concluding, that for his part he vyould leave their City in the Order he found it. These things being reported abroad, gained John Reputation, and contracted a general Hate upon the other Citizens, from vvhole Converlation he utterly vvithdrew himself, least he should give them encouragement under his Countenance

Book IV.

of Florence.

· tenance to contrive Novelties; and in his Difcourfes he every vyhere explained himfelf as a man defigning not to foment Sedition, but extirpate it; and had no other intent but to promote, as far as in him lay, the Union of the City. At vvhich, many of his Followers vvere discontented, vvifhing that he vvould rather in matters of this nature appear more brisk and lively: Among vyhom vvas Aleman Medices, vyho being naturally fierce, continually incenfed him to the perfecution of his Encmics, and favouring his Friends, condemning his coldnefs and deliberate vvay of proceeding, vvhich he urged as the Reafon, made his Enemies vvithout any respect Conspire against him, vvhich Contrivances of them vvould one day come to be the ruine of him and his Friends. His Son Colmo urged him likewife to the fame things; but John vvould not be moved by any Difcoveries or Prognoffications, from his fetled Refolves: howvever the Faction vvas already knovvn every vvhere, and the City in open Division. There were in the Palace, attending the Lords, two Cancellieres, or Secretaries, one called Mr. Martin, the other Mr. Pagolo. The last favoured the Faction of Uzino, and the first that of Medices: And Meffer Rinaldo (feeing John vvould not agree with them) thought it convenient to get Martin removed from his Office, thinking thereby to have the Court more favourable; but the Adversaries getting Intelligence telligence of it, Martin was not only defended. but Pagolo turned out, to the great rearet and difpleafure of his Party; which had foon produced dire effects, had it not been for the War that hung over the City, then extreamly terrified at the Defeat of Zagonara : for whill thefe things were bandied within, Agnolo of Pergola had taken all the Towns possessed by the Florentines in Romagnia, (except Castracazo and Modiglia) fome of the places being but weak, and others ill Guarded. In the taking of which places happened two things, by which may be known how much Valour is effected even in an Enemy, and baseness and Cowardize despised. Braggio del Milano was Governour of the Rock of Monte Petrofe. who, when the Enemy had fet fire round about him, and that he faw no way to fave the Fortress, he threw down Beds and Houthold-fluff from that part above, which had not yet taken fire, and upon them caft down his little Children, crying out to his Enemies: Here, take the fe goods which Forsune bas given me, and which you may bereave me of ; but the Goods of my Mind, where glory and bonour refide. I will neither give you, nor can you force them from me. The Enemy upon this prefently ran to fave the Children, and brought him Ropes and Ladders to fave himfelf, but he would not accept them, choosing rather to die in the midft of the flames, than live by the favour of the Enemies of his Country. An Example

19

Digitized by Google

Bramples of the e. Reem of Valour, and contempt of Cowatdize, ple worthy of often pralfed Antiquity, and to much the more wonderful because now more rare. His very Enemies reflored to his Children all that could be faved, and with great Care fent them to their Kindred; nor was the Commonwealth lefs kind to them, for vvhile they lived; they were maintained at publick Charge. The contrary to this happened in Galeata, where Zanobi del Pino was Podețià, or Mayor, who vvithout any Defence furrendred the Fortrefs to the Enemy, and to compleat his Villany, advised Agnolo to leave the Alps of Romania, and come among the little Hills of Toscany, where he might make War with lefs hazard, and more gain. Agnolo, who would not endure the baseness and treachery of this mans Soul, delivered him up as a Prey to his vilet Servants, who,after many Scorfs and taunts, gave him nothing to eat but Paper painted with Snakes and Serpents; telling him, That by that diet they would make him, from Guelph turn Gbibelline; so that, pining and languish-ing, in few dayes he dyed. Mean while Count Oddo, and Nicholas Piecissino were got into the Vale of Lamona, to try to reduce the Lord of Faenza to the Worentine's fide, or at least hinder Agnolo of Pergams from making farther Inroads in Romagnia : But that Valley being ftrong, and the Inhabitants all bred Souldrers, they dew od flain. Odo, and carryed Nicholus Piccinino prifoner and Picto Faenza. But Fortune pleafed that the forer. B b b b Flo-Florentines should gain that, by being overcome, which pollibly had they been Conquerours, they had not obtained; for Nicholar vvrought fo with the Lord of Faenza, that he made them become friends to Florence; by which Agreement Nicholas was fet free, but could not himfelf follow that Counfel he had given to others; for contracting with those Čitizens about his Entertainment, whether the Conditions feemed to him too low, or that he thought he could do better elfewhere. he went from Arezza (where he was in Garrison) into Lombardy and took_ pay of The Florentines terrified at the Duke. this Accident, and daunted with fo great Losses and Expenses, judging themselves no longer able to maintain this War alone, fent Ambaffadors to the Venetians, to defire them (whilft yet with ease they might) to oppole themselves to the growing greatnels of a Man, whom, if they permitted to proceed, would in the end be no lefs pernicious to them than to the Florentines; and Francis Carmignuola, a Man in these times held to be most expert in War, and who had formerly ferved in Armes under the Duke, but was fince rebelled against him, exhorted them to the fame. The Venetians were at first doubtful, not knowing how far they might truft Carmignuola, whose peike with the Duke they feared might be reconciled ; but whils matters ftood thus in suspence, it happened that the Duke.

Google

the Flor

erave Aid of the Vehetians.

ventinis

Duke, by meanes of a fervant of Carmignuola, caufed him to be poisoned: the Poyfon was not ftrong enough to kill him, but reduced him almost to extremity, the occasion of which being discovered, took away all suspicion from the Venetians and the Florentines continuing to folicite them, made a League with them, Every one to make War at their own Charge, and the Acquifitions made in Lombardy to be the Venetians, and those in Romania and Toscany the Florentines; and Carmignuola was made Captain General of the League. By this meanes the War was brought into Lomber- de Genedy, where it was Vigorously profecuted by rai of the Carmignuola, who in few months took many Towns from the Duke, together with the City of Brefcia ; which Conquests were in those Times, and as War was then made. thought wonderful. This War had lasted from 1422 to 27, and the Citizens of Florence were weary of the Taxes as they were hitherto laid, which made them refolve to renew them in another manner: And becaufe they should be proportioned according, they ordered them to be laid upon Stock, and that whoever had a hundred Florines Estate, should pay one half Tax : and the Law and not Men being to distribute it, many Wealthy Citizens were forely grieved: And before it could be determined, it was by them opposed; Only John Medices o-penly commended it, and obtained it, and because in distributing it, they Taxed every Bbbb 2 mans mans flock (which the Florentines call Accaffare) they named this Sax Catafte. This Law in fome measure regulated the Tyranny of the Great men, because they could not how beat the Inferior People, and make them with threats hold their tongues in Councils as formerly. The Tax was therefore univerfally accepted by them, but by the great men with infinite displeasure submitted to. But as it happens, That men are never fatisfied, but having got one thing defire another, so the people not content with the equality of the Tax imposed by Law, they demanded a fearch into times past, and Inquiry to be made what the rich men had paid lefs than the Catafto, and that they should be made to pay so much more to equal them, who to pay what they ought not, had fold their inheritances. This demand flartled men more than the Catafto had done, and they defended themfelves by condemning it as the molt unjust thing in the world, being placed upon moveables, poffeffed to day, and gone to morrow; and that befides, that there were many who had Monies hid, which the Catalto could not find out; to which they added, that those who Governed the Common-wealth, leaving their own bufinefs undone, ought to be , the lefs charged by it; and, that it was not just that the City should have their Labour. Industry, and Mony too; and only the others, Mony. But others who were pleafed with the Catafto Answered. That if Moveables ables varyed, the Taxes might likewife vary, and by varying them often that inconveniency be remedied. And for those who had Monies hid, there was no account to be made; for vvhat they imployed not to benefit, there was no reason should pay. and when once they imployed it, it would be discovered: And if they thought much to employ their times and pains for the Commonwealth, they should give over for enough loving Citizens were to be found. who would willingly affift it with their Mony, and Counfel too. And belides, the Advantages and Honours attending Government were fo great, that they ought to content themselves with them, without expecting to be freed from the burthens. laid on others. But they guest nor where the Shooe pincht; for it grieved them most that they could not wage a Wan without beating a share with others in the Charge. And if this course had been taken before, neither the War with King Idiflau, nor that with Duke Philip had ever been begun, which vvere only made to enrich the Citizens, and not out of Necessity. But these flirring Humours were quieted by Jahre Medices, who alleadged, That it mus not convenient to make a review into past things, Modici enbut to provide well for the future; and if the deavours Taxes had bitberto been unjust, they ought to coprevent a review return thanks to God for finding out now a into patt may to adjust them, and with it might he ra- Iaxes. ther a means to reunite than divide the City; Bbbb 3 which which must needs be if they made an Inquifition into past Imposts, to make them equal with the prefent : that he that is content with a moderate Victory, chooses the better part; for they who would over-de things , often lose With these, and such like Words, he all. quieted thefe Humours, and put a stop to all further Disputes about the Equality. In the mean time, a Peace was with the Duke concluded at Ferrara, by means of the Popes Legate, the Articles of which vvere not at all observed by the Duke: whereupon they of the League again renewed the War, and fighting with the Duke at Maclovio, defeated him. After which discomfiture the Duke made new Proposals of Agreement, to which both the Venetians and Florentines confented : Thefe, because they grew jealous of the Venetians, thinking they fpent too much to make others Great; Those, because they perceived Carmignuola, after the Dukes defeat, proceed very flowly, fo that they ld not well tell how they might longer truft him." Peace was therefore concluded in the year 1428, by vvhich the Florentines were reftored to all the Towns they had loft in Komania, and Brefcia remained in the Venetians hands; and the Duke moreover gave them Bergamo, and the adjoyning Territory. The Florentines fpent in this War 3500000 Ducats, by which the Venetians gained Power and Greatness and they, Poverty and Diffen-Peace being no fooner Concluded tion. abroad, abroad, but the War vvas revived at home : New Divi-For the principal Citizens not able to fuffer former, the Catafto, nor knowing any vvay how to. eafe themfelves of its intollerable burthen. they contrived how to raife up more Enemics against it, that they might have the more force to oppose and suppress it : Declaring to the Officers of the Impolition, that by Law they vvere commanded likewife to make Enquiry into the Towns abroad, fubject to them, and to find out, if there vvere there any Florentines Goods vyhereupon the Subjects were all on appointed dates ordered to bring in Schedules of their Estates. Upon vyhich the Volterans discontented, sent their Complaints to the Senate, which to incenfed the Officers of the Impolitions, that they clapt eighteen of them in prison; vvhich Action enraged the . Volterans, yet out of respect to their Prifoners they for the prefent rebelled not. About this time John de Medices fell fick, and perceiving his diftemper to be mortal, called Cofmo and Laurence his Sons, and told them: I believe the time of Life allot. The ted me at my Birth, by God and Nature, is John Menow almost expired; and I shall die content, dici at his because I leave you Rich, Healthy, and in such a Condition, that you may (if you follow Death. my foot-steps) live bonourably in Florence. and effeemed by all men. Nor is there any thing contributes more to my present satisfaction than the Conscience of never having offended, but rather (to the utmost of my Bbbb 4 power)

23

The Cainfo: a Tax upon evety mans Stock.

Machivel's History Book IV.

Peace concluded with Miglan.

1428.

26

27

Machivel's Hiftory Book IV,

power) pleasured all men : And let me perfreade you to do the like, and (if you would live secure and quiet) to assume no more of the Government, than by the Laws and by Men is given to you, which will never be attended either with Envy or Danger; for it's what men feize by Violence, and not what's freely given them, that creates a Hatred of them. And many there are who out of a Coverous defire of other mens, have lost their ' own Poffeffions, or enjoyed them with Care and Trouble. By observing this Golden Rule have I, (among so many Factions and contrarieties of Opinions) not only maintained, but increafed my reputation in this City; and you, following the same Courses, will find the same effects ; but doing otherwise, you cannot expect your ends to be happier than theirs, whe, in your memory, have undone themselves, and ruined their Families. Soon after he dyed, univerfally lamented by the City, as his excellent Qualities deferved. This John vvas fo remarkably Charitable, that he not only gave Alms when it was asked, but many times prevented the Petitions of the Poor. He loved all men, praising the Good, and pitying the Bad. He never fought after Offices, yet had all conferred on him: He never went to the Palace uncalled for; was a lover of Peace, and a deteller of War; à reliever of men in Adversity, and a supporter of them in Profperity; a firanger to publick Rapine, and a fartherer of Common Good : Courteous he was in his Magistracies,

Book IV.

of Florence.

cies, and though of no great Eloquence, yet of lingular Wildom. He feemed to be of a Melancholy Complexion, but was in Conversation obliging and merry. He died very rich in Treasure, but richer in his Citizens Love and good Report; whole Inheritances, as well of goods of Mind as Fortune, were by his Son Colmo not only preferved, but enlarged. The Voltar, aus were foon weary of Imprilonment, and to procure their Liberty, promifed to comply with whatever was commanded ; Whereupon, being fet free, at their return to Valterra, they found the sime come wherein they were to make Election of new Primes among whom was drawn one Jultur a Plabeian, but of great Credit among the Pcople, and one of those who had been impsifoned in Florence. He incented both for the publick and private Injury received from volterra the Florentimes, (and more particularly, rebels. perfwaded by one Jubn, a Gentleman that fat with him in the Magistracy, who encouraged him, by the favour of the People, and the power of the Prices, to take the City from the Florentines, and make himfelf Prince of it) ranfacked the Town, feized the Florentine Governour, and, with confent of the people, made hunfelf Lord of. it. This Noveley happening in Voltenra much disturbed the Florentines, yet having: made fo late an Agreement with the Duke, they hoped they had time to recover it: And not to, let flip the opportunity, fent imme-immediately Rinaldo Albizi, and Palla Strozzi, as their Commissiries thither Fuftus having reason to suppose the Florensines would affault him, craved Aid of Siena and Lucca. Siena denied him, alleadging, they were in League with Florence; and Paul Guinigi, then Lord of Lucca, to regain the favour of the Florentine, which he doubted to have loft during the War with Millan, not only refused Juftus any Affistance, but sent his Envoy pri-foner to Florence. The Commission mean while, that they might find the Volterrans the more unprovided, speedily drew together their Men at Arms, and in the Neather. Vale of Arno, and Province of Pifa. levyed fufficient Infantry, and marched directly to Volterra. Nor was Justus either upon the refufal of Aid from his Neighbours, or upon the approach of the Florentines to affault him, any whit difinayed, but trusting to the strength of the scituation, and largness of the Town, prepared for his defence. There was in Volterra one Meffer Arcolane, Brother of that John who had perfwaded Justus to feize the Principality, who being of great Credit among the Nobility, gathered together fundry of his Friends and Confidents, and declared to them, How God, by this Accident, had lent his helping hand to the Necessities of the City; for if they would now affent to take Arms, and thrusting Justus from his Lordship, restore the City to the Florentines.

29

tines, they would both themfelves become the Heads of that Town, and preferve all its Ancient Priviledges. Whereupon, agreeing upon the matter, they prefently went to the Palace where Justus relided, and the greater part of them staying below, MeLfer Arcolano, with three more, went into the Hall where he was, and finding him with fome Citizens, drew him apart into a-nother Room, as if they would communicate to him fome matter of importance, and there all falling upon him flew him: Yet were they not so nimble, but that Juftus had time to lay hands on his Sword, and before they could difpatch him, defperately wounded two of them 5' but not able . to deal long with fo many, he was in the end flain, and his Carkals thrown out of the Palace : And those of Arcolane's Party taking Arms; furrendred the City to the Florentine Commiffaries that lay ready at hand with their Forces, who without any farther Capitulations entred the Town, whereby the Volterrans made their Condition much worle than it was before; for,' among other things, they were difmem. bred of most part of their Territories,' which was reduced under a Lieutenancy voltered [] . Thus was Wolferra loft and gained in an in reduced. stant, and no occasion of War had remained, if some particular mens Ambition had not given a being to it. There had for a long time ferved the Florentines, in their Wars against the Duke, one Nicholas Fortebraccio.

braccio, Sifters Son to Bracchio of Perngia. Peace being Concluded, he was difinified by the Florentines, and when the Revolut tion at Volterra happened, was quartered at Fuceebio; whereupon the Commissions thought fit to employ him and his Forces. And it was supposed, that whilst that Affair was in agitation, Rinaldon had perfwaded him, under some pretended quarrel, to affail the Lucchefi, hoping to manage things fo, that the Florentines should own the Attempt, and make him General of the Volterra thus surprized, and Forte-War. braccio returned to his Quarters at Fucecbio, either upon Rinaldo's perswassions, or ha. ving defigned it himfelf, in November 1429. with three hundred Horfe, and three hundred foot, feizes upon Kuoti and Compito, two Castles of the Lucbefi, and so marching forward plundred the whole Country. The News of which was no fooner published in Florence, but the fireets were filled with Committees of all forts, and most withed an Attempt to be made upon Lucca. The Chief Citizens favouring it, were the Medici, and with them joyned Rinaldo, induced to it, either out of hopes it would prove advantagious to his Country ; or, Ambition, prefuming upon the honour of the Victory. Those which disapproved it were °Tis Nicholas de Uzano, and his Party. almost incredible there should be such variety of Opinions in one and the fame City, and that in fo material a point, as making making a War for those Citizens, and that very People, who, after Ten years Peace, had blamed a War against Duke Pbilip, for defence of their Liberty. Now, after such vast Expence, and reducing the City under vast Expence, and reducing the City under fuch loads of Oppression and Necessity, eagerly preffed an Expedition against Lucca, and the invading the Liberties of others; and on the other hand, those who had urged that, opposed this. So firangly variable are the Minds of men, and fo much more ready are the Multitude to feize anothers Right, than defend their own; for hopes of Winning prevails above fear of Loofing; this being never dreaded till it approach, but the other alwaies at a distance hoped for. And the People of Florence were not only fwell'd with the flattering hopes of the Victories which Fortebraccio had, and might obtain, but encouraged by Letters from the Governours adjacent to Lucca: for the Deputies of Pefcia and Vico wrote for leave, to take possession of the Castles offered to be furrendred to them, affuring that almost the whole Territory of Lucea would fubmit. Besides, when the Lord of Lucca sent his Ambassadour to Florence, to complain of the Spoils made by Nicholas, and to intreat the Senate, not to commence a War against their Neighbours, and against a City that had always been their Friend. This Ambassadour was called James Vivian, who had formerly been 'kept Prifoner by Paul Guinigi, Guinigi, Lord of Lucca, for Confpiring against him, and though he were found guilty, had his life spared; and imagining Vivian had forgiven him the Injury, as he had pardoned him his life, he now trufted and employed him; but the memory of the danger he had paffed, prevailed with Meffer Vivian above the benefit received; fo that being now come to Florence, he privily encouraged the Citizens to the War; and his encouragements being fortified with the hopes they had before conceived, made the Senate affemble a Council, wherein appeared 498 Citizens, before whom by the Chief of the City the Matter was debated. Among the first that furthered the Enterprize (as has been faid before) was Meffer Rinaldo, who fet forth the Advantages accruing by the Victory, and the prefent fitness of the opportunity; the Duke and Venetians having deferted them, and the Pope (bufied in the Affairs of the Kingdom) not able to fuccour them. To which he joyned the facility of winning that City, flave to a Citizen of its own, and thereby having lost its Native vigour, and ancient Care to defend its Liberty : So that by means of the People, studying how to drive out the Tyrant, or the Tyrants fear of them, Success was not to be doubted. He likewife laid before them the Injuries that Lord had done their Common-wealth, and how dangerous it were if the Pope or Duke should renew the War: Concluding of Florence. Book IV.

Digitized by Google

Debates about a Way with Lanca

33

Digitized by Google

chuding, that never any undertaking of the Florentine people was either more Eafv. more Advantagious, or more just. In opposition to which Opinion, Nicholas Da Uzzano flood forth and faid; That the City of Florence never undertook a more unjust nor a more hazardous Enterprize; for in the first place they wounded themselves by wounding a City of the Guelph faction, which had alwayes been most affectionate to Florence, and which with danger to it felf, had received into its Sanctuary the banifhed Guelfes, that durst not abide their own Country: Nor was there any Record to be produced, That Lucca whilft free had ever offended Florence; but if those which had enflaved her had done it, as first Castruccio, and now the prefent Lord, the blame was to be laid on the Tyrant and not the City. If therefore they would make War against the Tyrant, without waging it against the Citizens, it would be much more reasonable; but fince that could not be, he would never confent to the spoiling and facking of a City that had ever been their Friend : however, fince Right and Wrong are things which now a daies were made no account of, he would urge them no farther, and only confult of the Advantages our City might pollibly gain by this at-Whereupon his opinion was, That tempt. those things only could be properly called Advantagious, which were not probably liable to lofs and damage, and therefore he could

36

could not understand how any would reafomably texts that Enterprize advantagious. where the Lofs was certain, and the Profit doubtful : that certain loss would be the wast Charges attending fuch an Enterprize, which feemed to great that they were enough to terrifie any peaceable City, much more ours tired and harraffed with tedious War : The Advantages proposed, would be the adding Lucca to our Dominion, which he confessed would be great, but the doubts of fuccefs were to Numerous, that the acquilition to him feemed impossible; Nor could it onter into his belief that either Duke Philip, or the Venetians, would be pleafed with it; for the last appeared only to confent that they might not appear ingratefull, having lately with the Florentines Mony won to great a Dominion, and the other would rejoyce to fee us by a new War expoled to the Expence of more Treasure; So that dreined at once of our Men and Mony, we might be, by him, the cafier infested : Nor would he at any time, even in the height of the Enterprize, and in our highest hopes of Victory, want meanes to fend relief to the Lucebefi, either covertly with Mony, or by pretended difmitting his Troopes, and fending them like Souldiers of fortune to their allifance. He exhorted them therefore to wave the Enterprize, and Study fuch a manner of living with the Tyrant as they might be able to suppress their Enemies by themfelves; for there was no readier readier way to fubdue them, than letting. them still live under the Tyrant, to be by him opprefied and weakned; and by prudent management it might be effected. That the Tyrant no longer able to maintain his power, aor they knowing how to Govern of themselves, must of necessity fall under our Protection. But the oppolite humours having got the predominancy, he perceived his Advise not at all listned to, yet he would take upon him the freedom of Prognosticating, That they would ruth upon a War of certain and great expence, attended with many dangers within, and inficad of poffelling themselves of Lucca, free it from the Tyrants yoak, and from a weak and enflaved City, not only fet them at Liberty, but engage their Enmity, and create to them-felves in time, an obfacle to the growing greatness of the Republique. Thus was this defign controverted, till at laft, as is ulual in luch cafes, they fought privately to War with gain Voices, fo that in the up-fhot there ap- foived on. peared of the whole Number only 98 Diffenters; whereupon War was determined; a Councel of Ten Created to manage it, and Horfe and Foot ordered to be levied. Aftorre Gianni, and Rinaldo Albizi were appointed Generals; and it was agreed, That Nicholas Fortebrace funded have the governmont of the places he had taken, he ftill profecuting the War under our pay. The Generals with their Army being arrived in the Territories of Lucca, divided their For-Cccc ces:

37

ces: Afterre marched down into the Plain towards Camagiore', and Pietrafanta, and Rinaldo with his Party went up into the Mountains, judging that the whole Country vvafted, the City would be eafily fubdued. This action proved unfortunate, not but that they furprized many Tovvns, but because there were great defects in the Ma-nagement of both Generals. And most certain it is Afterre Gianni contributed much to his own dithonour. There is neer Pietra-Santa a Vale called Seravesza, rich and full of inhabitants, vvho hearing the General was coming towards them, went to meet him, and submitting themselves, defired to be received as faithful Subjects of the Florenting people: Aftorre made thew of accepting their fubmilion, but afterwards with his Souldiers feizing all the Paffes and Fortreffes of the Valley, he caufed all the men to affemble in their principal Church, where he took them all Prifoners, and then facked and spoiled the whole Country, not fparing the Confecrate places; but in a cruel and avaritious manner, robbing the Churches, and vvithout refpect, abufing both Virgins and married Women. These barbarous proceedings were no fooner related in Florence, but the whole City, as well as the Magistracy were offended at them; for some of the Serrayezi who had escaped out of the Generals hands, fled to Florence, and in every Street, and in every Market place, filled the Ears of the People

The ill management of the Florestine Genetals.

Book IV.

F

People with the relations of their Miferies: Infomuch, that encouraged by many Citizens, who were defirous to have the General punished, either because they indeed thought him a wicked Man, or because he was contrary to their Faction', they vvent before the Council of Ten, and demanded , Audience; to which, being admitted, one of them spake in this manner : "We are The Com-" very well affured (most Mighty Lords) plains of " that your Lordihips would afford both www. " belief and Compation to what vve have " now to utter, did you know in vvhat " manner your General has used our Coun-" try, and how cruelly we have been treat-" cd by him. Our Vale (as may be found "at large in your Records) was alwaies " Gmelpb, and has been a faithful Sanctuary " of your Citizens, when perfecuted by the "Gbibellines they fled thither for fhelter: " And our Ancestours have ever had in a-"doration the Name of this Noble Com-" monwealth, as the Heads of that Sect. "Whilft the Lucebesi were Guelphs, we " willingly fubmitted to their Rule; but " fince a Tyrant usurped over them, and " they deferting their Old Friends, inclined " to the Gbibelline Party, we have rather. " by force than good-will paid them Obe-"dience. God knows how often we have " prayed for an opportunity to tetlifie our " zeal to the Ancient Caufe and Party. But " how blind are men in their defires? what "vve coveted for our Safety, is become our Cccç 2 Ruine :

39

Machivel's Hiftory

Book IV.

"Ruine: For no fooner heard we that your " Enfigns were marching towards us, but "we vvent forth to meet them, not as E-"nemies to oppose, but (as our Ancestours "were wont) to submit our Vale, our " Selves, our Lives and our Fortunes, into " the hands of your General; relying on "his faith, and believing to find him, if nor "of the noble Florentine temper, yet at " least not utterly void of Humanity: your " Lordihips must pardon us, if the infup-"portablenefs of our Sufferings constrain " us to speak things undecent : That Gene-"neral of yours has nothing of a Man but "the Presence, nor of a Florentine but " the Name. He is the most deadly plague, "the most ravenous Tiger, and most exe-" crable Monsier Nature ever produced ; "for Affembling us in our Church, under "pretence of speaking with us, he made us "Captives, burning and ruining all our "Valley: robbing, facking and plundering. " the Goods of the Inhabitants; beating "and flaying their Perfons; defiling their "Wives, and ravishing their Virgins; nay " forcing them from their tender Mothers " arms, to make them a prey to the beaftly "Luft of his Souldiers." Had we by any "Injury deferved this from the Florentine "People, or had we opposed his Arms "and been taken, we should have had less " caufe to complain, nay rather we should " have acculed our felves, and blamed those "Injuries, and that Arrogance of ours which Book IV.

.....

* which had brought those Miseries upon " us; but when dif-armed we submitted "our felves, then to rob and spoil us, and "treat us with fo much defpite and igno-" miny, is a Grief our hearts would burft " if we did not disclose it. And though "we might have filled all Lombardy with " our Complaints, and to the scandal of " this City, have spread abroad the fame " of our barbarous Injuries throughout all " Haly, we have forborn to do it, unwilling " to blemish to Noble, to Just, and to Com-" pailionate a Commonwealth, with the " villany and cruelty of one diffioneft Citi-"zen, whole covetous temper, had we be-" fore our ruine been made sensible of, we " should have strained our selves to satisfie " his greedy mind (though it be infatiate, " and bottomless as the Sea) by giving up "part of our Substance to ranfom the re-"mainder: But fince that Remedy is too " late, vve are forced now to have recourfe " to your Lordships, humbly befeeching you to grant fome relief to the Misfortunes of " your poor afflicted Subjects, that Men be not " by our Examples affrighted from fubmit-"ting themfelves to your Government : or, " if our infinite Mileries cannot move you, " yet let the fear of Gods Anger perfwade "you, who has beheld his Churches fackt, "and burnt, and our People betrayed in the "very bosoms of them. And herewith Concluding, they call themfelves proftrate on the ground, befeeching that their Goods Cccc3 and 24 and Country might be reftored to them, and (though the Womens loft Honours could not be retreived) yet, that the Wives might be returned to their Husbands, and the Children to the Patents. The barbaroufhels of this Fact being before reported, and now by the tongues and tears of thefe afflicted Men confirmed, fo moved the Magistracy, that without any delay they recalled Aftorre, who was afterwards condemned and admonished. Inquilition was likewife made after the Goods of the Seravezefi, and all that could be found reftored, and the remainder were in process of time, by the City, fatisfied. On the other fide, Meffer Rinaldo de Albizi lay under the fcandal of having perfwaded the War, not for publick Advantage, but private Gain; leaves the and, that fince his being made General, his eager defire of subduing Lucca was vanished, and he was satisfied with robbing and fpoiling the Country, flocking his own Farms with Cattle, and his Houles vvith plunder: Nor yet content with his own thare of the prey, he bought the private · Souldiers Purchafe, and fo from a General was become a Merchant. These Calumnies coming to his Ears, touched to the quick his high and haughty Soul, more than became a Man of his rank and gravity, infomuch, that fretted at the Magistrates and Citizens, without expecting or asking leave, he returns to Florence, and presenting him-felf before the Ten, faid : That be very well knew

Digitized by Google

Rimaldo de

Albir i

Amy.

Book IV. of Florence.

knew how great difficulty and danger there was in serving a loofe People, and a divided City; for the one are credulous of every idle Rumour, and the other punishes bad Success, never rewards the good, and blames the doubtful; so that none praise bim that is Vi-Storious, all condemn bim that Errs, and flander bim that is Unfuccesful; bis very Friends perfecuting bim out of Envy, and bis Enemies out of Hatred : Yet be had never flood so much in are of Evil tongues, as to forbear, for fear of them, any Action that might redound to the advantage of his City. 'Tis true, the present abuses and standers had over-wrought bis patience, and made bim change bis Nature; He therefore befought the Magistrates for the future, to be more ready to defend the Fame of their Citizens, if they expected their readiness to all for the good of their Country; and, fince Florence permitted them not to Triumph, they would at-leaft rescue them from the reproach of Evil tongues, remembring themselves to be Citizens of the Same Town, and might, Sometime or other, have those Charges imposed on them, might make them feel how bitter Calumny is to an boneft mind. The Ten temporizing lirove to appeale him, and committed the Charge of the War to Neri di Gino, and Alamanno Salviati, who leaving off spoiling the Coun-try, made their approaches to the Town; but because the Season was yet very Cold, they fat down at Cappainole, where, though the Generals thought they lost time, and Cccc 4 werc

43

Machivel's Hiftory Book IV.

were defirous to lay a clofer Siege; yet the Souldiers because of the bitterness of the Weather would not confent, though the Ten folicited them to Decamp, and would at admit no excuse at all. There was atthis time. in Florence an excellent Architect; called Philip Braneleschi, who with many excellent Buildings had replenished our City, so that he deserved after his death to have his Statue fet up in Marble in the principal Church of Florence, with an Infcription on the Pedeltal, teltifying his Excellencies of that kind. This Man declared how Lucca, confidering the fcituation of the City, and the Course of the Ri-ver Serchia, might eafily be drowned, and was fo politive in it, that the Tex gave him leave to try the Experiment, but his project produced only diforder in our Camp, and fafety to the Enerny: for the Luccheft with a high and ftrong Bank opposed the Courfe of the Water, on that lide whither they had turned the River, and then in the Night cut the banks of that Channel by which they conducted the Stream; fo that the Banks towards Lucca being raifed, and the Ditch, by which the Water was brought; broken, the Stream reverted into the Plain, whereby the Camp was forced to draw farther off, and could no more approach the This Defign proving thus unfuc-Town. cessful, the Ten that were newly Elected sent Messer John Guiccardine to be General. He with all speed possible begint the Town, and

Digitized by Google

Attempt made to drown Lucca.

and the Lord of it finding himself now streightned, by Advice of Anthony Raffo, (relident there from the State of Siena) fent Silvester Trents, and Lodovich Bonvisi to Milan: They on the behalf of their Lord, defired that Dukes Aid ; but finding him cold, they privately requested him to supply them with Forces, promiting on the part of the People to deliver up their Lord Prisoner, and surrender to him the polfeffion of the City: Affuring him, That if he accepted not this offer, the Lord would deliver up the Town to the Florentines, who by large Promises folicited him to it: which Suggestion put the Duke in such fear, that, laying alide all Respects, he gave order, that the Earl Francis Sforme, his principal Captain ; should publickly ask his Licence to go into the Kingdom of Noples; which having cafily obtained, he comes with his Forces to Lucce: though the Florentines mignatiful of the Contrivance, and doubtful of the Islue, had fent to Count Beccacine Alamanni to prevent him. Earl Sforge being thus got into Luc- stores ca, the Florentine Camp retreated to Libra- comes a fatta; and the Earl prefently marches and an invests Pefcia, where Pagolo Diacette was Governour, who taking Counfel rather of Fear than Honour, flies to Piffeia. And had not the Town of Pefcia been defended by Jahn Melavolti, who Commanded the Guards there, it had been certainly loft. The Earl therefore failing to take it at the firft affift Land

first Affault, goes to the Borough of Bugiano, and takes it, and burns Stiliano a Caftle adjacent. The Florentines growing fenfi-ble of these Incroachments, had recourse to a Remedy which had often steaded them, knowing well that where Force failed to counterpoife a Mercenary Enemy, Corruption would turn the Scale; wherefore they made the Earl a proffer of Mony, to oblige him not only to depart, but to deliver them the Town. The Earl perceiving there vvas no more Mony to be had from the Lucchefi, refolved to accept it from those who could give it, and therefore struck a Bargain with the Florentines for 50000 Ducats, not to deliver up Lucca, which in Honour he could not do, but to leave it to its thifts as foon as the Mony should be paid; and that the People of Lucca might excuse him to the Duke for making this Agreement, he practiced with them the turning out their Lord. There was in Lucca (as hath been faid before) one Messer Antonio Roffo, Ambassadour from Siena: He, by Authority from the Earl, contrived, with the Citizens, the ruine of Pagolo, or Paul: The Chief of the Conspirators were Peter Cennami, and John Chivizano. The Earl lay encamped without the Town by the River Serchio, and with him Lanzilaus, Son of Paul Guinigi, Lord of Lucca: fo the Confpirators, to thenumber of Forty well Armed, went by Night to Panl, who fartling at their fudden

Lord of Lucca depoled.

• 46

Book IV.

den intrusion, demanded the cause of their coming; to which Peter Cennami replyed, That they had fo long been Governed by him till they were begirt with Enemies, and in a fair way to perifh, either by Sword or Famine, wherefore they were refolved to Govern themselves for the future, and came now to demand the Keys and Treasure of the City. To which Paul made Answer? That the Treasure was spent, but both the Keys and himfelf were at their devotion; only Requeiting, That lince his Government had begun and continued without Blood, so without Blood, by their favour, it might end. Paul and his Son were, by Earl Sforza, carried to the Dake, where they afterwards died in Prison. The Earls Departure delivered the Luccheses from the Tyrant, and the Florentines from the fear of his Forces: fo those made preparations of Defence, and these returned to offend, having Commillionated the Earl of Urbin their General, who fo thraitly belieged the City, that the Lucebesi were again necessitated to have recourfe to the Duke for Affiftance, and . he under the fame pretences he had before fent Sforza now lends Nicholas Piccinino to relieve them : Who endeavouring to enter-Lucoa, was by our Men encountred on a pals of the River Serchia, where our People were routed, the General, and fome few' more laving themfelves at Pifa. This Defeat afflicted the whole City and becaufe the expedition was made by General confern thepeople ple not knowing well where to lay the blame. charged all the fault upon those that had the Management of the War, fince they could not charge those who had been the devifers of it, and the former Acculations against Rinaldo were revived. But most of all they loaded John Guiccardine, charging him, that he might, if he had pleafed, have ended the War after Sforza's departure, but that he was corrupted with Mony, of which a great fum he had fent home, offering to produce who had brought it, and who received it. These Rumours and Acculations grew to high, that the Captain of the People moved by the Publick cry, and the Clamour of the contrary faction, Cited him; Meffer John, full of indignation, appeared, but his Friends for their own Honour fake, laboured to earneftly in the matter, that the Captain did not proceed. The Lucchefiaster this Victory, not only regained all their own Towns, but surprized all those belonging to the Territory of Pifa, except Bientina, Calcinaia, Legborn, and Librafatta, and had not the Plot in Pila been difcovered, that City had likewife been loft. The Florentines recruitng their Army made Michalette, who had been trained up under Sforfa, General. On the other fide the Duke closely purfued the advantage, and the more fensibly to afflict the Florentines, united the Genovefe, those of Siens and the Lord of Piombino, in a league for the defence of Lucca, making them entertain Nicholas Piccinina

48

Book IV. of Florence.

cinino for General of the league; by which meanes all the whole intregue was difcovered, and the Florentines and Venetians re- the your newing their antient Alliance, open War simu and was made in Lombardy and Tofcany, and in joyned each Province fundry fights enfued with Various fuccels : Till all Parties wearied out, in May 1433 a General Peace was concluded ; by which the Florensines, those of 1433. Lucce and Siena, who during this War had feized several Cafiles one of the others, made reciprocal Restitution: And each contented themselves with their own possessions. Whilf this War was on foot, the Malignant humours of the Factions in the City got head, and Cosmo de Medici after the death of John his Father, managed the Concerns of the Common-wealth with more address and care of the publick, and with more freedom and liberality towards his Friends, than his father had done before him; infornuch that those which rejoyced at the death of John, now feeing the ma-nagement of Cofmo, were forry: Cofmo was a man of Excellent Prudence; of a grave, and gracious Afpect; extreamly liberal; and infinitely Courteous; and who never attempted any thing against any of the Factions, or against the State; but frove to oblige all the World, and by his Liberality gain the good-will of the Citizens. So that his Virtues feem'd to caft a fhadow upon those that governed; and himself beleited he might by this meanes live in Florence in

49

Machivel's History Book IV

in fufficient power and Security; or if the Malice of his Adverfaries should in any extraordinary manner oppose him, he might by the Number and Strength of his Friends oppress them. The main instruments to form his Greatness were Averardo de Medici, and Puccio Pucci : Averardo with his Courage, and Puecio with his Counfel fupports ing and enlarging his Reputation and Renown. And in fuch Effeem was Precio's Wildom and Counfel, and fo well Known. That the Faction was not called by Cofmo's Name, but Puccio's. By a City thus divided was the expedition of Lucca made, and by it the Contentions were rather enflamed than quenched; And although Cosmo's Party were the chief Counfellors of it, yet". more of the contrary Party had Command of the Army, as being of greater Reputation in the state : which since Everard desMedici and the reft could not remedy, they strove, all they could, to calumniate them; and it any loss happened (as many did) they imputed it not either to the good Fortune, Courage, or Conduct of the Enemy; but to the want of Difcretion and Prudence in their own Officers. Thus the lapfes of Aftorre Gianni became aggravated : Thus was Rinaldo de Albizi's Patience overborn, and he in a Paffion made return, laying down his Commission without leave; and Thus was the delivery of John Guiccardine demanded from the Captain of the people; and thus all the blame Charged either upon the

Digitized by Google

(50

Book IV.

'of Florence.

the Magistrates, or Ministers of War, had its original; for where the Acculation was true, it spread of its self, and where it was invented, art was added ; and whether true or falle, it was by the people who hated them, believed. These new and extraor-dinary wates of proceeding were very well known to Nicholas de Vzano and the Cheif of his Party, and many times had they confulted a Remedy, but could conclude on none; for to give way to it they perceived was dangerous, and to put any violent Stop toit, more difficult, but Nicholas de Uzano was the first who expressed his displeasure against these strange proceedings. And in the heat of War abroad, and their Diforders at home, Nicholas Barbadori endeavou- The mine ring to dispose Nicholas de Uzano to the ruin of Cofine of Colmo, went one day to his Houle, where perfustinding him alone, and in a profound fludy, ded. he endeavoured by all the weighty Arguments he could invent, to perfwade him to confent with Rinaldo to drive Cosmo out of the City, to whom Nicholas Uzano made this Reply: In my Judgment, it were better for thee, thy Family, and all that joyn with thee in this Opinion , that they had Beards of Silver than of Gold; as those art faid to bave; for then their Advice, proceeding from boarv and experienced Heads, would be more. judicious and profitable. I am of the mind, that thefe who defire to banifh Colmo out of Florence, should first of all weigh and mea-Sure their Power with by. The Party fiding with with us you bave named the Party of the Nobles, and that opposing it the Faction of the Plebeians : were the Truth correspondent to the Name, yet would the Success be in all points doubiful, and we have more Reafons. to fear than bope, taught by the Example of the Ancient Nobility, whom the Plebeians Bave quite rooted out ; but we have much more cause to fear, our Party being divided. and theirs entire. In the first place, Neri di Gino, and Netone di Nigi, two prime Citizens, have never yet declared themselves so; that we can well determine whether they are more our Friends, or theirs : There are many Families, and many Houses divided ; for many out of Envy to their very Bretbren and Relations disfavour us and fide with them. Let me only put you in mind of some of the Chief. and the reft guess at your felf; of the Sons of Meffer Mafo de Albizi, Luke, out of envy to Rinaldo, bas joyned bimself to their Party. In the Family of the Guiccardines, and among the Children of Lewis, Peter is an enemy to. John ,, and favours our Advorfaries: Thomas and Nicholas Soderini, for the Hate they bare their Uncle Francis, do openly oppofe su: So, that if it be well confidered, what they, and sobat me are, I see not any reason why our Party should be stilled Noble more than theirs, unles, because they are univer-Sally followed by the Plebeians, which makes the worfe for us, and the better for them , we mon any occasion of disputing it by Arms being too meak to refift them. And if we frand npon

Book IV. of Florence.

apon our Dignity, that, from the Ancient Reputation of the State bad its original, and continuation for these fifty years; but when it comes to the proof, and our weakness is discovered, me shall foon lose all : Or, if you think that the just occasion prompting as to it will gain us Credit, and them Difrepute; I Anfiver, That justice of our Cause must then be understood by others as well as our foives, which happens quite contrary; for the Occafion moving us is founded on a sufficion, leaft be should make bimfelf Prince of this City; but though me supres it, others will not, nay which is worfe, they accuse us of what we accuse bim. The things which chiefly render Cosmo suffected, are, because be employs his Mony to ferve all mens Occasions, not only publick Persons, but private; not only Florentines, but Forreigners: because be favours this, and that other Citizen, who stand for the Magistracy; and because, by bis credit with the Multisude, be advances this and that other Friend to greater degrees of Honour. Tell me therefore the Reasons why you would have bim Banished; is it because be is Charitable, Friendly, Liberal, and beloved? Pray, what Lam probibits, blames, or condemns men for Charisy, Liberality and Love? And though all men affiring to Principality, usually tread these paths, yet they are not thought to do fo; nor can we force it into mens belief : for our proceedings have debanched our Credit, and this City fostered in Division, and the Citizens nsed to live in Parties and Faction, are grown Dddd ſo fo Corrupt, they will never give faith to fuch Accusations. But, Suppose we should attain our defires of Expelling him (which, having a Senate for the purpose, may eafily be effected) yet how can you devise to oppose his return, whill be bus fo many Friends remaining who will be zealous for it?'I would be impossible; bis Friends being numerous, and be so universally beloved, and the more of his Friends you labour to Banifh, the more Enemies you contract to your felves; fo that Return in a short time be will, and all the gain will be this, That you banified a Good man, and have an evil one returned you; for his Nature will be corrupted by thefe who labour bis Revocation, whom be cannot contradict : And, if you defign bis death; by order of the Magistracy you will never procure it; for his Mony, and our own corrupt Natures, would certainly save bim: But suppose him Dead, or Banished, so that he can no more Return; I cannot perceive the advantage would thereby accrue to our Commonwealth; for by being freed from Colino it will be enflaved to Rinaldo, and for my part, though I could with no Citizen superiour to another in Pomer and Authority: Tet, if one of thefe must prevail, there is some secret Reason perswades me to love Rinaldo better then Cofmo. I fay no more, but God defend that any Citizen should usurp a Principality over us; yet if our fins have deserved such a Plague, of all men living I would not obey him. I do not therefore personade an Attempt any way hazardous, nor believe that the Combination oţ

Google

Book IV. of

of Florence.

55

Digitized by Google

of a few can withstand the will of many: for the Multitude, partly through Ignorance, and partly through Malice, are all ready to fell the Commonwealth; and Fortune is fo kind to them they have already found a Chapman. Let my Counsel therefore prevail, live modestly and you will soon observe, as to the Liberty of the City some of our Party ought to be suffected as well as the other; and if any Troubles arife, living in an eafie Neutrality, you will be grateful to all, and so may be belpful to your self, and not buriful to your Country. These Words somewhat appealed Barbadoro's mind, and the City continued quiet during the Lucchefe War. But Peace being concluded, and with it happening the death of Nicholas Uzzano, the City having flipt off the bridle of War, had no Reins to Govern it, but run madly on to Fury and Diforder: For Rinaldo remain= ing now the fole Head of his Faction, inceffantly intreated and perfwaded all thofe Citizens of Quality, whom he thought likely to be made Gonfalonieri, to Arm themselves for the Defence of their Country against a Man, who by reason of the Malice of some, and Ignorance of others, must of necessity reduce them into flavery. These proceedings of Rinalds's, and the oppositions made by the adverse Party, raised fears and Jealoufies in the City: at the Creating of every Magistracy they publickly discoursed how many of one Party, and how many of the other fat; and at the Election of Dddd 2 Sena-

Confution in Florence.

every Caule of the flightest moment, that came before the Magistrates to be decided, begot a Tumult; Cabinet Counfels were divulged; Good and bad men favoured, and disfavoured; and both forts equally tormented and molested. Whilst Florence was in this Confusion, and Rinaldo zealous to fuppress the Greatness of Colmo, he knowing that Bernardo Guadagno was likely to be Elected Gonfaloniere, pays his. Debts, least the Mony he owed the Publick fhould be an obffacle to his arrival at that Dignity. And it came to pais at the drawing the Lots ; that (Fortune favouring our Diforders) Bernardo was elected Gonfaloniere, to officiate during the Months of September and October : Whom, Meffer Rinaldo prefently went to wait upon, Reprefenting to him, "How many, on the Party "of the Nobles, and even all that defired " to live well, rejoyced at his advancement " to that Dignity; and therefore it vvas "his part to take care they should not re-" joyce in vain: laying before him the " dangers attended on Difcord, and how "there was no other way to unite the "City but by expelling Colino; Who, with " the general Love his exceffive Riches had " gained him, kept others weak, and was " grown to that height, that if sudden pro-"vision vvere not made, he would alpire " to the Principality. Twas therefore his "duty, like a good Citizen, to apply a eedy

" fpeedy Remedy by calling the people into " the Piazza, refuming the Government, "and reftoring the City to her Liberty; " Remembring him, " How Silvester Medici " did, without Juffice, bridle the power of "the Guelphs, to whom a Right of Go-" vernment (for the Blood of their Ance-"fors, fhed in defence of it.) belonged; " and what he unjustly did against fo many, " vvhy should he now fear to act justly "against one? Exhorting him not to be a-" fraid, for their Friends with their Arms, " vvould be ready to affift him: Nor vvas "any account to be made of the Multi-"tude that adored him, whole Favour "vvould prove as defective to him as it "had done to George Scali; nor should "he be awed by his Riches, which, were "he once in the Senates power, would be "Theirs: Concluding, that this Action "vvould both quiet the State, and make "him famous. To all which perfuations Bernardo briefly Answered ; " That he " thought what he proposed necessary, and " because the time vvas not to be spent in "Words but Actions, he would prefently " prepare his Forces to be ready, fo foon as "his Companions were perfwaded to it. As foon as Bernardo was entred into the Magistracy, his Friends all disposed and a- come de greed with Rinaldo's, he Cited Cosmo, who Medici Cited and (though by many otherwife advifed) ap- commitpears, relying more on his own Innocency, 1ed. than the Favour or Mercy of the Senate. Dddd 3 As

57

As foon as Colmo was entred the Palace, and Arrefted, Rinaldo, with many Armed men. fallies out of his Houfe, and joyning with the reft of the Faction, comes into the Piazza, vwhither the Senate Summoned the People, and created a Balia of Two hundred men to reform the Government of the City; this Balia, as expeditiously as they could, began to Treat of the Reformation of the State, and of the Life and Death of Colmo. Many would have him Banished; some vyould have him put to Death, and others faid nothing, either out of Compassion to him, or fear of themfelves: so this diversity of Opinions produced no refult. In the Tower of the Palace is a close firong Room, called the Alberghettino; There Cosmo was kept Prisoner under the Guard of Frederick Malavolti; from vvhich place Cosmo hearing their Talk. and the noise of Armed Men in the Piazza. and the often founding to the Balia, stood in fear of his Life; but vvas molt of all jealous, leaft his Enemies should, by some extraordinary vvay, deprive him of it; which made him abstain from all Meats, fo that in four daies he had tafted nothing but a little Bread; which Frederick taking notice of, faid to him : " Cofmo, I fee you " are afraid of being poiloned; but you " wrong my Honour by imagining I would "have a hand in fuch a wickedness. " cannot believe your Life in any danger, f having fo many Friends in the Palace, " and

Book IV. of Florence.

and abroad: But, if they have a defign " that you shall die, be assured they must " make choice of other Ministers to execute "it; for I will not imbrue my hands in "the Blood of any man, much lefs yours " who never injured me; be therefore of " good Chear, and fall to your Meat, and " preferve your life to the comfort of your "Friends and Country: And to give you " more confidence to do it, I will my felf " first eat of whatever is set before you. These vvords extreamly comforted Colmo, and, with tears in his Eyes, he kist and embraced Frederick, and with kind and obliging words returned him thanks for fo compassionate and friendly an Office, promifing to give testimonles of his Gratitude. whenever Fortune should give him an opportunity. Cosmo thus put in heart, whilit the Citizens were debating his disposure, it happened that Frederick, to make him fomewhat the pleafanter, brought along to Supper with him a familiar Friend of the Gonfaloniers, called Fargannacio, a man made for Wit and divertiscment. Supper being almost ended, Cosmo having conceived that this man might do him fome fervice (for he was well acquainted with him) beckned to Frederick to withdraw, who understanding the fign, pretending to fetch fomething wanting at Supper, went out and left them alone : Cosmo after some kind and obliging words to Fargannacia, gave him a Token, and injoyned him to Dddd4 20

Machivel's Hiftory Book IV.

go to the Hospital of Sancta Maria Nnova for Eleven hundred Ducats, a hundred of which he should keep for his own use, and the thousand deliver to the Gonfaloniere; withal defiring him to make fome plaufible pretence to come and speak with him. He accepts the Commission the Monies were paid, and Bernardo mollified, fo that Cofmo was only confined to Padona, contrary to the intentions of Rinaldo, who fought his Life. Everard, and many others of the House of Medici, with John, and Praccio Pucci were likewife Banished; and to territie those that were disfatistied with Cofmu's Banishment, they gave the Balia to Eight of the Guard, and to the Captain of the People. After which Determinations, on the third of October 1433, Cosmo was brought before the Lords, where the Sentence of his Confinement was pronounced, and he counfelled to fubmit to it, least they fhould be forced to proceed with greater feverity against both his Perfon and Goods. Cosmo with a chearful Countenance received his Sentence, affuring them that whither-foever their Lordships thought fit to fend him he should be vvilling to go; but befought them fince they had faved his life, they would pleafe likewife to defend it; becaufe he underftood many of his enemies did, in the Piazza, lie in wait for his blood ; affuring them, that wherever he was, He and his Substance should ever be at the Command of the City, the People, and their 1

Cofmo de Medici Confined

Lord hips: Hereupon the Gonfaloniere comforted him, and kept him in the Palace till might, and then conducting him to his House, after Supper, gave him a strong Guard to accompany him to the Confines. Cofino, wherever he passed, was honourably received and publickly vifited by the Venetians not like a banished Man, but like one in Supream Authority. Florence thus rob'd of fo worthy a Citizen, fo Univerfally beloved, every one was difinayed, and as well the Victors, as the Conquered, feemed tertified. Informuch that Rinaldo, doubtful of his future Misfortune, that he might not be wanting to himself and his Faction, having affembled many Citizens, his Friends, told them : That be now beheld their Ruin approaching; for baving suffered themselves, by their enemies Prayers, Tears and Mony to be Vanquished, not confidering that themselves should ere long be forced to entreat and weep, whilst none beard their Prayers, nor bad compassion of their Tears, and that the mony given must be repaid with Exile, torments and death, instead of Usury: For it had been better for them to have been dead, than to leave Colmo alive, or suffer a Friend of bis in Florence; For great Perfons should never be toucht, or if they be, put paft Revenge. There was now therefore no. remedy left but to fortifie themselves in the City, that if the refentments of their Enemies frould break forth (as foon they would) they might oppress them by Arms, fince by Lan and

Machivel's History Book IV.

and order they could not Curb or restrain them and that the Remedy was the same now which bad long (ince been remembred; to wit, to regain the great men, by reftoring them to all Honours in the City, and strengthning them. Selves with that Party, fince their Enemies had Fortified themselves with the Plebeians : that by this meanes their Party would be enconraged, baving such an addition of Force. Virtue, Valour, and Credit : affirming if they Neglecied this only true and ultimate remedy, be cauld discover no way bow to secure the Stats amidit so many Enemies, but beheld the approaching ruin of their Party, and the whole City. To which Mariotto Boldavinetti, one of the Company, opposed himself; Declaring, That the Pride and haughty nature of the Grandees was insupportable, and that it was madness to have recourse to a certain Tyranny to escape a doubtful danger from the Plebeians. So that Messer Rinaldo feeing his Counfels flighted, lamented his, and his Friends Misfortune, attributing this averfenefs rather to Providence that would have it fo, than to the ignorance and blindness of Men. Whilst things stood in this posture, and no necessary provision made; a Letter was found written by Meffer Agnolo Acciaivolo to Cosmo, advising him of the Cities good inclinations towards him, and encouraging him to move a War, and make Neri Gini his Friend : For he judged the City wanted Mony, which not knowing how to supply otherways, his memory, and the

Book IV. of Florence.

the ardent defire of his return would be revived among the Citizens: and if Neri were drawn off from Kinaldo, his Party would be too weak to defend themfelves. This letter coming to the Magistrates hands was the occalion that Meffer Agnolo was taken, sequestred, and banished : yet this example curbed not at all the Favourers of . Cofmo. The year had now almost gone its round fince Cosmo's Banishment, when, about August 1434, Nicholas de Cocco was chofen Gonfaloniere for the two enfuing months, and with him eight Senators, all of Colmo's Party; fo that fuch a Signory might well affright Rinaldo and his whole Party : And because it is Customary, that the Lords elected, before they enter upon the Magistracy, are three daies private, Rinaldo fummons again the heads of his Party, and declares to them the approaching danger, and that there was no remedy but taking Armes, and caufing Donato Velluti, who yet fat as Gonfaloniere, to affemble the people in the Piazza, establish a Ballia to remove the new Lords from their Magistracy, and create other fit for their own purpole; and burning the Old Purfes make new Imborfations, filled with the Names of their .Friends. This devife was by many thought both requisite and fafe, others judged it , much too violent and dangerous, and among those that opposed it was Mr. Palla Strozzi, who was a quiet Man, Civil, Courteous, and apter for fludy than to encounter Faction, or or quell civil Difcords; who therefore Argued, That all attempts, whether guided by Policy or Valour, Seem in their beginnings easie, but in the process prove difficult, and in the end dangerous.; That he believed the fear of an approaching War from abroad (the Duke of Romania being with an Army on our confines) would make the Lords mind their Defonce, rather than intestine Discords : yet if they mould change Affairs (which could not be done but they must know it) it would then be time to take Arms, and execute what was thought necessary for the publick lafety. Which when they were forced to, would create less wonder in the People, and less reproach to themselves. It was therefore concluded that the new Lords should enter, and their proceedings be diligently watched; and if they attempted any thing contrary to the faction, every one should take Arms and Affemble at St. Pulinare (a place nigh the Palace) whence they might proceed to act what should be judged neceffary. Concluding upon this, every man returned home, and the New Senators entred upon the Magistracy, and the Gonfaloniere, to gain himself Reputation, and terrifie the adverse Party, committed to prifon Donato Velluti his predeceffor, for having mifemployed the publick Treasure : and then founded the minds of his Companions about Cosmo's return, whom finding disposed, he confults with the cheifes of the Medici's Party, and encouraged by them,

Digitized by Google

Cites

Book IV. of Florence.

Cites Meffer Rinaldo, Ridolfo Perruzzi and Nicholas Barbadori Principals of the oppofite Faction. Upon which Citation, Rinal- Rinaldo do thought it no longer hit to protract time, takes but fallying from his houle with a great gaint the Number of Armed followers was prefently sease. joyned, by Ridolfo Peruzzi and Nicholas Barbadori, with whom were many Citizens, and many Souldiers, which happened at that time to be in Florence, and out of pay ; all which reforted according to the former agreement to the place of St. Pulinare : Meffer Palla Strozzi, though he had affembled a great force, staid within his house, and the like did Meffer John Guiccardine, whereupon Rinaldo fent to urge them, and reprove their delay. John made answer, That he waged as he thought sufficient War against the enemy, if by staying at home he hindred his brother Peters fallying forth to refcue the Palace. Palla after many meffages came to St. Pulinare on horfe-back, unarmed, and attended only by two foot-men; whom Rinaldo going to meet, fiercely reproved for his negligence; telling him, "That his not affembling with the reft proceeded from his want of Faith, or Courage, both blameworthy in any one who would be thought a Person of Honour, and if he vainly believed that for not doing his Duty, the Enemy would upou Victory pardon him either life or Banilbment, he was deceived. As for his part, if any Sinister accident bapued, be should bave this fatisfattion, That as he had not been wanting committed to him to determine all Controverfies, which on condition he would lay down Arms, should be done to his full fatis. faction, Rinaldo having made proof of the coldness of Palla and the inconstancy of Ridolfo Permazi, defpairing of better Terms yeilded himself into the Popes hands, not doubting but his Authority would fecure him; whereupon the Pope prefently fignified to Niebolas Barbadori, and the reft who faved for him without, that they hould lay down their Armes; for Meffer Rinaldo relied upon the Pope to make in Agreement with the Senate: and at first word they all obeyed, and disbanded; the Senators seeing their Adverfaries difarmed, applyed themfelves to an agreement, by the Popes intermission, but privily sent away to the rock of Piftold for fome Companies of foor, which with all their men at Arms they by night brought into Florence, and foizing all the strong places of the City, summoned the people into the Piazza, and created a new Balis, who as foon as they Affembled, reftored Colors to his Country, with all chofe that were confined, and on the adverfe Party banished Kinaldo de Albini, Ridolfo. Perruzzi : Nitholas Barbador ; and Palla Strozzi, with many other Citizens, in fuch waft numbers, that there were few Towns in Italy to which fome were not confined, and many places out of Haly were filled with them. By which accident Florence was not only much dif-peopled but rob'd of it's riches

Cofine reftored and Rinaldo with others Banifhed,

ì

68

ŀ

Book IV. of Florence,

riches and Industry. The Pope feeing the ruin of these men who at his defire had laid down Arms, was extreamly discontented, and condoled with Rinaldo for the wrong done him under his Faith and Credit; exhorting him to patience and by fome happy change to hope for better Fortune To which . Rinaldo answered : The mans of Credit in those which should have believed Me, and my too easy reliance on you, bath ruined me and my Party, but I have most reason to blame my self that could imagine that you who were driven out of your own Country, could secure me in mine. I bave had sufficient experience of the Dalliances of Fortune, and baving never confided in prosperity, am less afflicied at Adversity, Knowing well, that fortune when the pleases may again favour me. But If she never do, I shall not be over-fond of living in that City, where Faction overrules the Laws; for that Country is only defirable where men may peacably enjoy their Friends and Estates, and not that where a man may be eafily deprived of the latter; and the first, for fear of bazarding their own, in his greatest Necessity forsake bim ; for to the Wise it is lefs grievous to bear of the Miseries of their Country, than behold them with their Eyes; and more glorious to be accounted an bonourable Rebel, than a flavish Citizen. So taking leave of the Pope full of Indignation, and blaming often his own Councils, and the coldness of his Friends, he went into Banishment. On the other fide, Cosmo E.e.e.e

Coinco having Intelligence of his Revocacion returned to Florence. Seldome has any Chizen, returning Triumphant after Victory, been received with fuch a Concourfe of Prople, fuch acclamations of Joy, and fuch demonstration of an universal Affe-Ction, as He was upon his return from Banishment; the Citizens voluntarily faluting him with the Titles of The Peoples Benefactor, and, The Father of his Country.

The End of the Fourth Book.

Digitized by Google

THE

FLORENTINE HISTORY,

THE

Written by

Nicholas Machiavel.

BOOK V.

Rovinces, in their Change of Government, for the most part run from order to diforder. and from difordet to order again; for constancy being by nature denied to fublunary things, as foon as they are mounted to a height of perfection, they must of force descend; and being fallen into difordet, and thereby come to their sumost declination, they must by the fame necessity (fince they can fall no farther) rife : Thus ever from good there is a defcent to evil, and from evil an afcent to good; for Virtue begets 5 A quiet, .

quiet, Quiet idlenes, Idleness disorder, and Diforder ruine; in like manner Ruine produces order, Order virtue, and Virtue glory with good fortune. Whence the prudent have obferved, That Learning follows Arms, and in all Cities and Countries Captains were before Philosophers : for virtuous and well governed Arms having obtained Victory, and Victory produced quiet. the fortitude of active minds cannot be corrupted by any more juftifiable Idleness than the fludy of Letters, nor can Idleness with any fo fair and specious pretence, creep into a well inftitutedCommonwealth.Which Cato (at the time Diogenes and Carneades came Ambaffadors from Athens to the Senate of Rome) was perfectly fensible of; for feeing the Youth begin to follow them with great admiration, and perceiving the mischiefs might, by that honest Idlenes, refult to his Country, he caused it to be enacted, that bereafter no Philosophers should be received in Rome. And indeed, by these means are many Countries brought to ruine, till men grown weary of deftroying one another, return (as has been faid) to order; unless by some extraordinary force they are made utterly uncapable of it. These Occasions, first by the means of the Ancient Tulgans, and afterwards of the Romans made lealy fometimes happy, and fometimes miferable. And though on the ruines of Romeinothing has been founded adequate to its glory (which pollibly under fome gallant lant Prince might have been effected) yet to much Virtue is revived in some of the New Cities, and New Governments that arole out of the Roman ruines, that though one has not attained the Command of the reft, yet they were fo well united and linked together, that they were able to defend and free themselves from the incursions of Barbarous people. Among which, the Fierentines, though not of any extent in Dominion, were as large as any in power ; for being feated in the midft of Italy, rich and ready to offend, they either fuccessfully fustained the Wars made against them, or brought Victory to that Party with whom they tided. From this Virtue in these New Principalities it proceeded, that though they never enjoyed any long time of quiet, yet the War was never very dangerous or terrible; for as it cannot be termed Peace, where Provinces are almost continually with Arms affaulting one another, fo that cannot properly be called War, where the flaughter of Men, facking of Citics, and ruine of Governments docs not attend." And affuredly the Wars of these times were fo weak and faint, that they were bcgun without fear, continued without danger, and ended without loss: fo that that Virtue which long and lazy Peace used to extinguish in other Countries, became by the Cowardize of their own Arms extinct in Italy, as will plainly appear by what we shall now set down, from the Year 1434 to 5A 2 1496:

2

Malorence.

Machivel's Hiftory Book V.

1406 : Whereby it may be feen how, in the Conclusion, the Fences were again broken down for firangers to enter at, and Italy became fubicct to them. And though the Actions of our Princes abroad, and at home, may not perhaps, for their glory and greatness, deferve to be read with that admiration due to the Ancients, yet poffibly for some other quality they may merit to be confidered with no lefs wonder : feeing fo many brave and Noble people; by a few (and those ill disciplined) Souldiers kept in awe; and though, in the description of things in these decayed and corrupt times, you may find no relation of any Valour in Souldiers, Conduct in Generals, or love of their Country in Citizens; yet you may discover with what cunning, craft and policy, Princes, Souldiers and heads of Commonwealths (to maintain a Reputation they had never deferved) managed their Affairs; which possibly may be of no less advantage to Humane Society than the other 3: for as those flir up noble minds to follow their' Example, these will incense us against them, and provoke us to fly and elchew them.

The Condicion of Indy, 1433. ITALY was, by those which Governed it, reduced to fuch Terms, that whenever upon the Reconciliation of any Princes or States a Peace was concluded, it was prefently again, by those that had the Arms in their hands, disturbed; fo that no glory was gained by War, nor no quiet by Peace. Wherefore, no fooner was the Peace concluded

Book V. Florence.

cluded in 1433, between the Duke of Milan and the League, but the Souldiers, to keep themselves in Exercise, turned their Arms upon the Church. There were at this time in Italy two forts of Souldiers; those trained up under Brassis, and these under Sforza : The last were commanded by the Earl Francis, Son of Sforza; and the first had Nicholas Piecinine, and Nicholas Fortobrace for their Leaders. And to thefe two Bodies almost all the reft of the Souldiers of Italy united themselves. Of these two, Sforza's Division had the greater Reputation, both because of the Earls Valour, and of the Promise made him by the Duke of Milan, to give him Bianca his Natural Daughter in Marriage, the hopes of which Alliance added much to his effeem. After war made the Peace of Lombardy, these two Armies on the (upon different occasions) affaulted Pope sforza and Engenim. Fortibrace moved to it out of Fortibrace the ancient Grudge born by Braccio to the Church, and Sforza, by his own Amblition ; to that whilf Niebolas affaited Rome , the Earl made himfelf Lord of La Marca: Whereupon, the Romans, to avoid the War, drove Engenim out of Rome, who, with danger and difficulty escaped to Florence: where, confidering the peril he was in, feeing himfelf abandoned by those Princes, who before, fo delivous of Peace, would not for his fake renew the War, agrees with the Earl, and grants him the Signory of La Marca; though the Earl to the injury of 5 A 3. having having feized on it, thad added Reproaches, fublicitions his Letters to his Agents, for fetting out the Land in Latin words, according to the Italian Cultome, Ex Girifalco notiro, invito Petro & Paulo. Nor was he content with the grant of the Land, but would be made Gonfaloniere of the Church, i all which was confented to, fo much more fearful was Engenius of a hazardous War than of a dishonourable Peace. The Earl thus become the Popes Friend, profecuted Niebolas Fortibrace, and betwixt them, in the Territories of the Church, for feveral Months happened fundry Accidents, more to the damage of the Pope and his Subjects, than of those that made the War: Till at last, by the Mediation of the Duke of Milan, an Agreement by way of Truce was made between them, and both remained Princes in the Territories of the Church. This War; thus quenched at Rome, was kindled afrech in Romania by Battifta de Canneto ; he first murthering in Bolonia fome of the Family of the Grifoni, then drove the Popes Governour, and other his Enemies out of the City: And, to hold that State by Force, craved Aid of Philip, whilft, the Pope to revenge the Injury, demanded affistance of the Venetians and Florentines. Each Party had the defired Aid given them, fo that on a fudden Two great Armies infested Romania. Nicholas Piccinino was General for the Duke, and the Venetian and Florentine Forces were led by Guatamelata, and

The Pope makes peace with Sforza.

•.6

Digitized by Google

War in Romania.

Book V. Florence.

and Nicholas Tolentino. Near Imola they came to a Battle, wherein the Venetians and Florentines were overthrown, and Nicholas Tolentino fent prisoner to the Duke; where, either made away by Treachery, or o'repressed with Grief for his Misfortune, he soon after dyed. The Duke, after this Victory, either because he was weakned by the former Wars, or imagining the Colleagues after fuch an overthrow would be quiet, purfued his Fortune no farther, but gave the Pope and his Confederates time to unite themselves : who chose Earl Francis for their Captain, and made an attempt to drive Fortibrace out of the Church Territories, thereby, to put an end to that War they in the Popes favour begun. The Romans feeing now the Pope grown powerful, fought his Friendship, and received a Go- . vernor from him. Nicholas Fortibrace, among other Towns, was in posselion of Jiboli Montefiasconi, the City of Castello and Asceci. Into this last Nicholas (not able to keep the tield) was fled, where the Earl belieged him, and the Siege continuing fomewhat long, (for Nichelas manfully defended himfelf) the Duke thought it necessary, either to hinder the League from obtaining this Victory, or to contrive matters lo, that after it he might be in condition to defend himfelf; therefore, to make the Earl raife his Siege, he commands Nicholas Piecinino to march by the way of Komania into Tofcany; whereupon the Confederates judging it of greater greater concern to defend Tofcomy than take Alcofi, commanded the Earl to ftop Nicholar's paffage, who was already advanced with his Army to Furli : Whilft the Earl. upon the receipt of his Orders, moves with his Army, and comes to Cofina, leaving the Care of the War in La Marce, and of his own Effates, to his Brother Lione. WhilA Piccinino thus fought a paffage, and the Earl woohfruct it, Nicholas Fortibrace falls upon Lions, and to his great Renown takes him, plunders his Carriages, and purfuing his Victory, furprizes in an inftant many Towns of Romania. This Misfortune much afflicted the Earl, who fearing to lofe his own Estates, leaves part of his Army to confront Plocining, and with the remainder marches directly towards Fortibrace, fights and o'recomes him. In this Battle Fortibrace was forely wounded and taken prifoner, and foon after, of his wounds; died. By this Victory the Pope was reftored to all the Lands taken from him by Niebolas Fortibrace, and the Duke of Milan, reduced to Terms of demanding Peace; which, by the Mediation of Nicholas d'Efte, Marquis of Ferrara, was concluded, and by it, all the Towns which the Duke possessed in Romanis reftored to the Church, and the Dukes Army withdrawn into Lombardy; fo that Battifts Cannetto (as generally happens to all those who are supported in a Dominion by the Power or Valour of others) fo foon as the Dukes Forces were retreated our of

۴٠:

Fortilrace victorious, and vanquifhed.

of Florence.

of Romania (his own ftrength or courage being infufficient to defend him) was forced to flie from Bolonia, and Meffer Antonio Bentivoglio, Head of the contrary Party entred that City. All these things happened during the time of Cofmo's Banishment. After whole return, those who had recalled him, and divers other Citizens before injured, confulted without any refpect or referve, how to fecure themfelves in the Government; for the Senate, which in the Months of November and December fucceeded in the Magistracy, not fatisfied with what their Predecessors had done in favour of their Party, prolonged and changed the Confinements of many, and Contined many others anew. Nor was the fullennels of the Factions to prejudicial to the Civizens, as their Riches, Kindred, and private Friendlhips: So that had this prefeription been accompanied Toe nuwith Blood, it might have been compared proteri-to those of Otiavitue, or Sylla; yet was it in priors of the Floresfome measure Aained with Blood; for Ber-the nardo Guadagni was Beheaded, and four Citizens more ; atnong which were Zanchi Belfratelli, and Cofmo Barbadori, who having paffed their Confines were taken at Venice; and the Venetians valuing more Cofmo's friendship than their own Honour, had fent them home Prifoners, where they were basely put to death; which increased the Reputation of Cofmo's Party, and struck Terrour into their Enemies, confidering that fo potent a Commonwealth should fell their

ĩ

1

£.ª

Machivel's History

Book W

their Liberty to the Florentines, which yet vvas thought to be done, not fo much out of kindness to Cofmo, as to inflame the Spirits of the Factions, and make the Division of the City, by means of the Blood thus fhed, more implacable and destructive ; for the Venetians forefaw there could be no greater obstacle of their greatness, than the union of our City. The City thus cleared of Enemies, and all that were but sufpected by the State, they applyed themfelves to shew their Kindness to a new fort of People, the better to confirm their Party; restoring the Family of the Alberti, and all other the Rebels to their Country. All the Grandees, except a very few, were brought into the Orders of the People, and the Poffestions of the later Rebels fold amongst them at small prizes. Next, they strengthened themfelves with New Ordinances, and made-New Imborfations, taking out their Enemies Names, and filling the Purfes with their Friends. And warned by the Ruine of their Enemies, they thought it not enough to have the Purfes thus replenished with Choice men; but to establish their Government the firmer, they confulted how. to have the Magistrates, appointed for Life and Death, elected out of the Chiefs of their Party; and to that end required, that those. appointed to make the Imborfations, should (together with the Old Senate) have authority to create the Nevv. They gave to the Eight of the Guard power of Life and Death

Digitized by Google

dinances in Florence,

ţ,

Book V.

Death; and enacted, that those Confined, though their time were expired, should not return, unless 34 of the Senate and Colledge (which contisted but of 37) should confent to their Restitution; they prohibited all writing to, or receiving Letters from any in Exile. And every Word, Sign, or Action, at which those in rule were pleased to take offence, were feverely punished; and if there were any new fuspition started in Florence, which came not within the former bounds, it was by new mulcts or tines, by them impofed, punished, and thus having driven out or impoverished all the adverse party, they fecured themselves in the Government. And that they might not want affiliance from abroad, but prevent these who by Forreign force might defign to offend them, they made defensive leagues with the Pope, Venetians, and Duke of Milan. Things thus fetled in Florence, Joan Qeen of Naples dies, Joan of and by her last will and Testament makes Nation Reyner of Anjon heir of that Kingdom. Al- dies. pbunfo King of Arragon was at the fame time in Sicily, who confiding in the friend-thip of feveral Neapolitan Barons, makes preparation to poffels himfelf of that Kingdom : but the Neapolitans, and many of the Barons, favoured Reyner. The Pope on the other fide was unwilling to admit either Reyner, or Alphonfo, but would have it go-verned by his Lieutenant: yet Alfonfo invades the Kingdom, and is by the Duke of Seffa received, and entertains feveral of the Princes

Machivel's Hiftory

Book

Council, or speaker of a Parliament, to propound Matters whereof the Magistrates and Councils should confult. This City has many Noble families fo powerful, that with difficulty they submit to the Commands of the Magistrates, and amongst the rest the Fregofi and Adorni claim one of the cheifest ranks: From these arrive the Divisions of that City, and the corruption of civil orders; for many times not only tighting among themselves, but taking Arms against the Government, it happens that one party is oppressed, and the other fules, and often those which are deprived of their Dignity, have recourse to Forreign assistance; submitting that Dominion which they cannot enjoy themselves to the jurifdiction of strangers. Whence it frequently followed, that those who reigned in Lombardy, commanded Genova, as now at the taking of King Alphonso happened. Among the chief of the Genovefe that occasioned the submission of that City to Philip, was Francis Spinola, the of whom (as it often happens to thole that betray their Country into Servitude) the so servi- Duke not long after grew Jealous ; whereat difcontent, he had made choice of a kind of free them. Voluntary Exile at Gaieta; where Refiding when the Sea-fight hapned with Alfonfo, and Behaving himfelf valiantly in that encounter, he thought he had afresh merited fo much of the Duke, that he might at least live fecurely at Genova ; but finding the Duke still continued his Jealousies (for he could le of Gmande attempts to 34

Digitized by Google

not not believe, that a man who loved not the liberty of his Country could love him) he determined once more to try his Fortune. and at one push restore Liberty to his Country, and Fame and Security to himfelf; for he faw there was no other way to gain a good opinion with his fellow Citizens, than to make the hand that gave the wound to heal it. And perceiving the universal indignation conceived against the Duke, for discharging King Alphonso, he thought it now a fit opportunity to put his defign in execution, and communicates this his determination to feveral, whom he knew to be of the fame Opinion, perfwading and encouraging them to joyn with him in it. It was on the folemn Feaft of St. John Baptift when Arismino (a new Governour fent from the Duke) entred the City, accompanied by Opicino the old Governour, and many Genoefes: Francis Spinola now thought tit no longer to delay the Attempt, but fallying out of his Houfe with those that were privy to his Determination, and coming into the publick Market-place, against which his Palace flood, openly proclaimed the Name of Liberty. 'T was miraculous to fee with what alacrity and readiness the people ran to that very Name; fo that none, that either for their own Benefit, or any other Advantage, loved the Duke, had time ei- . ther to take Arms, or fcarce to confult which way to flie. Arifmino, and fome Genovefe with him, fled into the Castle, which в W.15

15

Book V_

was kept for the Duke. Opicino prefuming, if he could recover the Palace, where he had 2000 Souldiers under his Command, he might either fave himfelf, or encourage his Friends to defend him, fled thitherwards ; but before he could reach the Piazza vvas flain, and his Body torn in feveral pieces, drag'd about the whole City. And the Genovefe having thus reduced the City under their own free Magistrates, within few daies after took the Cafile, and all the other ftrong, Places, garrifoned by Philip, clearly caffing off the yoak of Milan. This fuccels changed the face of things; for, whereas before all the Princes of Italy were terrihed, fearing least the Duke should grow too powerful, they had now fome hopes he might be dealt withal, and ftopt in his carrier; and notwithstanding the League lately made, the Venetians and Florentines made Peace with the State of Genova: Whereupon Rinaldo de Albizi, and other principal Men banished out of Florence, feeing these Diflurbances, and the course of things changed, entertained a hope they might perfwade the Duke to an open War with Florence; and coming to Milan, Rinaldo addreffes himself to the Duke in this manner; That We, once your Enemies, should thus confidently come to crave your affiftance, to reftore us to our Country, cannot be mondred at either by you, or any other that confiders worldly Af-fairs, how strangly they proceed, and how variable they are : for we can produce mani-Rinaldo de Albig.i perfwades else Duke of Milan eq. Wor with Florence.

Genova recovers its Liberty.

16

Digitized by Google

 foft

Book V. of Elarence.

felt and reasonable Excuses of our past and prefent Attions, both to you, and to our Conna try. None can blame that Man, that strives to defend bis Country, in what sever manner he defend it : Nor did we ever defign to injure you, but to guard our Country from Oppreffion; for which we appeal to your felf, who can testifie , That when the League was in a full course of Victory, no Soaner perceived we you inclined to a folid Peace, but we were more earnelt for it than your felf. Se that we are not conficious of having done any thing Should make us doubtful of obtaining favour from you: Nor can our Country complain, that we now encourage you to employ the fame Arms against it, which, with fa much ob stinacy we once defended it from; for that Country deserves to be Beloved by all its Citizens, that bears an equall Love to all its Citizens, and not that which adoring forme few, Post-pones all the rest. Nor les and one in General terms condemn all occasions of taking up Arms against our Country's for though Cities are bodies mixed, yet have they with simple bodies some resemblance: and a in these, many infirmities, are bred, which mithout burnings and incisions cannot be Cured, So in the other oftentimes happen those Inconveniencies and diforders, that a good and godly Citizen, where fire and Sword are necollary, would fin more in leaving the wounds uncured, than in applying those sharp remedies. And what greater Malady can a republick groan under, then Servitude ? or what is 5 B more 17

Machivel's History

Book V.

more proper and necessary, then that a fit remedy be applied to so violent a temper. That War only is just which is necessary, and these Arms pious, where no other hope is left. What Neceffity can be more preffing then ours, or what piety greater, then to redeem our Country ont of Slavery? Doubtless then our cause is just and merciful, which both you and we ought first to confider : Neither is Justice wanting on your part, fince the Florentines blave not been ashamed, after a league so solemnly, and folately agreed on, to conclude a peace with the Kebelling Genovele. Iberefore if for our sake you will not, yet let your own cause move you, and that the rather, because of the facility of the Enterprize , Nor let the Examples past affright you, whereby you have Experienced the power and obstinate defence made by that people, both which might reasonably deter you, were that City still as virtuous as before : but now alas ! tis quite the Contrary, for what Force is to be feared from that City, which has fo lately defpoiled it self of its riches and industry ? what refolution can be expected in a people divided by so many new and various enmities ? which difunions will be the caufe, why the riches they have yet left, cannot be employed in such manner as formerly : for men willingly expose their Patrimonies, when they see them expended for their own Glory, and the Honour and Safety of their Country, boping to reap that advantage by Peace, which War deprives them of ; but the Cafe is quite otherwise, when both in War and Peace they bebold

Book V. of Florence.

behold themselves oppressed; forced by one to suffer the Injury of their Enemies, and by the other the Infolency of their Governours; because the Avarice of their own Citizens is more prejudicial to a People, than the foil of their Enemies; for they live still in bopes to see a conclusion of this, but destair ever to behold an end of that. Befides, in former. Wars, you affailed a whole City, and are none to wage War only against the smallest part of it; You attempted then to take away the Power from many Citizens, now you ajfail only a few wicked Usurpers; Ion then fought to deprive a City of its Freedom , but now you endeavour to restore it to Liberty. And it is not reasonable to imagine, but such diffarity of occasions must produce as different effects; nay, you may almost conclude of certain Victory; which, hor much it will fortifie your state you may eafily judge, baving made Tokany your friend by the tyes of such high and confiderable Obligations, which in all your Enterprizes will stand you in more stead, than the whole Force of Milan; and, whereas, at other times, this Invasion would be branded as Violent and Ambitions, 'tradi now gain the Epithites of Jult and Compassi-onate. Let not therefore this opportunity slip, but confider that a your former Attempts upon this City, were attended with difficulty, damage and difgrace; this will be Crowned with success, advantage and honour. There needed not many words to perfwade the Duke to a War with Florence; for he that is · Machivel's Hiftory

5 B 3

Book V

The Duke endervors to recover Geenve,

Ìzo

is commanded by an hereditary Hate, and blind Ambition, is eatily led to any thing; and the fresh Injuries of the Genoveses made him the more inclinable but yet the remembrance of his vaft Expences, the Hazards he had been exposed to, and the Loss he 'had fo lately fultain'd, fomewhat ftartled him. This Duke, as foon as he had intelligence of the Revolt of Genova, had fent Nicholas Piccinino, with all his Men at Arms, and as many Foot as he could levy in the Country, against that City, to reduce it by force, before the Citizens had their minds fetled, or had established a new Government; confiding in the Castle of Genous, which still held out for him. And though Nicholas drove the Genovese up the Mountains, and took from them the Vale of Pozevori, where they had Fortified themselves, constraining them to retire within the Walls of their City, yet he found to many stops and difficulties, and so much resolution in the Genovele to defend themselves, that he was content at last to retreat. Whereupon the Duke, at the motion of the banished Florentines, gave order to affault the River on the Eastern Contines, and to profecute the War towards the Country of Fifa with all vigour imaginable, believing this Attempt would, from time to time, chalk him out the way how to proceed farther ; whereupon Nicholas befieges Serazana, and takes it; and after having laid waste many places, the more to increase the Florentines Jealoulie, he comes t0 to Lucca, giving out, That he was marching into the Kingdom of Naples to affilt the King of Arragon. Pope Engenius upon these new Accidents leaves Florence, and goes to Bolonia, where he treats an Accommodation between the Duke and the League; declaring to the Duke, that if he would not confent to the Ag cement, he fhould be neceffitated to confign over Earl Francis (at present his Confederate, and under his pay) to allift the League : but though the Pope took a great deal of pains in this Affair, his labour proved all in vain; for the Duke would confent to nothing unless Genova fubmitted, and the League would have that City free: whereupon, in delpair of Peace, all fides prepared for War. Nicholus Piccinino being come to Lucca, the Florentines Jealous of some new Defign, caused all their Forces, under the Command of Neri di Gino, to march into the Country of Pifa, and prevailed with the Pope that Earl Francis (hould joyn with him, and the whole Army make head at Sancia Gonda. Piccinino who lay at Lucca, defired free passage to the Kingdom, which being denied him, he threatned to force it. The Armies were equal in Men and Captains, and therefore both wary of tempting Fortune; and befides, withheld by the cold Scafon (for it was now December) lay many daies without any Action on either side. The first that Moved was Nichols Piccinino, who being informed, That if he flormed Vico 5B4

Vicó Pifano by night, he might eatily take it, made the Attempt; but not having the good fortune to carry it, he fackt all the Country, pillaging and burning the Borough of St. John alla Vena. The fuccefs of which enterprize, though in effect to little purpose, encouraged Nicholas to proceed farther, especially seeing the Earl and Neri yet ffirred not : whereupon he affaults St. Maria in Caftello, and Filletto, and carries them. Yet for all this the Flarentine Army lay fill, not that the Earl was afraid, but because the Florentine Magiftrates, out of respect to the Pope who endeavoured for Peace, had not yet decreed the War; but what the Florentines did in prudence, their Enemies attributed to Cowardize, and thence took. Courage to proceed to new Actions: whereupon, concluding upon the taking of Barga, they prefented themselves before it with all their Forces. The Belieging this Town made the Florentines lay alide all respects, and refolve not only to relieve Barga, but to fall upon the Territorics of Lucca: whereupon, the Earl advanced towards Piccinino, and engaging him near Earga overcame him, forcing him, in great diforder, to raife his Siege. Mean while the Venetians judging the Duke had broken the Peace, fent John Francisco de Gonzaga, their General, to Gbiaraddada, vvho ravaging and spoiling the Dukes Country, forced him to recall Nicholus Piccinino out of Tofcany; which Revo-

TheDukee Forces under Piccinino defeaied.

Book V. of Florence.

Revocation, together with the Defeat before given to Nicholus, put the Florentines in fuch heart, that they refolved to attack Lucca, vvith great hopes to become Masters of it: Nor had they indeed any great reafon to fear it, or vvere by any respect obliged to refrain it, fince the Duke, whofe Forces only awed them, vvas diverted by the Venetians; And the Lucchefi having received and quartered their Enemies, and encouraged them to the affault of their Towns, could not now complain of any wrong done them: In April 1437 the Earl fet 1437. forward vvith his Army; but before the Florentines yould make the Affault upon others, they thought fit to recover their own, and retook Sancia Maria in Castello, and all the other places taken by Piccinina; and then entring the Territories they be-fieged Camajore, vvhole Inhabitants, though faithful to their Lords, yet fear of a prefent Enemy prevailing over their fidelity to distant Friends, they yeilded : and with like Reputation vvere Massa and Serazana furrendred; which done, about the latter end of May the Army drew towards Lucca, all the vvay as they vvent deftroying the Corn, burning the Villages, cutting down the Trees, rooting-up the Vineyards, driving away the Cattle; and in a word, acting all the Out-rages and Hoftilities, the most enraged Enemy would or could do. Whilit Incen on the other fiele, the Luccheji feeing them- d A cfied. felves forfaken by the Duke, and despairing tö to defend their Country, had deferted it : And with Ramparts, Trenches, and all other convenient Fortifications, firengthned their City, not doubting but having men enough within', they might for fome time defend it, as in former Affaults made by the Florentines they had done: they only feared the mutable mind of the Commonpeople, who perhaps, wearied with the Siege, would be more concerned for their private danger, than for the Liberty of their City, and fo force them to fome bafe and dishonourable Composition. Wherefore, to heighten their Refolutions, they affembled them in the Market-place; where one of the gravest and wifest Citizens, spake in this manner : You ought alwaies to remember, 'that what's done out of Neceffity deferves neither commendations nor blame; and therefore, if you should complain that we have occasioned this War by receiving the Dukes Forces into our Territories, and permitting them to affault the Florentines , you are much in the wrong. You know well the ancient Enmity born to this State by the Florentine people, which no Injury of yours, nor Jealousie of theirs, but only your Weakness, and their Ambition hath occasioned; for the first gives them hopes to oppress you, and the last encourages them to perform it. Nor can you well imagine that any desert in you can quench, or any injury to them inflame their defires of offending you. Wherefore, as they strive to rob you of your Liberty, you mult labour

Labour to defend it; and at what either Party shall do to those ends, though all may be grieved, none can wonder: for though it may afflict us to see our Territories invaded, our Toppns Jackt, our Houses burnt, our Commery destroyed, yet none can be such a fool to admire at it, fince, were it in our power, me bould do the like to them or worfe: And, whereas they have begun this War upon Piccinino's coming bither, had be not come they would have found some other pretence, and perhaps the danger being deferred would have proved greater; we aught not therefore to blame his coming bither, but our own bard Fortune, and their Ambitious Nature: for we could not refule the entrance of the Dukes Forces into our Dominions, nor when they mer e entred, binder them from profecuting the War. Jou know that without some powerful Alliance we cannot be defended and what Potentate more proper to de it , both for Force and fidelity, than the Duke: He restored our Liberty, 'th reasonable be should defend it: He bath been a constant persecutor of all our ancient Enemies; if then, by not offending the Florentines. we should have incurred his Anger, we had both loft our Friend, and made our Enemy more powerful, and more apt to offend us : So that it is much better to bave this War with the Dukes love, than Peace with his diffleasure: And we have rea-Sou to hope he will refeue us from those dangers in which he bath engaged us, provided we do not, forfake him. You know well with ∞ba‡ what rage the Florentines have oft-times affaulted us, and with how much glory we bave defended our felves; even then when we bad no other bope than in God, and Time, and both of them miraculoufly preferved us : and if then we defended our felves, why should we despair of doing it now? All Italy bad then left us as a prey to them: now we bave the Duke on our fide, and may reasonably believe the Venetians will be flow in offending us; for the greatness of Florence will not be confiftent with their Interest : In former Adions the Florentines were more at freedom, and in more bopes of Affistance, and we in all points weaker; for then a Tyrant defended us, now we defend our selves: the glory accrued then to others, now 'twill be our Own: then united they affaulted us, now in dif-union; all Italy being filled with their Exiles. Finally, were none of these things Jo, Neceffity should urge to a resolute defence. The reasonable to withstand every Enemy, for they all profecute their own glory with our ruine; but above all we ought to dread the Florentines, whom our Obedience, Tribute, and Subjection will not content, but who aim at our Persons and Estates; with our Blood to fatiate their Cruelty, and with our Substance their Avarice : so that all forts and degrees among us ought to have them in detectation. Be not therefore difmayed to fee your Fields spoiled, your Towns burnt, your Castles gar-risoned or demolished; for if we fave our City, they will eafily again be recovered, but lifing ìt,

26

of Florence. Book V.

38 it, all will with it be utterly loft : preferving our Liberty, bardly can the Enemy preferoe our Towns; but losing our Freedom, in vain poffeß we any thing elfe. Stand therefore to your Arms, and when you fight remember, Ibat the reward of Victory will not only be the fafety of your Country, but of your Houses, your Wives, and your Children. These last words to animated the whole Multitude. that with an univerfal Cry they all promifed rather to die, than yeild, or confent to any Terms infringing their Liberty; and prepared all things necessary for the Defence of a City. Mean while the Florentine Army lay not Idle; and after unexpressible Damage done to the Country, took Monte Carlo on Articles, and from thence went and encamped before Uzzano, that the Luccheft, begirt on every fide, might become hopelefs of any relief, and confirmined by Famine, yeild. The Lucchesi (as it was but reasonable) seeing themselves thus Lucca streightned, had recourse to the Duke for of Milon. Aid, by all kind and obliging means recommending themfelves to his favour, fometimes in their Speeches fetting forth their own Merits; iometimes the Oppressions of the Florentines; and how much Courage it would add to his Friends, if he defended them; and how dif-hearten them, if he left them defenceless; and if they should lose their Lives and Liberties, He, with his Friends, would lofe his Honour and Credit with all those who, for His fake, should here-

Machivel's Hiftory Book V.

hereafter run themselves into any danger: adding Teats to their Speeches, to the end, that if the Obligations he had to them could not move him, Compation might. Infomuch, that the Duke having his old grudge against the Florentines, now joyned with his fresh Obligation to the Lucchefi and above all, defirous the Florentine Power thould not be increased by fuch an addition, determined to fend a great Army into Tofcany, or fo fiercely affail the Venetians. that the Florentines should be glad to raile their Slege to come and allift them. This Refolution taken, Intelligence was foon This brought to Florence, that the Duke was fending Forces into Tofcany, fo that their hopes of Success began to flag: however, that the Duke might be diverted in Lombardy, they folicited the Venetians to fet ups on him with all their Forces. But they were already diffeartned by the Marquis of Mantova's forfaking them, and taking the Dukes pay: whereby, being in a manner difarm'd. they replyed, that they were to far from being able to appear in a better posture, that they should not be capable to keep the field, if Earl Francis were not sent to be their General, with Condition that he fhould oblige himfelf in Perfon to pass the Po; for they would not fland to the old Articles, by which he was not obliged to pafs it; alleadging, that without a General they could not make War, and on none but the Earl could they rely, nor on him neither, unless

Google

Å.

of Florence.

bokV.

unless he were obliged to make War in all places. The Florentines were of opinion the War thould be hotly purfued in Lombardy; and on the other fide, without the Earl, they despaired of ever carrying Lucca : and very fenfible were they, that this Demand of the Venetians was not made for much out of any necessity they were in of the Earls prefence, as to hinder them of this Victory: On the other fide, the Earl was to go into Lambardy whenever the League appointed him, but he would not change his Covenants, unwilling to deprive himfelf of the hopes of that Alliance promifed him by the Duke. Thus were the Florentines distracted between two diverse Passions. The defire of having Lucca, and, The fear of a War with the Duke. But (as for the most part it happens) fear prevailed mind they were content that the Earl having taken Uzzano, should go into Lombardy. There remained yet another difficulty, which not being in the Florentines power to compose, perplexed them, and created more doubt than the former: for the Earl would not pass the Po; and the Venetians, if he did not, would not entertain him. So there being no way of accommodation to be found, but by the one yeilding to the other, the Florentines perfwaded the Earl, that he should write a Letter to their Senate, obliging himself to pass that River; alleadging, that a private Promise could not make a breach of publick Covenants, and that he

Machivel's Hiftory

Book V.

he might afterwards make War without pailing it; only this advantage would accrue to them, That the Venetians having begun the War, would be forced to profecute it, and thereby give a diversion to those Forces they to much feared : and to the Venetians, on the other fide, they affirmed. . That this private Letter was enough to oblige him, and therefore they ought to content themselves with it; for if they could contrive how the Earl might still preferve his Refpects to his Father in Law, it were convenient to do it, and would be no way either for his or their advantage, without manifest necessary to discover it. Thus was the Earls passage into Lombardy contrived; who having taken Uzzano, and railed forme Bulwarks about Lucca, to streighten the Befieged, mying the Charge of the War to his Lieutenants, he passed the Alps and comes to Reggio; where, the Venetians grown jealous of his proceedings, to make tryal of his intentions, dispatche away a Meffenger to him with Orders to pais the Po, and joyn the reft of their Forces; which the Earl utterly denying to do; there happened many reproachful words between him and Andrea: Manroceno, who was fent from the Venetians; the one telling the other, that he had a great deal of Pride, but little faith ; and feveral protefts being made, by the one That he was not obliged to the Service, and by the other, That there the uld be no Mony paid. The Earl returned nto Tofcany, Biftruft between the Venestans and Florentmes.

20

of Florence.

Book V.

Telcany, and Manrocena to Venice. The Earl was by the Florentines quartered in the Country of Pifa, and they were still in hopes to induce him to renew the War against Luca, which they found he had no great inclination to; for the Duke underflanding that out of respect to him he had refused to pais the Po, thought he might by his mediation fave Lucca likewife, and therefore defined him to confent to make Peace between the Lucebefs and the Florentimes, and (if he would) include him alfo; putting him in hopes he should, when he pleafed, be martied to his Daughter. This Alliance tickled the Earl, being in hopes by means of it (the Duke having no Male iffue) to make himself one day Lord of Milan : wherefore he delayed the Florentine proceedings, declaring he would not ftir till the Venetians had made full payment of his Conduct Mony: nor was their pay fufficient; for deligning to live lecurely in his own Estates, he thought it convenient to have other supports than the Blowntimes 5' and if he were deferred by the Fendsians, it was time to look about him; canmingly threatning and intimating an Agreement with the Duke. These Deceits and Cavils vexed the Florentmos at heart; fer they not only beheld Luces loft to them, but were in fear of their own Effates, whenever the Duke and Earl should joyn ... together : And to induce the Venetians to make payment of the Mony promifed, Colmo

Colmo de Medici went to Venice, believing by his Reputation he might incline them to The Matter was at large disputed in . it. their Senate : The state of Italy laid down before them, what force the Duke was of, and where the strength and reputation of Arms now lay; and that if the Duke and Earl did joyn, the Venetians would be driven to Sea, and the Florentines in danger of their Liberty. To which the Venetians replyed. That they knew their own strength. and that of Italy; affirming, it was not their Cultome to pay Souldiers that ferved others; wherefore the Florentines should take care to pay Sforza, fince he had done them Service; but certainly it were fitter if they would possels their City in fecurity, to abase the Pride of the Earl, than pay him; for the Ambition of the man was boundlefs, and if now he were paid without doing Service, he would ere long demand fomething more difhoneft and dangerous; therefore in their opinion, they ought in time to find fome way to bridle his Infolency, and not fuffer him to become incorrigible; but if they either for fear, or any other defign, thought fit to preferve his friendship, they might pay him if they pleafed. Thus Colmo, without effecting any thing, was fain to return : Yet the Florentines used their endeavours with the Earl, that he might not withdraw himfelf from the League; and he was indeed unwilling to defert them, but his earnest defire to niference e wee Venice and Florence about pay ing Sforza.

Digitized by Google

ب ۱

to conclude his Marriage kept the Balance fo even, that the Scales upon every Accident (as one foon after happened) were ready to turn. The Earl had left the charge of his Towns, in La Marca, to one Furlano a principal Leader of his; who being long folicited by the Duke, discharged himself of the, Earls Service, and entred into the Dukes pay; which made the Earl, out of fear to himfelf, lay afide all Respects, and come to an Agreement with the Duke; and one of the Articles was, That he should no farther concern himself in the Affairs of Romania and Toscany. Upon this Conclusion, the Earl instantly perfwaded the Florentines to make Peace with Lucce, and reace bea indeed in a manner forced them to it; fo ween , that feeing no other remedy, in April 1438, Ences and Articles were concluded on; by which the Lucchefi still remained free, and the Florentines had Monte Carlo, and several other of their Caftles left in their possession: then with Letters of Refentment they filled all Italy, declaring, That fince God and Men had confpired that Lucca should not fall under their subjection, they had now made Peace with it: and feldome have any grieved more for the loss of their own, than the Florentines did, that they could not vio+ lently feize the Poffessions of other men. In these times, though the Florentines had fo many Irons in the fire, they forgot not to have a care of their Neighbours, and to adorn their City. Nicholas Fortibrace, 5 C 2 who

Digitized by Google

- 3-3

who had married a Daughter of Earl Poppi, was as hat been faid before, dead. That Earl had at Nicholas's death , the Borough of Sc. Sepelebre, with the Caftle, in his hands; which he held during his Son in Law's life, as Governour under him; after whole death, he pretended still to keep poffeffion of them for his Daughters Dower, refusing to furrender them to the Pope, who (as of right belonging to the Church) had domanded them: whereupon he fent the Patriarch with Forces to recover them: the Earl doubting himfelf unable to endure the thock, offers the Town to the Florentines, who tefuied it; but at the Popes return to Florence, mediated an accommodation between him and the Earl, and finding fome difficulty in the agreeing them, the Patriarch affaulted Cofentino, and took Prato, Vecchio and Romena, and in like manner offered them to the Florentines; who refuled the acceptance of them, unless the Pope would first confent they might reflore them to the Earl; to which the Pope, after tedious Disputes agneed; but would first have the Elerentines promile, that the Earl thould furrender the Borough. The Popes Affair thus feeled, the Florentines thought convenient (their Cathedral Church called St. Reparate, which had a long time been building; being now brought to fuch per-The Pope fection that Divine Service might there be crates the celebrated,) to request his Holines in Per-Cathedral of Florences fon to Confectate it, who readily conferted ; and

Digitized by Google

. .

Confe-

$4

and for the greater Magnificence of the Oity and Church, and to do the Pope more Honour, a Terrace was built from St. Manie Novella, where the Pope refided, to the Church that was to be Confectated, four yards wide, and two yards high, covered over with very rich Cloth, on which only the Pope and his Court, with the Magistrates, and those Citizens appointed to attend him, walked ; the reft of the Commonalty and People, flood either in the Streets, in their Houses, or in the Church, to behold to glorious a spectacle. Having performed all the Ceremonies usual in fuch Confectations, the Pope to give a greater Testimony of his love to the City, honoured with Knighthood Giulian Avanzavi, then Gonfaloniere of Juffice, and in all times accounted a Noble and worthy Citizen; and the Senate, to appear no lefs kind than the Pope, gave him the Government of Pife for a year. In these times there was some Difference difference between the Roman and Gneek between Churches about Divine Service, and because the Reman in the last Council held at Basil, much had and Greek. been faid about it by the Western Prelates, it was there determined, that all possible diligence should be used to induce the Emperour and the Greek Prelates to affemble in Council, and there to make tryal if they could reconcile the Differences, and confent to the Roman Church. And though this determination intrenched upon the Majefty of the Emperour, and much more grated 5 C 3 on on the proud spirits of his Prelates, to yeild to the Pope of Rome, yet being opprefied by the Turks, and confidering they were not able of themselves to defend themselves. that they might with more fecurity demand and rely upon the Western Affistance, they refolved to fubmit; and to the Emperour, Patriarche, and other Greek, Prelates and Lords, in order to an affembly (according to the Conclusion agreed on at the Council of Bafil) came to Venice, where terrified with the Plague, they refolved in Florencer to end their Differences ; and after feveral Meetings of the Roman and Greek Prelates, and many long and tedious Disputes, the Greeks fubmitted, and came to accord with the Church and Pope of Rome. The Greek The Peace being concluded between Florence and Lucco, and between the Duke and the Earl, it was thought an easie matter to pacific those Arms which still infested Italy, effectially in Lombardy and Toscany: for as for the War in Naples between Rinate of Anjon, and Alphonso of Arragon, it could not be expected to be put an end to without the ruine of one Party: And though the Pope was diffatisfied, having lost many of his Towns, and that all men were fenfible of the Ambition both of the Duke and the Venetians; yet, most thought the Pope out of necessity, and the others out of weariness would lay down their Arms: But things fell out quite contrary, for neither the Duke nor the Venetians would be . . . quiet ; · • (ubmit.

35

of Florence.

quiet; whence it happened that new Forces NewTronwere raifed, and Lombardy and Toscany again besin made Seats of War. The Dukes haughty and Ty mind could not endure the Venetians thould any. be Masters of Bergamo and Brescia, especially feeing them in a Warlike posture, and daily molefting and disquieting his Country. He therefore supposed, that if they were once deferted by the Pope, the Florentines, and the Earl, he could not only ftop their Carreir, but recover his own Towns. To compass which, he defigned to take Komania from the Church; guelling, if he were Lord of that Province, the Pope could no way hurt him, and the Florentines feeing the fire at their own doors, either would not ftir for fear, or if they did, must very difadvantagioufly affault him. The Duke alfo very well knew, how angry the Florentines were at the Venetians about the businels of Lucca, and therefore thought they would not be over-eager to ingage in their guarrel. As for Earl Francis, he doubted not but the late Agreement, and the hopes of his Alliance would keep him fieldy; and that he might eschew all manner of offence, and give the lefs alarum, being by his late Articles with the Earl, bound not to invade Romania, he privately treated with Nicholas Piccinino, that he (as if led by his proper Ambition) should take that Enterprize in hand. Nicholas, at the time of making the Agreement between the Duke and Earl, was in Romania, and appeared 5C 4 highly highly difpleafed at the Dukes entertaining a Friendship with his perpetual Enemy, and thereupon with his Army withdrew to Camurate, a place between Furli and Ravenna; where he incamped as if it had been for a long time, and with delign to flay there till fome new Expedition prefented. And the fame of his anger and discontent being fpread abroad every where, Nicholus fent to acquaint the Pope, how well he had deferved of the Duke, and how ingratefully he had been dealt withal by him; and withal let him know that Philip gave out, That having now all the Arms of Italy (under the two principal Captains) at his Command, he would feize the whole Province: But yet, if his Holinels plealed of those two Captains (the Duke perswaded himfelf to be at his dispose) one should become his Enemy, and the other be useles to him; for if he would provide Mony and pay his Souldiers, he would fall upon those Estates the Earl had rob'd the Church of, and giving him his hands full in his own defence, hinder him from prefling forward the Dukes Ambition. The Pope believed this feigned Tale, it appearing reafonable to him, fends Nicholas five thoufand Ducats, with mountains of Promifes, offering Estates to him and his Sons. And though the Pope was often Advertized of the Deceit, yet he would needs believe it a Reality, and would hear nothing to the e contrary. Oftáfio da Polenta was now Governour

: 37

N cholas Psecunino eunningly deceives the Pope.

38

of Florence. Book V.

vernour of Ravenna, for the Church. Nicholas thinking it fit no longer to delay the Nichelas feizes all execution of his Deligns (his Son Francis Remains having to the Popes great Ignominy already fackt Spoleto) refolved to befiege Ravenna; either because he thought it might eafily be taken, or having some private Intelligence with Oftafio; however it were, in a very few daies lying before it, it was furrendred on Articles ; and foon after Bolonia, Imola and Farli followed the fame fortune : but what was most to be admired, of all the Castles held for the Pope in that Territory not one but fubmitted to Nicholar. Nor did he think these injurious Actions wrong enough to the Pope, but with reproachful words he derided him ; writing to him, That he had defervedly loft his Townsi, fince he had not been alhamed to make a breach of Friendship between him and his old Frieud the Duke, by having filled all Italy with Letters, fignifying, that he had deferted the Duke and joyned with him. Nicholas thus possessed of Romania leaves it in Charge to Francis his Son, and with the choice of his Army marches into Lembardy, and joyning with the Dukes Forces, enters the Territory of Brescia, which in a enters the 1 errupory of oregicia, which in a short time he becomes Master of, and be belieged, fieges the City. The Duke, who was defirous the Venetians should be left as a prey to him, excutes himfelf to the Pope, the Florennines, and the Earl, declaring, That what Nicholas had done in Komania, if it were were a breach of Articles, was also contrary to his Orders, and by private Meffengers infinuated into them, that he would give evident demonstrations of the dislike of it. by punishing his disobedience when time and opportunity ferved. The Florentines and Earl gave no Credit to him, believing (as indeed the truth was) that the Attempt was made only to keep them at a bay, whilft he tamed the Venetians; who, proud and haughty (believing themselves able to oppole the Dukes Forces) vouchlafed not to ask any ones Affiltance, but under Gattamelata their General maintained the War. Earl Francis, with the confent and favour of the Florentines, was defirous to have gone to the Affistance of King Renate, if these Accidents in Lombardy and Romania had not withheld him; and the Florentines were willing to have encouraged him to it, by reason of the ancient Amity between their City and the House of France ; but the Duke favoured Alphonso, fince the Friendship contracted in the time he was his Prifoner: however, both one and the the other forbore whilst the War was at their own doors, undertaking distant Enterprizes. And now the Florentines feeing Romania furprized, and the Venetians 2(faulted (from others ruine, fearing their own) defired the Earl to come into Tofeany, where they would confult what was to be done to oppose the Dukes Forces, which were now greater than ever ; affirming, that 40 that if fuddenly his Infolencies were not fuppreffed, all that held any States in Italy might justly fear to rue it. The Earl was fenfible that the apprehensions of the Florentines were reasonable; yet his earnest defire to perfect an Alliance with the Duke kept him in suspence: and the Duke, who knew how much that defire swayed him. fed him ftill with hopes; and to reftrain him from engaging against him, let him know that his Daughter was now Marriagable, and carrying on matters to far, that preparations were made for the Wedding. which yet by fome Cavils and Delaies was again obstructed: However, to keep fair, and gain the firmer Credit with the Earl, the Duke added vvorks to his vvords, fending him Thirty thousand Florins, which, by the Marriage Contract he vvas to pay him. Still the War grew hot- The Wer ter in Lombardy, and the Venetians daily grows here loft fome Town or other ; and all the Vef- in Louis · fels of War that they had fent up the River, vvere by the Dukes Forces taken; the whole Territory of Verona and Brefcia by them possessed, and those two Cities to streightly Belieged, that it was generally thought they could not long hold out. The Marquis of Mantona, vyho had many years been Gener ral of the Forces of that Republick, even beyond all belief, had forfaken them, and joyned with the Duke; fo, that what their Pride would not let them do in the beginning of the War, their fear made them fubmit

39

Machivel's Hiftory Book V.

Submit to in the progress of it. For now. feeing there was no remedy, but engaging the Florentines and the Earl, they fought their Friendship, though it were with shame and doubt of Success; for they were jealous leaft the Florentines thould return them the fame Answer they had received from them in the bufiness of Lucca, and concerns of the Earl : But they found them readier than they hoped for, or than their Deportment had deferved ; for hatred to an ancient and inveterate Enemy prevailed in the Florentines, above their References . and Anger conceived against old and tried Friends: And having long fince forefeen the Necellities into which the Venetians would fall, they had endeavoured to convince the Earl that their Ruine vyould likewife be his; and that he deceived himfelf. to believe the Duke woold efferm him lefs in his good than evil Fortune; for the reason of the Dukes promising him his Daughter, being only the fear he ftood in of him, those things Necessity makes men promile, it must likewife make them perform; and therefore it ought to be his defign still, to keep the Duke in the fame Ne-cellity, which without the Venetians greatnefs could not be done. Wherefore he ought to confider, That if the Venetians were driven from the firm Land, he would not only want those Conveniencies he might receive from themselves, but even those, which all others for fear of them, might other-

Book V. of Florence.

otherwise contribute; and if he well confidered the other States of Italy, he voould find fome of them poor, and others his Enemies. Nor were the Florentines alone (as himfelf had often faid) fufficient to fupport him; fo that upon all accounts, it was his main Concern to preferve the Venetians power on the Continent. These perfwahons added to the Hate newly conceiv'd by the Earl against the Duke, for thinking himfelf mocked in the Alliance, made him confent to an Agreement; yet would he not be obliged to pass the River Po. These Articles were concluded in February 1438, The Vonby which the Venetians agreed to pay two thirds, and the Florentines one third of the and Hatt Charge ; and both bound themfelves to the Frank defence of the Earls Territories in La Marsa, at their proper Cofts. Neither was the greeness League yet content with these Forces, but joyned to themfelves the Lord of Faenza, the Sons of Messer Pandolfo de Malatesta de Rimini, and Piero Giampagolo Orfino: but though with large Promifes they tempted the Marquis of Mantona, yet they could by no means withdraw him from the Dukes Pay and Friendship; and the Lords of Faenza (after the League had concluded and setled their establishment) finding a better Bargain, revolted to the Duke; which put the League out of hopes of lo foon difpatching the Affairs of Romania, as they онсе thought. At this time in great diftres vvas Lombardy, for Brescia was 1438,

Digitized by Google

ſo.

The Difreis of Lemberdy.

fo closely befieged by the Dukes Forces, that all men thought it would be forced through Famine to furrender : Nor was Verona in any better condition; and in the judgment of most men, either of these Cities being taken, all further preparations of War would be in vain, and all the expence hitherto made, be loft., So that now there vvas no other remedy to be proposed, but the marching of Earl Francis into Lombardy: In which there appeared Three main difficulties; First, The dispoting the Earl to pass the Po, and profecute the War every where: In the fecond place, The Florentines were extreamly apprehensive of being left at the Dukes discretion, if the Earl were drawn off from their Assistance; for the Duke could eafily retire into his firong holds, and with part of his Army attend the Earls motions, and with the remainder, joyning with their Rebels, come into Tofcany; the fear of which extreamly terrified the prefent Government. The third was, Which way the Earl should march to joyn with the reft of the Venetian Forces, which lay in the Country of Padona. Of these three Difficulties the fecond which concerned the Florentines was the most doubtful ; yet they sensible of the necessity, and tired with the Venetians importunity, who inceffantly demanded the Earls Advancing, declaring, That without him they must abandon all, submitted the fear and suspicion of their own fafety to the necessities of their Allies. So

Book V.

of Florence.

So there now remained only the difficulty of the Way, which was concluded must be fecured by the Venetians; and because Neri di Gino Capponi had been successful in making the Agreement with the Earl, and Not cap perfwading him to pais the Pa, the Senate point form thought ht to fend him Express to Venice, to Venice to endear this favour to that Senate, and to confult about the Way, and fecurity of the Earls paffage. Neri takes his way to Ce-Sena, and from thence by Sea to Venice; nor was there ever any Prince received with more Refpect and Honour by that Senate; for on his coming, and on what by his means they were to order and determine, they thought the Honour and Safety of their Empire depended. Neri being admitted into the Senate, addressed himself to the Duke in this manner : Thofe Lords that fent His speech me (most Serene Prince) have ever been of to the se, opinion, That the Dukes greatness would be the ruine of this State, and of our Commonwealth, and therefore the welfare of both States depends on your Greatness and ours ; bad this been believed by your Lordships we should have found our selves in a better condition, and your Estates would have been secured from those dangers which now threaten them; but because in due time you gave no Credit to m, we were made incapable of applying quick Remedies to your Difasters, and you of readily demanding them ; for you have not findied us either in your Adverfity or Properity, nor perhaps do you yet know that it

Machivel's Hiftory Book V.

46

it is our semper still to love those me have once loved, and atwaies to bate them aggingt sobom we have once justiy conseived a barred. Bè your felves the Witneffes of the love we have ever born this mift Noble Senate, by the knowledge you bave, baw, to our own apparent damage, we have aften font our Forces into Lombardy to your affitance and furcour; and the whole World zan testifie the have me bare Philip, and his rebale Family: Nor can fach ancient Lave, and so fotled a Hanned be easily cancelled. We were, and are certain, that in this War we might have flood Nexters, to the Dukes infinite fatisfaction, and no great hazard to our felues; for abongh, by your raise, be should become Lord of all Lombardy , yes would the remaining Force of Italy be Sufficient to keep us from defpair; for with Power and Dominian Empy and Enemies increase. which are usually attended with War and defruction. We are likewife very fenfible bow suft an Expense might have been avoided by our declining abis War, how many eminene dangers we might have efcaped : for whereas Lombardy is none made the Seat of it, by our affifting you is may be convird into Tofcarry : Yet our success Affection to you but made us banifs all those jealensies and sufficcions, and we have refaired with the fame power and affolian so affit your, a mersonald defend our selves if we were Assaulued. Wherefore, My Lords, judging it of abfolme mecoffity, before all usings, to nelieve Verona and Brefein, and believing mitheut the East it

$\operatorname{Book} \nabla$. of Florence.

it could not be done, we fent first to personade bim to pass the Po, and make War in all places; for you know be was not obliged to pes that River; yet bave I disposed him to it. prevailing with him by the same Reasons that prevailed over us : And is be seems to be invincible in Arms, so he will not be overcome in Courtefie, but contends to be the Superiour in that Generofity and Liberality be beholds in us towards you, for he knows well to bow many dangers Toscany is exposed by his drawing thence by Forces : yet feeing we bave Postponed our own safety to your relief, be will not prefer any Refrects or Interests of his own before it. I come therefore to offer you the Earl, with seven thousand Horse, and two thousand Foot, ready to go any where whither you shall Command him, to find out your Enemies, I intreat you therefore (and it w also both my Lords and His Request) That as the Numbers of his Men exceed what he is obliged to ferve with, fo your Liberality will extend to him a proportionable Recompence; that be may not repent his coming into your Service, nor we be forry that ever we encouraged bim to it. This Speech of Neri's to the Venetian Senate, was liftned to with as much Attention as if it had proceeded from an Oracle, and fo much did his words move the whole Auditory, that not havingthe patience (according to Cuttome) to ler the Prince return him an Anfover; they all role up , and lifting up their hands with tears of Joy (many of them) in their Eyes, 1 return-

5 D

Digitized by Google

47

#8

ectained thanks to the Florentines for fb friendly an Affiftance, and to him for having . with fuch speed and celerity dispatched it ; promising, That no process of time thould ever blot the memory of it out of theirs, or the hearts of their Posterity; but that their Country flould be in Common to the Florentines and them. These Kindneffes and Congratulations ended, they began to Confult what way the Earl had best March, that Bridges might be crected, Paffages levelled, and other Securities provided. Four Wates were proposed; one from Ravenna along the Sea-fide, but this being narrow. and Arcightned by the Fenns and Marishes, was not approved : The next was by the Direct way; but that was impeached by a Tower called Uccellino, kept for the Duke, which must of necessity be won before paffage could be had, and that was hard to do in fo fhort a time; for the leaft delay might rob them of an Opportunity of relieving their Cities, which above any thing required hafte and diligence: The third was by the Woods of Lugo; but because the Po had o'refwell'd its Banks, that Paffage was made not only difficult but impossible. There remained only the fourth, which was by the Champion of Bolonia, and to passing at Ponte Puledrano, at Cento and at Pieze. march between Finale and Bondeno to Ferrows, from whence, by Land and Water, they might eafily Transport themselves into the Country of Padens, and joyn with the the Venesian Forces: though there was in this Way many difficulties, and poffibly some Passes might be Guarded by the Enemies Forces, yet, as lefs dangerous than any of the reft, it was pitcht upon; which was no fooner fignified to the Earl but with admirable celerity he Advances, and on the 20 of June came into the Country of Pa-The coming of this Captain into stored dona. Italy gave fuch Courage to the Venetians, comes and all their Subjects, that whereas before they despaired of their own Safety, they began now to think of Conquering others. The Earl in the hrst place marches to the Releif of Verona, to stop whole passage Nicholas with his Army advances to Soave, a Caffle feated between the Territories of Vicenza and Verona, and encompassed with a Ditch cut from Soave to the Marifhes of Adice : the Earl perceiving his passage through the Plain thus impeached, thought he might yet pass the Mountain way, and fo get between his Enemy and Verona, imagining, that either Nichalas would not believe he would adventure that way, being to rough and craggy, or when he did believe it, it would be too late to ftop him ; and having provided eight daies Provisions, advances with his whole Army over the Mountains, and arrives under Soave in the Plain: for though Nicholas had fortified fome Posts, and railed fome Bulwarks to impeach his paffage this Way, .yet the Works and Guards, as not much regarded, 5 D 2 proved

Digitized by Google

Ĩ.

Machivel's Hiftory Book ∀.

proved too weak to withftand him. Nicholas therefore feeing his Enemy, contrary to all imagination, got into the Plain, that he might not be forced to fight upon difadvantage, retreated on the other fide the Adice, and the Earl without any opposition enters Verena. The Earl proving thus fuccelsful in his first Attempt, and with fo much eafe raifing the Seige of Verona, the next thing to be undertaken was the relief of Brefcia. The City is lo well feated upon the Lake of Garda, that though it be blocked up by Land, it may still be supplied with Provisions by Water; which had made the Duke, with leveral ftrong Parties, fortifie himfelf upon the Lake, and in the commencement of his Victories, had gar-rifoned all those Towns that might fend Brescia any Relief by the Lake. The Venetians likewise had Gallies there, but not of firength enough to oppose the Duke. The Earl therefore judged it requisite, with his Army on Land to affilt those Forces on the Water; for, by their joynt power, he was in hopes he might eatily win the Battle; he encamped therefore against Badilino, a Caftle feated upon the Lake, hoping, if he took that, the others would furrender. The Earl in this Enterprize found Fortune averse to him, for here great numbers of his Souldiers fell tick, fo that forced to raife his Siege he retreated to Zmo, a Calle of Verona, a place both plentiful and healthful. Nicholas feeing the Earl retired, to the the end he might not let flip this opportunity of making himfelf Lord of the Lake, leaves his Camp at Vegofia, and with a felect Party goes to the Lake, where with great Courage and fury he affaults the Venetian Fleet, and took almost all of them: After which Victory, most of the Califics remaining on the Lake furrendred to him. The Venetians terrined at these Losses, and fearing least Brefeia should yeild alfo, by Meffengers and Letters earnefily folicited the Earl to its releif. And the Earl perceiving all hopes of releiving it by the Lake cut off, and that by the Champion way it was impossible (by reafon of the Trenches, Ditches, Bastions and Bulwarks, railed by Nicholas,) amongst which entring against an EnemiesArmy he hazarded a manifett defeat and lofs, he determined by the way of the Mountains, as he had faved Verona, fo to fuccour Brefeia. The Earl having formed this delign, Decamps from Zeme, and by the Vale of Acri Marches to the Vale of St . And rea, and comes to Torboli and Penda. on the Lake of Garda, thence to Tenna, for to reach Brefcia he must of necessity take that Caftle : Nicholas having intelligence of the Earls intention, draws off his Army to Reschiera, and thence, with the Marquis of Mantona, and fome Chofen men of his own, goes to face the Earl; whom engaging with Nicholm be was defeated, his Army (quite broken Precinition and difordered) put to flight, many of his defined Men taken, and the reli escaping, part to the 5D3 Camp,

¢

Camp, and part to the Gallies. Nicholas faved himfelf in Tenns, but night being come on, he began to imagine, that if he flaid there till break of Day, 'twould be impossible but he must fall into the Enemies hands; fo to avoid a certain danger, he adventured a very doubtful one. Of all his Men Nicholas had none now with him but one Servant a German, of very great frength of Body, and who had ever been very faithful to him: This Man Nicholas perfwaded to put him in a Sack, and throwing him on his shoulders, as if he were carrying fome Forrage for his Master, convey him to fome place of fafety. The Camp lay still round about Tenna; but overjoyed with their Victory the day before, were in great diforder, and very negligent of their Guards: fo that it was easie for the German to feaure his Master; for having laid him on his shoulders, and being clad like a Porter, he passed without any stop through the whole Camp, and brought him fafely to his own Men. Had this Victory been as diligently profecuted, as it was fortunately won, it might have proved of greater ad-vantage to Brefcia, and more happy to the Venetians : But the true use not being made of it, the joy was foon blown over, and Brefcia remained in the fame diffress as before: For Nicholas being returned to his Camp, began to contrive with himfelf, how by some successful Exploit he might wipe off the stain of his late defeat, and deprive the Piccinino's ftrange elcape.

32

of Florence. Book V.

the Venetions of all means to releive Brefeis. He knew very well the feituation of the Cittadel of Vorona, and by fome Prifoners by him taken in that War, had underflood both how flenderly it was Guarded, and in what manner it might eafily be furprized. Wherefore he imagined that Fortune prefented him with an opportunity to regain his Honour, and convert the Enemies Joy for their late Victory, into Grief for a more confiderable Lofs. The City of Verona is stated in Lombardy, at the foot of those The feire Mountains that divide Italy and Germany, ation of fo that the City partakes formewhat both of vorma. the Plain and Mountain; the River Adice springing out of the Vale of Trent, at its entrance into Italy, diftends not it felf immediately through the Plain, but turning to the left hand along the fide of the Mountain, finds out this City, and paffes through the middle of it; not that it divides both parts equally, for it leaves a much greater proportion on the fide of the Plain, than of the Mountains: On the part towards the Mountain are two Cafiles, one called St. Peters, and the other St. Felice, which are stronger by Nature than by Art, and being feated very high, Command the whole City. On the Plain on this fide Adice, and upon the Walls of the Town are two other Fortreffes, distant the one from the other about a thousand paces, one of which is called the Old, and the other the New Cittadel; from one of these to the other, within the

'd'? , .

5 D 4

Yiceinine forprizes Verena, the City, is a Wall built which looks like a string to the Bow made by the ordinary Walls of the City, and all the space between one and the other is filled with Inhabitants and called Burgo de St.Zeno. Thefe Cittadels and this Burgh Nicholas defigned to furprize, which he thought might eatily be done, as well because of the usual negligence of the Guards, as beleiving the late Victory. had made them more carelefs, well knowing that no enterprize in War fucceeds better than that, which the Enemy is confident you cannot compass, or dare not attempt. Having therefore cholen out a firong Party. he (with the Marquis of Mantona) goes by Night to Verona, and without being difcovered, Scales and takes the new Cittadel, and from thence with his Infantry entring the Town, breaks open the Gates of St. Antonio, to give admillion to his Horfe. Those who for the Venetians had the Guard of the Old Cittadel, hearing first a noife, when the Guards of the New Cittadel were flain, and after, when the Gate was broke open, knowing they were Enemies, rung out the Bell, and founded an Alarum; which the Citizens hearing, were all in amazement and confution; and those who had most Courage took Arms, and ran to the Rectors or Governours Palace. Nicbolas's Party had in the mean time fackt the Borough of St. Zeno, and proceeding forward , the Citizens finding the Dukes Forces were got into the City, and perceiving no e : 5 way El E mars way how to defend themfelves, adviled the Venetian Governours to retreat into the Fortreffes, and fave both their Perfons, and the City; declaring, It was much better for them to fave their own Lives, and preferve the Riches of the City to a more fortunate Conjuncture, than by oppoling the prefent fury, die themfelves, and impoverith the Town for ever. Whereupon the Rectors or Governours, and all Venetians whatfoever, took the Cattle of St. Felice for their Refuge 3 after which the Chief Citizens went to find out Niebolus and the Marquis of Mantona, liefeeching them, that they would rather with Honoar enjoy that City rich and flourishing ; than to their own Infamy fuffer it to be mide poor and miferables especially i tince from their former Mafters, they had not defeived thanks, nor from them hate for defending themfelves. They were both by Nicholar and the Marquis comforted', and as much as possibly they could (in that hear of Military License) the City faved from spoil. And, because they were affured that the Earl would endeavour the recovery of the City, they throve with all imaginable Art and industry to get the Brong places into their hands, and those they could not they began to divide from the Town with Works and Trenches, that the Enemy might have no entrance from thence. Count Francis was at Ienna when the tirst News of this . Surprize was brought him, and he lookt upon upon it at first as an idle Story; but when by more certain intelligence he understood it to be real Truth, he determined with diligence and expedition to repair to great # Neglect; and though most of his principal Officers advifed him, that leaving both Verone and Brefcis to themselves, he should make an Attempt upon Viernas, that he might not by staying here be befieged by his Enemies; yet he would not confent, but refolved to make tryal of his Fortune in the recovery of that City, and turning in the midft of these doubts and Sufpendions to the Venetian Proveditors, and to Bernardette de Medici, who was Com-missary for the Florentines, he promised them certainly to regain the City if but one Caftle held out. Putting therefore his Army in order, with unexpressible Celerity he marches towards Verona; upon advice of which Nicholas beleived, that (as his Officers had before advised) he was defigned for Vicenza, but feeing him turn his Front towards the Town, and march directly up to the Caftle of St. Felice, he began to give orders for Defence, but all too late; for the Trenches and Works were not yet finished, and the Souldiers out of greediness of the Spoil, were all divided. and in diforder: nor could they be drawn together foon enough to make Head against the Earls Forces before they had reached the Caftle; by which they defended into the City, and most happily, to the great thame

5A

Ler Fran eir 1600vers Var

Book V. of Florence.

Isame and difgrate of Niebelas, and his whole Party reputiented it. Nicholai, tonis ther with the Marquis of Municia, field fith into the Cittadel, and afterwards into the Plains of Mantones where fallying the remains of their fliattered Forces; they went and again joyned therafterves with the Camp at Brefeia. Thus was Perone in the space of four dates both taken and loft by the Ducal Army. After this Victory Winter being fomewhat advanced, and the Seafon very Cold, the Earlihaving with much danger and difficulty supplyed Defets with Provisions, took up his Quarters at Versha, and gave Order that fome Galleys flight be built at Torboli, to the end, that by the fift of the Spring he might be fireng enough both by Land and Water to releive Brefeid. The Duke perceiving the War here at a fland, and his hopes of becoming Malter of Brefeia and Verona utterly cut off, and all this occalioned by the Florentine Mony and Councils, whom, fince neither the Injuries received from the Venetians could provoke, nor the large Promiles he had made, them perfwade, to alienate their Amity from that Republick, he refolved (that they might nearer home reap the fruit of those feeds they had fown) to invade Tofeanys to which he was both by Nicholas; and the Banished Florentines, encouraged; the first moved to it out of a defire to feize the Estates of Braccio, and drive the Earl out of La March; the other out of hopes to be re•

$7

Book V.

restored to their Country; and each had urged the Duke by the most preling Arsuments they could invent, to comply with their Defires. Nicholas told him, that he might both fend him into Tolcany, and still maintain the Seige at Brefeia: for being Lord of the Lake, and his Camp towards the Land well fortified and furnished with all stores, of War, having likewise other Captains and Souldiers to oppose the Earl; should he attempt any other Defign, which would be almost a madness to do, till he had peleived Brefeia, and the Releif of it was in a manner impossible : So that he might both wage. War in Tofcany, and still continuc it in Lambardy. Belides, the Florentines. would be constrained, as foon as he was entred their Territories, either to call homethe Earl or be loft, and which foever of these things happened gave him a certain. Victory. The Banished Florentines alleadeed; That as foon as Nicholas should with his Army draw nigh to Florence, it was impossible but the People, quite tired with heavy Taxes, and the more burthenfome Infolence of their Great men, would take up Arms against their Magistrates; and, That the approaches were calle to Florence, and the way open by Cafentino, by means of the Friendship between that Earl and Rinaldo de Albizi: Infomuch that the Duke being before inclined to it, was by their perswasions fully confirmed. Mean while the Venetians, though it were a very bitter Winter,

The Duke defigns to invade Tofcany.

Ú.

Book V.

of Florence.

Winter, left not off foliciting the Earl to relieve Brescia with his whole Army; in which the Earl denyed to comply with them, as a thing not to be done till Spring, and in that time they might get a Fleet in readinefs, and fuccour them both by Water and Land. But at this the Venetians were difgusted, and slackned their Provisions, fo that their Army began to wast away. All which things being certainly known to the Florentines, extreamly difmayed them, feeing the War brought to their own doors, restines in and little good done in Lombardy : nor were great fear they lefs perplexed with the Jealoufies they of the had conceived of the Forces of the Church not that the Pope was then their Enemy, but that the Patriarch, who had more Command in that Army than the Pope himfelf, bore them a deadly Hatred. This was John Vetteleschi Cornettano, first Apostolick Notary, then Bilhop of Rieanati, afterwards made Patriarch of Alexandria; and at laft Cardinal, with the Title of Cardinal of Florence. This Man was both Couragious and Crafty, and knew fo well how to play his game, that he was extreamly beloved by the Pope, and by him made General of all the Churches Forces, and Commanded in Chief in all the Popes Wars in Tofeany, Romania the Kingdom, and at Reme: whereby he got fuch power in the Army, and over the Pope, that the last was afraid to Command him, and the first would Obey none but him. This Cardinal being with his Forces

60

Forces in Rome, at the time that the Rumour was forcad abroad, that Nicholas defigued to invade Tofcany, redoubled the Florentimer Fears; the Cardinal having ewer since Rinaldo's banishment been a profest Enemy of their State, because the agreement made in Florence by his intermiffion was not observed, but rather managed to Rinaldo's prejudice, being the occation of his laying down Arms, and giving his Enemics the power of expelling him. So that the Heads of the State were fearfulthe time was now come of repairing Rinaldo's damages, if he joyned with Nicholas in the Invalion of Toleany. And they were the more doubtful of it, because they imagined Michelar's prefent departure out of Lombardy very unfeationable, leaving a Conquelt almost perfected, for a vory uncertain and doubtful one, which they could not believe, without fome hidden intelligence, or fecret intrigue, he would ever do. Of these their Suspitions they advertised the Pope, who was already sensible of his Errour in giving too much Authority to others. But whilft the Florentines were in this suspence, Fortune shewed them the way , how they might secure themselves against the Cardinal. This Republick kept in all places very diligent Spics to Gearch all Letters carried too and fro, that they might the better discover any Contrivance against their-State. It happened that at Monte Palciano fome Letters were taken, which the Patri-

Patriarch, without the Popes confent, had written to Nichelas Piccinine; and although they were written in unufual Characters. and the matter fo knotty and implicate. that no certain fense could be made of them. yet that obscurity, joyned with the practices of the Enemy, fo affrighted the Pope. that he determined to provide for his own fafety, and committed the Charge of the Affair to Antonio Rido of Padena, then Governour of the Caftle of Rome. He having his Commission, prepared to put it in Execution as foon as opportunity prefented. The Patriarch had deligned to go into Toscany, and being the next day to depart Rome, he fent to the Governour, that on the Morning early he should meet him on the Caffle-Bridge, for he had fomething to discourse with him. Antonio thought now his opportunity was offered, and having given instructions to his Guards. at the time waits for the Patriarch on the Bridge, which being very near the Caffle, for the more fecurity of it had a Drawbridge in the middle, which, as foon as the Patriarch was paft, ftopping there to difcourse with him, he made a fign to his Men to pull up the Bridge; fo that the Patriarch in an inflant, from General of an Army was become Priloner to the Gover- The Panour of a Fortrels. The People that fol- imprison lowed him began at first to make a Tumult; ed. but understanding it was the Popes pleasure, they were pacined. And the Governour

com

62

Machivel's Hiftory

Book V.

comforting the Patriarch with kind and Courteous speeches, giving him hopes all would be well : He answered, Ibat Great men were never taken to be let lasse again ; for these who deserved not to be imprisoned. did not deferve to be fet at liberty; and fo, soon after he died in Prison. After whose death the Pope appointed Lodovick, Patriarch of Aquileia, General of the Forces; and having hitherto refuled to concern himfelf in the Wars between the League and the Duke, he was now content to become a Party and promised to be in a readiness, for the defence of Toscany, with 4000 Horse, and Thus were the Florentines rid 2000 Fout. of this fear; yet still the fear of Nicholus remained, by reafon of the confusion of the 'Affairs of Lombardy, and differences of Opinion between the Venetians and the Earl. Wherefore to beget a right understanding, they fent Neri di Gino Capponi, and Giulian Avanzati to Venice, giving them Commillion to conclude how the War should be managed the year enfuing; and to Neri they gave farther Order, that having understood the minds of the Venetians, he should go to the Earl to know his, and to perswade him to fuch things as might be advantagious to the League, and neceffary for their lafety. These Ambassadours were scarce got to Ferrara, but they had intelligence that Nicholus Piccinino with 6000 Horfe was passed the Po, which made them hasten all they could, and being come to Venice, they

of Florence.

they found that whole Senare refolute, that Brefeis fould without any delay be relei-ved; for; that the City was not able to time reform hold out till Spring; of till a Navy were ved on the built; but if they found they had no other Releit of relyance, would yeild, which would make the Duke absolutely Victorious, and all their Territories on the main Land would be utterly loft. Whereupon Neri goes to Verone to hear what the Earl could alleadge againit it; who demonstrated by folid Rea- The Barl fons', That the marching his Army in that against it. Sealon towards Brefeia would be to no purpole for the prefent, and a future impeachment of the delign; for both in regard to the Time and Scituation, they could do Brescia no good but only diforder and tire his Army; fo that when Spring came that was hit for Action, he must be forced to return to Verona for a fupply of things ne-ceffary for the Service, which would be vainly confumed in Winter, and fo all the time proper for War would be fpent in go-ing and coming. There were with the Earl to Confult of these things at Verona, Messer Orfatto Inftiniani, and Meffer John Pijant with them; after many Disputes, it was concluded', That the Venetians for the fucceeding year should give the Earl 80000 Ducats, and to their other Souldiers forty Ducats each; and that they should folicite; that they might with the whole Army take the field, and fall upon the Dukes Tersitories, that in fear of his own Estates' 4 E he

The Malasefi defert the Venatians, and joyp with the Duke,

Sforfa's Speech to the Senate at Vonice.

he might recall Nisbolas out of Tofcany. Upon this Conclution they returned to Venice. The Venetions (the fum of Mony being to great) provided all things flowly. In the mean time Nicholas Piccinino procreded on his Voyage, and had alreadyreached Remania, where he had to far wrought with the Sons of Pandelfo Malatesta, that deferting the Venetians they joyned with the Duke. This revolution much displeased Venice, but more Florence, who were in hopes, by that way, to make fome reliftance against Nicholas; but feeing the Malatetti rebelled, they were difmayed, principally because they feared least their Captain, Fierogiampagolo Onfino thould be routed and rifled, and they thereby left difarmed. Nor did this News lefs daunt the Earl, who was afraid , by Nicholas's Invafion of Toscany, he should lose La Marca; and defirous to fave his own Effates he comes to Venice, and being introduced into the Senate he declared, How that an Expedition into Tokany would be advantagious. to the phole League ; for the War was to be profecuted where the General and Army of the Enemy lay, and not where his Towns and Caffles stood; for by defeating the Arany. the War is brought to an ifue, but by taking Torons, and leaving the Army intire, the War oftentimes breaks out the fiercer: Affirming, That La. Marca and Tolcany were both let, if Nicholas were non briskly opposed and they once in the Enemies bands, tbere 4 2 έı

64

there was no remedy kne Loppbardy must needs follow; but though a remedy might be found to prevent it, be did not understand spby be should abandon bis own Subjects, and bis own Friends ; for he came into Lombardy a Lord, and would not return sbence a prin vate Leader. To all which the Prince replyed : Thet it was apparent that, if be ance mares Rewith his Army went out of Lombardy, uny ply. if be did but repassible Po, all their Estates an the main were loft , nor mould they be at any farther expence to defend them : for be can't be thought wife who attempts to defend a thing be is certain to lofe; and the infamy is left to lofe Estate only, than Estate and Many too ; but when their Dominion was once extirpate, 'twould foon be discovered of what importance the Venetian Reputation was to the Support of Romania and Toscany: And there. fore they were of a quite different opinion to bis; for they believed, that whoe're o'recame in Lombardy would a recome elfembere, and the Conquest now was easie, the Dukes Estates being by Nicholas's departure left so meak that they may be past repair before he shall or can recal Nicholas, or provide other Remedies. That wheever examined the bottom of things would find, that the Dukes Sole end in fending Nicholas into Tolcany, was to dram the Earl from Lombardy, and remove the feat of the War from his own house elsewhere : Sathat if the Earl followed him (unless upon su extream necessity) be would have the glory to fee his defigns accomplished, and his inten-5E 2 tions

٤ć

66

tions brought to effect; but if they maintained she Army in Lombardy, and made the best provision they could in Toscany, be would difeern bis miftake too late, when he bad atterly lost Lombardy, and Conquered nothing in Tokany. Thus every one having faid, and replyed according to his Opinion, they concluded to attend patiently forme daies to discover what might be the effects of the Malatefi's Agreement with Niebolas, and if Pierogiampagolo might yet do the Florentines any Service, and whether the Pope would be stedfast to the League as he had promised. Some few daies after this Conclusion, intelligence was brought, that the Malatefti had made that Agreement more for fear than any evil intention; that Pierogiampagolo was marched towards Tofeany with his Forces, and that the Pope tellined more alacrity to affift the League than at first; which Advice setled the Earls mind, and he was content to stay in Lembardy, and that Neri Capponi should seturn to Florence with 1000 of his Horfe, and 500 others: And if things fell out fo that there was a necellity of the Earls prefence, he should but write, and he leaving all things clic would go. So Neri with his Forces came to Florence in April, and the fame day arrived there fikewife Giampagolo. Mean while Nicholas Piccinino having fetled Affairs in Lamagna, deligned to make a deform into Tojemy, and intending to pais by the Alps of the Bennes, and the Valley of Mone

Montone, he found that paffage to well guarded by the Valour of Nichelas da Pife. that he thought all his strength would be too feeble to force it. The Florentings upon this sudden Invasion being unprovided both of Souldiers and Leaders, had fent feveral of their Citizens with Foot, levyed in hafte to guard those Paffes of the Alps, among whom was Bartholomero Orlandini Kt. to whom was configned the guard of the Caffle of Marradi, and that pais of the Alps : Niekolas Piccinino perceiving he could not force the pais of St. Bennet, because of the Valour of the Guardian, thought he might cafily gain that of Marradi, because of the Cowardize of the Man appointed to defend it. Marradi is a Caftle feated at the foot of those Alps that divide Tofcanyand Komania; but on that part looking towards Keppania, and in the beginning of the Vale of La mona, though it be without a Wall, yet the River, the Mountain and the Inhabitants make it strong: for the Men are Warlike and faithful, and the River has fo worn into the Land, and made fuch deep Caves and holes, that by the way of the Vale it is impossible to approach it if a little Bridge be defended; and on the Mountain fide it is to steep and craggy, that it renders it very ftrong, and eafily defentible : Yet the Cowardize of Meffer Bartholomene made those men Cowhearted too, and the Cafile feens weak and defencelels; for no fooner heard he a Rumour of the Enemies approach 5 E but

'Machivel's History

Book V.

Nicholas Piccinino enters and spoils the Florentine Torritorist. bot abandoning all this firength, he fled away with his Men, and never flopt till he ennie to Borgo St. Lorenzo. Nicholas entring the defined places full of wonder that they were not definited, and alacrity that he had gained them, pafies forward into Mugelle, where he takes feveral Calles, and at Pa-Metino Res down with his Army, from whence he overrous, and forrages all the Country as far'as the Mountains of Fielde, and grew lo bold, that he paffed the Arno, Politing and deftroying the Country within three Miles of Florence. Yet were not the Flavinsines Blimayed, but firft of all applied thenic Wes to feeling the Government, of which they had little reach to doubt, fo much good will the Citizens Bore Colmos and belides the prime Offices of the City were reduced into the hands of a few porchit Citizens who with their Reveriey bridled there who were any way differented, or definers of Noverty's they had likewife this der ford With what Foites Meri, by the Agreement in Limbardy, was to return ; and in like manner were in expectation of the Popes Troops, 'which hopes till New's re-City in these diforders refolved to draw firth the Arthy , and fo far awe Nicholas that he mould not dare fo treely to ranfack the Country; and drawing a body of Foot Bat of the People , with those Horse he had, Enemy had garriloned; where encamping, he

Book VI of El

of Florence.

: 17

Digitized by Google

he prevented Niebolar's Incursions, and put the Cliffords in hopes that the Enemy would be forced to remove farther from their Walls. Nicholas Reing that at what time the Florensines were without any Force in the Gity no Tumitht not Commotion harpened; and under Randing how quietly and fourthy they lived within , thought in in Win to lofe more think but relowed on forme other Artempt, that to the Dimminus fending their Forces after him he might necellitate them we come to a Battle ; in which fil he had the better, he doubted nor but all things elfe would fucceed profperoully and well. "There was in Micholar's Aring Francis East of Poppi, who when the Enerty lay in Magella revolted from the Blachlinn, with whom he was before in Deagate "And though they having fome fulpicions of him, to engage his adelicy had increased his Pay ; and made him Go-Withour of all their Towns adjacent to his: Yet to powerful is the love of Factions in mich, that no advantage nor fear could make Nini forget the affection he bore Meffer Rinaldo, and those who had formerly governed the State; wherefore no fooner heard he of Nichola's approach ; but he joyned with tim, and with all garneltness folicited him to withdraw from the City, and march into Cafantino, fetting forth the ftrength of the place; and how he might with cafe from thenee Areighten his Enemies. Niebokas follows his Advice, and being come into 5 E 4 CasenMachivel's Hiftery Book V.

The Siege of St. Nicholas Cafile.

Cofentino, takes Romono and Bibiens , and then laies Siege to the Caftle of St. Nicholas. This Callle is feated at the foot of those Hills which divide Cafentino from the Yale of Arno, which flapding high, and haying within a ftrong Garrifon, made a ftout reliliance; notwithstanding Nicholas with Engines throwing Stones, and other fach Artillery, continually battered it. This fiege had continued for above twenty daies; during which, the Florentines endeavoured to draw together their Forces, and had aly ready affembled, under several Captains, 2000 Horfe, Commanded by Pierogiampa-Into as General, and Neri Capponi and Bernordo de Medici as Commiffaries, To thefe came four Meffengers from the Calile of St. Nicholas to befeech them to relieve them : the Commissaries having well examined the fcituation of the place, found there was no way to bring them Releif, but by the Mountains which alcend from the Vale of Arm, the tops of which would be posselfed by the Enemies Forces before theirs could reach them, they having the thorter way, and these having no means to conceal their coming ; whereupon the Commiffaries praiting their fidelity, gave them Orders when they could no longer hold out, to furrender. So Niebofar took the Cafile in two and thirty daies, and the loting to much time for so finall a purchase was, in a great measure, the occalion of the loss of his whole buliness for had he continued with his his Army near Florence, he had put these which governed the City to great fireights, who must with more Caution have strained Mony from the People, with more difficulty have railed Men, or indeed made any other provision whilst the Enemy was on the backs of them, than when he was farther offi and perhaps many might have been inclinable to have fecured themselves from Nicholas by Peace, fince they were not able to do it by War. But the defire Count Poppi had to revenge himfelf of fome Governours of Caliles, had for a long time been his Enemies, made him give this Counfel; and for his fatisfaction only Nicholas followed it, which proved the ruine both of the one and the other: And 'tis very rare that private Passion does not prove the impeachment of publick good. Nicholas purfuing his Victory, takes Kafina and Chiufi, In these parts Count Poppi perswaded him to stay, demonstrating, how he might, by difperting his Forces in Chiaft, Caprefe and La Piene, become Lord of the Mountains, and at pleasure make his descents into Cafontino, and into the Vales of Arno, Chiana and Teveri, attending every motion of the Enemy's but Nichelas confidering the roughness and cragginess of the place, told him, Ibas his Horfes could not cat ftones, and fo went thence to Borgo St. Sepolebro, where he found a kind reception. Whilf he was here, he made trial to gain the freindship of the Citizens of Castelo, but they i"

Book V. of Florence.

they being friends to the Florentines would not hearken to him. Then being defirons to have the Perugians at his devotion; he went with forty Horle to Pringhe , where boing their Gitteen he was honourably seorived , but in few dates they grew jealos of him ; and he treated many things with the Legate, and with the Permiane, but periected nothing : So teoriwing from them Soos Dacars the returned to his Army. Wext he drove a deligh how to get Coroise from the Florentines; but the Plot being discovered before Execution of it; an came to nothings Among the Cheif Chizens of that City was Barthelomon Senfe the going by Order of the Governour, to take Charge of the Guard at one of the Gates, was by a Country-man, his Friendy defired not to go unlefs he had a mind to be killed; where upon Bartholimen would needs know the meaning and depth of the Advice, and Hereby underfield all the Circumfances of the Plop, which he revealed to the Go. vernour st who having leauned the cheft of the Conspirators, doubles the Guards at the Gates, and failes expecting according to the Appointment made, that Wiebolas fould comes by Night at the thefe things were agitating in Tofemy, to the Dukes fright Jadvantage & Lombardy was not arquier to his great damage and loss for as foon as the Secton permitted, Earl ¥ . 1 Francis Nicholar's defign 10 furprize Corrona difcover'd.

France draws his Army into the Field, and the Venetians having propared a Navy on the Lake, he refolves first of all to make himfelf Master of the Water; judging if that were done other things would eatily follow. Wherefore with the Fenerian Fleet he makes an affault upon the Dukes, overcomes them, and takes all the Calles that were garriloned by Philip': whereupon the Ducal Forces, which by Land belieged Bref- Bart Fran cis, hearing the News of these Loffes drew winite off, and thus after three years Sidge Brefeta of Brefeia. was releived. In purfuit of this Victory the Earl tollows his Encitics, who were retreated to Soncino, a Caffie on the River Oggen, diflodges them, and makes them retreat to Cremona, where the Duke made Head, and on that part defended his Effates." But the Earl fireightning him every day more and more, fearful to lole part or all of his Effates, he began to be fertible of his wnadvilednels in fending Nacholus into Toftamy, and to correct his errour he writ to Ni- Tican cholas, letting him know in what condition recalled his Affairs were , and upon what torrering by the terrins he flood , and therefore deliring him that leaving Tefcany he would with alf speed repair into Lombardy. During this interval, the Florenthes having allembled all their Forces and joyned with the Popes, made Head at Anghlari, a Caffle feated at the foot of those Mountains that divide the Vale of Levere and the Vale of Chiant, di flant from the Borough of St. Seputchro four four Miles, a level ground ht for Harfe Service, and indeed apt for all Actions of War : But because the Florentines had intelligence of the Earls Victories, and of the revocation of Nicholas, they thought the work sizeady done before they drew their Swords; wherefore they wrote to their Commissaries that they should wave the Engagement, for Nicholas could not fray many daies in Talcany. This Committion coming to Niebels's knowledge, and feeing the necessity of his departure, that he might leave no. some unturned, he determined they should fight, beleiving he might find them unprovided and out of order, as not deligning a Battle; to which he was encouraged by Meller Rinaldo, Count Poppi, and other Banished Florentines, who beheld their own manifest ruine if Nicholas went thence; but by epgaging him to a Battle they were in hopes either to gain the day, or lofe themfelves bonourably. Having thus refolved, the Army advanced between the Cities of Castello and the Borough, and being come to the Borough, without their Enemies having any notice, they took from that Town 2000 Men, who confiding in the Valour and Promifes of the General, and withal greedy of Spoil, followed him. Thence in Battalia Nicholas marches directly towards Anghiari, and was come within lefs than, two Miles; when Michaeletto Attenduli efpied a great Dust, and conceiving it must be the Enemy, gives the Alarum. The Tumult

of Florence. Book V.

mult was great in the Florentine Ching; for they generally encamping without any Discipline, to their dilorder, Negligence was now added; for they not only beleived their Enemy at a great distance from them. but that he rather was intent upon flight shan tight; so that every one was difarmed and wandring from their Tonts, whither either their faucy, or the coolnels of the fade lod them: yet fuch was the diligence of the Commiffaries and General, that bofore their Encuries got up to them they were Armed and on Horseback, ready to sective the Charge : And as Michelette was the furth that discovered the Enemy, so he was the first that made Head against them, advancing with his Troops to make good the Bridge of the River, which croffes the way not very far from Anghiari. And Pierogianpagalo having, before the Enemies consist cauled the Ditches to be filled and levelled which were on each fide the Road, between the Bridge and Anghiari, Michelesto placing himself against the Bridge, Simonoine the Popes Colonel, with the Legat, drew sport the Right hand of him, and Pierogiampagola and the Florentine Commillaries on the Left, and the Infantry was disposed on both hands on the Banks of the River. So that the Enemy had no open way to come and affante them but directly over the Bridge, and the Florentines any where elle to hght but on the Bridge, fave only they had given Orders to the Foot, that if the Enemies Infantry weit out of the way to flank the Moo

Men at Anne, they should Charge them with sheir Groß-bows, that they might not wound our Horks in the flank as they paffed the Bridge. The first that Charged were by Misbelette bravely received, and foos by him repulsed ; but Aftorre and Francis Piecinina coming up with their feleft Troops, they Charged him in funiously that they gained the Bridge, and drove him to the foot of the Hill that goes up to Anghidri ; but they were again repulied, and driven back over the Bridge by these that Charged them in the flank. The Fight continued, thus for two hours, and formetimes Wishelst, and formesimes the Elerensings were Matters of the Bridge. And though upon the Bridge they had no adwantage against one another, yet, both on this and that fide the Bridge Nickolas fought at great diladvantage: for when any Party of Nicholas's partied the Bridge, they found great Bodies of their Enemies, which by the kneeling of the Ditches had room to draw up, and those which were weary were still seconded by fresh referves : but when the Florentimes happened to pals, Nichela could not conveniently fend in fresh fupplies heraufe of the freightness and viarrevened of the way , inclosed with Ditches and Treaches; fo that though many times Nisbular's Mon had paffed the Bridge, yet by the supply of freth Enemies they were alwaies driven back. But when the Florentimes had confectually won the Bridge, 284

ţ

¢

ť

İ

1

and their Men entred into the Road, Niebelas wanted time, through the fury of his Enemies and narrownels of the place, to draw in fuch supplies ; so that the Van falling back upon the Rear, and difordering Nichola one another, all the Army was forced to fly, receiving and most without knowing a Reason for it; defeated. ran towards the Borge. Then fell the Flereatine Souldiers to the plutter, which in Men, Mony, and Horfes amounted to a great Value ; for with Nicholas there faved themfelves not above 1000 Honfe: Those Johabitants of the Borge St. Scholebre that came for Prey, were made a proy of, being all taken and put to Ranform, their Colours and Carriages, were all salien: yet this Vi-Ctory was much more advantagious to Idcany than it was prejudicial to the Duke; for had the Florentimes loft the Day Toferry had been his, but his lofs was nothing built Arms and Horfes which good flore of Mony would foon recruit. Neither could ever any War be made in anothers Country with lefs danger than in these times; for info total a Rout, and to long a fight, which lasted four hours, there died but one Man, and he not by any valiant froak, but falling from his Horse was trod to death ; with to much fecusity did men them tight 3: foo being all on Horfe-back, indicovered with Arms, they were, while they fought, focure from death, and when they yeilded there was no reafon to kill them i to that fighting they were faved by their Arms, and yeilding by

Book V.

The week of Sile, glacis the Anales of date Tigot, by Quarter. This Battle (both for matters happening in, and after it) is a great example of the ill management of thole Wars : for the Enemy overcome, and Nicholus fied into Barge, the Commiffaries would have followed him and belieged that place to compleat their Victory, but many of the Captains and Souldiers politively refuted to obey them, telling them, They would first Scare their phunder, and drefs the wounded, and then perhaps go; but what is more remarkable is, that the next day at Noon, without any leave of or respect to the Commiffaries or General, they went to Arezzo; and there leaving what fpoil they had got, seturned to Aughiari, a thing to contrary to all Military order, or any Warlike discipline, that any small remnant of a well-governed Army migh eatily, and defervedly have fratcht from them that Victory they had undefervedly gained ; and 'tis worth our wonder to consider how fuch an ill-trayned Army thould have to much Courage in them as to know how to Conquer, but 'tis' nuclumore wonderful that any Enemy thould have for much Cowardize as to be beaten by fuch diforderly People. Whilft the Florentine Souldiers were going and coming from Arezzo, Nicholas had time to depart with his People from Borge, taking his way towards Romagnia, with whom the Florentine Rebels likewise fled, who bebolding themselves deprived of all hopes of ever neturning to Florence, divided shem-themselves to several places of Italy, or out of it, according as fuited with every mans Conveniency; of whom, Meffer Kinaldo Albizi chose Anorna for his relidence, from whence to gain himfelf a heavenly Country. fince he had loft that here on Earth; he went to the Sepulchre of Chrift's and upon his return thence, at the Marriage of one of Death of h is Daughters, fell down fuddenly and died, in which fortune feem'd to favour him, Romanda Albzi: that in the least unhappy day of all his Banishment she let him die. He was a Man worthy of Honour in all hortunes. and would have certainly enjoyed more than he did, had Nature let him been born in any united City, for many qualities of his offended in a divided City; which in one united would have preferred him. The Commiffaries, as foon as their Men were returned from Arezzo, and Niebolas gone, prefented themfelves before Borge ; the Borghesi would have surrendred themselves to the Florentines, and they refused to accept them; however in treating the matter the Popes Legate conceived a suspicion, that the Florentine Commiffaries had dealt underhand to rob the Church of that Town: to that many bitter and injurious woords passed, and there had happened fome diforder between the Florentines and Ecclefiafficks had the Difpute lasted much longer; but things being concluded as the Legate would have them, all was pacified. Whilft thefe Debates were about Borgo, Intelligence was was brought that Nicholas Piccinino was gone towards Rome, and others faid towards La Marca; whereupon the Legate and Sfanfa's Hotfe thought it convenient to go to Porngid, to be ready to affift either Rome or La Murca if Nicholas should turn either way; and over them was appointed Bermardo Medici, and Neri with the Florentine -Forces ordered to reduce Cafentino : according to this determination Neri marched to Raffina, and took it, and going forward regained Bibiona, Prato Vecchio, and Komena, and from thence went and belieged Poppi, beleaguring it at two Posts, one in the Plains of Certomondi; and the other on the little Hill in the way to Franzoli. This Earl, feeing himfelf forfaken by God and Man, had that himself up in Poppi, not out of any hopes of allifance, but to get the balt terms he could "Being now begint by Nori he demanded Conditions, and found them fuch as he might reafonably at fuch a time expects. That he should depart with this Wife and Children, and fuch Goods as she could carry with him, and leave his -Lands and Effate to the Florentines. And : whilft they were upon Capitulating, he came down upon the Bridge over Arno, which -walkes one fide of the Town, and in a -doleful and afflicted manner spoke thus to the Earls Nera: Had I taken right measures of my speech to Fortune, and your Power, I should have appeared now as a friend to congratulate your Victory, and not as an enemy to petitian you lomefieged.

78

5

Poppi Be-

Neri.

80

Jomestbat to alleviate my Milony , and Ruine; but as the prefent Chance is to you glorious and pryfal, 'tis to me greivous and miferable. I bad Hunfes, Arms, Subjects, Effdie and Riebes, and who can wonder if I am loath to part with them; but if you must, and will command all Tokany, all must of force obey you ? Had not I committed this Errour. my Forme bad never been known; nor you bad opportunity to floen your Liberality; far if you yet refore me you will testie to the world an eternal example of your Clemency. Let your Goodness Jurmount my Crimes, and let at least this only House defend to those, of whom your Ancestours have received many Services. Neri infivered : As you have retyed too much in those who were abte to do lettle, So your Offences against the State of Florence have been fo high , that , confidering the conjuncture of Affairs, 'tis necessary you refign all your Estate, and quit those places as an Enemy to the Florentines, which you would not bold as their Friend; for you have given such an Example as ought not to be born with, nor you suffered in a plate where, upon every Change of fortune you may damage the Commonwealth : for it is your Estates they fear, and not You, and if you could be a Prince in Germany that City would rejoyce at it, and for the love of these Anceston's you mention have an Esteem for you. To which the Earl in great Anger answered; He wight to fee the Florentines at a far greater distance. And thus all kind discourse cealing, 5 F 2 the 18

Book V.

the Earl feeing no other remedy, refigned his Lands and all his Concerns to the Floremaines, and with all his Goods, Wife and Children . in tears departed , greiving to have lost an Estate which his Ancestors had for 400 years past, enjoyed. As foon as the News of these Victories was brought to Florence, it was by the Principal Men in the State, and by the whole People received with excessive Joy; and because Bernardo Medici found the Report falle of Nicholas's being gone either towards La Marca or Rome, he returned to find out Neri, and they together came to Florence; where all those Honours were in ample manner conferred on them, which according to the Orders of that City can be allowed to Victorious Citizens, and they Triumphant wife received by the Senate, the Captains, and the whole City.

The End of the Fifth Book.

THE

FLORENTINE HISTORY,

Written by

Nicholas Machiavel.

BOOK VI.

T ever was (and it is but reafon it fhould be fo) the end of those that make War, to enrich themfelves and impoverish their Enemies, neither is Victory for any other end fought after, nor Conquest desired, but to make our felves Mighty, and our Adverfaries Weak: Wherefore, whenever Victory impoverishes, or Conquest weakens, they either exceed or come short of those ends for which War is made. That Prince or Commonwealth is by the Victories of War enriched, who utterly roots out his Enemies, 6 A 3 and was reduced to fuch Terms, that he was very doubtful of his own Estates, and feared his Ruine would be compleated before Nicholas Piecinino (whom he had recalled) could come to fuccour him: wherefore to put a ftop to the Earls fury, and with policy to temporize where he could not with Force oppose, he had recourse to those remedies which in the like condition had offer availed him. and to that end fends Nicholds d'Efte, Prince of Farrara, to Pefchiera where the Earl then was, who on his behalf perswades him to Peace, demonstrating, That that War could be no wates advantagious to the Earl; for if the Duke were to weakned that he could no longer maintain his Reputation, the Earl would be the first would fuffer, for the Venetians and Floren-tines having no further fe, would have no farther effeern of him; and for a full affurance that the Duke indeed defired Peace, he offered a conclusion of the Marriage, promifing to fend his Daughter to Ferrara, where, as foon as the Peace was concluded, he would joyn their hands. The Earl made answer, That is the Duke did faithfully defire Peace he might eatily find it, as that which both the Venetians and Florentines with'd for; true it was he could hardly beleive it, knowing well that he never defired Peace but out of a pure Necellity, and as foon as that was past his inclinations to War revived; nor could he give any Credit about the promise of the Marriage, having مد بر المبار

Book VI.

The Duke of Milan moves for Peace,

having been to often mockt with its but when the Peace was Concluded, he would act in that Affair according to the Advice of his Friends. The Venetians (who ordinarily are fufpicious of their Souldiers The Vent without cause.) with reason entertained a triam jeafuspicion of these practices, which the Earl lous of endeavouring to cancel, carried on the War with great brisknefs ; yet his Courage through Ambition, Fand the Wenetians through Jealousie was grown fo luke-warm, that little or nothing was done that Summer: So that Nicholas Piccinino being returned into Lombardy, and cold Weather coming on, all the Armies were drawn into their Winter quarters; the Earl into Merona, the Duke into Cremona, the Florentine. Forces into Tofoany, and the Popes into Ro-magnia, which last, after the Victory at Anghiari, attempted Furli and Bolonia to recover them out of the hands of Francis Piccinino, who was Governour there forhis Father, in which though they fucceeded not, for Francis bravely defended them; yet did their coming so territie those of Ravenna, that fearful they should be again reduced under the Empire of the Church, by Agreement with Oftafio of Polenta their Lord, they submitted themselves unto the power of the Venetians, who in requital Ingratie ude in the of fo fair a Prefent', that Oftafio might not venniante by force retake that, which for want of Wit he had given them, they fent him together with his Son to die in Candia. The 4.

Digitized by Google

The Pope in these Enterprizes, notwithflanding the Victory at Anghiari, wanting Mony, fold the Cafile of Borge St. Sepolebro to the Florentimes for 25000. Ducats: Affairs standing thus, and every one, by reat fon of the Seafon of the year, thinking themselves secure from War, Peace was no more talkt of, especially by the Duke, who, heartned by the Winter, and Piccinino's return, broke off all manner of Treaty with the Earl, using all possible diligence to recruit Piccinino, and making all other provisions for a future War; which the Eart having intelligence of, went to Venice to Advise with that Senate how to manage. the War for the year entiring. Niebolas on : the other fide finding himfelf in order, and the Enemy difordered, flaid not for the coming of the Spring, but in the coldeft of Winter passes the Adda, and entring into. the Territories of Brefeia, becomes prefently Master of all that Country, except Adula and Arci, where he likewife farprizes and carries away 2000 of Sforza's Horfes who expected not the Alarum; but what more displeased the Earl, and frightned the Venetians was, that Ciarpellone, one of the Earls principal Officers, revolted from him; the Earl upon this Advice departs fuddenly from Vomee, and being arrived at Brefeia, found that Nicholas Piccinino after he had done this damage was returned to his Quarters: whereupon the Earl feeing the War extinct, thought it not conve-

Book VI.

of Florence.

convenient to reinflame it, but chofe rather, fince both the Seafon and the Enernygave him a convenience of recruiting, to make use of it, that he might the better in the Spring be able to revenge these Afficients he therefore made the Vanetians recal the Forces that ferved under the Florensines in Tofcany, and in the room of Gattamelatar who was dead, defired Micheletto Attendate might command them. The Spring, novi coming on Nicholas Piccinine first took the Field, and beleagured Ciguano, a Cafele: twelve Miles from Brefeia, to the releif of which comes the Earl, and both on one fider and thiother the War was by these twoi. Generals managed according to their wonted Cuftome; and the Early being doubtful! of Bergamo, went and laid Siege to Martin: nengo, a Caftle fo feated, that (taking iv) he might at any time with cafe relieve Bore and mo, which City was forely oppress'd by Nicholas, who having made fuch provision. that he could not any way, but that of Martinengo, be disturbed by the Enemy; he had to strongly fortified that Cafile, that it was necessary for the Earl to come with all his Forces to attack it; whereupon Nicholas, with his whole Army, gained fuch a. Post that he stopt all Provisions from the Earl, and with Trenches and Bulwarks fo-fortified himself, that the Earl, without apparent danger, could not affault him, reducing him to fuch threights that the Befieger was in greater danger than those Befieged freged in Martinengo; for Famine would not fuffer the Earl to continue his Siege, nor could he without apparent lofs raile it; fo there seemed to be a perfect Victory prepared for the Duke, and certain ruine for the Venetians and the Earl: but Fortune. who never wants waies to affift her friends and difcountenance her enemies, raifed in the breaft of Nicholas Piccinino (fwell'd with the hopes of this Victory) fuch Ambition and Infolence, that without any respect ei-- ther to the Duke or himfelf, he fent to tell him, How that having a long time made War under his Enfigns, and never gained fo much Earth for himfelf as would ferve to bury him, he would now know what Reward he should have for all his Labours. fince it was now in his power to make him Lord of Lombardy, and put all his Enemies into his hands: and conceiving that a certain Victory ought to have a certain Reward, he defired him to grant him the City of Piacenza, that fo tired with tedious War, he might at length repose himself. Nor was he athamed, in the Conclusion, to threaten the Duke to give over the Enterprize if he granted not his Request. This haughty and infolent way of asking offended the Duke, and incenfed him in that manner, that he refolved rather to lofe all than give his confent; and him that fo many dangers and fo many threats of his Enemies could not bend, the infolence and pride of his Friends now made bow: wherefore he refolved upon an Agree-

ires of Viebelas

Book VI. of Florence.

Agreement with the Earl, to whom he fent Anthony Guido Buono of Tortona to make offers of his Daughter, with Conditions of Peace, which were greedily accepted by the Earl and all the Colleagues; and having privately fealed Covenants, the Duke concluded fent to command Nicholas to make Trice privately with the Earl for a year, alleadging, he was the Duke fo tired with the vaft Charge, that he would and Barl. not refuse a certain Peace for an uncertain Victory. Nicholas was firangly furprized at this Order, not being able to imagine what should make the Duke decline to affured a Victory; for he could not believe that the not rewarding his Friends could make him wave the destroying his Enemies: wherefore, by all means he could beft devise, he strove to oppose this Determination; infomuch that the Duke, to bring him to conformity, was forced to threaten, That if he would not confent, he would give him up as a prey to his own Souldiers. or to the Enemy. Nicholas hereupon obeys, but with the same regret of mind, as he that is forced to abandon his Friends and Country, lamenting his perverse Fate, whilft formerly ill Fortune, and now the Duke, rob'd him of Victory over his Enemies. The Truce made, the Marriage between the Barl Fromi. Lady Biancha and the Earl was celebrated, cir matrices, the Lady and the City of Cremona affigned for her Ziancha, Dower; and after that, in November 1441, the Peace was fully ratified, Francis Barbadico and Paul Trono being Commissioners for for the Venesians, and Meffer Agnolo Accisizedo for the Florentines; by this Peace the Venetions came off gainers of Pefchierd, Afola, and Lemme, Galiles in the Marquifate of Manue. Peace thus feeled in Lomhardy, Warshill reigned in the Kingdom, suchish not being to be pacified, proved the pecation of renewing it again in Lombardy. King Benate was, during the Troubles in Louisady, despoiled of all his Realm, exsept the City of Naples , fo that Alphonfo thinking he had the Victory in his own bands, determined, whils the lay at the Singe of Maples, to take from Earl Francis Benevanto, and other his Effates lying in the Country adjacent ; for he thought he withnout much hazard might succeed in it, the Earlibeing employed in the Wars of Lomshord y; and his fuccels was indeed conformable to his withes, for with ease he posseffed himfelf of all those Lands. But Peace being concluded in Lombardy, Alphonso was fearful leatt the Earl, becaufe of his loft Towns, rwould joyn with Renate, and Renate, for the fame Confiderations, had hopes he would do to: whereupon sie fear to the Earl, incouraging him to come and affift a Friend, and revenge himfelf of an Enemy : On the other fide, the Wing requested Bbilip, that in respect of the ancient Friendthip between them, he would give the Earl fuch a divertion, that forced to strend on weightier matters he should be constrained to wave this.) Rhrlip complyed with this Request,

BookVI. of Florence.

Request, not confidering that thereby he disturbed that Peace, which fo much to his own difadvantage he had lately concluded : for he fent to Pope Engenine to inform him, that now was his time to regain those Lands -the Earl had usurped from the Church, and to effect it he offered him Niebolas Ficcinina (he paying him while the War lasted) who, fince the Conclusion of the Peace, had taken up his Quarters in Romania. The Pope greedily entertained the motion, as well out of Hate to the Earl, as defire to regain his own; and though formerly he had with the fame hopes been deceived by Nicholas, yet, now the Dukes intervention made him no more mistrustful, but he prefently joyned his Forces with Nicholas and affaulted La war in La Marca. The Earl startled at fo fudden an Marca. Onset, with all speed draws together his Forces, and marches towards his Enemies. In the mean time King Alphonso takes Naples, fo that all that Kingdom, except Caftel Nuovo, was now in his power. Wherefore Renate leaving a strong Garrison in that - Caffle, comes to Florence, where he was honourably received ; whence, a few daies after, seeing he could no longer maintain the War, he departs, and goes for Marfilia. Mean while Alphonfo had taken Caftle Nupvo, and the Earl in La Marca proved fomewhat inferiour to the Pope and Nicholas; -whereupon he had recourse to the Vonetians and !Plorentines for allistance of Men and Mony, affirming, That if they did not now bridle bridle the Pope and Kings power while he was yet in being, they would afterwards in vain Aruggle for their own fafety; for they would joyn with Philip, and amongst them divide all Italy. The Florentines and Venetians flood a while in suspence, somewhat doubtful to engage against the King and the Pope, and being at prefent employed in the Affairs of Bolonia; for Annibal Bentivogli had driven from that City Francis Piccining, and to enable him to defend himfelf against the Duke who favoured Francis, had craved Aid of the Venetians and Florentines, who had not denied him; fo that having engaged themselves in this Affair, they could not at prefent refolve to affift the Earl : but Annibal having defeated Francis Piccinino, and matters there feeming fetled, the Florentines refolved to affift the Earl, but first to be affured of the Duke, they renewed their League with him, which the Duke refused not; for he had only confented, that War should be made against the Earl while Renate was in Arms. but feeing him vanquished, and utterly driven from the Kingdom, he was not at all pleased that the Duke should be spoiled of his Effates. Wherefore he not only was willing that the Earl should have assistance, but wrote to King Alphonfo that he would be content to return back into his Kingdom, and defift from making farther War; which, though Alphonso was somewhat unwilling to do, yet being obliged to the the Duke, he thought best to comply with him, and retired with his Forces on the farther fide of Tronta. Whilft Affairs went thus in Romania, the Florentines were not quiet among themselves. There was in Florence, among the Citizens of chief Reputation in the Government, Neri di Gino Capponi, of whole Greatnels Calmo, more than of any others, flood in fear, for to - the Credit he had with the Citizens, he had joyned the favour of the Souldiers; for having been often General of the Florentine Army, his Valour and great Merit had gained their love; and belides, the remembrance of the Victories, which they acknowledged from him and his Father (the one having reduced Pifa under the Florentine power, and the other defeated Nicholas Piccinino at Anghiari) made him refpected by many, and feared by others who defired no Partners in the Government. Among many other Prime Leaders Baldario of the Florentine Army was Baldaccio of of Anghi-Anghiari, a Man famous in War, and who ari. in those Times, either for Knowledge, Strength, or Courage, had not his Superiour in Italy; and to much Reputation had he gained among the Infantry (for those he ever Commanded) that they were at any time ready, in whatever Enterprize he pleafed to undertake, to follow him. This Baldaccio was a most intire Friend of Neri's; for he loved him for his Vertue, of which he had been often witnefs, which made the other

:12

в

Machivel's Hiftory Book VI.

other Citizens grow jealous of him, and judging the disbanding of him would be hazardous, and the retaining him yet more dangerous, they refolved to rid him out of the way, in which delign Fortune proved favourable to them. Bartholomen Orlandino was Gonfaloniere of Justice. He, as we have before related, having the Charge of the Guard of Maradi, bafely fled and deferted a Pass wich Nature it self in a manner defended. This Cowardize fo difpleafed Baldaccio that he could not forbear both by Words and Letters to brand him for it; at the shame of which Messer Bartholomew conceived fuch a fecret regret and spleen, that led on by an infamous delire of Revenge, he thought nothing but the blood of his Acculer could cancel his fault or cover his blufhes. Many other Citizens were fenfible of Bartholomew's Malice, whereupon they inflamed him, and perfwaded the facility of getting eas'd of fuch a Reproach, thereby at once revenging his private Injury, and freeing the State of a Man whom they must either retain with sear or dismis with Whereupon Bartholomen having damage. taken his refolve to affailinate Baldacco, concealed many armed young Men in his Chamber, and Baldacco being come upon the Piazza, where he usually every day walk-ed, or came to treat with the Magislirates about his entertainment : the Gonfaloniere fent for him, and he not having the least fuspicion, obeyed, whom the Gonfaloniere met

h

of Florence.

met, and walking with him feveral turns about the Senate Chambers, talking and discourting with him concerning his Pay, at length, when he faw his opportunity, being come near the room where the Armed men lay hid, he gave the fignal, and they immediately fallying forth and finding him alone and difarmed, foon flew him, and threw Eddaccie him out of the Window which looks from ted by the the Palace to the Custome-House, and Gonfalonio thence carrying him into the Piazza, cutting off his Head, left him for all that day as a spectacle to the People. He left behind him only one Son (born of Annalena his Wife) who not long furviv'd him: that virtuous Lady, having loft her Husband. and Son, would not again Contract her felf to any, but turning her Houfe into a Monastery (with many Noble and virtuous Ladies who conforted themfelves with her) in a holy manner lived and died : Whofe memory, for the Monastery by her founded and from her named, doth hitherto live and will live for ever. This Action fomewhat check'd Neri's power, and leffened him both in Reputation and Friends: Nor did the prime Ministers of State think this enough, for Ten years being now spent fince the foundation of their Government, and the Authority of the Balia expired, and many prefuming both in words and deeds to exceed the limits thought requilite; The Chiefs of the State judged it fit for maintaining their Authority to revive the Balia 6 E 2 whereby

55

I 444, Florence reformed.

whereby they might afresh give Authority to their Friends, and weaken their Enemies; and therefore in the year 1444 they, by the confent of the Councils, created a New Balia ; which setled the Offices , gave Authority to a few to create the Senate, reviving the Chancellorship of the Reformation, displacing Philip Peruzzi, and in his room confituting one that would act according to the pleafure of the Great Men; who prolonged the Confinements of many. imprisoned Simon Vefpucci ; removed from their Honours and Offices the Accopiatori, as Enemies to the State, and with them the Sons of Peter Baroncelli, all the Seragli, Bartholomen Fortini, Messer Francisco Castellani, and many others; and by this means regained their own Power and Authority, and abated the Pride both of their known and suspected Enemies. And having thus fetled the State within, they applyed themselves to Affairs abroad. Nicholas Piccinino being, as we have before declared, deferted by the King Alphonso, and the Earl with the releif fent him by the Florentines grown ftrong, he engages with Nicholas near Fermo', and gave him so total a Rout, that Nicholas with the loss of most of his Men hardly faved himfelf in Montecebio; where he fortified and fo bravely defended. himfelf, that in a fhort time he had rallved all his People, and was grown able, with ease to defend himself from the Earl; especially Winter coming on, which confirained Nichelas Piccinine difcomfited.

Book VI.

ftrained both those Captains to draw into their Quarters. Nicholas applyed himfelf all Winter to reinforce his Army, in which both the Pope and King Alphonso affilied him; fo that early in the Spring both Generals took the Field, and Nichalas, being the fronger, had reduced the Earl to extream necellity, and had certainly overthrown him, had not the Duke interrupted Nicholas's Deligns. Philip fent to delire his immediate prefence, for he had fomething of importance to confer with him; which Nicholas covetous to bear, abandoned a certain Victory for an incertain Pleasure; and leaving the Command of the Army to his Son Francis, posts to Milan. This the Earl having intelligence of, would not lofe the opportunity of highting in Nicholus's ablence, and engaging near Monte Loro, routed Nichalas's Forces, and took Francis prisoner. Nicholas arrived at Milan, finding himfelf abused by Philip, and receiving intelligence of his Sons being defeated and taken, died with Grief in the Year 1445, and the 64 Desth of of his Age; leaving behind him two Sons Michalan Francis and Jacob, who had less Valour, and worfe Fortune than their Father; fo that thele Braccian Forces were almost quite worn out, and the Sforzan Arms still (feconded by Fortune) became more and more glorious. The Pope feeing Nicholas's Forces defeated, and himfelf dead, having no fure reliance on the Aid of Arragon, fought Peace with the Earl, and by the Florentines inter-

Piccimine.

Digitized by Google

17

6 B, 3

Tionbles in Bolonia.

intermission concluded it; by which Ofimo, Fabriano or Riconati Towns of La Marca, became the Popes, and all the reft of that Territory remained subject to the Earl. Peace thus concluded in La Marca, all Italy had been at quiet had not the Bolonefi di-fturbed its repole. There was in Bolonia two mighty Families, the Cannefcbi and Bentivolii; of the last Hannibal was the Head, and of the first Battista. They had, to beget a greater confidence in each other, made seyeral intermarriages; but in Men aspiring to the same Greatness, though Alliances may be eafily contracted, yet Friendthip is not. Bolonia was in League with the Florentines and Venetians, which they had entred into by the Mediation of Han-nibal Bentivogli, after his driving Francis Piccinino out of that City. Battifta knowing how much the Duke defired the favour of this City, plotted with him to kill Hannibal, and reduce the City under his obedience. And having concluded on the manner, Battifta, with his Followers, on the 24 of June 1445, affaults Hannibal and kills him, and thereupon Proclaims the Duke throughout the Town. The Venetian and Florentine Commissarics were in the City, who upon the first Rumour retired to their Houses, but seeing afterwards how the People Arming themfelves, flocked in great numbers to the Market place, to oppose the Murtherers, and revenge the death of Hannibal, they took heart, and with thof those Men they had about them, joyned with the People, and, making Head, Charged the Canneschi, whom in a very short time they overthrew, killing fome, and driving the reft out of the City. Battifta not having an opportunity to flie, nor his Enemies to kill him, hid himfelf in his House under a Vessel made to keep Corn in ; and his Enemies having made fearch for him all that day, knowing that he was not gone out of the City, fo terrified his Servants, that a Boy of his for fear shewed them where he was, whom, pulling out thence still in his Armour, they immediately slew, and then having drag'd his Body Battiffa Cannel, bi through the Streets, burnt it. Thus the flam. Dukes Victory proved fufficient to make Battista attempt this Enterprize, but his Succours came not time enough to maintain. it, or fave his life. Though the death of Battijia, and flight of the Canneschi had quieted these Tumults, yet the Bolonians remained in great Confulion, there being none of the Family of Bentivogli hit to Govern, Hannibal having left but one Son, called John, not above fix years of Age; to that they grew fearful least fome Divition happening among the Friends of the Bentiwogli, might give opportunity to the Can-nefchi to return, to the ruine of the City and their Party. But whilft they lay under those Fears and Jealousies, Francis, formerly Earl of Poppi, being then in Bolonia, gave Advertisement to the Prime men of the 6B4 City

City that if they were defirous to be Governed by one of the Blood of the Bentivogli, he could inform them where to find one; and therewithal acquainted them, How Hercules the Coufin of Hannibal happening, about twenty years fince, to be at Poppi, had there Carnal knowledge of a young Woman of that Caffle, who was afterwards delivered of a Son called Santi, which Hercules often affirmed to be his, nor could he indeed well deny it, for whoever look'd on Hercules and the Child, would find a very great likenefs or refemblance. The Citizens gave Credit to his Report. and delayed not the fending Ambaffadours to Florence to find out the young Man, and to prevail with Cosmo and Neri that he might be fent to them. The reputed Father of Santi was dead, and the Youth lived under the Care and Tuition of an Uncle of his, called Anthony Cafeefe. Anthony was Rich, Childlefs, and a Friend of Neri's; wherefore as foon as the matter was divulged, Neri was of Opinion that it was neither to be flighted, nor rashly accepted, and thought good to speak with Santi himfelf, in the prefence of Cosmo and those sent from Bolonia; and being all met, Santi was by the Bolonefi not only honoured, but almost adored; so much can the love of Fartics or Factions prevail o're the minds of Men. For the prefent nothing was concluded , fave that Colmo taking the Young man afide, told him, None can in this c afe

Santi Ba tiveglie fent forte Govern Zelmis.

26

cafe advife thee better than thy felf, for those art to make that Choice which thon findeft thy own Soul inclinable to; and if those be the Son of Hercules Bentivoglio, those wilt diffose the felf to Actions worthy that House and Family; but if thou be the Son of Agnoto Cafcele, thou wilt content thy felf to stay in Florence, and follow bis mean Trade of Dreffing Wool. Thefe words moved the Young man, and whereas before he had in a manner denyed to accept the propolal, he now referred himfelf wholly to what Cofmo and Neri Ihould determine : fo that they agreeing with the Meffengers of Botonia, furnished him with Cloaths, Horfes, and Servarits, and foon after with an honourable Company he was attended to Bo-Ibnia; where the Charge and Government of Hannibal's Children, and of the City, was committed to him: wherein he behaved himfelf with fo much predence, that whereas his Predecellours had all been flain by their Enemies, He both lived in Peace, and died in Honour. Philip, after the death of Nicholas Piccinino, and the Peace in La Marca, being delirous of a General to Command his Armies, held private Correspondence with Ciarpellone, one of the Earls rrincipal Captains, and came to an Agreement with him : whereupon Ciarpelione asked the Earls leave to go to Milan to take poffettion of certain Castles, which had by the Duke in the past War been given him. But the Earl having some sufpicion of - the

ŹÍ

I.

d area

the Contrivance (.that he might not ferve the Duke to his prejudice) first stop'd him, and foon after put him to death, giving out He had dealt fally and fraudulently with him. At this the Duke was exceeding Angry, but the Florentines and Venetians very well pleased, fearing nothing more than a friendship and Conjunction between the Dukes and Earls Forces. But the Dukes refentment stirred up the War afresh in La. Gismond Malatesti, Lord of Ki-Marca. mini, being Son in Law to the Earl, hoped to have Pefare alligned over to him, but the Earl having got posselion of it, gave it to Alexander his Brother; at which Gif-mond was enraged, and to encrease his fury it happened, that Frederick of Montefeltro his profest Enemy, had, by the Earls favour and Connivance, feized on the Lordship of Urbin. These Affronts made Gifmond joyn with the Duke, and folicite the Pope and King to make a War upon the Earl; who, to make Gilmond tafte the first fruits of the feed he had fown, by way of prevention falls first upon his Territories : fo that Romania and La Marca were filled with War and Tumult; for the King, Pope, and Duke fent large Aids to Gifmond and the Venetians; and the Florentines, if not with Men, yet with Mony abundantly supplied the Earl. Philip, mean while, thought not the War in Romania enough to afflict the Earl, but defigned to take from him Cremona, and Pontremoli; but the first was by the Vene

Venetians, and the last by the Florentines defended. So the War was again revived in Lombardy, in which, after fome Skir- Warremisses happening in the Country of Cre- vived in mona, Francis Piccinino, General for the Duke, was at Cafal, by Miebeletto and the Venetian Forces, defeated. Which Victory put the Venetians in hopes of becoming Lords of the Dukes Effates, and encouraged them to fend one of their Commif-. faries to invade Ghiradadda, who took the whole Country, except Cremona, and thence pailing the Adda, made his incurtions as far as Milan: whereupon the Duke had recourse to Alphonso, craving his affistance, and fetting forth the danger his Kingdom would be exposed to if the Venetians were Lords of Lombardy. Alphonfo promifed to fend him Aid, which could hardly, without the Earls confent, have paffage. Whereupon Philip was forced to fupplicate the Earl, that he would not utterly defert his Father in Law now grown blind and Aged. The Earl thought himfelf injured by the Duke, for having been the mover of this War; but on the other fide he affected not the Greatness of the Venetians, and began himfelf to want Mony, which the League supplyed but sparingly: for the Florentines were now freed from their Fears of the Duke, which had begot their effeem of the than and - Earl; and the Venetians fought his defiru-tion, believing the Dominion of Lombardy to the Excle could not be fnatcht from them by any one fr eaching. bùr but him: And yet, whilft Philip folicited him to accept of his Pay, and offered him. the supream Command of all his Forces (on Condition he would defert the Venetians, and reitore La Marca to the Pope) they fent likewise their Ambastadours, promiting him Milan if they took it, and to be perpetual General of their Armies, provided he profecuted the War in La Marca, and prevented Alphonio's Forces from coming to relieve Lombardy. The Venetians Promiles were great, and their Merits greater, having hift begun this War to fecure Cremona for the Earl; and on the other fide. the Dukes Injuries were fresh, and his Promiles faithlefs and not be relied on. However the Earl was doubtful what Choice to make: On the one fide, his obligation to the League, his word past, with the late defervings and promifes of future Advantages were ftrong motives; and on the other fide. the prayers of his Father in Law; but principally the poyfon he feared lay hid under the Venetians extravagant Promifes withheld him: for he judged, that both in relation to their Promifes, and his own Eflates, he should, whenever they were Victors, lye at their difcretion; which no prudent Prince ought to expose himself to, unless in pure necetility. These difficulties of coming to a Refolve were by the Ambition of the Venetians removed; who, put in hopes to furprize Cremona, by fome intelligence they had in that City, under other pretences pretences made their Army approach, it; but the Plot was discovered by the Earls Garrison, and their defign frustrated : io, though they got not Cremona, they loft the Earl, who, laying alide all refpects, joyned now with the Duke. Pope Engenius was now dead, and Nicholas the Fifth fucceeded in the Papacy. The Earl lay with all his Army at Cotignuola, ready to march into Lombardy, when Intelligence was brought him that Philip was dead, which happened Duke Thion the last of Angust 1457. This news ex- her deather treamly perplexed the Earl; he suspected his own People were discontented, not having had their full pay; he was fearful of the Venetians; now in Arms against him, and whom he had to lately made Enemies, by tleferting them and joyning with the Duke, he was doubtful of Alphonso his perpetual Énemy, and had no great hopes in the Pope or Florentines in thefe, because they were in League with the Venetians; and in the other, because he was possessor of the Church-Lands; yet he refolved to out-face fortune, and govern himfelf and his Affairs according as things fell out ; for many times by Action those counsels are discovered, which Idleness conceals. Some hopes he had in believing, that if the Milanefi would defend themfelves from the Ambition of the Venetians, they could fly to no fhelter but his : wherewith taking heart he marches into the Territories of Bolonia, from thence paffing Modena, and Reggio, and litting down on the Lenza, fends ta to Milan to offer his Service. The Milanefi after the Dukes death, would, fome live free, and others under a Prince; those who defired a Prince were partly for the Earl, and partly for King Alphonfo ; wherefore those who made choice of liberty, being more united, prevailed against the other, and established such a Common-wealth as pleased them, but to which many Cities of the Dutchy refused obedience; thinking they might enjoy their liberty as well as Milan, or not being able to afpire to that, yet they would not be Lorded over by the Milanefi: wherefore I odi and Piacenza fubmitted to the Venetians, Pavia and Parma would live free. The Duke hearing of these confusions, went to Cremona; whither came his Ambaffadors with others from the Milanefi, bringing this Conclusion, that he should be General of General Milan upon the fame terms lately made with Duke Philip ; with this addition, that Brefeia fhould be the Earls, till he could take Verona; which done, that to be his and Brefeia to be reftored. Before the Dukes death. Pore Nicholas at his Exaltation to the Papacy, had endeavoured to make Peace among all Italian Princes; whereupon he prevailed with those Ambassiadors sent him by the Florentines at his creation, to request that a Diet might be held at Ferrara, in order to the. treating either a long truce or a firm Peace : To which end there affembled in that City . the Popes Legat, the Dukes, the Florentine and Venetian Ambassadors, but those of King of the Liland .

26

27

King Alfonfo came not. He was then at Tivoli with a great power of Horfe and Foot. and from thence countenanced the Duke defigning as it is thought, having gained the Earl to their lide, openly to affault the Florentines and Venetians; and whilft he delaved time, the Earl with his forces to flay in Lombardy, and the treaty of Peace proceed; to which the King fent not, affirming he would ratifie whatever the Duke affented to. The Peace was many daies debated, and after many difputes concluded, either to be perpetual, or a truce for 5 years, which of the two best pleafed the Duke, but the Dukes Ambaffadors being fent to Milan, to understand his pleasure, found him dead : the Milanefi notwithstanding his death, would have ftood to the Agreement : but the Venetians would not, having now greater hopes than ever, to become Lords of that State, efpecially feeing fo foon after his Death, Lodi and Piacenza submit to them; assuring themfelves they should in a short time, either by force or confent, despoil Milan of all its Estates, and afterwards so oppress the City it felf, that it should be constrained to furrender before any releif could come: And they more firmly perfwaded themfelves to this, feeing the Florentines intangled in a War with King Alphonso. That King was now at Tivoli, and deligning to purfue his expedition against Tofcany, as he had concluded with Duke Philip (imagining the War railed in Lombardy gave him time and opportunity) He

Miphonfo invades the Floren Sime

He was defirous to get footing in the Florentine Estate, before he declared open War; and to that end plotted the furprizal of the Cafile of Cennima, in the upper vale of Arno, which by confpiracy with fome within he The Florentines startled at this unexwon. pected accident, feeing the King refolved to profecute them, hired Souldiers, created the Council of ten, and according to their Cuftom prepared for War. The King was already marched into the Territories of Siena. and used all his endeavours to gain the favour of that City; but the Sanefi continuing hrm in their friendship to the Florentines, would not admit him into Siena, nor any other of their Towns: true it is, they furnished him with some Provisions, but for that, their weakness and his power pleaded their excuse. The King thought it not convenient to make his inroads by the Vale of Arno, as he had at first defigned, both because Cennima was again recovered, alfo because the Florentines were already pretty well furnished with Men; wherefore he advances towards Volterra, and took feveral Cafiles in the Volterran; thence turning into the Territory of Pifa, by the Countenance of Anigo and Fatio, Counts of Gbirardesca, he takes fome Caftles, and affaults Campelia, but finding it detended both by the Florentines, and the hard Winter, fails in the Attempt : wherefore, leaving Garrifons in the Towns he had taken, both to defend them, and make incursions into the Country with the reift reft of his Army, he returns to his Quarters in the Country of Siena. The Florentines. having this advantage of the Seafon, with all diligence provided Men, and chofe Frederick Lord of Urban, and Gifmond Malarefri for their Commanders; between whom though some difference happened, yet by the prudence of Neri di Gino, and Bernadetto Medici, it was in fuch measure accommodated, that notwithstanding the Cold was still very fierce, they drew forth the Army, and regained all the Towns loft in the Country of Pifa and Pomerancy in the Volterran, and fo streightned the Kings Forces, that made their inroads along the Sea Coast, that they were fearce able to defend their Garrifons. But Spring coming on, the Commissaries advanced with all their Forces, confifting of 5000 Horfe, and 2000 Foot, to Spedaletto; and the King draws his Army, confifting of 15000, . within three Miles of Campiglia; and whilft they thought he would befiege that Town, turns off and fits down before Piombino, which he hoped eafily to carry, because it was very ill provided, and withal believing the Acquisition would prove of great advantage to him, and prejudice to the Florentines; because from thence he might confilme the Florentines with a tedious War, and having his own Provisions by Sea, spoil the whole Country of Pifa. This Siege forely afflicted the Florentines ; yet advising what was best to be done, they supposed that 6 C if

Ľ

Machivel's Hiftory Book VI.

defperately angry at the Florentines , and threaming the next Spring a new Invation. During this turmoil of Affairs in Tefoany, Earl Francis being made General for the Milanoft in Lombardy, tick of all engages Francis Piecinino's friendfhip, that either he might favour his Beligns, or at leaf be more wary of obfinicting them; and then drawing this Army into the Field, those of Ravis fuppoling themselves unable to relifi his Forces; and refolving not to fubrili to the Milinefi, affered him their Town, upon Condition he fould not deliver them up to Mildel The Earl was very delifous to have the pollition of that Ciry, believing it mould be a brave beginning, and an excellent Colour for other deligns. Nor did hane, ax breach of Faith, reftrain him'; för Greatimen think lois a thanie, and not Congueff; though by Deceit Yet he was fearful by taking it the should to anger the Milinefi, that they would give up their right to the Venerians; and if heltook it not, he was farhibof the Dukelof Saviy, to whom ma-By Ginizbhsopropofecta furrendry. One way on the other he law himfelf deprived of the Empire of Hombardy : yet prefuming there would be lefs danger in the taking it , than leaving it to another, hourdfolved to accept its perfiniding himfolf he might pacificate Milanefi 1 to whom he fent word, how many Dangetrs he had inquired by not accepting Party dwhich theie Gitizens would ad theretigabily firmendred, either to the Kams - del · 2 3 3 tians

H Scatt be ween alphonfo rod the Eironana

1110 .0

The Ding Stepe with difto-tians or the Dake of Savoy, in either of which cafes their Dominion there were loft; and that it were much better for them to have him their Neighbour and Friend, than to have a powerful Neighbour (as either of the other were) and an Enemy: withal, the Milanefi were much troubled at-it ,! imagining they had made a discovery of the Earls Ambition, and the ends he drove at 1 but they thought it best not to discover their thoughts, not knowing whither (if they, once cast off the Earl) to turn themselves, unters to the Venerians, whole pride and heavy Conditions they detended: wherefore they refolved not to fall at variance with the Earl, but to mak ale of him to oppose the prefent Storms, hoping they once blown over; to free themselves likewise from him: for at this time they were not only affailed by the Venetians, but by the Genouefe and Duke of Savoy, in the Name and Right of Charles of Orleans, Son to a Sifter of Philips; but that War was with cafe by the Earl suppressed ; and then they had no Enemics left but the Venetians, who with a mighty Army fought to make themselves Masters of that State, and were posselfed of Lodi and Piacenza; which laft the Earl laid Siege to, and with great labour took, and fackt., After which (, for Winter was drawing on) he brought his Army into Quarters, and went himself to Cramona, where all that Scafon he repored himfelf with his Wife. But Spring approaching . . . 6 C 3 the the Venerian and Milanife Armies took the Field ; the Milanefi only defired to regain Lodi, and then make Peace with the Peactians; for both the Charges of the War increating upon them, and withal their Tealoulies of their General, whole fidelity they miltruffed, they grew inhinitely dehrous of Peace, that they might enjoy fome repole, and fcoure themselves against the Earl They merefore refolved their Army hould make an attempt upon Garavaggio, hoping whenever that Callle were regained from the Enemy , Lodi woold farrender. The Earl obeyed the Milinof ; though he had more mind to pais the Adda, and fall into the Country of Brefeia. Having therefore hid Slege to Carataggib, the fortified himfoll with Trenches and Bulwarks, that if the Wekerkons attempted to raile the Siege, they fould do it with difiely antage. On the vther fide the Venetions came with their Army under Mitheletto within two Bowthat of the Enemy, where they lay feveral daics, and meny Skirmillies happened. However, the Earl made his approaches to the Calle, and reduced it to fuch a condition that it could not fonger hold out; which much afflicted the Venetians, believing with the loss of it they should lose Lodi. Wherefore calling a Council of War, there were many Debates how to relieve it; but none fem'd probable, unless they could force the Energies Works, which must be done with great dializantage. However, they thought that 34 ł

££

ļ

į

that Caffle of fuch concern, that the Senate of Venice (naturally fearful, and dreading any thing they behold doubtful and dangesous) choice to run the hazard of all, rarather than with the loss of that Caffle lose their prefent Defign. They therefore determined, in the belt manner they could, to form the Earls Camp, and getting in Order one Morning very early, fell on in that part they had observed weakest Guarded; fo that upon the first Charge (as happens in all unexpected Affaults) Sforza's whole Army was in confusion: but the Earl foon repaired that diforder; fo that after many Attempts made by the Enemy to force the Trenches, they were not only repulfed, but to totally routed and difcomfited, that of The Vene-Twelve thousand Horfe, which were in the tion Army defensed Army, not above a thouland faved them- by the felves; all their Ammunition and Car- Earl. riages became a prey to the Enemies; nor ever before or fince, did the Vonetians receive a greater or more dreadful blow. Among the Prey and Prifoners was found a Vienetien Providitor very fad and melancholy, who before the Fight, and in the carrying on the War, had been used to speak very differentiation of the Earl, calling him Bastard and bafe Fellow: to that finding himfelf now a Priloger, and being conficious of his Fault, fearing to be rewarded according to his Deferts ; being brought before the Barl quaking and trembling, according to the nature of proud and bale-minded men, who 6 C 4

Digitized by Google

35 ver of

Eatl Sfor-2,4.

Book VI.

who are infolent in Prosperity, and low and vile in Advertity; calting himfelf on his Knees with tears in his Eyes, humbly cra-ved pardon for the Injuries he had done him; whom the Earl taking by the Hand; and rating him up, bid be of good comfort, and hope the beft; and then told him : That The cene he wondred a Man of that Prudence and zous tem-Gravity be would be thought, foculd so overfee himfelf as to talk fo vilely of those that bad not deferved it : for a to those matters mberewith be had (candalized him, be knew not what had been done between Storza his . Father, and the Lady Lucia his Mother, becanfe be neither was nor could be present; but as to bis own doings, be was sensible be bad governed himself so, that no man could justly reprove him; of which both himself and the whole Senate could bear sufficient teltimony : and therefore exhertad him for the future, to be more modest in his Expressions, and more cantions in his proceedings. After this Victory, the Earl with his Triumphant Army marched into the Territory of Brefcia; all which he possested himfelf of, and then pitcht his Camp with in two miles of the City. On the other tide, the Venetians having received this defeat, imagining (as it happened) That Brefera would be the next thing ftroke at, had taken the best Care, and made the best provision for it they could; and then with all diligence levyed. Forces, and railyed the remants of their broken Aamy ; and by virtue : 00 6 .M virtue of the League fent to demand Aid from the Florentines, who being releafed from the War by King Alphonfo, fent to their atliftance 1000 Foot, and 2000 Horfe. With this addition of Forces the Venetians were in a condition to begin to think of Perce. It hath been a long time fatal to the Venetian Republick to lofe in War, and afterwards by Treaty to have it reftored; double ; and the Venetions now well knew how jealous the Milanefi were of the Earl, and how the Earl defired not to be Earl but Lord of Milan fo that it was in their power to make Peace with either, the one deliring it out of Ambition, and the other out of Fear. They shole to make it with the Earl, and offer him their Affistance to Conquer the other ; perswading themselves, That the Milanesi feeing themselves deceived by the Earl, would in indignation rather submit themfelves to any than to him; and fo reducing them into a condition that they could neither defend themselves nor trust the Earl, they would be forced, not knowing which way to turn themselves, to fall into their lap. Having thus deliberated, they founded the Earls inclination, and found him very ready to embrace Peace, being defirous the Victory gained at Caravaggio should be his and not the Milanefi's: wherefore an Agrooment was concluded, by which the Venetions were ob. Peace beliged to pay the Earl, till furth time as he had tween the conquer'd Milan, 13000 Floring a Monthsand Venations. moreover, during that War, to allift him with 4000

r's Acel

Book VI. ceived Pavia, which might have warned we mbat the end of your Friendship would prove s-yes ma pask by that injury, Supposing the largness of shat Conquest might have fatisfied your. Ambition, Bus alafs ! Thofe who defire all mill never, be fainfied with part. You there. promised we freud enjoy what you afterwards. gained . because you imagined when was given by parcels, might be Justch? & again at once as bath happoned frace the Villory at Caravaga gio, which being gained with our Blood and Mony, hath finice been purfued to our destruction . Oh unbappy shofe Cities who are exposed to defend their Liberty against all Oppressions ; but more unbappy those who are necessitated to trush the defence of it to Mercenary and dif-Loyal Arms, like yours : Lot pefterity therefor be marned by our Example's though wa have not taken marning from that of Thebes and Philip of Macedon, who after bawing conantered their Adverfory, field became their E-namy, and then their Prince. Hencer, we can be eachfor of no asber fault, but putting too timeb confidence in him whom we should not at all have sruffed for your pall life, the ambition of your mind boutsus with the Elfate on degree front d bave deterred us. What Repes could we have in him mba had betrayed a Lord of Luces, fleeced the Florentines and Venetians flighted the Duke, shuled the King and what's above all mith fuch violences and injuries perfects nd God and his Church ? Why Should we think M shofe States and Princes bad les pomer over Francis Stonza, than the Milaneli, or that he mbabad Sanfren violated bis Faith mith a

Lasi .5

Digitized by Google

tbers

40

ebers would keep it with us. It our want of prudence, for which we are to be blamed, is no excuse for your perfidionsness, nor can it purge that Infamy our just Complaints shall spread through the World, 'nor release you from the checks of your own Conficences for when with those Arms prepared for our defence, you come to smite and injure us, you cannot but inwardly condemn your felf to the punifoment appointed for Parricides. And though Ambition frontil blind you, the subole World, withefs to your Treachery, will open your eves. God bimfelf will open them, if Treasons, Perjury, and violated Faith difplease him : whiles (as bisberto for some occult end he has been) we fill continue a favourer Malignant men. Promise not then to your self Wistory which the just anger of God will deny yours and know, we shall till death defend our Liberty, and when we can no longer do it! fubmis is rather to any other Poince then you : wif our fine be fo great that not must, in defpire of me, fait into your bunds, yor be affared, that Dominion you enter into by Frand and Deseit, will end in you or in your Ghildren mith Lofs and Ignominy. Though the Earl were touched to the quick with what the Milanofi had faid, yet without any visible alterution either in words or gesture he answe-red: . That be was content to attribute to their The Barls enger and paffion all the injuries of their im the Miles prudens Speetber, to every particular of which net. be could give an Aufmer, where he before any that could judg of their Differences; that is might the Earl, to withdraw from his Camp to their own, and at the fame time fignified to the Earl, the Peace they had made; giving him twenty daies, if he pleafed, to accept it. The Earl did not much wonder at these proceedings of the Menetians, for he had long before forefeen it , and exme - " pected every day when it fhould happen; yet now it was befallen, he could not forbear: fretting at it, and focling the fame pation within himfelf, as Milanefs had done when he abandoned them, he took two dayes to return an answer to the Ambaffadors, who brought him the fignification of the Peace. In which time he determined to keep a tiesty on foot, and yet follow his own delignes a wherefore he publickly dealared he would accept the Peace, and fent Ambaffadors with full committion to ratify it ; but gave shem private instructions not to doit, but only with cavils and delays gain time, and to confirm the Venetions in a beleif that he meant faithfully, he makes Truce for a Month with the Milanefs, and drawing off his forces from the City, quartered them in the most convenient Towns he had in his possession about it. By this meanes he procured victory to; himfelf, and ruined the Milanefi: for the Venetians trusting to the Peace, made flow? provision for War; and the Milanefi feeing a Truce granted, the enemy withdrawn, and the Venetions their friends, flattered themfelves that all was well, and that the Earl had given one his enterprize; which easie belief

44·

Book Y I. Florence

þ

¢,

Æ

8 1

hetief did them double prejudice, for in the first place they neglected to prepare for their own defence, and then though the Country lay open to the Enemy (it being now Seed time) they lowed great quantities of grain whereby the Earl might the salier familh them. All there things hurtful to the Enemy proved helps to the Earl, who belides gained to much time to breath and rderuis his Army. In all this War of Lambacky you the Florentines had declared themfelves of paither party a neither had they mayed any favour to the Eatheither when he defended the Mil shele or fince a for indeed the Earl not flanding in need of it silhad , never prefs'dit , only after the rout of Geravaggie, being obliged to it by the League, they had fent affiltance to the Venetians : but now Earl Francis being left to himfelf, having no other recourfe, was constrained instantly to urge the folicine Florentines to, affift him; which he did not the Florenonly publickly to the State, but privately to his times aid. Friends, and especially to Cosmo de Medici, with whom he had alwaies preferved an inviolable friendship, and who in all his undertakings had faithfully Gounfelled, and largely supplyed him: nor did Gofme forfake him in this nesellity, but as a private Perfon plentifully contributed to his relief, and encouraged him to proceed, withal moving the City publickly to affift him : but herein he found fome difficulty. Neri de Gino Capponi was a man very powerful in Florence, and he was of Opinion, It was not for the interest of the City that the Earl should teke Milan, judging it rather for the safety of 6 D Italy

*5

Machivel's Hiftory

*6*6

BookVI

Iculy abat the Beace were rasified, than the Win professied s for in the first place; be was dombefil loof the Milanele one of fight to the Dick final & fautender to the Venetians, which would poore minus wat ; and again, pould the EAl Suntome Master of Milan, be shought fo mitghing in Army and fo great a Dominion pyned so A would render him too formidables; and if Be wete almost insupportable being but Earl; if other Dake there wonth be no endating bin Whetefute be shought is berear for the Commonwealth of Florence what all lealy; that she Dait pould fail preferer his Reputation in Arms, and Lothshardy be lipided into two Commune alers who worked mover poin so offend usbere? and each by Interestatives could not do it? to brig to bride to Ipaf be fans sto way, but, by wet relieving the Earl, and indintaining their de Crigar with the Venetianst Bar Colmois Frends approved not these Realons, which they though Net moved, nor because indeed he thought it good for the Commonwealth, but becaule he would not have the Earl (fo great a Friend of Cofmo's) become Duke, whereby he thought Col would grow too powerful! Com the other fide by Reafon demonstrated, Thisfill Afisting the East was for the good of Italy and chat Commonwealth; for it was an Opinion fai conring of little mildome, cothink the Milanette could ever preferve shear Liberty , for both the Quality of the Citizens, their manner of tiving and the ancient Factions in that City, were d commadistory to Civil Government; fo that of necessity the Ewil must become Duke or the Van tians

Book VI.

of Florence.

47

tians Lords of it; and no man could be fo much a fool as to start a doubt, whether it were better mbave the neighbourhood of a potent Friend, or of a very powerful Enemy? nor was it, as he phought, to be doubted that the Milanele (though they had War with the Earl) would over submit to the Venetians; for the Earl had a Party in Milan, but 'they none; fo that whenever they defraired of longer defonding their Liberty they would rather fubmit to the Earl than the Venetians. This diversity of Opinion held the City in a long fulpence, but at laft they determined to fend Amballadors to Treat with the Earl, with instructions, That if they found him firing, and likely to overcome, they should clap up an Agreement with him, but if not, then use Cavils and Delaies. These Ambaffadors were in their way as far as Reggio, when they heard the Earl was already become Lord of Milan; for as foon as the Truce was expired, he had again drawn his Forces before that City, with hopes, in defpight of che Venetians, thortly to poffels it, for they could no way relieve it but by the way of the Adds, which he could eafily block up; and he did not at all fear, lince it was Winter, that the Venetians would encamp on the banks of that River; and before Spring he hoped to gain the Victory , especially since Francis Piccinino was dead, and the Milanefe had no other Captain but his Brother Jacob. The Venetians had fent their Ambaffadors to Milan, encouraging these Citizens to defend themselves, and promiling great and speedy succour. There 6 D 2 hapned hapned during Winter divers light Skirmifhes between the Earl and Venetians, and Spring coming on, the Venetians with their whole Army, under the Command of Pandolpho Malaterta, fat down on the banks of the Adda. where they began to confult, whether to relieve Milan they should affail the Earl, and try the fortune of a Battle. Pandolpho their General thought this too hazardous an Experiment, knowing the valour both of the Earl and his Army, believing they might eafily vanquish him without fighting, the Earl being in great diffress for want of Corn and Straws he therefore advised they should keep that Post, fo putting the Milanefe in hopes, leaft in despair they should surrender to the Earl. This course was approved by the Venetians, as well because they thought it secure, as because they were in hopes, by holding the Milanefe in neceffity, they flould confirmin them to fubmit to their Dominion, perfwading themfelves, they would never yield to the Earl, confidering the Injuries he done them; fo that the Milanefe were reduced to extream milery, and that City naturally abounding with Poor, they died in the very Streets with hunger, which caufed Uproars and Complaints in devers parts of the City, that the Magilirates were forct to use their utmost endeavours to prevent' a general Tumult, The Multitude are long before they are disposed to mischiel , but once disposed, every little Accident moves-them ; for now two Perfons, of no confiderable Quality, difcourting together at the New Gate, of the Calamity

48

Book VI. of Florence.

lamity of the City, and their own mileries, and what means there was yet left for fafety; others began to gather about them, till at last they grew to be a great number 3 whereupon a Ru-' A great mour was foread about the City, that those a. Tumult in bout the New Gate were in Arms against the Magistrates; upon which all the Multitude, who waited but such an occasion,' took Arms,' and made Jafer of Vicomercate their Leader. and going to the Palace where the Magiltrates were affembled, they fell on with fuch fury, that all those that could not flie were flain ; amongft whom was Leonard Vinetto the Vene-' The Venetian Ambaffador, whom, as an occafioner of tian Am- • their Famine, and rejoycer at their Milery, they therein tore in pieces; and thus become (as it were) flain. Princes of the City, they proposed among themselves, what was belt to be done to release themselves from these Afflictions, and procure their quiet and repole; every man was of opinion, fince they could no longer maintain their Liberty, that 'twas their best course to shelter themselves under the protection of some Prince able to defend them : fome were for King Alphonso, others for the Duke of Savoy, and others would have the King of France for their Lord; not the least mention was made of the Earl, fo prevalent was their anger against him : but when they could not agree upon any of the others, Japer of Vicomercato was the first that named him, affirming, That if they defigned to free themsfeldes from the War they groaned under, there was no othet way but choofing him ; for the People of Milan flood in: need 6 D 3

3 $ í

i

49 Machivel's Hiftory

Book VI.

need of a prefent and cettain Peace, and could never be redreft by the tediom bypes of future so lief. Then with the best of his invention he case cufed the Earls attions, accufed the Venctions, and all the Princes of Italy, who would not, eisber one of Ambition or Aparice permit them to live frees and fince they must give away their Liberty, obto should give is so one who could and would defend them, that at least with their Servitude they might purchase Peace, and not a more dangetone and bazardous War. He was with wanderful attention liftned to by all, and no foorter had done speaking, but they unanimously cryed out, That the Earl should be called in, making Jaster Ambassadour to that purpole, who, by command of the People, went to attend the Earl with this pleafant and joyful News; which the Earl gladly accepted, and chired into Milan, as Prince, on the 26 of February 1450, and was with wonderful joy received by those who not long before .had defamed him with fuch spight and hatred. This News arriving et Florence, orders were dispatch'd to their Ambassadors, who were on their way, not to treat an Agreement with the Earl, but to congratulate the Duke for his Victory. These Ambassadors vvere, by the Duke, very honourably received, for he very vvell knew that, against the power of the Venetians, he. could not find in Italy more faithful nor braver. Friends than the Flarentines, vvho being quie of their fears of the Family of the Vifcomi, they believed must now be forst to engage against the Power's of Arragon, and Venices for Milen furrendsed to Eatl Francis, Feb. 26, 1450.

Digitized by Google

the

Book VI:

K

i

ī

¥

Ĺ

l

f Florence

the Kings of Naples being of the House of rragon were their Enemies, because of the friend thip which they knew the Florentine Reon ele had always kept with the House of Frances and the Venerians Centible, that the fear they bologe food in of the Viccout, washow surred over to them, remembring with what carnete ness they purfued the Viscontry and hearing the fame, perfocutions, fought their raises . This fate cilicated the New Duke in agreeing with the Florensines, and was likewild the organion that the Venetians and King Alaberto estred into a League against their common Enemies, and obliged themfelves at the fame time to begin the War, and that the King should affail the Florentimes, and the Venetions the Dukes who, fcarce fetled in his Government, they thought paot able, either with his own Force, or any affiftance he could have from others ... to main. tain the War. But because the Liessue between the Venetians and Florentimes was full'inforce and the King, after the War at Piombino, had likewise made Peace with them, they judg'd it not convenient to break the Peace, without fome presence to justifie the Wars' and therefore they both fent Ambassadors to Florence whoeon behalf of their Masters declared to the Florentines, that they had entred into that League, not to offend others, but to defend themfelves. The Venetians further complained, that the Florentines had given passage to Alerander, the Dukes Brother, to march by the way of Lunigiana with his Forces into Lombardy; and had moreover been the Authours and 6 D 4 2 mili

5 B

Machivel's Hiftery Boold HE

applyed themfelves to their usual course of dea fence, and Created the Council of Ten, entertained new Officers, fent Amballadors to Rome Naples Venice, Milan, and Siena, to demand, aid of their Friends, clear their own doubts and fulpitions of thole that were Neutral, and difcover the Councils of their Enemies. From the Pope they gained nothing, but general affurances of his good Inclinations, and exhortations to Peace: From the King vain Excules, for his having difmit the Florentines offering to give fafe Conduct to whoever defired it; and though he contrived all he could to conceal the Count Is of the intended War, yet the Ambaffadors difcovered his evil Intentions, and detected many preparations of his delighed to dammage the Common-wealth. With the Duke, by various new Tyes and obligations, they fortified their league, and by his meanes contracted A+ mity with the Genovele, and their antient differences of reprizals, and many other Quarrels they compoled. Notwithstanding that the Venetians all they could, obstructed those compositions, and forbore not foliciting the Emperour of Constantinople to forbid all Florentines, Trathing in his Countrys With formuch rancour and malice they began this War, and to powerful in them was the define of Rule, that without any fense of gratitude they fought the defiryction of those who had railed them to their greatnels, But the Emperour gave no car to them. The Florentine Amballadors were by the Senate of Venice forbid, entrance into their Eflates, lalleadging, That without the Kings participation, having having contracted foolofe an alliance with him. they could not receive them. The Sanch courtesully received shoir Ambaffadors, fearful of being furprized before the League could refeue them; and they chose rather to temporize, than intenfe those Arms they could not relift. The Venetions and King had designed (as hath been fince conjectured) to have fent Ambaffadors to Florence to Justifie the War 3 but fince the Vasterious would not be admitted into the Florentime Territories, and the Kings would not perform that office alone, that Embally was left imperfect ; but by this the Venetians knew, that the Florentines now as much undervalued them. as they had done Florence fome months before. In the height of these feares Frederick the Third Frederick Emporour came into Itely, to his Coronation, the Third and, on the 30 January 1451, entred into Flot comes to rence with 1400 Horie and was by that Senate Florence. honourably receiv'd ; he fixed in that City till the fixth of February, and then continued on his Journey to Rome, where he was folemaly crowned and celebrated his Nuptials with the Empress, who came to meet him by Sea, and to returning into Germany in May, he again paft through Florence, and had the fame honours paid him on his return as before. In his way home, to recompence fome Services done him by the Marquis of Ferrara, he granted him Modena and Reggio. The Florentine Nall this while omitted no preparations for the impendent The Flor War, and to gain themselves more reputation, make a and terrine their Enemies, they and the Duke Lesgue of Milan entred into an Offenfive and Defen- with five

France.

red by Google .

55 .

Machivel's Hiftory

Book VI.

The Vantsian begin the War with the Duke.

36

five league with the King of Erance, which with great Magnificence and Joy they published throughout Italy. In the month of May 1452 the Venetions thought fit no longer to defer the beginning of the War with the Duke, but with 14000 Horfe and 6000 Foot invaded his Dominions, entring by the way of Lodi; and at the fame time the Marquis of Montferrat, led by his own Ambition, or fet on by the Venetians, affailed him on the contines towards Alexandria. On the other fide the Duke had brought together an Army of 18000 Horfe and 5000 Foot, and having put ftrong garrifons in-10 Alexandria and Lodi, and fortified all places where the Enemy could offend him, with his Army enters the Territories of Brefcia, where he did the Venetians infinite damage on all tides, fpoiling the Country, and Sacking the weaker Towns. And the Marquis of Montferrat being defeated at Alexandris by the Dukes forces, he could after wards with more strength oppose the Venetians, and assail their Country. Whilf the War was thus managed in Lombardy, with Various, but inconfiderable accidents : In Toscany likewife began the War between King Alphonfo and the Florentines, which was profecuted with no more Valour nor danger. then that in Lombardy. Ferrando, Natural Son to Alphonfa, came into Toscany with 12000 Men under the Command of Frederick Lord of Ur-in the Vale of Chiana; for the Sanchi being their, friends, they entred on that fide into the Elorentine Territories, This was but a finall Cafile, and

The Kings Army en ter i Taf cany.

Book VI. Albrence.

and the Walls inconfiderable; The Garrifons were very few, but they accounted brave men in those times; for their whole force was but 200 fent thither from the Senate, and yet before this mighty Caftle Ferrand encamps with his whole Army, and either through the Excefs of Courage in those within, or want of it it in the besiegers, he was 36 daies before he wonit. which loss of time gave the Senate leifure to provide for other places of more moment, reanforce their Army, and put themselves in a better polture of defence then before. The Enemy possed of this Cafile, marched forward into Chianti, where they were from two fmall Country-towns repulsed : fo leaving them, they laid Siege to Caftelma, a Caftle placed on the Confines of Chianti, within ten miles of Siene, weik by Art, and weaker by Nature ; yet were not thele two weakneffes Sperior to the weaknels of the Army shat affailed it, for after 48 daies Seige they departed with fhame. So mormidable were these Armies, and so dangerous these Wars that those Cafiles and Towns which now are flighted, as impossible to be defended; were then effectined as places impregnable. Whill Ferrando lay in the Country of Chianta, he made many inwoads and incusions into the Florentine Territory, and entred within 6 miles of the City, to the great fear and Damage of the Florentine Subjects, who lay now with their Army, confifting of about 8000 Menjunder the Command of Aftorra de Faenna, and Gifmonil Malstefta, towards the Caffle of Calle; keeping atindifiance from the Enemy, leaft they should he SPACE L

Ś7

5 : 2

,

 Σ

Machivel's Hippy Book VI.

beforced to come to a Battail for they were of Opinion whill they kept intite, they could meet lofe the War; for the little Cafes that were loft would again by Peace be recovered, and the great Towns were Seure because the Enemy durft not affail them. Bondes all this the King had an Armado of about twenty Foifis and Gallies, in the Set of Pifa, and whill he laid fiege to Cafelling shey attempted the Fort of Vada, which by the diegligence of the Governour they took : by which meanes the Enemy much molefted the adjacent Country, but that mole Antion was from prevented by fome Souldiers which the Florentines lent to Campiglia, who pen'd up the Entry thinks be hore The Pope concerned not himfeld in these Wars further, then endeavouring a reconciliation of all parties ; but theugh he modied not with War abroad , he had him to Thank found danger at home. There was living in abolantimes Ma. Suphen Porceri, enabled by Blood and Learning, but much more famous for the Excellency of his Ingenuity. He had a mighty defire, as most men have that at Covenius of Glary, to do or at least attempersonnetbing memorable: And thought nothing mobiler, than to redeem his Country and information of the Brelanes, and reftore it divits priftibe Efteres hoping if he effocted stitute filedat least thonew Founder, or fecond inthe allative Gives The wicked lives of the prelasted, aub differente its of the Barons of Kome, made him hope for a happy affue; but that which wash encouraged him were choic Verses of Petterthes, in that Song which begins, Spirito

Stephen Percari difturbs Rome,

48

Book VI. - of Florence. Spitio Gentile : where he tales Los Sopra il monte Tarpaio Cauzon volerat . "Un Cavaliar ch'Isalin misa Henopaibasa Der Ranfele pris d'alexies she difestefforen avit Meller Stephen knew that Poets were off- a Temen times filled with a divine and Prophetick fpi- Kaight. rit, and therefore thought what Petrarch prophefied of in that Song must necessarily come to pais, and that he must needs be the Man to put in Execution those glorious Ex-ploits, believing himself for Eloguence, Learn-ing, Favour and Friends, superiour to any other Roman; and having pollefied himielf with this rapture, could not govern himself with any caution, but by Words, Convertation and manner of Living difference himself, to that the Pope grew jealous of him, and to hinder him from doing milchief, Confined him to Bolonia, giving order to the Governour of that City, to fee and speak with him once a day. This first shock did not at all fartle Messer Stephen, but rather with more diligence he purfued his delign, and, in the molt wary milini ne manner he could, he held Treaties with his Friends, and oftentimes went and returned from Rome with fuch celerity, that he full thewed himfelf to the Governour at the time limited: but at laft, thinking he had drawn in snow to fecond him, he refolved no longer to delay the trial, but gave order to his Friends Bome, That at a fet time they fnould provide a splendid Supper, whither all the Conpirators were invited; with order, That every one

The Poet feetas to foretel fomegreat

-59

0' 10. d soi.

Machivel's Hiltory

Book VL

The Toe: feem .c. fo ere: fomegrees Es vio re of 27 west

.....X

60

Mr. Stephen put to death.

1443.

one should bring with him his most truly Friends, promising to be with them by that time Support was done to WHP was provided according on his directions & and Meffer Ste-phen came amongs them the Houle where they Supt: So that as foon as they had done Supper, he appeared to the Confpirators clad in Cloth of Gold, and with Chains and other Ornaments, to give him, more Majefty and Reputation and having, kindly embraced them, Reputation and having kindly embraced them, he, with a long Oration, exhorted them to be of good Courage, and dispote themselves to to glorious an Enterprize. Then, he or-dered how the Derign thould be performed, directing one Party, next Morning early; to feize the Popes Palace, and the other, through the City, to call the People to Arms. But the matter came to the Popes Ear that Night (fome affirm by the infidelity of the Confi-tators) others fay he knew Metter Stephano rators; others fay, he knew Meffer Stephano was in Kome) however it was, that very Supper Night the Pope cauled Meffer Stephen, and molt of his Company to be apprehended, and afterwards, according to their deferts and follies, put to death. This difattrous end had his Delign, and certainly, however his intention may be commended, none but will blame his judgment; for though fuch Enterprizes may till the imagination with fome thadow of Glory, they have alwaics certain loss attends their The War had now held in Ig execution. cany almost a year; and the Spring 1453, and Seafon for Armies drawing into the Field being pretty well advanced, the Lord Alexander Sforza

Boak VI. de Florence.

1

Sforms, Brother to the Duke, comes to affift the Florentines with 2000 Horfe; with which the Florenzine Army being well recruited, they refulved upon regaining what they had loft. and with little wouble recook all their Towns. Then they went to beliege Friano, which for want of care in the Commissaries was facke for that the Inhabitants being difperfed, they were with great difficulty brought back to their Habitations, till upon the grant of large Priviledges, and other Rewards, they returned. The Fort of Vada was likewife regained, for the Enemy, freing they could not keep it. feelook and burnt it. And whilft these things were doing in the Florentine Army, the Arnagan Forces, not having the confidence to draw nigh their Enemies, were retreated towands Siona, and made many incurfions into the Lands of the Florentines, committing many Robberies, outrages, and violences. Nor did the King fail to make trial of other waies to affail the Enemy, by making them divide their Forces, and by new Troubles and Affaults to beat them out of heart. Gerardo Garribatorti was Lord of the Vale of Bagno, who alwaies, either out of Friendship or Obligation, had, together with his Ancestors, been Souldiers or Penfioners to the Florentines. This man held a private Correspondence with King Alphonfo, for the exchanging his Effate for another, to be given him by therKing, in the Kingdom of Naples. This defign was revealed to the Florentines, who, to found his intentions, fent a Messenger to remember him both of his, and his Prede-6 F ceffors ceffors Obligations, and to exhort him to continue faithful to the Commonwealth. Gerardo feemed to admire at it, and with deep Oaths and Execrations protefted, fo treachcrous a Thought never came in his mind _ and that he would have gone himfelf to Florence, to remain there as a pledge of his Faith; but being himfelf indifpofed, what he could not do himfelf he would make his Son do, whom he prefently configns to the Ambassadour to carry as a Holtage to Florence. Thefe words. and these demonstrations, made the Florentines believe Gerardo in the Truth, and his Accufers vain Fellows and Lyars; whereupon they remained fully fatisfied. But Gerardo with more inftance continues this Treaty with the King, and having foon concluded it, the King lends Frier Puccio, a Knight of Jornfat lem, with fufficient Force to take pofferition of the Castle and Lands of Gerrardo. But the People of Bagno, being faithful to the Florentines, very unwillingly promifed obedience to the Kings Officers. Frier Puecio had already taken possession of the whole Vale of Bagno, fave only the Cafile of Corgano. There happened to be with Gerardo, at the time of his making this Relignation, one Anthony Gualandi a Pifan, both young and Couragious, who was highly displeased at this Treation of Cerardo's, and having confidered the fcituation of the Fortress, and the countenance of the Garrifon, whom he perceived diffatistied and discontented, seeing Gerardo standing at the Gate of the Caffle to let in the Kings People" flips between him and the Gate, and with both

61

The Vale of Bagm benayed to the King.

62

Tilan's fide'ity to the Floren. tines,

Book VI. of Florence.

both his hands thrufts Gerardo out, and commands the Guards to fhut the Fortress against him, and maintain it for the people of Florence. The Report of which being heard in Bagno, and other adjacent places all the People took Arms against the Arragonians, and cre-cting the Standards of Florence, drove them thence. As foon as this matter was heard at Florence, they imprisoned Gerardo's Son, that was delivered them as Hoftage, and fending Forces to defend that Country, reduced it from a Principality to a Lieutenancy. But Gerardo (Traytour both to his Lords and to his own Son) though with difficulty escaped . leaving his Wife, Family, and all his Substance in his Enemies hands. This fuccels was much valucd in Florence; for, had the King had the fortune to become Lord of it, he might with small expence, at his pleasure have made incurfions into the Vale of Tevere and Calentino, and fo annoyed the Republick, that they could not have kept their Forces entire to oppole the Arragon Army, then lying near Siena. The Florentines, befides the preparations made in The Flor Italy, to suppress the force of the adverse remines League, had fent Meffer Agnolo Acciaivolo their fend an Ambassador to the King of France, to Treat dour to with him, to give leave to Renate of Anjon to France. come into It aly, in favour of the Duke and them; whereby he might both defend his Friends, and being in Italy, watch some opportunity to regain his Kingdom of Naples : towards which, they promiled him ailithance of Men and Mony: So that whilit the War was managed, in the manner we have related, 6E 2 in

63

64

Menivel's Hiftory

Book VI

in Lombardy and Toscany, the Ambassadour made an Agreement with Renate, that he thould, by the latter end of June, come with 2400 Horfe into Isaly, and that at his arrival at Alexandria, the League thould pay him 30000 Florins, and afterwards, during the War, 10000 Florins a Month. Purfuant to this accord; he being about to pass into Italy was Ropt by the Duke of Savoy, and Marquis of Montferrat, who, being Friends to the Venesians, denyed him paffage. Whereupon the King was by the Florentine Ambaffadour adviled, that, toadd to his Friends Reputation, he fould return back to Florence, and by Sea carry fome of his Forces into Italy, and in the mean time, endeavour to perfwade the King of France, to Mediate with the Duke of Savoy to grant paffage to the reft: According to his Advice it was done; for Renate came by Sea into Italy, and his Forces at the King of France's instance were admitted into Savoy. King Renate was most honourably received by Duke Francis, and the French and Italian Troops being joyned, affailed the Venetians with fo much vigour, that in a fhort time they recovered all the Towns taken in the Territory of Cremona; and not therewith content, poffeffed themfelves of the greater part of the Brescian Country; and the Venetian Army not thinking it fecure to keep the Field, was drawn under the Walls of, Brescia. But Winter approaching, the Duke thought fit to draw the Army into Quarters, alligning Piacenza for the Kings. Thus they lay all the Winter 1453 without doing any thing, and when Spring was

Digitized by Google

Renate of Anjon comes into Italy.

Book VI.

of Florence.

65

was come, and 'twas thought the Duke would' draw into the Field, and drive the Venetians: out of all their Territories on the Main, the King let the Duke understand, that he must of necessity return to France. This determination feem'd as ftrange, as it was unlookt for by the Duke, and very fentibly it afflicted him ; but though he went in Perfon to diffiwade the "Resate re-Kings departure, he could neither by Prayers' gain for or Promises prevail, only he offered to leave France. part of his Forces, and fend Jahn his Son to ferve the League in his stead. This going away of Renates did not at all difplease the? Florentines, for having recovered their Caffles they flood no longer in fear of the King; and on the other fide, they defined the Duke fhould recover no more than his own Lands in Lombardy. Renate, after his departure, fent his Son John into Italy, who stay'd not long in-Lombardy, but came to Florence, where he was honourably received. The Kings departure made the Duke very inclinable to Peace, and the Venetians, Alphonso, and the Elorentines, being all weary, were extream willing to it; belides, the Pope had with all earneftness preffed, and did still press it: for this same year Mahomet, the Great Turk, had taken Conftantimople, and made himfelf Lord of all Greete, which extreamly frightned all Christians, and efpecially the Venetians and the Pope, who both thought they already felt his Arms inItaly.' Wherefore the Pope prayed the Italian Powers' to fend their Ambaffadors with authority to confirm an universal Peace: they all obeyed, and coming to difpute the merits of the Caufe, 6E 3 there

Machivel's History

Book VI

there was found fome difficulty in the Treaty; the Venetians demanded from the Duke Cremens. and the Duke from them Bergamo, Brefcia and Crema; fo that it was thought impossible to refolve this difficulty. But what at Rome many thought to hard to be done, at Milan and Venice proved case; for whils they were still treating Peace at Rome, the Duke and Venetians. on the 9 of April 1454, concluded it, by virtue of which, each was to be mutually reftored to the Towns and Lands they had before the War. and the Duke had liberty to recover the Towns taken from him by the Duke of Savoy, the Marquis of Montferrat, and other Italian Princes, and a Months time was allowed to ratific it. The Pope, Florentines, and with them the Sanefi and other leffer Potentates, ratified it within the time; and not content therewith, a Peace was concluded between the Florentines , Duke, and Venetians for 25 years. King Alphonfo was the only Prince of Italy that feem'd diffatisticd with this Peace, thinking it somewhat entrenched upon his Reputation, being received into it not as a principal but as an adherent; wherefore he kept long in fuspence, and could not let his intentions be underflood. But the Pope and other Princes having fent him many folemn Embassies, he suffered himself to be perfwaded by them, and efpecially by the Pope, and together with his Son, entred into this League for 30 years and the Duke and King contracted double alliance, by intermariage of their Daughters to each others Son. Notwithstanding, that there might yet remain fome feeds of War in Italy, he would not confert to the Peace, till the Col-

Peace fully concluded.

of Florence. Book VI.

Colleagues had granted him leave, that he might, without injury to them, make War upon the Genovefe, Gifmond Malatesta, and Astorre Prince of Faenza. And now the accord compleated, Ferrand his Son who was still at Siena, returned into the Kingdom, having by his Expedition into Toscany gained no Dominion, but lost a great many Men. This universal Peace being thus brought to an isfue, all the fear remaining was, least King Alphonfy's enmity to the Genovele should disturb it. The Venetians (according to their cultom when Peace is made) having dilcharged Jacob Piccinino, one of their Jacob Piccinino be Leaders, he joyning himfelf with feveral other gins feft Captains out of employment, came to Romania, and from thence into the Country of Siena, where Jacob litting down, began a War, and took many Towns from the Sanefi. In the beginning of these Troubles, and commencement of the year 1455 died Pope Nicholas, and to him fucceeded Calintus the Third. This Pope to suppress the new and neighbouring War, under John Ventimiglia his General, drew together as great a Power as fo fuddenly he could(and joyning with the Dukes and Florentine Forces, who were likewife brought on foot to suppress these diforders) sent them against Facob Piccining; and the two Armies engaging near Bolfena, though Ventimiglia was taken Priloner, yet Jacob loft the day, making a flying Jacob rour retreat to Caltiglione in Psicaia, and had not fena. King Alphonso supplied him with Mony, he had been utterly undone, which made many think this Attempt of Jacobs was made by the Kings Orders, Whereupon Al phonso supposing him-6 E 4 felf

Jacob Pice Troubles.

67

, felf discovered, to reconcile himself to the Colleagnes and the Peace, from which he feem?d by this feeble War to have alienated himfelf, ordered things to, that Jacob flould reftore to the Sanefi their Towns, and they give him 20000 Florins, and this Agreement made, he received Jacob into the Kingdom In these times though the Pope bulied himself in bridling Jacobs Violencies, yet he was not wanting to take order for the fupport of Christianity, which he beheld fadly oppressed by the Turks : wherefore he fent into all Christian Provinces Ambaffadors and Preachers, to perfwade the Princes and People to Arm themfelves in defence of their Religion, and with their Effates and Perfons encourage an Expedition against the common Enemy: Whereupon in Florence great Alms were gathered, and many wore the figh of the Crois as a badge, that they were ready to ferve in Perfon: Many foleman Proceedions were likewife made; nor was there any thing wanting, either in the publick or private Per-fons, to demonstrate, They would be of the tirst rank of. Christians both for Counsel, Men, and Mony, to forward fuch an Enterprize. But the heat of this Croifado was cooled by a new Accident which intervened. The Turk being with his Army at the Siege of Belgrade, a. Town feituate in Hungary on the River Danube, was by the Christian Army routed, and himfelf wounded : So that the Pope and other Christians having outworn their Fears, conceived for the loss of Comstantinople, the prepasations for War became lukewarm ; and by the death of John, the Vaivod General in that Victory

Digitized by Google

The Pope e.ideavors a Wat àgaisft the 68

ł

Book VI. of Florence.

Victory grew quite cold. But to return to Affairs in Italy. In the year 1456 the War begun by Jacob Piccinino being put an end to, to that Aritis among Men were quite faid alide, it appeared as if God had taken them up; for there happened fuch prodigious Storms of Wind in Tofeany, that the like was never heard of before, and the effects of them will feem admirable to, and aftonish future Generations : On the 26 of August, an hour before day, from the strange Adriatick Sea, opposite to Ancona, there arose a storms in dark, thick and foggy Cloud, extending it self for she face of two miles, which croffing Italy to the Sea opposite to Pifa, forced by Superiour power (whether natural or Supernatural) was torn afunder and divided, and the broken pieces furiously agitated, and sceming to fight and jostle each other, sometimes mounting up to Heaven, and then again with great fury descending, and often whirl'd about with violent motion, fill. Sending before them a most tempestuous Wind, with strange and monstrous staffes and stames of fire; and from these broken and confused Clouds, those furious Winds, and frequent Lightnings, ilfued a dreadful notfe, more terrible than ever any Earthquake or Thunder that had ever been heard, to the terrour and amazement of all Bebolders, who. could think nothing but that the World was at an End, and that Fire Air Earth and Water, were retarning into their first Chaos. Wherever this prodigious Storm reached, it produced strange and monstrous effects; but the most notable of al happrened about the Caffle of St. Caxiano. This Ca-Itle is about eight miles from Florence, on the Hills that part the Vale of Pifa and Greve: Tbis

10

Book VI,

This furious Tempest passing between that Castle, and the Borough of St. Andrew, feated upon the fame Hill touched not St. Andrews, and only in the passing thraw down fome Turrets and Chimneys in St. Caxiano; but about as much forward. a it is between one of those Toppes and the other many Houfes were levelled with the very graund, and the Roofs of the Churches of St. Martin, at Bagnuolo and St. Maria della Pace, whole, as they stood upon them, were carried above a mile, distance : a Carryer likewife, with bis Mules, in the Valley, a good distance from the Road, mere •found dead: All the stubbornest Osks, and strongest Trees, that would not bend to this violence, mers. not only torn up by the roots, but carried a good distance from the place where they grew. So that when the Storm win over, men were struck with. wonder and admiration to behold the Country maste and defolate, Churches and Houses ruined. Poor people lamenting to see their Habitations tbrown down, and under their Ruines their Beasts and Family buried: so that whoever same or beard it, was affected with borrous and compaffion. Certainly by this God intended rather to threaten than chastize Toscany; for had this Storm entred into any City, where Houles and Inhabitants were thick, as it did among the Oaks and Trees, and small dispersed Houses, certainly it had caufed that ruine and deltruction can hardly be imagined. But God was pleafed with this fmall Example to revive in mens minds the memory of his Power. But to, return where I left. King Alphonso was, as I Gid before, diffutistied with the Peace, and lince the War he had, by Jscob Piccinino, moved without without any reafonable occasion, had produced no important effect, he would make trial what those would produce which by the Articles of the League he had power to move. And therefore in the year 1456, he by Sea and Land makes War on the Genovefe, defirous to reitore Ring de the State to the Adorni, and take it from the makes Fregosi who now Governed; and in the mean the Grave time fends Jacob Piccinino against Gifmond Ma- ver, and latesta, but he having placed strong Garrisons ondismud. Malatesta. in his Towns, cared not much for Jacob, fo that on this part the King did no great matter ; but his Attempt on Genova created him and his Kingdom more War than he had a mind to. Peter Fregosa was now Doge of Genova, who fearful he could not support himself against the Kings power, refolved at least to give what he could not keep himfelf, to one that could defend hirf from his Enemies, and might fome time or other, for fuch a fervice, give him a proportionable reward ; to which end he fends A mbaffadors to Charles the Seventh of France, offering him the Dominion of Genova. Charles accepts the offer, and fends John of Anjon, fon of King Renate to take posselion of that City, who fometime before having left Florence was returned to France ; and Charles perfwaded himfelf that John having learnt many of the Italian Customs, might Govern that City better than any other; and he was likewife in hopes he might find an opportunity to make from thence an expedition to Naples to recover that Kingdom which Alfonfo had taken from his Father. John comes therefore to Genova, where he was received as Prince, and all the Forces of that

)

Book VI. of Florence.

Machivel's Hiftory Book VI.

ALIBORT King of Kalh.

that City and State delivered into his possession. This accident much difpleafed Alfonfo, who doubted lie had engaged a too important E. nemy against himfelf ; yet not at all difmayed, he courageously pursues his enterprize, and had already brought his Armado under Villa Marina to Porto Fine; where feized with a fudden diffemper he dies. By his death, John and the Genovofe were delivered from this War; and Ferrand who fueceeded his Father in the Kingdom, grew extreamly sufpicious; for having now an Enemy of fuch reputation in Italy, and being jealous of many of his Barons, whole fidelity he doubted, and whole inclination to novelty he knew, he was not without caufe fearful least they should take part with the French: he likewife feared the Pope (whofe ambition he was fenfible of) leaft whilit he was, yet unfetled in his Kingdom, he fhould endeavour to deprive him of it : All his hopes was in the Duke of Milan, who was no less concerned for the Kingdom, then Ferrand himfelf; for he was jealous thould the French become matters of is, they might likewife grafp at his estates, to which he very well knew they laid a claim. Wherefore no fooner was Alphonso dead, but that Duke sent Letters and Forces to Ferrand; thefe to give him aid and reputation, those to exhort him to be couragious; affuring him he would not in any necellity forfake him. The The Pope Pope after the death of Alphonso, defigned to give that Kingdom to Peter Lodamick Bergia his Nephew : but to give his defign a more his Nephen Specious pretence, he declared, that he intended to reduce it under that empire of the Church, and defigns that Kingdom for 72

Google

BOOK VI, g, Hlorence.

and to that putpole perfounded the Duke not to give any incouragement to Ferrand: offering him those Towns he was already poffest of in that Kingdom. But in the height of these thoughts, and contrivances of new troubles. Pope Calixius dies ; to whom fucceeded Pins the fecond, a Samefe, of the Family of the Picol, bominy, and called Æ uese : this Pope imploying all his thoughts for the good of Christendom. and the honour of the Church, forting afide all private interest and pattion, at the intreaty of the Duke of Milen, growns Ferrand King ; judging, he might rather preferve the peace of Italy by maintaining him in his pofferfion, than either by fayouting the French claim or usurping that Kingdom (as Calintus would have done) to himself : in requital of which favour, Ferrand makes Antheny, the Bopes Nephers, Prince of Malphi, and gives him his natural daughter to wite; he likewife reftores Bineventure and Terracing to that Church. And new Italy feemed in perfect quiet, and the Pope difpoled himself to promote an expedition against. the Turks, as Calintus, had begun to do, when there happened a diffention, between the Fregofiand John Lord of Genous; which kindled a The Fremore unportant Mar, then any had him before, tempts to Petrino Frigofi was actined to a Caffle of his feize Ge upon the Rinitras not thinking hunfelf recompenfed by John of Anjan in any proportion, to the deferts of himself or his family, who had bin the only instruments to make him Pripoe of that City, fo that at laft they came to open enmity. This was very pleafant to Rerrand, as the only meanes and path to his fecurity; wherefore he fupplied

73

. . . 6. in . . T 4.5 14 . maberen ítí te I -11 01 10 sA ning $1.10

and P

ب , ۲

Machivel's Hiftory Book VI.

74 fupplied Petrino with Men and Mony, hoping by him to drive John from that State: whereof John having intelligence, fends into France for aid with which he marches to encounter Petrino, but found him by the great affiftance given him to ftrong, he thought it best to retreat, and guard the City: Into which Petrino one night enters, and takes posselion of some places; but day appearing, he was by Johns forces encountred, and flain, and most of his People kill'd or taken. This Victory encouraged John to venture an Expedition against the Kingdom; and in October; in the year 1459, with a great Armedo he fails to Baia, and thence prov ceeds to Seffe, where he was by that Duke received The Prince of Terranis, the Aquillani, and many other Cities and Princes joyned with Jebn ; to that the whole Kingdom was in tonfulion: which Ferrand feeing; had recourse to the Pope and Duke ; and that he might have the fewer Enemies, makes Peace with Gifmonit de Malaresta; at which Jacob Piccining was for angry, being a profest Enemy of Gifmonds, that deferting his Service he joyns with John. For-rand therefore fends Mony to Frederick Lord of Urban, and with as much speed as he could, gathers together (for those times) a good Army, and on the River Sarni faces his Enemy; but in the ingagement Ferrand was routed, and most of his best Captains taken: After this defeat, the City of Naples, and fome few Princes and Towns, continued faithful to Ferrand, but the greatest part yielded to John. Jacob Piccining, would have had Jobn immediately upon this Victory, have marched directly up tØ

of Florence.

to Neples, and poffeft himfelf of the Head of the Kingdom: but John would notsfaying, He would first poffers himfelf of all the other part of bis Dominions, and then affault him; thinking, that if he were Master of all the other Towns, Naples would foon be gained. But taking this course, he took away Victory from himfells for he did not confider, that the Members more eafily follow the Head, than the Head the Members. After this defeat, King Ferrand had faved himfelf in Nuples; whither those of his Subjects, that were driven from their Estates, fled to him for fhelter; and, in the gentleft manner he could, -the gathers Mony and makes a little head of an Army: he fends afresh for Aid to the Pope and Duke, who both supplyed him in a larger manner, and with more expedition than before. So that now grown strong, he marches out of Naples, and having begun to recover Reputation, recovers fome of the loft Towns. Whilst War raged thus in the Kingdom, happened an Accident, which took from John both 9 his Reputation and Power to overcome. The rebels Genovefe, weary of the coverous and infolent of Government of the French, took Arms against the Kings Governour, and forced him to fly into the little Caffle: In this Attempt the Adorni and Fregosi were agreed, and Supplied by. the Duke of Milan with Men and Mony, as well to recover the State as defend it. So that King Renate; who was coming with a Fleet to the altistance of his Son, hoping he might regain Genova, by means of the little Caftle, as he was landing his Forces, was to totally routed, that he was forced with fhame to return to Province

75

the Kingdom,

76

Province. This News coming to the Kingdom of Naples quite daunted John of Anjone ; yes he would not give over, but for forme time maintained the War, aided by those Barons. who for their Rebellion against Ferrand thought they should find no pardon. At last after fundry Accidents, a pitcht Battle was fought between the two Royal Armies, in the John dri-ven our of year 1463, near Iraja; wherein John was defeated : yet was not the lofs of the Battle of that confequence, as the loss of Facob Piscinino, who deferted him and joyned with Ferrand : to that having no Forces to rely upon, he retreats to Histria, and thence returns to France. This War lasted four years and he lost that by his own Neglect, which the Valour of his Souldiers had feveral times wou. In this War the Florentines were not at all concern'd though true it is, King John of Arragen, new-ly railed to that Kingdom, by the death of Alphonfo, did by his Ambaffador request them avon p to affift his Nephew Ferrand, as they were aby alads liged by the League made with Alabonia his all non Father. To which the Florentines, answered, They were not bound to help the Son in a War the Father had brought upon himself; and abge as it mas begun mithout their Campfel, fo it fronte be continued and ordered mithout their Aid Whereupon the Ambaffadors , on their Kings behalf, protested the penalty of the Obligation, and Damages, and in a rage departed the City. So that the Florentines were all the time of this War,as to Forreign Affairs, in peace ; but they enjoyed not that quiet within, as in the next Book shall be fully declared.

The End of the Sixth Book.

Florentine History

NICHOLAS MACHIAVEL

BOOK V

Written by

Hole who read the former Books may perhaps imagine that a writer of the Florentines. Affairs, may have extended too largely the relations of things done in Lombardy, and the Kingdom; yet, neither hitherto have I, nor Ihall I for the future avoid fuch Narratives, for though I never promifed a Hiltory of Italy, yet I judge it proper to make a relation of the most notable things happened in that Province, because the omitting them would render our History more obfcure, and confequently much lefs delightful; especially fince from the actions of other people and Princes of Italy oftentimes arole those wars, in which the Florentimes were forced to concern themselves, thus 7 A Machiavel's History Book VII.

28

from the war between John of Anjon, and King Ferdinand, proceeded that enmity and implacable hat red, which enfued afterwards between Ferdinand and the Florentines, and particularly between Ferdinand and the Family of the Medici, for the King complained not only, that himself was not affifted in that war, but that his Enemies were by the Florentines favoured, and his displeasure therefore conceived against them was the occafion of exceeding many inconveniences, as shall hereafter be declared ; and because I have written at large fuch matters as have happened without the City, till the year 1463, 'twill be requisite for the better re-Reing those troubles, which in that time happened within the City, to look fome years backwards. But first, according to my cashom let me by way of difcourfe fay, that who ever thinks any Republick can be u-inted, flatters humfelf with a vain hope; Hide it is that forme divisions are prejudicial, and others again beneficial to a Common-Wealth. Those are attended with prejuthe and dimage, which are with Factions and Followers accompanied, and those produce behefit and advantage which without Fadiolisand Followers are maintained. Since then no Founder of a Common-weal ean To Ellablish if that no enmittles arise in it; he Bught at least to provide, that no Factions that in all Cities, Citizens gain themfelves reputation either by publick or private means:

means : publick Renown is attained to by Victory in the field, by the taking of Towns, by the careful and different different different ging of Embassies, or by the giving to the State prudent and successful Counces - private means by which reputation is attained to, are gratifying particular Citizonsi defending them from punifhment, supplying them with money, advancing them undeferredly to honour and employment, and entertaining and pleafing the Commonalty with Iports and gifts ; and from hence agiles parties, followers and factions. And though reputation thus attained may offend, yet it may likewife be useful, when not incumbred with factious followers, becaule it is only founded on private good ; for though 'tis impossible by the wildom of man to prevent animolities from ariling among fuch Citizens, yet having no followers, that for their private ends adhere to them, they cannot prejudice the Common-wealth, but may well advantage it, for in afpiring to their own ends, they must necessarily advance the interest of the State, and by being continually watchful over one anothers actions, they take care that no Law nor civil Conflitutions be infringed. The comities of Florence were always accompanied with fa-Chions and followers, and were therefore always prejudicial, nor was any victorious faction longer united than the adverse party continued in some power, but as soon as their enemies were quite extinct, then they divided divided among themfelves, having no fears to reftrain, nor rule nor order to bridle them. The Faction of Cofmo de Medici got in the year 1434 the fuperiority, and because the oppreffed party had still some life, and was supported by many mighty men they through fear continued united and tolerably quiet, fo long as they lived free from errour and fcandal, nor had by finister dealings in-curred the hate of the people; so that whenever the Government had occasion of the people to re-establish their Authority. they found them always ready to give unto the chief of that Faction the Balia, or what ever Authority they defired, and thus from the year 1434 to 1455, being one and twenty years, they were fix times confirmed in the Balia by the usual election of the There were in Florence (as we Councils. have feveral times before mentioned) two mighty Citizens Cosmo de Medici and Neri Capponi, of which Neri was one who had by publick means attained his reputation, fo that he had many Friends, but few Followers; on the other fide Cofmo having both by publick and private ways aspired to his greatness, had Friends and Followers in abundance. These two during their lives continuing united, eafily obtained of the people what ever they desired, because they had love mixed with their Authority, but in the year 1455 Neri being dead, the Fa-Ation found it difficult to be confirmed in their Authority, and Cosmo's particular Co∫mo de Medici, Neri Capponi.

7 A 2

Machiavel's Hiftory Book VII.

Digitized by Google

Friends

Friends (and those of the most powerful in the State) were the occasion of it, for standing no more in awe of the adverse party now quite extinct, they had a defire to diminish his Authority, which proved the beginning of those divisions that afterwards in the year 1466 happened, for those to whom the Government appertained, in the Councils(where they freely debated the publick administrations) advised, that it was convenient the Balia should not be reaffumed, but that the purfes should be filled up, and the Magistrates chosen by lot according to the favour and method of the former imburfations. To allay this humour Cofmo had but one of these two remedies to choose, either with those Followers which still adhered to him to seize the Government by force, and compel all the reft to fubmit, or elfe to let matters proceed, and in time let his Friends know, that they deprived not him, but themselves of their Reputation and Government ; of, which two remedies he chofe this laft, for he knew that by this way of choice, the purfes being full of his Friends, he could not run any hazard, and might at pleasure refume the Government. The City thus again reduced to the choosing Magistrates by lot, the univerfality of the Citizens believed they had regained their Liberty, and that the Offices · fhoused no more be supplied according to the will of the mighty men, but as they themfelves thought fit; fo that now one great 7 A 3 mans` mans followers, and then anothers were beaten, and they who used to behold their houses full of fuitors and prefents, now beheld them empty both of men and gifts, they likewife faw themselves become equal with those which had been accounted far inferiour to them, and their equals were become their Superiours ; neither were they relifected not honoured, but many times laugh dar !! and derided ; and in the Streets and Market places the people took a frees dom to diffourie what they pleafed, either of them; or the Common-wealth, for that they foon became fenfible not Cofmo, but shey had had loit the Authority; all which Cofmo differibled, and when ever any thing pleafing to the people was debated, he was the first to promote it : but that which most of all telified the great men, and gave Gof the an opportunity of being again fought after, was the reviving of the Carafle of 1427. whereby Taxes were to be imposed by rule of Law, and not by the will of men. This Law passed, and Commissioners to put it in execution elected, made all the great Citizens affemble together, and going to Cosmo, intreat him that he would be plealed to refeve both them and himself from the hands of the poople, and refore the State to that reputation which might increase his power, and recover their honour, to which Compound and wer, that he was content, provided the Law were made orderly by confent of the people, and not not by any force, for otherwife he would have no concern in it, nor should it once be moved; they therefore attempted the Councils by a Law to establish a new Balia, but obtained it not, whereupon all the great men returned to Cofmo, and in most humble manner belought him to confent to a Parliament, which Cofmo utterly denyed out of defign to make them lenfible of the errour they had committed, and because Donato Cochi then Gonfaloniere of Justice would without his confent have finimoued a Barliament, Cofing procured him to be to scoffed and scorned at by the Senators that fate with him in Office, that growing mad upon it, he was fent home to his house for a Lunatick, nevertheless left the should at length fuffer things to run fo far out of order that they would not fo eafily when he had a mind to it, be retrieved : Luke Pitti Luke'Pitti (a felf-willed daring man) being elected Gonfaloni Gonfaloniero of Jultice, he judged it convenient to leave the whole management of the affair to his diffretion gut that if there happened any milcarriage, the fault-might be imputed to Luke, and not to him; Luke at his entrance into the Magilbacy, made feveral propositions to the people for reviving the Balia, and being refuted it, threatened those which fate in the Councils with haughty and injurious words, and foon sfter proceeded to deeds, for in Angust 1453, on the vigils of S. Laurente having filled the Palace with armed men, and fummoning 7 A 4

moning the people into the Piazza, he made them by force confent to that, which voluntarily they would never have agreed to: the Government thus reaffumed. and the Balia created, the chiefest of the Magistracy (by the advice of a few) to begin that Government with terror, which they had gotten by violence; confined Meffer Girola-mo Machiavel with fome others, and many they deprived of their Offices; Girolamo for not obeying his confinement was proclaimed Rebel, and going up and down Isaly, ftirring up all Princes and States against his Countrey, was in Lanigiana by the treachery of one of the Senators there, taken, and brought to Florence where he died in prison. This kind of Government for eight years that it lasted, was most violent and infupportable, for Cofmo through age and diftemper grown weak and indifpofed, not being able to give that attendance he was wont on the publick Affairs, a few Citizens at their pleasure prey'd upon, and spoiled the City : Luke Pitti as a reward of his good fervice done to the Commonwealth, was knighted, and he to testifie no less gratitude to the State, than the State had done to him, would have those formerly called Briors of the Trades (that at leaft they might referve the Title of what they had lost possession of) now to be called Priors of the Liberty, and whereas the Gonfalonieres used formerly to be seated on the right hand of the Rectors or Governours, he Girelano Machievel Confiacd.

L

he ordered they should hereafter take place in the midft of them; and that God might feem to be a partaker in these actions, publick procession and prayers were ordered to be made with thankfgivings for the reftoration of their Honours. Meller Luke had been both by the Senate and Cofmo very richly prefented, and after their examples the Citizens were even at strife who should first bring his gift, fo that it was generally fupposed the whole value of his presents could. not amount to lefs than twenty thousand Duckats, which raifed him to fuch a heighth of reputation, that not Cofmo but Lake go- Lake Pius's verned the City, & fwelled him to that con-dings. fidence, that he began to erect two Princely and magnificent Palaces, one in Florence, the other at Rucciano about a mile distant from the City: but that in Florence was much larger and more flately than ever till that time had been attempted to be built by any private Citizen; and to bring it to perfection he was thrifty of all advantages, and fpared not to make use of any extraordinary means, for not only particular Citizens and private perfons prefented him, and supplyed him with necessaries for the building, but the whole Commonalty and people laid their hands to the work ; and befides every Bandito, Thief, or Assafinate, or any other offender that stood in fear of punishment, if he were any way uleful to the work might in these Fabricks find a secure Sanctuary; though the other Citizens built not like him

2

War in the Lomania.

Co íme de ledici.

yet were they no lefs tyrannical and rapacious than he; fo that whileft Florence had no enemy from abroad to oppose it, it was destroyed and wasted by its own Citizens. During these Transactions, happened as hath been faid before, the war in the Kingdom, and the Pope in Romania had some ar in the skinnishes with the Family of the Malatefti, fiom whom he had a great mind to take Rimini and Gelens, then in their poffettion; to that in this enterprife, and in fludying how to carry on a war against the Turks, Pope Pius spent his Papacy: whileft Florence continued in its troubles and divisions. The full breach in Cofmo's party began in the year 1455 upon the occasion before recited, which by his prudence as we have declared, was for that time compoled, but in the year 1464 Cofmo's Diftempers and weakness increased for violently shat he depertod this life; both his friends and encmies lancented his death, for those who for reasons of State loved him not, beholding the extortion of the Citizens, whileft he yet lived (but of reverence to whom they were fomewhat reftrained) feared now that he was gone they should be utterly ruined and deftroyed, for in Peter his fon they had little confidence, who though he was a good man, yet being both fickly and unfected and raw in the Government, he was forced to bear relpede to others, who now run on in a full carriere of rapine and oppretion, having no teins to curb or reftrain

Digitized by Google

fð

Book VII.

frain them. Colino was the most famous and renowned Citizen (not being a man of war) that ever had lived in the memory of mankind, either in Florence or any other Gity what ever, not only exceeding all other Citizens of histime in Riches and Authority, but likewife in Liberality and Prudence; for that which among many other admirable qualities, entitled him moft of all to the being effected the principal perfon of his Countrey, was his being liberal and magnificent, there scarce being a Citizen that lived in any repute, but he had lent great furns of money to, and oftentimes upon information of the necellities of perions of quality without being asked, he supplyed their occasions; nor were his magnificent buildings lefs evidences of the greatness of his mind, for belides his reparations he founded the Convente and Churches of S. The fumptu-ous Build-Mark; and S. Langener, and the Monastery ing of Con-di S. Verdiane in Florence, which Church of mode Maleici. Gerolams, and the Abbey thereto belonging in the mountains of Fiefele, and a Church of Frists Minors, in Magelle, and moreover in the Abbeys of the Holy Cruis of the Strai, of Agnoli and SI Niguato, he specked niany fumptuous Altars and Chappels, all which Churches and Chappels, belides the crocking them he endowed and furnished with all prnaments necessary for Divine Service, to which facted Buildings and Dedications may be added his private Fabricks, whereof are fill extant one Palace in the City more than than becoming a perfon of his quality, and four in the Countrey at Careggio, Fiefole, " Cafaggivelo and Febrie, all houses fitter for Princes than private Citizens, and least his magnificent edifices in Florence should not give him fufficient Renown, he built in Jemfalem an Hospital for poor and diseased Pilgrims, in which work he expended vaft fums of money, yet though these Palaces and all his actions and works were formajeftical, and he lived in Florence like a Prince, yet all his deportments were tempered with fo much Prudence, that he never exceeded the bounds of common modefty and civil order, for in his conversation, houle-keeping, attendance, and marrying his children, he surpassed not any other diferent and civil Citizen, for he knew that an extraordinary pomp and train, which is dayly viewed and gazed at, contracts more envy than folid actions covered with honest modefly >) when therefore he was to match any of his fons, he fought not the alliance of Princes, but married John to Cornelis of the Family of the Alexandri, and Peter to Lucretia of the Family of the Tornabuoni, and of his Grandchildren by Peter, he married Bianca to William Pazzi, and Anne to Bernard Ruffelai; and as to intrigues of State, the affairs of neighbouring Princes, and civil 'Government at home, none of his time were equal to him for intelligence, by which means only, in fo great variety of Fortune, in fo giddy a City, and fuch inconftant constant Citizens, he preserved himself in the Government for one and thirty years, for his Wildom gave him forelight, and discerning inconveniences afar off, he either prevented them, or if they grew upon him, made fuch preparation they could not offend him; whereby he not only suppressed domentical and civil ambition, but prevailed over many Princes with fuch happy prudence and fuccefs, that who ever joined in league with him and his Countrey, became at least equal, if not superiour to their enemies, and who ever opposed them, lost either their time, money or estate; which the Venetians can lufficiently testifie, who when united with him against Philip had always the better, but difunited were first by Pbilip and afterwards by Francis oppressed and overcome; and when they joined with Alfonfo against the Common-wealth of Florence, Cosmo by his fole credit reduced both Naples and Venice to fuch straits for want of money, that they were forced to accept what peace he pleafed : and indeed all the difficulties Cosmo encountred with, both without and within the City had iffues glorious to himfelf, and difgraceful to his enemies, so that civil discords always added to his Authority at home, and war without to his renown and reputation abroad, for to the Dominions of the Common-wealth he annexed Borgo a Santio Sepulchro, Montidoglio, Cafentino and Valdibagna. Thus by his virtue and fortune he oppressed his enemies, mies, and advanced his friends. He was born in the year 1389 on the feast of S. Cofmo and Damian, the beginning of his life was full of troubles, as appears by his baminment, imprisonment and danger of death. After the ruine of Pope John with whom he went to the Council of Conftance; he was forced to fave his life by flying in dilguile; but from forty years of age he lived very happily, fo that not only those who adhered to him in publick administrations, but all they who managed his monlies throughout Europe were partakers of his felicity, whereby many Families In Florence were railed to great riches; as the Tornabuoni, Benci, Portinari and Saf-feii, and indeed every one depending on his counfel and fortune enriched themfelves, but though in building Churches, and distributing of Alms, and doing good Offices he was at a continual expence, yet he would off-times lament to his friends, that he could never fpend fo much to the honour of God, but he still found himself in his books a debtor. He was but mean of flature, and brown of complexion, yet of a very venerable preferice, not learned, but very eloquent and of excellent natural parts, officious to his friends, charitable to the poor, 'edifying in conversation, wary in counfel, speedy in execution, and in his speeches and replyes witty, yet grave. T'n his first banishment Rinaldo sending to tell him that the Hen was fet, he replyed, That ſhë

Machiavel's [Hiftory Book VII.

÷

Book VII. of Florence.

ŀ.

ŗ

the could batch but ill fo far out of ber wit : and to fome other Rebels; who told him they could not fleep, he' faid, be believed it fince they had rob'd themfelves of their reft, of Pope Pius perlwading Princes to take Arms against the Turk, he faid, an old man undertakes a young emerprize. To the Venetian Amballidours who with these of King Alphonfo cathe to Florence to miake their complaints against the Republick, he thewed his bare head, and having asked them what colour it was off, they answered white, to which he replyed, Ere tong your Senators will bave beads as white as mine : some few hours before his death; his wife asking him why he thut his eyes, in a fe them to it, replyed he : fome Citizens' after his seturii from Banffhment, telling him that he spoiled the City, and offended God by batilihing to many honeft men, he replyed, better a City spoiled, than lost, and that two yards of shorn cloth made an boxest man; and that Estates were not defended with Beads in mens bands: which fayings gave occasion to his enemies to asperfe him, that he loved himfelf more than his Countrey, and this world more than the other : many other of his fayings might be recorded, which as unneceffary I omit. Cofmo was moreover a great lover and advancer of learned men; and therefore brought Argiropolo the Grevian, one of the learnedst men of those times to Florence, that he might inftruct the Floremine youth in the Greek Tongue, and other

Machiavel's Hiftory Book VIL

other sciences he was skill'd in, he entertained in his own house Marfilius Ficinus that fecond Father of the Platonick Philofophy, whom he intirely loved, and to the end he might with better conveniency apply himself to his study, and Cosmo have him always ready at hand, he gave him a dwelling house near his own Palace of Carreggio, This his Wildom, these his Riches, this manner of Living, and this Fortune were the causes that in Florence he was both loved and feared by his Fellow-Citizens, and by the Princes not only of Italy, but of all Enrope marvelloufly efteemed, leaving foundations to his Posterity that they might in virtue equal him, and in Fortune far excel him, and attain to as great Authority and Reputation as himfelf had enjoyed in Florence, not only in that City, but in all Chriftendom. However towards the latter end of his life he underwent fome very fenfible afflictions, for of his two sons Peter and Jobn, the last in whom he placed all his confidence dyed, and the other was infirm, and unapt to manage either publick or private affairs; whereupon cauling himfelf after his fons death to be carried about his house, he washeard fighing to fay, This house is too great for so small a Family. His generous mind was likewise troubled, that he had not as he thought fufficiently enlarged the Florentine Dominions with fome honourable conquest, and it grieved him the more, becaule he perceived himfelf to have been deceived ceived by Francis Sforza, who had promised him while he was yet Earl, that as-foon as he had made himself Duke of Milan, he would win Lucca for the Florentines. But he failed him, for having got the Dukedom, his mind changed, and he thought it Best to enjoy that Dominion in quiet, and therefore performed not his promife, either to Cosmo or any other, nor waged any wars but what were neceffary for his own defence, which fretted Cosmo exceedingly that he should have taken so much pains, and been at so much charge to advance an ingrateful and perfidious man, he likewife found that the infirmities of his body made him incapable of following either publick of private affairs with that vigour and diligence he was wont, fo that he beheld both one and the other go to tuine, the City fpoiled by its own Citizens, and his estate wafted by his children and ministers, all these accidents disquieted him towards his latter end, yet he dyed full of Glory, and in the heighth of Renown both at home and -abroad, all the Citizens, and all Christian Princes condoling his death with his fon Peter. He was buried with great folemnity, the whole City attending his Herse to the Church of S. Laurence, where he was interred, and by publick command in Sculpture over his Tomb he was stilled THE FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY. If in recording the Virtues and Actions of Cosmo, I have imitated those who write the

7 B

the lives of Princes, and not those who write general Histories, let none admire at it, for having been fo extraordinary a man_ he deferves to be mentioned with extraordinary Honour. Whileft Florence and Italy were in this state and condition, Lewis King of France was affaulted with fierce and powerful war raifed by his Barons, with the affiftance of Francis Duke of Britany. and Charles Duke of Burgundy, which kept him to employed, that he could afford no affistance to John Duke of Anjon in his ex-pedition against Genous and the Kingdom, yet judging he flood in need of fome ones belp, the City of Savona remaining in the power of the French, he makes Francis Duke of Milan Lord of that City, withal letting him know that if he pleased he might with his free lieve possels himself of Genona, which Francis willingly hearkens to, and either by the reputation of the Kings friendhip, or by the favour of the Adorni makes himfelf Lord of Genous, and that he might not appear ingrateful to the King for his kindnefs, he fends into France his eldeft fon Galeazzo with fifteen hundred horse to his affiftance. Thus Ferdinand of Arragon and Francis Sforza became, the one Duke of Lombardy and Prince of Genona, and the other King of all the Kingdom of Naples, and having contracted an alliance together, they begun to confult how they might fortifie them felves in their effates, fo as they might live, and securely enjoy them, and after Francia Duke of Milsa becomes Lord of Genoud.

after their deaths leave them peaceably to their Heirs; and upon the point they judged it neceffary that the King should fecure himfelf of those Barons, who in the wars with John of Anjon had fought against him, and that the Duke should endeavour to extirpate the Bracceschi his natural and implacable enemies, and who under Jacob Piceinino were grown into great reputation, for he was now the greatest Captain remaining in Italy, and having no fetled Dominion; it was requifite for those who had Estates to stand upon their Guard, and effectially the Duke who from example given by himfelf, judged he could neither fecurely enjoy his Dominions himfelf, nor leave them peaceably to his fons to long as Jacob lived 3 wherefore the King fought an accomodation with his Barons, and to affure himfelf of them, managed things to politickly that he had happy fuccels in it, for the Princes who yet waged war with the King faw their manifest ruine, if they longer held out, and if they came to an agreement must be left at differention, fo that though at first they were somewhat doubtful, yet because men always strive to avoid certain mischiefs, it follows that Princes may the eafier deceive those of lesser power, so these Princes seeing the manifest danger of the war, trusted to the Kings word, and yielding themselves into his hands, were afterwards by him in fundry wayes, and upon various occasions cut off, which fo territied Jacob Piceinino, 7 B 2 who who then lay with his Forces at Solmona. that to fecure himfelf, and take from the King all opportunities of opprefling him. by the mediation of his friends he treated a reconciliation with the Duke, who having made him fuch offers that he could not expect greater; Jacob throws himself into his hands, and accompanied only with one hundred Horfe goes to Milan to prefent himfelf to Duke Francis. Jacob had a long time been a Soldier under his Father, and with his Brother first for Duke Philip, and afterwards for the people of Milan, fo that by long converse he had gained many friends in that City, and a general good will, which his prefent condition increased, for the profperous Fortune, and the prefent power of the Sforzeschi had begotten them envy, and the adverfity and long absence of facob had created in the peoples minds, compatiion towards him, and a longing defire to fee him, all which appeared at his coming, for few of the Nobles but went to meet him, & the ftreets where he paffed were thronged with people defirous to fee him. and the fame of his Arms was every where discoursed of, which Honours hastened his ruine, for they blew the coals of the Dukes jealoufie, and inflamed his defire of getting rid of him, which the more covertly to do, he declared his pleasure to have the marriage folemnized with Drussiana his natural Daughter, to whom Jacob had been long fince contracted, and then agrees with Ferdinand dinand to entertain him as his Captain General with one hundred thousand Florins imprest: after which conclusion Jacob with an Ambassadour from the Duke and his wife Drusiana goes to Naples where he was joyfully and honourably received, and for many days entertained with much feasting and jollity; but having asked lieve to go to Solmona where his Forces lay, he was by the King invited into the Caftle, and dinner ended, together with Francis his fon made prifoner, and thortly after put to death. Thus our Princes of Italy jealous of that virtue in others, they had not in themselves, serve to extirpate it, till ha-ving utterly rooted out all seeds of it, they exposed this Province to that ruine, which thortly wasted and destroyed it. Mean while Pope Pius having composed the affairs of Lombardy, feeing the time was Pope Pins proper for it, there being an universal peace, an Expedibegan to promote a war against the Turks, tion against pursuing those rules and methods before fet down by his predeceffors, to which all Princes promifed either money or men, and Matthew King of Hungary, and Charles Duke of Bargundy offered to go in perfon, and were by the Pope made Generals of the Expedition; and so far the Pope proceeded, that he left Rome and went to Ancona, where he had ordered the general Rendervouz, the Venetians having promifed Shipping to transport the Army into Solavonia-; bon after the Popes arrival at Ancona there 7 B 2 affembled affembled thither fuch multitudes of people, that all the provisions of that and the neighbouring Countrey would not suffice, but hunget began to oppress the Army, befides there wanted money to buy things necessary, and weapons to arm the naked, and Matthew and Charles neither of them appeared, and the Ventians fent only one of their Captains with fome Gallies, rather to show their Pomp, or to boast they had kept their faith, than to transport such an Army. Here the Pope being old and weak, in the heat of thefe traubles, and diforders dyed, after whole death every one returned home. This Pope dead, in the year 1465 Paul the second a Venetian born, was elected tothe Papacy : and to the end other Principalities of Italy might likewife change their Government, the year following dyed Francis Sforka Duke of Milan, after hav-ing been fixteen yeats Lord of that Duke-domer, and Galeane his fon was declared Duke, The death of this Prince made the divisions of Florence increase, and Cooner come to effect. After Cofmo's death his fon Peter remaining Heir both of his Riches and Honours, called unto him Diotifalvi Neroni a man of great Authority and Reputation among the chiefest of the Citizens, and in whom Cofmo reposed to much truff, that at his death he ordained Peter to have recourse to him for advice in the management both of his private and publick affairs : Peter acquaints Distigativi with his fathers

2 E

Death of Sforz 1 Duke of Mulan.

fathers bequeft, and the confidence he had in him; and that he might be obedient to his father as well dead as living, craves his counfel as well to the management of his estate, as to the Government of the City; and to begin with his own private affairs, he made all his Factors and Ministers give in unto him the flate of their Accounts. to the end feeing the order and diforder of every thing, he might as his prudence should dictate, advise him ; Meffer Distifalui promifed his utmost diligence, but having viewed and well examined all the Accounts, and finding in them great diforders; like a man that had more refpect to his own ambition, than to the love of Peter, or grati-tude to his father, he imagined that he might eafily rob Peter of his Reputation, and cheat him of that inheritance and power his father had left him; to which purpose he comes to Peter with a counfel that feemed very just and reasonable, but under which his ruine lay concealed : he declared to him the diforder of his affairs, and how much ready money he must of neceffity provide to uphold his Credit and Reputation in the State, telling him there was no honefter way to remedy those diforders than by calling in the monies were owing to his father, as well by ftrangers as Citizens; for Cofmo to gain Followers in Florence, and Friends abroad was very liberal in lending his money, so that by that very means he became creditor to sums of 7 B 4 no

nce. houfe; the this injury caufe was reonce that the dra her porer husband iment; Ageal friendly at fince he he now deis fon : but fions were, one and the would have Arates, and red of Peter, uch increafng bankrupt. ter, his unney, having and to the of the City, n may be adth Clarice of his eldeft fon one full scope abroad that with a Flomfelf longer fore prepared e that fcorns his kindred. and, and te thould expett

-

Contract In Lot

And in case of the local division of the loc

The state of the s

the second s

THE R. LEWIS CO.

internet lateral de la constante de la constan or other designs of Towners I are a surface

States and and a

and the second damage of the

The second s

The second damage of the secon

State of Lot of Constanting of the Contract of the local division of the local and the local de

Carlon Statements

Times and the and the second

Text las reactions

State State State of the local division of the local divisiono

Machiavel's Hiftory Book VIL

no finall importance : Peter thinks the counfel good and honeft, willing to repair himfelf with his own, but no fooner did he caufe thefe moneys to be demanded. but the Citizens refented it, as if he had not asked his own, but demanded what was theirs. reviling him as ingrateful and covetous, and without any respect railing against him; whereupon Diotifalvi feeing Peter by his advice fallen into this universal and popular difgrace, joined himfelf with Luke Pitti, Agnolo Acciavolo and Nicholus Soderini, determining to take from Peter both Reputation and Authority. These men were by divers respects moved to this Design : Luke defired to fucceed in Cosmo's stead, being al-ready grown so great, that he scorned to be observant to Peter; Diotifalvi who knew Lake unfit to be the head of the Government, imagined if Peter were removed, the whole reputation might in a thort time fall upon him; Nicholas Soderini was defirous that the City should live more at freedom, and the Magistrates govern without controul; Meffer Agnolo bore a particular hate to the Medici, upon this account : Rafael his fon had fometime before taken to wife Aleffandra of the Bardi with a very great portion, the whether through her own peevishness or their malice, received very ill usage from her husband and father in Law; whereupon Lorenzo Hariane her Kinfman, out of compation to the young Lady, went one night with many armed men and Confpiracy against the Medici.

and refcued her out of Agnolo's house; the Acciavoli made complaint of this injury done them by the Bardi, the caufe was referred to Cosmo, who gave fentence that the Acciavoli should restore Alessandra her portion, and then her return to her husband should be left at her own arbitriment; Agnole thought Cosme did not deal friendly with him in this fentence, but fince he could not be revenged on him, he now determined to be revenged on his fon : but how different soever the occasions were, these confpirators all declared one and the fame intention, affirming they would have the City governed by the Magistrates, and not by counfels of a few. The hatred of Peter. and ill will towards him very much increafed, by many Merchants becoming bankrupt, who laid all the fault upon Peter, his unexpected calling in his money, having thereby stretched their Credit, and to the great difgrace and prejudice of the City, forced them to fail; to which may be added his treating a marriage with Clarice of the Family of the Orfini, and his eldeft fon Laurence, which gave every one full scope to revile him, publickly venting abroad that he difdained to match his fon with a Florentine, nor could contain himself longer as a private Citizen, and therefore prepared to usurp the principality, for he that fcorns to have his fellow Citizens of his kindred. had a mind to make them his fervants, and therefore 'twas unreasonable he should expect pect them to be his friends. And now the leaders of this confpiracy concluded they had the victory in their hands, for the greateft part of the Citizens cheated with the name of Liberty, wherein those engaged against him had cloathed their defign, adhered to them. These humours thus fet a boiling in mens hearts, it was thought convenient by those who liked not these civil difcords to endeavour by fome new found feast or jollity to settle, or at least divert the minds of men, for generally the idle people are the inftruments of all alterations. To remove this idleness a little out of the way, and turn mens minds upon other thoughts than that of the Government, the year being gone round fince Cosmo's death they took occasion to give the City some divertisement, appointing two folemn Shows, as has been usual in other Cities; one was a representation of the three Magi following the Star of the Nativity from the East. which was done with fo much Pomp and Magnificence, that in the contriving, ordering and acting it, it found the whole City near five months employment. The other was a Tournament where the choice youth of the City exercifed their skill and valour against the most famous Cavaliers of Italy, and among the Florentine youth Lanrence the eldeft ion of Peter Medici gained the most Honour, for not by favour, but by his own valour he won the richeft prize. These Triumphs ended, the Citizens returned turned to their former discontents, and every one with more cagerness than before urged his own opinion, from whence many differences and troubles arole, which by two accidents were mightily increased ; one was that the Authority of the Balis was expired, and the other the death of Francis Duke of Milan, whole fon Galeano the new Duke, having fent Ambasadors to confirm the Articles made between his father and this City, which among other things concluded that there should be a yearly fum of money paid to the Duke. The leaders of the Faction averfe to the Medici, took occasion from this demand, and publickly in the Councils opposed the confenting to it, alleadging that League was made with Francis, and not with Galeano, fo that by Francis his death, the obligation dyed, nor was there any reason to revive it, for that there was not in Galeago that virtue had been in Francis, and by confequence they could not, nor ought not to expect those advantages from him, and though they got but little by Francis, from him they must look for les, but if any Citizen had a mind to entertain him to maintain his own private power, it was a thing opposite to civil order and the Liberty of the City: Peter on the other fide urged that it was imprudence, out of avarice to lole fo neceffary a friend, and that nothing could sonduce more to the fecurity of this Common-wealth and all Haly, than a firm league with with the Duke, that the Venetians seeing them united, might not entertain any hopes, either through feigned friendship, or open war to oppress that Dukedom: for no fooner should they hear that the Florentines were alienated from him, but they would have their arms in their hands, and finding him young and raw in the Government, either by force or fraud fubdue his Country, the confequences of which must needs be the ruine of Florence. These reasons were not accepted, and the enmittees and heartburnings began to appear, and of both fa-Aions several parties met every night, the friends of the Medici in the Monastery of the Little Crofs or Croceta, and the Adverfaries at La Pieta, who follicitous for Peters ruine had made several Citizens subscribe themselves favourers of the defign. And among other times, being one night met together, they held a particular Council about their manner of proceeding, and every one was willing and ready to abase the power of the Medici, but they differed in the way'; those who were most temperate and modeft, advised, that fince the Authoty of the Balia was expired, they should find means to oppose its being revived, and that done, it was their intention, that the Counfels and Magistrates should govern the City, whereby in a (hort time Peters power would come to nothing, and with his lofs of reputation in the Government, he would likewife lofe his credit in Merchan-. . . . 7 dile.

م الأسراق

Book VII.

Open divi-Son.

8£

dife; for his Estate lay fo, that if he were reftrained from making use of publick monies, he must certainly be ruined, and then there would be no more danger of him, but the City without blood or banishment. would have regained its Liberty, which every good Citizen ought to defire ybut if they went about to act by force, infinite dangers must be hazarded, for whoever is falling, if he be thrust forward by others, will catch hold to support himself; befices when nothing extraordinary is acted against him, he would have no occasion or pretence of arming himself, or engaging friends; or if he did, it would turn to his greater reproach, and breed fufpition in every man, thereby contributing to his own ruine, and giving others advantages to oppress him : others of the affembly difliked this delay, affirming time would prove his and not their friend, for if they confented to be fatisfied with an ordinary proceeding, Peter run no hazard at all, and they a great one; for the Magistrates, though his enemies, would permit him to live in the City, and his friends, as it happened, in 58 would, make him Prince : That indeed the preceding Counfel was good, but it was not wife, and therefore it was best utterly to ruine him, whilst the minds of men were incenfed against him, and the means to effect it, was by arming themselves within, and entertaining in their pay the Marquils of Ferrara without, to prevent their being, difarmed :

-

covered.

Machiavel's History

Book VII.

differmed : and then when there chanced a Senate for their purpole make fure work-Upon this they concluded, expecting the entrance of the next Senate, by which they meant to govern themselves. Among these The compi- Configurators was Nicholas Fidino, who officiated as their scribe, he withdrawn by laa more certain hope, discovered all the dev ALA AC bates of his enemies to Peter, and produced a lift of the Confpirators and Subscribers, Peter was startled to fee the number and quality of the Citizens engaged against him, and adviling with his friends determined likewife to get subscriptions on his fide, giving the charge of it to fome of his most truthy friends, and fuch levity and inconstancy found he in the minds of the Citizens, that many subscribed in his favour. who had before subscribed against him. Whilft all things were in this perplexity, the time came for the new Election of the Supreme Magistracy, and Nicholas Soderini was chosen Gonfalomiere of Justice : It was a Miracle to fee with what concourse, not only of worthy Citizens, but of all forts of people he was accompanied to the Palace, and by the way they put a Garland of Olive upon his head, to fignifie that on him depended the Safety and Liberty of his Country. By this and many other experiences, it may appear how diladvantageous it is to enter into any Office or Power with the general voice and opinion of the World. For men not being able to perform what is expected

Nicholas So. derini Gon. faloniere.

expected from them, the generality having formed in their imaginations things impoffible to be executed; they fall from that height of their effectm to a depth of contempt and infamy, Thomas and Nicholas Soderini were brothers. Nicholas was more daring and couragious, but Thomas much the wiler, who preferving an intire friendfhip for Peter Medici, and knowing his brosthers humour how he only defired, the Liberty of the City, and that the State might be fetled without damage to any one perfwaded him to a new imburfation, whereby the purfes, might be filled with fuch fitizens as loved to live in freedom, by which means the Government would according to his defires be confirmed and fetled without any tumult or injury to any perfon. Or Nicbor las readily gave gar to his brothers counfels. and employed himfelf in thele vain imagimations, during the whole time of his Magistracy, and by his own friends, the heads of the Conspiracy, he was suffered in to confume it, for envy would not fuffer them to let Nicholas have the hopour of reliosing the Government, hoping they might forme other time, under some other Gouf alomiere effect it their own way. Thus Nichelas his Magifiracy expired, who begun many things, but finished none, and went out with as much dishonour as he had entred with applause. This accident gave courage to Peters Faction, confirming his friends in their hopes of fuccels, and making those who 3ŧ who before flood Neuters adhere to him; fo that the ballance feeming even on both fides, both parties for fome months without any tumult temporifed : Notwithstanding Pesers party every day gained strength, which his enemies growing fenfible of, they con-fulted together, and imagined they might cafily do that by force, which either they knew not how to do, or would no more attempt by the Power of the Magistrate; they therefore concluded to kill Peter, who now lay fick at Carreggi, and to that purpofe fent to the Marquils of Ferrara to advance with his forces towards the City, and Peorice flain, they determined to run armed into the Piazza, and make the Senate eftablish fuch a Government as should be mon to their liking; for though all the Lords were not their friends, yet they hoped to make thôle, who were not, give they noped for fear, Meffer Divisfalivi, the better to diffemble his intention often visited Peter, teafoning with him about uniting the City, and giving him his advice. All these pra-Aices had been discovered to'Peter, and befides Meffer Dominico Martegii gave him intelligence how Francisco Neroni, brother to Meffer Diotifalvi; had folicited him to be of their party, affuring him of certain victory and happy fuccels. Whereupon Peter determined to be the first in arms, taking occafion from his enemies practices, with the Marquifs of Ferrara. He pretended therefore to have received a Letter from John Bentivoglio,

Peter de Medici Mensi

Book VII.

of Florence,

Bentivoglio, Prince of Bolonia, acquainting him that the Marquils of Ferrara was near the River Albo with his Forces, and publickly declared he was defigned for Florence. And thus upon these advertisements Peter took Arms, and in the midst of a great multitude of armed men comes into Flarence : whereupon all the followers of his party likewife armed themfelves, and their adverfaries did the like, but not in fo good order as Peter's party; for these were prepared, and had their instructions what to do: but the other had no warning at all of it. Meffer Diotifalvi's house standing near Peter's, he thought himfelf not fecure there, and therefore ran up and down, sometimes to the Palace, to perfwade the Lords to make Peter lay down his Arms, fometimes to find out Luke to keep him firm to their party. But he that thewed most courage was Nicholas Soderini, who taking Arms, was followed by all the common people of his quarter; and going to Meffer Luke's house encouraged him to mount on horfe-back, and go into the Piazza in favour of the Lords, who were on their fide, and where doubtless the victory would be certain, and not stay in his house, either to be basely oppreffed by his armed enemies, or difgracefully deceived by the unarmed, otherwife he would come to repent it when it was too late; for now, if he defired war with the ruine of Peter, he might eafily have it; or if he would have peace, it was much better ŻG

Machiavel's History

Book VII.

Lake Pitti fides with Peter.

better to be in a condition to give than receive terms. These words nothing moved Luke Pini, whole resolution was taken, and his mind quite turned by the fair promises, new alliances, and new conditions made him by Peter; for he had already married his Niece to John Tornabuoni ; informuch. that he exhorted Nicholas, likewife to lay down his Arms, and return to his house. for all he aimed at, was that the City hould be governed by Magistrates, and so it would be, and every man would lay down their Arms; and the Senate, in which they had the greater party, would be Judge of their differences. Nicholas therefore, seeing he could not otherwise perswade him, returned to his house, having first told him, I cannot alone establish the welfare of my City , but I can prognosticate the mischiefs must of necesfuty befall it. This course which you take will be the cause of loss of Liberty to our Country of bonour to your felf, of wealth and estate, and of · sbeir Country it felf to others. The Senate in this Tumult had thut the Palace gates, and withall the Magistrates kept themselves within, not feeming to favour either party. The Citizens (and efpecially those who had fided with Luke) feeing Peter in Arms, and the adverfaries difarmed, began to bethink themfelves not to offend or oppose Peter, but how best to become his friends : Whereupon the prime Leaders of the Factions went into the Palace, and in the prefence of the Senate, debated many things about the the prefent State of the City, and the means of reconciling all differences; and fince Peter, because of his weakness, could not come to them, they all with one accord determined to go to his Houfe, excepting only Nicholas Soderini, who having first recommended his children and affairs to his brother Thomas, retired to his Country-House, there to attend the event of these things, accounting himfelf unfortunate, and his Country milerable. The other Citizens being come before Peter, one appointed to speak for the reft, " complained of the Tumults railed The com-" in the City, declaring them to be in the plaint of the Citizens to " fault, who had first taken up arms, and Peter Me-" not knowing what Peter (who was the dici. "first that had done it) defired, they were " come to know his pleasure, and if it ap-" peared to be for the good of the City, " they were ready to fecond him : To which Peter replyed : " That not he who first took Peter's An-" up Arms was the caule of these Commo- fwer. "tions, but those who administred the oc-" cafion of their taking up : and if they " would well confider in what manner they "had proceeded against him, they would " find no caufe of wonder, that for his own " fafety he had acted as he had done; for "then they would perceive, that their "nocturnal conventions, their fublcriptions, " their confpiracies to take from him the "City and his life, made him arm. But "fince with these arms he had not moved " from his house, it was evidence enough " that 7 C 2

Digitized by Google

33

"that his whole defign was to defend him-"felf, and not offend others. Nor had he " any other aim, or defired any thing elfe "but his own fecurity and quiet; nor had "ever given the least occasion to make " them believe he fought for more: for " fince the authority of the Balia was ex-" pired, he had not contrived by any ex-" traordinary way to revive it, and was " very well fatisfied the Magistrates should "govern the City, whilft they were con-"tent with it; for they ought to remem-" ber that Cosmo and his Children know " how to live honourably in Florence, both " with and without the Balia, and that in "the year 1458, 'twas not by his house, but "by themfelves renewed. And if now they " had no defire to have it again established, " neither had he: but this compliance with "them, was not enough, for he perceived " they believed they could not live in Flo-" rence, whilft he was in it. A thing he " never could have fo much as thought or " believed, that his Fathers friends and his " fhould fear to live in Florence with him, " having never given the least cause to be " thought other than a quiet and peaceable " man. Then addreffing his Speech to Meffer Diotifalvi, and his brethren there prefent, he reproached them in words grave, but full of anger, with the kindneffes they had received from his Father, the truft he reposed in them, and their barbarous ingratitude. And his words had fuch force and effect.

effect that had not Peter prevented fome of the standers by, they had been knock'd down : In conclusion Peter affured them he was ready to approve what ever they or the Senate should determine, and for his part defired nothing more, but to live quiet and secure. After this many things were debated, but nothing concluded, unlefs in general terms, that it was neceffary the City should be reformed, and new orders made in the State. Bernardo Lotti fate at this time Gonfaloniere of Justice, a man not trufty to Peter therefore he thought it not convenient to attempt any thing in his time; which delay he thought of little importance to his affairs, his Magistracy being almost expired: but at the election of the Lords, who were to fit for September and October in the year 1464, Robert Lioni was Anew Balis elected chief Magistrate, who asfoon as he entred upon his office (all things elfe being prepared) fummoned the people into the Piazza, and created a new Balia all of Peters party, who foon after elected Magigaistrates according to the humour of the new Government, which fo terrified the heads of the adverse faction, that Meffer Agnolo Acciavoli fled to Naples, and Meffer Distifalvi Neroni and Nicholas Soderini to Venice, Meffer Luke Pitti staid in Florence, confiding in the promifes made him by Peter and his new alliance. Those which fled were declared Rebels, and all the Family of the Neroni difperfed, and Meffer John No-7 C 3 roni.

created of the Medici Faction 1464

Digitized by Google

37

noni, then Archbishop of Florence, to avoid a worse mischief chose a voluntary exile at Rome : many other Citizens who foon after went away, were confined to fundry places : nor did this fuffice, but a publick procession was ordained, to return thanks to God for the prefervation of the State, and the reuniting of the City. In the folemnizing which, many Citizens were taken and tormented, and some of them afterwards put to death, and others banished; but in all this change of affairs, nothing was more remarkable or exemplary, than the fall of Luke Pitti, who in one and the fame inftant felt the difference between victory and lofs, honour and dishonour. His house was now a perpetual solitude, which was wont to be thronged with the numerous concourse of Clyents; his relations were afraid not only of accompanying him, but even of faluting him in the ftreets; for some of them had been deprived of their Offices, some of their Estates, and all were threatened the like ulage : those stately Fabricks he had begun, were deferted by the workmen; the Flatteries he was used to hear, were turned into revilings, and his honour into reproach, and many who to obtain his grace and favour had made him prefents of value, now redemanded them as things lept, and those who used to exalt him to the skies, publickly fcandalized him as a violent and ingrateful man : fo that he now too late indeed repented his not giving credit credit to Niebolas Soderini, withing he had dyed an honourable Death. Thofe who were banished, studyed several ways how they might be reftored to that City they had lost : but Meffer Agnolo Ac-ciavele, before he would attempt any innovation, thought best to make trial how he flood with Peter, and whether there was any hopes of reconciliation, and to that end wrote him the following Letter. I cannot but laugh at the sports of Fortune, and how of Agnolo she takes delight to make enemies friends, and Acciavoli to Peter Me-friends enemies : you may remember in your dici. fathers banifoment (more concerned for bis injury, than my own danger) I loft my Coun-ery, and had like to have loft my life; nor was I ever wenting while Colmo lived to bonour and favour your bouse, nor since bis death bad ever any defign to offend you ; 'tis true, your fickly constitution, and the tender years of your children, created those fears in me, made me conceive the Gevernment ought to be put in fuch a me-thod, that after your death our Country might not be ruined: upon which confideration, what I atted was done, not against you, but for the good of my Countrey, which, if it be a fault, deserves both for my good intention-sake, and my former good deeds to be cancelled : nor can I believe (fince your Family bas for fo long a time found me fo faithful) but I may from you find compassion, and that all my de-ferts will not for one fault alone be now blot-ted out. Peter having received this Letter, dici his An-thus returned his Answer; Your laughing fore. there 7 C 4 there occasions my not weeping here; for if you return to Florence, I must go weep at Naples : I confess you bore some good will to my father. but you may as well confess you have been recompensed for it, so that your obligation is so much greater than ours, as deeds are more efteemable than words : fince then for your good deeds you bave been remarded, why should yose wonder if for your cuil you be justly punished ? Nor is the love of your Countrey to be allowed as an excuse, for no man living will believe this City to have been lefs beloved, or cheristed by the Medici, than the Acciavoli: live therefore there in difgrace, fince you know not how to live bere with Honour. Whereupon Meffer Agnolo despairing of ever procuring his pardon, comes to Rome, and confederates himself with the Archbishop and other Exiles, endeavouring by all bitter ways they could imagine, to blast the credit of the Factory of the Medici reliding in Rome; which Peter could hardly prevent, yet by the affiftance of his friends, their devices were defeated : on the other fide Meffer Diotifalvi and Nicholas Soderini fought with all industry imaginable to incense the Venetians against their Countrey, supposing that if Florence were affaulted from abroad, the Government being new, and generally hated, they would not be able to fupport There lived in these times in Ferrara it. John Francisco, the fon of Meffer Palla Strozzi, who in the change of Government in 1438 was with his father driven Distiful vi and Nicbolas Solerini ftir up the Venetians against Flopence.

Digitized by Google

The fall of Luke Pitti.

Digitized by Google

bht

4I

out of Florence. These new Rebels declared to John Francisco how easily they might be reftored to their Countrey, if the ". Venetians would undertake a war, which they believed they would be ready to do, if they could contrive any way how to contribute to part of the expence, or otherwife they doubted it. John Francisco, who was defirous to be revenged of the injuries he had received, gave cafie ear to their counfels; and promifed to be affistant in the attempt with his whole effate; "Whereupon they went all to the Duke, " lamenting their exile, and protefting they " were driven out for no other crime, but " endeavouring that their Countrey (hould " live according to its Laws, and that the "Magistrates, and not a few Citizens only, " fhould be honoured and refpected; where-" upon Peter de Medici and his Followers, " accuftomed to live tyrannically, had de-" ceitfully taken Arms, deceitfully made " them lay down theirs, and afterwards as " deceitfully driven them from their Coun-" trey; and not content therewith, but " they had made Devotion to God a pre-" tence and colour to oppress others, who " under their faith given them still remain-" ed in the City; for in the midst of those -" publick and facred Ceremonies, and fo-" lemn fupplications (that they might " make God a partaker in their treasons) " they had imprisoned and put to death "many Citizens, an example of great impiety

" picty and horror; to revenge this, they " knew not where better to have recourse, " than to that Senate which enjoying its " Liberty, ought to have compation of " those which had lost theirs. They there-" fore begg'd the affiftance of Free-men a-" gainst Tyrants, of good men against the "wicked, remembring them how the Fa-" mily of the Medici had been the caulo " of their bling the Dominion of Lombar-" dy, who in contradiction of the other " Citizens had favoured and supported Earl " Francis against their Senate; fo that if the " justice of their cause could not move " them, they ought to be firred up by a " just hatred and defire of revenge for their " own injuries. These last words moved the whole Senate, and they determined that Bartholomene Coglione their General should invade the Florentine Territories, who with all fpeed drew together the Army, and with him joined Heroules d'Efte fent from Borfo Duke of Fernana. They at their first entrance (the Florentines not being yet in order) burnt the Burrough of Decadala, and made fome fpoil in the adjacent Countrey: but the Florentines (after they had driven out the enemies of the Medici) had entred into a new League with King Ferdinand, and Galeazo Duke of Milan, and entertained for their General Frederick Earl of Urbins; fo that having fuch good Friends, they valued their enemies the lefs: for Ferdinand fent his eldeft fon Alphonso, and Ga-

The Venetians and Duke of Ferrara war with Florence,

Digitized by Google

leazo

leazo came in perfon, each with conveneint Forces, and all rendezvouzed at Cafracazo a Cafile of the Florentines, feated at the foot of the Alps, between Infoany and Romagnia: mean while the enemies were retreated towards Imola, fo according to the cultom of those times, fome light skirmishes happened, but no general affault was made, no towns befieged, nor thewed they any disposition of engaging each other; but lying, lazing in their Tents, with abominable cowardize managed the war. This tedjoufness much displeafed the Floremaines, who beheld themfelves oppreffed with a war in which they fpent much, and could hope to gain but little ; and the Magistrates blamed those they had appointed Commissioners of the War, who gave them an account that Duke Galeazo was in the fault, for he having the greatest Authority, and but flender Experience, knew not how to take advantages, nor would be ruled by those that did, and that it was impossible, fo long as he staid in the Army, that any thing should be undertaken to their Honour or profit. Whereupon the Florentines represented to the Duke. " That it " did much redound to their credit and re-" putation, that he was perfonally come " to affift them, for his prefence only was " enough to terrific their enemies, yet they " valued the fafety of his perfon and Do-" minion above their own advantage; for " whileft he was in fafety, they hoped for 🧯 all

Book VII.

" all proferous success, but if he should " fail, they had reason to fear the worst of " advertities. They were therefore of o-" pinion it was not very fecure for him to " be long absent from Milan, being new-" ly entred into the Government, and hav-" ing many powerful énemies he ought to be jealous of, who whileft he was away " might contrive many mischiefs against " him: wherefore they adviled him to re-" turn to his Countrey, leaving some part " of his Forces for their defence. The counfel pleafed Galeazo well, and without farther confideration he returned to Milan. This impediment thus removed, the Florentime Captains to thew he was indeed the true occasion of the former neglect, made their approaches to the enemy, fo that they came to a fet Battle, which continued half the day, neither party giving ground to the other, yet there was not one flain, only forme few horfes wounded, and fome prifoners taken on both fides: the winter now approached, and the feafon wherein Armies use to draw into quarters; wherefore Meffer Bartholomen retreats towards Ravenna, and the Florentine Forces into Tuscany, and those of the King and Duke home to their own Countries. But fince by this affault there had happened no commotion in Florence, as the Florentine Rebels had promifed there would, the Soldiers beginning to want their pay, a peace was treated, and after very few debates concluded; whereupon the Florentine

Digitized by GOOGLC

A famous Battle.

Peace con-7 cluded.

Florentine Rebels, lost to all hope, departed feveral ways, Meffer Diotifalvi went to Ferrara, where he was by Duke Bor/o received, and kindly entertained ; Nicholas Soderini retired to Ravenna, where with a fmall penfion allowed him by the Venetians, he grew old and dyed : he was accounted an honeft and valiant man, but in refolving upon any thing doubtful and flow, which made him when he was Gonfaloniere lofe the opportunity of overcoming, and afterwards when he was a private man firive to regain it, and could not. Peace concluded, those Citizens that remained superiour in Florence, could not perfwade themselves to have overcome, if they did not with all manner of injuries afflict not only their enemies, but those they suspected averse to their party; wherefore they perfwaded Bardo Altoviti then Gonfaloniere of Justice, to remove many Citizens from their offices, and to banish others, which increased their power, and terrified their adversaries, and the power they had got they exercised without any moderation, as if God and fortune had given them the City for a prey; of which Peter knew but little, and that little he did could inot remedy, by reafon of the infirmity of his body: for the Gout fo tormented him, that he could use no member but his tongue, nor apply any other remedy to their diforders but good admonifhments, intreating them to live more civilly, and rather posses their Countrey with

$6

Lorenza Clarice Or-Gri.

with fafety; than be driven out with its destruction: and to divert the City principally, he determined on that magnificent folemnization of the matriage between Marriage of his fon Loringo, and Gharice of the Family Medici with of the Orfini , which wedding was performed with all that pomp and fplendor became the magnificence of fo great a man, and many days were spent in feating, Balls and Malques ; and to compleat the greatness of the Family, two military Shows were exhibited to the people, one the representation of a Battle on Horfe-back, and the other the storming of a Town, in both which all things were marshalled in excellent order, and performed with admirable Dexterity. Whileft these things were doing in Florence, the reft of Italy lived likewife in quiet, but in great jealousies of the Turks greatnels, who purfued his victories against the Christians, and had now taken Negroposse, to the infamy and diffionour of the Christian name. In these times dyed Borfo Marquis of Ferrara, to whom succeeded Hercules his fon ; likewife dyed Gismondo of Rimini profest enemy to the Church, and Bahers his fon remained Heir to his Estates, who afterwards gained the reputation of being one of the prime Captains of Italy, There also dyed Pope Paris, and to him fucceeded Sixtus the Fourthy called before his creation Francis of Savona, a man of bale and most vile condition; yet for his appearances of Vertue, made field General of the Order

Pope Sisters the Fourth

Book VII.

of Florence.

Order of S. Francis, and afterwards Cardinal. This Pope was the first that began openly to fhow what a Pope could do, and how many things before called errors might be covered under the Pontifical Authority. There were of his Family Peter and Girolamo, who as every one believed were his fons, yet he palliated that scandal under the more civil name of Nephews : Peter because he was a Friar, he raifed to the Dignity of Cardinal, with the title of S. Sijlo; to Girolamo he gave the City of Furli, taking it from Antonio Ordelaff, whofe Ancefors had a long time been Princes of that City:yet this friange and ambitious way of proceeding, made the Princes of Italy pay him the more effeem, and every one fought his alliance; fo that the Duke of Milan gave Catherine his natural daughter to Girohumo for wife, and with her the City of Imola (which he had taken from Taddeo Alidoffi)in Dowers between this Dake likewife and King Ferdinand an alliance was likewife contracted, for Elizabella daughter to Alphonfothe Kings etdeft fon, was married to John Gutenzo eldett fon to the Dake. Italy lived now in a profound quiet, and the only care of these Princes was to have a watch one upon another, and by new Alliances, Leagues and Friendships to fecure themfelves; yet in fo great a calm of peace Florence was still in a storm, tossed and tormented by its own Citizens, and Peter violently afflicted with his differnper, could not fland at Helm, nor make my provision

Machiavel's Hiftory

Peter de Mediei bis fpeech to the Florentins.

provision against the violent gusts of their ambition; yet to disburthen his own Conscience, and make them if he could athamed of their courfes, he called before him the chief Florentines, and thus reproved and advised them: I once never believed I foonld bave seen the time that the manners and behaviour of my Friends should make me rather love and defire the prosperity of my enemies, and that my victory had proved a defeat ; for I thought I had confederated with men. whole Appetite might have been bounded, and who would bave been content, if not with living quiet and secure themselves, yet at leaft with being revenged on their enemies; but now I see bow strangely I am deceived, and bow ignorant I was of the natural Ambition of men in general, and much more of yours; for you are not content to be Princes in so mighty a City, to share among a few of you those Honours, Dignities and Profits were wont to be in common to the whole body, and to have the estates of your enemies divided amonst you; nor are you satisfied to load others with all publick charges, whiles your selves, freed from all payments, enjoy the profit, but to your advantages you must adde the Iyranny of afflicting them with all manner of injuries : you rob your neighbours of their Goods, you sell Justice, and flie from civil Judgment, oppresfing the innocent, and promoting the infolent; nor do I believe there is in all Italy so many examples of violence and injustice, as in this City: wby should we take life from our Countrey,

Countrey that has given a being to us? or why destroy those that have made us victorious ? why difgrace and scorn those bave given us Hononrs? I promise you by the faith which all bonest men ought to give and receive, if you continue to behave your selues so, that I be forced to repent that I was victorious, I shall carry my felf in that manner you shall likewife repent of your abuse of the Victory. Those Citizens returned an Answer suitable and agreeable to the occasion, but reclaimed not themfelves from their violence and oppreffion : whereupon Reter privately caufed Meffer Agnolo Acciavoli to come to Caffagivolo, and had a long discourfe with him about the State of the City, nor is it to be doubted but (had not death prevented him) he had recalled all the banished to curb the infolence of those that were within, but death put a stop to these his honeft intentions, for grievoully afflicted with difeafes of body, and torments of mind, he dyed in the three and fiftieth year Death of Pe-of his age, whose worth and virtue could ter de Medier never be truly known to his Countrey, becaufe most of his time he lived accompanied by his father, and those few years he outlived him, were confumed in civil difeords; and infirmity of body. Perer was buried near his father in the Church of S. Laurence. and his Funeral was folemnized with all the pomp becoming fo great a Citizen. He left behind him two fons Lorenzo and Guilian, who though they gave great hopes thev

Digitized by Google

¥0`

Themes Soderive the most principal Citizen.

they would prove beneficial & ferviceable to their Countrey, yet their youth made all men doubtful. Among other principal men of State in Florence, and who much excelled all the seft was Thomas Soderint, whole wildom & Authority was not only reverenced in Florence, but by all the Princes of Iraly, on him after Peters death did the whole City caft their eyes, & many Citizens visited & many Princes complimented him as the chief main of the State, but he being prudent, & having a fore-light of his own fortune, and that of the Family of the Medici, answered none of the Princes Letters, & told the Citizens that not to his, but to the house of the Medici they ought to pay their vifits : And to perfect by deeds what he had perfwaded in words, he affembled all the prime Noble Families in the convent of S. Antonio, whither he likewife caufed Lorenzo and Julian Medici to come, & after a long and grave Oration of the prefent State of that City, of all Italy, and of the hu mours of Princes, concluding, that if they defired the union and peace of Florence, and to fecure it from civil diffention & foreign war, it was of all thingsmost necessary they should honour those two young men, and maintain the reputation of their house, for men seldom repine to submit to things they are accuftomed too, but new Lords as they are eafily set up, are eafily thrown down, and it was ever more facile to maintain that power, which by long continuance had outworn envy, than crect a new, which all men

Book VII.

of Florence.

men will be watching opportunities to opprefs. After Meffer Thomaso, spoke Lorenzo; and notwithstanding his youth, pleaded with fo much Gravity, Prudence and Modefty, that he put all men in hopes he would prove, what he afterwards did ; and before they departed that place, those Citizens swore to cherifh them as their children, and they to own thêm as their fathers; upon which conclusion Lorenze and Giulian were honoured as' Princes of the City, and they again never declined So-derini's counfel. And thus living at reft, both at home and abroad, and no appearance of war to disturb the publick quiet, an unlooked for turnult happened as a prefage of future troubles. Among the Families ruined by the faction of Linke Pitti, confirmed was that of the Nardi, for Sylvester and his of the Nardi; brother, heads of that Family were first banished, and afterwards in that war, moved by Bartbolomen Coglione declared Rebels, among whom was Bernard brother of Sylvester, a stout and active young man : he by reason of his poverty, less able to support banishment; and by reason of the conclusion of the peace, seeing no hopes of return, determined to attempt fomething; which might ocreation the renewing of the war; for oftentimes of weak beginnings; great effects er fue, provided men are more diligent in the profecution, than the beginning of an enterprise. Bernard had great acquainta dce in Frato, and more in the 7 D 2 Countred Countrey

Machiavel's Hiftory

Book VII.

Countrey of Pistoia, especially with the house of the Palandri, a Family though bred in the Countrey, yet very numerous, and those like the other Piftoiefi, nurft in Arms & Blood ; he very well knew they were difcontented. having been in some differences of theirs a little feverely treated by the Florentine Magistrates, and bendes hewas well vers'd in the humour of the Pratefi, who believed themselves governed with too much avarice and pride, and had particular knowledge of fome mens aversion to the State : all which things gave bim hopes he might kindle a fire in Tufcany, by firring up Prato to Rebellion, to which to much fuel would foon be added, that it would be found a hard matter to quench it. These his thoughts he communicates Meffer Dietifalvi, asking him, that fuppofing his defign on Prate fucceeded, what affifance he might by this means expect from other Princes; the undertaking to Mr. Dioti-Salvi seemed very dangerous, and almost imposible to effect; yet leeing he might now at the hazard of others, make a new tryal of his fortune, he encouraged him to proceed, promiling him certain affiftance from Ferrara and Bolonia, if he fo far fucceeded as to defend Frato but fifteen days. Bernardo by these promifes heightned with hopes of happy fuccefs, privately conveys himfelf to Prato, and - communicates the matter to several, whom he finds readily disposed to it; of the like temper he finds the Family of the Palandri, and having agreed upon the time and manner

52

Book VII.

manner of execution, they fent advice of all to Meffer Diotifalvi. Cefar Petrucci was at this time Podefta of Prato for the Florentines. Those Governours of the town have an usual custom to keep themselves the keys of the Gates, and when any of the City(efpecially in unfuspected times) comes by night to defire to go out, or to have any let in, he fends the Keys. Bernardo who knew this cuftom comes a little before day, together with the Palandri, and about a hundred armed men, and prefents himfelf before the Gate that leads to Pistoia, and those within who knew of the confpiracy, were likewife ready armed, one of whom went to the Podefta to defire the Keys, feigning there was a Townsman defired entrance; the Podesta who could not have the least fuspicion of any fuch accident, fends one of his fervants with them, from whom before he was far from the Palace, the Keys were taken by the confpirators, the Gates opened, and Peter and his armed followers let in, and being all now together, they again divided into two bodies, one of which led by Sylvester a Pratese surprised the Cittadel, and Bernardo with the other feized the Palace, committing Cefar with all his Family to the cuftody of some of his followers, then they fet up their cry throughout all the Town, proclaiming Liberty, Liberty. Day now began to appear, and at the noife, many of the people ran into the Market place: and hearing how the Cittadel and Palace was 7D3 furprifed

Machiavel's Hiftory Book. VII

furprised, and the Podesta with his Family imprifoned, they flood amazed how this accident flould happen. The eight Citi-zens, to whom the administration of affairs is there committed, affembled in their Palace to confult what was beft to be done : Whilft Bernardo and his company having marched up and down the Town, and getting none to follow them, hearing the eight were affem-bled came to them, and told them the rea-fon of his enterprife was to free them and their Country from fervitude, and how much glory they would gain, if taking arms they accompanied him in 10 brave an attempt, by which they would gain perpetual quiet and eternal fame, putting them in mind of their ancient liberty and prefent condition, declaring what fure affiftance they would have, if but for a few days they held out, affirming he had a party in Florence, who would thew themfelves as foon as they had intelligence that Town would u-nanimoufly follow him. The eight not moved at his words, replyed, " That "they knew not whether Florence lived " in Liberty or Bondage, as a thing they "were not concerned to enquire into, "but this they knew, they would ne-"ver defire any other Liberty than to obey " those Magistrates that governed Florence, "from whom they had received no injury to "oblige them to take arms against them, "wherefore they advised him to release the "Podesta, and march as fast as he rould "with " with E Digitized by Google

54

" with his people out of the Town, thereby se with speed freeing himself from that dan-" ger, whereinto he had unadvifedly thrown " himfelf. Bernardo not at all daunted, with thefe words refolved to try if threats would. move the Fratefi, whom he could not move with intreaties, and to terrifie them he thought the best way to put the Podesta to death, whom taking out of prilon, he commanded to be hanged at the Palace Windows. Cafar was brought almost to the window with the halter about his neck. when he faw Bernardo, who commanded his death, to whom turning about he faid. Bernardo then putteft me to death, believing then to be followed by the Pratein, but thou'h find the quite contrary, for the Reverence these people hear to the governours, fent them from the Florentines is fo great, that when they fee this injury done to me, they will conceive fuch a batted against thee, as will procure thy ruine, for not my death, but my life may be the oscasion of victory to thee, for if . I. command them to fulfill your pleasure, possibly they may do it, and by my following your directions, you may perhaps accomplish your delign. Bernordo, who had not now much choice to make thought this counfel very reasonsble, and therefore orders him to go to the Window, and command the people to yield him obedience, which when Cefer had done, he was fent back into cuftody. The weakness of the Confpirators was by this time discovered, and many Florentines who 5 D 4 inhabited .

inhabited the Town, had gathered themfelves together, among whom was Meffer George Ginori, a Knight of Rbodes, he was the first made any opposition, and affaulted Bernarede, who was running up and down the Market-place, fometimes intreating, and fometimes threatning, if they did not obey and follow him : but Meffer George and his party charging him, he was wounded and taken ; which done, it was an easie matter to release the Podofta, and overcome the reft; who being but few, were most of them taken or flain. Mean while the news of this accident was brought to Florence, and made fo much more than the truth, that the first Relations told, that Prato was taken, the Podefta with his Family all flain, and the Town full of enemies; Piltoia in arms, and many of its Citizens in this Confpiracie, whereupon the Palace was immediately full of Citizens, who came to confult with the Senate. There happened to be in Florence Robert of San Severmo, accounted a very able Leader, him they determined to fend with as many forces as could on fuch a fudden be got together to march towards the Town, and give them a particular account of the matter, applying fuch remedies, as in his judgement fould feem meet. Robert had gone little farther than the Castle of Campi; but he was met by a Meffenger sent from Cefar to signific that Bernardo was taken, his conforts flain or fled, and the Tumult quieted; whereupon be. returned returned to Florence, whither foon after Bernardo was brought, whom the Magistrates strictly examining to know the full Truth of the defign, and finding it a very weak Plot, asked him why he would attempt fo unlikely a thing, to which he made answer. he did it, because he had rather dye in Floreuce than live in exile, and was defirous his death might be accompanied with fomething memorable. This Tumult dead as foon as it was born, the Citizens returned to their accustomed manner of living, thinking they might without any moderation or respect enjoy that Government they had themselves setled and established : whence arofe here those diforders, which like insects are ufually generated from peace and idlenefs, for the youth grew more extravagant, than they were wont in their apparel, feafting, and other lascivious Vanities. fetting no bounds to their expences, but being wasteful and idle, confumed their time and eftates in play and women, and all their ftudy was who dreft fineft, who had the richest garnitures, and who had most of the words in fashion, or could talk after the prettiest and newest method, but that man that gave the tharpest, and most biting reparties, he was the wit of the times. These bleffed Cuftoms, and weighty endowments were by the Courtiers of Milan much added to and refined, for that Duke with The Duke of his Dutchels and whole Court to perform Florence, a yow (as it was given out) were come to 5. Florence Florence ; where he was received with all that pomp and fplendor, requifite for the entertainment of fo great a Prince, and fo true a friend to the City: And now there was one thing to be feen, which our City had never beheld before; for it being the holy time of Lent, during which the Church commands abstinence from shefth, his Court without any respect either to God or the Church, would feed on nothing elfe. There were many publick spectacles exhibited for his Honour, among the reft in the Church of Santie Spirite, they represented the Holy Ghoft descending upon the Apo-files; and many fires being used in such folemnities, that Church by fome or other took fire, and was quite burnt down, which most leokt upon, as an evident fign of Gods anger against us, for our Sins and Fol-lies. In thort, if the Duke of Milan found the City of Florence full of Curtizans, Delicacies, Debaucheries and Cultoms quite opposite to well ordered Civility, he left it much more fo, whereupon good Citizens though it requisite to bridle these Vanities, and by a Law reftrain the excelline expences in apparel; feating and burials. In the midifi of this profound peace happened a now and unlookt for Tumult in Tufcany. There was found in the Country of Volserve by fome of the Citizens of that place 300 110 - Wine of Allum, who knowing what advantages were to be made of it, that they might be affifted with money, and defend-

Book VII.

Tomalts in Volietra.

ni v l

Digitized by Google

cd

ed with authority, they addressed themselves to some Citizens of Florence to be partners with them. This in the beginning (as gey nerally all new undertakings are) was by the people of Voltorra flighted, but at length when they faw what profit others made of them, they grove too late and in vain to Inatch out of their hands, what at first they might with eafe have had ; they began first in their Councils to argue the matter, affirming it was not convenient that a commodity found in publick grounds (hould be converted to private use. They fent thereupon their Ambassadors to Florence, and the matter was referred to a Committee of Citizens, who either bribed, or because 'twes indeed their judgement, reported, That the people of Volserra were unjust in defiring to deprive other Citizens of the fruits of their pains and industry; and that those Allums belonged to the private perfons, and not to them, however it was convenient they should yearly pay a fum of money to the City, as an acknowledgement of their Superiority : This sentence instead of ex-tinguishing, inflamed the discontents and - tumults in Volterra, and nothing elfe, not only in their Councils, but through the whole City was difcourfed of; the People requiring what was unjufily taken from them might be refored, and the private polfeffors firiving to keep, what they had been at charge and pains to fet on work, and by fentence of the Florentines was confirmed

ed to them. Infomuch, that in these difputes Pecorino, a Citizen of quality was killed, and after him many others of his party, and their houses fackt and burnt, and with much ado were the people in this fury restrained from killing the Florentine Governours : But this first Tumult past, they determined ere they proceeded farther to fend Ambaffadors to Florence, who informed the Senate, if they would maintain their ancient Rights and Charters, they would continue in their ancient obedience. The answer was long debated. Meffer Thomas Soderini was of opinion, it was convenient to accept of the Volterrans fubmiffion on what terms foever, it being dangerous to raife a flame fo near, that it may burn our own houses, for he was fearful how the Pope was inclined, knew the King to be potent, and was confident neither in the Venetians nor Dukes friendship, because he could not tell how much fidelity might be found in the one, nor how little courage in the other, remembring them of that known proverb, Better a lean peace than a fat vitory. On the other fide Lorenzo de Medici thinking now, he had an opportunity to give a value to his counfels and prudence, and especially set on by those who envyed Soderini's authority, advised the chastiling the infolency of the Volterrans by arms, affirming, if they were not made a memorable example, other Cities would never flick flick at doing the like upon the least and flighteft occasion. This resolution taken, the Volterrans were answered, That they could not require the observance of those conditions themfelves had broken, and that therefore they must fubmit themselves to the judgement of the Senate, or expect a War. The Volterrans returned with this answer, prepared for their defence, fortifying their Town, and fending to all the Princes of Italy for aid, but were hearkened to by few, only the Sanefi, and the Lord of Prombino promised them some affistance. The Florentines on the other fide thinking haste in attaining it, of almost as much importance as victory it felf, drew together ten thousand foot, and two thousand horfe, whom under the command of Frederick, Lord of Urbin, they fent into the Country of Volterra, and eafily becoming Master of that, he lays fiege to the City, which being feated upon an alcent, could no way be battered but on that fide where the Church of St. Alexander stands. The Volterrans had hired about a thousand Soldiers for their defence, who feeing how bravely the Florentines affailed them, diltruftful of being able to defend the Town, grew flow in the fervice, but in affronting the Volterrans ready enough; to that those poor Citizens were forced to endure the affaults of their enemies without, and the abuses of their friends within, till in the end despairing of any fafety, they began to treat, and for Machiavel's Hiftory Book VII.

Volterre Gekt.

for want of better terms were forced to fubmit to the diferetion of the Florentine Comiffaries; who caufing the Gates to be opened, went to the Palace where their Priors were fitting, whom they commanded to return to their houses, and in the way one of them was by fome of the Soldiers in derision stript, from this beginning (as men are still readier to do mischief than good) grew the deftruction and fack of this City. which for a whole day was robbed, spoiled and plundered, neither did the women nor facred places escape, but the Soldiers (as well those had to cowardly defended it, as those had fought against it) divided all their wealth and riches. The news of this victony was with great joy received at Florence. and because the enterprize was wholly Lorenzo's it gained him very great reputation ; whereupon one of his familiar friends reproaching Thomas Soderini for his counfels faid, And what say you now that Volterra is taken? to whom Thomas answered, I rather think it is loft, for had you taken it upon composition, you might have expected from it both advantage and security; but baving taken it by force, in time of war it will weaken and annoy you, and in time of peace be both a charge and trouble. In these times the Pope defirous to keep in obedience the Towns belonging to the Church had caufed Spoletto to be fackt, which by the procurement of factions within had rebelled, and after wards because the City of Castello was fallen into into the fame contumacy had befieged it.Niebolas Vitelli was Prince of that Town, he had contracted a very intimate friendship with Loronzo de Medici, who was not want-ing now to give him assistance, though not enough to defend him, yet fufficient, to fow those feeds of diffention between Pope Sinthis and the Medici which afterwards brought forth very ill fruit. Nor had they been to long breaking forth, had not the death of Peter Cardinal of Silto intervened, for this Cardinal travelling all about Italy and particularly to Milan and Venice (under pretence to honour the Nuptials of Herenles Marquifs of Ferrars) had been founding the minds of Princes to find how they flood inclined to the Florentines; but being returned to Rome, he dyed not without suspition of having been poisoned by the Venetians, for they feared the power of Sixtus, when it had the courage and counfel of Peter to back it; for though nature had produced him of mean and abject blood, and that afterwards he was educated within the walls of a Convent, yet as foon as he came to be Cardinal, he was filled with fuch pride and ambition, a Cardinals cap was so much too little, that the triple Crown would scarce have satisfied hime for he made a feast in Rome, might have been judged a prodigality in a King, and which cost him at least twenty thousand Floring. Sixtus deprived thus of this great Minister of State, his affairs went on much flower. However

The Pope facks Spoletto, and befieges Caftello.

193 M 64

However the Florentines, Duke and Venetians, having renewed the League, and left place for the Pope and King to enter, if they pleafed. They made another contract between themselves with invitations to other Princes of Italy to joyn with them, if they thought fit; fo that now Italy was divided into two factions, for every day fomething happened, begetting hatred and animolity between these two leagues, but particularly the affair of Cyprus, which Ifland the King laid clam to, but the Venetians possesfeed themselves of whereupon the Pope and King obliged each other to stricter terms of mutual affiftance. Frederick Prince of Urbin was at this time accounted one of the prime Captains of Italy, who had long been employed by the Florentines : him, that the League might want fo valiant a head, the King and Pope strove to gain, and the King invited, and the Pope advised him to go to Naples, which to the great wonder and difpleafure of the Florentines he did, who believed he exposed himself to the fate of Jacob Piccinino, though the contrary happened, for Frederick returned both from Naples and Rome with much honour, and still continued General of the League : Mean while the King and Pope were not wanting to found the minds of the Lords of Romagnia, and the Sanefi, by means of whole friendthip they might more fecurely offend the Florentimes, who perceiving their intent, by all convenient ways armed themfelves to cmcounter

ţ

Book VII. of Florence.

Ъŝ

counter their ambition, and having loft Frederick of Urbin, entertained Robers of Rimini, renewed their League with the Perugians, and made a new one with the Lords of Faenza, the reason alleadged by the King and Pope for their hatred to the Flotentines was, because they fought to withdraw the Venetians from them, and iovn them to their own fide; and the Pope thought that whilk the Venetians and Florentines were united, it would be imposfible for him to maintain the reputation of the Church, or Count Girolamo, his Eftates in Romania. On the other fide the Florentines feared that they would fet them at enmity with the Venetians, not for their friendship fake, but to be the better enabled to injure them. And in these doubts and jealousies lived Italy two years before any War or Tumult broke forth. The first. though a little one happened in Tuscany. Braccio a man (as we have before related) famous in war, left behind him two fons. Oddo and Charles : This laft very young, and the other flain by the inhabitants of the Vale of Lamona: Charles being come to mans Estate, and fit for action, was by the Venetians for the memory of his Father, and hopes of himfelf, entertained among other Leaders employed by the Republick; the time of his entertainment expired, he would not renew it, determining to try, if by his own valour, and the reputation of his Father, he could recover his Estates of Perngia 7 E

Machiavel's History

Book VII.

Charks the Serie 6.

Paragia, to which the Venetians readily con-Charles the fented, they being wont amidif others is affilis the troubles to increase their own dominious : Cherles therefore comes into Infany; and finding the affairs of Perugia fomewhat too hard, because the Florentines were in league with them, yet refolving, fince he had taken arms, to do formething memorable, af-faults the Sanefi, alledging they were his debtors for fervices done that State by his Father, which he required fatisfaction for, end therewithall fo briskly fell on , that he almost quite overthrew that Dominion. The Citizens of Sienes feeing themfelves fo furiously affaulted, being apt to believe any ill of the Florentines, perfwaded themfelves that by their confent the attempt was made, heavily complaining thereof to the Pope and King, and fending withall Ambaffadors to Florence, to expostulate the matter, and privately infinuating that Charles (without hopes of their allifance,) durft not fo bodily have injured them. The Florentines excused themselves, affirming they were ready to fhew their endeavours, to prevent Charles his doing them any wrong, and to that purpose would in such terms, as the Ambaffadors thought fit command him to forbear offending the Samefi, which Charles thought hard measure, demonstrating that the Florentines, by not backing him, had loft a confiderable conqueft, and rob'd him of a proportionable giory, for he could in a fhort time have promifed miled them the possession of that Town whole cowardize and diforder he had found fuch, it was impossible they could long hold out. But now being forced to leave off, he returned into the Venetiant pay, and the Sanefi (though freed by the Plarentine's from to many damages) continued their grudge against them, not thinking they ought any obligation to a people, who had only delivered them from an injury they had first occasioned. Whilst affairs stood thus between the King Pope and Tafeany, an accident of greater moment happened in Lombardy, as the prefage of future evils: There was one Cola of Mantona a learned but ambitions man, who taught the Latine tongue to the youth of principal quality in Milan. In thefe (whether our of hate to the bad manners of the Duke, or moved by fome other occasion) by all the discourses he made, he ftrove to beget an abhorrence of living under an evil Prince, pronouncing them glorious and happy, to whom Fortune and Nature had granted the favour of living in a Common-wealth, declaring how all famous men had been brought up in Republicks, and not under Princes, for those cherrifh virtuous men, and these destroy them, the one reaping benefit and advantage from their virtue, and the other standing in fear of it : those youths he had entertained the strictest familiarity with, were John Andrea Lampognano, Charles Visconti, and Girolamo Olgiato, with these he often 7E 2 discoursed Confpiracy against the Duke of Milan, discoursed about the corrupt nature of the Prince, and the infelicity of those lived under him; and such a confidence had he in these young men, that at last he made them fwear when age should enable them, they would free their Countrey from the tyranny of that Prince, this defire thus inftilled into them, increased with their years, and the Dukes ill manners and cuftoms, and particular injuries done to themselves hastened the Execution of it. Galeazo was kuftful and cruel, which two qualities had with their circumstances made him utterly odious, for he was not content only to vitiate and debauch Ladies of quality, but took delight to publish it; nor would the death of men fatisfie him, unlefs they were in fome cruel manner tormented; he lived likewife under the infamy of having murdered his mother; for not thinking himself absolute Prince while the was prefent, he had fo far wrought with her, that Ihe was content to retire to her jointure-feat at Cremona, in which journey the fell fuddenly fick and dyed; which made many think her fon the caufe of her death. This Duke in fome concerns with the Female Sex had dishonoured Charles and Girolamo, and denyed John Andrea the possession of the Abbey of Miramondo, which upon a relations relignation had been granted him by the Pope. These private injuries spurred on the young men to revenge and deliver their Countrey from fo many milchiefs, hoping J

1

i

hoping that whenever they had the good fortune to kill the Duke, they should not only be followed by the chief of the Nobles. but by the whole people, being therefore determined upon the matter, they met often together, which because of their ancient familiarity, was nothing wondred at; and to keep their minds staid and resolved, they were always discourfing of the businels, and practiting with their dagger theaths to hit one another on the breft, belly and in other mortal places : then they advised about the place and time; in the Caftle they judged it could not be securely done, whilest he was a hunting uncertain and dangerous in his walks of pleafure they gueffed it would prove hard and unfuccefsful, and at Feafts doubtful; wherefore they determined to fall on him at fome publick Pomp and Solemnity, where they were certain he would be prefent, and they with leaft fu-Ipicion might affemble their Friends, concluding that if any of them were in the exccution taken, the reft fhould kill him in the midst of their enemies. It was now the year 1476, and nigh unto Christmals, and because the Prince was accustomed in great Pomp upon S. Stephens day, to visit the Church of that Martyr, they tefolved that the time and place for putting their defign in execution; and on the morning of that Saints day, cauled leveral of their truly friends and fervants to arm themfelves, pretending to go and affift John Andrea, who 7Ē3 againft

69

ŝ

against the mind of some envious neighbours, had a defire to carry water into his lands, and them thus armed they brought to the Church, alleadging that before their departure, they would take leave of the Prince; they likewife affembled thither under divers pretences, several other of their friends and relations, hoping the principal deed being once done, every one would be ready to join in what remained, and their intent, was alloon as the Prince was flain, to join with those armed men, and go to that place of the City, where they might with most ease raife the people, and perfwade them to arm themfelves against the Dutchefs, and the chiefest of the Court, hoping the people by reason of the famine wherewith they, were opprefied, would be ready to follow them; refolving for an encouragement to give them the spoil of the houfes of Cecco Simonette, John Botte and Francis Luconi chief Ministers of State. This determination made, and the execution firmly refolved in their minds. John Andrea with his companions came carly to the Church, where they heard Mais together; after which, Jobn Andrew turning towards an image of S. Ambrofa, faid; O those Guardian, and Petron of our City, those knowest our intention, and the end why me adventure our selves into so many dangers ; he propitious to our undertakings, and by fawouring justice make it appear born much inafties displeaseth thre. To the Dute on the other other fide before he came to Church, hap- . pened many things to prognofficate his approaching death, for in the morning when he role, he put on (according to his usual cultom) his privy Armour, which prefentby after, either becaule he thought it not becoming or that it hurt his body, he put off : then he had a mind to hear Mass in the Ca-Ale, but his Chaplain was already gone to S. Stephens with all the Furniture of the Chappel: then he would have had the Bishop of Come fay Mass in his stead, but he alleadged certain reafonable impediments fo that constrained as it were by necessity, he refolved to go to Church, but first he called for his two fons, John Galeazzo and Hermes whom he embraced and kiffed many times, as if he had no power to depart from them : the confpirators in the mean time, both to leffen all fuspicion, and shelter themselves from the cold, which was then very violent, were retired in a chamber of the chief Prief of the Church their friend, till upon word brought, that the Duke was coming, they went forth into the Church, and John Andrea and Girolamo placed themselves on the right hand, at the entrance into the Church, and Charles Visconti on the left, those that preceded the Duke were all gone in, and he just upon entrance encompassed with a great multitude, as in fuch a Ducal Pomp was convenient : the first that moved towards him were Lampognano and Girolamo, these pretending to make room for the Duke 7E4

7X

Galeano Dake of Milan (Jain.

Duke came up close to him, and affaulted him with tharp and thort daggers they had hid in their fleeves. Lampognano gave him two wounds, one in the Belly, and the other in the threat; Girolama likewile wounded him in the throat and the breft: Charles Visconti having taken his fand near the door, so that the Duke was past him cre he was fet upon by his companions, could not reach to wound him before, but gave him two stabs into the back and shoulder. fo quick and fudden were these fix wounds given, that the Duke was fallen before any man perceived it, nor could he do or fay any thing that was known, fave only as he fell, he once' cryed out, O Lady belp me. The Duke fallen, the noife and clamour was great, many fwords were drawn, and as it usually happens in such unlook'd for cafes, many run out of the Church, and many run towards the tumult, without knowing any certainty of the matter. But those that were nearest to the Duke, and had feen him flain, knowing his murderers, purfued them; and of the confpirators John Andrea endeavouring to get out of the Church went among the women, who being many, and as the cuflom was, let on the ground, he was fo entangled by their coats, that by a Moor one of the Dukes Footmen, he was overtaken and flain : Charles was like wife flain by the flanders by ; but Girolamo Olgiati escaped out among the croud, and feeing his companions

ł

ć

3

panions flain, and not knowing whither to 立 flye went home, where neither his father ł nor brothers would receive him ; but his 54 mother having compassion of her fon, re-. vŤ commended him to a Priest, an ancient. 岃 friend of their Family; who, putting him in e'r his Friars weeds, conveyed him to his 2 house where he staid two days, not with-, ĩ out hopes that there might fome tumult be ß raifed in Milan, whereby he might be faved, Ċ., but that not coming to pais, and fearing Ű. to be found there, he attempted to flye in 1 difguise, but being known he wasbrought 7 before the Magistrate, where he declared Qľ, the whole order of the confpiracy. Giroal lamo was about three and twenty years of j, age, nor was he lefs refolute in fuffering, . E than he had been in acting; for whileft he ŕ ftood naked, and the Hangman before him tŚ with his knife in his hand ready to cut him in pieces, he spoke these Latine words, for he was. learned, Mors acerba, fama perpetua, stabit vetus memoria facti. This attempt of these unhappy young men was closely contrived, and resolutely executed; and the occasion of their ruine was their not being followed, or defended by those they trufted would have done it. Let Princes therefore learn to live in fuch a manner, and gain fo much love and reverence, that none can hope for falety that kills them: and let private perfons know how vain the imagination is, to believe the multitude. though they are discontented, will in danger ger follow or accompany them. This accident amazed all Italy, but those which foon after happened in Florence did much more terrifie it; by which the peace which had continued twelve years was broke; as in the next Book shall be set down, which as it begins with Blood and Horrour, so it ends with forrow and tears.

HE

Florentine History

Written by

NICHOLAS: MACHIAVED.

BOOK VIIL

He beginning of this eighth Book being placed in the midit of two Confpiracies, one in Milan already related, the other happening in Florence, and now to be told. It might feem convenient (pursuant to the method begun) to difcourse fomething concerning the nature of Confpiracies, and the importance of them, which I would willingly do, if I had not before spoken concerning them, or it ware a matter to be briefly paffed over: But fince it both require th great confideration, and fomething has already been effewhere faid concerning hit. I forbear any forther mention thereof, and proceed to relate. That as the House of the Medici had overcome all those enemies, which openly 8 A had opposed them; so to compleat to themscives and Family, the fole and ample authority over the City; it was likewife requifite they should oppress all those who ecretly plotted against them, for whilest they contended with authority equalled by any other Families, those Citizens who envied their greatness, might openly oppose them without fear of being oppreffed in the beginning of their attempts; for whileft the Magifirates were free, neither Faction till they had loft the day, had any occasion of fear. But after the victory in 1466, the Government was to closely grafped by the Medici, and they assumed to great Authority, that if any were difcontented, they were enforced either patiently to fubmit to the Government under which they lived, or elfe. privately and by way of confpiracy attempt a remedy ; which plots feldom fucceed, begetting for the most part ruine to thole which form them, and greatness to thole against whom they are contrived ; fo that any Prince or Lord of a City being by confpiracy affaulted, if he be not like the Duke of Milen (which rarely happens) Sain, becomes more powerful than before, and off-times. from a good man turns wicked, for these private plots create occafions of fear, fear feelss fecurity, and the fearch of fecurity produces injury of others, which is the common mother of hatred. and offentimes of his own deftruction ; and thus indeed treafons are the immediate deftroyers

____ Digitized by Google ____

F

r

ÌI.

ł

C

٢ ĩ

Ź

tł

ftrovers of those that contrive them, and one way or other in conclusion offend him against whom they are contrived. Italy was as we have before related, divided into two factions; the Pope and King of one party, Two power and the Venetians Duke and Florentines on on in Land the other. And though war was not yet kindled amongst them, yet every day brought forth new blafts to blow the coals, and the Pope especially in all his actions and enterprifes studied to affront the State. of Florence; for Philip de Medici: Archbishop! of Pifa, about that time dying, the Poper contrary to the will of the Senate of Flo-, rence invested Francis Salviati, whom he knew to be an enemy to the house of Medici with that Archbishoprick, to whom the Senate refuling to give poffettion, there forung up new, and more grievous offences, by reason of that contest between the Pope and that State, besides in Rome his Holinefs . conferred many favours on the Family of the Pazzi, and upon all occasions discountenanced the Medici. The Pazzi in those times, both for riches and honour lived in as much fplendor as any family in Florence; the head of whom was Meffer Jacob, who for his Riches and Nobility was by the people made Knight; he had no children, but one natural daughter, but he had many Nephews, fons of Meffer Peter and Anthony his brothers; the chief of which were William, Francis, Rinate and Jobn, and after them, Andrew, Nicholas and Galeatte: Cofmo de. Medici 3.

Book VIII.

Medici (observing their riches and glory) had married his Nicee Biancha to William; hoping by this alliance to keep the Families more united, and remove that entnity and hetred, which are the ulual products of envy and jealousie: yet (so failacious and uncertain are the contrivances of man) matters fell out quite otherwife, for those who counfelled Lorenzo, infinuated how it was dangerous and destructive to his authority, to fuffer any Citizens to heap up Riches and Honours ; whence it happened that Mr. Jacob and his Nephews were not advanced to those degrees of Honour, other Citizens thought they had deferved : and hence Iprung the first anger in the Pazbetween the si, and fear in the Medici, and the one increating, afforded matter and growth to the other; for the Pazze in all debates to which the other Citizens affembled, were not kindly hearkened to by the Magifirates : And the counfel of eight (Francis Pazzi happening to be at Rome) upon a flight occation, and without observing the refpect utual to Citizens of his quality, constrained him to return to Florence, which made the Pazzi in all places rip up their grievances with bitter and vehement reproaches, and those increased the others jealoufies, and added to their own infury. John Pazsi had married the daughter of John Borromei a very rich man, whole eftate, he dycing without iffue Male, fell by right to his daughter; however Charles his Nephew poffeffed

Medici and Pasi.

٩

· 4.

Book VIII. of Florence.

poffeffed himfelf of part of his goods. and the cause coming to a tryal, a Law was made difinheriting John Pazzi's wife, and giving the effate to Charles, which injuffice the Pazzi wholly imputed to the Medici; about which Julian many times complained to his brother Lorenzo, telling him ha was doubtful, least by grafping too much, they should lofe all; but Lorenzo warm in youth and authority would take all things on himfelf, and was ambitious, men should know they were done by him. The Pazzi with fo great riches, and fuch nobility, incapable of fuffering fo many injuries, began to confult how they might revenge themfelves: the first that made a motion against the Medici was Francis, who more fenfible, and withal more couragious than the reft, refolved to attain what he wanted. or lofe what he had; and because he hated the Government of Florence, he lived for the most part in Rome, where according to the cuftom of the Florentine Merchants, he drove a great Trade, and had a mighty flock of money, and Earl Giroland being his intimate Friend, they often made mu tual complaints of the Medici; infomuch that after many confultations, they at length concluded that ere the one could be fecure in his eftate, or the other in his City, there was an absolute neceffity of changing compress the Government of Florence, which they again the could contrive no way to effect, but by the failers and death of Lorenzo and Julian : they fuppofed dici. the the 'Pope and the King, would eafily confent, if the facility of accomplishing it were declared to them; having formed thefe imaginations in their heads, they communicated them to Francis Salviati Archbishop of Pifa, who being ambitious, and lately injured by the Medici, readily joined with them; and examining among themselves what was fit to be done, they determined (to add the greater facility to the enterprize) to gain Meffer Jacob Pazzi to their party; whereupon they thought it convenient that Francis Pazzi (hould to this intent go to Florence, and the Archbishop and Earl flay at Rome to follicite the Pope, when there should be occasion. Francis being come to Florence, found Meffer Jacob more referved, and difficult to be perfwaded, than he could have wished him ; whereof giving advice to Rome, it was judged fit to employ fome greater authority to dispose him, to which end, the Archbishop and Earl communicated the whole defign to John Battista of Montesecco the Popes General; he was a very famous Captain, and much obliged to the Pope and Earl, yet he difliked the plot as diffi-cult and dangerous; which danger and difficulties the Archbishop endeavoured to remove, by telling him what affiftance the Pope and King would give to the enteprife, adding withal the hate born by the Citizens of Florence to the Medici, the numerous kindred of the Salviati and Pazzi, and the the cafinels of killing them as they were walking the City without any guard or any fuspicion, which done, the change of Government would follow of courfe; all which Jobn Battifta gave no intire credit to, having heard many Florentines affirm the whileft they were laying thefe contrary. plots and contrivances, it happened that Charles Lord of Faenza fell fo fick, that there was little hopes of his recovery. The Archbilhop and Earl thought they had now an opportunity to fend John Battifta to Florence, and thence into Romania, under pretence of regaining certain towns polfeffed by the Lord of Faenza, the Earl therefore gave Commiffion to John Battifa to confer with Lorenzo, and in his name defire his advice in the management of the affairs of Romania, and that afterwards he should confult with Francis Pazzi, and both together endeavour to dispose Meffer Facob to their party, and to the end he might be back'd with the Popes authority, they procured him before his departure audience from his Holinefs, who engaged with all his power to further the defign. John Battifta being arrived at Florence addreffed himfelf to Lorenzo, by whom he was courteoufly received, and in all his demands predently and friendly advised ; at which John Battifta was fomewhat amazed, finding him a man quite different from what he had been represented, for he perceived him to be courteous, difcreet and a great B great friend of the Earls; however he would speak with Francis, but not finding him (for he was gone to Lucca) he went himself to Meffer Jacob, and at first found him very averse to the delign, but before they parted (fomewhat moved with the Popes authority) he told fobn Battifia that he thould go to Romania, and by that time he returned Francis would be come to Florence, and then they would difcourse the marter at large. Jobn Battifta went and returned, and still continued to entertain Lorenzo with his feigned Commillion from the Earl, and afterwards held divers conferences with Francis and Meffer Jacob, whom at length they prevailed with fo far, that he confented to the confipracy. Then they began to confult of the execution, Meffer Faceb thought it impossible whilest both brothers were in Florence, and therefore advifed to flay till Lorenzo went to Rome, whither there was a report he was defigned: Francis would have been glad to have had Lorenzo at Rome; however supposing he did not go, he affirmed that either at a wedding, at some publick sports, or in the Church both brothers might be flain; and as to foreign aid, in his judgment the Pope might draw together an Army, under pretence of affaulting the Caffle of Momone, which he had a just occasion to take from Earle Charles, for having railed the tumulis before mentioned in the Countrey of Siene and Perugia; yet they made no farther conclusion

Book VIII.

1

÷

of Florence.

٣Ì)

conclution fave that Francis de Pazzi, and John Battiffa Inould go to Rome, and there with the Pope and Earl determine all things, the matter wastafret debated at Rome, and in the end it was concluded (an expedition against Momone being reford) that Joint Francis of Tolensino, a Captain of the Popes hould go into Romania, and Lovenzo of Caftelle into his own Country, and both keep their forces in a readinets ito oblerve fach orders, as they should receive thom the Archbishop Balviati, and Francis Passi, who together with John Bartifia of Mome-Jaces should come to Florence, where they fiould make provision of all things necel fary to put their delign in execution, to which King Perdinand had by his Ambaffador promifed his affitance. "" The Archbishop and Francis, being come to Florence, drew into their party, Jacob the fon of Meffer Poggio, a young man of excellent fearning, but ambitious, and defirous of Novelty; they likewife engaged two' Jacob Balvidtili, the one brother, the other kinfman to the Archbishop, to them they added Bernardo Bundini , and Wapoleone Francefi, fout young Hien; and who had been often obliged by the Pazzi', of Arangers (befides thole before named)there were joyned with Allem Moffer Antonio de Volterra, and one Szephen a Priest, who taught the Latin "Pongue to Jacob de Pazzi's daughter. Rtmule de Pazzii; 'a prudent and grave man, and who very well knew the ill confe-1.14 8B 2 quences

Machiavely History Book VIII

quences of fuch undertakings, not only refused to joya in the conspiracy, but detefted it, and by all honeft means he could fought to prevent it. The Rope had in the University of Pifa caused to be educated in the fludy of the Cannon Laws, Raffael de Riario, Nephew to Earl Girolamo, and whilf he was yet there, had advanced him to the Dignity of Cardinal. The Confpirators thought convenient to bring this Cardinal to Florence, not only the better to conceal the Plot (as defigning in his house to hide those Confeirators, they had occasion of) but likewile to gain a fitter opportunity of excuting in. The Cardinal therefore coming, wasby Meffer Jacob de Pazzi en-tertained at Montaghi, his Country-houle near. Flarence. The Confpirators by his means had defigned to get Lorenzo and Julian together, and the first time that happened to kill, them : they therefore contrived, they fhould invite the Cardinal to their own house at Fiefale, whither Inlian by chance, or of purpose came not; to that appointment failed ; then they determined he should invite them at Florence, whither they could not chuse but both come, and appointed the feast on Sunday the 26 of April 1478, the Confpirators hoping they might find means to murther them, at this feast met together on Saturday night, and ordered all things they thought fit for the execution next day, but in the morning Francis Pazzi had intelligence that Julian would - L. 1 would not come to the Feaft, whereupon the Confpirators again affembled and concluded, that the execution muffinot be long ger delayed; for that it was impossible, beif ing known to for many, but it would be discovered ; wherefore they refolved to: mumer them in the Cathedral Church of Sancia Repardia, whither the Cardinal go-, ing, the two brothers would (according to: cuftom) attend him, they affigned to John. Battifts the charge of killing Lorenze, and Francis Pazzi, and Bernard Bandini were to, murder Julian. John Battifta refused the office: for whether the farhiharity he had had with Lorenzo had foftned his mind, or whether moved by fome other reason, he told them he durft not commit fuch a villany in the Church and add facriledge to treafon. This was the first step to the ruine of their defign; for straitened by time, they were constrained to give the charge to Antonio of Volterra, and Stephen the Prieft, two whole nature and experience rendred them unfit for it; for no action requires more refolution and fetled courage than this, and he who undertakes any thing of this kind, ought to be a man experienced in bloed and flaughter, it having oft-times been seen that men, though trained up in arms, and at all times elfe. couragious have had their hearts fail upon fuch attempts. However this refolution held, and they agreed that the fignal to fall on, should be when the Priest at the high Altar began 8 B 2 to torsing Mais , and that at the fame time, the Archbilliop Selviati, with Giacopa Poggin Annuld force on the publick Palace, to the ductor the Senate wight be brought (as foon as the two young men were flain) either wohnstarily, or by force to favour their defign. Dhiss determined, they were to the Church, whithen the Cardinal with Enrenzo Medici were already gone. The Church was full of people, and Divine Service begun ! but Julian Medici, not yet come, whereupon Francis, Passi, together with Bernanda, who were appointed to murder him, went home to find him, and by conning flattery, and artifices perforaded him to come to Church ... It is a thing norotiously memorable how such inveterate harred, accompanied with the thoughts of to detertable a villany, could with fuch un dauntedness of mind, and obfinacy of spirit be concealed in Francis and Barnardo, for all the way as they conducted him, and in the Church, they entertained bith with pleafant and youthful discourse. Nor did Francis forbear out of a pretence of kindnels and familiatity to take Judian in his areas, embracing and prefling his body to find out, if he had any privy, armour. Gin-Man and Limenzh were both fenfible of the bate the Bangi bore them, and how they defined to take away their authority in the State, but they did not fear their lives, bes lieving when they did attempt any thing they would do it civily, and not with fireh extreextremity of violence, and therefore free from any fuch miltruft, they took to little care of themselves, that they always entertained them with all manner of friendlinefs. The Murtherers thus prepared, those appoint, ed to affaffinate Lorenzo, thrust up close to him, which by reason of the croud, they might eafily do without fulpicion, and the others did the like to Julian, when the time gulian Me-appointed being come, Bernardo Bandini dici Ilain. with a fhort dagger prepared for the purpose, stabs Julian in the brest, who advancing two or three steps fell to the ground, and Francis Pazzi throwing himself upon him, loaded him with wounds, and was fo eager in his villany, that blinded with rage and fury, he gave himfelf a desperate wound in the leg : Meffer Antonio and Friar Stephen on the other fide fell upon Lorenzo, but though they made many ftrokes at him, they gave him only a flight wound in the throat; for either through their cowardife, or Lorenzo's courage (who feeing himfelf thus affaulted, bravely with his fword defended himfelf fo their attempt was fruffrate, and he by the affiftance of those about him faved from further harm, whereat difinayed they fled and hid themfelves, but were afterwards found out, Chamefully put to death, and dragged through the City. Lorenzo in the mean while retired into the Vestry of the Church with those aves himself friends he had about him, and there thut themfelves in. Barnardo Bandini feeing Ju-Íi an 8 B 4 lian dead, slew likewise Francis Neri, a great friend of the Medici, either out of fome old grudge, or because he had endeavoured to save Julian, and not content with these two murders, he ran to seek out Lorenzo, to supply with his courage and activity, the floath and cowardife of the others; but finding him fhut up in the Veftry, failed of his intent. In the midst of this dreadful and villanous accident, the terrour of which made most men think the Church was falling on their heads, the Cardinal retired to the Altar, where with great difficulty he was faved by the Priefts, till by the Senates order (when the tumult was ceased) he was conveyed to his Palace, where in great fear he remained till his delivery. There was at this time in Florence some Perugians driven from their habitations by the factions, enemies to their Families, whom the Pazzi (upon promife to reftore them to their Country) had drawn into the conspiracy. These the Archbishop Salviati (who together with Jacob Poggio, the two Salviati, and other friends, was gone to poffels himfelf of the Palace) took along with him, and being come to the Palace, left some of his men below with orders, that when they heard a noile, they should feife on the gates, and himself with the greatest part of the Perugians, went up, where finding the Senate at dinner, for it was late he was prefently by Casar Petrucci Gonfaloniere of Justice admitted mitted. Whereupon entring with a few and leaving the remainder without, they of their own accord that themfelves into the Chancery, whole lock was fo contrived. that without the Key, it could not be opened, neither on the infide, nor without. The Archbishop mean while being gone in with the Gonfaloniere, under pretence of having some matter to confer with him from the Pope, began to utter some broken and difcomposed words : Infomuch, that his fearful speech, and the change of his countenance bred fuch a suspition in the Gonfaloniere, that with a great cry he thruft him out; and finding there Jacob Poggio, took him by the hair, and delivered him into the hands of the Serjeants; and the whole Senate taking the alarum with fuch arms as came next to hand, fell upon the rest that were come up with the Arch-bishop, and (part of them being shut up, and part terrified and difmaid) foon difpatcht them all, or threw them alive out of The Archthe Palace windows : Of whom the Arch- biffiop and bishop, the two Jacob Salviati's, and Jacob other con-figure for the second second for the second s ed below in the Palace, had forced the Guards and the Gate, and poffeffed themfelves of all the lower rooms, fo that the Citizens, who in this Tumult ran to the Palace, could neither with their arms affift, nor counfel, advise the Senators. Mean while Francis Pazzi and Bernard Bandini feeing Lorenzo escaped, and one of themfelves.

Machinvelto Hiftory

Gives, in whom the main hopes of the enterprife lay, grievoully wounded, were drunted. And Bernardo, with the fame Advity of Spirit, wherewith he had affaulted the Medici, begins to confider of his own fafety, and feeing all lost flees to fave himself. Francis being returned to his house, made tryal if he could fit on horseback, (for the orders were, that he with fome men at arms should ride about the Town, and call the people to liberty and arms) but he could not, fo dangerous was his wound, and so much blood he had boft ; wherefore putting off his clothes, he laid himfelf in his naked bed, defiring Meffer Jacob to do that which he himself could not ; Meffer Jacob, though old and unufed to these Tumults, yet to make this last tryal of his fortune, mounted on horfeback, with about an hundred armed men prepared before for that purpose, and goes into the Piezze of the Palace, calling the people to his affiltance, and proclaiming liberty; but because the first were by the fortune and liberality of the Medici made deaf, and the other was no otherwife de-Gred in Florence than enjoyed, no one an-Gwered him, only the Senate, who ftill kept in the upper part of the Palace, faluted him swith stones, and with the deepest threatnings they could devile, terrified him : And Meffor Jacob being in fuspence what to do, was met by Jobn Sorifleri his brother-in-Law, who reproving him for being the occafion

f

10

77

¥.

Ľ

3 it

iš

1

٢.

Ľ

e

[•

k

Ē

i,

ż

ŝ

Bpols VIII. of Florence,

cation of these Tumults, exhorted him to return to his house, affuring him that the weltare of the people and liberty of the City concerned other Citizens as well as himfelf. Wherefore despairing of any help, Geing Lorenzo his enemy alive, Francis wounded, and himfelf not followed by any, not knowing what other course to take, he refolved, if it were possible, by flight to fave his life, and to that end with the company he had with him in the Piazza, takes his way out of Florence towards Romania; By this time all the City was up in arms, and Lorenzo de Medici was, accompanied with many armed men, come to his own house: The people had likewise recovered the Palace, and killed or taken all those that poffeffed it. And now the name of Medici was procleimed through every fireet. and the quarters of the dead, either fixed upon their weapons points, or dragged through the fireets; and every one with words full of mage and actions as cruel perfecuted the Pazzi, already had the people entred their houses, and naked as he was drawn Francis out, whom having drag'd to the Palace, they hanged up with the Archbilhop, and the reft : Yet all the in-Birjes and affronts done him, either in the way, or afterwards could not extract one word from him, but fixedly looking upon every one, without to much as a groan, he The refolmer dyed, William Pazza, as well for his own death of innecency, as for the fake of his wife Pazzi. Bianca

Į7

Bianca, was faved in his Brother-in-law Lorenzo's Palace. There was not a Citizen in this terrible necessity; but either armed or difarmed, went to' Lorenzo's houfe, offering him their lives and fortunes. So great was the love and fayour that House had by their prudence and liberality gained. Rinato Pazzi was (when this villany was done) retired into his house in the Country, where hearing the news, he would have fled in disguise, but by the way was known, taken and brought back to Florence. Meffer Jacob was likewife taken passing the Mountains, for those Mountaineers having notice of what was past at Florence, suspecting him becaule of his flight, fet upon him & brought him back, nor could he obtain the favour, though he often beg'd it to to be killed by them on the way. Meffer Jacob and Rinate were adjudged to dye four days after the action, and in all those executions which in that interval happened, and which had covered the ftreets with the Carcales and quarters of men, none was observed to be pittyed, or to touch any man with the least compassion, but Rinate, for he was efteemed a good and a prudent man, and not observed to be tainted with that pride which infected the reft of his Family. And now because the perfecution of these Confpirators should be in all points exemplary. Meffer Jacob Pazzi was first taken out of the Tomb of his Anceftors, and as one excommunicated, buried under the City walls, and

Book VIII. of Florence.

and being there again dug up, and with the fame halter, in which he was hanged, drag d naked through the fireets, and fince ho could not on earth find a quiet Sepulture was by those that thus drag'd him thrown into the River Arno, whole waters were then very high. A great example of the ficklenefs of fortune, to fee a man of that riches and of fo happy an Estate, fall with fo much infelicity ruine and difgrace. Some have reported him very vitious, as addicted to gaming and fwearing, like one defperate and carelefs. If it were fo, he recompenfed those vices with his liberality and alms, for he relieved many poor, and gave large Donatives to pious Structures. And this one good thing may be faid of him, that the Saturday preceding the day appointed for this cruel murder, (that none might be sharers in his misfortune) he paid all his debts, and all the Merchandife he had either in the Cuftom-houfe, or at home, belonging to others, with wonderful care he cauled to be delivered to the owners. Fohn Battista de Montesecco, after many tedious examinations was beheaded. Napoleone Francesi by flight escaped punishment. William Pazzi was confined, and all his Kinfmen that remained alive imprisoned in the Dungeon of the Caffle of Volterra, All Tumults appealed, and the Confpirators punished, the Eunerals of Julian were celebrated, which were accompanied with the tears of all the Citizens for indeed he was

Digitized by Google

*9

Machiavely Hiftory

Book VIIL

a man endowed with all that winning affability courtefic and liberality could be withed or defired in one of his degree and condition. There remained of him one fon, born fome few months after his death, and called Jalia, who is endowed with that virtue and form tune, which all the world at prefent knows; and which when I come to the acoutrences of these times, thall, God granting me life, fully fet forth. Those forces under Mafer Lorenze de Caftelle in the Vale of Tevere, and thole under John Francifio Tolentino in Rom mania were both advancing at the fame time towards Florence, in favour of the Pazzi, till understanding how the defign had milcarried, they returned back. But fince that change of Government in Florence defigned by the King and Pope had not succeeded, they determined that what they could not effect by confpiracies, they would by open war; and both one and the other with all possible speed drew together their Forces to affault the State of Florence, declaring that alithey defired from that Oity was the removal of Lorenzo de Medici; who only of all the Worearines was their energy. The Kings forces had already paffed the Tronto, and the Poples were in the Country of Perugia, who that he might make the Plorentimes feel the Imart of Spiritual as well as Temporal wounds, excommunicates and curfes them. whereupon the Florentines feeing to many leveral forces moving against them, prepared with all diligence for their defence, and Lo-

Digitized by Google

The Pope and King make war with Florence,

Book VIII.

. Ât

Lorenzo de Medici, fince publick faine tes ported the War, made only against him, affembles in the Palace of the Lords all the Citizens of quality, to the number of above three hundred, to whom he fpake in this I know not (most mighty Lords and manner. Right worthipful Citizens) mether I ought to grieve or rejoyce at what is lately bappened. for when I confider with how much frand and deceit with bow much malice and barred I was affaulted, and my prothet flain, I cannot but be concerned for my felf, and with all my beart, and with all my foul grieve for bim : but when I confider with what active readinefs with what faithful diligence, with what intere love, and whiverfal confent, you have revenged my brother, and defended me, I cannot bue rejoyce; nay, I find my felf exalted in my spirits, and glory in my fortune : For if this experience bas les me know I had more enemies in this City than I thought : It has likewise taught me, that I have more fervent and Jaithful friends shan I believed, I must sherefore condole with you for the injuries of others. and rejoyce for your knidness : yet ought my forrow to be the greater as the injuries reserved, are so rare, so without example, and fo little by us deferved. Confider, most worthy Citizens to what extremities the pervershess of fortune has reduced out house, that the being encompassed with friends in the midst of our Rindred ; no, not the Church it felf can Secure us. Those who are in fear of death use to run to their friends for affiftance, to their kindred for

: òt

Machiavel's History Book VIII.

for protection, but we also find ours armed for our definition. Ibose who either on publick or private accounts are perfecuted, use to flee to the Church for Santinary, but where others are defended, we are flain. Where Parraeides and affaffines are secure, the Medici meet their Murderers : But God who hath hitherto mever forsaken our bouse, bath now preferved as and undertaken the defence of our just caufe. For what injury have we ever done to create in any man fo fierce a defire of revenge ? these very men, who have persecuted ns with such malice, we never so much as privately offended, for bad we injured them, they could never have bad the opportunity thus to And when they attribute to m injure us. publick injuries, if ever any were done them, (which I know not off) they offend you more shan us; and this Palace, and the Majefty of this Government, rather than our house, by imagining that you, for our sakes, undeserved ly oppress your Citizens, which is a suggestion utterly alien to truth, for we, if we could, and you, if we would had never confented to it, for whoever searches into the truth, will find that our boufe, for no other caufe has with fuch general confent been advanced by you, but only that we have still endeavoured with liberality and kindness to overcome all men. If we then have, been bonourers of strangers. bow. (hould we be injurers of our Kindred ? If defire of rule moved them to this (as their seifing the Palace, and coming armed into the Piazza Sufficiently evidences) the more wicked ambitions

Book VIII.

of Florence.

tions and damnable the occasion is, the more is difcovers and condemns it felf. If out of enuy and batred to our authority they had done it, they offend not us, but you that gave it : but furely that authority merits bate which men usurp, not what they gain by liberality, bumanity, and magnificence. And you well know our bouse never mounted to any degree of bonour, but by the order of this Magistracy, and your universal consent : My Grandfather Colmo returned not from banifoment by arms or violence, but your general and united vote. My Father when old and infirm defended not bimfelf from so many Enemies of the State, but you with your good will and authority defended bim. Nor could I after my fathers death, (being but as it were a child) have maintained the honour of my family, bad it not been supported by your favour and counsel: Never could thefe of my Family have governed this Republick, had not you with them governed as you do still govern it; I cannot therefore imagine what reason, they have to bate us, or whence their Malice Sprung? let them envy their own Ancestors, who with pride and avarice lost that reputation, which ours with quite different qualities have known how to gain. But grant that we have done them mighty injuries, and they had reason to profornte our raine : yet why flould they offend sbis Palace? Why enter into a league with the King and Pope against the liberty of this Republick? Why difturb the fetled peace of Republick? Why auror without excuse, for Italy? In this they are without excuse, for $60 they stey sught to offend those tobo bave offended sbeni, and not conformed private chanities with publick injuries ; whereby shough their numlice be flops, out mifertes are revived, the Pope and King (sepon their fole account) coming to invade us : which war they fay is made against me and my family, I with to God it were true; then the remedy were both ready end certain ; for I will never be faill a Cetzzen, to dalae more my own fafety, than your danger; much rather should I quench your flame's with my own taine ; but because injuries done by the mighty, are always covered with fine more fremly presence, they have chafes this will to caff over their prefent injustice : ba if you think otherwise, I am in your band, you may support, or you may suppress me, you, my fathers, you my defenders, for what eve you shall command, I shall readily obey; m will I refuse, if you fhall think fit, to end the War with my own, which was began with m Brothers Blood The Citizens while Lorenz forke, could not refrain from tears; and with the fame compafion he was heard, he was by one commissioned thereunto, an-Iwered : Telling him, that Gity acknow ledged the merits of him and his, so be fuch, What be might reft affured, that with the fame readiness and affetion wherewith they had tevenged bis bruther, and defended him, shey Would fill preferie bis life and reputation, we Should be lose either, till they had lost their Country. And to make their actions correspond with their words, they ordered as v: 1. a guard TheCitizens obliging anforer to Lorenze's fpeech.

23

•12

a guard of his body, a certain number of Soldiers to be maintained by the publick, to defend him against domestick treasons, then they gave directions for the war, leavying men, and raifing money, as far as their power in either would extend; by virtue of their League, they fent likewife to the Duke and Venetians for aid. And fince the Pope had proved himfelf a wolf, and not a Shepherd, that they might not as guilty be devoured. with the best declarations they could invent. they justified their cause, filling all Ital with accounts of the treafons practiled against their State: "Setting forth the impiety and injuffice of the Pope, who has " ving by unlawful means usurped the Pa-" pacy, with malice exercised it; for he " had not only fent one, by him advanced " to the chief prelatical Dignity, in the com-" pany of Traitors and Parricides, to com-" mit fuch a murder in the Church, in the " midft of Divine Service, and at the inftant " of the celebration of the most holy Sacra-¢٢ ment, but afterwards (fince his defign of ċι murdering their Citizens, changing their ÈC. Government, and facking their City at " pleasure had not succeeded) he had excom-¢¢. municated; and with papal maledictions' " threatned and oppressed them : but if "God were just, who hated violence, he " would certainly manifest his displeasure a-" gainft this his Vicar, & right their wrongs, " who(having no other refuge)had recourse und him. And fo far were the Florentines 8 C 2 from

The Flores. times flight the Popes curfes. from receiving this interdiction or obeying it, that they forced the Priests to celebrate Divine Service. They likewife fummoned a Council in Florence of all the Prelates in Tuscany under their Dominion ; wherein they appealed from the unjust fentence of the Pope, to the next General Council: nor did the Pope want reasons to justifie his cause; 'alleadging, " That it apper-" tained to a true pattor of the Church to " extirpate Tyranny, deprefs the wicked, " and exalt the good, and that it belonged * not to the fecular power to imprison Car-" dinals, hang Bishops, kill, quarter and " drag through the streets Pries without " any distinction, slaying the innocent and " the guilty. Notwithstanding fo many quarrels and accufations, the Cardinal whom the Florentines had in their cuftody, was delivered up to the Pope; whereupon he without any fear or respect, with all his and the Kings Forces affailed them : and the two Armies (one under Alphonso, eldeft fon of Ferdinand Duke of Calabria, and the other under Frederick Earl of Urbin) being entred Chianti by way of Siena (which fided with the enemy) took Radda and feveral other Castles, and wasted all the Countrey; which done, they encamped before Castellind. The Florentines beholding that fierce invalion, were in great fear, being destitute of men, and help from their friends coming flowly; for though the Duke fent fome fuccours, the Venetians

The King and Pope invade the Florentines.

ſ

ţ,

۵

d

đ

ŀ

Ľ

1

E

K

1

ľ.

ons denied themselves obliged to aid the Florentines in a private quarrel; for private differences were not to be publickly defended. Wherefore the Florentines to dispose the Venetians to juster thoughts, fent Thomas Soderini Ambassadour to that Senate. and in the mean time they hired Soldiers, making Hercules Marquis of Ferrara their General : whileft they were making thefe preparations, the enemies Army to clofely streightned Castellina, that the Townsmen despairing of any relief, after forty days fiege yielded. Thence the enemy turned towards Arezzo, and encamped before Monte S. Sovino : by this time the Florentine Army was in a readinefs, and advancing towards the enemy, took their station within three miles of them, and fo much incommoded them, that Frederick of Urbin defired truce for some few days, which was granted fo much to the Florentines difadvantage, that those who asked it wondred ; for had they not obtained it, they must have been forced to depart with shame and diffionour, but having fo many days to put themselves in order; no sooner was the truce expired, but they took the Caffe before the Florentines faces ; however winter now coming on, for the better convemiency of quarters, the enemy retreated into the Countrey of Siena, and the Florensines likewife withdrawing into the most commodious stations; the Marquis of Ferrara (having done little good for him-8C 3 felf.

Machiavel's Hiftory Book. VIII.

leff, and lefe for others) returned to his

$$

Sement It.

ì

own Countrey. About this time Genous rebelled from the State of Milar upon these occasions. After the death of Geleazza, John his (on bring of an age unfit for Government, there arole contention between Sforza, Lewis, Ottowian and Afcaning his uncles, and the Lady Fang his mother, for every one of them would have the tuition of the young Duko. In which controversie the Lady Bong the ald Dutchels (by the advice of Ibomas Saderini then Ambaffador there for the State of Florence, and Cecce Simonette who had been Secretary to Galeazza) got the better ; whereupon the Sforei flying from Milan, Objevian paffing the Adda was drowned, the other were confined to feveral places. together with Robert Lord of San Severina, who during those troubles had deserted the Dutchels, and joined with them. Afterwards those wars happening in Tuscany, hoping by new accidents to meet with new fortunes, they broke their confinements, and each attempted new exploits, to reftore themselves to their lost honours: King Alphons of perseiving that the Elorenitues were in all their necellity, affifted only by the State of Milan, to deprive them like wile of that support, contrived to give the Dutchels fo much trouble in her own chates, that the could not provide for the Elementine at and by means of Reeffere Adurnia, the Lord Robert and the rebel Sformi caused Genous to tebel agoingt that Danke. There romainęd ed only faithful to him the little Cafile, relying on which, the Dutchels fent a confiderable force to recover the City, but they being defeated, and the feeing the danger hanging over her fons eftates and her felf, Tuscany being topfic-turyey, and the Fla-rentines on whom alone the relyed, in distrefs, the determined fince the could not gain Genona her fubject, to recover it her friend, and agreed with Battiftino Fregofo enemyoto the Adarni to give him the little Caftle, and make him Prince of Genong, on condition he would drive out the Adorni, and not favour the rebel Sforzi : Battijtino with the help of the little Caffle, and his faction, becomes mafter of Genous, and according to their cuftom makes himfelf Doge, fo that the Sforzi and Lord Robert chafed out of Genong, cappe with their adherents and followers into Lunigiana; whereupon the King feeing the groubles of Lombardy were composed, took pecalion from these out-casts of Gengng to diffurb Tuscany towards Pifa, that the Elarentinger dividing their Forces might be weakened, to which end they gave order (winter being already past) that the Lord Robert thould with his Forces advance from Lunigiane, and fall into the Territory of Pifa. Babers fellifiercely to work, and many of the Pifas Caffles he took and fack'd, and at length made his incursions as far as the City. Whilest these things were in agitation, there arrived at Florence Ambassadours from 8 C 4 from the Emperour, the King of France, and King of Hungary, all fent from their respective Princes to the Pope, who per-Iwaded the Florentines to fend Ambaffadours to his Holinefs, affuring them of their utmost affistance by a good and sound peace, to put an end to this war : the Florentines refuled not to try the experiment, to render themselves blameless, and make it appear to all men they were lovers of peace, fo the Ambassadours went, but returned without any conclusion, whereupon the Florentimes to honour themselves with the reputation of the King of France's Friend-Thip (whileft one part of Italy injured them and the other forlook them) fent Anibaffadour to that King Donato Acciavolo a man expert in the Greek and Latine Tongues, and whole Ancestors had always held one of the prime degrees in the City, but being upon his journey he dyed at Milan, whereupon his Countrey, to recompence him in them he had left behind him, and to honour this memory, folemnized his Funeral in a most magnificent manner at the publick charges, giving penfions and advancement to his fons, and convenient marriage-portions with his daughters. In his fread was fent Ambaffadour to the King Meffer Gnida Antonio Vespucci a man excellently skillful both in the civil and Canon Law. The Lord Robert's invalion of the Territory of Fifa forely afflicted (as all unexpected accidents do) the Florentines, for being fo fiercely fiercely affaulted on Siena fide, they knew not how to turn themselves for the defence of Pifa; however with good Commanders and neceffary provisions they supplyed that City, and to keep the Lucchess faithful, that they might not furnish the enemy either with men, money or provision, they fent Peter Caponi Ambaffadour thither; who was by that people received with fuch · jealousie, because of the hatred that City - bore the people of Florence, arising from old injuries and continued fears, that he was feveral times in danger of being flain by the rabble; fo that his Embaffy rather begot new regrets, than contributed to any fresh union. And now the Florentines recall'd the Marquis of Ferrara, entertained the -Marquis of Mantona, and with great instance requested from the Venetians Earl Charles fon of Braccio, and Deiphobus the fon of Earl Jacob; which in the end after many trials, the Venetians granted; for having made truce with the Turks, and being left without excufe, they were afhamed to violate the faith of the League, fo. Earl Charles and Deiphobus with a confiderable force of men at Arms being come and joined with as many as they could fecurely draw off from the Army, which under the Marquis of Ferrara opposed the Duke of Calabria; they marched towards Pifa, to find out the Lord Robert, who with his Forces lay near the river of Serchio, and though he made fome appearance as though

28

31

34

Machiavel's History

Book VIII.

defeat to the Romans, the Popes Forces were routed, the news of which victory coming to Florence, gave great reputation the Leaders, and universal joy to the to people, and certainly had redounded both to their honour and advantage in the whole progrefs of the war, had not the diforders which happened in the Camp at Poggibonzi diffurbed the fuccess of it; whereby what was gained by one Army, was more than loft by the other; for they having taken a prey from the Sanefi, there happened in the dividing of it, difference between the two Marquiffes of Ferrara and Mantona; fo that, together by the ears they fell, and the mutiny though at last quieted, was fo great that the Florentines perceiving that they could not employ both of them, confented that the Marquis of Ferrara should return home. That Army thus weakened, and without a head, fell into all manner of diforder; whereupon the Duke of Calabria, who lay encamped with his Army near Siena took a refolution to beat up their Quarters, which was no fooner thought, but done; and the Florentine Force no fooner heard of the enemies approach, but trufting neither to their Arms, nor to their multitude, much fuperiour to their enemies, nor to the fcituation of the place, which art and nature had fortified ; without fo The fhame- much as flaying to fee their enemies, at the ful flight of . first appearance of the dust in the air, shametime Camp. fully fled leaving their Amunition, Carriages and and Artillery a prey to the enemy; fuch reproachful cowardife and diforder was in the Armies of those times, that the turning of one horfe, either to charge or retreat, gave victory or defeat. This rout loaded the Kings Soldiers with plunder, and the Florentines with terrour; for their City was not only afflicted with the war, but miferably diffreffed with the plague, which had in a manner infected the whole City; fo that the Citizens to flee from the contagion, retired to their Country towns: And that which made the defeat more dreadful, was, that those Citizens whose possessions lay in the Vales of Pifa and Delfa, being for fear of the plague gone this ther, were for fear of another death, forced as fuddenly with their goods and children to return to Florence; and every man flood in fear when the enemies would prefent themselves at the City gates. Those to whom the management of the war was committed, seeing these diforders, commanded those who had been victorious in the Country of Perugia, that leaving off their profecution of the war in those parts, they fhould immediately march into the the Vale of Delfa, to oppose the enemy, who fince the late defeats made their inrodes without any controul; and though they had so straitened the City of Perugia, that every hour they expected its furrender, yet the Florentines chose rather to defend their own Towns, than feek to possels them-themselves of others. Thus that Army removed from the place of happy fuccels, was brought to S. Cafciano, a Caltle within eight miles of Florence, it being thought impossible they could in any more distant Post rally the remains of their broken Army. Whilest in the mean time their enemies at Persona Deing left free, and without oppolers made great spoil in the Countrey about Arezzo and Cortona; and the other who under Alfonto Duke of Calabria had overcome at Poggibonzi, first feised on that town, and then on Vice, and facking Cersaldo, after these victories and defolations went and laid fiege to the Caftle of Colle, which in those times was accounted very ftrong, and might if the defenders proved faithful, have kept the enemy at a bay, till the Florentines had reinforced their Army, which they having at length compleated at S. Cafciano, whileft the enemy made many furious affaults against Colle, they refolved to advance towards that place, to give the inhabitants courage to defend themfelves. and by their prefence fomewhat allay the violence of the enemies : accordingly they diflodged from S. Casciano, and encamped at S. Giminiano, within five miles of Colle; whence with light Horse-men, and the nimblest of their Foot they dayly molested the Dukes Camp : but this relief was not fufficient for those of Colle, who wanting all provisions and necessaries, on the thirteenth of November yielded,' to the great displeasure difpleafure of the Florentines, and joy of their enemies; especially the Sanefi who befides their common hate to the City of Florence, bore a private grudge to the inhabitants of Colle. Winter was now far advanced, and the feason improper for war; whereupon the King and Pope either to give some hopes of peace, or to have the liberty to enjoy their victories more quietly, offered the Florentines a truce of three months, and gave hem ten days time to three return their answer, which was presently months, accepted of : but as it happens to all men, that wounds grieve mere when the blood grows cold, than when they were first given, so this short repose made the Florentimes more fentible of the miferies they had endured, and the Citizens freely, and without any respect accused one another, openly declaiming against the miscarriages of the war, the unnecessary and vain expences, and the Taxes unjustly imposed, which things were not only privately whilpered in the corners of the ftreets, but publickly declared in the Councils, where one had the boldness to turn himfelf towards Los The bold tenzo de Medici: and tell him, This City is speech of a weary, and will have no longer war, and Lorenzo therefore your must of neceffity confule of some Mediciway for peace : Whereupon Lorenzo as fen-fible as any other of the necessity, affembled those of his friends, whom he believed most prudent and faithful; and first concluded (feeing the Venetians cold and faithlefs.

Tence for

faithless, and the Duke a child, intangled with civil difcords) that they must with new friends feek new fortunes: then they were very doubtful into whole Arms to caft themselves, the Popes or the Kings; but upon strict examination of particulars, they approved the Kings friendship, as more secure and stable, for the short lives of the Popes, the variety of fuccession, the , little awe or fear the Church flood in of Princes, and its irrefalutions in performance of any undertakings, are reasons why a fecular Prince cannot have any intire confidence in Pope, nor fecurely join fortunes with him, for whoever is the Popes friend in war and danger, shall have his company in victory, but in ruine or distress be left alone; the Pope being defended and fupported by spiritual power and reputation. They therefore resolved it best to gain the Kings friend(hip, which they conceived could not better, nor with more certainty be done, than by Lorenzo's prefence, for the more freedom and confidence they used towards the King, the more eafily should they in his mind cancel former regrets; whereupon Lorenzo having fetled this refolution in his mind, recommends the City and State to Thomas Soderini then Gonfaloniere of Justice, and in the beginning of December departs from Florence, and being arrived at Pifu, writes thence to the Senate, the occasion of this journey; and their Lordships to honour him, and that he might might with the more reputation treat a peace with the King, they made him Ambaffadour for the Florentine people, giving him ample authority to enter into fuch Leagues, as he should judge best for the good of the Republick. During these Transactions, the Lord Robert of San Severino together with Lewis and Ascanius (for their brother Sforza was dead) made a fresh attempt on the State of Milan to re- The Sforzi gain the Government; and having fur- Milan. prifed Tortona and Milan, and the whole Countrey being in Arms, the Dutchess was advifed to reftore the Sforzi, and to remove all cause of civil diffention, to admit them into the Government. The Author of this Counfel was Antonio Taffino of Ferrara, of a very mean descent; who coming to Milan was first entertained by Duke Galeazzo, and afterwards by him appointed Chamberlain to his Dutchefs; where for the beauty of his body, or fome other fecret virtue, he after the Dukes death grew to much in favour with the Dutchefs, that he in' a manner governed the State, which extremely angred Meffer Cecco a man of great prudence and experience, fo that he strove as much as in him lay, both with the Dutchefs and other Ministers of State, to leffen the Authority of Taffino; which he perceiving, in revenge of those injuries, and to have friends at hand that might defend him from Meffer Cecco, he advised the Dutchess to restore the Sforzi; 8 0 who who followed his Counfel without communicating any thing to Meffer Ceeco: whereupon he afterwards told her, You have done an action will deprive you of the Government, and me of my life; which not long after proved true; for Meffer Cecco was by Lewis put to death, and Taffino foon after driven out of the Dutchy, at which the Dutchefs was fo grievously difcontented, that departing from Milan, the renounced the Government of her young fon to his uncle Lewis ; and thus Lewis beina left sole Governour of Milan, became, as thall afterwards be declared, the occafion of the ruine of Italy. Lorenzo was proceeded on his voyage to Naples, and the truce still in force, when beyond all expe-Chation, Lewis Fregolo having intelligence Serezone furprised by with certain Serezonefi, privately conveyed the Generation forme armed men into that town, and furprifed it, taking all the Florentines prifoners. This accident highly displeased the heads of the Florentine State; who imagined all this done by order of King Ferdinand, and they fent meffengers to the Duke of Calabria, who lay with the Army at Siena in earneft manner complaining of their being thus, during the truce, affaulted : the Duke gave them all possible satisfaction both by Letters and Embaffy, that it was done without his or his fathers conferst or privity, which made the Florentines think their condition the worfe, seeing their treafury was empty, the head of their State in the

Book VIII. of Florence,

the Kings hands, an old war with the Pope and King, and a new one with the Genquese, themselves friendless; for in the Venetians they had little hopes, and were fearful of the Governour of Milm, whom they knew various and inconfrant. Lorenzo was by Sca arrived at Noples, where he was not only by the King, but by all Medici hothat City, and with great expectations hose nourably re-ceived by nourably received; for fuch a mighty war the King. being raifed only to oppress him, the greatnefs of his enemies made him be accordingly valued; but when he came into the Kings prefence, and with him began to discourse of the State of Italy, the interests of its feveral Princes and people, and what they might hope from peace, and fear from war, that King having heard him, how fenfibly he debated things, more now admired at the greatness of his mind, the readiness of his understanding, the gravity of his judgment, than he had before wondred how he was able to fultain fo great a war, infomuch that he redoubled the honourable opinion he had of him, and began to contrive how he might gain him as a friend, rather than continue him an enemy. However upon various pretences and occasions he delayed the time from December to March, to make a double experience not of him only, but the City; for Lorenzo wanted no enemies in Florence, who would have been glad if the King had retained him, and ferved him like Facob Piccinnio s 8 D 2 and

and under colour of fear, least any difaster should betide him, they vented their delires and wilhes through the whole City, and in publick debate opposed those that favoured Lorenzo. And by these fly ways they had forcad abroad a fame, that if the King kept him long at Naples, there would be a change of Government in Florence, which made the King fpin out that time, to fee if there would happen any tumult in Florence; but feeing all things quiet, on the fixth of March 1479 he gave him lieve to depart, having first endeavoured to oblige him by all kind of civilities and demonfirations of love; fo that there became contracted between them a perpetual friendship, for the mutual prefervation of the effates: fo that if Lorenzo departed great from Florence, he returned greater thither, being received by the City with all that joy and gladnefs, which his excellent qualities, and new defervings might justly challenge, having expoled his own life, to purchale his cluded with Countreys peace: two days after his atrival, were published the Articles of peace between the King and Common-wealth of Florence, by which they mutually obliged themselves in a league offensive and defenfive; and that as for the towns taken from the Florentines in the late war, they should be left to the Kings difcretion, that the Pazzi should be released out of the Castle of Volterra, and that for a certain time a certain fum of money should be paid to the

Duke

Peace conthe King.

Book VIII. of Florence.

Duke of Calabria. This peace as foon as it was published, fretted both the Pope and the Venetians, for the Pope thought the King shewed him but little respect, and the Venetians thought the like of the Flaremines; for both one and the other being concerned in the war, they believed it civil and just, they should at least have been taken notice of in the peace. And no fooner was their indignation reported and believed in Florence, but all men grew jealous that the making of this peace would produce a greater war; whereupon the Heads of the States thought to limit the Government, and that important affairs thould be managed by leffer numbers: to which end they conflituted a Council of LXX Citizens, to whom they gave ample authority to determine matters of the highest concern. This new Council ftopt the proceedings of shole fought after novelties, and to gain themselves reputation, they in the first management of the peace made by Lorenzo with the King, they defigned likewife Meffor Antonio Ridolfi, and Peter Nafi, Ambaffadors to the Pope. Neverthelels notwithstanding this peace Alphonso, Duke of Calabria departed not with his Army from Siena, pretending he was staid there by the difcords between those Citizens, which were to high that whereas before he was lodged without the City, they called him in, and made him Umpire of their diffesences; which opportunity the Duke lay-8 D 3

43

ing hold off, fined many Citizens in large lums of money, many he imprifoned, others be banished, and some he put to death : by which proceedings he railed a fulpicion, not outy in the Saney, but in the Florentines likewife that he deligned to make himfelf Prince of that City. Nor knew they which way to remedy it', finding their City but raw in the Kings friendship, and at enmity with the Pope and Venetians, which suspicion appeared not only in the generality of the people, (those subtle interpreters of all things) but in the heads of the Florentine State, and every one affirmed that the City was never in more danger of loofing its liberty. But God who in all extremities ever had a particular care of a, fent an unhoped for accident, which employed the thoughts, both of the King, Pope and Venetiums, upon higher concerns than the affairs of Infranty. Mabomet the great Turk had with a mighty Army invaded Rhoder; and for many months clotely belieged that Town, and though his Forces were great, his obfinacy and fury greater ; yet he found the courage of the defendants greater of all, who with to much valour detended themfelves against his numerous affaults, that Me bomer was forced to raile his fiege with difgrace. " Leaving therefore Rhodos, "part of his Armado , under Achomer Buffa, conting towards Velona, whether tempted by the facility of the enterprize, for to command-ed by his Lord, the on a fudden Lands fix

Mabomet repulied at

44

• •

lebowet Baffa lands in Italy.

Digitized by Google

thoù-

thousand men, and storming the City of Otranto, takes and facks it, putting all the inhabitants to the fword. And then in the best manner he could fortifying himself in the City, and haven, and fending for a ftrong party of horfe, makes inroades farher, spoiling and wasting all the adjacent Country. The King having notice of this invalion, and knowing well how great a Prince had undertaken it, difpatches away his Envoys to all places to demand affiftance against the common enemy, and with great instance recalls the Duke of Calabria with his forces from Siena. This affault though it afflicted the Duke and all the reft of Italy, yet gave some comfort to Florence and Siena; these thinking they had regained their liberty, and those to have escaped the dangers, made them fear the lofs of it; which increased the Dukes grief at his departure from Siena, who is faid to have blamed fortune, that by so unexpected and irrational an accident had rob'd him of the Empire of Tuscany. This accident likewife made the Pope change his Counfels. and whereas before he would hearken to no Florentine Ambassador; he was now grown to mild, that he willingly liftned to any thing proposed tending to an univerfal peace. Whereupon the Florentines were advertifed, that whenever they were inclined to ask pardon of the Pope that they might have it granted; and they who thought not fit to let flip the occasion, fent 8 D 4 twelve

al sa seda

Digitized by Google

twelve Ambaffadors to his Holinefs, who after they arrived at Rome, were entertain-ed with several debates and delays before they could get audience. At last all things were concluded between all parties, how they were to govern themselves for the future, and how much in peace and war Then were the they were to contribute. Ambaffadors admitted to kifs the Popes feet, who attended them, feated in the midst of his Cardinals in great pomp and state. " They excused themselves for what " was paft, fometimes laying the blame up-"on neceffity, and the malignity of others, "fometimes upon the peoples fury, and " their just anger, lamenting their conditi-" on, as men constrain'd to fight or dye: " for that they had undergone the war, the "excommunication, and all those incon-" veniencies that attended them only to pre-"ferve? their City from flavery, which is a "civil death. Notwithstanding (though " they had only done what they were forced " to) yet if they had committed any fault, " they were ready to make amends, throwing "themfelves upon his mercy and clemency, "hoping, after the Example of the great "Redeemer, he would be ready to receive "them into the arms of his compation. To all which submission the Pope in terms full of pride and indignation returned anſwer. "Reproaching them with all they " had in times past done against the Church, "however in observance to Gods com-. 1. 1. '' inands,

The Florentime Ambalfadors admitted Audience by the Pope.

The Popes anlwer to Ambaffadors

" mands, he was content to grant them that "pardon they defired, but they were to "understand then, they ought likewife to " obey; and when ever they forfeited that " obedience, that liberty they had fo lately "hazarded, should then be quite taken a-"way, and that justly; for they only de-" ferve to be free that are good, not they " who employ themfelves in wicked ex-"ercifes; liberty abused, being destructive " to it felf and others, and to have a light "efteem of God, and a lefs of his Church, " was not the part of a Free-man, but of " a diffolute perfon whofe inclination was " bent rather to milchief than goodnels, "whom it is not only a Princes duty to correct, but every Christians; wherefore ¹⁶ for what was past they must blame them. " " who by ill actions gave being to the War, "and by worfe nourished it, and if they "were now freed from it, it was more by "the goodnefs of others, than their de-"fert. Then the Articles of peace, and the benediction was read, to which the Pope added beyond what had been agreed on and figned, that if the Florentines would enjoy the fruit of that benediction, they must maintain fifteen armed Gallies at their proper expence while the Turks made War in the Kingdom. The Ambassadors made heavy complaints against so great a burthen impoled beyond the agreement, but by no favour to others, or address made by themfelves, could they get any alleviation of it, it, but to ratific this peace, the Senate Senate Ambastador Meffer Guide Antonio Vespueci, fometimes before returned from Frame; who by his prudent management brought things to terms more supportable, and obtained many favours of the Pope, as a teflimony of his full reconciliation. The Florentines having thus fetled their affairs with the Pope, and Siena remaining free, and they out of fear of the King by the withdrawing of the Duke of Calabria's Army out of Trefcany to purfue the war against the Turks, they prefied the King very hard to reftore those Caftles of theirs, which the Duke of Calabria at his departure had left in the hands of the Sameli, which the King confented to out of fear, left otherwife the Florentines (hould in this necessity defert him, or effeby commencing a new War with the Sanefi hinder him from those aids which he hoped to have from the Pope and other Princes of Italy; and to by a freth obligation he engaged, the Florentines to him whereby it appears, that necetlity and neither Articles nor Oaths make Princes honest. These Castles reftored, and this new confederacy ratified Lorenzo de Medici regained all that reputation, which both during the war, and by the peace (whilk It hung doubeful) he had fike to have loft ; for in those simes some men Auck not to foundable him publickly, by faying that to fave himfelf he had fould his Country, and that in the War they had loft their Twons,

A7

Digitized by Google

48

Towns, and by the peace should loofe their liberty; but those Towns restored, an honourable peace confirmed with the King, and the City returned to its former fplendor now throuhout all Florence (a tattling City, and apt to cenfure things by their fuccefs, and not by their Counfel) the ftory was quite changed, for now Lorenzo was exalted to the skies, and all the discourse was, how that by his prudence he had regained what the ill fortune of War had made them lofe; and that his counfel and judgement was more prevalent than the power and arms of the Enemy. The mvalion of the Turks had deferr'd that war, which the Pope and Venetians anger was yet to bring forth , but as the beginning of that affault was unhoped for, and the caufe of much good, to the end was unlooked for, and the occasion of much milchief, for Mahomet the great Turk, when it was least expected dying, and difcord happening between his Children, those Turks in Puglia Steing themfelves abandoned by their Lord upon Articles furrendred Otranto to the Otrano fur-King. So the fear being removed, which rendred by kept the Pope and Venetions minds fixed, the Turks, every man wasapprehentive of new irruptions. On one fide were in League the Bope and Kenetians, and joyned with them inter the Genonefe, of quest, and other lefter Pringes; On the other fide were the Flomutiner King and Dulse to whom adhered the Bolonefs, and many other, Lords. The Venetians

Provisions for War in Italy by the Venetians had a great defire to become Lords of Ferrara, and they though they had a reasonable pretence to attempt it, and certain hope to accomplish it i Théoc-casion they took was because the Marquin affirmed he was no longer obliged to reridomine, ceive the Vildomine * and their falt, for that or the Des the contract was, that after feventy years that Repub- the City should be released of both those burthens; to which the Venetians made anfwer, That as long as he held the Polejine, fo long he was to receive the Vildomine and the Salt's to which the Marquis refufing to yield, the Venetians thought they had just cause of a war, and a fit season to begin it in, seeing the Pope incensed against the King and Florentines, whom to ingratiate themfelves the more with, Count Girolamo at his being at Venice, was by them very honourably received, and made a Gentle-man of their City, which is accounted a great honour where ever they beftow it. In order to preparing for this war, they had imposed a new subsidy, and chosen the Lord Robert of San Severino their General, who offended with Lemis Governeur of Milan had fled to Iortona, and thence (having first railed former Famults) protro Lesgues. ceeded to Genous, where now reliding be was invited by the Venetians to accept of the command of their Armies. Thelepreparations ito new combustions being obferved by the adverte League, made them also provide for War, and the Duke of Milan

X.

Ť

マコム

'n

Ľ.

٢

ż

ÿ

÷Į

2

一世の日 ß

ż

ŗ

,

ר ז Milan chose Frederick Earl of Urbin for his General. and the Florentines Comfance Lord of Pefaro for theirs. And to found the Popes inclination, and fatisfie themfelves whether the Venetians made war upon Ferrara by his confent, King Ferdinand fent Alphonfo Duke of Calabria to the Tronto, to demand the Popes lieve to pass into Lom-bardy to aid the Marquis, which was by the Pope utterly denyed. Whereby the King and the Florentines understanding his mind, resolved to straiten him with their Forces, and conftrain him to become their friend ; or at least prevent him from giving the Venetians any affistance; for these were already in the field, and had begun the war with the Marquis, having first wasted the Country, and then laid fiege to Figarola, a Castle of great importance. The King and the Florentines having thus refolved upon a war with the Pope, Alphonso Duke of Calabria made incurtions towards Rome, and by the affiftance of the Colonnefi (who were joyned with him as the Orfini were with the Pope) made great spoil in the Country. And on the other fide the Florentines with Nicholas Vitelli affaulted the City of Castello; driving thence Messer Lorenzo, who held it for the Pope, and making Nicholas Prince of it, the Pope, though in these great perplexities: The City of Rome in diforder within, and the Country wasted without ; yet like a stout man, who would overcome and not yield te to his enerities, entertained the Magnificent Robert of Rimini for his General, and he being come to Rome, where all the Church forces were drawn together : the Pope declared to him how much it would redound to his Honour, if by oppoling the Kings Forces he could deliver the Church from the troubles it was involved in, which would be an obligation, not only binding to him, but to all his fucceffors; nay, not only to men, but to God himfelf: The Magnificent Robert of Rimini having first taken a view of all the Popes men at Arms. and other warlike furniture, advited him to raife as many Foot as he could, which with all speed and diligence was put in execution. The Duke of Colabria lay then for near Rome that every day he made incuffions to the very Gates of the City, which to insenfed the Roman people, that they willing-Woffered themselves to serve under Robert for the delivery of the City, and were all by him received with thanks and praife. The Duke hearing of these great preparations, drew a little farther off, thinking the Lord of Rimini would not venture too far so find him out, and befides he expected his Brother Frederick with new recruits from his Father. Robert feeing his men at Arms near equalled the Dukes, and that in foot he swas much superiour, marches upon a sudden out of Rome, and pitches his Camp within two miles of the Enemy; the Duke. ficing she enemy on the back of him to con-contrary to his expectation, found there was no other way now but to fight or flee. And that he might not do any thing unworthy the fon of a King, refolving to fight, he faces the enemy; and both Ar. The Kinga mies being put into fuch order, as in those frated by the times was usual, advanced to the Battail, Poper. which lasted from morning till noon. This day there was more valour flowed than had been in any encounter for fifty years paft in Italy, for on both fides, there was above a thousand men flain, and the iffue was glorious for the Church, for the multitudes of the Popes foot did fo gall the Dukes horfe, that they were forced to give ground, and the Duke himfelf had been taken prifoner. had he not been faved by those Turks, who being left at Otranto ferved now under him. The Magnificent Robert having Death of gained this Victory, returned in triumoph Robert deRi-mini the to Rome, but he enjoyed it but a thost time, Popes Genefor having in the heat of the Batrail drunk ral. too much water, it put him into a flux. of which in fews days he dyed, whole body was by the Pope interred with all extraordinary circumstances of honour. The Pope having obtained this Victory, Immediately difpatches away the Earl towards the City of Caffello, to endeavour the reflauration of that City to Lovenzo, and pastly indeed to try the City of Riminis for Robert his late General having left behind him only a young Infant under the tuition of his Mother; the Pope thought it an cafie cafie matter to fnatch his inheritance from him, which he had certainly done, had not the Florentines defended the Lady, and in fuch manner opposed his forces, that he could do no good, neither against Rimini, Whilft these troubles were nor Caftello. at Rome, and in Romagnia, the Venetians having taken Figorola, and with their forces paffed the Po; and the Duke of Milan, and the Marquis his Camp were both in diforder : For Frederick Lord of Urbin falling fick, cauled himself to be carryed to Bolomis, where he dyed : So that the Marquis his affairs every day declined, and the Venetians hourly encreased their hopes of gaining Ferrara. On the other fide, the King and Florentines used all their endeavours to gain the Pope to their will, and fince they could not do it by force, they threatned him with a general Council, which the Emperour had declared should be held at Basil. Whereupon by mediation of the Emperours Ambaffadors, and interceffion of the principal Cardinals who defired peace, the Pope was partly forced, and partly perfwaded to confider of peace, and the union of Italy: So that both for fear and out of confideration, that the greatness of the Kemetians was the ruine of the Church and of Italy, he confented to agree with the League and fent his Ambaffadors to Naples, where a League for five years was concluded between the King, Pope, Duke of Milan, and Florentines, referving a place for the Death of Frederick Lord of Vrbin.

The Pope joyns with the League.

Book VIII. of Florence.

55

Digitized by Google

the Venetians, if they pleased to accept it; which perfected, the Pope fignified to the z 1 Venetians that they should defist from the War with Ferrara. To which the Venetians refused to confent, but with greater forces prepared for the War; and having defeated the Dukes and Marquis his forces 7 at Argenta, were approached to near Ferrara, that they had pitcht their Camp in the Marquis his Park. Whereupon the League thought it not convenient any lonţ. ger to delay giving more powerful affiftance to that Lord, and to that end caufed 3 the Duke of Calabria with his and the Popes forces to march towards Ferrara, the 1 Florentines fent their Troops likewife; and the better to dispense Orders of War, the f League held a Council at Cremona, where affembled the Popes Legate, the Earl Girolamo, the Duke of Calabria, the Lord Lewis of Milan, and Lorenzo de Medici, with many other Italian Princes, where 8 they fettled the measures, and deviled the Order of the future War. And because they were of opinion that Ferrara could not be better relieved, than by making a gallant diversion, they would have the Lord Lewis declare war against the Venetians in behalf of the Estates of the Duke of Milan, But that Lord would not give his confent, fearing to bring a war upon his own head, he could not, when he pleased, get tid off; whereupon they refolved to advance with their whole Army to Ferrara; and drawing 8 E together together four thousand menat arms, and eight thousand foot, they went to seek the Venetians, who had two thousand and two hundred men at arms, and fix thousand The League thought it convenient foot. in the first place to affail the Fleet, which the Venetians had on the Po, which they did, giving the affault at Bondeno, to the destruction of two hundred Veffels, where Meffer Antonio Justianiano, Providitor General was taken prisoner. The Venetians feeing all Italy combined to ruine them, to add to their reputation, entertained the Duke of the Rhene, with two hundred men at arms into their fervice; whom (now their Fleet was destroyed) they sent with part of their Army to keep the enemy at a Bay, caufing the Lord Robert of San Severimo to pass the Adda, with the remainder of the Army, and marching up to the Walls of Milan, proclaim the Duke and the Lady Bona his Mother : for they thought by this way to work fome change in Milan, thinking the Lord Lewis and his Government were hated by the Millanefi. This allarm occasioned at first some disorder, and made the City arm. But in the conclusion, produced an effect quite contrary to the Venetian defign ; for what the Lord Lewis would not before agree to, this affront makes him eager to perform: and therefore leaving the Marquis of Ferrara to defend himfelf with four thousand horse and two thousand foot; the Duke of Calabria with twelve thousand horfe.

Digitized by Google

56

horfe, and five thousand foot entred Bergamasco, and thence passed into the Country of Brefeia, and fo to Verona, spoiling, ruining and deftroying the whole Country adjacent to those three Cities, in the fpite of the Vemetians, who could no way help it; for the Lord Robert with all his forces could hardly fave the Cities themfelves. On the other fide, the Marquis of Ferrara had recovered many places, formerly his, for the Duke of the Rhene, who was left to attend him, durft not oppole him, having but two thousand horse, and a thousand foot : and thus all that Summer of the year 1483, the affairs of the league prospered. In the following Spring (for the Winter was paft without any action) both Armies drew into the Field, and the League that they might the better oppress the Venetians, had drawn all their Army together, and might (eafily had the war been maintained as it was the year before) have driven the Venetians quite out of Lombardy; for they were reduced to fix thousand horse, and five thousand foot. (the Duke of Rhene his year expired being gone home) and the enemy had thirteen thousand horfe, and fix thousand foor : but as it often happens, where there are many Rivals in Authority, their piques and jealoufies give vi-Ctory to the enemy; fo Frederick Gonzaga, Marquis of Mantona being dead, (who with his Authority kept the Duke of Calabria, and the Lord Lewis united) there hap-9E 2

Digitized by Google

. ۲

happened several differences between them.

Lewis Sforza concludes a private prace with the Venetiwhich created jealoufies and fulpicions; for Jobs Galeazzo Duke of Milan being now at age to govern, and having married the · Daughter of the Duke of Calabria, defired that his father in Law, rather than Lenvis might manage affairs of State. And Lenvis, sensible of this his defire, refolved to deprive him of the power of executing it. This heart-burning of Lewis's was known to the Venetians, who laid hold on the opportunity, judging they might, as always they had done, gain more by peace, than they had loft by war : and privately treating with the Lord Lepis, came to an agreement August 1484. Which when the other confederates knew, they were much difpleafed; especially when they perceived the Venetians were to have all the towns taken from them reftored, and still possess Rovigo and Poli-Jene, which they had taken from the Marquis of Ferrara; and befides, enjoy all those preheminencies they formerly did ower that City; for every one was now fennole they had begun a war with vaft expence, and in the profecution of it had gained honour, but in the end shame; fince they were to reftore the towns taken, and had not recovered those lost; but the Colleagues were constrained to accept it, both because they were weary of the expence, and becaufe they would no farther try their fortune with deceitful and ambitious incn. Whileft affairs were in this polture

58

'n

5

5 - C

ŝ

,

ž

ż

3

É

0

ş

pofture in Lombardy, the Pope by his Forces commanded by Meffer Lorenzo, befieged the City of Caffello, to drive thence Nicholas Vitelli, whom the League to bring the, Pope to a compliance had deferted; whilft he lay before the town, the Garrison which kept it for Nicholss, made a fally and quite routed the enemy; whereupon the Pope recalled Earl Girolamo from Lembardy to Rome, to recruit his Forces, and renew the fiege; but upon maturer deliberation thinking it better to gain Mr. Nicholas by peace, than again provoke him by war, he made the best agreement he could for himself, and reconciliation between Nichelas and his adyerfary Lorenzo, to which fear of new tumults, and not love of peace disposed him; for he faw ill humonrs growing to a head. between the Colonness and Orfini. The King of Naples had taken from the Orfini in the war between him and the Pope the County of Tagliacazzo, and given it to the Colonnesi who adhered to him: afterwards peace being made between the Pope and King, the Örfini by virtue of the Articles demanded it; the Pope often fignified to the Colonnefi, that they should reftore it, but they would not condescend to a reftoration, either at the Orfini's demand, or the Popes threatning, but invaded the Orfini afresh with depredations, and other like injuries; which the Pope no longer able to fuffer, railed all his Forces, and joined them with the Orfini to reduce them, and those houses thev

8E 3

ny

Digitized by Google

they had in Rome Cack'd, killing or taking those that frove to defend them, and feizing not of their Towns and Caffles ; fo that on one fide these tumults ended not by defire of peace but by reason of their being too heaviby oppressed and afflicted. Things were not yet quiet in Genous and Tufcany, for the Florentines kept the Earl Antonio de Marciano, with his Forces on the Frontiers of Sevezana ; and whilft the war was in Lombardy. with incursions and other light skirmishes molefted the Serezanefi; and in Genona Battitino Fregolo Doge of that City, trufting in Paul Fregefo Archbishop, was with his wife and family taken by him, who made himfelf Prince; likewife the Venetians invaded the Kingdom by Sea, took Galipeli, and infested the adjacent Country; but peace made in Lowbardy, all war ceased, fave the tumults in Tufcany and Rome; for five days after the peace made, the Pope dyed, whether his natural term of life were expired, or whether grief for the peace, to which he was a profest enemy, broke his However that Pope left Italy in heart. peace, which all his life time he had kept in war. No fooner was he dead, but all Rome was in arms, the Earl Girolamo retired with his men into the Caftle, and the Orfini were fearful least the Colonness should revenge their late injuries ; the Colonnefi demanded reflicution of their Houles and Caffles; whereupon in few days fucceeded Slaughter, Robberies and Burnings in many places of the City; but the Cardinals having perfwaded the Earl to reftore the Caftle into the hands of the Conclave, and to retire into his own effates, and remove his Forces from Rome, he, to gratifie the Pope that should next succeed, obeyed, and furrendring the Caffle to the Conclave, went Dimola; whereby the Cardinals delivered from this fear, and the Barons from the hopes they had of his affiftance in their differences, they proceeded to the election of a new Pope, and after much dispute chofe John Battifta Cibo Cardinal of Malfetta a Genoueje, who called himself Inno- Pope Inno. cent the Eighth, who by fair and gentle cent the means (for he was a kind and quiet man) made all parties lay down Arms, and for a while pacified Rome. The Florentines after the peace of Lombardy could not be quiet, effeeming it a bale and shameful thing that a private Gentleman should take from them the Caftle of Serezana; and becaufe by the Articles of peace, they were not only to demand things loft, but by force confirain those impeded or denyed their restoration, they prefently leavied men and money to regain that Castle; whereupon Angustine Fregofo, supposing with his private power he should not be able to defend it, gave that town to S. George: but because S. George of Genous has often been mentioned, The original I think it not amifs to thew the orders and of S. G orge of jenous. rules of that City, being one of the principal of Italy. When the Genouefi had made 8E4 peace

The Archbilhop of Genors makes himfelf Prince.

The Pepe dy cs.

Eighth.

Digitized by Google

61

peace with the Venetians after that important war, which long fince happened between them, the City not able to fatisfie those vast fums of money they had borrowed from feyeral Citizens, configned to them the receits of the Customs, that according to their feveral fums lent, they might divide that Revenue amongs them, till they were fully fatisfied, and that they might meet together, they affigned them the Palace over the Custom-house. These Creditors settled a rule and order among themselves, making a Council of a hundred of them, who were to debate all publick matters, and a Magistracy of eight, who as heads were to execute ; and their Credits they divided into parts, which they called Luogbi or thates, and their whole body they entituled S. George. Their Government thus ordered, it happened that the City in general again flood in need; whereupon they had recourse to S. George, which being rich, and their flock well mamanaged could supply them, and the Commonalty as they had at first granted the Cuftom, began now in pawn of the money to grant their lands; and fo far proceeded it by reason of the common necessities, and the fupplies of S.George, that that order had most of the Towns and Lands formerly subject to the Genouese fubmitted to them, and they governed and defended them; and every year by publick vote fent their Retiors, and the Commonalty of the City waś

Ľ

j

į

1

5

1.1.1.1.1.1

i

1.00

was no way concerned. Whence it comes that those Citizens have taken away their love to the rules of the Commonalty as a thing usurped, and tyrannized, and placed it on S. George, as a rule well and equally administred; whence arrives the frequent and easie change of Government, and that fometimes they obey a Citizen, fometimes a stranger; for not S. Georges but the Commonalty changes Government : wherefore when the Fregoli and Adorni contended for the principality, because they fought for the Government in common, the greatest part of the City stood neutral, & left it a prev to the Conquerour: all the office of S.George does, is, when any one has gained the Government, to make him fwear observation of their Laws, which from the first institution till now, were never altered; for having the Arms, Money and Government in their possession, they cannot without certain danger of a Rebellion be altered; an example indeed rare, and which Philosophers with all their imaginations and chimera's of Common-wealths never found out to hold within the fame circle, and among the fame number of Citizens, Liberty and Tyranny, civil Order and Cor-ruption, Justice and Licentiousness; for that order alone maintains the City in its ancient and venerable cuftoms. And if it happens, as in time certainly it will, that S. George is poffeffed of the whole City, that Republick will be more memorable than the War between Flarence and Genues.

the Venetian. To this order of S. George. Augustine Fregolo gave the City of Serezana, who willingly received it, and undertaking its defence, prefently fitted out a Fleet to Sea, and fent a Garrison to Pietra Sancia, to hinder any paffage to the Florentine Camp, which already lay near Serezana : the Florentines on the other fide were defirous to have Pietra Sancta; for whilft that Town was out of their pofferfion, the gaining of Serezane would not be fo advantagious, Pietra Santia being placed between that and Pifa, but they could not reasonbly lay fiege to it, unless first they were by those of Pietra Santia impeached in the reducing Serezana: and that this might happen, they fent from Pifa to the Camp great stores of Provision and Ammunition with a very weak convoy, that the greatness of the prey, and slenderness of the Guard, might make those of Pietra Sancia less fearful to feile it; the plot succeeded to their with, for those in Pietra Sancia feeing before their eyes to great a prize, took it, and gave the Florentines the occasion they defired to affault them; wherefore leaving Serezana they belieged Pietra Sancia which was well manned and bravely defended : the Florentines having their Artillery at first on the plain, railed after a Bulwark on the hill, hoping from thence to batter them; James Guiccardine was now Commiffary of the Army, and whilft he befieged Pierra Sancia, the Genouese Fleet took and burnt the PierreSanës beficged.

ţ

the Fortress of Vada, and landing fome of their men, robbed and spoiled the Country ; against whom with a party of Horse and Foot Meffer Buongianni Gianfigliazzi was sent, who in part checked their pride, that they could not fo freely forrage. But the Genouefe Navy continuing to moleft the Florentines went to Legborne, and with great broad bridges and other Engines approached the new Tower, which for many days they battered with their Artillery, but feeing they could do no good, went away with fhame. In the mean time they purfued the fiege at Pietra Santia fo coldly, that the belieged taking heart, stormed their Bulwark, and took it, fo much to their own reputation, and terror of the Florentine Army, that they were ready to disband of themfelves; infomuch that being drawn four miles off from the Town, the chief Commanders seeing it was already October, thought it best to draw the Army into winter Quarters, and defer the fiege till Spring. When this diforder was heard at Florence, the heads of the State were filled with indignation & prefently(to reftore the Camp to its credit and power,) chole for new Commiffaries Antonio Pucci and Bernardo del Nero, who with a great fum of money went to the Camp, and to the Captains the anger declared of the whole Senate, the Magistrates and City, and how much more they would be incenfed, if they returned not to the 65

the walls of the Town, and what an infamy it would be to them, that so many Captains, and fo great an Army having no more but a small Garrison to withstand them, could not take to poor and pitiful a town; they fet forth likewife the prefent advantage, and what in the future they might hope from the taking of it : with these persivations they heartned them to return to the walls, and first of all resolved to form the Bulwark. In the gaining of which, it was observable how much courtefie, affability, kind and obliging words will work upon Soldiers, for Antonio Pucci by encouraging one, promifing another, and embracing a third, made them with fuch fury ftorm the Bulwark, that in a moment they took it; yet was it not got without lofs, for Count Antonio Marciano was flain with a piece of Artillery. However this victory struck such a terror into those of the town, that they began to treat Pierra Santta of a furrender; whereupon, that the matter might be concluded with more reputation. Lorenzo de Medici came to the Camp, not many days after whose arrival, the Castle was gained. 'Twas now Winter, and therefore the Commanders of the Army thought not fit to proceed farther, but retire to Quarters till Spring, especially fince that Autumns unwholfome air had much wasted the Army, many of the Captains being grievoully fick, among whom Antonio Pucci and Bongianni taken.

Digitized by Google

Buongianni Gianfigliazzi not only fickened, but dyed, to the great grief of all men; fo much love had Antonio Pucci gained by his carriage at Pietra Sancia. The Lucchefi, now the Florentines had taken Pietra Santa, fent their Ambaffadours to Florence, to demand it as a Town formerly belonging to their State; for they alleadged by the Articles of the late peace, they were obliged to reftore to their first Lord all those Towns were recovered of another.. The Florentines did not deny the Article, but answered that in the treaty of peace be-tween them and the Genouese, they did not know, but they must be bound to restore it to them, and therefore, till then could determine nothing, and if they were to re-ftore it, yet the Lucchefi would do well to confider how to fatisfie the charge they had been at, and the damage they had fustained. by the death of fo many of their Citizens; and when that was done they might be in fome hopes of the Town. All this Winter was spent in a treaty of peace between the Florentines and Genouefi, which the Pope had fet on foot, but nothing being concluded, the Florentines had in the Spring befieged Serezana, had not the fickness of Lorenzo de Medici, and the war between the Pope and King Ferdinand hindred them: for not only the Gout which he had hereditary from his father afflicted. Lorenzo; but he was tormented with violent pains in the ftomach, fo that he was forced forced to go to the waters for a cure. But the most important hindrance was the war, of which this was the original caule. The City of Aquile was in such a degree fubject to the King of Naples, that they in a manner lived free; the Earl of Monsoria was in great reputation there. The Duke of Calabria being with his men at Arms near the Tromo, under pretence of quieting fome tumults, raifed among the Country-people, and defigning to reduce Aquilat under the Kings absolute obedience, sent for the Earl of Montorio, as though he would employ him about what he had then in hand. The Earl without any fuspicion obcycd and came, and was immediately by the Duke made prifoner, and Tent to Naples. This was no fooner heard at Aquida, but the whole City was incenfed at it, and tumultuously slew Antonio Concincle the King's Commiffary, and with him feveral other Citizens, known favourers of the Kings; and that the Aquilani might have a defender in their Rebellion, they fet up the banners of the Church, and fent Ambastadours to the Pope, to give him their City and themfelves, entreating him as his own to defend them against the Kings tyranny. The Pope gladly and refolutely undertook their defence, for both upon publick and private accounts he hated the King: and Lord Robers of San Severino energy to the State of Milan being out of pay, he choft him his General, and fent

for

1 ŝ

ĩ

Ş

şı

ß ţ

ſ

Ŕ

3

5

É

ź

ł

Ņ

Ŀ

ı

đ

ß

4

for him in all hafte to Rome, and befides follicited all Count Montorio's friends and relations to rebel against the King, fo that the Princes of Altemura Salerno and Bifguano took Arms. The King feeing himfelf affaulted with fo sudden a war, fends for aid to the Duke and Florentines : the Florentines flood in doubt what to do, for they thought it hard to leave off their own affairs to follow others, and again to take up Arms against the Church, they thought dangerous, yet being in a League they valued their word and faith above interest or danger, and therefore entertained the Orfini in their pay, and befides fent the Earl of Pitigliana with all their Forces towards Rome to affift the King: wherefore the King railed two Armies, one under the Duke of Calabria, which he fent towards Rome, who joining with the Florentine Forces were to oppose the Church, and with the other under his Command, he marched towards his Barons; in both places the accidents of war were various, but in the conclusion the King remaining victor in all parts; in August 1486 by mediation of the Ambassadours of Spain, a peace was concluded; to which the Pope (who would no longer encounter his adverse fortune) confented : by this peace all the potentates of Italy were united, except the Genouese who were left out as Rebels against the State of Milan, and usurpers of the Florentine towns. The Lord Robert of San Severina rim, when this peace was concluded (having been, during the War, a faithles friend to the Pope, and to the others no formidable enemy) driven away by the Pope, march-ing from Rome, and being purfued by the Dukes and Florentine Forces, feeing himself, as he was passed Cesena, overtaken, fled, and with fewer than one hundred horfe recovered Bolonia, and of his other forces part were received by the Duke, and the remainder routed and plundered by the Country. The King having concluded the peace, and reconciled himfelf with the Barons, put to death John Coppola, and An-tonella of Anversa with his sons, for having, during the war, kept intelligence with the Pope. The Pope by this war had learned how punctual and diligent the Florentines were in observing their word, and preferving their friendship; infomuch, that whereas before he hated them, he now began to love them; and to confer greater favours on them, and more kindly treat their Ambaffadors then usually he had done, which inclination once known to Lorenzo Medici, was by all polfible induftry encouraged, for he thought it would be much for his reputation, if to the Kings friendship he could add that of the Pope. The Pope had one fon called Francis, and being defirous to honour him with Eftates and Friends, that he might after his death' maintain himfelf, he could not pitch upon any in Italy, with whom he might more fafely fafely make an alliance than Lorenzo de Medici, wherefore he contrived that Lorenzo gave him one of his daughters to wife. The Pope was defirous that the Genonefe should peaceably furrender Serezana to the Florentines, telling them they could pretend no tight to keep it by Augustine's fale, nor could Augustine give St. George what was none of his own: but however he could do no good of it; for the Genonese, (whilft these things were in treaty in Rome) armed many of their Veffels; and whilft at Florence they thought nothing of it, fet a fhore three thoufand foot, and affaulted the Caftle of Serazenella, feated above Serezana, & in the Florentines poffeifion, and took and plundered and burnt the Borrough adjoyning, and af-terwards planting their Artillery against the Castle, battered it with great fury. This attempt was strange and unlookt for by the Florentines, whereupon they prefently rallird their Forces under Virginio Orfint at Pifa, and made their complaints to the Pope, that during the treaty of peace, the Genouele Had acted these Hoftilities. Then they fent Peter Corfini to Lucca to keep that City faithful, and Paul Antonio Soderini they fent to to Venice, to found the minds of that Republick; they likewile required, aid from the King and Lord Lewis, but had none from either: For the King exculed himfelf. that he flood in fear of the Turks Fleet, and Lewis with tricks and cavils delayed them. Thus the Florentines were for the molt 8 F most part left alone in all their wars, not finding others to ready to affift them, as they were to give aid to their Friends. Nor were they now (for 'twas no new thing) difmayed, because their friends failed them: but raising agreat army under Jomes Guiccardine, and Peter Vetteri fent them against the enemy, who encamped upon the River Magra. Mean while the Genouefe fireightly belieged Serasenello, and by undermining, and all other ways endeavoured to gain it, wherefore the Commission reloving to relieve it, the enemies refused not the Battail, but in the ingagement the Genonese were routed, and Lodevick of Fresco. & many other Commanders taken prisoners : yet this Victory did not fo territie the Serezanefi, that they would yield but obstinately prepared for their defence and the Comissiances to offend, so that it was bravely affaulted and defended: but the fiege continuing long, Lorenzo de Medici resolved to go to the Camp, where his arrival fo encouraged our Soldiers, & diffeartned the Se racenefi, that feeing the refolution of the Flreatines in affailing them, and the coldness of the Genome (e to relieve them they freely without any conditions furrendred themfelves to Lorenzo, and were by the Florentines, except fome few heads of the rebellion, kindly recei-And Genous ved and treated. During this fiege the Lord - reduced un- Lewis had fent formerforces to Poniremoli to make flow of affifting us; but having private intelligence in Genous, he caufed an infurrection to be made against the government, and Seven.

69

ł,

71

der the Duke.

of Florence.

Book VIII.

and by the help of his party, reduced it under the Dutchy of Milan. In these times there happen'd war between the Germans and Venetiane, and in Le Marca Boccalino of Olimo had made that Town tebel against the Pope, and usurped the tyranny; but after many accidents he was content by the perswassion of Lorenzo de Medici, to reftore that Town to the Pope, and coming to Flot remos under Lorenzo's protection lived a long time honourably, but afterwards going to Milan, found not the fame faith, for he was by Lord Lewis put to death. The Venetions were by the Germans defeated near the City of Trent, and the Lord Robert of San Severino their General flain, After many loffes the Venetians with their usual fortune made a peace with the Germans not as people overcome, but as if they had been conquerours, so honourable was it on their fide. About these times likewife happened two confiderable Tumults in Romania. Francis d' Orfo was a man of great authority in the City of Furli, of whom Count Girolamo growing jealous, had often threatned him. Whereupon Francis living in great fear, was adviled by his friends and relations to provide for his own fafety, and fince he was threatned, to kill first, and by the death of the Earl free himfelf from dan- . ger. Having confulted hereupon, and firmly refolved it, he made choice of his time on a market-day at Furli, for on that day many other of their friends coming thither

8F 2

Digitized by Google

73 ne (lain.

ther out of the Country, they thought they might without a fummons have them to ferve their occasions. It was in the month of May, and it being the Italian usual custom to sup by day-light; the Confpirators thought it the best time to kill him after fupper, at which time, while his Family were at supper, he was often in a chamber alone : having agreed on this, Francis went at the appointed time, and leaving his Companions in the outward rooms went to the Earls Chamber, and bid on of the attendants tell him he was there w fpeak with him. Francis was admitted and after some feigned discourse suddenly flew him, and calling in his companion Earl Girolakilled likewife the Groom of his Chamber The Governour of the Town coming by chance to speak with the Earl, was by the Murderers with his few followers in the Hall flain. These Murders committed, the Earls body was thrown out of the window. and Proclamation made The Church and liberty; and all the people gathered to arms (for they hated the Earls avarice and cruelty) and fackt his house, and made prisoners the Counters Catherine, and her Children: there remained only the taking of the Castle to perfect their defign, which · the Governour refufing to yield, they dealt with the Countels to difpose him to it, which the promifed to do, if they would let her go in , leaving her Children in Hoftage: The Confpirators believed her, and let her g0

Book VIII. of Florence.

go in; but instead of delivering it, the then threatned them with death, and all manner of torments in revenge of her husband; and they threatning to kill her children : the told them she had the mold about her to make more in. Whereat the Confpirators daunted, feeing the Pope owned them not, and heard the Lord Lewis, Uncle to the Countels, was fending forces to her relief, taking with them all the riches they could carry, they fled to the City of Caftello. whereupon the Counters recovering the State, with all imaginable cruelty revenged her husbands death. The Florentines hearing of the Earls death, took the opportunity to recover the Castle of Piancaldoli, which the Earl had formerly took from them; but now fending their forces (with the death of Ciecco, the famous Architect,) they recovered it : Besides this, there happened another Tumult in Romania of no lefs importance. Galeotto, Lord of Faenza had married the Daughter of John Bentivogli, Prince of Bolonia, the either out of jealoufie, or because she was ill used by her husband, hated him to that degree, that the refolved to take from him both effate and life, and counterfeiting a ficknefs, the refolved that Galeatto, coming to visit her, fhould be murdered by fome of her confedérates hid in the Chamber. She had communicated this defign to her Father, who was in hopes after death of his fon-inlaw to become Lord of Faenza. The time 8F 2 ap75

Galertto Lord of Faenza nurdered.

appointed for this murder being come, Geleette went into his wives Chamber according to his usual custom, and beginning to talk with her, the murderers came fuddenly out of their holes, and before he could make any defence flew him. After his death the Tumult was great, the Lady with her young fun, called Aftere, fled to the Caftle; the people took arms, and Meffer John Ben-trooglio, with one Bergamino, an Officer of the Duke of Milans, having before prepared a party, chired into Facence, when was likewife Antonio Boscoli, the Florentin Commission: All these principal men be. ing affembled together, difcouring about the Government of the Town, the Inhe bitants of the Vale of Lamous, who upon the uproar were tumultuoufly run thithe, falling upon Meffer Jobs and Bergamineo, fler the last, and took the first priloner; and pro slaiming the name of Aftorre, and the Fl reatines recommended the City to the Commiffary. Intelligence thereof being come to Florence, the accident difpleated every one; yet they fet at liberty Meffer John and his Daughter, and undertook the care of Aftorne and the City, by general confent of the people : Befides these (though the main wars among greater Princes were compoled) there was everyyear forme tumults in Romania, La Marca and Siena, which boing of little importance, I count is superfluous to relate. It is true that in Siems, fince the departure of the Duke of Calabris from

Book VIII.

đ

from the wat in 88. they were very frequent, and after many variations (for fometimes the Nobles, and fometimes the People governed) the Nobility remained Superiours, among whom those of greatest Authority were Pandolpho and Jacob Petrnea, one of whom by his prudence, and the. other by his courage became as it were Princes of that City. But the Florentines after the war of Screzana, till the death of Lorenzo do Medici, 1492. lived in the Lorenzo de height of all felicity; for Lorenzo feeing Medici, his all Arms in Italy laid by, which by his Wif- advancedom and Authority had been effected, ap- children plyed himself to make himself and his Ci- and hisother ty great, marrying Peter his Eldest Son to vermen Alfonfina Daughter of Cavallier Orfini ? Then John his fecond Son he advanced to the degree of a Cardinal; fo much the more notable, because beyond all former Examples he was not above thirteen years of age, when he was advanced to that high degree, which was a Ladder for his Houle, to afcend by, as afterwards happened. Julian his third Son being fo very young at his Father's Death, he could not provide with any extraordinary Fortune ; Of his-Daughters, one was married to Jenues Salvati, another to Francis Cibe, a third to Peter. Ridelfi; but the fourth whom, to keep his Houfe united, he would have married, to John de Medici, died : In other his private affairs, especially as to Merchandize, he was unhappy, for the diforders of thole 8F 4 those he intrusted, who lived not like Fa-Aors but Princes, in many places walked his Estate, so that his Country was fain to supply him with great fums of money, wherefore refolving no more to tempt Fortune, he forbore to trade, but as the more stable Riches, applied himself to purchase Lands, and in the Pratefe, Pifano, and the Vale of Pifa had large Poffertions, with Pafaces more becoming a Prince then a private Citizen. Then he addreffed himfelf to beautific and enlarge his City, and that he might live more quiet in the State, and fight with his Enemies at greater diftance, towards Bolonia, in the middle of those Alpes he fortified the Castle of Firenznola. Towards Siens, he began to repair the Imperial Hill, and made it almost impregnable, and the way towards Genous he had blocked up by taking Pietra Sancia and Seregard. Then with Pensions and Allowances he maintained himfelf Friends abroad; the Baglioni in Perngia, the Vitelli in the City of Ceftello, and had himfelf the particular Government of Faenza, all which were ftrong Bulwarks to his City. And in these peaceable Times he was continually diverting the City with Feafts and Triumphs, exhibiting Jufts and Tournaments, and feveral Representations of Ancient Actions, his cheif end in which was to make the City populous, keep these people united, and make the Nobility be honoured. He was an extream lover of any man excellent in any Art,

22

78

...

Art, of which Agnola of Montepulciano, Christopher Landini, and Demetrius Greco may give ample Testimony. Besides Earl John of Mirandula, a Man almost Divine, leaving all other Parts of Europe which he had travelled through, moved by the Magnificence of Lorenzo, chose his refidence in Florence. He was exceedingly delighted in Architecture, Musick, and Poetry; many Poetical compositions being extant, not only of his composure, but which he had commented upon: And to encourage the Youth of Florence to the fludy of Learning, he crected an University at Pifa, and brought thither all the most famous men then in Italy; He built a Monastery near to Florence for Father Moriano of Chinazano of the Order of St. Auftin, because he was a most excellent Preacher. He was highly beloved both by God and Fortune, which made all his undertakings successful, and his Enemies unhappy, for belides the Pazzi, Battijla Frescobaldo in Carmine and Baldinotto of Piltoia in his Villa or Country House, attempted to murder him; but all of them with their Accomplices suffered deserved punishment. This Magnificence, this Prudence and Fortune was with wonder known, efteemed and valued not only by all Italy, but by far diftant Princes. Matthew King of Hungary gave many Te-flimonies of the love he bore him; the Soldan fent him Ambassadours and Presents; the Great Turk delivered up to him Bernardo merde Bandini the Murderer of his Brother, all which made him the admiration of all Italy, and his Reputation every day with his Prudence increased; for he was eloquent, and witty in Discourse, discreet in Refolution, and quick and couragious in Execution. Nor was he blemithed with any Vice to taint fo many Virtues, fave that he was fomewhat addicted to Venery, loved witty and tharp jefting, and delighted in childish sports, more than became a man of his Gravity; for he would often play with his Children, and make himfelf one among ft them; fo that to confider this toying and gravity, there seemed to be in him two several Persons conjoyned by impossible Li-His latter dayes were full of gaments. La entry de trouble, occafioned by the diftempers wheredeath, 1492. troubled with most intollerable pains in his Stomach, which fo tormented him, that in April 1492. he died in the forty fourth year of his Age : Nor ever dyed any man, not only in Florence, but in all Italy, with fuch Reputation for Prudence, nor fo much lamented by his Country : and fince by his death great Ruins were to enfue; fo Heaven was pleafed to give evident figns of it, amongst the rest the highest Spire of the Church of Santia Reparata was ftruck with Lightning, and the greatest part of it tumbled down, to the great wonder of all men. In fhort, all his Citizens grieved for him, and all the Princes of Italy, of whom

20

1

ĩ,

whom not one but fent his Ambassadour to Florence to condole his death; but what fucceeded, showed they had indeed sufficient cause to grieve, for being destitute of his counsel, those which remained could neither find a way to fatisfie nor restrain the Ambition of Lewis Sforza Governor of the Duke of Milan: Wherefore not long after Lorenzo' death, began to spring up those wicked seeds which none knowing how to root out, did ruine, and yet do ruine all Italy.

FINIS

тне

CONTENTS

OF THE

First Book.

pag. Q w the Northern people eafed them-H selves of their multitudes. Ŧ The canfe of the defirmation of the Roman Empire. The Vifigoths infeft the Empire. ibid_ They are overcome by Theodofius ibid. Attempts of Gildon, Ruffinus and Stilicon. Alaric King of the Vifigoths Sacks Rome, and dies, and Autaulphus succeeds. Vandals possess Africk, the Alanes and Visigoths Spain, the Francks and Burgundians Gaule. Hunns enter Pannonja. Britains call in the Saxons. ibid Attila invades Italy. Valentinian makes Ravenna the Imperial Seat. Maximus

pag. Maximus usurps the Empire. Genferic King of the Vandals Sacks Rome. ibid. Odoacer invades Italy, and makes bimself King of Rome. Theodoric King of the Offrogoths drives out Odoacer. The fad estate of Italy. Theodatus usurps the Kingdom of Italy, 12 Bellifarius General for the Emperour. ibid. Theodatus slain, and Vitigetes King. 14 Totila King of the Goths takes Rome. ibid. Justinian the Emperour dies. IS Dukes first in Italy. 16 Alboinus King of the Lombards invited into Italy by Narfetes. 16, 17 Cruelty of Clefis King of the Lombards. 19 The growth of the Popes Authority 20 Aftolphus King of Lombardy feifes Ravenna. 22 Pope Gregory goes into France, to crave Aid. 23 Charlemain made Emperour, and Pepin King of the Romans. 24 The first institution of Cardinals. 25 -When Popes first changed their names. 26 Ainulphus the first German Emperour. ibid. Electors of the Empire instituted. 28 A Schifm in the Church by means of an Antipope. 20 Henry the Emperour Submits to the Pope. 3 I Roger Guilcard the first of the Norman line King of Italy. 33 The

	pag:
The expedition to the boly Land.	34
Several Antipopes.	36
King Henry of England Submits to the	Pope.
	38 Frederick the Emperour Submits to the 39
The effecte of Italy in the year 1218.	·41
The Factions of the Guelfs and Ghib
muleiply.	42
Menfred the Baftard feifes the Kingd
Nanles	.13
The Pope gives that Kingdom to Char.	tes of
Anjou.	44
Private Treasy between the Pope and K	ing of
Arrigon, te diffeife Charles of Sicily.	46
The Popes Nephews first publickly pref.	ened
the Rober Mehnenes fulle handenes hand Rodolphus the Empereur fells feveral (47
in Italy their freedom.	48
Pepe Boniface dies mad.	49
The Vifcont i first Dukes of Milan.	51
John King of Bohemia invades Italy,	54
Therife and growth of the City of Venice
A memorable accident at ROME.	60
Avignon given to the Church.	81
War between Genous and Venice wher	e Artillery was first used.	63
Three Popes at once occasioned the calies	ig the
Conncil of Constance.	67
Martin the Fifth created Pope by that	Contr-
cil.	68
The offate of Italy in these times.	71

The

The Contents of the Second Book.

	pa s.
The Original of Florence.	· 3
Various opinions about the name of Flor	-
Florence destroyed by Totila, and rebu	jlt hy Charlemain.
The first division in Florence.	. 7.
Signior Buondelmonte flain.	9
Guelfs and Gbibellines in Florence.	10
The Guelfs expelled the City.	11
The first acts of the Florentines.	13
The Government everthetown by the b 14
The State of Florence in part reftored
	6,17
New Lows and Orders in Florence.	19
The Factions again revived.	22
The Florentines war with Arezzo.	23
Severe Laws against the Nobility.	25
The Nobility and Commons take Arms:	27
Arms laid down, but jealousies continue.
The original of the bloody Factions of the anchi and Neri.
	31
. The Pope befought to remedy these differ
Charles Crit & Carl J. Day	_34 Charles of Valoys fent by the Pope to
rence.	36
The Neri prevail, and the Bianchi floe.	37
The Pepes Nuncio makes a fickle reconcili	ation.
	39
Charles of Valoys returns to Rome.	39
	New

page New broils in Florence, and the Pope fends bis . Legate thitber. 40 A dreadful fire in Florence. 4I The Rebels attempt an entrance into the City. but are repulfed. 49 Corfo Donati's Condemnation and Death. 46, 47 The Florentine Rebels under Harry the Emperour befieged Florence. 48 War with Uguccio Lord of Rifa: ibid. Lando of Agobbio's Tyranny. ŜO Castruccio Castruccani Lord of Lucca and Pifa bis war with Florence. 51, 52 The first choice of Magistrates by putting the names into a purfei. 56 Charles Duke of Calabria Lord of Florence. 58 Lewis the Emperour marches into Italy. 59 Caftruccio and Charles of Calabria's death. 60 Lucca bought by Gerardin Spinola. бī Florence adorned with new Buildings. 62 A new plot against the State. 62 The Florentines buy Lucca, and are beaten , out of it. 67 Walter Duke of Athens .comes to Florence. 68 The managers of the war with Lucca punished. 69 Ibe Duke of Athens usurps the Tyranny. 70 78 Three conspiracies at once against bim. 84 He is driven out, and the City reformed. 86 Several Towns rebel. New diffentions between Nobles and Com-110 115

Digitized by GOOgle

mons. The fooligh attempt of Andrea Strozzi. 90 The people gain absolute victory over the Nobles. 93

The Contents of the third Book.

The enmity between the Albizzi and Ri	cci. 4
Laws against the Ghibellines, and the A	Idmo-
niti, who	7
The Commons meet about the prefent dif	cords.
	9
The Lords appoint a Committe of Safety.	. 16
The Popes Legate invades the Florentine.	1. 17
War with the Church.	18
The Guelfs plot to seife the Government.	20
Lapo Castiglionchio's bouse burnt by th	be people.	25
The multitude appeased.	26
The Admoniti cause new stirs.	27
The Gonfalonieres speech to the people;	28
Another tumult worse than the former.	31
The speech of a Plebeian to encourage lows to villany.	33
The Rebels grow stronger, and the Lord.
	39
The bigh demands of the multitude.	40
The Lords driven out of the Ralace.	42
Nichael de Lando e comber ef trad	•.
Michael de Lando, a comber of wool	,
Gonfaloniere and Lord by the Rabble
The people take Arms against bim.	45
Herouts them, bis commendation.	47
The popular and Plebeian Factions.	49 Sananal
3 G	Several

Several Nobles and prime Citizens exe	pag.
Sir John Hawkwood an English man	51
tertained by the Florentines.	•
Meffer George Scali beheaded, which ca	5 3 au Ced
division in the City.	56
The Florentines frighted by Lewis of A	niou.
· · · · · · · ·	59
They buy Aterio.	60
Messer Bennet Alberti banished.	6 i
War mild Milen.	64
The multitude take Arms.	65
Some of the Bandini enter Florence.	71
Another conspiracy in Florence.	73'
a new Balia conftituted.	74
War with Ladiflaus King of Naples.	75
The Contents of the Fourth Book	· .
Philip Duke of Milan Seeks peace mish	Florence.	, 1
He takes Brefeia and Genova, and vio	WERCS _
the peace. The City of Florence divided, yet propa Wan
The Florentines defeated at Zoganara.	. Ţ 10
The people murnan.	11
Count Odo San of Braccio Gaussal of thi
rentines	11
Examples of the efferm of Valaur, and tempt of Gomardife.	20
Count Odo Stain, and Nicholas Piccining	pri-foner.	21
•	Tbs
Caarla
Digitized by Google

The Florentines orave aid of the Rener	pag. ians
Carmignuola General of the League. The Catasto, a new Tax upon every mans	22 23 two and a second	24
John de Medici endeavours to prevent wro into former Laxes.	25
Peace concluded with Milan.	26
New divisions in Florence, with John de	*
dici bis speech at his death.	27
Volterra rebels.	29
Volterra reduced to obedience.	31
Debates about a war with Lucca.	3 4
War with Lucca refolved on:	37
The ill management of the Florentine G rais.	ene-38.
The complaints of the Scravezi.	39
Rinaldo de Albizi leaves the Army. Attempt made to drown Lucca.	43
	44
Storza comes to relieve Lucca.	45
The Lord of Lucca deposed.	40
The Venetians and Florentines joyn in lea	-
The mine of Colona do Madici tombre ded	49
The ruine of Cosmo de Medici perswaded.	51 - x
Configur in Florence.	56
Colmo de Medici cited and committed.	57
He is confined to Padua.	65
Rinaldo Albizi atms against the Senares
The Pope endeavours to appeale the Lumi
Online do Madini unitional interimeter	A 1
Como de Medici refered, and Rinaldo	69
biti with others banished.	The
x	E MM

8 G 2

The Contents of the Fifth Book.

pag. The State of Italy 1433. War made on the Pope by Sforza and Fortebrace. The Pope makes peace with Sforza, and war in Romania. 6 Fortibrace victorions, and vananished. 8 The numerous proferiptions of Florentines. 9 New Ordinances in Florence. IØ Joan Queen of Naples dies. 11 Alphonio King of Naples taken prisoner by the Genouele. 12 Alphonio releafed by Duke Philip. 13 Spinola incites the Genouese to rebel. 14 Genoua recovers its liberty. 16 The Duke endesvours to regain it. 20 The Dukes Forces under Piccinino defeated 22. Lucca distressed. 23 The Lucebefe crave aid of Milan. 27 Distrust between the Venetians and Florentines. 20 Difference between Venice and Florence 4bout paying Sforza: 32 Peace between Lucca and Florence. 33 The Pope confecrates the Cathedral of Florence. 34 The Greek Church submits to the Roman. 26 New troubles in Lombardy and Tufcany. 37 Nicholas Piccinino cunningly deceives tbe Pope. 28 The

· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	pag.
The War grows bot in Lombardy.	41
The Venetians, Florentines and Earl St	orza
make a new agreement.	43
The diffress of Lombardy.	44
Neri Capponi sent to Venice.	45
Sforza marches into Lombardy.	49.
Nicholas Piccinino's strange escape from battle of Tenna.	52
Description of the scituation of Verona.	53
Piccinino surprises Verona.	54
Earl Sforza recovers Verona.	56
The Duke defigns to invade Tuscany.	58
The Florentines in fear of Piccinino.	59
The Patriarch imprisoned by the Pope.	61
The Venetians press the relief of Bro	efcia which the Earl refuses.	63
Sforza's speech to the Senate of Venice.	64
Piccinino mafts the Florentine Territorie.
The Siege of S. Nicholas Cafile.
Defign to furprize Cortona discovered.	70
Earl Sforza relieves Brefcia, and Picc	73 recalled by the Duk,
	. 73
Nicholas Piccinino defeated at Anghian
Want of Discipline in those times.	78
Poppi besieged and taken.	80
The Contents of the Sixth Book	•
The Duke of Milan moves for peace:	*
The Venetians jealous of Earl Storza.
Ingratitude of the Venetians.	ibid.

Ingratitude of the Venetians. The proud requeft of Nicholas Piccinino. 8 Peace privately concluded between the Duke and

:

	pag.
and Earl Storza, and the Eart mar	ried to the Long Brancha.
Wor in La Marca.	ΪI
Baldaccio of Anghiani Millinated by the	* Gon-faloniere.	15
Elorence reformed, and Nicholas Pice	ANHO
defeated by Earl Storzan	10
The death of Nicholas Picetoinos	17
Treubles in Bolonia.	i Š
Battista Canneschi flain.	19
Sancti Bentivogli fono for to govern Bo	ionia.
	20
A fresh war in La Marca.	23
The war muived in Loraburdy.	23
The Dake and Venetians both follicit	e the
Earls friendship.	ibid.
Duke Philip's deals.	24
Earl. Stores General of the Milanefe.	26
King Alphon fo invades the Florentines.
Overtures of pouce between Alphonio an
Florentines	3F
The King raifes his Siege with different	ib.
The Wenetian Army defeated by the Earl.	35
The generous tomper of Eart Storia.	30
Reace between the Earl and Venetians.	37
The speech of the Milanese Ambassadours	31. tathé
Earl.	38
The Earls answer to the Milanese.
The Milanefe cruze compaffon of the Fe	41
and interrige crube companyous of the re	· · · ·
	43 Gib
The Venetians make peacewith the Millane
The Earl folliences the Florentines and: A great tumily in Milan.	45
AL ST OWN PRIMAR IN MINATI.	Ibe
	1112

	pag
The Venetian Ambaffadioir therein fluin.	49
Milan furrendred to Earl Frances, Februs, 1450	- 50
The Venetians plot to surprise Bolonia.	53
Prederick the third Empirant conine to Plosance	55
The Florensiers make a Lougue with France A of	- #b . i
The Venetians begin the war with the Duke 13	$6.
The Kings Army churs, Tuscanys of the na ve of	· ib.
Stephen Porcari dif unde Rome.	52
Mr. Stephen put to drush.	60
The Vale of Bagno bereyal to the Rileg. 1. OR .	61
A Pifan's fidelosy to sle Flarensines,	ib.
The Florentines fend an Ambaffadow to Fealece.	63
Renate of Anjouromer Suid Italy. Mary and in-	5 6
Renate returns again for France.	105
Peace fully concluded.	66
Jacob Piccinino begins frefb traubles	67
Jacob routed at Bolfena.	ib.
The Pope endeavours a war agains she Turk,	68
Strange forms in Tufenty.	: 69
King Alphonfo makes war on the Gumilife, in	nd oit
Gilmond Malateffa.	71
Distb of Alphonio King of Naples,	72
Bhs Pope defigns that Kingdom for his Mephen	5 bas
dies. diffe I topi and the T	īb.
The Fregofi attempt to fuft Gonoua	73
Petrino Fregoli filim.	.74
John of Anjou makes an expedition to regain : N	aples
The second s
Senove relets from John of Anjou.	75
John driven out of. she Ringdom.	. 76
The Contents of the Seventh Book.
Colme de Medici und Neri Cappohi Rivelal
shorient for another and the contents	S 🗶
Luke Bitti Genfalmiori.
Girolamo Machiavet renfinet.	∖ ģ
Luke Pitti's magnificens Fabricks	` , ĝ
War in the Kingdom and Romania;	10
Dath of Colmode Medici.	ibid.
Hisfinicity buildings and Blagy 1014	11
Francis Duke of Milan becomes Lord of Genona
Pope Pius promotes an expedition againf the Turk	1. 21
Li annana an L

n12.

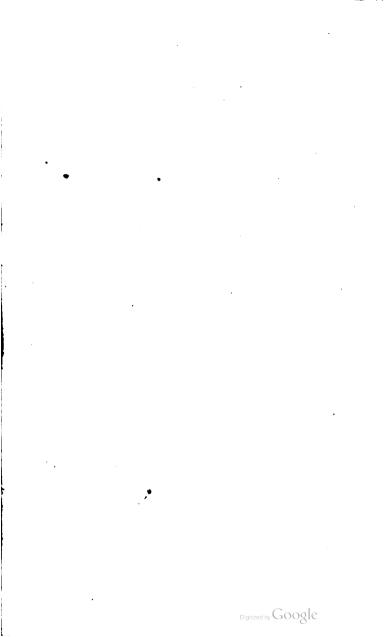

•	pag.
The death of Storza Dake of Milan.	.22
Conspiracy against the Medici.	24
Open division in Florence,	28
The confpirmey against Peter Medici difcovered.	30
Peter de Medici sakes arms to defend bimfelf.	32
Lake Pitti files with Peter.	34
The Citizeus complaint to Peter, and bis anfwer
A new Balia created of the Medici Faltion,	37
The remarkable fall of Luke Pitti.	31
Agnolo Accisvolo bis Letter to Peter Medici.
The Florentine exiles provoke the Venetians to a 4	UAT A-gainf their Countroy.	40
The Venetions and Dake of Ferrara make wa
Florence.	42
A famons battle, and peace concluded.	44
Marriage of Lorenzo Medici with Clarice Orfin
Demb of Peter de Medici.	49
Confpiracy of the Mardi.	51
The Duke of Milan comes to Florence.	57
Tamales in Volterra.	· 58 .
The Pope facks Spoletto, and befieges Caffello.	62
Charles the fou of Braccio invades the Sanefi.	66
Confpiracy against the Dake of Milan.	68
The Contents of the Eighth Book.
Two powerful Factions in Italy.
Discontents between the Medici and Pazzi.	edici.
Confpiracy against Lorenzo and Julian M
Julian Medici flain, but Lorenzo faves bim	-9.15 -9.4 ca
The Archbifbop of Pila, S other comprisators bang
The refolmes death of Francis Pazzi.	17
The Pope and King make war with Florence.	21
Lorenzo de Medici's speech to the principalCitiz	PBS: 15
The Cisizens obliging anfever to Lorenzo's fpees
The bold fpeech of a Citizen to Lorenzo Medici.	31
The Original of S. George of Genoua.	61
Pietra Sancta befieged.	. 64
Pietra Sancta taken,	66
Aquila rebels from the King of Naples,	6
Lorenzo de Medici bis advancement of his child bis other excellent Vertues.	37
Lorenzo de Medici bis death. 1492.	,80
FINIS.

Digitized by Góogle

٢

Bill toda 9 (45.51) Mac Reg 91277 Digitized by Google

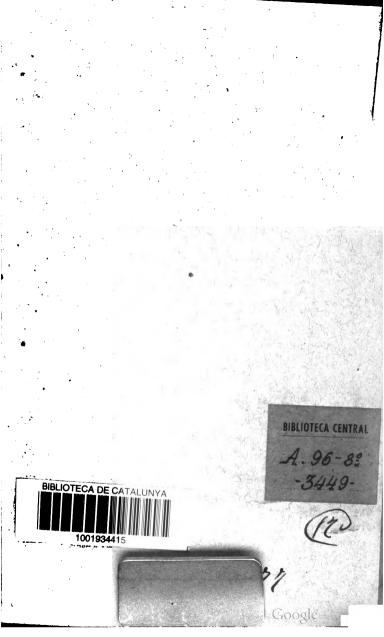

•

.

Peter de Modici his Speech to the *Floren*tins. provision against the violent gusts of their ambition; yet to disburthen his own Conscience, and make them if he could athamed of their courses, he called before him the chief Florentines, and thus reproved and advised them: I once never believed I fould bave seen the time that the manners and bebaviour of my Friends should make me rather love and defire the prosperity of my enemies, and that my victory had proved a defeat ; for I thought I had confederated with men. whofe Appetite might have been bounded, and who would bave been content, if not with living quiet and secure themsfelves, yet at leaft with being revenged on their enemies : but now I see bow strangely I am deceived, and bow ignorant I was of the natural Ambition of men in general, and much more of yours ; for you are not content to be Princes in so mighty a City to share among a few of you those Henours, Dignities and Profits were wont to be in common to the whole body, and to have the estates of your enemies divided amonst you; nor are you fatisfied to load others with all publick charges, while your selves, freed from all payments, enjoy the profit, but to your advantages you must adde the Iyranny of afflicting them with all manner of injuries : you rob your neighbours of their Goods, you fell Justice, and flie from civil Judgment, oppreffing the innocent, and promoting the infolent; nor do I believe there is in all Italy so many examples of violence and injustice, as in this City: wby should we take life from our Countrey,

Countrey that bis given a being to us ? or poby destroy those that have made us victorious ? why difgrace and scorn those have given us Honours? I promise you by the faith which all, boneft men ought to give and receive, if you continue to behave your felnes so, that I be forced to repent that I was victorious, I shall carry my felf in that manner you shall like-wife repent of your abuse of the Victory. Those Citizens returned an Answer suitable and agreeable to the occasion, but reclaimed not themfelves from their violence and oppreffion : whereupon Reter privately cauled Meffer Agnolo Acciavoli to come to Caffagivolo, and had a long discourse with him about the State of the City, nor is it to be doubted but (had not death prewented him) he had recalled all the banifhed to curb the infolence of those that were within, but death put a stop to these his honeft intentions, for grievoully afflicted with difeafes of body, and torments of mind, he dyed in the three and fiftieth year Deathoffer of his age, whole worth and virtue could ter de Medici never be truly known to his Countrey, becaufe most of his time he lived accompanied by his father, and those few years he outlived him, were confumed in civil discords. and infirmity of body. Peter was buried near his father in the Church of S. Laurence, and his Funeral was folemnized with all the pomp becoming fo great a Citizen. He left behind him two fons Lorenzo and Guilian, who though they gave great hopes 7 D they

