

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

IN producing this first portion of the Promptorium, the Editor, having for various reasons been induced to withhold for the present his more detailed Preface, feels it requisite to offer a few preliminary observations. The present edition is formed upon the text of the Harleian MS. 221, which has been selected as the most ancient, the most correct, and the most copious of the MSS. of which the existence has hitherto been ascertained. The additions that have been made from other MSS., and from Pynson's edition, are numerous ; these, as likewise the corrections and various readings, are distinguished from the text by being placed within brackets, with the indication of the sources whence they are severally derived. In a few instances, where the reading of the Harl. MS. appeared so faulty as to justify an alteration of the text, the rejected word has been given in the notes ; but more frequently it has been considered preferable to leave the reading of the MS. unaltered, and to give the various reading, which at once suggests the correction. The authorities whence various readings have been taken, are indicated in the following manner. MS. in the Library at King's College, Cambridge, (k.) ; MS. in the collection of Sir Thomas Phillipps, Bart. at Middle Hill, and formerly in the Heber Library, (h.) ; MS. in the Chapter Library at Winchester, originally in the possession of Thomas Silkstede, Prior of Winchester, A.D. 1498, (s.) A fragment contained in Harl. MS. 2274, afforded a few readings, which are marked by the number of the MS. The edition printed by Pynson, in 1499, has supplied numerous additions and various readings, distinguished thus, (p.) ; and a few, the critical importance of which is but trifling, have been selected from the editions by Julian Notary, 1508, (j.) and W. de Worde, 1516, (w.) The work was reproduced by the last named printer in 1510, 1512, and 1528 ; but Pynson's text appears to have been followed in all the subsequent editions, with partial abridgment chiefly of the Latin portion of the work, and some trifling variations.

The integrity of the MS. selected as the groundwork of the present edition having thus been, in all essential respects, preserved, the following modifications have been deemed advisable. The original consists of two distinct portions, and alphabetical arrangements, a nominale, and a verbale, according to the usage, of which other instances occur in contemporary works of a similar nature. The disadvantage of thus separating the verbs from the nouns, and other parts of speech, was evidently material, and the arrangement has been simplified by throwing the whole into one alphabetical order. The indications of genders, declensions, and conjugations, as likewise of certain inflexions of the Latin words, which conveyed important information to the student of Latin, for whose benefit the work was compiled, but are devoid of any utility as regards the present purpose, have been wholly omitted. Wherever it was practicable, the Latin words have been corrected by reference to the authorities cited ; in all other cases no attempt has been made to alter the barbarisms of a debased Latinity, which, displeasing, indeed, to the eye of the classical scholar, are not devoid of information to the archaic student.

It has been found impossible to preserve the perfect regularity of alphabetical arrangement, in consequence of the disorder that had been introduced by the scribe, who, writing more by ear than careful observation of orthography, has in his transcript continually vitiated the spelling of the original. To have corrected these corruptions, introduced by the second hand, would have been incompatible with the principle of preserving, in its integrity, the text of the MS. : the transposition of the words would have destroyed the evidence of their original spelling indicated by the alphabetical arrangement. Some words have, however, where it appeared advisable, been transposed ; and if the Editor should be reproached with an excess of caution in not making many alterations of the kind, he hopes that the inconvenience will be ultimately remedied by means of an orthographic Index, which it is proposed to supply, wherein the reference to words disguised by the most obsolete and uncouth spelling, may be effectually facilitated. The contractions have throughout been printed at length, with the exception of the final m̄ and n̄ : these have been left in cases where any question might arise as to their power. The chief difficulty in this respect has occurred in regard to the verbs, and although the Editor has little doubt that the termination -nne was here intended by the contraction n̄, yet the irregularities of the spelling, and indications of contraction, that occur in the MS., in this instance, have induced him to leave these, and all questionable cases, to the decision of those whom they may interest. In a few instances where the contraction has appeared to be redundant, or erroneous, it has been printed as it stands in the MS., so that it may be rejected, or retained, at the option of the reader. A prolongation of the last stroke of the m or n, which occasionally, as it is believed, denotes the mute final e, has been indicated in the following manner, m', n'. It must also be noticed, that y is to be sought in the place of i; that sh is invariably written sch; and that þ, which is occasionally, by inadvertence of the scribe, written th, takes the penultimate place, usually assigned to it in the Anglo-Saxon alphabet. The letter ȝ is found in the place of z, at the close of the alphabetical arrangement ; as, however, its various and undefined powers would have been insufficiently represented by that letter, the Saxon character has been retained, with the exception only of a very small number of words, in which the letter having evidently the simple and ordinary power of z, that character has been employed.

In the selection of illustrative materials, the Editor has sought to keep equally in view the curious character of the work, as affording definite evidence of archaic usages, and its philological importance. He has thought it also more desirable to establish by contemporary evidence the existence of an obsolete word, or show the immediate source whence it was introduced into the language, than to enter upon etymological speculations.

The Author excuses himself for the dialectical peculiarities of his work, written in conformity with the language of Norfolk, with which alone he was acquainted ; a comparison, therefore, with the existing dialect of East Anglia appeared to be desirable, and it has been carried out as far as it was practicable. Of numerous contemporary or ancient authorities, whence illustrations have been largely drawn, several MSS. of the Latin-English Dictionary, entitled Medulla Grammatices, compiled, according to Bale, by the same author as the Promptorium, have been chiefly consulted, as likewise the same work in its printed form, under the title of the Ortus Vocabulorum. Of the Medulla Grammatices, or Grammatice, the MSS. which may especially be cited are, among several in the Harleian Collection, those marked 2257 and 2270 ; two valuable MSS. in the collection of Sir Thomas Phillipps, Bart. 8244 and 8306 (MSS. Heber, 1020 and 1360) ; and the MS. in the Chapter Library at Canterbury, which is the more remarkable on account of the large number of corresponding Anglo-Saxon words, which have been added in the margin, as it is supposed, by the hand of Somner. A copy is also preserved in the Pepysian Library at Cambridge, erroneously described as an English and Latin, instead of a Latin-English Dictionary, and another in the Library at Holkham. The most ancient MS. hitherto noticed is in the possession of the Editor ; and it must be observed, that although the work is substantially the same, the variations of the text in all these copies are found to be very great, and deserve careful comparison. A highly valuable MS., dated 1483, consisting of an English and Latin Dictionary, wholly distinct from the Promptorium, and written apparently in the North-Eastern parts of England, is cited as the Catholicon Anglicum. For free use of this important source of illustration the Editor is indebted to the kindness of its late lamented possessor, the Right Hon. Lord Monson. The curious work of John Palsgrave, entitled, "Eclaircissement de la langue Françoise," 1530, the quaint sentences of Horman's Vulgaria, 1519, and various other early printed authorities of equal rarity, have been made available to the utmost of the Editor's ability. But much has been inevitably left without any explanatory comment; and the Editor is apprehensive that the elucidations which he has been enabled to offer will too frequently be found insufficient or defective. In a work that has demanded much minute research and detailed reference, numerous errors must, with the utmost care, have occurred; and he will thankfully appreciate any corrections or suggestions with which those who are interested in such researches may favour him. Considerable inconvenience has arisen from the impossibility of gaining access to treatises from which the Latin words in the Promptorium were derived. The author cited as “Mirivalensis, in Campo florum,” is unknown, and all researches in order to discover that work, which supplied many of the most curious and obscure terms, have hitherto been fruitless. No MS. of the Derivationes Ugucionis has yet been found which answers to the description here given, “Ugucio versificatus;” and the “Commentarius curialium” is likewise still a desideratum. On these points of difficulty the Editor, in behalf of his endeavour to offer in the present work some contribution towards the archaic lexicography of the English language, would solicit the aid of those who are more conversant than himself with early MS. literature.

"This wif was not aferde ne affraide." CHAUC.

The Harl. MS. indeed, renders both aferde and afraide by territus, but the reading of the King's MS. agreeing with the printed editions, seems preferable. Aferde or trobelid, turbatus, perturbatus. Compare ABASCHYD or aferde. A.S. afered, territus.

This word denotes properly the tag, but is often used to signify the lace to which it was attached. " Myn aglet, mon lasset, a point, la ferrure d'un lasset." R. PYNSON, Good boke to lerne to speke French.

" Wel know they the remue yf it a-ryse,
 An aker is it clept, I vnderstonde,
 Whos myght there may no shippes or wynd wyt stonde.
 This remue in th'occian of propre kynde
 Wyt oute wynde hathe his commotioune;
 The maryneer therof may not be blynde,
 But when and where in every regioune
 It regneth, he moste haue inspectioune,
 For in viage it may bothe haste and tary,
 And vnavised thereof, al mysa cary."

Aker seems to be derived from A.S. ær, water, and cer, a turn; æc-cir signifies the ebb of the sea. CÆDRM. See Nares, under Higre.

It was ornamented with a rich parure, often set with jewels, which in ancient representations appears like a standing collar round the neck of the priest. Dugdale gives an inventory in his History of St. Paul's, taken 1295, which details the costly enrichments of the amice.

C. de Lion, i. 3821. "Frenshe men arn arwe and feynte." In Yorkshire arfe is used in the sense of fearful. See Boucher, under the words Arew, Arf, Arghe, and Arwe; and Jamieson, under Erf, and Ergh. P. Ploughman uses the verb to arwe, to render timid.

<sup>3</sup> The reading of the Harl. MS. Askysye, is here given, although probably it is an error, by inadvertence of the scribe. The printed editions all agree with the other MSS. in giving the word Askefise. In the MS. of the Medulla Gramm. in the possession of Sir Thomas Phillips, No. 1029, ciniflo is rendered, an aske fyse; and in another, No. 1360, "ciniphlo, a fyre blowere, an yryn hetere, an askefyce." The word does not occur in several MSS. of the Medulla in the Brit. Mus., nor in the Ortus Vocabulorum, but in Mr. Wilbraham's curious Latin-English Dictionary, printed about the same time as the Promptuarium, ciniflo is explained to be one, "qui flat in cinere, vel qui preparat pulverem moliebrem." Anglice, aske fyse, a fyre blawer, or an yrne hotter." The Harl. MS. 2257, a variety of the Medulla, renders the word "a heter of blode iren, or an axe wadelle;" and it appears in Ihre's Lexic. Suigoth. v. Aska, that askefis was applied as a term of reproach to those who remained indolently at home by the fireside, as axewaddle is used in Devonshire. See Palmer's Glossary, and Boucher under the word Axewaddle.

Ray says that in Cumberland the word attercob signifies the web, as it does also in Yorkshire. See BOUCHER and JAMIESON. In the Legenda Aurea, spiders are called spyn-coppes. Saynt Felyx, f. 72. In Trevisa's version of the Polychronicon, it is said that in Ireland "there ben attercoppes, bloode-soukers, and eeftes that doon none harme." Caxton, f. 63, b.

<sup>3</sup> "Though you do neuer so many good dedes, you lese your mede if you ausunte you of them, se vanter." PALSG. The word occurs in another sense in Elyot's Librarie, "Vendito, to sell often, to auaunt, venditatio, an auaunt."

<sup>4</sup> It is very doubtful what tree is here intended. Forby observes that in Norfolk the asp tree, populus tremula, is called ebble, which seems to be merely a variation of abele, the name given by botanists to the populus alba. In a vocabulary in Harl. MS. 1002, viburnum is rendered "a awberne." The Promptuary gives hereafter EBAN TRE, Ebanus. In early French writers the "bois d'aubor" is often mentioned as in esteem for making bows, but its nature has not been satisfactorily explained, and possibly it may have been identical with the awbel. In German the yew tree is called eben.

<sup>5</sup> This word occurs again hereafter, WARPYN, or wex wronge or avelonge as vesselle, oblongo. In Harl. MS. 1002, f. 119, oblongo is rendered to make auelonge; and in the editor's MS. of the Medulla, oblongus is rendered auelonge. A. S. Awoh, oblique. Moore gives the word avellong, used in Suffolk, when the irregular shape of a field interferes with the equal distribution of the work.

<sup>4</sup> The awfyn or alphyne was anciently the name of the bishop in the game of chess. Hyde derives it from the Arabic, al-fil, an elephant. The piece was called by the French fol, at an early period, and subsequently awfin. The third chap. of the seconde tractate of Caxton's game of the Chesse, 1474, "tretethe of the Alphyns, her office ande maners. The Alphyns oughte to be made ande formeide in manere of Juges sptyng in a chayer with a book open to fore their eyen. Theyr offyce is for to coundeyle the Kyng." " Allyn, a man of the chesse borde, awfin." PALSG. See Ducange, Douce's Remarks on the European names of Chessmen, Archæol. xi. p. 400, and Sir F. Madden's remarks on the chess-men found in Lewis, Archæol. xxiv. p. 225. Horman, speaking of chess, says, " We shulde have 2 kyngis, and 2 quyens, 4 alfyne, 4 knyghtis, 4 rokis, and 16 paunis." f. 282. b.

I shall reken it syxe times by aulgorisme, or you can caste it ones by counters." PALSG. It would hence appear that towards the commencement of the XVIth century the use of the Arabic numerals had in some degree superseded the ancient mode of calculating by the abacus, and counters, which, at the period when the Promptorium was compiled, were generally used. Hereafter we find the word COUNTINGE BORDE as an evidence. They were not indeed wholly disused at a time long subsequent: an allusion to calculation by counters occurs in Shakespeare, and later authors prove that they had not been entirely discarded. Algorithm or algorism, a term universally used in the XIVth and XVth centuries to denote the science of calculation by 9 figures and zero, is of Arabic derivation.

or ornament, forming part of the livery assigned by a chieftain to his followers, which led to the use of uniforms. The word is probably derived from A.S. beag, corona, armilla. See in Harl. MS. 4632, an interesting list of badges of cognisance, printed in Collect. Topogr. et Genealogica, vol. III. p. 54.

Of the virtues attributed to this herb, see Roy. MS. 18 A. VI. "Genciana ys an herbe that me clepyth baldemoyne, or feldewort."

woe or calamity. Thus Hampole, in the Prick of Conscience, calls the day of doom

or a rodde, MED. and ORT. VOC.; and such the baleys seems to have been, and not a besom, balai, in the present sense of the word. Matthew Paris relates that in 1252, a person came to perform penance at St. Alban's, "ferens in manu virgam quam vulga- riter baleis appellamus," with which he was disciplined by each of the brethren. Wats in the Glossary observes, "Ita Norfolcienses mei vocant virgam majorem, et ex pluribus
longioribus viminibus; qualibus utuntur pedagogi severiores in scholis." Baleys occurs in Piers Ploughman in the same sense. Forby does not notice it: but the verb to balase occurs amongst the provincialisms of Shropshire; see Hartshorne's Salopia Antiqua.

"In the Wycliffite version Baile seems to imply the charge or office, "jelde reken-fecit, sive crudum solum et innatum reliquit." HORM. "Baulke, of lande, separacion." PALSO. A.S. Balc, porca. The word is still in use in Norfolk and Suffolk.

<sup>5</sup> In Gawayn and the Green Knyȝt occur the expressions "a balȝ berg," and "balȝ hawncȝ," which are explained by Sir F. Madden to mean ample, swelling. Mr.
Stevenson, however, in Boucher's Glossary, interprets the word as smooth or un wrinkled.

<sup>1</sup> The banker was a cloth, carpet, or covering of tapestry for a form or bench, from the French "banquier, tapis pour mettre sur un banc, stragulum abaci." NICOT. COTGR. "Amphitapa est tapetum circumflossum, a wolt loke." ORT. "Tapes utrinque villosum." DUC.; denoting the coverings of arras and tapestry work, wrought, perhaps, on both sides, such as are enumerated in the Inventory of Sir John Fastolfe's effects, 1459. Archæol. xxi. 257, 265. We there also find "Banker, hangyng tapestry worke," which may mean the tapestry commonly in use for hangings, or that the Banker was in this instance the covering of a high-backed seat, over which it was hung. In an earlier Inventory of the Priory, Durham, 1446, occur "ijj Bankquerez paleat' de blodio intenso et remiso; costera pro ornatu murorum ejusdem camera;" these last being of the same suit as the Bankers, that is, of cloth of say, pale dark blue and light. Inventories published by the Surtees Society, i. 92. In the Teutonic, banck-werck is rendered by Kilian, "tapes, opus polymitum, vulgo bancalia, scamnia, subsellii stragulum." A Vocabulary nearly the same date as the Promptorium gives "pepotasina, bachis, banquere." ROY. MS. 17. C. XVII. This word has been in Boucher's Glossary incorrectly explained to mean a table-cloth.

<sup>2</sup> Baptym is not an error of the scribes, but a singular corruption of orthography. In the other MSS. as well as the printed editions, the same spelling occurs. In the Wycliffe version it is thus written, as also baptym, and baptem, in the Legenda Aurea. The observation would be trivial, did it not afford an evidence of the predominant influence of the French language in England at the period; the word is evidently thence received, and not from the Latin.

<sup>4</sup> Spelman explains the barbacan to be "munimen à fronte castrorumque manis ad tragicienda missilia. Sax. burgekening. Vox Arabica." Pennant asserts that the Saxons called the barbican to the north-west of Cripplegate, burgh-kenning; other writers have suggested a different etymology, A.S. burk-beacn, urbis specula. Bullet would derive it from the Celtic, bar, before, bach, an enclosure. Lye gives barbacan as a word adopted in the Anglo-Saxon language, and we must certainly not seek thence its derivation. The best specimens of the outworks to which this name was given were at York, and called the Bars, of which one still exists in good preservation.

<sup>2</sup> The ornaments of the girdle, which frequently were of the richest description, were termed barres, and in French clour; they were perforated to allow the tongue of the buckle to pass through them. Originally they were attached transversely to the wide tissue of which the girdle was formed, but subsequently were round or square, or fashioned like the heads of lions, and similar devices, the name of barre being still retained, though improperly. Thus a citizen of Bristol bequeathed in 1430, "zonam harnizalam cum barris argenti rotundis." In the description of the girdle of Richesse, in Chaucer's Romaunt of the Rose, we read,

" The barris were of gold full fine
Upon a tissue of sattin,
Full hevie, grete and nothing light,
In everiche was a besaunt wight."

In the original, "les cloux furent d'or epuré." The word was similarly applied to the ornaments of other parts of costume, such as the garter, worn by the Knight of the Order, or spur-leathers, as in Gawayn and the Green Knyȝt, i. 287.

The Medulla explains limas to be " vestis que protenditur ab umbilico usque ad pedes, quid utuntur servi coci et feminine. Anglice, barn cloth." A.S. barm-regl, or barm-clas, mappula, ELFRIC.

<sup>6</sup> A barowe or crowde was a small vehicle, whether precisely similar or not to the barrow of the present times, cannot be asserted. When Sir Amiloun was worn out with leprosy, and reduced to " twelf pans of catel," the faithful Amoraunt expended that little sum in the purchase of barowe, therein to carry the knight about.

" Therwith thai went ful yare
And bought hem a gode croude wain." Amis and Amiloun, 1867.

A.S. berewe, rectula. " Cenovectorium, a berw. Instrumentum cum quo deportatur census." MED. See CROWDE, barowe.

<sup>7</sup> The Baseland was a kind of long dagger, which was suspended to the girdle, and worn, not only by the armed knight, but by civilians, and even priests. Thus Piers Ploughman, in allusion to the neglect of clerical propriety, says,

" Sir John and Sir Jeffery hath a girdle of silver,
A baseland, or a ballocke knife, with botttons ouergilt."

Knighton tells us that the weapon with which Sir William Walworth put Jack Straw to death was a basillard. Sir William was a member of the Fishmongers' Company, who <sup>2</sup> "Baudrike, carquant, baldrike for a ladyes necke, carquan." PALSG. Thus is found in the Ort. Voc. "Anabola est ornamentum mulieris a collo dependens, a baudrik." The word had, however, a more general signification; it is derived, probably, from baudrier, a strap or girdle of leather, but was afterwards used to denote similar appliances of any material, and of costly decoration. In Gawayn and the Grene Knyt, bauderyk is the appellation of the guige, or transverse strap by which the shield was suspended round the neck. Hall relates that "Sir Thomas Brandon wore a great baudericke of gold, greate and massy, trauese his body;" and he further describes the Earl of Southampton, Great Admiral of England, as "wearing baudrick-wise a chayne at the whych did hang a whistle of gold, set with ryche stones," which was a badge of office. It would appear that the bauderyke was properly a belt worn transversely, as was the "baudre de serico, argento munitum pro cornu Regis." LIB. GARDEROB. EDW. I. 1299. It signified also the cingulum, or military belt, and in the 16th century, the jewelled ornament worn round the neck both by ladies, and noblemen. See Hall's Chronicle, p. 508, baldellus and baldringus in Ducange, and Boucher's Glossary.

<sup>3</sup> "Bawcyn, or brok, fiber, castor, taxus, melota." GARL. SYNONYM. These words are in the Medulla and Ortus explained as signifying the brocke. A.S. broc, a badger. The word bausene occurs Cott. MS. Nero, A. x. f. 62: and baucines in William and the Werwolf. See Bawson in Boucher's Glossary.

The functions of the third extended to the expulsion of evil spirits by the imposition of hands upon persons possessed, recently baptized, and catechumens. The ceremony was always accompanied with aspersion, and the name bennet was doubtless taken from the aqua benedicta, eau bénite, or, perhaps, from the vessel called in French bénitier, which contained the holy-water. In a will dated 1449 is a bequest of "a gret holy-water scoppe of silver, with a staff benature, the sayd benature and staff weyng xx nobles in plate." The staff benature was the aspersorium, termed in the Promptorium STRENKYL, halywater styc. Fox, relating the death of Hooper, states that it was part of the ceremony of degrading Bishops to "take from them the lowest vesture which they had in taking bennet and collet" (i. e. acolyte). Eccles. Hist. iii. 152, A.D. 1555. T. Becon, in the Reliques of Rome, says, "Boniface V. decreed that such as were but benet and colet should not touch the reliques of saints, but they only which are subdeacons, deacons, and priests." Edit. 1563. f. 183.

<sup>3</sup> This is one of the number of words in which the A. S. Mæl, pars, occurs in composition. The A. S. form of these adverbs is mælum, in parts, bit-mælum, deel-mælum, &c. We have retained piecemeal, but the rest are wholly obsolete. See in Nares, drop-meal, inch-meal, and limb-meal. P. Ploughman uses pounde-meale and perchel-meale. In the Liber Festivus we read that William Tracy, after the murder of St. Thomas of Canterbury, "fylle syke and roted all his body, in somoche that himselfe with his owne hondes cast away his owne fleshee lompe-mele." Palsgrave gives "by ynche-meale, menuement, par poulees, and flock-meale, par troupeaux."

<sup>2</sup> "Bearwarde, gardeur d'ours." PALS. A curious representation of the bear-ward, and baiting the bear, occurs in the Louterel Psalter, illuminated in the early part of the reign of Edw. III. It has been engraved in Vetust. Monum. VI. pl. xxiv. In the Household Book of the Earl of Northumberland in 1511, under the head of Rewards, is one of "6s. 8d. to the Kyngs or Queenes Barward, if they have one," when they come to the Earl. Ant. Rep. iv. p. 253. The Earl had also in his own family an official of the same kind, whose reward was 20s. Shakespeare uses the word, and also bearard or bear-yerd, which are synonymous.

<sup>3</sup> Beryl is used by Chaucer and the authors of the XIVth and XVth centuries, to denote the precious stone so called, and also a finer description of crystal glass, which resembled it in transparency or colour. This distinction is not preserved here; but it is made by Palsgrave: "Beral, fyne glass, beril. Beryll, a precious stone, beril." Elyot renders "Glessum, crystal or beryle." See Whitaker's Cathedral of St. Germain, ii. 280.

<sup>6</sup> Alexander Neckham, who died in 1227, gives in his treatise de naturis rerum, a curious account "de ave que vulgo dicitur bernekke," which grew, as he asserts, from wood steeped in the sea, or trees growing on the shores. Roy. MS. 19 G. XI. f. 31. The marvellous tales respecting this bird, which has been supposed to be the chenalopeces, mentioned by Pliny as a native of Britain, are to be found at length in Gesner, Olaus Magnus, and many ancient writers. Giraldus gives in his Topographia Hiberniae, c. xi. a detailed account "de bernacis ex abiete nascentibus," as a phenomenon of which he had been an eye-witness on the Irish shores, and states that these birds were, on account of their half-fishy extraction, eaten during Lent. This indulgence, of which the propriety was argued by Michael Meyer in his treatise de volucri arboreo, was sanctioned by the authority of the Sorbonne. It is scarcely needful to observe that the origin of these strange statements is to be found in the multivalve shell-fish, the lepas anatifera, which attaches itself to submerged wood, or the bottoms of ships. <sup>1</sup> " Chamus est quoddam genus freni, vel capistrum, an halter or bernacle." ORT. VOC. Junius derives the word from the French berner, comprimer petulantiam; and Roquefort mentions a kind of torture practised by the Saracens, termed bernicles. The Wycliffite version renders 2 Kings, xix, 28, " y schal putte a sercle in bi nose birlis, and a bernacle in bi lippis." Cott. MS. Claud. E. II.

<sup>2</sup> Berne is the contraction of A.S. bere, hordeum, and ern, locus. Lathe, which does not occur in its proper place in the Promptorium, is possibly a word of Danish introduction into the eastern counties, Lade, horreum, DAN. Skinner observes that it was very commonly used in Lincolnshire. It occurs in Chaucer :

Hormann observes that "neaynge is caused with byten (betonica) thrust in the nostril." The powdered root of hellebore was another homely sterntuary anciently much in request.

<sup>2</sup> "Merendula, a beuer after none. Merenda, comedio in meridie, vel cibus qui declinante die sumitur." ORT. Garrison, in his description of England, prefixed to Holinshed's Chronicles, i. 170, remarks that "of old we had breakefastes in the forenoone, beuerages or nuntions after dinner, and thereto reare suppers, generallie when it was time to go to rest, a toie brought into England by hardie Canutus; but nowe those are very well past, and ech one, except some yoong hungry stomach that cannot fast till dinner time, contenteth himself with dinner and supper." The higher classes, he observes, dine at 11 and sup at 5, merchants seldom before 12, and 6. This was written about 1579. Sherwood renders, "Bever, or drinking, un réciner, collation, gowster. To bever, réciner;" and Cotgrave explains un réciner as "an afternoones nunceon, or collation, an Aunders-meat." See hereafter NUNMETE, which seems to have been much the same as the intermediate refection here called BEUER. The word bever still signifies in Suffolk an afternoon snack. MOORE.

<sup>3</sup> A.S. beofer, castor. That the beaver was anciently an inhabitant of these islands, the laws of Howell Dha, and the curious description of its habits given by Giraldus, in his Itinerary of Wales, l. ii. c. 3, satisfactorily prove. The fur of this animal was in estimation from an early period. Piers Ploughman says,

" And yet vnder that cope, a cote hath he furred
 With foynes, or with fichewes, or with fyn beuere."

" Me fyndeth furres of beuers, of lombes, pylches of hares and of conyes. On tressue fourrures d'escusieurs," &c. CAXTON, Boke for Travellers. The beuer hat is mentioned by Chaucer as a part of female attire, and by Hall as worn by the Stradiote light horsemen in 1513.

“ To Crist for all thy Cristen ferys.” Sloane MS. 1986, f. 22 b.

<sup>6</sup> What was the precise kind of cup called byker, or beaker, it is not easy to determine. This word occurs as early as 1348, in the accounts of the Treasurer of Edward, Prince of Wales; “ ii magne pecie argenti, vocate Bikers, emellate in fundo, cum coperculis cum batellis, et ex und parte deauratis.” In this instance they were destined to be presented to ladies. (Beltz, Memor. of the Garter, p. 385.) Becher in German signifies a cup or goblet, as does beker in Dutch, and Teutonic; possibly we derived the vessel to which the name was originally given from Flanders or Germany. Of cognate derivation is the Italian bicchiero. In the later Latinity bacar, baccharium have the same meaning; see Ducange. The common root of these words was perhaps the Greek buxos, vas habens ancas. MENAGE.

<sup>7</sup> “ Beckeryng, scrimyshe, mésée. Bicker, fyghtyng, escarmouche.” PALSG. “ Anon after the fylde began to beker.” NORM. Skinner suggests the Welsh bicre, confictus, as the etymon of this word, which, however, he inclines to think of Anglo-Saxon origin.

Elyot explains lauer to be "an herbe growyng in the water, lyke to alisaunder, but hauyng lese leaues. Some do call it bylders."

<sup>4</sup> This word signifies a person who stammers, or has any defect in his speech. The

Ortus renders “traulus, a ratelare.” It appears in Ducange that balbus and blesus are synonymous with traulus; the first of these is rendered in Cooper’s Thesaurus, one “that cannot well pronounce wordes, a maffier in the mouth.”

’ Blanket is taken from the French blanchet, woollen cloth, no doubt of a white colour; the distinction here made is not very clear, but lodix appears to have been a bed-covering, as we now use the word blanket, langellus, blanket cloth generally. “Langeul, langair, blanchet, drap de laine.” ROQUEF. The Medulla explains lodex to be “a blanchet or a whytile;” the latter word, which is merely a version of the French, is still retained in North Britain to denote a woollen wrapper used by females. “Lodix, quicquid in lecto supponitur, et proprie pannus villosus, Anglice, a blanket.” ORT. VOC. See hereafter DAGGYSEWEYNE, lodix.

The operation of cupping, which is one of ancient use, was doubtless well known to the Friar of Lynn, <sup>5</sup> The word suffetyn', which occurs here only, and is not found in the other MSS., or the printed editions, may be an erroneous reading, but possibly it is a corruption of the French word souffleter, to cuff on the ear. Jamieson gives the verb to souff, or strike.

<sup>6</sup> Skinner gives "Buffet-stole, vox agro Linc. usitatisima, est autem sella levior portatilis, sine ulla cubitorum aut dorsi fulcro, credo parum deflexo sensu à G. buffet, mensa; mensa enim vicem satius commode supplere potest." The buffet, however, was the court-cupboard, in France termed also the credence, and under this a low stool without a back might be placed, but for what special purpose does not appear. Hickes derives the word from A.S. beod, mensa, and fæt, vas. Forby explains the buffet-stool in Norfolk to be a four-legged stool set on a frame like a table, and serving as the poor man's sideboard, stool, or table. In the History of Hawsted by Sir John Cullum, p. 25, the bequest occurs in 1553, of "a buffed stool," which is explained to be an oval stool, without a back, and generally having a hole in the seat, for the convenience of lifting it. The Inventory of the effects of Katharine Lady Hedworth, 1568, comprises the following articles: "In my Ladyes Chamber, 2 cupbords, 6s. 8d. 2 cupbord stoullies, 3s. 4d. 3 buffett formes, 3s. one little buffet stole, 6d." Wills and Invent. i. 282, printed by the Surtees Society. See hereafter BUFFETT stole.

VOC. This word is from the old French boste, bostia, in late Latinity busta, or bustula, and these are derived from pyxis, or, as Menage supposes, from buxus, the material chiefly employed. See Buist, in Jamieson.

The Wyclifite version renders Matt. ix. 16, "No man puttith a clout of boystous cloth into an olde clothing;" in the original the sense is raw, unwrought cloth.

<sup>5</sup> "Buckeram, bougueram." PALSG. In medieval Latinity boquerannus. DUC. If it signified a coarse-grained cloth, the name may be of French derivation, from bourre, flocks of wool, and grain, but some ancient writers describe it as telæ subtilis species. See MENAGE. William Thomas, in his Principal Rules of Italian Grammar, 1548, renders "bucherame, buckeramme, and some there is white, made of bombase, so thinne that a man mai see through it."

<sup>6</sup> The Catholicon explains flegmen to be, "tumor sanguinis. Item flegmina sunt quando in manibus et pedibus callosi sulci sunt." It would appear to be the same as a bunnian, the derivation of which has been traced from the French, "bigne, bosse, enflure, tumeur." ROQUEF. Cotgrave renders it a bump or knob, and he gives also "Bigne, club-footed." Sir Thos. Browne, Forby, and Moore, give the word bunny, a small swelling caused by a fall or blow; in Essex "a boine on the head." In Cullum's Hawsted, among the words of local use, is given bunny, a swelling from a blow.

Grose says bracket is in the North a drink compounded of honey and spices. See bragwort, in Jamieson and Nares. Harrison, who lived in Essex about 1575, relates in his description of England, prefixed to Hollinshed's Chronicles, ii. c. 6, how his wife was accustomed to make brackwoort, reserving a portion of the woort unmixed with hops, which she shut up close, allowing no air to come to it till it became yellow, calling it brackwort, or charwort, to which finally she added arras, and bay-berryes powdered.

<sup>5</sup> It is not a little singular to find so many notices as occur of Brasil-wood, considerably anterior to the discovery of Brasil, by the Portuguese Captain, Peter Alvarez Capralis, which occurred 3d May, 1500. He named it the land of the Holy Cross, "since of store of that wood, called Brasill." Purchas's Pilgrimes, vol. i. It is probable that some wood which supplied a red dye, had been brought from the East Indies, and received the name of Brasil, long previous to the discovery of America. See Huetiana, p. 268. In the Canterbury Tales, the host, commanding the Nonne's preste for his health and vigour, says,

"Him nedeth not his colour for to dien,
With Brasil, ne with grain of Portingale."

<sup>1</sup> Brawne, which Tooke conjectured to be boaren, flesh being understood, was applied anciently in a more general sense than at present. The etymology of the word may be traced with much probability to the Latin, aprugnum, calum. Piers Ploughman speaks of "brawn and blod of the goos, bacon and colhopes;" and Chaucer in the Knight's Tale applies the word, as it has been here, to the muscular parts of the human frame.

" His limmes gret, his braunes hard and strong."

The gloss on Gautier de Bibelesworth gives the word in this sense,

" En la jambe est la sure, (the caalf.)

"As berteiches monterent, et au mur guerneit." Roman de Rou.

In Lydgate's Troy we read that,

"Every tower bretexed was so clene."

In a contract made at Durham in 1401, is the clause, "Et supra istas fenestras faciet in utroque muro ailours, et bretissementa battellata."

With some false turne the bribour will him quite." LYDGATE.

In Piers Ploughman bribors are classed with "pilors and pikeharnois." In Rot. Parl. 22 Edw. IV. n. 30, are mentioned persons who "have stolen and bribed signetts;" that is, young swans. "A bribur, circumforaneus, lustro, nicefanta." CATH. ANGL. "To bribe, pull, pyll, briber, Romant, dérobber. He bribeth, and he polleth, and he gothe to worke." FALSEG.

debat and brige by his outrage." Roquesfort gives "Briga, querelle, démêlé, combat. Brigueux, querelleur :" and Cotgrave "Brigue, contention, altercation." Skinner would however trace the word to A.S. brice, ruptura. Horman says, "beware of such brygous matters (abstineas omni calumnia), for thou oughtest nat to hold courisly agaynst thy maister." See Briga, in Kennett's Glossary.

<sup>1</sup> "Lumbare, Anglice a breke-gyrdle, cingulum circa lumbos, et dicitur a lumbis, quia eo cinguntur et religantur, vel quia lumbis inheret. Item dicitur et coxale, et bracharium, et renale, sed proprie renale quod renibus assignatur, sicut ventrale circa ventrem cingulum." O.R. VOC. from the Catholicon. "Braccale, braccarium, a breke-girdul. Marcipium, a brigirdele." MED. "Perisoma, braygurdylle." Harl. MS. 1002, f. 116. The terms brekegirdle and bygirdle are occasionally confounded together, and it may be questioned which of the two was here intended : the latter is the Anglo-Saxon bigyrdel, zona, saccus, fiscus, which properly signifies a purse attached to the girdle. In this sense it occurs in P. Ploughman, "the bagges and the bigirdles." Vision, lin. 5072. "A bygyrdylle, marsupium, renale." CATH. ANGL. "Renale, a bygyrdylle, est zona circa renes. Brachile, i. lumbare, dicitur etiam cingulum renum, a bygyrdell. Cruma vel crumena est bursa, vel saccus pecunie, vel marsupium, a bygyrdell." O.R. VOC. On the Northern coast of Norfolk, opposite Burnham Westgate, is an island of singular shape, resembling the letter S : it is about a mile in length, following the direction of its tortuous form, and very narrow throughout. It still bears the name of Bridgirdle, evidently from its supposed similarity to the ancient article of dress called the BRYGYRDYLE. See No. LXIX. of the Ordnance Survey.

<sup>3</sup> This word occurs in R. Brunne, and Chaucer. See also Gawayn and Golagros. "He come lyke a breme bare." Sir Amadas. "Brimme, feirse, fier." FALSG. A.S. bremman, furere. In the dialects of Norfolk and Suffolk, brim is retained only in the following sense, "a brymmynge as a bore or a sowe doth, en rouyr." FALSG. "To bryme, subare." CATH. ANGL. Elyot renders "subo, to brymme as a boore doth, whan he getteth pygges." See further in Ray, Jamieson, and Forby.

The word bryse is, however, probably taken more directly from the French. Palsgrave gives "to brie or bray herbes or suche like in a morter, briser." In the curious treatise of the virtues of herbs, Roy. MS. 18 A. vi. f. 72 b. is mentioned "bryse-wort, or bou-wort, or daysye, consolida minor, good to breke booches."

<sup>3</sup> The broche was an ornament common to both sexes; of the largesse of Queen Guenever it is related, "Everych knyjt she þaf broche other ryng." LAUNFAL MILES. "Fibula, a boton, or broche, prykke, or a pynne, or a lace. Monile, ornamentum est quod solet ex feminarum pendere collo, quod alio nomine dicitur firmaculum, a broche." ORT. VOC. The jewel which it was usual about the commencement of the XVIth Century to wear in the cap, was called broche. Palsgrave gives "Broche for ones cappe, broche, ymage, ataiche, afficquet. Make this brotche fast in your cappe. Broche with a scripture, deuse." The beautiful designs of Holbein executed for Henry VIII. and preserved in Sloane. MS. 5308, afford the best examples of ornaments of this description. See also the Privy Purse Expenses of the Princess Mary, edited by Sir F. Madden.

<sup>4</sup> Broaches are explained by Forby to be "rods of sallow, or other tough and pliant wood split, sharpened at each end, and bent in the middle; used by thatchers to pierce and fix their work. Fr. broche."

of brewis in the North of England. BROCKETT. Huloet, in the reign of Edward VI. speaks of " browesse, made with bread and fat meat."

" A proverbe sayde in ful old langage,
That tendre browyce made with a mary-boon,
For fieble stomakes is holsum in potage."

Lydgate, Order of Fooles, Harl. MS. 2251, f. 303.

The Latin-English Vocabulary, Roy. MS. 17. C. XVII. gives " browys, adepatum, brewett, garrus," distinguishing these two words, as the Promptorium does. Brewes is derived from the plural of A.S. briw, jusculum, but brewett is a word adopted from the French, brouet, potage or broth. Palsgrave, however, gives " brewesse, potage of fysshe or fleshee, brouet."

<sup>1</sup> In the Forme of Cury, and other books of ancient cookery, will be found a variety of recipes for making brewets, such as brewet of Almony, or Germany, of ayrenne, or eggs, eels and other fish in bruet. In a MS. of the XVth century, in the possession of Sir Thomas Phillipps, No. 8336, occur " Bruet sec, bruete salmene, and bruete sarazineys blanc." The word seems to have been applied generally to any description of potage, but Roquefort defines the original meaning of brouet as " chaudeau, et ce que les nouveaux mariés donnaient à leurs compagnons pour boire, le jour de leurs noces."

<sup>2</sup> Gautier de Bibelesworth, in his Tretyz de Langage, written in the reign of Edward I. gives a detailed and curious account of malting and brewing, " de breser, et de bracer." Arund. MS. 220. In Harrison's Description of Britaine, Book ii. ch. 6. prefixed to Holinshed's Chronicles, will be found a minute description of the process of brewing, as practised in the Eastern counties in the XVIth century.

<sup>3</sup> "Bugle beast, beagle." PALSG. "Bugle, buffle, bœuf sauvage." ROQUEF. "Buffie, buffes or bugles, wild beasts like oxen, urii. Buffe leather, alute bubalina." BARET. "Preciousse cuppis be made of bugull hornys, urorum cornibus, non bubalorum." HORM. The bugle was introduced into England in 1252, as a present to Richard, Earl of Cornwall, brother of Henry III. "Misi sunt Comiti Richardo de partibus transmarinis Bubali, pars vero sexus masculini, pars feminiti, ut in his partibus occidentalibus, ipsa animalia non prius hic visa multiplicarentur. Est autem Bubalus genus jumenti bovi consimile, ad onera portanda vel trahenda aptissimum, cocodrillo inimicissimum, undis amicum, magnis cornibus communitum." Matt. Paris.

<sup>4</sup> "Bultyd, sass, boulting clothe or bulter, blateau. To boulte meale, bulter." PALSG. He gives the word also in a metaphorical sense, "to boulte out a mater, trye out the trouthe in a doubtfull thyng, saicher." See bulter-cloth, in Kennett's Glossary.

<sup>5</sup> "To bomme as a fly dothe, or husse, bruire. This waspe bommeth about myne eare, I am afraied leste she stynge me." PALSG.

<sup>6</sup> "To bounche or pusshe one; he buncheth me and beateth me, il me pouesse. Thou bunchest me so that I can nat syt in rest by the." PALSG. "He came home with a face all to bounded, contusid." HORM.

<sup>7</sup> The Harl. MS. appears here to be faulty, and the correct reading probably is, BUNNE, kyx. See hereafter KYX, or bunnes or drye weed. A.S. bune, stifula. In Joh. Arderne's Chirurgica, Sloane MS. 56, p. 3, in a list of French and English names of plants, occurs "chaugnot, i. bunes;" the reading should probably be chenevette, which signifies the stalk of hemp. Forby and Moore give bunds or bund-weed, as the name by which in the Eastern counties weeds infesting grass land are known. Jamieson explains bune to be the inner part of the stalk of flax, or the core.

<sup>4</sup> Burr signifies in Norfolk, according to Forby, a mistiness around the moon ; and in North Britain a halo is termed brugh, brogh, or brough ; Jamieson suggests from its encircling the moon like the circular fortifications which are also called brugh. Ang. S. beorg, munimentum. The expression, " a burre about the moone " occurs in " Whim-zies, or a new cast of Characters," p. 173. The same derivation may possibly apply to the terms, burr of a lance, which is a projecting circular ring that protected the hand ; as also the burr of a stag's horn, or projecting rim by which it is surrounded close to the head.

<sup>5</sup> " A buske, arbustum, dumus, frutex, rubus." CATH. ANGL. Buske or boske, as bush was anciently written, occurs in R. Brunne and Chaucer. Spenser uses the word bushets, and boskie is to be found in Shakespeare, Tempest, Act IV. In old French bosc and boschet. ROQUEF.

" Pur aketoun ly bayle blaunche char e pure, Pur cadaz e cououn de saunk fu le encusture." MS. Heber, No. 8336.

In the petition against excess of apparel, 1463, it is thus mentioned; " No yoman, &c. to were in the array for his body eny bolsters, nor stiffe of woole, coton, or cadas, nor other stuffer in his doubtlet, save lynyng accordyng to the same." ROT. PARL. " Cadas or crule, saijete." PALSG. " Cadace pour faire capiton, the tow, or coursest part of silke, whereof sleaue is made." COTER. Nares explains caddis to be a sort of worsted lace.

<sup>3</sup> Caddow is still the name given to the jackdaw in Norfolk, as Coles and Forby have recorded. Palsgrave gives " Caddawe a byrde, chucas," and Withal renders " Caddow or dawe, nodulus." " Monedula, a chougue or cades." ELYOT. Keo is from A.S. ceo, cornix. See hereafter coo BYRDE, or schowhe.

<sup>4</sup> The quantity of fish contained in a cade is determined by the Accounts of the Cellarist of Berking Abbey, MON. ANG. I. 83: " a barrel of herryng shold contene 1000, and a cade of herryng six hundredth, sixscore to the hundredth." Palsgrave renders cade, escade, but the word does not occur in the Dictionaries. In 1511 it appears by the Northumberland Household Book, that the cade of red herring was rated at 6s. 4d. the cade of " sprotts, 2s." The spirling mentioned here was the smelt, called in French esperlan. See hereafter SPIRLYNGE, epimera.

"Also fulle of caltrappys hyt was sette

As meschys beth made wythinne a nette." Archæol. xxi. p. 51.

"They hydde pretely vnder the gronde caltrappys of yron to steke in horse or mennys fete, murices ferreos leviter condiderunt." HORM. Chaussetrappe is explained by Cotgrave to be an "iron engine of warre made with four sharp points, whereof one, howsoever it is cast, ever stands upward." Among the "municyons and habyllments of warre" belonging to Berwick castle, 1539, occur "15 pece of lettes calteroopes." Archæol. xi. 439. Caltraps are mentioned by Quintus Curtius in the Life of Alexander as having been spread over the ground by the Persians to annoy the Macedonian cavalry. This circumstance is thus described, Kyng Alisaunder, line 6070 :

" And calketrappen maden ynowe,
In weyes undur wode and bowe,
Alisaundris men to aquelle,
And synfulliche heom to spille."

Vegetius calls them tribuli. A representation of a caltrap, from the Tower collection, will be found in Skelton's Illustrations of the Armoury at Goodrich Court, ii. pl. 132.

Hence also the sea-gull appears to have received a name, which is given by Elyot, "Candosoccus, a sea-gull, or a camose." See Camy, and Camow-nosed, in Jamieson's Dictionary.

<sup>1</sup> Forby and Moore have given ample illustrations of the nature of the game at ball called to this day in Norfolk and Suffolk, camping: the former agrees with Ray, in deriving the word from the A. Sax. campian, prælari. The camping-land appropriated to this game occurs, in several instances, in authorities of the fifteenth century; in Cullum's Hawsted, mention is found, in 1466, of the camping-pightle.

The term occurs also in "the Auture of Arther at the Tarnewathelan." Hall, in his account of the marriage of the Princess Mary to Lewis XII. at Paris, in 1514, describes the entry of the Dauphin, whose "apparell and bardes were cloth of golde, cloth of syluer, and crymsyn velvet kanteled together." Hall's Chron. 6 Hen. VIII. Roquefort gives " Chantel, un morceau de pain," from canellus. See Ducange, and Mon. Angl. i. 411. cappe or a cope; caracalla, a sclauyn or a cape." DICT. WILBR. "A cope." ORT. Pilleum, according to the Catholicon, signifies a garment made of skins, but in its more usual sense, a covering for the head. In early times the cappa was an ordinary upper garment worn by ecclesiastics indiscriminately, and Egbert, Abp. of York, ordained in the eighth century that none of the clergy should appear in the church "sine collobo vel cappâ." Of the various modifications of this vestment, and the names by which they were distinguished, a detailed account will be found in Ducange. At a later period the cope was a vestment reserved for occasions of ceremony: when worn by prelates and dignitaries, the richest tissues were chosen, and covered with a gorgeous display of jewels, orfrays, and embroidery; but its use was not confined to them, for with the exception of the priest officiating at the altar, who was vested in the sacred garments appropriated to the service of the mass, the cope appears to have been worn by all the assisting clergy, and even the choristers. In A. SAX. the name cappa, or cappa, was adopted from the Latin, probably as early as the mission of St. Augustine, A.D. 601; and a cappa oloserica, one of the gifts of Gregory the Great, was preserved at Canterbury until the Reformation. See hereafter COPE, cappa.

"Why ne hadst thou put the capell in the lathe." Reve's Tale.

"The knyȝt kacheȝ his caple and com to the lawe." Gawain and the Green Knyȝt, lin. 2175.

"Capull, a horse, roussin." PALSG. Cotgrave explains roussin to be "a curtall, a strong German horse." Elyot gives "Caballus, a horse; yet in some partes of England they do call an horse a cable."

signification of to carry. Caxton says, in the Boke for Travellers, "Richer the carter shall lede dong (mettra) on my land, whan it shall be ered, and on my herber (courtill) when it shall be doluen."

<sup>1</sup> "Casings, stercus siccum jumentorum, quod pauperes agri Lincolnensis ad usum soci colligunt; a Teut. Koth, simus, q. d. cothongs." SKINNER. In the North, according to Brockett, casings, or cassons, are cow-dung dried for fuel. It is still the usage in the neighbourhood of Lynn to employ cow-dung for this purpose. Richards' Hist. i. 80.

<sup>4</sup> In the middle ages a metrical system of ethics, entitled "Disticha de moribus ad fidium," attributed to Dionysius Cato, or Magnus Cato, had attained the highest degree of estimation. It was illustrated by the comments of the most learned men of several centuries, and served as a manual for the instruction of youth. It is not certain who was the author; a translation from the Latin was made about 1480, by Benedict Burgh, Archdeacon of Colchester, for the use of his pupil Lord Bourchier; and in 1483 Caxton published his translation from a French version, entitled "The Booke called Cathon." Chaucer frequently quotes Cato: see Miller's Tale, 3227, Marchaunt's Tale, 9261. Caxton says in the Boke for Travellers, "George the booke sellar hath doctrinalis, catons, oures of our Lady, Donettis, partis, accidents." See Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 166. Dibdin's Typogr. Antiq. i. 195.

<sup>5</sup> Caucyon may here signify a pledge, as in Palsgrave, "causion, pledge, caution." See hereafter WEDDE, or thynge leydy yn plegge. The Catholicon, however, explains cautio to be a simple promise, without oath, pledge, or surety, but idonea cautio, implied those additional securities. It is further interpreted to be a writing, as Papias says "cautio est breve recordationis chiographum. Unde in Evang. Luc.: Accipe cautionem tuam." In the Wycliffe Version this passage is rendered "and he seide to him, take thy caucion and wryte fifty," Luke xvi. 6.

<sup>3</sup> Cotgrave renders "cautelle, a wile, cautell, sleight, guilefull devise, subtily." Fabian relates that in 1448, the town of Pont-de-l'arche was taken by the "cautele" of the Frenchmen, who introduced two men disguised as carpenters; and Hall, speaking of the same occurrence, calls it "a praty cautelle and slighte imposture." In Elyot's Librarie occurs "Offuciae, cawtelles, crafty wayes to deceyue."

<sup>7</sup> The name sedge is now applied indiscriminately to the genus carex, which probably from the stiffness of its growth was called also stare. In Su. G. it is denominated starr,

<sup>2</sup> The Catholicon explains celo to signify sculpere, pingere, and celamen or celatura, sculptured or painted decoration. Lydgate in the Troye Boke uses the word celatura to describe vaulted work of an elaborate character. It appears doubtful whether the verb to cele, and the word ceiling, which is still in familiar use, are derivable from celo, or may not be traced more directly to caelum and the French ciel, signifying not only vaulting or ceiling, but also the canopy or baldagin over an altar; the hangings of estate over a throne, which are sometimes termed dais, from the throne being placed in the part of the apartment to which that name properly belonged; and lastly the canopy of a bed, “celler for a bedde, ciel de lit.” PALSG. Gervase of Dover uses the term in his graphic description of the conflagration of Canterbury Cathedral in 1174, occasioned by sparks having been carried by the wind, and lodged between the roof and the interior vaulting of the church; “caelum inferius egregie depictum, superius vero tabula plumbea ignem interius accensum celaverunt.” Twysden, Hist. Angl. Script. 1289. Thomas Stubbs, among the benefactions of Aldred, Archbishop of York 1061—1070, records that “totam ecclesiam à presbyterio usque ad turrim ab antecessore suo constructam, superius opere pictorio quod caelum vocant, auro multiformiter intermixta mirabiliter arte construxit.” Ibid. 1704. The word had a still further signification, denoting, not merely the decoration of the vaulting or roof of a chamber, but also the wainscot-work upon the walls. Thus Horman says, “These wallys shal be celyd with cyprusse. The rofe shal be celed vautwyse and with cheker work.” See hereafter SYLURE of valle, and SELYN wythe sylure.

<sup>1</sup> "A seyne, sinodus, est congregacio clericorum." CATH. ANGL. Ceene or a synod is from the French "senne, assemblée de gens d'Eglise; de cœnaculum, lieu d'assem- blée, suivant Barbazon." ROQUEF. Sené is explained by Cotgrave to be "a Synod or assembly of curates before their Ordinarie or Diocesan." "Cene of clerkes, con- uocation." PALSG. In the Legenda Aurea mention is made of the "Ceene of Calcydone." f. xxvi.

<sup>2</sup> Tessera is rendered in the Ortus "a dyce," and texera has the same meaning; the Catholicon, however, gives another explanation, "Texere dicuntur lapides quadrati ad modum talorum, unde pavimenta sternuntur." There can be little doubt that the token of an inn, here referred to, is the ancient sign of the chequers, scaccarium, the chess-board or playing tables. It has been questioned whether this symbol denoted in England, as it did where it occurs at Pompeii, a house of entertainment where play was practised, or rather had its origin in the painted lattices at the doors and windows, which, as has been affirmed, were part of the external indications of an hostelry as late as 1700; the ordinary use of such lattices is mentioned by Harrison in his description of England. "Of old time our countrie houses in stead of glasse did vse much lattise, and that made either of wicker or fine rifts of oke in checker-wise." B. ii. c. 12, in Holinshed. Among the deeds and benefactions of Thomas Chillenden, Prior of the church of Canterbury from 1390 to 1411, it is recorded in the obituary, "in civitate Cantuariae unum Hospitium fa- morum, vocatum le Cheker, nobiliter ædificavit; in eadem civitate Hospitium de la Crowne." ANG. SACRA, i. 143. The "red lattice" is a term often used to signify an ale house; Shakespeare alludes to it, Hen. IV. pt. ii.; it occurs in Marston, Chapman, and other early dramatists, and Massinger speaks of the "red grates next the door" of a tavern. Of this and other inn-signs see Brand's Popular Antiqu. ii. 247, Gent. Mag. xl. 403, lxiii. 531, lxiv. 797.

<sup>3</sup> The term helix was applied to denote the volute of a capital, but here it seems pos- sible that the term relates to a spiral or newel-staircase. There was however, a military

Mais le lyure (þe bok) nous aprent clergy.” Arund. MS. 220.

It occurs not unfrequently in Chaucer and Gower. In 1441 a complaint was made by the King's tenants of the forest of Knaresborough, that the Archbishop of York prevented their coming to Ripon, “ so that none might utter their caffer, wherewith to pay his (the King's) farme att tearmes accustomed.” Plumpton Corresp. p. liv. “ Chaffre, ware.” PALSG.

<sup>4</sup> The term chare seems to have been the earliest appellation in England, of vehicles used to convey persons of distinction. It has been derived from the Anglo-Saxon cyran, vertiere, but probably we derived both the vehicle and its appellation from France, where, as early as 1294, the use of the char had become so prevalent that it was forbidden to the wives of citizens by an ordinance of Philippe le Bel. A description of the rich chare prepared for the Princess of Hungary, will be found in the Squyr of low degree, Ellis's Specimens, vol. i.; and is beautifully illustrated by an illumination in the Louterell Psalter, executed in the reign of Edward II. See Mr. Rokewode's valuable paper in the Vetus Mon. vol. vi. plate xx. A variety of representations are also given by Mr. Markland, with his remarks on the early use of carriages in England, Archæol. xx. 443. The appellation chare continued in use in the 16th century. Hormann says, "the quylene came in a chare, pilento. He came in a chare or a wagen." It occurs in Hall and Fabian; and in Strype's Memoirs, Edward VI. 1557, is mentioned a "chain drawn by six chariot horses."

<sup>3</sup> Of the office of the chandeler in the household of a great lord, see the curious poem appended to the Boke of Curtasye, written about the time of Henry VI. Sloane MS. 1986, f. 46, b.

" Now speke I wylle a lyttle whyle
 Of the chandeler wyth-outen gyle,
 That torches and tortes and preketes con make,
 Perchours, smale condel, I vndertake."

Chandler signified not only the maker of candles, but the candlestick, from the French chandelier. Thus in the Legenda Aurea mention occurs of a "chaundeler or candyl-stycke," f. vii. b. See above CANDELERE, and the word chandler in Jamieson.

<sup>5</sup> It has been stated that the usage of chanting in the English churches was introduced by Osmund, Bishop of Sarum, 1090; but we learn from Bede that Benedict, Abbot of Weremouth, brought Abbot John, the arch-chanter, from Rome to this country, about A.D. 678, at which period Archbishop Theodoric, a Greek by birth, made a visitation of the whole island, and caused instruction to be given in the art " sonos cantandi in ecclesiis," until then known only in Kent. Bede states even that at an earlier period in the same century Paulinus left at York James the Deacon, who was " cantandi in ecclesiis peritissimus," and who " magister ecclesiastice cantionis juxta morem Romanorum, seu Cantuariorum multis caput existere." Bede, lib. ii. 40. See also lib. iv. 3, and v. 20, and the appendix, edit. by Smith, p. 719. The most important treatises on the subject of Church Music are those of St. Nicetus in the VIIth century, and Aurelian in the IXth, subsequent to the great change introduced by St. Gregory. A curious notice of the ancient system of notation has been given among the " Instructions du Comité Historique. Collection de documents inédits." 1839. Chanting or " deschaunt" was among the practices violently opposed by Wickliffe, as was all Church-melody by the innovators of a later period.

Ang. Sax. ceapian, negotiari. The following use of the substantive occurs in the Will of Sir John Lumley, 1420, "I wille þat my brothre William haue þe landes and rentys betir chepe þen any oþir man, by a reasonable some." Wills published by the Surtees Society, i. 63. Caxton in the Boke for Travellers says, "he byeth in tyme and at hour, so that he hath not of the dere chepe, du chier marchiet."

<sup>3</sup> "Ut dicit Papias, Egones sunt sacerdotes rusticci." CATH. In the Glossary of St. Isidore of Seville, who lived in the VIIth century, occur "Econes, sacerdotes rusticci. Egones, sacerdotes rusticorum." The compiler of the Promptorium was a Friar-Preacher, and the insertion of this word may possibly be attributed to the contentious feeling which subsisted between the monastic orders and the secular clergy. The illiterate condition, however, of the rural or "uplandish" clergy brought them generally into contempt, and occasioned their receiving the nick-name "Sir Jóhn," and other appellations of invidious obloquy.

<sup>3</sup> Shingles of wood, a covering both light and durable, were probably still, at the time the Promptorium was compiled, in very general use for roofing houses, although the regulations for the dimension of the various kinds of tiles are a proof of their being likewise employed to a considerable extent. See Stat. 17 Edw. IV. c. 4. A.D. 1477. The term seems derived from the French echandole, or Latin scindula, and is occasionally written shindles. See Holland's Pliny, B. xvi. c. 10. Piers Ploughman terms Noah's ark a "shyngledo shup," an expression that seems to bear some analogy to the Ang. Sax. scide-weall, murus de scindulis congestus. ELFRIC. See SCHYNGYL.

<sup>5</sup> The Latin-English Vocabulary, Roy MS. 17 C. XVII. gives "arena, gravell, sabulum, sande, glaria, chesylle," f. 37, and again, f. 56. "nomina lapidum, glaria, chesylle." The etymology of the name Chesil Bank, in Dorsetshire, a singular bank of pebbles, which extends nearly seven miles S.E. from Abbotsbury, and abuts at Chesilton on the isle of Portland, is here clearly ascertained. See prefixed to Holinshed's Chron. the description of the Chesill, by Harrison, Descr. of Brit. p. 58. Harrison speaks also of the Chesill at Seaton in Devonshire, where he says "the mouth of the Axe is closed by a mighty bar of pibble stones," p. 59, and copies the account given by Leland, Itin. iii. f. 42, "the men of Seton began of late day to stake and make a mayne waulle withyn the Haven—and ther to have trenchid thorough the chisille, and to have let out the Ax, and receyvid in the mayn se. But this purpose cam not to effect. Me thought that nature most wrought to trench the chisil hard to Seton Town, and ther to let in the se." In this instance the term chisel seems to accord with the explanation given in the Medulla, "Glarea, argilla, vel primum lapides quos aqua fluvialis trahit." Harl. MS. 2257. It implies, however, in a more general sense the pebbles on the shore; thus in the Coventry Mysteries, p. 56, is the following paraphrase of Genes. xxii. 17.

"As sond in the sea dothe ebbe and flowe, Hath cheselys many unnumerable."

In the Wycliffite version this passage is rendered "gravel which is in be brink of be see." Ang. Sax. ceosel, glarea, sabulum. Teut. kesel. In Norfolk chirrly signifies dry and harsh under the teeth, which Forby derives from Teut. kiese, gluma. The Latin-English Vocabulary, Harl. MS. 1002, f. 147, gives among "pertinencia pistriue, Cantabrum, anglie chycelle."

<sup>3</sup> See hereafter SYYD, as clothys. Talaris. This term, which is retained in Norfolk, implies commonly merely the length of a garment, "syde as a gowne, defurcas," CATH. ANG. from Ang. Sax. sid, amplus, latus. The reason of its special application here to clothes that are threadbare is not apparent, unless it were, that garments in such condition, losing the swelling folds that new stuffs would form, and hanging close to the sides, give the figure a lengthy and lean appearance.

<sup>1</sup> The drain of a lavatory seems to be here alluded to, such as that with which the lavacrum or piscina on the south side of the altar was invariably supplied, which allowed the water that had served for washing the sacred vessels, and for the ablutions during the service of the altar, to sink into the earth: or generally in reference to such provisions for cleanliness as are to be observed in most monastic establishments, as especially the lavatories in the cloisters at Chester and Worcester Cathedrals. Mergulus, however, usually signifies the sink of a lamp, wherein the wick was placed.

 in its most usual sense a compounded drink of wine with honey and spices, so delicious as to be comparable to the nectar of the Gods.

"For of the Goddes the vsage is,
 That who so him forsweareth amis,
 Shall that yeere drinke no clarre." Chaucer, Rom. of Rose.

In the original Romance pigment, claré, and vin parée are named together, and in the Merchant's Tale Januarie is said to indulge in consoling spiced drinks, "Ipocras, clareie and vernage." Barth. Anglicus gives a description of the mode of compounding claret, lib. 19, de propriet. rerum, c. 56; and recipes "ad faciendum claretum" occur in Sloan. MSS. 1986, f. 14, b. and 3548, f. 105. The following directions are found in Sloan. MS. 2584, f. 173. "To make Clarre. Take a galoun of honi, and skome it

" Al the clergie under Crist
Ne myghte me cracche fro helle,
But oonliche love and leautee." Vision, 6866.

<sup>3</sup> This term is derived from the Latin, or more directly, perhaps, from the French, "closier, petit clos fermé de haies." ROQUEF. Horman says, "these byrdis muste be kepte in with a rayle, or a closer latis wyse, clathro." See CLOSERE of bokys or ober lyke.

<sup>4</sup> Cambuca is rendered in the Medulla Grammatice, " a buschoppys cros, or a crokid staf." See hereafter CROCE of a byschope. The term CLEY-STAFFE seems to be taken from the similarity of the head of the pastoral staff, in its simplest form, resembling the ancient lituus, to the claw of an animal, which here, as by Gower, is written cle. "Cley of a beste, ungula." CATH. ANG. In Norfolk the pronunciation cleyes is still retained.

<sup>3</sup> The word clergy, signifying erudition suitable to the office, in the sense given to the word in the King's Coll. MS. of the Promptorium, is thus used also in Piers Ploughman's Vision,

See the word clargie, in Jamieson. "Clergie, science, littérature, savoir." ROQUEF.

Clough, a deep fissure or ravine, is a name still retained at Lynn, at a spot described by Forby. Ang. Sax. clough, fissura ad montis clivum. See also cleuch and cleugh in Jamieson, and Brockett's Northern words.

" Par clicket et cerure, (lacche and lok)
Ert la mesoun le plus sure." Arund. MS. 220, f. 302, b.

Chaucer, however, uses the word in the sense that is here given to it, "clavicula, a lytel keye." ORTUS. Thus in the Merchant's Tale,

" _____ he wold suffre no wight bere the key,
Sauf he himself, for of the smal wiket
He bare alway of silver a cliket."

<sup>3</sup> " be clippys of be sone and moyne, eclypisis. To make clippys, eclipticare." CATH. ANG. Chaucer, comparing the course of love to that of the moon, says that it is like the planet,

" Now bright, now clipsy of manere,
And whilom dimme and whilom clere."

<sup>1</sup> "A clotte, cespis, occarium. To clotte, occare. A clottynge malle, occatorium." CATH. ANG. "Occo, glebas frangere, to clotte." ORTUS. In the Medulla, Harl. MS. 2257, occur "glebarius, a clotte maller. Gleba est durus cespes cum herbâ, an harde klotte." Palsgrave gives the verb to clodde as signifying the formation, and not the breaking up of clods. "To clodde, go in-to heapes, or in to peces, as the yerthe dothe, amoneeler. This yerthe clotteth so faste that it must be broken. To clodde, figer, fortier, congeeler." Compare CLOTERYN.

<sup>2</sup> A note, copied by Hearne from a copy of the Promptorium, states that the compiler of the work was "frater Ricardus Fraunces, inter quatuor parietes pro Christo inclusus." See Hearne's Glossary to Langtoft's Chron. under the word Nesshe. If, however, it had been true that he had belonged to the order of Anchorites, who were called inclusi, or reclusi, it seems probable that some indication of the fact would have here occurred. The dwelling of the Anchorite, domus inclusi, or clauorium, appears to have often immediately adjoined the church, and is doubtless in many instances still to be distinguished. The ritual for his benediction will be found in Martene, Antiq. Rit. lib. iii. c. 3. Palsgrave gives the verb "to close up in a wall, or bytwene walles, ensuuer. Cankest thou fynde in thy herte to be an Anker, to be closed up in a wall?" See hereafter RECLUSE.

<sup>3</sup> Compare CLAUSURE, or clos. Jamieson gives closeris, enclosures, and closerris, which he conjectures may signify clasps. In Norfolk Forby observes that the cover of a book is called clodger, which he supposes to be derived from the French, closier, as the term codger is corrupted from coster, a cobler.

coarse stockings without feet, used as gaiters. In a MS. of the Medulla in the Editor's possession, Culponeus is rendered "a carl stoghe," (in the Ortus "a chorles shoo,") with this additional explanation, "vel a Cokyr, ut dicit Campus florum." Piers Ploughman speaks of his "cokeres," Vision, line 3915, and they may be seen in the curious drawing in a MS. of the Poem in the Library Trin. Coll. Cant. an engraving from which is given in Shaw's Dresses. Elyot gives "Carpatinæ ploughmen's bootes made of vntanned lether, they maye be called cokers. Peronatus, he that weareth rawe lether shoen, boteux, or cokars lyke a ploughman." Librarie, 1542.

<sup>4</sup> Elyot renders "Sepia, a fyshe called a cuttell. Loligo, a fyshe whiche hath his head betwene his feete and his bealy, and hath also two bones, oone lyke a knyfe, the other lyke a penne." The Sepia officinalis, which is found commonly on the coasts of Britain, is not properly a fish, but belongs to Cuvier's great division of Molluscous animals, and the class of Céphalopodes. Ang. Sax. cudele, sepia. See hereafter, COTULL.

<sup>3</sup> "A coknay, ambro, mammotrophus, delicius. Versus, Delicius qui deliciis a matre nutritur." CATH. ANG. The term coknay appears in the Promptorium to imply simply a child spoiled by too much indulgence; thus likewise in the Medulla, "Mammotrophus, qui diu sugit. Mammotrophus mammam longo qui tempore servat, Kokenay dicatur, noster sic sermo notatur." There can be little doubt that the word is to be traced to the imaginary region "ihote Cokayne," described in the curious poem given by Hickes, Gramm. A. Sax. p. 231, and apparently translated from the French. Compare "le Fabliaus de Coquaigne." Fabl. Barbazan et Méon. iv. 175. Palsgrave gives the verb "To bring up lyke a cocknaye, mignoter;" and Elyot renders "delicias facere, to play the cockney." "Dodeliner, to bring vp wantonly, as a cockney," Hollyband's Treasurie. See also Baret's Alvarie. Chaucer uses the word as a term of contempt, and it occasionally signifies a little cook, coquinator. See further in Douce's Illustrations, King Lear; and Brand's Popular Antiquities, notes on Shrove Tuesday.

The usage of distributing year by year a robe, or some external token of adherence to the service or interests of the personage by whom such general retainer was granted, appears to have commenced during the XIIith century. The gift, whether a robe, a hood, or other outward sign, was termed a livery, liberata, and the practice was carried to so pernicious an extent, that various statutes passed in the reigns of Edward III. Richard II. and Henry IV. by which the use of liveries was restricted or regulated. Mr. Beltz, in his curious article on the Collars of the King's Livery, Retrosp. Review, N. S. ii. 500, states that the first instance on record of conferring such marks of distinction in England is in 1390, when Richard II. distributed his cognisance of the white hart, but the assertion copied from Anstis, that it was pendant from a collar of broom-cods, does not appear to rest on any authority. This collar was, however, presented in 1393 to Richard II. and his three uncles by Charles VI. King of France, whose cognisance it was. Such a “colare del livere du Roi de Fraunce” is mentioned in the Inventories of the Exchequer Treasury, vol. iii. 357. See Mr. J. G. Nichols's interesting observations on the Effigies of Richard II. and his Queen, Archaeol. xxix. 46. The earliest notice of collars of livery, that has been observed, occurs in Rot. Parl. iii. 313, where it appears that when John of Gaunt returned in 1389 from the wars in Spain and Gascony, Richard took his uncle's “livere de coler” from his neck, and wore it himself; that it was also worn by some of the King's retinue; and that Richard declared in Parliament that he wore it in token of affection, as likewise he wore the liveries of his other uncles. It is not improbable that this livery of the Duke of Lancaster's was the collar of letters of SS, subsequently adopted by Henry IV. as his livery, the origin of which is still involved in obscurity. This device had been in use many years before his accession, and as early as 1378 Sir John de Foxle, whose will is preserved in Bishop Wykeham's Register at Winchester, bequeathed “Monile aurum, cum S litera sculpta et amelita in eodem.” The livery of Henry V. during the life-time of his father, was a swan, adopted doubtless in token of his descent from the Bohun family; the Stat. 2 Hen. IV. c. 21, contains a clause “que Monseigneur le Prince purra doner sa honorable liveree de Cigne as seigneurs et a ses meignans gentils;” and such were probably the “Colers d'argent de la livere du Roy,” which are enumerated in the Inventories of the effects of Henry V. taken at his decease, 1423. Rot. Parl. iv. 214. Henry VI. used a collar formed of broom-cods and the letter S alternately, and Edward IV. adopted as his livery a collar of suns and roses, to which a white lion was appended. There is no evidence that collars of livery were ever distributed by subjects, excepting the Princes of the blood.

<sup>2</sup> Of the minor orders in the Christian church, the fourth is that of acolyte, succeeded immediately by that of subdeacon, the first of the greater orders. The functions of the acolyte, consisting chiefly in attendance on the services of the altar, will be found detailed by Martene, or Ducange. By the writers of the XVIth century the orders of "benet and colet" are mentioned not infrequently together. See above BENETT, ordyr, Exorcista. <sup>1</sup> "To cone, to cunne, scire." CATH. ANG. "Cognoscere, scientiam habere, to conne." ORTUS. To conne is used in this sense by Chaucer, and in the Wycliffite version, 1 Cor. ii. 2, is rendered thus, "I deeme not me to kunne ony thing." Caxton remarks in the Boke for Travellers, "It is a good thyng to conne a good craft, scavoir." So likewise in the Legenda Aurea, f. 92, b. "O who sholde conne shewe hereupon the secretes of thyne herte!" Palgrave gives "to konne, learne or knowe, scavoir. I can konne more by herte in a day, than he can in a weke;" and "to conne thanke, or can one good thanke, scavoir bon gré." "Thou shalt kun me thanke." <sup>3</sup> This word is used by Lydgate in the Concord of Company, Minor Poems, p. 174.
"With them that ferret robbe conyngers."

Among the Privy Purse expenses of Henry VII. is a payment in 1493, "for making of the Conyngerthe pale." Horman observes that "warens and conygers and parkis palydde occupie moche grounde nat inhabitaunt, leporaria sive lagotrophia." Elyot gives "Vivarium, a counnyngar, a parke;" and Thomas, in his Italian Grammar, 1548, uses the word to denote a pleasure, or enclosed garden, "Horli di Venere, the womans secrete connyngers." "Cony garthe, garenne. Cony hole or clapar, tais-niere, terrier, clappier." PALSG. In the Paston Letters, iv. 426, the term "konyne closse" occurs in the same sense. In almost every county in England, near to ancient dwelling-places, the name Coneygare, Conigree, or Coneygarth occurs, and various conjectures have been made respecting its derivation, which, however, is sufficiently obvious. See Mr. Hartshorne's observations on names of places, Salopia Antiqua, p. 258.

<sup>4</sup> Coinoun, or koniou, occurs in Kyng Alisaundar, and is explained by Weber as signifying coward, or scoundrel, from the French coion, which has that meaning.

<sup>5</sup> The first record of a mint at Lynn, where the Promptorium was compiled, occurs in 9th John, 1208, but there was possibly one in earlier times, and the name occurs on the coins of Edgar. Parkins supposes that it fell into disuse about 1344, 18 Edw. III.; and he states that the Bishop of Norwich had also a mint there, but the fact is questionable. See Blomefield's Hist. Norf. iv. p. 582, and Ruding's Annals of the Coinage, ii. 198.

<sup>1</sup> The Latin-English Vocabulary, Harl. MS. 1587, gives “summitas, coppe,” namely, of a steeple. In the Wyclifite version, Luke iv. 29 is thus rendered, “And they ledden him to the coppe of the hil, on which her cytee was bildid, to cast him down.” The crest on bird’s head likewise was thus termed, “Cop, cirrus, crista, est avium ut galli vel alaude.” CATH. ANG. The gloss on Gautier de Bibelesworth explains “geline hupē, coppede hen;” and Elyot gives “Stymphalide, a coppe of fethers, whiche standeth on the head of a byrde.” In Norfolk, the term coppole-crown still has this meaning. Horman says, “Somtyme men were coppid cappis like a sugar-lofe,” and uses the term “a cop heydyd felowe, cilō,” which is explained by Elyot as having great round forehead; and again, “Homer declaryng a very folyshe and an haskard felowe under the person of Therasyte, sayth that he was copheed lyke a gygge, vertice acuminato.” Cotgrave renders “pignon, a finial, cop, or small pinnacle on the ridge of a house.” The epithet is applied to the pointed shoe, or poleyn, in fashion in the XVth century. “Milleus, a copped shoo.” oarus. Ang. Sax. cop, aper.

<sup>3</sup> The Catholicon explains capitellum as signifying merely the capital of a column, but in the Medulla it is rendered “summa pars capituli;” and in this sense, coporne signifying the apex or pinnacle, the work with which a tower, or any ornamental construction, is crowned, may perhaps be regarded as a diminutive of coppe. The term occurs in a curious description of a castle, written about the time of Richard II.

A round tower appears to have had the appellation of a fyell, a phiol, or fylyole, not as Ruddiman conjectures, from fola, a vial, but from phala. " Fala, a tour of tre." MED. GRAMM. In the description of Belshazzar's feast, in another poem of the same time, cited by Sir F. Madden in his notes on Sir Gawayn, it is said of the covered cups which were fashioned like embattled castles,

" The coperounes of the canacles, that on the cuppe reres, Wer fetysely formed out in fylyoles longe."

<sup>1</sup> See hereafter CRASKE, or fryke of fatte, a word which seems to be derivable as a corruption from crassus, or the French cras. Crank, which occurs here in the printed editions of the Promptorium, usually signifies sickly or feeble, but in Kent and Sussex it has the sense of merry or brisk; the reading is, however, questionable, as the word crank does not occur in these editions subsequently, but craske, as in the MSS.

The kind of leather to which this name was applied was originally prepared at Corduba, and thence, according to Junius and Menage, received the appellation.

<sup>1</sup> In N. Britain a temporary building or shed is called a corf, or corf-house, signifying, as Jamieson observes, a hole or hiding place, Ang. Sax. crypta, or perhaps approaching most nearly to Isl. korbae, tuguriolum. The floating basket used on the Suffolk coast to keep lobsters, is called, as Forby states, a corf or coy; and it seems possible that this appellation may have been given to the shepherd's hut, from its being formed with wattles, like a rudely-fashioned basket. Caxton, in the Boke for Travellers, calls a basket a "corffe, or mande."

<sup>2</sup> A distinction seems to be made in the Promptorium between the cormuse and the BAGGE-PYPE, panduce, a word which has occurred previously. Chaucer speaks of the great multitude that he saw in the House of Fame,

" That made loud Minstralcies
In cornmuse and shalmies." Book iii.

In the Romance of the Rose he describes the discordant sounds produced by Wicked Tongue "with hornepipes of cornewaille," evidently identical with the cornmuse. Palgrave renders "Bagge-pype, cornemuse," in low Latin, "cornemusa, vox ab Italie et Hispanie usurpata, uter symphoniacus." DUC. Hawkins has given in the Hist. of Music, vol. ii. 453, a representation of the cornamus or bagpipe, copied from the Musurgia of Luscinius, published at Strasburg, 1536. Dr. Burney observes that "the cornmuse was the name of a horn or Cornish pipe, blown like our bagpipe." Vol. ii. 270. This instrument appears to have been in favour as an accompaniment of the dance. Roquefort gives it another appellation, cutive; and in the list of Minstrels who played before Edward I. in 1306, when Prince Edward was knighted, are found Hamond Lestivour, and Geffrai le Estivour. See the volume presented to the Roxburgh Club by Mr. Botfield, on Manners and Household Expenses in England, p. 142.

is fully explained by Durandus. See Lyndwood's Observations on the Constitutions of Abp. Walter Reynold, 1322, p. 235. The Constit. of the Bishops of Worcester in 1229 and 1240, required that in every Church should be provided "duo paria corporalium," and the Synod of Exeter in 1287, ordained that in every Church should be "duo corporalia cum repositoriis." Wilkins, Conc. i. 623, 666, ii. 139. The repository, or case wherein the corporas was enclosed, when not in use, was richly embroidered, or adorned with precious stones; it was termed likewise theca, capsa, or bursa corporalium. See the inventories of the gorgeous vestments and ornaments at St. Paul's, 1295, Mon. Angl. iii. 321. "Corporale, alba palla in altari, Anglice, a corporalle." ORTUS. <sup>2</sup> "A coyseyr of hors, mango. To coyse, alterare, et cetera ubi to chawnge." CATH. ANG. To cose signifies in N. Britain, according to Jamieson, to exchange or barter. In Octavian dealer in horses is termed a "coseere." See Weber's Metr. Rom. iii. 191. Norman says, "Corsers of horses (mangones) by false menys make them fiske freesse." "He can horse you as well as all the corsers in the towne, couriers de chevaux." PALSG.

hangings with which the side-walls of a hall were garnished, previously to the more general use of wainscot, appear to have been termed custers. The name was applied likewise to hangings, either in a church at the sides of the choir, or in a hall near the high table, as a kind of screen, or even to the curtains of a bed. In the Register of the ornaments of the Royal Chapel at Windsor, taken 1385, 8 Ric. II. under the head of "Panis," several are enumerated. "Duo costers panni magni de Velvetto, pro principibus diebus, rubei et viridis coloris, cum magnis imaginibus stantibus in tabernaculo." Mon. Ang. T. iii. part 2, p. 81. Ralph Nevill, Earl of Westmorland, bequeathed in 1424 to his wife a third part of his estate, "cum uno lecto de Arras operato cum auro, cum costeris eidem pertinentibus et concordantibus;" and to his son Richard another bed of Arras, "cum costeris paled de colore rubeo viridi et albo, qui solebant pendere in magnâ camerâ infra castrum de Sherifhoton." Madox, Formul. p. 432.

"And by a riuere forth I gan costeie."

Palsgrave gives the verb "to coste a countrey or place, ryde, go, or sayle about it, costier or costoyer. To hym that coulde coste the contray, there is a nerer way by syxe myle."

<sup>3</sup> Chaucer, in the Legend of Hypermestre, relates that her father Danao gave her "a costrell" filled with a narcotic, in order to poison her husband Lino. "A costrelle, oneferum, et cetera ubi flakett. A flakett, flacta, obba, uter, et cetera ubi a potte." CATH. ANG. A MS. of the XIVth century, which gives the explanation of words that occur in the Missal, contains the following interpretation: "Uter, Anglice a botel, sed collateralis, Anglice, a costrelle. De cote dicis utres, de ligno collaterales." M. Paris gives a curious relation of poison discovered in the year 1258, concealed in certain vessels, "qua costrelli vocantur." Costerellum or costeretum, in old French costeret, signified a certain measure of wine, or other liquids; and a costrell seems to have been properly a small wooden barrel, so called because it might be carried at the side, such as is carried by a labourer as his provision for the day, still termed a costril in the Craven dialect.

tibus, Earl of Albemarle, who died 1260, still exists, and an engraving of it is given in the Vetusta Monum. VI. plate 18. Among the earliest representations may be mentioned the effigies at Salisbury of William Longespee, who died 1266, and of a knight of the De l'Isle family at Rampton, Cambridgeshire. See Stothard's Monumental Effigies. Sir Thomas de la More relates that the Earl of Gloucester was slain at Bannockburn, 1314, in consequence of his neglecting to put on his insignia, termed in the Latin translation "togam propriae armaturae." Chaucer relates that the heralds after the conflict distinguished Arcita and Palamon by their "cote armure," as they lay in the "tas" severely wounded. Knight's Tale, 1018. An early instance of the use of the term coat-armour occurs in the Close Roll, 2 Edw. III. 1328, where the King commands the keeper of his wardrobe to render up "omnes armaturas, tam cotearmurs quam alias," which had belonged to Bartholomew de Badlesmere, deceased, for the use of Giles his son, to whom the King had given them. Rymer, iv. 371. During the reign of Edward III. the surcote gave place to the jupon, and this was succeeded, about the time that the Promptorium was compiled, by the tabard, the latest fashion of a garment armorially decorated, and the prototype of that which is still worn by the heralds and pursuivants.

that "cowde is an old English word, signifying a gobbet, morcell, or peece of any thing cut out," but he appears to have taken it from the Promptorium, and Skinner gives it on his authority. Possibly cowdx may have some analogy with cud, which in the Promptorium is written cood. See above CHEW the cood. Ang. Sax. cud, rumen.

<sup>2</sup> Among the virtues of "horhowne," as stated in a translation of Macer's Treatise on Plants, MS. XVth Cent. belonging to Hugh W. Diamond, Esq. is the following: "bis erbe y-dronke in olde wyne helpib; be kynges hoste, and be comone coghe eke." In another place a decoction of roots of "skyrewhite" is recommended to heal "be chynke and be olde coghe." Skinner says the hooping-cough was termed in Lincolnshire kin-cough, and derives the word from the Belg. kinckhost, and the verb kinchen, difficulter spirare. See hereafter HOOSZ, or cowghe, and HOSTYÑ.

<sup>4</sup> The cope was originally worn with a hood, which at a subsequent time was represented only by embroidery on the back. Hence, probably, this garment was sometimes termed a cowle. Chaucer repeatedly terms the monastic habit a cope. See the description of Huberd the Frere, who was not like a "closterere,"

" With thredbare cope as is a poure scolere.
Of double worsted was his semicope,
That round was as a belle, out of the presse."

<sup>5</sup> " Tina, vas vinarium amplissimum." ORTUS. In the accounts of the churchwardens of Walden, in Essex, occurs a charge in 27 Hen. VI. 1448, for a "cowle pro aqua benedicta, x.d." Hist. of Audley End, by Lord Braybrooke. In Essex the term cowle is applied at the present time to any description of tub. See Kennett's Glossary, under the word cowele; he supposes it to be derived from cucula, a vessel shaped like a boat.

culstaffe." ORTUS. "Courge, a stang, pale-staffe, or cole-staffe, carried on the shoulder, and notched for the hanging of a pale, at both ends." COTGR. In Caxton's Mirrour of the World, c. 10, A.D. 1481, it is related that in Ynde "the clustures of grapes ben so grete and so fulle of muste, that two men ben gretly charged to bere one of them only vpon a colestaff." In Hoole's translation of the Orbis sensualium by Comenius, 1658, is given a representation of the cole-staff (ærumnna) used for bearing a burden between two persons, p. 135; and again at p. 113, where it appears as used by brewers to carry to the cellar the newly-made beer in "soes," or tubs with two handles (labra), called also cowls. In Brand's Popular Antiquities, ii. 107, will be found an account of the local custom of riding the cowl-staff, or stang.

<sup>1</sup> At the period when the Promptorium was compiled, calculations were usually made by means of the abacus, or counting-board, and counters, which were chiefly the pieces of base metal to which the name of Nuremburgh tokens has commonly been given. The "augrim stones" mentioned by Chaucer in the Miller's Tale, where he describes the clerk of Oxford's study, probably served the same purpose. Palsgrave gives "counters to cast a count with, iect, iecton." The science of calculation termed algorism had, however, been partially introduced. See above AWGRYM. The term counter signified also the table on which such accounts were cast, and even the counting-house, in which last sense it occurs in Chaucer, where it is related that the Merchant's wife went to call her husband,

"And knocketh at his countour boldely." Shipman's Tale.

A curious representation of the counter-table occurs in drawings of the time of Edward II. in Sloane MS. 3983. In a letter from Margaret Paston to her husband, about 1459, regarding some alterations in his house, is the following passage: "I have take the measure in the draute cham'yr, as ye wold yo' cofors and yo' countewery shuld be sette for the whyle, and y' is no space besyde the bedd, thow the bedd wer remevyd to the dore, for to sette bothe yo' bord and yo' cofors ther, and to have space to go and sytte besyde." Paston Letters, iii. 324. At a later time there appears to have been a piece of ordinary furniture in the hall of a mansion termed a counter, probably from its resemblance to the table properly so called. In the Inventories printed by the Surtees Society, mention frequently occurs of the counter and the counter-cloths; as likewise of "doble counters, counters of the myddell bynde, Flanders counters with their car-pets." Wills and Invent. i. 133, 154, 158.

"A shereve had he ben, and a countour." Cant. Tales, Prol.

A countour appears to have been one retained to defend a cause or plead for another, in old French, conter. See the Stat. 3 Edw. I. c. 24, against deceit or collusion by pleaders, "serjaunt, contour, ou autre," who being convicted, should suffer imprisonment, and never again be heard "en la Court le Rey, a conter pur nulluy." It may, however, be questionable whether Chaucer used the term in this sense, and it seems possible that escheator may be meant; the office like that of sheriff was held for a limited time, and was served only by the gentry of name and station in their county.

<sup>2</sup> Creel is given by Moore as a word not frequently used in Suffolk; Forby does not mention it, but it occurs in the Craven dialect, and signifies an ozier basket, or crate. See Jamieson's Dictionary. Roquefort explains creil as signifying a hurdle, craticula. LEPE occurs hereafter.

<sup>4</sup> Precioustone, MS. "Crapaude, a precious stone, crapaudine." PALSG. Cotgrave explains crapaudine as signifying the stone chelonitis, or the toad-stone. The precious stone found, as it was asserted, in the head of a toad, was supposed to possess many virtues, and especially as a preservative against poison. On some of these stones, according to Albertus Magnus, the figure of the animal was imprinted; these were of a green colour, and termed crapaudina, being possibly the kind here called smaragdus, a name which properly denotes the emerald. These stones were known also by the appellations borax, brontia, chelonitis, nise, batrachites, or ceraunia. In the Metrical Romance entitled Emare is described a rich vesture, thickly set with gems, rubies, topaze, "crapowtes and nakette;" the word is also written "crapawtes." Crest-tiles, pierced with an ornamental open pattern, were to be seen on the roof of the ancient hall of the Templars, at Temple Balsall, Warwickshire. In Hall's Chron. are described "creates karued wyth vinettes and trailes of sauge woorke," which ornamented the Banqueting-house prepared at Greenwich in 1527. Reprint, pp. 606, 722. <sup>5</sup> The pastoral staff with a curved head, to which the appellation CLEYSTAFFE has been given previously in the Promptorium, was called croce, crosse, croche, or crutch, words derived from the French croce or croche. " Croce, litius, ce nom vient de croc, pour ce qu'une croce est crochue." NICOT. In Piers Ploughman's Vision, line 5089, it is said that Do-best " bereth a bisshopes crosse," with one extremity hooked: and at the consecration of a church, according to the Legenda Aurea, " the byshop gooth all aboute thre tymes, and at every tyme that he cometh to that dore, he knocketh with his crosse," in the Latin original, " baculo pastorali." Chaucer uses the word croce. " Crosse for a bysshoppes crosse." PALSG. " Pedum, croche." Vocab. BOY. MS. 17 C. XVII. " Cambuca, a crutche." ORTUS. " A cruche, cambuca, pedum." CATH. ANGL. A costly " cruche" occurs in the Inventory taken at Fountains Abbey, and published by Burton. In Ang. Sax. cruce signifies both a cross and a crook, and from similarity of sound between cross and croce, words perfectly distinct in their derivation, some confusion of terms has arisen, especially as regards the usual acceptance of the word crosier, which has been supposed to be incorrect. Crosier, however, properly signifies the pastoral staff, or croce, the incurved head of which was termed in French crosseron, part of the insignia of Bishops: thus in Brooke's Book of Precedents it appears, that at the marriage of Philip and Mary in 1554, the Bishops present had their "crosiers carried before them." Lel. Coll. iv. 398. Fox says that Bonner, who was then Bishop of London, at the degradation of Dr. Taylor in 1555, would not strike him with his "crosier-staff" upon the breast, lest he should strike again. Minshew says that "croce is a shepherd's crooke in our old English; hence the staffe of a Bishop is called the croicer or crosier."

<sup>1</sup> "A croser, cruciferarius, crucifer," CATH. ANG. In the relation of the martyrdom of St. Thomas of Canterbury it is said that "one Syr Edward Gryme, that was his croyser, put forth his arme with the crosse to bere of the stroke, and the stroke smote the crosse on sonder." Legenda Aur. At the first progress of Henry VII. after his coronation, during the solemnities at York, the Archbishop's "suffragan was croyser, and bar the Archebishop's crosse." Lel. Coll. III. 192. It appears, however, by the Promptorium, that the appellation CROCRE denoted also the bearer of a pastoral staff, or crosier. In this sense Higgins, in the version of Junius' Nomenclator, 1585, renders "litus, a crosier's staffe, or a Bishop's staffe."

<sup>3</sup> Forby gives crop, as the name applied to the craw of a bird, Teut. krop, stomachus; according to Jamieson it signifies the same in N. Britain, and also the human stomach. Ang. Sax. cropp, gutturis vesicula.

"Nowe stante the croppe vnder the rote,
The world is chaunged ouerall." Conf. Am. Prologue.

<sup>2</sup> Of the barrow, called in the Romance of Sir Amiloun a " croude wain," and still called in the Eastern Counties a crud-barrow, some notice has been taken under the word BAROWE. The use of the verb occurs in the following passage, after the description of the leprous knight being placed in the barrow,

" Then Amoraunt crud Sir Amiloun Thurch mani cuntre vp and down." Amis and Amiloun.

Moore gives the verb to crowd as signifying in Suffolk to push or shove.

<sup>3</sup> This term, as well as several others of synonymous meaning, appear to be onomatopeias, and to be traced to their similarity of sound to the noise which they express. The Medulla explains coate to be " vox ranarum, croudyng of padokys." Palsgrave gives " to crowle, crouiller. My bely crowleth, I wene there be some padokes in it." Hormann says, " his bely maketh a great crowlyng, patitur bothorygmon." In N. Britain to crowd, according to Ruddiman, signifies the noise of frogs. See Jamieson.

called cruets, in Latin phialæ, urceoli, amulæ, in French burettes, chennellettes, &c. The Constitutions of Walter de Cantilupe in 1240 require that in every church there should be " due phialæ, una vinaria, altera aquaria;" and at the Synod of Exeter in 1287 it was ordained that there should be " tres phiale." Wilkins, Concil. i. 666, ii. 139. Among the costly bequests of the Black Prince in 1376 to our Lady's altar at Canterbury, are mentioned " deux cruelz taillez come deux angeles, pur servir à meeme l'autier perpetuellement." Horman, under the head of things sacred, says, " Have pure wyne and water in the cruettes, amulæ."

<sup>1</sup> In Norfolk, according to Forby, crush or crush signifies cartilage, or soft bones, and in Suffolk crussel or skrussel has a similar meaning. Ang. Sax. gristl-ban.

<sup>3</sup> The smallest Anglo-Saxon coin was the stycia, of which two were equal to a farthing. Ruding observes that the stycas appear identical with the " minuta," Domed. i. f. 268, and the passage rendered in the Saxon Gospels, " twegen stycas," is in the Wicklifite version, " tweie mynutes, that is a farthing." Mark, xii. 42. See MYNUTE hereafter. In Duncombe's Hist. of Reculver is given a mortmayne grant, dated 13 Henry VI. 1435, in which half a farthing is named as a portion of rent paid to the Hospital of Herbaldowne, namely, " xxv schelynges, and the halfin dell of an fierdynge of rente, and rente geldyng of a quat' of ber, and an henne and a half, a certell (scella) and þe iij parte of a certell," &c. Bibl. Top. i. 151. At the time however that the Promptorium was compiled it does not appear that there was actually a coin of this value; the mite, as well as its equivalent, called here a cu, were merely terms retained in calculation, and the latter was commonly used at Oxford at a much later period. It is thus explained by Minsheu, who completed his first edition in that University. " A cue, i. halfe a farthing, so called because they set down in the Battling or Butterie booke in Oxford and Cambridge the letter q. for halfe a farthing, and in Oxford when they make that cue or q. a farthing, they say, Cap my q. and make it a farthing, thus q<sup>a</sup>. But in Cambridge they use this letter, a little s. for a farthing, and when they demand a farthing bread or beare, they say a seize of bread or beare. Latin, calculus, a cue of bread." The abbreviation q. did not, it plainly appears, always stand as at present for quadrans, a farthing, but denoted a value of only half that amount; and it seems possible that cue or q. may have been an abbreviation of " calculus, quarta pars oboli." ORTUS. The term cue occurs in Beaumont and Fletcher. See Nares's Glossary.

<sup>1</sup> " Terbichetum, a cokstole." ORTUS. " Cokestole, cuckestole, selle a ricaldes." PALSG. The earliest mention of this mode of punishing female offenders occurs in the laws of Chester in the time of Edward the Confessor, as stated in Domesd. i. f. 262, b. The fine for using false measures was fixed at 4 shillings; " similiter malam cervisiam faciens, aut in cathedra ponebatur stercoris, aut iij sol. dabat prepositis." It was called in Ang. Sax. " scæfing-stol, sella urinatoria, in quā rixosae mulieres sedentes aquis demergabantur." SOMNER. The pillory for male offenders, anducking-stool for females, were essentially appendant to the view of frank-pledge, or Leet: inquest was ordered to be made respecting the sufficient provision of both, by the Stat. assigned to 51 Hen. III. c. 6; and among the " Capitula Escacrie," one of the duties of the Escheator is declared to be inquiry " de pilloriis et tumbrellis sine licentia Regis levatis." Stat. of Realm, i. 201, 240. It was termed, perhaps from its resemblance to a warlike engine so called, trebuchet, or trebuchetum. See hereafter TREBGET for werre. By Bracton it is spoken of as tymbarella, and in the Statutes tumbrellus, appellations likewise derived from its construction. An instance of the jealousy with which any unauthorized assumption of this manorial right of punishment was repressed, occurs in the Chron. of Jocelin de Brakelond, p. 38, where it is related that about 1190 certain encroachments were made on the privileges of the Abbot of St. Edmund's Bury, in the manor of Illegh; " levaverunt homines de Illega quoddam trebuchet ad faciendam justiciam pro falsis mensuris panis vel bladi mensurandi, unde conquestratus est abbas." This punishment was chiefly inflicted in early times on brewers, who are spoken of always as females, for any transgression of the assize of ale, " Braciatrix (paciat) trebuchetum vel castigatorium;" in Scotland it was used in like manner. Stat. of Realm, i. 201, and Skene's Reg. Majest. It became subsequently the punishment of scolds, and women of immoral or disorderly life; thus in the town of Montgomery such offenders were adjudged to suffer the penalty " de la Goging-stoole," as appears by a MS. cited in Blount's Tenures; in the Leet Book of Coventry mention occurs in 1423, of the " cokestowle made upon Chelmsore grene to punysche skolders and chidders, as y<sup>e</sup> law wyll:" and items of account are found so late as 1623, which show that the punishment still continued to be used in that city. Of the " coke-stool" at Norwich, which was to be provided by the gild of St. George, see Blomf. Hist. ii. 739; an account of expenses connected with another at Kingston-on-Thames is given in Lysons's Env. i. 233; and in Lord Braybrooke's Hist. of Audley End, p. 261, are mentioned payments so late as the year 1613, at Saffron Walden, where the scene of such punishments at the end of the High Street is spoken of in 1484 as the " cokstul hend." In 1555 Mary Queen of Scots enacted that itinerant singing women should be put on the cuckstools of every burgh or town; and the first Homily against contention, part 3, published in 1562, sets forth that " in all well ordred cities common brawlers and scolders be punished with a notable kind of paine, as to be set on the cucking-stole, pillory, or such like." An original cuckling-stool, of ancient and rude construction, was preserved in the crypt under the chancel of St. Mary's, Warwick, where may still be seen the three-wheeled carriage upon which was suspended by a long balanced pole a chair which could readily be lowered into the water, when the cumbersome vehicle had been rolled into a convenient situation. This chair is still in existence at Warwick. Another cuckling-stool, differently contrived, may be seen at Ipswich in the Custom House; it appears to have been used by means of a sort of a crane, whereby the victim was slung into the river, and is represented in the Hist. of Ipswich, published 1830, and Gent. Mag. Jan. 1831. More detailed information on this curious subject will be found in the

 The culpons flegh out in the feldes." Ywaine and Gawin, 641.

Hoveden, speaking of the livery allowed to the King of Scotland at the court of King Richard in 1194, says he had "40 grossos longos colpones de dominical candelis Regis." Chaucer says of the long hair of the Pardonner, which hung "by vnces" on his shoulders, " Full thinne it laie, by culpons one and one." Cant. Tales, Prologue.

" Culpon that trout" is given as the proper term of the art, in the "Boke of Kervyn," 1508. "Culpit, a large lump of any thing." FORBY.

<sup>2</sup> The Persicaria hydropiper, Linn. was called culrage, from the French, "curage, culrage, the hearbe water-pepper, arse-smart, killridge or culerage." COTGR. Its aphrodisiac properties are thus alluded to by Piers of Fulham,

" An erbe is cause of all this rage
 In our tongue called culrage." Hartshorne, Metr. Tales, 133.

conuenant, it will accord perfectly with the French word. In the Romance of Sir Amadas, "conande" occurs in the sense of a covenant:

"The conande was gud and fynne." Weber, Metr. Rom. line 700.

In Mr. Robson's edition the word is printed "couand," possibly a contraction of "couenand," which is found in the context. See stanzas 63, 64, the Anturs of Arther, st. 16, and Avowyng of King Arther, s. 38, where occurs the same word "couand."

<sup>1</sup> Compline, called in Latin Completorium, completa, or complenda, "quod catena diurna officia compleat et claudit," iuc. is the service with which in monastic establishments the day closed, after which, by the rule of St. Benedict, all converse was forbidden. It was called in Ang. Sax. niht-sang, vespertina cantio, completorium, and Abbot Ælfric speaks of it in his pastoral Epistle translated from Latin into the language of England, by order, as he states, of Abp. Wulstan. The seven canonical hours, that the four synods had appointed for daily services of praise to God, are in this epistle stated to be matins with the after song appertaining thereto, prime, tierce, sext, none, vespers and compline (niht-sang). Ancient Laws and Institutes, ii. 377. See also the Regularis concordia Engl. nationis monachorum. Amalarius says, "completatorium ideo dicitur quia in eo completetur quotidianus usus cibi vel potus, seu locutio communis." De Ecccl. Offic. lib. iv. c. 8. The hour of compline is stated by Fuller, in his Church History, B. vi. 278, to have been at 7 o'clock, but in Davies' rites of the Church of Durham, it is fixed at an earlier hour.

In the contract for building Hengrave Hall, in 1538, is the following clause; "the hall to have ii. coberds, one benethe at the sper (screen) with a tremor, and another at the hygher tables ende without doors." Falsgrave gives "cupborde of plate, or to sette plate upon, buffet: cupborde to putte meate in, dressouer. Methinke my cupborde is ungarnysshed, nowe I wante my salte celler." Cotgrave renders "Buffet, a court-cupboard, or high standing cupboard; also a cupboard of plate. Dressoir, a court cupboard (without box or drawer)."

<sup>1</sup> The origin of the curfew in England is generally ascribed to the Conqueror, by whom it was imposed in token of servitude, but the assertion seems to rest on no sufficient authority, and no mention of the usage occurs in the Stat. de nocturnis custodiis. Ancient Laws and Instit. i. 491. Dr. Henry observes that the custom prevailed, at the time of the Conquest, in France, and probably in all the countries of Europe, and was intended merely as a precaution against fires, at a time when cities were constructed chiefly of wood. It has been stated also that the custom was abolished by Henry II. The Statutes of the City of London, 13 Edw. I. enjoin that no one shall be found in the streets "apres couerfu persone à Seint Martyn le graunt." Stat. of Realm, i. 102. Couere feu, or carfou in France was rung at 7 in the evening, but in some places at a later hour in summer, and there was also a bell at daybreak. See Pasquier, iv. 18, and Menage. In England the hour of ringing the curfew was eight, Wats, however, gives nine as the hour in summer; that hour is so named in "the Merry Devil of Edmonton," and it was the customary time in Scotland, as appears by Act Parl. 13 James I. 1419, but subsequently was altered to ten. The usage of the curfew is still retained in the Universities, and many towns and villages in England, as is likewise the custom of ringing a bell at day-break, or four o'clock. At Lynn, where the Promptorium was compiled, the largest bell of the principal churches is still tolled at six, both morning and evening, and serves as a signal to labourers and artizans. The salutatio angelica, commonly called the angelus, was recited daily morning and evening, "ad pulsationem ignitegi," an institution ascribed to St. Bonaventure, but more probably, as Ducange observes, to Pope John XXII. at the Council of Sens, 1320. In the Statutes of Lichfield Cathedral, it is ordered as follows: "Est autem ignitegium quilibet nocte per annum pulseandum hord septima post meridiem, exceptis illis festis quibus matutina dicuntur post completorium." In the Institutions of Guarin, Abbot of St. Alban's, who died 1195, the curfew is called pyritegium. Matt. Paris. The Medulla renders "ignitegium, a coure feu," in the Orctus "a fyrepanne," alluding perhaps to such an implement for extinguishing the fire, as is represented in Antiqu. Repert. i. 89, and which was afterwards in the possession of Horace Walpole at Strawberry Hill. "Courfewe, a ryngyng of bellen towarde euenyng, courfes." FALSO. In the Romance of the Seuyn Sages the word is repeatedly written "corfour bell." VIth Tale. "Curfur, ignitegium." CATH. ANGL. See curfure in Jamieson. Spelman gives the Ang. Sax. curfu-bell, but it is not found in Lye. See further on this subject Brand's Popular Antiqu. ii. 136, and Barrington on the Anc. Stat. 133.

Richard, Harl. MS. 1319. Archæologia, vol. xx. Chaucer uses also the diminutive dagon; thus in the Sompnoures Tale the importunate Friar, who went from house to house to collect anything he could lay hands upon, craves "a dagon of your blanket, leve dame." Ang. Sax. "dag, anything that is loose, dagling, dangling." SOMN.

" And symple rayment doth serue us full well,
With dagswaynes and roudges we be content."

Harrison relates in the description of England, written in Essex during the reign of Elizabeth, that the old men in his village used to say, "our fathers (yea and we our selues also) haue lien full oft ypon straw pallets, on rough mats couered onelie with a sheet under couerlets made of dagwain, or hopharlots (I vse their owne termes) and a good round log vnder their heads instead of a bolster." Holinshed, Chron. i. 188.

<sup>3</sup> The Council of Worcester, in 1240, ordained regarding the Clergy, "nec ludant ad aleas vel taxillos;" the latter game was probably the same which is here termed DAYLY, but in what respect it differed from ordinary dice-play has not been ascertained. Ducange supposes it may have been the same as the French "trictrac, ludus scrupulorum." Horman says that "men pley with 3 dice, and chilidren with 4 dalies, astragulis vel talis." Wolde God I conde nat playe at the dalys, aleam. Cutte this fleshe into daleys, tessellas."

<sup>4</sup> Delk, according to Forby, signifies in Norfolk a small cavity either in the soil, or the flesh of the body. In this last sense the gloss on Gautier de Bibelesworth interprets the expression "au cool troueret la fosset, a dalke in be nekke." Arund. MS. 220, f. 297, b.

<sup>5</sup> The dalmatic is a sacred vestment, so named, according to St. Isidore, from its having originated in Dalmatia, and was introduced into the Christian church by St. Silvester, P.P. in the 4th century, as stated by Alcuin, who describes it as "vestimentum in modum crucis, habens in sinistra sud parte fimbrias, dextrâ iis carente, inconsutile, et cum largis manicis" It was specially appropriated to the deacon, who was vested therewith at the time of his ordination, and therefore St. Stephen and St. Laurence, who weredeacons of the Church, are always represented as wearing this vesture. A very interesting portraiture of the former will be found in a MS. of XIth cent. Calig. A. xiv. In early times the dalmatic was ornamented with longitudinal bands, called clavi, which were either of gold, as in the illumination just mentioned, or purple; "Dalmata, vestis sacerdotialis candida cum clavis purpureis." Gloss. S. Isid. Orig. Hence the epithets auroclavus, chrysoclavus, and purpurd clavatus. To these bands were attached at intervals the plagulae, as exhibited in the illumination of the Bible of Charles the Bald at Paris, executed in the IXth century, engraved in Montfaucon Mon. Franc. tom. i, and the splendid work published by the Comte Bastard. See also the curious German Missal, Xth cent. Harl. MS. 2908, and the illumination in Cott. MS. Claud. A. iii. supposed to represent St. Dunstan. In the Ang. Sax. Inventory of sacred ornaments given by Bp. Leofric to the church of Exeter about A.D. 1050, occur "2 dalmatica, 3 pistel roccas." Mon. Angl. i. 222. These last were probably tunicles, vestments appropriated to the order of subdeacon, as was the dalmatic to that of deacon; in effigies and representations that exist in England of ecclesiastics in pontificalibus, both vestments are almost invariably exhibited. The Legate Ottoboni ordained, A.D. 1268, that if any Prelate neglected to punish the immoral conduct of his clergy, "Episcopus a dalmatica, tunice, et sandaliorum usu sit suspensus donec duxerit qua statuta sunt exequenda." Wilkins, Conc. xi. 5.

<sup>2</sup> A very usual sense of the verb to dare, in the old writers, is to gaze about, or stare; Palsgrave gives "to dare, prie or loke about me, je advise alementour. What darest thou on this facyon, me thynketh thou woldest catche larkes?"

"With woodecokkys lerne for to dare." Lydgate, Minor Poems, 174.

The same signification has been assigned, by Tyrwhitt and the commentators on Chaucer, to an expression occurring in the Shipman's Tale, the true import of which appears above to be made clear. Dan John rallies the old merchant's wife on the sluggishness of her spouse:

"an olde appalled wight,
As ben thise wedded men, that lie and dare,
As in a fourme sitteth a very hare."

Chaucer appears evidently here to use dare in the sense given to the word in the Promptorium of lying concealed, as an animal in its den, which is termed hereafter DWERE, or dower. "Dilatesco, to biginne to dare. Lato, to lurk." MED. Cotgrave gives "blotir, to squat, ly close to the ground, like a daring larke, or affrighted fowle."

<sup>1</sup> The derivation of this word appears, according to Skinner and Junius, to be from Ang. Sax. dwæs, hebes, stultus; the Teut. daesen, insanire, phantasmate turbari is more closely assimilated to it. In the Wicliffite version Gen. xxvii. 1 is rendered thus: "Foresothe Isaac wax eld, and hisse ijen dasewiden." The word is repeatedly used by Chaucer.

<sup>3</sup> Palsgrave gives the verbs "to dawbe with clay onely; to daube with lime, plaster, or lome, that is tempered with heare or straw. Dauber, plaqueur." Forby states that a dauber in Norfolk is a builder of walls with clay or mud, mixed with stubble or short straw well beaten and incorporated, and so becoming pretty durable; it is now difficult to find a good dauber. This mode of constructing fences for farm-yards and cottage walls is much used in Suffolk, as appears by Sir John Cullum's account of the process, Hist. of Hawsted, 195, and Moore's explanation of the term "daabing." The proverb given by Ray, "there's craft in dawbing" would make it appear that this mode of construction was once more generally known; in the western counties it is still in continual use, being known by the appellations cob, or rad and dab, a curious article on which, and on the use of concrete in building generally, will be found in Quart. Rev. vol. lviii., 524.

" Thorough his sotile witnes
He daunted a dowve." Vision, line 1042.

In Norfolk to daunt is used in the sense of knocking down, Fr. dompter, as by Palsgrave, "To dawnte, mate, overcome, je matte." Lydgat. This terme is yet scarcely admitted in our comen spechte."

<sup>2</sup> See BARATOWRE. In "the Charge of the Quest of Warmot in euyer Warde," given by Arnold, in the Customs of London, p. 90, inquiry is ordered to be made "yf ther be ony comon ryator, barratur, &c. dwelling wythin the warde." The term is taken from the French, barateur, in low Latin, baraterius, which have the same meaning.

See also line 457. In the same sense it is used in the Wycliffite version, and by Gower. To defy has also the signification of dissolve; thus Master Langfrank of Meleyne in one of his prescriptions, directs certain substances to be compounded, and "make pelotes, and defy one of hem in water of rewe." MS. in the possession of Sir Thomas Phillips. See WYLN, or defyin mete and drynke.

<sup>2</sup> Jamieson observes that deaf signifies properly stupid, and the term is transferred in a more limited sense to the ear. It is also applied to that which has lost its germinating power: thus in the North, as in Devonshire, a rotten nut is called deaf, and barren corn is called deaf corn, an expression literally Ang.-Saxon. An unproductive soil is likewise termed deaf. The plant lantium, or archangel, known by the common names dead or blind nettle, in the Promptorium, has the epithet DEFFE, evidently because it does not possess the stinging property of the true nettle.

<sup>3</sup> " Androchia, deye." Vocab. Harl. MS. 1002. " A deye, Androchius, androchea, genatarius, genetharia. A derye, androchiarium, bestiarium, genethicum." CATH. ANG. The daia is mentioned in Domesday, among assistants in husbandry, and the 2d Stat. 25 Edw. III., A.D. 1351, occasioned by the exorbitant demand for wages made by servants after the pestilence, enacts that " chescun charetter, caruer, chaceour dea carues, bercher, porcher, deye et tous autres servantz " should be content with such rate of wages as had been previously usual, and serve not by the day, but the year, or other usual term. The term is again found in Stat. 37 Edw. III., A.D. 1363, c. 14, " de rictu et vestitu, " which defines the homely provision and attire suitable to the estate of " : haretters, &c. bovers, vachers, berchers, porchers, deyes, et touz autres gardenz des bestes, batours des bleez, et toutes maneres des gentz d'estate de garson, entendantz à husbandrie, " not having goods or chattels of 40s. value. The word is rendered here in the translations " deyars, " and " dairymen, " and by Kelham is explained to signify drivers of geese. The Stat. 12 Ric. II. c. 4, A.D. 1388, fixes the wages of all servants for husbandry, and rates the porcher, femme laborer, and deye at vjs. each by the year. The word is here translated " deye " and " deyrie woman. " In the Stat. 23 Hen. VI. c. 12, by which the wages of such servants were assessed at double the previous rate, the term deye is no longer used. It appears by Fleta, l. ii c. 87, de caseatrice, that the androchia was a female servant who had the charge of all that pertained to the " daaria, " and of making cheese and butter. A more detailed account of her duties is given by Alex. Neccham, Abbot of Cirencester, A.D. 1213, in his Summa de nominibus utensilium. " *Assit et androgia (vne baesse) que gallinis ova supponat pullifcancia, et anseribus acera substernat; que agnellois morbidos, non dieo anniculos, in sud teneritate lacte foveat alieno. MS. Titus, D. xx. f. 15 b. The French interlinear gloss which gives here baesse, signifying a female servant of an inferior class, is not contemporary with the MS. This account satisfactorily illustrates Chaucer's description of the poor widow who lived on the produce of her little farm, her three sows and kine, and one sheep; her fare was milk and brown bread in plenty,

" Seinde bacon, and sometime an ey or twey,
For she was as it were a maner dey." Nonnes Priest's Tale.

The deye was sometimes a male servant; thus in the commentary on Neccham it is stated that " androgia dicitur ab andros, vir, et genet, mulier, quia id officium exercitur a viro et muliere," and Bp. Kennett cites the " compotus Henrici Deye et uxoris de exitibus et provenientibus de dayri." A.D. 1407. See the word kevere in his Glossary. Palsgrave gives " dey wyfe, meterie," i. e. métayère, and Shakespeare speaks of the " day woman," Love's Labour's Lost, i. sc. 2. See Douce's Illustrations. Jamieson has discussed the obscure etymology of the word dey. In Gloucestershire and the neighbouring counties day-house signifies dairy house, and many instances are met with among names of places. See Hartshorne's Salopia Antiqua.

Gawain and Greene Knyȝt, 2009.

Palsgrave gives "delyuer of ones lymmes, as they that prove mastryes, souple; delyver, redy, quicke to do anything, agile, deliort; delyueresse of body, somplesse." Thomas, in his Italian Grammar, renders "smello, quicke, deliuer." BEYN, or plyaunte, has already occurred, and bain is still used in Norfolk in the same sense; the word has also, as shown by Jamieson, the sense of alert, lively, active, or of prepared, made ready, as has been observed above in the note on BAYNYD, as benys or pesyn.

<sup>2</sup> The verb to delve, Ang. Sax. delfan, appears to have become obsolete in Norfolk, and is now rarely used in Suffolk, but the substantive delf, a deep ditch or drain, is still retained. The verb occurs frequently in early writers. In the Legenda Aur. occurs this expression, "I have dolphen in the depe erthe;" and it is related that when St. Donate conjured his wife, after her death, to reveal where she had concealed some treasure, "she answered out of the sepulcre, and sayd, at the entre of the hous, where I dalue it." In the Wycliffite version, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 10, the expression occurs, "stonys hewid out of be delues (eber quarrieris)." Cott. MS. Claud. E. ii. "Aurif-della, a gold delfe." Vocab. Harl. MS. 1002. Delph and delf occur not infrequently as names of places in the fenny districts of the Eastern counties.

In the will of Lady Fitzhugh, A.D. 1427, is the bequest, "I wyl yat myn howeshold s'uantz haue departed emāg theym a C. marc." Wills and Inv. Surtees Soc. i, 75. So it is said of Christ in the Legenda Aur. "he shall departe the heete of the fyre fro the resplendor and bryghtnesse." Palsgrave gives the verb, "to departe, deuyde thynges asonder that were myxed or medled together; departe this skayne of threde, dēmeeler. <sup>1</sup> The verb to dere, or hurt, is commonly used by Chaucer, and most writers, until the XVIth century.

Fabyan observes, under the year 1194, "so fast besyd this good Kyng Rycharde to vex and dere the infydelys of Sury." Palsgrave gives "to dere, or hurte, or noye, nuire; I wyll never dere you by my good wyll. To dere, grieve, blecer; a lytell thyngē wyll dere hym." Sir Thomas Browne mentions dere among words peculiar to Norfolk, in which county it still has the sense of sad or dire. See Jamieson. Ang. Sax. derian, nocere, derung, lezio. NOYYNGE occurs hereafter.

<sup>2</sup> The term dese, Fr. deis or daix, Lat. dasium, is used to denote the raised platform which was always found at the upper end of an hall, the table, or, as here in the Promptorium, the seat of distinction placed thereon, and finally the hanging drapery, called also seier, cloth of estate, and in French ciet, suspended over it. With regard to its etymology, various conjectures have been offered by Ducange, Menage, and others. See also Jamieson's Dictionary. Matt. Paris, in his account of the election of John de Hertford, Abbot of St. Alban's, A.D. 1235, and the customary usages on the occasion, says, "solus in refectorio prandebit (electus) supremus, habens vastellum, Priore prandente ad magnam mensam quam Dais vulgariter appellamus." Ducange supposes that vastellum may here mean a canopy or hanging dais, from Ang. Sax. vat, *tegmen, u.
braculum.* Chaucer, in his Prologue, describes the haberdasher and his companions, members of a fraternity, and having the appearance of fair burgeses, such as sit "at a yeld hal, on the hie deys." Gower speaks of a king at his coronation feast, "sittend upon his hie deis." In the Boke of Curtasye, Sloane MS. 1986, f. 17, written about the time of Henry VI. a person coming into the hall of a lord, at the time of first meat, is advised not to forget

"be stuard, countroller, and tresurere Sittand at de deshe bou haylse in fere."

In the ceremonial of the enthronization of Abp. Nevill, A.D. 1464, after the Lord and the strangers had entered, the marshal and other officers were to go towards the "hygh table, and make obeisance, first in the midst of the hall, "and agayne before the hygh dease." Leland, Coll. vi. 8.

<sup>1</sup> This verb is directly taken from the old French descrier, and is by some writers used to denote the enuntiation, or distinction generally of the combatants by their coat armour, either previously to entering the lists, or at other times, duties which devolved upon the heralds.

" Herawdes goode discoverours Har strokes gon descriye." Lybeaus disconus, line 926.

In the Vision of Piers Ploughman occurs an allusion to the usage that heralds of arms "discryued lordes." Palsgrave gives "to discryue or descriyre or declare y<sup>e</sup> facyons or maners of a thyng, blasonner; Ptolemye hath discryued y<sup>e</sup> worlde."

Skinner gives this word as commonly used in Lincolnshire, "a Belg. sitteren, præ frigore tremere." The Medulla renders "frigucio, romb for cold." In the Avowyngs of King Arther, edited by Mr. Robson, to "dedur" has the sense of shaking, as one who is soundly beaten; and in the Towneley Mysteries, Noah's wife, hearing his relation of the approaching deluge, says,

" I dase and I dedir
 For ferd of that taylle." p. 28.

"Didder, to have a quivering of the chin through cold." FORBY. See Brockett's Glossary, the verb dither in the Dialect of Craven, and Hartshorne's Salopian Glossary.

<sup>3</sup> This verb is given in a somewhat different sense, namely, of suffering acutely, "to dindylle, condolere." CATH. ANGL. Brockett gives to dinnel, or dindle, to be affected with a pricking pain, such as arises from a blow, or is felt by exposure to the fire after frost. In the Craven dialect to dinnle has a similar signification. Langham, in the Garden of Health, 1579, recommends the juice of feverfew as a remedy for the "eares ache, and dindling." Dutch, tintelen, to tingle.

<sup>4</sup> The office for the dead received the name of DYRGHE, or dirge from the Antiphon with which the first nocturne in the mattens commenced, taken from Psalm 5, v. 8. "Dirige, Domine Deus meus, in conspectu tuo viam meam." In 1421, Joanna, relict of Sir Thos. de Hemgrave, directed daily mass to be said for his and her own souls, and the anniversaries to be kept with a solemn mass, "cum placebo et dirige." Among the "coasts laid out at the monthe mynde" of Sir Thos. Kyton at Hengrave, 1540, occur payments "to M' p'sson for dirige and masse, ijs.; to iiiij priests for dirige and masse, xijd.; to the clark for dirige and masse, xijd." Rokewode's History of Hengrave, 92, 112. The name is retained in the Primer set forth in English by injunction from Henry VIII. in 1546; and this Dirige, from which portions have been retained in the

 partede in oþer besynes." B. III. c. 8. In a sermon by R. Wimbeldon, as given by Fox, A.D. 1389, it is said that "by Titus and Vespasianus Jerusalem was destroyed, and the people of the Jewes were disparkled into all the world." Palsgrave gives "to disparryll, Lydgate, same as disparske, escarter, disperser. They be disparkled nowe many a mile asonder." See hereafter SPARPLYN.

 seynge him walkinge on the see weren disturblid." Matt. xiv. 26. So also in the version of Vegetius, Roy. MS. 18 A. XII. it is said that a young soldier should be taught "that he destroyle nat the ordre of ordenaunce." The Mayor of Norwich, on being sworn, made proclamation "that iche man kepe the pees, and that no man disturble, ne breke the forseid pees, ne go armed." A.D. 1424, Blomf. Hist. ii. 100.

 for one of his retinue, is entered this item, "My Lady paid a surgeone for dytenghe of hym, whan he was hurte, 12d." Palsgrave gives the verb in its more usual sense, "to dyght, or dresse a thyng, habiller. A foule woman rychly dyght, semeth fayre by candell lyght." Ang. Sax. dihtan, disponere.

indicate that it was originally written dywere, or diverse, which may be derived from the old French, “divere, inconstant, bizarre, incommode.” ROQUEF. It occurs, however, written as above, in a poem by Humphrey Brereton, who lived in the reign of Hen. VII. which has been printed under the title of “the most pleasant song of Lady Bessy, eldest daughter of King Edw. IV.”

“ That time you promised my father dear,
To him to be both true and just,
And now you stand in a disweare,
Oh Jesu Christ, who may men trust ! ”

<sup>2</sup> It appears that the compiler of the Promptorium assigned to balthetus, which properly signifies the cingulum militare, the unusual meaning of a garment of defence. Thus COTE ARMURE previously is rendered balthetus. The Catholicos explains “*di-
plois, duplex vestis, et est vestis militaris,*” but it does not appear to have been originally, as it subsequently became on the disuse of the gambeson, a garment of defence. The dublectus mentioned in the Constitutions of Fred. II. King of Sicily, in the XIVth century, was a garment of ordinary use by nobles and knights, as were also, it is probable, the rich garments provided for John II. of France, in 1352, when Stephen de Fontaine, his goldsmith, accounts for the delivery of “un fin drap d'or de damas, et un fin camocas d'ouvremer, pour faire deux doubles.” At this period wadded defences were made in Paris by the armuriers, and the tailors were divided into two crafts, pourpointiers and doubletiuers ; it was only in 1358 that the Regent Charles, on account of the use of the doublet becoming general, permitted the tailors to exercise also the craft of doubletiuers. See the Reglemens sur les Métiers, edited by Depping, p. 414.
Shortly after, however, the doublet appears as military defence ; “25 doublettes, 24 jakkes,” and other armours, are enumerated among the munitions of Hadleigh Castle granted in 1405 by Henry IV. to his son Humfrey. Rymer, viii. 384. The importance at this time attached to the manufacture of this kind of armour appears by the privileges conceded in 1407 to the “armurariis linearum armaturarum civitatis Londonie.” Pat. 9 Hen. IV. confirmed 18 Hen. VI. and 5 Edw. IV. It is related that the Duke of Suffolk, when murdered at sea in 1450, was attired in a “gown of russette, and doblette of velvet mayled,” Paston Letters, i. 40; and in the curious inventories of the effects of Sir John Fastolf, at Caistor, in Norfolk, 1459, occur “j dowblettis of red felwet upon felwet ; j dowbelet of rede felwet, lynyd with lynen clothe.” Archæol. xxi.

253. See further Sir Samuel Meyrick's valuable observations on military garments worn in England, Archæol. xix. 228. At a later time the doublet seems again to have become a vestment of ordinary use, the military garment which resembled it being termed a coat of fence. "I wyl were a cote of defence for my surete, loried lincted."
 HORN. Caxton says "Donaas the doblet maker hath performed my doublet and my jaquet, mon pourpainte, et mon paltcoque." Book for Travellers.

<sup>1</sup> DORCEE, MS.; but this reading is evidently erroneous, and the word is derived from the French, dossier, or Latin, dosserium. See DOSSE, and DORCEE, which occurs afterwards in its proper place. In a Latin-English Vocabulary, Harl. MS. 1002, f. 144, occur "auleum, scannarium, a dosure;" and another makes the following distinction: "anabatum, hedosour, dorsorium, syd-dosour." Roy. MS. 17 C. XVII. The term occurs in the Awntrys of Arthure, 431, where a costly pavilion is described;

" Pighte was it proudly, wiþe purpure and paulle,
 And dossours, and qweschyns, and bankowres fulle bryghte."

Sir F. Madden explains it as signifying here a cushion for the back, but in its usual sense it seems to denote the hangings or "hallyngs" of tapestry, which, before the use of wainscot, were generally used to cover and adorn the lower part of the wall of a chamber. Chaucer uses the word "dosser" in a different sense, speaking of sallow twigs, which men turn to various uses,

" Or maken of these paniers,
 Or else hutches and dossers." H. of Fame, iii. 850.

Panniers are still called, in many parts, dosses, dorsels, or dorsers. See Ray and Moore. Hollyband renders "holte, a basket, a dosser."

<sup>2</sup> Dodded is used in the North in this sense; see Brockett, and the Craven Dialect. Jamieson gives doddy and dottit with a similar signification. In Norfolk doddy still means low in stature. Phillips has doddy, lopped as a tree, and in Suffolk scathed or withered trees are called dooted, in the North, doddered, words which appear to be derivable from the same source. Skinner suggests "Belg. dodde, caulis, fustis, parillus."

<sup>3</sup> This word does not occur in the other MSS.; the reading is probably corrupt, and from the place in which it occurs, DOGON' may be suggested as a correction. This term of contempt seems to be derived from the French "Doguin, brutal, hargneux." ROQUEF. See Dugon in Jamieson's Dictionary.

<sup>1</sup> Agnes Paston writes to her son Edmund, the lawyer, respecting the dispute as to a right of way, between his father and the Vicar of Paston, who had been "acordidde, and doolis sette howe broode the weye schuld ben, and nowe he hath pullid uppe the doolis, and seith he wolle makyn a dyche ryght over the weye." Paston Letters, iii. 32. Forby gives this word as still used in Norfolk, the mark being often a low post, called a dool-post; it occurs also in Tusser. Bp. Kennett states that landmarks, or boundary-stones, are in some parts of Kent called "dowle-stones," and explains dole or doul as signifying "a bulk, or green narrow slip of ground left unplowed in arable land." See his Glossarial Collections, Lansd. MS. 1033. Queen Elizabeth, in her Injunctions, 1559, directs that at the customary perambulations on the Rogation days, the admonition shall be given, "Cursed be he which translatheth the bounds and dolles of his neighbor." Wilkins, Conc. IV. 184. Ang. Sax. dælan, dividere.

<sup>3</sup> The grammar most universally used in the middle ages was that composed by Ælius Donatus in the IVth century, and the term Donet became generally expressive of a system of grammar. See Warton's Eng. Poet. i. 281, Clarke's Bibl. Dict. iii. 144. It was printed among Gramm. Vet. Putsch. p. 1735. The rich hall prepared for the education of the son of the Emperor was decorated with symbols of grammar, musick, astronomy, geometry, arithmetic, rhetoric, and physic.

" Therinne was paint of Donet thre pars,
 And eke alle the seven ars." Seuyn Sages, 181.

Allusions to Donet occur in Chaucer, and Piers Ploughman. In Sir John Howard's Household Book is a payment, 1466, "fore a donet for master Gorge, 12d."

<sup>4</sup> "Auleum, dorsarium, cortina, anabatrum, anastrum, dosure or curtayne; colatere, syd-dosour." Roy. MS. 17 C. XVII. "A dorsure, dorsorium." CATH. ANG. "Anabatrum, a cortyne. Auleum, an hangyn, i. indumentum aule, cortina, or a cortyne." ORTUS. M. Paris speaks of the "dossale, sive tapetum in quo passio S. Albani figuratur," given to St. Alban's by Abbot Richard, who died 1119. Among the cloths of arras and tapestry work belonging to Sir John Fastolfe, at Caistor, enumerated in the curious inventories taken about the year 1459, occur several "hallyngs" of tapestry and worsted, a term probably synonymous with dorsure. Archæol. xxi. 259. See above, DOCERE.

<sup>5</sup> Dorlott is taken from the French dorelot, which signifies an ornament of female attire generally, but here seems to denote particularly the elegant network, frequently enriched with jewels, in which the hair was enclosed, termed a kelle, caul, or crepine; or the head dress called a volipere, which is mentioned by Chaucer. "Trica, plicatura vel nexus capillorum." ORTUS. "Calendrum, a voliper." MED. GRAMM. In 1394 Johanna Laburn of York bequeathes "j kyngl, j dorlot, j armari . . . best volet yat se hat, and a red hude singill." Testam. Ebor. i. 196. Cotgrave gives "dorlot, a jewel or pretty trinket, as a chain, brooche, aglet, button, billement, &c. wherwith a woman sets out her apparel;" and by the Statutes of the trades of Paris in 1403 it appears that the craft of doreloterie consisted in making fringes and ribbons both of silk and thread. See Roquefort and Charpentier.

<sup>6</sup> A dormant or sleeper is a main beam that, resting upon the side walls, serves to support the joists, or the rafters of the roof. It is called in Norfolk a dormer. "Treine, a dorman or great beame." COTGR.

<sup>1</sup> This name for a faucet appears to be a corruption of ductulus, which in the Latin-English Vocab. Roy. MS. 17 C. XVII. is rendered "dosselle," as the word is more commonly written, from the French dosil, doucil, or according to Cotgrave, "doisil, a faucet." Among the pertinencia promptuario, in another Vocabulary, Harl. MS. 1002, is given "clipsidra, a doseplyn." In the Seuyn Sages, it is related how Yporcas pierced a tun in a thousand places:

" And tho he hadde mad holes so fele,
 In ech he pelt a dosele." line 1150.

"Vostre paine dount pestrez, (kned bi douw)
De un rastuer (a douw ribbe) le auge (a trow) moundez,
Le rastel (a rake) e le raster
Sount diuerses en lour meester." Arund. MS. 220, f. 299, b.

Hence it appears to have served for scraping and cleansing the kneading trough. Another implement, termed likewise a rybbe, was used in the preparation of flax. See hereafter RYBBE, and RYBBYN flax.

<sup>2</sup> In the Forme of Cury, p. 20, will be found recipes for egurdouce, a compound of the flesh of rabbits or kids with currants, onions, wine and spices; and for egurdouce of fysshe, pp. 63, 113. Directions are also given for concocting "an egge dows," which seems more to resemble the mixture alluded to in the Promptorium, being composed of almonds, milk, vinegar, and raisins. Mulsus signifies a kind of mead, and dowce egypt was probably much the same as oximel.

"Why shuld I sowen draf out of my fist, Whan I may sowen whete, if that me list." Personae's Prol.

In the Reve's Tale the scholar John complains of being left to lie in his bed "like a draff sak." So likewise in Piers Ploughman's Vision, where allusion is made to casting pearls to swine, it is said that

"Draf were hem levere,
Than al the precious perree." line 5617.

Paris has given a charter of Guarin, Abbot of St. Alban's, dated 1194, in which the word dracum occurs, which appears to signify the grains that remain after brewing, called in French drasche, or drague. Compare CORALLE, or drasse of corne, and DROSSE.

<sup>1</sup> Numerous virtues are ascribed by Macer and other writers to the herb dragaunce or nedder' tongue, called also dragon wort, addywort, or serpentine, arum or aron. See Roy. MS. 18 A. VI. f. 73. Macer says that "water of dragaunce ys gode to wasshe venome soris," and it appears to have been yearly distilled in the household of the Earl of Northumberland, 1511. See Antiqu. Rep. iv., 284. "Dragence, or nedder gryffe, dragancia, basilica, herba serpentina." CATH. ANG.

" Ful redy hadde he his apothecaries,
To send him dragges, and his lettuaries." Cant. Tales, Prol.

<sup>3</sup> In the XIIIth century the grains chiefly cultivated in England, as appears by the accounts of the bailiff of the royal manor of Marlborough, Rot. Pip. 1 Edw. I., were wheat, "berecorn, dragg," or a mixture of vetches and oats, beans and pease. The regulations for the brewers of Paris, in 1254, prescribe that they shall brew only "de grains, c'est à savoir, d'orge, de mestuel, et de dragée," Réglements sur les Arts, ed. by Depping. Tusser speaks of dredge as commonly grown in the Eastern counties.

" Thy dredge and thy barlie goe thresh out to malt."

Bp. Kennett, in his Glossarial collections, Lansd. MS. 1033, mentions "dredge mault, malt made of oats mixed with barley malt, of which they make an excellent fresh quick sort of drink," used in Staffordshire. "Dragée aux chevaux, provender of divers sorts of pulse mixed together." cotgr. See MESTLYONE, or monge corne.

<sup>4</sup> "Drake, or darnylle, zizannia." CATH. ANG. The gloss on Gautier de Bibelesworth makes a distinction between these two weeds:

" Le yueray (darnel) i crest, et le betel (drauke)."

Gerard assigns the name to a species of bromus sterilis, which he calls small wild oats, in Brabant called drauch, and Skinner suggests that the name may be derived "a Belg. droogh, siccus, quia et actu et potentia siccum est." Drawke or drake is well known in Norfolk and Suffolk, and Forby says it is the common darnel grass, lolium perenne.

Horman says "the drastys (floces) of the wyne be medicynable."

Ang. Sax. dresten, fæces.

<sup>2</sup> This verb is used by Chaucer, and other writers, in the sense of being disturbed by dreams.

" This chaunteclere gan gronen in his throte,

" And if it so bytide this nyght,
 That the in slepe dreche ani wight,

<sup>1</sup> The drift of the forest, agitatio animalium in forestā, is a legal term which implied a view taken of the cattle feeding in the chase, forest, or waste, at certain seasons when they were driven into an enclosure, in order to ascertain whose they were, and whether legally commonable. The Stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 13, among various clauses, devised for the improvement of the breed of horses, directs the drift to be made at Michaelmas, and other convenient times, and under-sized horses to be destroyed. The word is used by Horner metaphorically, in its more ordinary acceptation, "subtile dryfis (callida consilio) ought nat to sette a judge out of the ryght wey." Elyot renders "adpusus, the dryfste of shepe to the water."

<sup>2</sup> "To dryte, cacare, egerere." CATH. ANG. In the Wycliffite version, Phil. iii., 8, is thus rendered; "I deme alle thingis as drif;" and the word occurs also in Wycliffe's "Objections of Freres. Freres setten more by stinkyn dritt of worldly goods, then they don by virtues, and goods of bliss." See Jamieson's observations on the etymology of the verb to drife. exonerare ventrem. Ang. Sax. gedritan, cacare.

"Good droy to serve hog, to help wash, and to milk,
More needfull is truly, than some in their silk."

"Turbulentus, i. non lucidus, drouy." ORTUS. Bp. Kennett, in his Glosarial Collections, Lansd. MS. 1033, gives "dravy or druvy, Bor. druvy, Northumb. drevy, thick, muddy as the water is. Sax. drefend, turbidus." Forby mentions drovy, used in Norfolk as an epithet of loathing, on account of filthiness of the person. Ang. Sax. drof, cenosus.

<sup>3</sup> In the Anturs of Arther, where a description occurs of the King and his court going forth to the chace, it is said,

"The dere in the dellun, Thay droupun and daren." Ed. by Mr. Robson, p. 3.

<sup>4</sup> "Turbidus, troublis, drubli, or darke." MED. In the Ortus and Cath. Angl. drouy occurs in the same sense; Jamieson gives droably and drumbly; and the verb to drumble, signifying to be confused, is used by Shakespeare. See Nares.

"Irous Cambises was eke dronkelew,
 And ay delighted him to ben a shrew." Sompnoure's Tale.

Horman uses the word "dronkleu, dronkeleu." In a curious treatise on Obstetrics of the later part of the XVth century, Add. MS. 13,195, are particular instructions for the selection of a nurse, among whose recommendations are "bat sche be wysse and well a-vyssyd, and bat sche lof þe chylde, and bat sche be not dronkeleche."

" Wherof the first is dronkechip, Whiche bearcth the cupre felauship." Conf. Am. lib. vii.

" Drunkecheppe, ebrietas, vinolencia, &c." Harl. MS. 1002, f. 173, b.

Why slepen ye? it is no nitertale." Court of Love.

A strange effect is attributed to this plant in a volume of miscellaneous collections, once belonging to William Worcestre, Sloane MS. 4, p. 2. " For to take alle maner of byrds. Take whete, or other corne, and take guse of dwale, and menche be corne ber yn, and ley yt ber byrds hawtene, and when they have eten ber of, bey shalle slepe, bat ye may take hem with yowre handys." Higgins, in the Version of Junius's Nomenclator, gives " Solanum letale, banewoort, dwall, or great nightshade."

<sup>3</sup> " Amphibalus, a slaveyn, a faldynge, or a dudd." MED. GRAMM. " Lacerna est pallium fimbriatum, a coule, or a dudde, or a gowne." Harl. MS. 2257. According to the explanation given of birrus, the garment called a DUDDE seems to have been a coarse wrapper or dread-nought, probably the same as the Irish mantle made of raw wool, which was in request in England as late as the time of Charles I., as appears by the Custom-house rates. " Birrum, vestis pilosa seu grossa, a schypperis mauntel." ORTUS. Forby gives to duddle up, or wrap up with clothes; in the North, as well as other parts of England, rags or clothes in general are called dudds; and Grose mentions a square in Stourbridge fair, where linen cloth was sold, called the duddery. See Jamieson.

By early writers this word is written very variously, but approaching more or less to the Ang. Sax. dweorg, dweorh, nanus, which in the valuable fragment of Ælfric's Glossary, discovered by Sir Thomas Phillipps, in the Chapter Library, Worcester, is written " dwæruh." Thus the gloss on G. de Bibelesworth, " Ieo vey ester us petit neym (dwerouh)." Arund. MS. 220. In Lybeaus Discouer " dwerk" occurs repeatedly, and in King Alisaunder we read of " durwes, the leynth of an elne." In Synonym. Harl. MS. 1002, f. 173, occurs the word " dwarf," and in Cath. Ang.

In the Catholicon is given the following explanation: "Seasillus, i. parvus statu&acute;, quia non videtur stare, sed sedere;" and the Ortus gives "Nanus, a dwarfe, or a lytell Turke." Compare coonyone, or drowtly. Bp. Kennett gives the word "dwerowe" as of local use, but in the Eastern counties it appears to be no longer known; in his Glossarial collections, Lansd. MS. 1033, is the term "durgan, of short or low stature, as, he is a durgan, meer durgan, a durganly fellow. Isl. duergur, Kiliano, dwergh. Westm.(orland) a dwarwh."

<sup>1</sup> The Medulla explains bigermen to be the mixed grain called in the Promptorium MESTLYONE, but it seems here to signify after-grass, or after-math, still called edgrow in some parts of England. Bp. Kennett mentions the word in his Glossarial collections, Lansd. MS. 1033. esh, as a wheat esh, a barley esh. In Cheshire eddgrew, eddgrow, eddgrowth, from the Saxon preposition ed (which in composition denotes allwaie again, as re in the Latin,) and growan, germinare, crescere." This word is not noticed by Mr. Wilbraham, and it does not appear in the East Anglian Glossaries; in Shropshire, according to Holloway's Provincial Dictionary, the after-grass is called "edgrew," or as stated by Mr. Hartshorne, "headgrove, or headgrow." Salopia Antiqua. The common appellation both in Norfolk and Suffolk is eddish, Ang. Sax. edisc, gramen serotinum, but it is also termed rawings, roughings, or rowen, a word used by Tusser and noticed by Ray, which may be a corruption of the older appellation edgrow. See Forby and Moore. Tusser uses the words eddish and etch to signify a stubble, or land that has produced a crop. In a copy of the Practica of John Arderne, Sloane MS. 56, p. 3, are some names of plants in French and English, among which occurs "weldillone, i. edgroe," possibly some herb of autumnal growth, abounding in the after-grass. The Medulla gives "frutex, a styke, a yerde, and buske, vnderwe, or eddysche."

" Soth is it, that thurgh womannes eggement Mankind was lorne, and damned ay to die." Man of Lawe's Tale.

<sup>3</sup> The old writers give to the word eger the significations of sour, and of fierce; the first from the French "aigre, eger, sharp, tart, biting." cotga. "Exacerbo, to make eygre." ontrus. Palgrave gives "Eernesesse, bytternesse. Egar, fier or mody as a wild beest is, fel."

" He hente a spere with egre mode." Octavian, line 1653.

" And scendre wifes, feble as in bataille, Beth egre as is a tigre yond in Inde." Clerke's Tale.

<sup>4</sup> In the dialects of the North, as observed by Ray, any kind of fuel is called eldin, and the term is applied to the brush-wood of which fences are made. See Brockett, the Craven Glossary, and Jamieson. Ang. Sax. weld, ignis, selan, accendere. The word is given by Bp. Kennett among his valuable glossarial collections, Lansd. MS. 1033.

<sup>3</sup> In Norfolk, according to Forby, the elder tree is still called eldern; "sambucus, an eldrun," Harl. MS. 1002. Gautier de Bibelesworth says,

"Mes de sueau (of ellern, MS. Phill. hildertre, Arund. MS.) lem fet suheaus, Vn manger ke est bons et beaus (wib milke)."

In Worcestershire the elder is termed ellern, and Piers Ploughman speaks of it thus:

"Impe on an ellere,
And if thy appul be awete,
Muchel merveille me thinketh." Vision, line 5471.

"Un sehu, an ellir tree." Harl. MS. 219. Ang. Sax. ellarn, ellen, sambucus. <sup>1</sup> The Catholicon explains lamia to be a creature with a human face, and the body of a beast, or, according to a gloss on Isai. xxxiv, 14, a sort of female centaur, which entered houses when the doors were closed, as old wives' tales went, and cruelly used the children, whence the name, "quasi lania, a laniando pueros." The ancient leeches have given in their books numerous charms and nostrums for the relief of children "taken with elvys;" among which may be cited the following from a curious medical MS. of XVth cent. in the possession of Sir Thomas Phillips. "For a chylde that ys else y-take, and may nat broke hys mete, that hys mouthe ys donne (sic.) Sey iij tymes thys verse, Beata mater munere, &c. In the worshyppe of God, and of our Ladi, sey iij pater noster, and iij aueys, and a crede; and he schal be hole." In Sloane MS. 73, f. 125, it is directed to "take be roote of glader and make poudre þerof, and ȝeue þe sike boþe in his metes, and in hisse drynkis, and he schal be hool wþinne ix dayes and ix nyȝtis, or be deed, for certeyn." William Langham, practitioner in physic, recommends this same remedy in his Garden of Health, 1579; and orders the root and seeds of the peony to be hung about children's necks, as a charm against the haunting of the fairies and goblins. The term elf is not, however, applied exclusively to mischievous spirits, but to fairies generally. See in Brand's Popular Antiquities detailed observations on the Fairy Mythology. "An elfe, lamia, eumenis, dicta ab eni, quod est bonum, et mene, defectus. Elfe lande," (no Latin word) CATH. ANG. Hormann seems to speak of elves as a sort of vampires: "No man stryuueth with deed men but elvis, laruae;" and Palsgrave give "elfe, or dwarfe, nain." Ang.-Sax. elf, lamia.

<sup>1</sup> The Anglo-Saxon word eam, avunculus, is commonly used by Chaucer, Gower, and all the earlier writers, and is not yet obsolete in the North of England. It is related in the life of St. Peter of Melane, that “one his eme whiche was an heretyke demaunded of his lesson, and the chylde sayd to hym, credo;—his uncle sayd to hym that he sholde no more say so.” Legenda Aur. “An eme, avunculus, patruus. Versus, Patruus a patre pendet, avunculus ex genitrice. An eme son or daughter, patruellis, ex parte patris; consobrinus, ex parte matris.” CATH. ANG. Bp. Kennett gives in his Glossarial collections, Lansd. MS. 1033, the following use of the word eam, noticed likewise by Grose: “Eam, an uncle, Bor. This term in the North is familiarly applied to a gossip, and indeed to any friend or neighbour; so is the word uncle in Worcestershire, and adjoining parts, where mine uncle or my nunkle is a common appellation, as mine eam in the North. *Ex ore viri doctissimi G. Occleve says of St. Margaret,

“ But understandeth this, I onely command her nought,
 By encheson of her virginitie.” Letter of Cupide.

in the MS. from which his transcript was made; this appears to be supplied by the reading of the King's MS.

<sup>2</sup> In the Latin-English Vocab. Roy. MS. 17 C. XVII. occurs among "nomina vermium, aranea, nerane;" the Medulla gives "muscaraneus, a litelle beaste that sleethe the fyie, the erayne;" and the Catholicon Engl. "Erane, a spyder or an attercopp, aranea." Ray mentions arayn as the name given to the larger sorts of spiders in Nottinghamshire, and the word aran, or arain, is still in use in Yorkshire. See ARAYNYE and SPYNNARE.

<sup>3</sup> A garden was termed an ERBARE, or herber, from the French herbier, and the appellation must not be here confounded with arbour, the derivation of which is probably from Ang.-Sax. herberga, mansio. Chaucer, however, seems to use the word

Caxton says, " Richer the carter shall lede dong on my land whan it shall be ered, and on my herber (courtill) whan it shall be doluen." Book for Travellers. Hall describes a curious pageant exhibited at the entry of the Emperor Charles Vth into London, A.D. 1522, part of which was " a quadrant stage where on was an herber full of roses, lylies, and all other flowers curiously wrought, and byrdes, beastes, and all other thynges of pleasure." Chron. 14 Hen. VIII.

<sup>1</sup> It has been observed under the word BLO ERYE, that the reading of the MS. may perhaps be considered as corrupt, by an error of the scribe, who wrote y for þ; but it must be observed that similar errors are of very rare occurrence in this MS. and that the words are here placed in their proper order, as written with a y, whilst ERTHELY will be found in its place afterwards, the letter þ being in the Anglo-Saxon alphabet usually placed at the end, and in the Promptorium next after w. In an early MS. of the Medulla Grammatice, in the Editor's possession, which is equally free from the use of the character y instead of þ, which towards the later part of the XVth century became very general, occurs the word " gliteus, eryen."

<sup>3</sup> " To ere, ubi to plugh." CATH. ANG. Palsgrave gives the verbs to ere, or to erye land, in the sense of ploughing; " he hath eared his lande, God send hym good innynge. To erye the yerthe, labourer." Harrison, in his description of Britain, B. ii., c. 24, speaking of the numerous antiquities turned up by the plough, says that " in the beginning of the same Kings daies (Henry VIII.) also at Killeie a man found as he eared, an arming girdle harnessed with pure gold," with spurs of gold, and other precious things, of which part were in the possession of one Dr. Ruthall. or recluses, were a numerous class in England; many curious particulars regarding them have been brought together by Fosbroke, in his British Monachism, p. 503. The essential difference between the hermit and the ANKYR, or recluse, the terms occurring in the Promptorium, appears to be defined by Giraldus in his epistle to Abp. Langton, where he makes use of the following expression: "Heremita solitagi—Anachorite conclusi." Ang. Sacra, ii., 436. They had both, however, a fixed dwelling-place, although differing in certain conditions; the establishment of an hermitage was among those acts which in former times served to testify, in a signal manner, of the piety of the founder, or his gratitude for divine protection. Thus it appears by Pat 1 Hen. IV. that, having landed in Holderness, on his return after many years of banishment, and been seated on the throne, one of the first acts of that sovereign was the precept "de heremitagio edificando apud quendam locum vocatum Ravenescrobsourne, in quo Rex ultimo suo adventu applicuit." A curious evidence of the high respect and estimation in which recluses and hermits were held at this period, is afforded by the will of Henry, Lord de Scrop, A.D. 1415, whose bequests in their favour are singularly numerous and detailed. Rymer, ix., 275.

<sup>1</sup> The verb to erne or yerne, signifying to hasten, or run as an animal, Ang.-Sax. yrnab, currere, has not been sufficiently distinguished from the verb to yearn, Ang.-Sax. geornian, desiderare, expressive of anxious longing or deep affection. The former occurs in several of the old romances; thus it is related of the wonderful long-legged race that Alexander found running bare-foot in the Indian forest,

" Every wilde derv astore, Hy mowen by cours ernen tofore." K. Alis. line 5003.

So also of the King of Navarre, when he charged forward to meet the Soudan's champion,

" Vpon a stede he gan yerne
 With sper and scheid," Octouian, line 965.

See also line 1934, where it is written "erne." It expresses also the strenuous movement of the sailor.

" The maryners awey gonне skylle,
 And yorne away, with good wylle
 Well hastily." Ibid. line 561.

In Piers Ploughman's Vision it is used to signify the flow of water, or running of tears.

" And then welled water for wicked workes, Egrelly ernyng out of men's eyen." Passus 20.

Laneham, in his curious account of the reception of Elizabeth at Kenilworth Castle, in 1575, uses the word in describing the eager course of the stag-hound; "the earning of the hounds in continuauns of their crie, y<sup>e</sup> swiftnes of the deer, the running of footmen, the galloping of horsez . . . mooued pastyme delectabyl." Bishop Kennett, in his Glossarial Coll. notices the sense of the word to earn, as used in the North, which is given also by Brockett and Jamieson; "to earn, to run as chees doth. Earning, chees rennet, Bor. from Sax. yrnen, currere." Lansd. MS. 1033.

Saxon original, ear-wigga, vermis auricularis. Thus in a Vocabulary, Harl. MS. 1002, is found "auriolus, Anglice a jerwygge;" and Palsgrave gives "Erwygge, a worme." See ARWYGYLL.

" Of bitter eysell, and of eager wine."

<sup>4</sup> This word usally signifies a vessel for water; "ewer to wasshe with, aiguier," PALS. ; its meaning seems here to be transferred from the ewer to the person by whom it is carried. The Medulla gives " aquarius, aquaria, a waturberere." Ang. Sax. hwer, huer, cacatus. Among the domestics of the Earl of Essex, mentioned in his will, 1361, occurs "Davy, q'est Barber et Ewer." <sup>1</sup> The term evesyngē, from the Ang.-Sax. evesung, tonsura, evese, margo, occurs in the Gloss on G. de Bibeleworth; MS. at Middle Hill.

 Prent le musshour et le arounde (swalewe)."*

"Seuerunder à la severunde (a serundel at þe euseses)" Arund. MS. 220, f. 301, b. It would seem hence that it was usual to take small birds, as the mukeron, or sparrow, and the swallow, by means of a net adjusted to the house eaves; they probably served, as they do still in Italy and Southern Europe, as articles of food. In Piers Ploughman's Vision are mentioned "Isykles in evesynges;" and in the Creed "Orcheyarde and erbers evesed wel clene;" in which instance the word seems to be used precisely in the sense of the Ang.-Saxon verb efesian, tondere, unless it may signify that the erber, or garden of herbs, was neatly hedged in. The Medulla renders "intonsus, vnevesed. Antipophara, an evesyngē." In the North of England the eaves are called easings. "Severonde, the eauē, cauing, or easing of a house." cotter.

<sup>2</sup> The word chefe, signifying chance or fortune, has occurred already, but in the MS. is written, as it would seem erroneously, cheep. It appears to be taken from the French, chef, chief, which, according to Roquesfort, implies not only the head, or the commencement of a thing, but the end, issue, or extremity. Chaucer, in the Merchant's second Tale, speaks of "the boncheff and the myscheff;" and in the account of William Thorpe's examination by Abp. Arundel in 1407, published by Fox from a contemporary authority, it is related that he said, "if I consented to you to doo heere after your will for bonchefe or mischefe that may befall me in this life, I deme in my conscience that I were worthy herefore to be cursed of God."

alphabetically, has here the same signification as that in which it is used by Chaucer, and many of the old writers, namely, of putting to the question, or examining judicially.

<sup>1</sup> Chaucer, in the Assembly of Fowls, uses the word facond both as a substantive and an adjective, as in French, "Facond, eloquent; faconde, eloquence." ROQUEF. So also he says of Virginia,

" Tho she were wise as Pallas, dare I saine,
 (Her facond eke full womanly and plaine)

In the Golden Legend it is said that " Martha was ryght faconde of speche, and curteys."

<sup>2</sup> The ancient Anglo-Saxon measure of six feet, ſwēðem, ulna, the space of both arms extended, was, at the time the Promptorium was compiled, still used as a measure of length, and subsequently more exclusively applied to depth. Horman says, that "in a

<sup>1</sup> "To fage, adulari, assentari, blandiri, blandificare, delinire, palpare. A fagynge, blandicia. Fagynge, blandus." CATH. ANG. This word is derived from the Ang.-Sax. fægnian, fægenian, gaudere, which has also the signification of flattering. Hardyng, relating the guileful practices of Vortigern on the weak King Constaunce, says,

" Such subtype meane to fage the Kyng he fande." Chron. c. lxvi.

Coles gives "fage, a merry tale." Palsgrave gives the verb "I fagge from the trouthe (Lydgate); this terme is nat in our comen use." It may be questioned whether Drayton does not use the verb to fadge in this sense; but it is explained by the Glossarists as signifying only to agree, or accord; Ang.-Sax. fegan, jungere.

" With flattery my muse could neuer fadge." Pastorals, Ecl. 3.

<sup>2</sup> It would at first sight appear from this reading of the MS. as also from a word that occurs subsequently, FORJETY<sup>N</sup>, or forjety<sup>N</sup>, that the initial ff must have some special power of its own, and not merely represent the capital F. None such, however, can be assigned, and the readings are, probably, in both instances corrupted by the scribe. In the present case the correction appears to be FAYNE, or fawne, and in the second the true reading may be FORJETY<sup>N</sup>, or forgetyn. "Fayne, ubi mery. Alacer, apricus, dilectabilis, hilaris, letus." CATH. ANG. Ang.-Sax. fægen, latus. See FAWN'.

<sup>3</sup> The appellation fair child, bel file, or BEFYCE, which has occurred previously, was one of endearment or courtesy, afterwards used only to signify a son-in-law. Instances of its use are not infrequent; thus in Piers Ploughman's Vision, when Joseph relates to his father his dream that the sun, moon, and stars "bailised hym all,"

" Beau fitz, quod his fader,
 For defaute we shullen,
 I myself and my zones,
 Seche thee for neede." line 4819.

<sup>4</sup> A FAYTOWRE was, as it seems, a conjuror, or a quack-salver, so called from the French faiteur, or faiteur, a sorcerer; and thence the name was applied to itinerant pretenders to such skill, to mendicants, and generally to idle lives. " Faitard, faiteur, un parreseeux." LACOMBE. The plant called quack-salver's turbith or spurge, the Tithymalus or Esula of the old botanists, Euphorbia, Linn. was much employed in homely physic, as also by the empirics in former times. Its virtues are detailed by Gerard and Parkinson. See TITYMALLX. The MS. has similator, as also similatio.

<sup>1</sup> Compare now CLOTHE, as faldyngē and other lyke, which occurs hereafter. The term faldyng, signifying a kind of frieze, or rough-napped cloth, is derived by Skinner from Ang.-Sax. feald, plica, because coarse wrappers or mantles were usually made of it. Chaucer describes the West Country shipman as clad "In a goun of falding to the knee." Cant. Tales, Prol.

Nicholas, the Oxford clerk, had his books, and appliances of science,

"On shelues all couched at his bed's hed ;
His presse icouered with faldyng red,

All and aboue there lay a gay Sautrie." Miller's Tale.

Nich. de Schirburn, an ecclesiastic of York, bequeathed, in 1392, "tunicam de nigro faldyng lineatam;" and Ric. Bridesall, merchant of the same city, makes this devise; "lego patri meo mean armilausam, videlicet faldyng clok." Testam. Ebor. i. 173, 174. "Amphibalus, a slaveyn, a faldyngē or a dudd." MED. GRAMM. "A faldyngē, amphibalus. A faldyngē, plicacio, convolucio." CATH. ANG. This kind of cloth was supplied, probably, from the North of Europe, and identical with the woollen wrappers of which Hermoldus speaks, "quos nos appellamus Faldones;" Chron. Slav. i. c. 1; called by Adam Bremensis "Paldones." Frieze received its name from Friesland, and the rough garments of that country are called by Andrew Borde "dagswayne," as has been noticed above in the note on that word. The Polonie of Scotland may have received its name from its Polish origin; see the curious observations on that word in the Supplement to Jamieson's Dictionary. These garments, as also the Irish mantles, much in request so late as the reign of Charles I. as appears by the Custom-house rates, were, probably, the same as the faldyng; the last were usually imported in pairs, upon which the duty, as rated in 1553, was 5s. and by the Kyton Household Book it appears that in 1573 the price of "a coopple of Irish mantells" was 43s. History of Hengrave. "Endromis, vestis villosa de arietis pellibus facta, vel pallium forte villorum, &c. an rysshe mantell." ORTUS. "Bracca, that kynde of a mantell whiche nowe commeth out of Ireland, or a longe garment made of rougue frise." ELYOT, 1542. Fallin signifies in Irish, according to Liynd, a mantle, and the term appears to be identical with that used by Giraldus Camb. in his description of the Irish, composed in 1185; "caputii modicis assueti sunt et arctis, trans humeros deorsum, cubito tenus protensis, . . . sub quibus phalangis laneis quoque, palliorum vice, utuntur." Topog. Hibern. i. iii. c. 10. The fashion of the phalangis is exhibited in marginal drawings in a valuable contemporary MS. of Giraldus, in the possession of Sir Thomas Phillips; and it is described by the appellation coccula in the Life of St. Cadoc, MS. Landav. Eccl. as cited by Spelman, under that word. See further Tyrwhitt's Chaucer, and Ledwich's Antiquities of Ireland, 267.

Epilepsy, or the falling sickness, appears to have been in former times a very prevalent disorder, and had numerous appellations; Cotgrave and Sherwood give the following, in French, "le mal caduque, mal de terre, le mal S. Jean, le gros mal, le haut mal, mal d'Alcide, mal des comices, mal de Mahomet, mal de S. Valentin, maladie de S. Jean, maulubec, malubec." See LONDE IVYL.

<sup>2</sup> Mawther, in the East Anglian dialect, still signifies a girl, according to Forby and Moore; the explanation of the word carisia given in the Catholicon, has been adopted in the Ortus, "Carisia dicitur lena vetus et litigiosa, unde et fallaces ancille, quia veritate carent, Anglice, false seruaentes." See MODER, servante.

The fan, or van, here appears both on the armorial surcoat, and the ailettes; the bearing, which is a curious example of the arma cantantia, or armes parlantes, appears to have been, not seven vans, but three, as given in the Roll of Arms, t. Edw. II. Cott. MS. Calig. A. xviii. A faithful representation of this curious memorial has been given by Messrs. Waller in their valuable Series of Monumental Brasses.

in 1507, is the entry, "a vane for my vise (winding stairs); iv vanys for my bruge." Rokewode's Hist. of Suff. 151. Chaucer, in the Manciple's Prologue, alludes to the rural sport of justing "at the fan," in some MSS. "van;" which has been explained as signifying a kind of quintain, so termed from its revolving like the fane of a weather-cock. In the curious version of Vegetius, Roy. MS. 18 A. XII. a passage occurs, however, which would lead to the supposition that Chaucer's allusion refers to a rural conflict, with the winnowing fan, by way of shield; it declares "how olde werriours were wont to iuste with fannes, and pley with the pil, or the pale;" and that tyros or young soldiers ought to have "a shelde made of twigges sum what rounde, in maner of a gredryn, the whiche is clepede a fanne—and therwith they sholde haue maces of tree." B. 1, c. xi. See QUYNTYNE hereafter.

<sup>2</sup> The etymology of this appellation of the sacred vestment, termed also the maniple, is uncertain; the Latin pannus has been suggested, the German Fahne, or the Ang. Saxon word of the like signification, fana, verillum. The resemblance of the maniple to the penon on the lance, called in France fanon, or phanon, is obvious. The word can hardly, however, be of Ang.-Saxon derivation, as in Ælfric's Glossary, written towards the close of the Xth cent. the maniple is termed "manualis, handlin;" and among the gifts of Bishop Leofric to Exeter Cathedral, about 1050, are mentioned "iv subdiacones handlin." MS. Bodl. Auct. D. 2, 16. Leo IV. P.P. towards the middle of the IXth cent. ordained thus, "nullus canet sine amictu, sine albi, stola, fanone et casula;" and a contemporary writer, Rabanus Maurus, says, "quarum sacerdotis indumentum mappula sive mantile est, quod vulgo fanonem vocant." Inst. Cler. c. 18. The original intention and use of the maniple is explained by Alcuin and Amalarius, writers of the same period, as follows: "Mappula, que in sinistrā parte gestatur, quid pituitam oculorum et narium detergimus." Shortly after, however, the rich and massive ornament bestowed upon the fanon rendered it unsuitable for its original purpose. A specimen discovered at Durham, in the tomb attributed to St. Cuthbert, is still preserved there; it is elaborately ornamented with needle-work, on a ground woven with gold, and was wrought, as appears by inscriptions upon it, by direction of Ælfeda, Queen of Edward the Elder, for Frithestan, consecrated Bp. Winchester A.D. 905. It was probably brought to Durham, with other precious gifts, by Athelstan, the successor of Edward, in 934. This fanon measures 32½ in. exclusively of a fringe at the ends, 1¼ in. deep; and its breadth is 2½ in. Elaborate drawings of this interesting relic, and of the stole discovered with it in 1827, are in the possession of the Society of Antiquaries. They are both ornamented with figures of saints, by which, and other representations, it appears that the fanon was at that period worn loosely thrown over the back of the hand, as on the Bayeux Tapestry in the representation of Abp. Stigant; but subsequently it was attached closely round the wrist. In a few instances the fanon appears carried on the right, instead of the left hand, an example of which occurs in the Bible of Charles the Bald, MS. of the IXth cent. See Montf. Mon. Franc. 1, pl. xxvi. The fanon was usually of the same suit, de eddem secta, as the stole, and the parures of the amice and the alb; the material of which they were formed was most costly. Among the gifts of Will. de Elington to Rochester, it is recorded,

It must be observed that some distinction seems to have been made in Italy in the XIth cent. between the fanon and the maniple, but its precise nature has not been ascertained. <sup>1</sup> To fare, Ang.-Sax. faran, ire, is a verb frequently used by the earlier writers, as R. Brunne, Rob. of Gloucester, Langtoft, and Chaucer.

"Ten thousand preast and yare,
 Into batail for to fare." K. Alisaunder, line 1188.

Sir Thomas de la More, in his Life of Edward II. relates that at Bristol, on the way to Berkeley Castle, Thomas de Gorney put upon his head a crown made of hay, and the soldiers "ironia nimis acerba dixerunt, fare forth Syr Kyng." Ed. Camden, p. 602. Minot, speaking of the journey of Edward III. into Brabant, in 1338, says,

"Unto France fast will he fare,
 To confort hym with grapes."

Various significations of this verb are given by Palsgrave, "I fare, I go a iournay. I fare with one, or entreathe hym well or yuell. I fare, I playe at a game so named at the dysse. I fare, I resemble another thyng in my dealing. I fare, I take on, as one doth y<sup>t</sup> is in sorowe." Occasionally it is used in the sense of compelling to go; thus, in the Towneley Mysteries, Herod, enraged at the birth of Christ, declares,

"Under my feete I shalle thaym fare,
 Those ladyds that wille (not) lere my lare." p. 120.

<sup>2</sup> Palsgrave gives the verb "I fasyll out, as sylke or veluet dothe, le raule; my sleeve is fasyllled, ravelée. Fasyll of clothe, cassure." ? Ang.-Sax. fæs, fimbria. The term to ravel, now generally used in this sense, thus appears to be derived, not from the verb to reave, or tear away, as it has been supposed, but from the French.

<sup>1</sup> "Fastyngange, carniprivium." CATH. ANG. Palsgrave gives "at fastyns, at Fastyngonge, & Quareme prenant." Blount, in his Dictionary of Hard Words, 1680, gives "fasguntide" as a Norfolk word, which Forby considers as now obsolete. In the statement made by the citizens of Norwich respecting a riot that occurred in 1441, termed Gladman's Insurrection, they declare that it originated in the circumstance that the said Thomas Gladman "on Tuesday, in the last ende of Cristemesse, viz. Fastyngone Tuesday, made a dispot with his neyghbours, coronned as Kyng of Cristemesse." Blomf. Hist. ii. 111. A detailed account of such local usages at Shrove-tide will be found in Brand's Popular Antiqu. vol. i. Hardyng, relating the conflict between the Yorkists and Queen Margaret, which closed with the battle of St. Alban's, Shrove Tuesday, Febr. 17, 1461, says,

"And southward came thei then therfore

To Sainct Albones, vpon the fastyngange eue (al. fastirne.)" Chron. c. 237.

The term is compounded from Ang.-Sax. fæsten, jejunum, and gong, iter, or going, the commencement of Lent. "Caresme prenant, Fastnes, or Shrove Tuesday." COTG.

<sup>2</sup> "A fatte, cupa, cuva. A fattmaker, cuparius." CATH. ANG. "Cupa, a coupe, or a fatte, or stope." ORTUS. "Fatte, a vessel, querue. Fatte to dye in, cruier & tuindre." PALSG. "Cuve, an open tub, a fat, or vat." COTG. Ang.-Sax. fæst, fat, vas. Caxton, in the Book for Travellers, enumerates "thinges that ben vased after the hous, —platers, disshes, saussers, sallyers, trenchours; these thinges shall ye fynde of tree, and of erthe. Now after, a disshe fat (eculier) where me leyeth therin the forsaid thinges, and the spones of tree." There was a local measure of grain, called a fat, identical with the cupa, cupus, or cuva, and which contained a quarter, or 8 bushels. The Stat. 1 Hen. V. c. 10, recites that it had been ordained that there should be only one measure, namely 8 bushels to the quarter; but that the purveyors of the Crown were accustomed to take 9, and the merchants and citizens of London take of all sellers the same quantity, as a quarter of wheat, "par un mesure usé deins le dicte Cité, appellé le faat, ove un bussell mys sur le dit faat." The word coupe does not occur in the Promptorium, in the same sense as FATE, but is so given in the Ortus and the Cath. Ang. "A cowpe, cupa. A cowper, cuparius." Caxton says in the Book for Travellers, "Paule the couper maketh and formaketh the keupis (refaict les cuues)."

“ Sir Launfal brayde out hys fochon,

Launfal Miles. Cott. MS. Calig. A. II.

It must be observed, however, that the fauchon and falso seem occasionally to be named with long-handled weapons, and that the falchion may occasionally have been a kind of bill, with the curved or scythe-shaped blade, whence the name was taken. Chaucer uses the word as signifying a sword, and in Piers Ploughman's Vision allusion occurs to St. Paul, keeping the gate of heaven with his “fawchon.” Palsgrave gives “Fawchyon, a wepen, marguy baston de ivif;” and Cotgrave, “Malcus, a faulchion, hangar, wood-knife.”

ELYOT. Baret gives "A felon, vncome, or catte's haire; a bile or sore that riseth in man's bodie, furunculus; Bossette dure, ou fronce, vng clou. A felon, or impostumation vnder the rootes of the nailes, paronychia;" and Cotgrave, "Furuncule, a felon, or whitlaw; Panary, a felon, or whitlaw, at the end of a finger." Gerard recommends as a remedy the Persicaria hydropiper, or arsmart, which, "bruised and bound upon an imposthume in the ioynts of the fingers (called among the vulgar sort a felon or vncome,) taketh away the paine." Elyot explains the term uncome as follows: "adventitius morbus, syckenes that cometh without our defaute, and of some men is calyd an vncome."

<sup>3</sup> This herb is the small centaury, which was called fel terre, and in Dutch Eerdegall, from the excessive bitterness, and possibly the deep yellow colour of its juice, which in some countries was used by women to dye their hair, when yellow hair was the prevalent fashion. By modern botanists it is known as the Erythrea centaurium. FELTRYKE appears to be merely a corruption of the Latin name; Cotgrave gives "Sacotin, feaver-wort, earth-gall, common centory."

Thus in the version of Vegetius, Roy. MS. 18 A. XII. it is related that Scipio bid his Spanish prisoners cleanse and dig ditches, "with this reprovable scorne; ye ben worthy, he saide, to be blottede and spottede, foulede and defoulede with fenne and with drif of water (tuto inquinari) and of blode, þat in tyme of werre ne were not, ne wolde nat be bespreynt ne be wette with ennemyes blode." B. iii. c. 10.

"Bis duo dat maratrum, febris fugat atque venenum,
Et purgat stomachum, sic reddit lumen acutum."

Macer gives a detailed account, in which the following remarkable passages occur: "þe edderes wole ete fenal, when her yen dasnyb, and so she getib a-yene her clere sighte; and her þoroghe it is founde and preved þat fenal doþ profit to mannis yene: þer yen þat ben dusked, and dasnyb, shul be ayontyd wit ius of fenelle rotis medeled wit hony; and þis oynement shalle put a-way alle þe dasewenesse of hem, and make hem bryȝt." The virtue of fennel, in restoring youth, was a discovery attributed likewise by Macer to serpents; "þis prouij auctours and filisoferis, for serpentis whan men (sic) olde, and willeth to wexe stronge, myghty, and yongly a-yea[n], þei gon and eten ofte fenel, and þei become yongliche and myghty." MS. in the possession of H. W. Diamond, Esq. FENKYLLE is obviously a corruption of the Latin name; this herb is still called in German Fenchel, and in Dutch Venkel. In Piers Ploughman's Vision mention occurs of

<sup>1</sup> In the Assembly of Ladies, a poem attributed to Chaucer, Attemperaunce is described as arrayed in a blue gown of cloth of gold, in tabard-wise, purfled, or trimmed with fur, and set with pearls and diamonds.

" After a sort, the collar and the vent,
 Like an armine is made in purfeling,
 With great pearlies full fine and orient,
 They were couched all after one worching."

The glossarist interprets vent as signifying "the fore-part;" but this does not sufficiently explain the term. In the XIIIth Cent. the fent or vent appears at the collar of the robe, both in male and female costume, being a short slit closed by a brooch, and which served for greater convenience in putting on a dress so fashioned as to fit closely round the throat. This is shown by the effigies at Fontevrault, engraved by Stothard, and especially by those of Queen Berengaria, at the abbey of l'Espan, and of Richard I., recently discovered at Rouen. Archæol. xxix. pl. xxi. In these instances it is sufficiently apparent why the fent should be termed, as in the Promptorium, fibulatorium; but at a later period being considerably prolonged, the opening of the robe in front extending often much below the waist, a brooch was no longer sufficient to close it. At the period when Chaucer wrote, the fent was trimmed with rich furs, and the fastenings were ornaments of chased work, jewelled, of a very splendid description. They are termed in inventories "attaches," and exhibited on the effigies of Lady Mohun, and of Joan of Navarre, Queen of Henry IV., at Canterbury. The less richly decorated effigy of Queen Philippa, at Westminster, presents an example of the fent, simply closed by a lace; and the combination of furs and jewels in this part of costume appears in many MSS. which have furnished Strutt with examples, among which may particularly be mentioned Roy. MS. 16 G. V. See Strutt's Dresses, pl. xciv. The propriety of applying to the fent thus purfled and adorned, the term fimbria, as in the Promptorium, is evident, as likewise limbus, which is given by Ducange, on an ancient authority, as synonymous with fibulatorium. In the Wardrobe of Sir John Fastolf, A.D. 1459, there was "j jakket of red felwet, the ventis bounde with red lether." Archæol. xi. 253. "Fente of a gowne, fente." PALSG.

<sup>2</sup> The use of the verb to fear, in an active sense, is not uncommon.

" That rybaude fered me with his loke,
 That confort to me coude I none take." Castell of Labour, 1506.

" Absterrere, i. penitus terrere, Anglice, to fayr. Terreo, i. terrorem inferre, to feare." ORTUS. " I feare one, I make hym afrayde. I feare awaye, skarre away, as we do beestes or byrdes, dechasser." PALSG. Ang.-Sax. fieran, terrere. See FESYN'.

<sup>1</sup> In the will of the Earl of Essex, 1361, occur bequests "à Mestre Thomas le ferour, v. marcs; à un garson pur le ferour, xxs.; à un garson faurer, i. marc." Royal Wills, p. 50. Eliot renders "veterinarius medicus, a horseleche, or ferror," now called corruptedly a farrier. In the version of Pliny, by Holland, it is related that the Empress Poppea "was knowne to cause her ferrers ordinarily to shoe her coach horses, and other palfries, &c. with cleane gold." B. xxxij. c. 11. In the order of the Pageants of the Play of Corpus Christi, at York, 1415, are enumerated among the various trades, "smythes, fevers." Sharpe's Coventry Mysteries, p. 137. This last appellation is taken directly from the old French, fevre, febre, or ferre, a blacksmith.

<sup>2</sup> Among the appliances of a sacred nature, there were feretra of two kinds; first, the bier for carrying the corpse to the grave, "feretrum, bære," Gloss. Ælfric, thus mentioned in the laws of Henry I., "amici extrahant mortuum, deferentes in fere-trum, et portantes eum ad ecclesiam." By the Constitutions of Will. de Bleys, 1229, and Walter de Cantilupe, 1240, Bishops of Worcester, as also of Abp. Peckham, 1280, among the ornaments and requisites to be provided in every church, at the charge of the parishioners, was included "feretrum competens ad sepulturam mortuorum." Wilkins, i. 623, 666; ii. 49. In its secondary sense feretrum signified a portable shrine, containing the reliques of saints, and carried in processions on a frame similar to the ordinary bier; and also stationary shrines of similar fashion, but which it was not customary to display as gestatory ornaments, such as those of St. Cuthbert at Durham, or St. Thomas of Hereford, in the cathedral there. It is recorded in Reg. Roff. 120, that "Willielmus Rex Anglie magnus, in articulo mortis (1087) dedit—feretrum, cum altari gestatorio deargentato, et pallium cum leonibus." In 1355, Elizabeth de Clare, daughter of Gilbert Earl of Gloucester, made the following bequest: "Je devise à Seint Thomas de Hereford un ymage de n're dame, d'argent surré, d'estre taché sur son fentre." Roy. Wills, p. 31. In the ancient documents relating to the shrine of St. Cuthbert the term feretrum implies, as Mr. Raine states, not the shrine itself, but the quadrangular space or oratory wherein it stood: the keeper had the title of feretriarius. See Raine's Saint Cuthbert. Amongst numerous representations of the feretrum may be mentioned the procession of St. Alban's shrine, in the MS. of M. Paris, with drawings, supposed to be by his own hand, Cott. MS. Nero, D. 1.; Strutt's Manners and Customs, i. pl. lxiv. One occasion on which it was customary to carry the feretra in procession, was at the parochial perambulations in Rogation week, a full account of which will be found in Brand's Popular Antiqu. vol. i. Hormann, in his chapter of sacred matters, says, "We two muste beare the feretrum (tensam gestare) a procession in the gange dayes." The term "fentre" occurs in Langtoft's Chronicle; and in the Golden Legend mention is made of the "fyerte," or shrine of St. Alpheyl, f. 117, b. "Fierte, fierre, fetre: Chasse, reliquaire, brancard." ROQUEF. The term feretrum in the MS. Ordinar. Ecc. Rotom. signifies the pyxis, wherein the consecrated Eucharist is deposited.

<sup>1</sup> The pheasant was brought into Europe from the banks of the Phasis, in Colchis, according to Martial, by the Argonauts ; it was highly esteemed by the Romans, and possibly introduced by them into England. In default of positive evidence as to its existence here in early times, it can only be stated that about the time when the Promptorium was compiled, it had become sufficiently abundant in East Anglia. Thus in the Howard Household Book, amongst the costs incurred at Ipswich, in 1467, "whane Syr John Howard and Mastyr Thomas Brewse were chosen knyghtes of the shyre," occurs the item, "xij fesawntes, prysc xij." Household Expenses, presented to the Roxburgh Club by B. Botfield, Esq. p. 399. "Ornix est gallus vel gallina silvestris, Anglice a fesande or a werkok." ORTUS. "A fesande, Fasianus." CATH. ANG.

<sup>3</sup> The love-feasts, or ἀγάπαι of the primitive Christians, were held in the churches ; but this usage was suppressed by the Council of Constantinople, A.D. 691, and discountenanced by Gregory the Great, in his Letter to the British converts. It is probable that the author here refers solely to the primitive custom. There is no evidence that the practice of feasting in churches had been retained in any part of England ; but it appears probable that the agape of the earlier times gave rise to the church-ale, of which, and of wakes, frequently celebrated near the precinct of the church, a full account will be found in Brand's Popular Antiqu. See the Hierolexicon D. Macri, Ducange, and Spelman, v. Agape.

<sup>4</sup> In Piers Ploughman's Vision, line 6183, where allusion is made to Matth. vii. 3, the mote in the eye, festuca, is termed "festu." The Medulla likewise renders "festuca, a festu, or a lytel mote." The name was applied to the straw, or stick used for pointing, in the early instruction of children : thus Palsgrave gives "festue to spell with, festeve." Occasionally the word is written with c or k, instead of t, but it is apparently a corruption. "Festu, a feskue, a straw, rush, little stalk, or stick, used for a fescue. Tbuche, a fescue ; also, a pen, or a pin for a pair of writing tables."

COTG.

' Chaucer uses the word fetise, and fetisely, in this sense ; it is apparently derived from the old French fetis, or faiteis. Palsgrave gives "featayshnesse, propernesse, feaftice ;" as also the synonymous word "feate, or proper of makynge, godin, godinet, coint, mignon ; fetly, nyctly, coyntement. I haue apted them together the fetlyest (le plus gentiment) that euer you sawe. Feted, fetered, or well shapen of the lymmes, aligné. It is as well fetered a chylde as euer you sawe. You neuer set your eye upon a fayrer fetered woman, mieux alignée.' Horman likewise speaks of "thefeat conueyans of a speche that soundeth well to the eare, argutia plausibilis sermonis. She wereth corked slippers to make hit tal and feet."

<sup>2</sup> " Homagium, idem est quod fidelitas, a feaute." ORTUS. William Paston writes, in 1454, of Thomas Bourchier, Bp. of Ely, who was translated in that year to Canterbury, " My lord of Ely hathe do hys fewthe." Paston Lett. iii. 222. The word is taken from the French "féaulté, féauté; fidélité, foi, constance." ROQUEF. It is commonly taken for the oath of allegiance in the feudal system :

" When thise Bretons tuo were fled out of this lond, written FYLIN. To fie or fey now signifies in East Anglia, as in Craven and Hallamshire, to clean out, as ponds or ditches; it is thus used by Tusser, and also to express the cleansing of grain.
In toke his feaute of alle that lond helde." R. Brunne.

<sup>3</sup> In the Wycliffite version occur the following passages : " he that seith to his brother, Fy (al. fugh) schal be guilty to the counsell." Matt. v. 22. " And as thi passiden forth, thei blasfemeden him, movynge her heddis, and seiynge, Vath, thou that distriest the temple," &c. Mark xv. 29.

"Choiced seed to be picked, and trimly well fy'd,

<sup>3</sup> FYLOWRE, or barbowrs crafte. MS. "A filoure, affilatorium; to filoure, affilare." CATH. ANG. The term affilatorium occurs with the signification of a hone, in the Usus Ant. Ord. Cisterc. c. 85. The implement so called seems to have been identical with that now called a steel, in French fusil, which is rendered by Cotgrave "the steele, wherewith a butcher whets his knives." A resemblance in form to the spindle or spool used in spinning was probably the origin of the appellations FYLOWRE, filarium, and fusil. In the Boke of Curtasye a "fylour" appears to signify a rod, as that upon which a curtain may be hung, moveably, by means of rings. The word occurs in the directions for the grooms of the chambers, regarding making the pallets, and two beds of greater state, for lords, <sup>1</sup> The Privy Purse Expenses of Henry VII. comprise an entry in 1493, "to Dr. May for th' exebucion of Thos. Pepo," who appears to have been King's scholar at Oxford; and the allowance is subsequently termed "the finding, 2 li." Exc. Hist. The term exhibition, or allowance of money, taken from the Latin, which in medieval times had the same signification, is used in this sense by Shakespeare and B. Jonson, as likewise still retained at the Universities.

strict commands that on the coast, and the frontiers of Wales, strong ward should be kept according to usage; "for the custome of the countreyes adjoyning nere to y<sup>e</sup> see is (especially in the tyme of war) on every hill or high place to erect a bekon with a greate lanterne in the toppe, whyche maie be sene and discerned a great space of. And when the noyes is once bruted that the enemies approche nere y<sup>e</sup> land, they so-deinly put fyer in the lanthornes, and make shawtes and outrages from toun to toun, and from village to village." 3 Rich. III. This kind of signal, of which representations will be found in Archæol. i. pl. i. xv. pl. xii. was likewise termed a standard: "A bekyn or a standarde, statela." CATH. ANG. It was taken by Hen. V. as a badge, and appears among the sculptures of his chantry at Westminster. "Beakyn, feu au guet." PALSG. The elevation whereon it was placed was sometimes termed a tote-hill; see that word hereafter.

<sup>2</sup> Saliunca has occurred already, as the name of an herb called CALTRAP. Cotgrave renders "chaussetrap, the starre thistle, called also the calthrop;" but although the name may have occasionally been so assigned, from its being hurtful to the foot, yet according to Parkinson the herb called land caltraps, tribulus terrestris, was not of the thistle species. The saliunca again is, according to the same author, a kind of spike-nard, whereas in the Medulla it is stated, "Saliunca dicitur vulgariter in Gallico car kerepe, (? carchiofe, an artichoke,) a qwynne." Harl. MS. 2257. In the Ortus it is rendered "a wynne or grost."

<sup>3</sup> This word does not appear, by the East-Anglican Glossaries, to be still in use; it occurs, however, in Tisser's lessons for waiting servants.

" Such serviture, also, deserveth a check,
 That runneth out fisking with meat in his beck."

" I fyske, ie fretille. I praye you se howe she fysketh aboute." PALSG. "Trotière, a raumpe, fisgig, fisking huswife, rauning damsell." CORG. Compare FYKIN a-bowte, and see Jamieson's remarks on that word. It occurs in R. Coer de Lion, 4749.

<sup>1</sup> According to the Medulla the term FYSCHELLE is synonymous with FYSCH LEEP; "Nassa, quoddam instrumentum ex viminibus et cirpis, tanquam rhete, contextum, ad capiendas pieces, a pyche or a fyschelle." So also it is related in the Golden Legend, "Than they put hym in to a lytell fysshell or basket well pytched, and set it in y<sup>e</sup> see, and abandoned hym to dryue wyder it wolde." f. 99, b. "Fiselle, petit panier de jone, fisella." ROQUEF. Fyschew signifies a reed, or supple rod, as osiers, &c.

<sup>5</sup> In Norfolk, according to Kennett, Ray, and Forby, the upper turf pared off to serve as fuel, is termed flaks or flags. The repetition of this word below, FLAGGE, drye wythe greasse, is apparently a corrupt reading. In the North such sods of turf are called also flags, or flaws, or flaughter. See Jamieson and Brockett. "A flaghte, ubi a turfe. A flaghte (or flyghte) of snawe, floccus." CATH. ANG. Dan. flager, Teut. vlaeghen, deglubere; Isl. flaga, excindere glebam.

<sup>6</sup> This word, as also Ang.-Sax. flaxe, the French flacte, or flache, &c. appear to be directly taken from the low Latin flacta, adopted probably from the Greek. In William and the Werwolf a certain clerk is mentioned who came to Rome "wip two flaketes of ful fine wynes," written also "flagetes," p. 68. "Flacta, a flakette. Obba, genus calicis, a bottell, a flakett." ORTUS. "A costrelle, oneferum, &c. ubi a flakett. A flaket, flacta, obba, uter, &c. ubi a potte." CATH. ANG. "A flaget, flacon." PALSG. The term does not appear to be retained in Norfolk, as in the North. "A flacket, flasket, or flask; bottle made in fashion of a barrel. Bor. Flakin, a wooden bottle, or little barrel which labourers use for beer. Yorkshire." Kennett's Gloss. Coll. Lansd. MS. 1033.

<sup>1</sup> The term flash, signifying a shallow pool, does not appear to be now retained in Norfolk; but it occurs in names of places, as Flash-pit, near Aylsham. In low Latin fashia, fasca, and flaco, in old French flache or flesque, have the like signification. A supply of water from the locks on the Thames, to assist the barges, is termed a flash, and in Sussex loose water-soaked ground is called flashy. Plot speaks of the "flashy over-watery taste" of some white fruits. Hist. Oxf. 156. See PLASCHE, or fiasche where reyne watyr stondythe, and pyt, or fiasche.

<sup>2</sup> This word, placed here out of its proper alphabetical order, whereas FLAGGE of þe erthe has occurred already, has been retained as found in the MS., on account of the uncertainty whether it is an interpolation, or a vitiated reading. Possibly the correct reading may be flawe, a term synonymous with flagge, a sod of turf. Blount, in his Law. Dict. v. Turbary, cites a charter in which "turbaria bruaria—a flaw-turf, or heath-turf," is mentioned. In the North the words flaw and flaughter are still commonly used in this sense. See Jamieson and Brockett.

<sup>3</sup> "A flawn, opacum." CATH. ANG. "Flaton, a flawn. Artocira, a flawn, i. cibus factus ex pasto et caseo. Iaganum est latus panis et tenuis oleo limitus, quasi oleo frixus, a pancake, a flawn." ORTUS. "Flaune meat, flanet, flan, floun. I loue well a flawn, but and it be well sugred I loue it the better." PALSG. Carton says in the Boke for Travellers, "Of mylke and of eggis men make flawnes (flans), of mylke soden with the flour men make printed cakes (raston)."
Recipes for making flawnes will be found in the Forme of Cury; "Flawnes for Lentyn," Harl. MS. 5401, f. 193, 202; and "flathons," under the head of "Vyaunde furnez," Harl. MS. 279, f. 42, b. The following directions "for flaunes" are found in the poem entitled "the slytes of cure."

"Take new chese, and grynde hyt fayre
 In morter wyth eggis, wyth out dysawayre;
 Put powder berto of suger I say,
 Coloure hyt wyth safrone ful wele þou may;
 Put hyt in cofyne bat bene fayre,
 And bake hyt forthe y the pray." Sloane MS. 1986, f. 87.

In the North the word is still in use, as Bp. Kennett noticed in his Glossarial Collections, Lansd. MS. 1033. "Flaun or flawn, a custard. Bor. As flat as a flawn, prov. Sax. fyna, fiæna, artologanum."

<sup>4</sup> This must not be confounded with the general appellation of flat fish; the ray or scate was formerly called FLATHE, or, according to Willughby and Ray, flaire, still retained in the name of the sting-ray, called in some places the fire-flare. In N. Britain it is known as the fire-flay, according to Jamieson. Harrison, in his description of England, uses the name flath, evidently as denoting the ray or scate. In the account

Which ouer the mosse, echeone at others ende,
He layde anon, with fagottes fell ouer the lake." Chron. c. 178.

In a satirical poem, put forth in 1550 against the liberty of religious discussion, the services and preachers of the Reformed Church, entitled "An old Song of John Nobody," printed in the Appendix to Strype's Mem. of Cranmer, it is said of those who with ignorant assurance set themselves up as expounders of the Gospel,

" More meet it were for them to mylk kye at a fleyke." p. 138.

<sup>1</sup> To fleet, or skim the cream, is a verb still commonly used in East Anglia, and the utensil which serves for the purpose is termed a fleeting-dish. "I flete mylke, take away the creame that lyeth above it whan it hath rested." PALSG. "“Esburrer, to fleet the creame potte; laict esburré, fleeted milke; maigne, fleeted milke, or whaye.” Hollyband's Treasurie. “Escreme, fleeted, as milke, uncreamed.” CORG. Ang.-Sax. flet, flos lactis. A celebrated Suffolk cheese, made of skimmed milk, is called fleet-cheese. Tusser, in his lesson for the dairy maid Cisley, on bad qualities of cheese, says, “ Gehazi his sickness was whitish and dry,

Such cheeses, good Cisley, ye fleted too nigh.”

<sup>2</sup> The term fleet, signifying a channel, an arm of the sea, or water-course, occurs not infrequently in several parts of England, as Northfleet and Southfleet on the Thames, the Fleet-ditch, London, Holt-Fleet on the Severn, near Worcester, Fladbury, anciently Fleetbury, and Twining Fleet, on the Avon. On the coasts of Norfolk and Suffolk the name is common, and properly, according to Forby, though not invariably, implies a channel filled by the tide, and left at low water very shallow and narrow. At Lynn, where the Promptorium was compiled, there are several channels so called, as White Friars' Fleet, and Purfleet. The grant of the possessions of the Gild of the Holy Trinity, Lynn, by Edward VI. A.D. 1548, alludes to rents laid out in “ repairing of banks, walls, fletes, and water-courses in Lenn.” Blomf. IV. 598. “Flete where water cometh, breche.” PALSG. Ang.-Sax. fleot, sinus. In the North, as Bishop Kennett notices in his Glossarial Collections, fleet signifies water, as in the ancient song over a corpse.

“ This can night, this can night,
Every night and awle,
Fire and fleet, and candle light,
And Christ receive thy sawl.” Lansd. MS. 1033.

Harrison, in his description of England, speaking of Lyme Regis, Dorset, says, “ the Lime water, which the townsmen call the Budle, commeth . . . from the hills, fleting upon rockie soil, and so falleth into the sea.” Holinsh. Chron. i. 58. Ang.-Sax. fleotan, fluctuare. See HOVYN, which has a like signification.

<sup>2</sup> In the Medulla fumarium is rendered "a chymene or symrel." The term is derived from the Latin, "Fumeralis, Anglice a fumerell. Fumeralis, idem est." ORTUS. "A chymney, caminus, epicasterium, fumerium, fumerale." CATH. ANG. The term chimney seems, however, not to have been originally synonymous with fomerel, but to have signified an open fire-place, or chaser, such as the "chymneye with charecole" in the pavilion prepared for the conflict of Syr Galleroune with Gawayne. See the Awntyrs of Arthure. Thus also in the will of Cecilia de Homeldon, 1407, is the bequest, "lego unum magnum caminum de ferro Abbathie de Durham." Wills and Invent. Surtees Soc. i. 45. In Gawayn and the Grene Knyȝt, however, composed about the same period, "chalk whyt chymnees" are described as appearing upon the roof of the castle. The FOMEREL was a kind of lantern, or turret open at the sides, which rose out of the roof of the hall, and permitted the escape of the smoke; it had sometimes the appellation of the lover, a word which occurs hereafter; thus Withal, in his Dictionary, mentions the "lovin or fomerill, where the smoake passeth out." Among the disbursements of Thomas Lucas, Solicitor-General to Henry VII., for the erection of Little Saxham Hall, in 1507, occurs a payment "to the plommer for casting and working my fummerel of lede;" and it appears to have been glazed like a lantern, for there is a payment to the glazier "for 50 fetes glas in my fummerelle." Rokewode's Hist. of Suff. pp. 149, 150. In the Book of Wolsey's Expenses at Christ Church, Oxford, is an entry relating to the "femerell of the new kitchen." Gutch, Coll. Cur. i. 204.

To ride thurgh all Ingland." Poems, viii. p. 39.

<sup>2</sup> Junius thinks that this term was borrowed from the Italian forciere, which is rendered by W. Thomas, in his Italian Grammar, 1548, "a forsette, or a little coifer;" and by Florio, "a forset, a coffin, a casket, a cabinet, &c." It may be remarked that the most elegant caskets of the Middle Ages, usually of bone or ivory, curiously carved and painted, are, with few exceptions, of Italian workmanship; but as Flanders also furnished these and numerous other ornamental appliances, the origin of the name forcere may perhaps be sought in the Belg. fortsier, a banded coffer. The importation of "ascune manere ware depeinte, forcers, caskettes, &c." was forbidden by stat. 3 Edw. IV. c. 4, A.D. 1463. In William and the Werwolf it is related that the Queen sought by means of a ring to charm the monster.

" Seþe feiþli of a forcer a fair bok sche rauȝt,
 And radde ber on redli riȝt a long while."

Chaucer says in "La belle Dame sans Mercie,"

" Fortune by strength the forcer hath vnshete, Wherein was sperde all my worldly richeesse." v. 65.

Caxton, in the Book for Travellers, says, "The joyner made a forcer for my loue, her cheste, her scyrne, un forcier, sa luy sel, son escrin. Set your jewellis in your forcer, that they be not stolen." Palsgrave gives "fo(r)sar, or casket, escrain; fo(r)cer, a little coifer, coffret," and coffret is rendered by Cotgrave "a casket, cabinet, forset, (sic) &c."

That God deere boughte.” line 5284.

In the Golden Legend it is said in the Life of Becket, that Henry II. “wolde fordo such lawes as his oldres hadde vsed to-fore hym.” Palsgrave says, “What so euer he do on the one day, on the morowe I wyll fordo it, defaire.”

<sup>2</sup> Jocelyn de Brakelonda relates in his Chronicle, p. 84, that Abbot Samson examined the relics of St. Edmund in 1198, and when the shrine was closed up, “positus esl super loculum forulus quidam sericus, in quo deposita fuil scedula Anglice scripta, continens quasdam salutaciones Ailwini Monachi,” with a memorial of the opening of the shrine, which was subscribed by all who had been present. Foruli, according to Papias, are “thecae vel cista librorum, tabularum, vel aliarum rerum, ut spate; dicte, quod de foris tegant;” in French, fourreau, or forel, has the like meaning. Horman says, “I hadde leuer haue my boke sowed in a forel (consuatur in cuculli involucro) than bounde in bourdis, and couerede, and clasped, and garnysshed with bolyens.” Jennings, in his Observations on the Dialects of the West, states that the cover of a book is still termed a forel. Palsgrave gives “coueryng for a booke, chemiselette,” a term which appears to be synonymous with forelle, and which has been explained by Charpentier, v. Camisia libri. In an Inventory taken at Notre Dame, Paris, in 1492, is mentioned “ung petit messel, couvert de cuir rouge, garni d'une chemiselette de chevrotin rouge.” Two of the mourners, whose figures are seen around the tomb of Richard Beauchamp, at Warwick, hold each a book, wrapped in the forelle, or chemiselette; see Stothard’s Monumental Effigies. Its fashion is more clearly exhibited in a picture at Munich, by Schorel, which has furnished the subject of a plate in Shaw’s Dresses and Decorations.

Palsgrave says, "I forspeake a thyngh by enchauntementes. Some witche hath forspoken hym, quelque vaudoyse la enchanté." W. Turner, in his Herbal, 1562, says that "there are sum date trees in whose fruite is a stone bowyng after y<sup>e</sup> fasshon of an half moon, and thy<sup>s</sup> sum polyshe with a toothe, with a certayn religion agaynst forspekyng and bewitchyng." The Ang.-Sax. for-spæc has merely the signification of a preface, fore-speca, prolocutor; by Shakespeare and other writers to forepeak is used with the sense of forbidding. The use of the word in the sense of fascinating or charming arose probably from a superstitious belief, which is not extinct at the present time in North Britain, that certain persons had the power of injuring or bewitching others by immoderate praise. See Jamieson's observations upon this word.

Tales, v. 381; Jamieson's Dict. v. Nanes; and Sir Frederick Madden's glossaries appended to William and the Werwolf, and Syr Gawyn. In the last he retracts the opinion previously expressed, and is disposed to conclude that the original form of the phrase was the Saxon "for than anes." It implies occasion, purpose, or use; thus Palsgrave gives "for the nonest, de mesmes; for the nones, à propos, à escient. C'est un gallant de mesmes, et de fait apence. This dagger is sharpened for the nones, affilé tout à escient." Horman says, "he fayned or made hymselfe sicke for the nonis, dedita operā. He delayeth the matter for the nonys, de industria. It is a false mater deuysed for the nonys, dedita operā conficta." Occasionally, as in the following instance, it is used ironically: "You are a cooke for the nones, wyll you sethe these roches, or you haue scaled them? vous estes ung cuisinier de mesmes," &c. PALSG. "He is a popte fole, or a starke fole, for the nonys, homo fatuitate monstabilis." HORM.

Minshew would derive the term "a fragilitate," and Skinner from the Italian fragli; but it more closely resembles the old French "Fraiaus, frayel; cabas, panier de jone." ROQUEP. In Suffolk, according to Moore, a flexible mat-basket is called a frail. See Bp. Kennett's and Nares' Glossaries.

 Betwixen yelwe and blake somdel y-meint." Knight's Tale.

In the gloss on the Equivoca of Joh. de Garlandia it is said, "lenticula est quedam macula in facie hominis, Anglice a spotte or frecon: lenticulosus, fraconed." " Frecken, or freccles in one's face, lentile, brand de Judas." PALSG. Forby observes that the word freckens is still used in Norfolk. A. S. fræcn, turpitudo.

<sup>2</sup> Previously to the XVIth cent. the ordinary mode of constructing houses in the eastern counties, as likewise in other parts of England, was by forming a frame of wood, or skeleton structure, the intervals or panels being afterwards filled up with brickwork, lath and plaster, or indurated earth, by the process called in Norfolk dawbing. Such constructions are usually termed timbered houses, or, in Shropshire, Cheshire, and neighbouring counties, where they are found highly ornamented, black and white houses. Harrison, who wrote his description of England about A.D. 1579, being resident in Essex, observes that "the ancient manours and houses of our gentlemen are yet and for the most part of strong timber, in framing whereof our carpenters haue been, and are, worthilie preferred before those of like science among all other nations. Howbeit, such as be latelie builded are comonly either of bricke or hard stone, or both." B. ii. c. 12, Holinsh. Chron. i. 188. It is from this period that a marked change in the costly and ornamental character of domestic architecture in England is to be dated; previously, with the exception of some parts where the abundant supply of stone occasioned a more frequent use of such solid materials, houses were ordinarily of framed work. Palsgrave says, " My house is framed all redye (charpenté), it wanteth but setting up." Among the disbursements for building Little Saxham Hall, A.D. 1507, by Thomas Lucas, Sol. General to Henry VII. occur payments "to the joyours for framyng of 6 chambres, 25s. For framyng of my great parlour and great chambre, 10s." Rokewode's Hist. Suff. 147. The stat. 37 Hen. VIII. c. 6, 1545, recites that certain novel outrages had of late been practised, such as "the secret burnyng of frames of tymber prepared and made, by the owners therof, redy to be sett up, and edified for houses." This misdemeanour was made felony.

<sup>2</sup> Lutanca, ms. “A franchemole, lucanica.” CATH. ANG. The Catholicon observes, “Lucanica—quoddam genus cibi, et ut dicunt saltria, quia primo in Lucanid est facta.” It is a term of French derivation; Cotgrave gives “Franchemulle d’un mouton, a sheepe call or kell,” and it seems to have signified a viand much the same as the haggis. Directions for compounding it will be found in the “Kalandare de leche metys,” Harl. MS. 279, f. 32. “Nym eyroun with be whyte, and gratid brede, and chepis talow. Also grete as dyse nym pepir, safroun, and gryd alle to-gederys, and do in be wombe of be chepe, bat is be mawe, and sethe hem wyl, and serue forth.” See also the Forme of Cury, p. 95. <sup>1</sup> Fremye is a word used by most of the older writers.

" Sal neuer freik on fold, fremmyt nor freynde, Gar me lurk for ane luke lawit nor lerd." Golagros and Gawane, 1079.

" Mony klyf he ouer clambe in contrayez; straunge, Fer floten fro his frendez fremedly he rydes."

Gawayn and G. Knyȝt, 714.

It occurs in Rob. of Glouc. and Chaucer; and signifies both strange, as regards country, and alien, as to kindred.

" Whether he be fremd, or of his blod,
The child, he seyd, is trewe and gode." Amis and Amiloun, 1999.

" Those children that are nursed by frembde men's fires are, for the most part, more harde and strong then they be which are daintily brought up in their owne fathers houses." Precious Pearle, translated by Coverdale, A.D. 1560. " Fremmyd, exterius, exterinus. To make fremmyd, exterminare." CATH. ANG. " Exter, the last, fremmede, or strange." MEDULLA. <sup>2</sup> Compare BROKDOL, or frees, where possibly the correct reading should be brokyl; and SREERE, or fres.

<sup>1</sup> Ray gives among his N. Country words "to frist, to trust for a time." A.S. fyrstan, inducias facere. Jamieson explains it as signifying in the primary sense to delay, or postpone, and thence to give on credit, to grant delay as to payment. Germ. fristen, prorogare tempus agendi. "To friste, induciare." CATH. ANG.

<sup>2</sup> "A froke, cucullus." CATH. ANG. There is much ambiguity in the use of the term froccus, the monastic frock, which occasionally appears to have been confounded with the cuculla, although properly a distinct garment. At the General Council at Vienna, 1312, Clement V. defined the cuculla to be a long, full, and sleeveless garment; the foccus, considered identical with froccus, to be a long habit, with long and wide sleeves. They are evidently distinguished by Ingulph, who states among the ordinances of Egelric, Abbot of Croyland from 975 to 992, "Induit omni anno totum contentum cum secidit sud de tunicis, omni altero anno de cucullis, et omni tertio anno de froccis." Rerum Angl. Script. i. 54. The distinction appears likewise to be made by M. Paris, where he speaks of the unbecoming changes in monastic attire, introduced at St. Alban's during the time of Abbot Wulnoth, towards the close of the Xth cent. So also in the enumeration of garments allowed by custom to each monk of Glastonbury, at the latter part of the XIth cent. it is stated, "unusquisque fratrum ij cucullas, et ij froccos, et ij stamina, et ij femoralia habere debet, et in caligas, et peliciam novam per singulos annos." G. de Malmsb. de Antiqu. Glast. Hearne, ed. Domerham, i. 119. At an early period the cowl appears to have been portion of a sleeveless garment which sometimes was a mere cape, but occasionally reached quite to the heels, and was worn over the long, full, and sleeved habit termed a frock. See the illustrative plates in Murat. Script. Ital. i. part 2, Chron. Vulturnense; Mabill. Ann. Bened. i. 121. At a subsequent time it seems that these garments ceased to be distinct, and the long dress of the monk, having the cowl attached to it, was termed indifferently froccus, frocca, and foccus, or cuculla. Further information on this subject will be found in Ducange.

<sup>1</sup> A satisfactory interpretation of this word has in vain been sought. The practice of buying up woollen yarn for exportation was carried to a great extent in Norfolk, and other parts of England. It was highly injurious to the interests of the cloth-workers, and occasioned loss to the revenue. Many enactments appear in the statutes to protect both the weavers of Norfolk, and the customs, against the crafty proceedings of merchants, both strangers and denizens, "regrators and gatherers of woll." See particularly stat. 23 Hen. VI. c. 2; 7 Edw. IV. c. 3; 4 Hen. VII. c. 11; 33 Hen. VIII. c. 16. Perhaps froyd may imply the artful diligence with which covetous traders persisted in eluding the statutes, and robbing the staple manufacturers of Norfolk. Jamieson explains "frody" as signifying cunning; Teut. vroed, industrius, attentus ad rem. In the North, according to Brockett, froating means anxious unremitting industry.

<sup>2</sup> A pancake is called in the Eastern counties a froyse, a term derived, as Skinner conjectures, either from frizare, or the French froisser, because the substances of which it is compounded are beaten up together. Forby gives, as a Norfolk proverb, the following phrase: "If it won't pudding, it will froize;" if it won't do for one purpose, it will for another. See ancient recipes in the Forme of Cury, p. 96; and the "Kalendare de Leche metys. Froyse out of Lentyn." Harl. MS. 299, f. 36. "Froyse of egges, uovle d'œufz." PALRG. Voultre d'œufs is the ancient appellation of an omelet. "Fritilla, a froyse or pancake." ELYOT.

work is called gadrooned, from the French "goderonné, a fashion of imbossement used by goldsmiths, and termed knurling." COTG. France implies a wrinkle, crumple, or gather, generally in allusion to dress, as in the Vis. of Piers Ploughm. 8657. "Frounsyng, froncement." PALSG. Frontinella is not explained by Duc. and in the Ortus is rendered "the pyt in the necke;" it seems, therefore, to mean a wrinkled or irregular depression of surface. Possibly the correct reading may be froncinella. Fronciatus, i. rugatus, Duc.

<sup>1</sup> "A fruntalle, frontale." CATH. ANG. The frontal of an altar is defined by Lyndwood to be "apparatus pendens in fronte altaris, qui apparatus alias dicitur Palla." Provinc. 252. The synod of Exeter, A.D. 1287, ordained that in every church the parishioners should provide "frontellum ad quodlibet altare." Wilkins, ii. 139. Abp. Winchelsey, in his Constitutions, A.D. 1305, prescribes that provision be made of "frontale ad magnum altare, cum tribus tuellis." Lyndw. 252. The frontal must not be confounded with the permanent decoration of the fore-part of the altar, properly termed tabula, or tablementum, which was formed either of sculptured or painted work, and sometimes of the most precious metals, chased, enamelled, and set with gems, as was that in Winchester cathedral, described in the Inventory given by Strype, Life of Abp. Parker, App. 187. The frontal was formed of the most costly stuffs, and often, if not properly by prescribed usage, was of the same suit or colour as the vestments used at the same time in the service of the altar. As there were both the tabula frontalis, and superfrontalis, which last seems to have been identical with the retro-tabula, or post-tabula, so likewise there were the pannus frontalis, and superfrontalis, the second being in both cases the decoration placed above the altar, and attached or appended to the wall or screen against which it was placed. The inventory of sacred ornaments in the Wardrobe Book of 29 Edw. I. A.D. 1300, enumerates "Duo frontalia broudata majora et minora, de und sectd," p. 350; identical, probably, in purpose with those termed "frontella ij pro altare, unum videlicet superius, et aliud inferius pro eodem," which were purchased by John de Ombrealey, Abbot of Evesham, from the executors of Will. de Lynne, Bp. of Worcester, who died in 1373. Harl. MS. 3763. In Pat. 3 Hen. VI. these ornaments are again differently termed. Among various gifts to churches in France delivered by the executors of Henry V. it appears that they sent to St. Denis "unam altam frontellam, et unam bassam frontellam de velvet, rubeas, cum foliis aureis brouderatas." Rym. x. 346. In the inventory of the gifts of Abp. Chicheley to All Souls' Coll. A.D. 1437, there appears to be a distinction between the terms frontale and frontellum, as it enumerates, among many others, "ij frontale et suffrontale de blodio velvet operatum cum stellis, patibulo, et salutatione; ij frontellum de blodio velvet cum foliis querincis aureis; vj frontys, et vj suffrontys unius sectæ, steynid, pro secundis altariis," &c. Gutch, Coll. Cur. ii. 262. The precise difference is not apparent, but each secta, or toton apparatus for an altar, comprised, according to this document, the "frontale, suffrontale, frontellum, ij curtinae, j des-cloth, j teca," or corporas case: possibly frontellum may be only a diminutive of the other term. Ducange gives the term "refrontale, apparatus altaris," the same, probably, as the pannus superfrontalis; as likewise the tabula suprafrontalis was, as has been observed termed also retro-tabula.

King of Scots, A.D. 1424, regulate the export of "fowmartis skinnis, callit fithowis." The founart appears, however, to be distinct from the fitchew: in the Boke of St. Alban's, among "bestys of the chace of the stynkyng fewtw," are named "the fulmarde, the fyches, &c. and the pulcatte." Harrison, speaking of indigenous animals, and the hunting of foxes and badgers, observes, "I might here intreat largelie of other vermine, as the polcat, the miniuer, the weusell, stote, fulmart, squirrell, fitchew, and such like." Descr. of Eng. B. iii. c. 4. Isaac Walton mentions "the fitchet, the fulmart, the polecat," &c. Compl. Angler, i. c. 1. See hereafter POLKAT (pulkat, ms.) idem quod fulmere.

<sup>2</sup> Forby gives funk as signifying touchwood. The word may be derived from Germ. funk, Dan. funke, scintilla. R. Brunne uses the phrase "not worth a fonk," seeming to imply a brief existence, evanescent as a spark; Langt. Chron. p. 171. In another passage he relates that King John vowed vengeance upon Stephen Langton, and the monks who had chosen him Archbishop, against the royal pleasure.

It seems probable that the term feuterer may be hence derived; but the Glossarists have supposed it to be a corruption of vaultrier, a keeper of the dog called in French "vaultre, a mongrel between a hound and a maistiffe; fit for the chase of wild bears and boars." corcor. Bp. Kennett notices the term in his Glossarial Coll. Lansd. MS. 1033: "A feuterer, a dog-keeper; the word is corrupted from vaultrier, Fr. vaultrier, Lat. veltrarius, one that leads a lime-hound, or grey-hound for the chace." In a vocabulary written in the latter part of the XVth cent. Harl. MS. 1002, f. 142, after "hayward, parcare," &c. occurs "Federarius, a fewterer." Nares cites several passages in which this term is used.

" Ne were worthy to unbocle his galache." Squire's Tale, 10,869.

In the inventory of the effects of Hen. V. taken A.D. 1423, mention occurs of "j peir de galages faitz d'estreyn, iv d.;" but it is not easy to understand how straw should be a proper material for the purpose. See Rot. Parl. iv. 329. In Sir John Howard's Household Book, A.D. 1465, p. 314, are named both galaches and pynsons, which last are in the Promptorium explained to be socks. See Household Expenses in England. This kind of shoe was occasionally an article of luxury and ostentatious display, which probably suggested the allusion that occurs in the Vision of Piers Ploughman, where one is described as coming eagerly, as if to be dubbed a knight,

" To geten hym gilte spores,
 Or galoches y-couped." line 12,099.

The term "y-couped" seems to imply the extravagant fashion of the long-peaked toe : " Milleus, a coppid shoo." ORTUS. In the reign of Edward IV. a statute was passed, by which the higher classes alone were permitted to wear shoes, " galages," or boots, with a peak longer than 2 inches (Rot. Parl. v. 505, 566; Stat. of Realm, ii. 415); but, from certain allusions in ancient romance, it would seem that the fashion was, by the usage of a much earlier period, permitted to none under the degree of a knight. See Sir Degore, 700; Torrent of Portugal, 1193, &c. The curious drawings in Cott. MS. Julius, E. iv. (t. Hen. VI.), one of which, representing King John, has been given in Shaw's Dresses, exhibit the galache in its most extravagant form. <sup>2</sup> By Chaucer the nightingale is said to "cry and gale," Court of Love, 1357; in which sense the word may be derived from the Ang.-Sax. gulan, canere. Jamieson gives to gale, or gail, to cry with a harsh note, a term applied to the cuckoo; and to galyie, to roar or brawl. According to Forby, to yawl signifies, in Norfolk, to scream harshly, as the cry of a peacock; and Moore gives yalen, to cry as a fretful child. "Japper, to bark or baye like a dog, to yawle, to bawle. Houaller, to yawl, wawl, to cry out aloud. Mouaner, to mawle, yawle, or cry like a little child." COTG. Horman renders "he that galpeth, oscitans."

<sup>4</sup> Among the spices used in ancient cookery, the powder of galangale is frequently named, as may be seen in the Forme of Cury. It was the chief ingredient in galentine, which, as Pegge supposes, derived thence its name. It was also employed in medicine, as a cardiac and cephalic. In the version of Macer's Treatise on Spices, MS. in the possession of Hugh W. Diamond, Esq. it is stated that "Galangale resoluteþ be fleume of be stomak; hit helpeþ be delestione; hit doþ amende be saour and odour of þe mouthe if it be eten." He further attributes to it virtues of a carminative and aphrodisiac nature. It occurs among spices mentioned in the Household Roll of the Countess of Leicester, A.D. 1265; "pro vj lib. Galingalium, ix. s." (Manners and Expenses of England, p. 14.) Chaucer makes allusion to its culinary use, Cant. Tales, 383. The annual provision of spices for the household of the Earl of Northumberland, A.D. 1512, comprised "Galangga, j quarteron." According to Parkinson, the real galangale was the root of a Chinese plant, of which he gives a representation; but it appears that the root of the rush called English galangale, Cyperus longus, Linn. was much used in place of it, both as a drug and a condiment.

<sup>2</sup> The reading of the Winchester MS. is probably here correct. In Norfolk a gage is, according to Forby, a bowl or tub to receive the cream, as it is successively skimmed off; so called, as he observes, from its use as a gauge, to show when a sufficient quantity has been collected to be churned. The word does not occur in the other MSS.

<sup>5</sup> Sir T. Brown, in his account of the fishes of the Norfolk coast, mentions the gar-fish, or greenback (Esox belone, Linn.) Harrison mentions it among fish usually taken; "Of the long sort are congers, eales, garefish, and such other of that forme." Descr. of Eng. Holinsh. Chron. i. 224. "Trompette, the needle-fish, garre-fish, horne-beake, horne-fish, or piper-fish. Aiguille, a horne-backe, piper-fish, or gane-fish. Eaguille, a small fish called a horne-beake, snacot-fish, gane-fish. Orphie, the horne-kecke, piper-fish, garre-fish." CORG. The appellation is doubtless taken from its peculiar form; Ang.-Sax. gar, jaculum. Jamieson states that at Dundee the porpoise is called gairfish.

I wyll haue gargyllis under the beamys heidis: mutulos, sive proceres, &c." Elyot renders "frumen, the vppermoste parte of the throte, the gargyll." A remarkable application of the gargoyle in architecture occurs on the south side of Notre Dame, at Paris; all the piscinas of the apsidal chapels surrounding the choir on that side being furnished with external gargoyles, which are fashioned like the upper parts of a lion, or dragon, and answer the purpose of the ordinary interior drains, which served to allow the water used in ablutions at the altar to pass into the earth. Their date is of the XIIith cent. and nothing of a similar kind has been noticed in this country.

" With gaye garites and grete,
And iche hole y-glased." line 425.

A GARYTTE was, in the original sense of the term, a watch tower, or look-out, on the roof of a house, or castle wall, called garita, in French guerite. In the version of Vegecius, Roy. MS. 18 A. XI. it is said of the defence of a camp, and keeping watch by night, "it is nat possible algate to haue highe garettes, or toures, or highe places for watche men, therfor it nedethe to haue out watche." B. iii. c. 8. Caxton, in the Book for Travellers, says "of things that ben vased after the hous,—hit behoueth to the chambres, lofes, and garettis, sollers, greniers." Cotgrave explains garitte, or guerite, to be a place of refuge from surprise, made in a rampart; a sentry, or watch-tower; and "tourel à cul de lampe, a small out-jutting garret, or tower like a garret, on the top of a walle." See SOLERE hereafter.

<sup>2</sup> A garnish signified commonly the set or service of pewter, and likewise, in more stately establishments, of more precious material. Previously to the introduction of fictile ware of an ornamental description in the later part of the XVIth cent. the ordinary service of the tables of our ancestors was on vessels of pewter, the silver plate being for the most part reserved to decorate the cup-board, or buffet. Harrison, in his description of Eng. written about 1580, speaking of the great skill to which English pewterers had attained, says, "Such furniture of household of this mettall, as we commonlie call by the name of vessel, is sold usuallie by the garnish, which dooth conteine 12 platters, 12 dishes, 12 saucers, and those are either of siluer fashion, or else with brode or narrow brims, and bought by the pound, which is now valued at six or seuen pence, or peradventure at eight pence. In some places beyond the sea a garnish of good flat English pewter of an ordinarie making, ... is esteemed almost so pretious, as the like number of vessels that are made of fine siluer, and in maner no lesse desired amongst the great estates, whose workmen are nothing so skillful in that trade as ours." Holinsh. Chron. i. 237. In the inventory of the college of Bishop's Auckland, A.D. 1498, the silver plate having been described, there are enumerated "xx powder platers, xij powder dishes, viij salters, j garnishe of vessel." Hence also seems to be taken the term GATE SCHADYLLE, the division of a road into two or more directions. It appears to be wholly obsolete, and unnoticed by the Glossarists. See Carfax (cartehouse, ms.) above, p. 62.

" In the Romance of the Seunyn Sages, the Emperor had given ear to the false accusation brought against Florentine by his step-mother; but the truth was at length made known.

Mr. Weber has printed the word here gande, to which he gives the sense of a wile or mischievous design. Minot, in his poem on the Battle of Halidon Hill, says,

"The Scottes gaudes might nothing gain."

Chaucer uses the word in the signification of a trick, or joke. See Pardonere's Tale, 12,323, and Troil. B. ii. It implies also an ornament or toy of little value. Sherwood gives "a gaude, babbiole," which Cotgrave renders "a trifie, whimwham, guigaw, or small toy for a child to play withal." See Jamieson, and Nares, v. Gaud.

<sup>1</sup> To gavel signifies in Norfolk, according to Forby, to collect mown corn into heaps, in order to its being loaded. "Iaveler, to swathe, or gavell corn; to make it into sheaves, or gavels." COTG. Moore gives the word likewise as used in Suffolk.

<sup>2</sup> The Myrica gale, Linn. sweet gale, or bog myrtle, grows in boggy places in many parts of England, and before drainage had been carried to any extent in the fenny Eastern counties, it was probably found in sufficient abundance to be commonly used as fuel. Gerard says that the Myrtus Brabanticus, gaule, sweet willow, or Dutch myrtle, grows plentifully in sundry places, as in the Isle of Ely, and the fenny places thereabouts; "whereof there is such store in that country, that they make fagots of it, and sheaves, which they call Gaule sheaves, to burn and heat their ovens." He mentions also that it was used to give an intoxicating quality to beer or ale, as it is still employed in Sweden.

<sup>3</sup> "Gaunsell, applauda." CATH. ANG. The composition of this sauce is thus given in Arund. MS. 344; printed in Household Ordin. 441; and Warner's Cookery, 65. "Gaunsell for gese. Take fioure, and tempur hit with gode cowe mylke, and make hit thynne, and colour hit with saffron; and take garlek, and stamp hit, and do thereto, and boyle hit, and sew hit forthe." Caxton says, in the Book for Travellers, "Nycholas the mustard maker hath good vynegre, good gaunselyn, gausallide." The term is evidently derived from "gause d'ail, a clove of garlic." COTG. The Ortus explains "applauda vel appluda, dicitur sorbituncula ex paleis facta, (a gaunsell," MED.) This Latin word properly means chaff of corn, or husks, but here is taken in reference to the gousses, or husk-like covering of the garlic.

<sup>5</sup> In the Eastern counties gain signifies handy, convenient or desirable, and in the North near, as "the gainest road," which seems most nearly to resemble the sense here given to the word. See Brockett, Jamieson, and Hartshorne's Glossary.

<sup>1</sup> It would hence appear that the recital of gests, the deeds of conflict or gallantry, which was the proper business of the gestour, was accompanied by appropriate action, or gesticulation. “Gestire, i. gestus facere, scilicet diversis modis agitare, gaudere, luxuriar, &c.” CATH. Hearne stated erroneously that gests were opposed to romance, Chron. Langt. pref. p. 37; a mistake which Warton has properly corrected. Chaucer uses “to geste,” to relate gests; and “to tell in geste;” Cant. T. 17,354, 13,861; and these passages apparently imply that gests were chiefly written in alliterative verse. He calls the Gesta Romanorum, “the Romain gestes.” See Tyrwhitt’s notes on Cant. T. 17,354, 13,775, and Warton’s Eng. Poetry. “Gest, a tale. Gestyng, bourde, bouerde.” FALSG.

Towneley Myst. 312.

Chaucer says the gay pardoner thought he rode “al of the newe get,” or fashion; and he also uses the word in the sense of crafty contrivance, where he relates the deceit practised by the Alchemist, by means of a stick filled with silver filings.

“ And with his stikke above the crosselet,
That was ordained with that false get,

Chan. Yem. T. 16,745.

<sup>3</sup> It appears that in former times great virtues were attributed to jet. Alex. Necham, Abbot of Cirencester, who died A.D. 1217, says in his work De Rerum Naturâ, “Gagates . . . aquâ ardet, oleo restinguuntur: attritu calefactus applicata detinet, atque succinum: ydropicis illum portantibus beneficium prestat.” lib. ii. c. 97, Roy. MS. 12 G. xi. f. 53. The observation of the electric properties of this mineral led him in the succeeding chapter to make some detailed remarks “de vi attractiâ,” among which will be found a notice of the use of the magnet by mariners. In Trevisa’s version of Barth. de propr. rerum, are the following observations: “Gette hyght gagates, and is a boystous stone, and neuer the less it is precious.” It is best and most abundant in Britain, of two kinds, yellow and black, both of which have by friction the power of attracting light substances. It drives away adders, relieves fantasies, and has virtues against the visits of fiends by night. “And so if so boystus a stone dothe so greate wonders, none shuld be dispisid for foule colour without, while the vertu that is hid within is vnknowe.” lib. xvi. c. 49. It was also regarded as a test of virginity, and rendering signal aid in parturition; these, and other properties, are noticed in Carton’s “Boke callid Caton,” sign. e. viij. Even in the XVIth cent. it was valued for certain medicinal qualities; for Dr. Turner, Dean of Wells, says in his Herbal, 1562, “Miscel- burde lyme melteth a swelled milt, if it be sodden, and layd to wyth a gete stone, or the Asiane stone." Beads, used for the repetition of prayers, were frequently formed of this material; thus among the gifts of Philip le Hardi to his daughter, on her marriage with the King of Bohemia, A.D. 1393, occurs, "Item, j paternostres de perles et de jayet, ou il y a xxxij grosses perles, et ix enseignaux d'or." Hist. de Bourg. iii. Alianor Duchess of Gloucester bequeathes, A.D. 1399, "un pare de paternostres d'ore, cont' xxx aviez, et iiiij gaude de get, qe fuerent a mon seignour et mari." Royal Wills. See also Teatam. Ebor. i. 381. There is evidence that by some persons such beads were superstitiously regarded as gifted with extraordinary virtue; and to this belief Bp. Bale appears to make allusion, Kyng Johan, p. 39.

<sup>2</sup> This term denotes the singular projection of the solars or upper stories in old timbered houses, of which most pictureque specimens are still seen at Chester, and other towns. "Proceres dicuntur capita trabium que eminent extra parietes. Hecteca dicitur solarium dependens parietibus cenaculi." ORTUS. The Catholicon explains menianum to be the same as solarium, so named from Menianus, who made in the Forum certain convenient places for beholding public spectacles. "Meniana, buildings outward in prospectes and galeries, especially when they be so builded that the edifice iutteth out in length from the piller or other part of the house, wherin the building especially resteth; buildings of pleasure hanging and iutting out." COOPER. Horman says that "buyldynge chargydde with iotyes (meniana adiicia) is parellous when it is very olde." In Macbeth, act I. sc. vi. Shakespeare makes use of the term "jutty" in this sense, where Banquo commends the position of Macbeth's castle. Florio, in his Ital. Dict. 1598, gives "Barbacane, an outooke, or corner standing out of a house, a jettie. Sporto, a porch, bay-window, or out-butting, or jettie of a house, that jetties out farther than anie other part of the house." Cotgrave renders "suspendue, a iettie, an outiutting roome. Soupendue, soupende, a pent-house, iuttie, or part of a building that iutteth or leaneth ouer the rest." Stevens cites an agreement made by P. Henslowe for building a theatre in 1599, with "a juttey forwards in eyther of the two upper stories."

gives “Manduces, images carried in pageantes with great cheekes, wide mouthes, and making a great noyse with their iawes.” The Ortus renders “Mandicus, a gaye horse,” and Forby gives the following explanation of the term; “Jibby-horse, a showman’s horse decorated with particoloured trappings, plumes, streamers, &c. It is sometimes transferred to a human subject.” In the MS. the word mandicem is placed under GYBELET; but its proper place is here. See Uguc. Vocab. Arund. MS. 508, f. 141, b.

vissi*.” Ray has gail or guile-fat, among N. Country words, and it is given also by Brockett and Jamieson. “A gilefatte, acromellarium.” CATH. ANG. In 1341, Thos. Harpham, of York, bequeathes “unam cunam, que vocatur maske-fat, et ij parvas cunas que vocantur gyle-fatts.” Testam. Ebor. ii. 2. The term occurs repeatedly in the Wills and Invent. printed by the Surtees Soc.; and in the Invent. of Jane Hall, Durham, 1567, a distinction is apparent between the “gile-howse,” and the brew-house, the former being perhaps the chamber where the wort was set to cool. See vol. i. 279. In the accounts of the building of Little Saxon Hall, 1507, it is called the “yele house.” Rokewode’s Suff. 146. See Invent. of Sir John Fastolfe’s effects, 1459, Archæol. xxi. 277; Unton Invent. pp. 3, 13; and Hartshorne’s Shropshire Gloss. v. Illfit.

viare*,” according to Ducange. In the Ward. Book of 28 Edw. I. there is a payment “pro vadis unius Lodmanni conducti pro navi guianda inter Kircudbrith et Karla-verok.” p. 273. Roquefort gives “guier: mener, guider, conduire à la guerre, gouverner,” &c. Chaucer uses the verb to gie, Cant. T. 15,604, 15,627. Gower says of the education of Alexander by Aristotle, “ But yet he set an examplayre,

His body so to guye and rule,
That he ne passe mot the rule.” Conf. Am. lib. vii.

See also the Vis. of P. Ploughm. 1257. R. Brunne uses both the verb, and the noun “gyour,” a leader; and in the Romance of K. Alis. 6023, “divers gyours, and sumpteris” are mentioned as attending on his Eastern expedition. “Commissa, to lede, or to gye.” MED. Palgrave gives the verb, “I gye, or gyde, Lydgate.”

" Go not to the wrastling, ne shooting the cock,
As it were a strumpet or a giglot."

<sup>3</sup> " A gilte, suilla." CATH. ANG. A gilt, or gaut, signifies in the North a female pig that has been spayed; see Grose, Brockett, and Jamieson. Bp. Kennett, in his Glossarial coll. gives " gaitz and giltz, boar-pigs and sow-pigs, Bor. from old Dan. gallte, porcus. Sax. gilte, suilla." See Yorksh. Dial. p. 39. Any female swine is called a gilt in Staff. Lansd. MS. 1033. See Hartshorne's Shropshire Glossary.

This word is still used in Norfolk, precisely in the sense that it has here. Forby gives " Gimmers, small hinges, as those of a box or cabinet, or even of the parlour door." A sperynge here denotes that by which a place is closed up, as a door or window, the lid of a chest, &c. The derivation of the word is doubtless from the French, gèmeaux, twins; and the term applies properly not only to a hinge, composed of two portions, of exactly similar form and size, jointed together, but to anything else which is formed of twin-pieces of like dimension, united in any manner, either as a hinge or otherwise. In the version of Vegetius attributed to Trevisa, an expedient is described, to be used in a besieged fortress, against the battering ram: " Somm hathe an iren, made as it were a peire tonges, i-iemewe as tonges in the myddes," by which the head of the ram is seized, and turned aside. B. IV. c. 23. Roy. MS. 18 A. XII. Among the disbursements for building Little Sazham Hall, A.D. 1507, under Smith's work are mentioned " iij pair of jemews for almerys," or cupboards, as many for portal doors, and a pair for the buttery windows. Rokewode's History of Suff. pp. 146, 149. Ray, among N. country words, gives " Jimmers, jointed hinges, in other parts called wing-hinges;" and the term occurs in the Craven dialect, with the observation, that

In the Ortus the term denotes a pair of forceps, " Vertinella est forceps medici, a sclyce, or a gemowe; " and it frequently occurs as the name of a kind of ring formed of two interlinked portions, which could be united into one connected ring, and frequently used as token of betrothal. See Nares, Brand's Popular Ant. and Archœol. xiv. 7. Palsgrave has " *Gymewe of a gyrdell, crochet d'une troussure. <sup>1</sup> A gin signifies, according to the old writers, a cunning or deceitful device, and thence an ingeniously constructed machine of any kind. Chaucer uses the word in both senses; thus the crafty trick of the Alchemist, which is termed " a false get," as has been observed in the note on the word GET, is called also " a false gin." In the Squire's T. it is related that the magical steed of brass would bear its rider at pleasure,
 " And turne again with writhing of a pin;
 He that it wrought, he coude many a gin."

In the Golden Legend, the wiles of Satan are termed " gynnes of temptacyon." Life of St. Bernard. In the Romance of Coer de Lion warlike machines are termed gins; as they are continually in Treviss's version of Vegetius, Roy. MS. 18 A. XII. " Troclea, the gyn, whyche is called a crane." ELYOT. See Hartshorne's Shropshire Glossary. " Exostra, a vice or gin of wood, wherewith such things as are done within, out of sight, are shewed to the beholders, by the turning about of wheeles." Junius's Nomenclator, by Fleming.

<sup>2</sup> This word is a corruption of the French " Gibbecière, a pouch, bag, poake, budget," COTG. properly such as was used in hawking, &c. but commonly worn by the merchant, or with any secular attire. Chaucer says of the Frankelein, or country gentleman,

" An anelace and gipsere all of silke
 Hing at his girdle, white as morow milke."

In the Invent. of valuables, the property of Henry V. A.D. 1423, is enumerated " j gipcer de noier velvet, garniz d'or, pris, 66s. 8d." Rot. Parl. iv. 215.

Gesa is, according to the Catholicon, “genus armorum quod Gallice dicitur gisarma, a gero, vel cesa, a cedendo: et sunt gesa vel cesa Gallorum, pila Romanorum.” In the curious Dictionary of John de Garlandia, printed in the Collection of documents relating to French history, Paris, 1837, there is an enumeration of weapons and engines of war, used at the siege of Toulouse, in 1218: the writer says that he saw “secures, bipennes, cathagenses Gallicorum, catheas et pugiones, cum dolonibus, avelancias Anglorum (anelacias, al. ms.) pila Romanorum, &c.” The MS. at Rouen gives the following reading, “secures Dachos, jess Gallicorum.” But, although the gisarme seems in these passages to be appropriated as a Gaulish weapon, Wace, in the Roman de Rou, written about 1160, repeatedly described the English in Harold’s army as armed with sharp gisarmes and hatchets, whereas their opponents fought with long lances and swords. See lin. 12,908, 12,928, 13,437. It may be observed, however, that on the Bayeux tapestry the Saxons are represented as combating with the heavy axe, but no weapon appears which resembles the gisarme. In the Royal mandate, 36 Hen. III. 1252, printed by Wate at the end of his edition of M. Paris, the sheriffs are commanded to assemble all persons from the age of 15 to 60, and cause them “jurare ad arma,” according to the amount of their lands and chattels; those who were rated under 40 shillings land, or from 40 shillings to 10 marks chattels, “jurati sunt ad falces, gisarmas, cultellos et alia arma minuta.” From this document, and the stat. Wint. 13 Edw. I. c. 6, 1285, it is apparent that the gisarme was one of the weapons in ordinary use among the inferior ranks of the English army. See Stat. of Realm, i. 97. A curious description of the conflict of the King of Niniveh, armed with “gysarme and swoerde bothe,” occurs in the Romance of Kyng Alis. line 2302. See also Havelok, 2553; Ritson’s Metr. Rom.; Chaucer, R. of Rose, 5978. The gisarme was used in England as late as the battle of Flodden, 1513; it was of two kinds, according to Sir S. Meyrick, namely, the glaive gisarme, and the bill gisarme; the distinctive mark of the weapon being a spike rising at the back, as may be seen in Grose’s Armour, pl. 28, and Skelton’s Illustr. of the Armoury at Goodrich Court, ii. pl. 84, 85.

<sup>2</sup> The gyterne, getron, or cittern, Fr. guiterne, was a stringed instrument, which seems, from the repeated mention that is made of it by Chaucer, to have been much in favour, probably as an accompaniment to the voice. In the Lat. Eng. vocabulary, Roy. MS. 17 C. XVII. are given “giga, getyrne: gigator, getyrner.” f. 43, b. Amongst the curious representations of musical instruments in Sloane MS. 3983, t. Edw. II. f. 13, the harp is called “giga vel lira,” but the same is named “arpes,” f. 4, b.; with the former there is seen an instrument with five strings, and the head recurved, which perhaps exhibits the form of the gyterne at that early period. In default of any positive information on the obscure subject of the early history of music, it may be stated, conjecturally, that the gyterne is the instrument which was held in an horizontal position, and played either by hand or with a plectrum, as may be seen in almost every representation of the angelic choir, whether in sculpture, painted glass, or illuminated MSS. The minstrels’ gallery on the N. side of the nave, at Exeter Cath., sculptured in the reign of Edw. III. may be noticed as a remarkable instance. In Hawkins’ Hist. of Music, iv. 113, a figure is given of the cittern, from Mersennus, Harmonie Universelle, 1636, which represents an instrument with six strings, differing from the Spanish guitar in the pear-shaped form of the belly. It was little esteemed, and chiefly used in

<sup>1</sup> A GYTONE, or guidon, is the name of a sort of banner, or streamer, called in Latin guido, which Ducange derives from guida, a guide. Guidon has been supposed to be a corruption of guide-homme; and is written "guydhome" in Harl. MS. 2258, where it is stated that its length was to be  $2\frac{1}{2}$  or 3 yards: "euary standard and guydhome to have in the chief the crosse of St. George, to be slitte at the ende, and to conteyne the creste or supporter, with the posey, worde, and device of the owner." From Harl. MS. 838, it appears that every baronet or superior estate should display a banner, if he were chief captain; every knight a pennon, and "eury squier or gentleman his getoun or standard." It is also directed that both the last should be slit at the extremity, whence probably the getoun was called conscisorium, as given above. In the contemporary poem descriptive of the siege of Rouen, A.D. 1415, it is said,

" There was many a getoun gay,
     With mychille and great array." line 1214.

See Sir Fred. Madden's note on this line, Archæol. xxii. 396; and Retrosp. Rev. i. 511, N.S. It appears that a gytone was not only carried in the field, but attached to the mast of a ship; thus, in a bill of expenses for the Earl of Warwick, A.D. 1437, is a charge, "Item, a gyton for the shipp, of viij yardis longe, poudrid full of ragged staves, for the lymmyng and workmanship ij s." Dugd. Warw. In the Will of John, Baron de Graystok, A.D. 1436, is this bequest: " lego pro mortuario meo optimum equum cum totid armaturd med, cotearmour, penon, et gyton, &c." Wills and Inv. i. 85, Surtees Soc. Palsgrave gives "Guyderne, a baner in a felde, guidon: Gyderne, guidon:" and Cotgrave has "guidon, a standard, ensigne, or banner, under which a troop of men of armes do serve; also he that bears it."

<sup>2</sup> This word seems to have implied not only to furnish arms, or armour, but, by means of some kind of varnish, to preserve the polish from rust. Sir John Paston gives the following direction; "As for my byll that is gylt, I wolde it were taken head to; there is von in the town can glaser weel I nowe, and ellys late it be weel oyld." Palgrave gives the verb "I glase a knyfe to make it bright; ie fourbis."

"Do take ij parties of þis pouder of gladen rotys, and þe iij part of þe poudre of ellebre, þat some men clepen cloffynnge, and medele boþe þise poudres to-gider in hony. " To couche gold : take gleiere, and safferoun grunde, and couche on thy golde, whyle hit is moyste." Fox relates that one Margery Backster, being accused of heresy, thus declared her opinion of images; " lewdwrights of stocks hew and forme such crosses and images, and after that, lewd painters gleere them with colours." The French word glaire has also, according to Cotgrave, the signification of "gravell, sand, and small pible stones, or sand mingled with stones; also a whitish and slimy soil," in Latin glarea; hence it is said in Caxton's Mirour of the World, part ii. c. 85, that "by Acres the cyte is founden a maner of sande, and there is founden also of the glaire of the see, which ben medled to gydre, and of thyse two myxtyons is made good glasse and clere." <sup>3</sup> In the Vision of Piers Ploughman the word "glubbere" occurs in this sense, line 5274; "y-glubbed," line 3165, meaning gorged with liquor; and in the Crede, "glop-pyne of drynke," line 184.

<sup>4</sup> "To glosse, ubi to fage. To glose, glosare, glosulare." CATH. ANG. In the earlier version this verse is thus given, "faage to thi man, and meue hym that he shewe to thee what bitokeneth the probleme." This signification of FAGYN' has been noticed above.

Percy's Essay on Minstrels, Sir Triestrem, Havelok the Dane, Jamieson, &c. In the vision of Piers Ploughman a singular comparison occurs, doubtless used proverbially, as an analogous expression is at the present time. <sup>4</sup> The word gobbet formerly implied not only a lump, but generally a piece or portion of anything. In the Wicclifite version, iv. Kings, 20, 7, is thus rendered; " And Isiae seide, bringe ȝe to me a gobet of figis (massam scorum, Vulg.); and whan þei hadden brouȝt it, and hadden putte it on his bocche, he was heelid." <sup>1</sup> "A goffe, ubi a godefader. A gome, ubi a godmoder." CATH. ANG. In the North goff signifies a fool, according to Brockett and Jamieson. Cotgrave gives "commère, a she-gossip, or godmother, a gomme," but the term appears to be now obsolete.

<sup>2</sup> The interjection Goddot, Goddoth, occurs frequently in Havelok the Dane: Sir F. Madden, in his Glossary appended to that curious poem, supposes it to be a corruption of God wot! formed in the same manner as Goddil for God's will, in Yorkshire and Lancashire; a conjecture which appeared to be confirmed by the following passage, where it is related that Havelok made a vow to found a priory,

" And therof held he wel his oþ,
 For he it made, God it woth!" line 2527.

The word, it is further observed, appears to have been limited to Lincolnshire or Lancashire, and a single instance of its occurrence is cited from a poem written in the former county, t. Edw. I. From the form, however, of the word, as it occurs in the Promptorium, the derivation appears to be more obviously from A.-S. geatan, concedere. <sup>3</sup> This term occurs in the Wycliffite version, Mark ix. 46; "If thin yghē sciaundre thee, caste it out; it is bettre to thee to entre gogil-yghed (Iacum, Vulg.) into the rewme of God, than have tweyne yghen," &c. Palsgrave gives among the adverbs, "a goggell, en louche. Goggle-eyed man, lovche." Junius thinks it may be derived from A.-S. scegl egede, strabo.

<sup>1</sup> The plant here intended is perhaps the corn marigold, Chrysanthemum segetum, Linn. called in the North, goulans, guilde, or goles, and in the South golds. See Ray and Jamieson. The virtues of " gowle " are detailed in the curious metrical treatise of herbs, Sloane MS. 1571, f. 26, b. Dr. Turner says that "Ranunculus is called in English crowfoot or kingeux, or in some places a gollande." Herbal, part ii. Nares states that gold is the cudweed, or mothwort, Gnaphalium Germanicum, Linn.

<sup>2</sup> A rick of corn in the straw laid up in a barn is called in Norfolk, according to Forby, a goat; every division of the barn being termed a goat-stede : to goave signifies to stow corn therein. See also Ray and Moore. Tusser uses the verb to gove, to make a mow or rick ; see August's Husbandry, st. 23. In a short Latin-Eng. Vocabulary of XVth cent. written apparently at Creak, in Norfolk, Add. MS. 12,195, occur " Getimo, to galue. Ingelimum, golfe." Palsgrave gives " goulfe of corne, so moche as may lye bytwene two postes, otherwyse a baye."

<sup>3</sup> Roquefort gives " goleon, sorte d'habit de guerre ;" but in the Promptorium golyon and gown seem to be almost synonymous, both being rendered by the Latin gunellus, a diminutive of gunna. The term is used by Gower, where he relates the exchange of garments made by Hercules and Iole, in order to deceive Faunus.

" He hath hir in his clothes clad,
And cast on hir his golion,
Whiche of the skin of a lion
Was made."

<sup>1</sup> This word occurs in the glosses on G. de Bibelesworth, Arund. MS. 220, as the rendering of foreyn, a place retired, a "withdraught," as it was called,

" Vn maneys vint en ma forere (an heuedlond,)
Ou par despit fist foreyn hier (gonge.)"

Hence the term "chambre forene," which is used by Robert of Glouc. In the Seuyn Sages it is related that a father and son went together to commit a robbery, and the father falling into a pit, bid his son cut off his head, that he might not be recognized. He carried the head away to conceal it,

" But als he com bi a gong,
Amide the pit he hit stlong." line 1315.

Fabyan gives the following tale, 43 Hen. III. " In this yere fell that happe of the Jewe of Tewksbury, whiche fell into a gonge vppon the Saterdaye, and woldे not for reuerence of his sabot day be plucked out ; wherof heryng the Erle of Gloucester, that the Jewe dyd so great reuerence to hys sabot daye, thought he wolde do as myche to his holydaye, whych was Sondaye, and so kept hym there tyll Monday, at which season he was found dede." The Medulla gives " Birsia, cloaca, a gonge ;" and Palsgrave " Gonge, a draught, ortrait." A.-S. gong, gang-settl, gang-pytte, gang-tun, latrina.

<sup>2</sup> " Gonge farmer, maister de basses œvres, guigueron, corevr d'ortraitz. I ferme a siege, or priuy, ſ'escure. Neuer come to your newe house, till your seges or priuies be fermēd, tant que vous ayez curé les ortraiz." PALSG. Thomas, in his Ital. Gramm. 1548, gives " Piombino, a certein instrument of leade, that the gongfermours use." " Gadouard, a gould-finder, jakes-farmer, feyer of priuies. Maistre phy phy, a jakes feyer, who hath often occasion enough to say, phy." CORG. Bp. Kennett gives the following note in his Glossarial Coll. Lansd. MS. 1033 : " To farm, to cleanse or empty, Bor. Oxfordshire ; as, to farm kine, to farm a stable or cow-house ; from Sax. feormian, purgare, whence the cleansers of jakes or privies are in some places called jakes-farmers." Compare ROWAR, FOWYN, and FYIN.

" For gore and fen, and full wast, Togydere they gadered, Y wys." Lybeaus disconus, line 1471.
That was out y-kast,

<sup>4</sup> Lacinia is explained in the Catholicon to be " testis lacerata, vel ora sive extremitas vestimenti ;" to which the following addition is made in the Ortus, " vel nodus clamidis, a hemme of clothe, or a gore, or a trayne." G. de Bibelesworth says,

" Car par devant avec eskours (lappes.)
Et d'encosté sont vos girouns (sidgoren.)"

This word is used repeatedly by Chaucer, and Tyrwhitt observes that its meaning was not intelligible. It seems, however, to imply a slit in a garment, whereby a piece is either inserted or taken away, so as to widen or contract it; thus the attire of the Carpenter's young wife is described, who wore

"A barm-cloth, as white as morwe milk, Upon her lenes, ful of many a gore." Miller's T. 3237.

Here it doubtless signifies that her apron was gathered in with numerous plaits, in girding it about her hips. Sir Thopas says, where he relates his dream,

"An elf-quene shall my leman be,
And slepe under my gore." Cant. T. line 13,719.

Here the expression seems to be one of those conventional phrases of romance of which the meaning cannot be closely defined, and implying ample coverings, garments full and rich. In Emare, the Queen of Galys is said to be "goodly unther gore,—wordy unther wede,—comely unther kelle." Rits. Metr. R. ii. 243. "Goore of a smocke, poynte de chemise." PALSG. "Gheroni, the goore of a woman's smocke, or other lyke garment." W. Thomas, Ital. Gramm.

<sup>3</sup> GOSSYPMANN, MS. The Baptismal sponsors were formerly called gossips, a term which Skinner derives from Ang.-Sax. God, Deus, and syb, affinitas, as it were "cognati in Deo;" and by the Canon law marriage was forbidden between persons thus allied, as much as between relatives by blood. In the Lay le Freine, it is related that the knight, to whom two sons were born, sent to greet a knight who was his neighbour,

"And pray him that he com to me,
And say he schal mi gossibbe be."

It would hence seem that the term comprised not only the co-sponsors, but the parents of the child baptized. Verstegan, in his explanations of ancient words, observes upon "Godsip, now pronounced gossip. Our Christian ancestors understanding a spiritual affinity to grow between the parents and such as undertook for the child at baptism, called each other by the name of Godsib, which is as much to say, as that they were sib together, that is, of kin together through God." p. 175, edit. 1655. Fabyan says of the repudiation of Ingebert of Denmark by Philip Augustus, king of France, "yt was not longe or she were from hym deuorced for cause of alyuance of gossypred, or otherwise." Part vii. c. 242.

<sup>1</sup> “Lanugo, i. lana super poma, vel flos tribuli qui postquam bene siccatus est levat effutur in aerem.” CATH. In the Promptorium an allusion is made to another and strange supposition regarding the production of gossamer, noticed by Skinner, namely, that it was formed from the dew scorched by the morning sun, and thence, as it seems, termed here corruption. It is evident from Chaucer that this phenomenon had exercised the ingenuity of curious observers in ancient times.

“ As sore wondren som on cause of thonder,
 On ebbe and floud, on gosomer, and on mist,
 And on all thing, til that the cause is wist.” Squiere's T. 10,572.

An allusion to the anciently received notion occurs in Spenser, who speaks of —“ the fine nets which oft we woven see

 Of scorched dew.”

“ As light and thin as cobwebs that do fly
 In the blew air, caus'd by the autumnal sun,
 That boils the dew that on the earth doth lie ;
 May seem this whitish rug then in the scum,
 Unless that wiser men make't the field spider's loom.” H. More.

Even Dr. Hooke advances a conjecture that the great white clouds seen in summer might consist of gossamer. Microgr. 202. Dr. Hulse and Martin Lister first observed the real mode of its production by a species of spider. See Ray's Letters, 36, 69; Lister de Araneis; and the interesting relation in White's Hist. Selb. The etymology of the word is very obscure; Skinner suggests gossampine, Fr. gossipium, Lat. the cotton plant. The derivation proposed in the Craven Glossary, from its appellation “ summer-gauze, hence gauze o' th' summer, gauzamer, alias gossamer,” is hardly tenable, when it is considered that the term was probably received in our language long before the introduction of the tissue called gauze. An early instance of its occurrence is in the gloss on G. de Bibelesworth, whose treatise was composed in the time of Edw. I.

“ Regardet cy la filandre (gosesomer.)” Arund. MS. 220, f. 301.

Brit. according to Jamieson, it is called also sun-dew webs, or moosewebs. In German, unser Frawen Haar, the Blessed Virgin's hair. See Jamieson, v. Garsummer; and Narcs.

Stat. of Realm, iii. 872. The stat. 2 and 3 Edw. water at guttes," so that the road for shipping was much injured. Vol. iv. 72. This word is retained in use in several parts of England; Skinner and Ray give gowts, a word signifying in Somersetshire channels or drains under-ground. Bp. Kennett has the following notes in his Gloss. Coll. Lansd. MS. 1033: "A wide ditch, or water-course that empties itself into the sea, is called in Romney Marsh a gut, from old Dan. giota, scroba: thence gutter, dim. a mill gut, a gote, i. a floud-gate, Northumb. Ang.-Sax. geotan, fundere." In the Craven Dialect gote denotes a channel of water from a mill-dam, as does goyt in Hallamshire. Jamieson gives goat and got, a small trench or drain. A similar word occurs in old French; "Goule: gouttière, égout." ROQUEF.

" Vostre regardz est gracios (louelik,
Mes vos oeyz sunt sacionz (gundy:)
Des oeez outez la sacye (þe gunde,)
E de neea la ruppe (þe maldrope.)"

Bp. Kennett, in his Glossarial Coll. Lansd. MS. 1033, has the following note: "Gunded eyes, Westm. Goundy, filthy like running sores, Gower. Gunny eyes, Yorksh. Dial." Ang.-Sax. gund, pus, sanies. Skelton describes the "eyen gowndye" of Elynour Rumming.

<sup>1</sup> A grayle is a service book containing the responses, or gradalia, so called because they are sung in gradibus, or by course. It is thus described by Lyndwood: " Gradale—ponitur pro libro integro, in quo contineri debent officium aspersionis aquae benedictae, missarum inchoationes, sive officia, Kyrie, cum versibus Gloria in excelsis, gradalia, Halleluja, et tractus, sequentiae, symbolum cantandum in Missa, Offertorium, Sanctus, Agnus, Communio, &c. quæ ad chorum spectant in Missa solennis decantatione." Provinc. iii. tit. 27. At the synod of Exeter, A.D. 1287, it was ordained that certain books should be provided in every parish, at the charge of the parishioners, among which is named the gradale. Wilkins, Conc. ii. 139. It is likewise included in the constitution of Abp. Winchelsey, to the same effect, A.D. 1305. Lyndw. The stat. 3 and 4 Edw. VI. for abolishing divers books and images, enacts "that all books called antiphoners, missals, grails, processinals, &c. heretofore used for service of the church, shall be clearelie and vtterlie abolished, and forbidden for euer to be vsed or kept in this realme."

And turn to grame wel grille." Amis and Amiloun, 657.
" Lordynges, he saide, y am ashamed,
And sore anoyed, and agramed." K. Alis. 3310.

In Havelok the verb to greme occurs, line 442, and the adjective grame, meaning angry or incensed, line 214. See also Sevn Sages, 2703; Cant. Tales, 16,871; and Jamieson, v. Gram. Ang.-Sax. grama, molestia, gremian, irritare.

<sup>3</sup> It may be observed in the Forme of Cury, and all books of ancient cookery, that "myyd," or grated bread, was continually employed in the composition of a variety of dishes. Palgrave says, " I holde a penny that I shall grate this lofe, or you can grate a rasyn of gynger;" that is, a root, racine.

<sup>1</sup> "To grave, ubi to bery. To grave, cepitare, fodere, percolere, fodiare, pastinare. A graver, cepitator, cultor, fossor. A gravyng, cultura." CATH. ANG. The verb to grave is used by most of the old writers in the signification of digging, and thence of depositing in the grave. Ang.-Sax. grafan, fodere. Sir John Maundevile gives a relation of the legend regarding the origin of the trees of which the cross was formed; that when Adam sent Seth to crave oil of mercy of the angel that kept Paradise, the angel refused to give it, "but he toke him three graynes of the same tree that his fatre eet the appelle offe, and bad hym, als sonne as his fatre was ded, that he scholde putte theise three greynes undre his tonge, and grave him so. And of theise three greynes spong a tree—and bare a fruyt, thorghe the whiche fruyt Adam scholde be saved." p. 14. To grave still signifies, in the North, to break up ground with the spade.

<sup>2</sup> The primary meaning of the word grangia, in French grange, or grance, seems to have been a repository for grain, or, according to Ducange, a threshing floor; and thence it implied the farming establishment generally, with its various buildings and appliances, as it is accurately defined by Lyndwood, in his annotations on the Constit. of Abb. Mepham, Provinc. lib. ii. tit. i. Spelman cites a MS. in which the name Thomas Atelabe, that is, at the lathe, or barn, is said to be in French, Thomas de la Graunge. The term has even the more extended sense of a hamlet; that is, probably, the assemblage of dwellings occupied by the dependants of the farm, which, doubtless, forming a nucleus, gave rise to the greater number of villages in ancient times. Palsgrave gives "graunge, or a lytell thorpe, hameau. Graunge, petit village." Huloet makes the following distinctions: "Graunge, or manour place without the walls of a citie, suburbanum. Graunge, or little thorpe, viculus. Graunge, where husbandry is exercised, colonia."

"In thanke thy seruice wol I take,
And high of gree I wol thee make."

It occurs frequently in the primary sense of a step, gré, Fr. "Climatum, a goyng fro gre to gre." ORTUS.

<sup>1</sup> The term GRECE seems to be derived from the plural of gre, a step. It is thus used in the Wycliffe version; "bou schalt not sty bi grees (per gradus, Vulg.) to myn auter, lest bi filpe be schewid." Exod. xx. 26. "Forsope Esdras be writere stood on be green of tree (super gradum ligneum, Vulg.) whiche he hadde maad to speke peron." Esd. viii. 4. Compare iv Kings, xxiii. 3, and Dedis, xxi. 35. Sir John Maundevile says, in his relation of the state of the great Chan of Chatay, "the gree, that he gothe up to the table, ben of precyous stones, medled with gold." p. 259. And again, "Vesselle of sylver is there non, for thei tell no prys there of, to make no vesselle offe, but thei maken ther of grecynges, and pileres, and pawmentes to halles and chambres." p. 263. In the version of Vegetius, which is attributed to Trevisa, among directions how a strong place should be fortified by double walls, the intervening space being filled with earth, it is said that there should be "in the making of the inner walle, at every fourty or fifty fote of lengthe, esy gresinges fro the playn grounde of the citie up to the walls." See Forby's observations on the word grissens, which still signifies stairs in Norfolk; Craven Glossary, v. Grecce; and Nares.

<sup>2</sup> This name of the badger, which was taken, probably, from its colour, has previously occurred as synonymous with BAUSTONE. The gloss on the Equivoca of John de Garlandia gives the following explanation: "Taxus, quoddam animal, a brocke or a grey." "Graye, a beest, tase." PALSG. "Grisard, a badger, boason, brocke, or gray." COTG. "Graio, a gray, a brocke, a badger." FLORIO. See Holland's Pliny, viii. c. 38.

" But first he cheweth grein and licorise,
To smellen sote, or he had spoke with here." Miller's Tale.

They are again mentioned in Rom. of the Rose. Gerarde and Parkinson give representations of the Meliguette, greatest sort of cardamoms, Grana Paradisi, or Guinea grains; a pod shaped like a fig, and full of red seed. The true grains of Paradise were brought <sup>1</sup> The fish here intended seems to be the cod or keeling, Morhua vulgaris, Cuv. which is called the green fish, probably from its colour, but as stated in Willughby's Hist. Pisc. p. 166, from its being taken on the coast of Greenland. It abounds in the Northern seas: a multitude of British and Dutch fishermen are occupied in taking and preparing it for transport to all parts of Europe. It is called also hubberdeen, Island fish, or stock-fish. " Morus, the cod, or green fish. Morus verte, green fish." COTG. This green variety, called the Scotch cod, is most common towards the North.

<sup>2</sup> In the Golden Legend, Life of St. Paul, there is a relation that the head of the saint was found by a shepherd, who " set it up by the place where his shepe greased." Palgrave gives " to grease, or grase, as a horse dothe." The word, as usually written, is more in accordance with the derivation, Ang.-Sax. grasian, gramine vesci. Furby gives another signification of the verb to graze, as used in Norfolk, namely, to become covered with the growth of grass; in this sense it is given likewise in the CATH. ANG. " to gresse, herbere, herbescere."

<sup>2</sup> Neccham, in his treatise de nominibus utensilium, writes as follows respecting female costume: "Camisia sindonis, vel serici, vel bissi, materiam sociatur (i. capit.) Penula (pane) mantelli sit ex scissimis (griis), vel experiolis (ekureus), sive scurellis, vel ex cuniculis, vel ex laeronibus (leeruns); cuius urla (penule) sit ex sabellino, &c." Cott. MS. Titus, D. xx. with an interlinear French gloss. This kind of fur is mentioned by John de Garlandia, in his Dictionary, among the more costly kinds: "Pellipari-carious vendunt cistimum (al. scimum) et urlas de sabellino;" upon which the following gloss is given, "cistimus est illud quod dicitur Gallico var, et gris." Docum. Inédits, Paris sous Philip le Bel, App. 591. The esteem in which it was held appears from M. Paris, who states in his account of the honourable reception of the Tartar envoys by Innocent IV. A.D. 1248, "dedit eis vates pretiosissimas, quas robas vulgariter appellamus, de escarleto praelectio, cum penulis et fururis de pellibus variis cistimorum." It is not easy to ascertain with precision what is the animal that supplied this fur; it appears to be described by Gesner as the Mus Ponticus, or Venetus, commonly called varius, and the fur of which was termed by the Germans Grauerck. The terms gris and varis seem, indeed, to be frequently used as synonymous, but many authorities may be cited from which a distinction is apparent. Much curious information on this subject, and on the use of costly furs in general, has been given by Ducange, in the first dissertation appended to Joinville. Chaucer describes the sleeve of the monk as "purfiled at the hond with gris" of the finest quality. Cant. Tales, Prol. 194. Mention occurs of "grey and grys" in Vis. of P. Ploughm. 10,063. See Jamieson, v. Griece. In the Invent. of the Wardrobe of Hen. V. taken 1423, are enumerated various garments "furrez de cristigrey;" probably a variety of gris.

<sup>2</sup> This fabulous animal is particularly described by Sir John Maundevile, in his account of Bacharie. "In that contree ben many griffounes, more plente than in ony other contree. Sum men seyn that thei han the body upward as an eagle, and benethe as a lyoun, and treuly thei seyn sothe that thei ben of that schapp. But o griffoun hathe the body more gret, and is more strong thanne viij. lyouns, of suche lyouns as ben o this half, and more gret and strongere than an c. egles, suches as we han amonges us." He further states that a griffin would bear to its nest a horse, or a couple of oxen yoked to the plough; its talons being like horns of great oxen, and serving as drinking-cups; and of the ribs and wing feathers strong bows were made. See p. 325. Casley observes that in the Cotton Library there was such a cup, 4 ft. in length, silver-hooped, and inscribed "Griphi unguis divo Cuthberto Dunelmensi sacer;" another curiously mounted as a standing cup, on an eagle's leg of silver, is still preserved in the cabinet of antiquities at Paris, in the King's Library, having been brought, at the Revolution, with the spoils of the treasury of St. Denis. A curious account of it is given by Doublet, in his history of that abbey, p. 343. From an ancient MS. Invent. of the treasury of Bayeux Cathedral, it appears that three such talons were there preserved, and on solemn occasions appended to the altar, as precious rarities. A "corme de griffoun" is mentioned in the Kalend. of Exch. iii. 176. The egg was likewise preserved as a valuable curiosity, and used as a goblet; see the lists of the jewels and plate of Edw. III. 1338, ibid. pp. 171, 172. "Item, j oef de griffon garnis d'argent, od pie et covercle." The griffin was assumed by the Le Despenser family, and the upper part appears as the crest on the helm of Hugh le Despenser, who died 1349, exhibited on his tomb at Tewkesbury. Another strikingly designed representation of this curious animal is seen at Warwick, at the feet of Richard Beauchamp, who died 1439.

"To riche men was he grille, of pouer held no tales." Langt. Chron. p. 92.

It is thus used by Chaucer. See also Amis and Amiloun, 1275, 1802; Towneley Myst. p. 137; Covent. Myst. p. 230; Reliqu. Ant. ii. 166; Jamieson, v. Grylle.

<sup>4</sup> "A gripe, griphes, vultur." CATH. ANG. This obsolete appellation of the vulture has been derived from Ang.-Sax. gripan, rapere, but more probably from the Lat. gryps, or the French. "Grype, a beast, egripe." PALSG. It must, however, be ob-

Griffon, a gripe or griffon.*” COTG. Holinshed says in the Hist. of the Conquest of Ireland, B. ii. c. 18, that the “griph or geire is a kind of eagle, but such as is ravenous, and feedeth more vpon carren than upon anie soule of his owne preieng ; and for his cowardnesse carieth neither the name nor praise apperteining to the true eagle.” The egg of the grype, frequently mentioned as a rarity much valued, and used as a drinking-cup, is probably to be referred to the fabulous animal, the griffon, and may have been merely the egg of the ostrich. Gower relates that Albinus kept the skull of Gurmund, which was fashioned as a goblet,

“ And polysshed was eke so clene,
 That no sygne of the sculle was sene,
 But, as it were, a grype’s eye.” Conf. Am. lib. i.

In the will of William Gascoigne, Lord Chief Justice, dated 1419, is mentioned “ciphus, vocatus a gryp ey, ligatus cum argento, et deaurato.” Testam. Ebor. i. 393. In the Invent. of Fountains Abbey, taken at the dissolution, and given by Burton, occurs the item, “A grype schill, with a covering gilt, 27 oz.”

<sup>1</sup> “Aratiuncula, fossa parva que instar sulci aratur.” CATH. The term grype occurs in an award, dated 1424, relating to the bounds of lands of the Prior of Bodmin, as follows: “The bounde that comyth thurgh the doune—goyng don to another stone stondyng of olde tyme in the bank of a grype,—and so the diche (called Kenediche) and the gripe, &c.” Mon. Ang. new ed. from Harl. Cart. 57 A. 35. This word is still used in Sussex, and many parts of England. In Norfolk, Forby states that a trench, not amounting to a ditch, is called a grub; if narrower still, a grip; and if extremely narrow, a gripple. See Ray, Brockett, Craven Dial, and Jamieson. A.-S. grep, sulcus.

<sup>3</sup> Marchanwte, ms. The original meaning of the term grocer is defined in the stat. 37 Edw. III. 1363, respecting “Marchaunte nomez grossers,” so called because they “engrossent totes maners des marchandise vendables,” and kept them back in order to sell at an improved price. Stat. of Realm, i. 379. In the following century they were established as a distinct trade; see the “Incorporatio Groceriorum Lond.” Pat. 7 Hen. VI. and another patent in the year following, “pro custod’ misteria Groceria.” Before the early part of the XVIth cent. their dealings seem to have become limited to grocery, as now understood: thus Palsgrave gives “grocer, grossier, espicier.” Seplassarius is explained as meaning “negociator, qui multa venundat.” See Ducange.

(the devils) downe in to the grounde of the see." Hence it also signifies the lowest part of a building, the foundation. Robert Brunne speaks of "be groundwalle þik" of Berwick Castle (Langt. Chron. p. 210.); and in the contract for building Fotheringhay Church, A.D. 1435, the foundations are termed "the ground-werk." Mon. Ang. iii. Sir John Maundevile gives the Greek inscription which was seen on the rock whereon the cross of the Saviour had been set, thus rendered: "Quod vides est fundamentum (βάσις) totius fidei hujus mundi; that is to seye, that thou seest is ground of alle the feythe of this world." p. 92. Palsgrave gives "grounde, the botome of a foundation of any thyng, fondation."

<sup>2</sup> A grup or groop signifies in Norfolk a trench, narrower than a ditch, as has been observed in the note on the word GRYPPE. In the North the term retains the signification assigned to it above. See Brockett, Craven Glossary, and Jamieson. Bp. Kennett likewise notes this use of the word: "grup, or grupe, a ditch or trench, especially that which runs across the length of the byer, or cow-house; Bor." Lansd. MS. 1033. Skinner suggests the derivation from Ang.-Sax. groope, latrina, scobs. "Minsorium, a grop." ORTUS. "A grupe, minsorium." CATH. ANG. Gouldman, in his Dictionary, 1664, gives "a groppe in stables and houses, minthorium," from "minthos, dung or ordure." ELYOT. Mivbos, stercus. Ugucio gives the same explanation which is found in the Catholicon, "minsatorium, locus ad mingendum, quod recipit urinam." The reading of the Winchester MS. agrees with that of the Harl. text, "musitorium," but the word appears to require correction.

<sup>3</sup> "Runco, to grop. Runco, a wedehoke, and a gropynge yrone." MED. MS. CANT. "Runcina est quoddam artificium fabri lignarii gracile et recurvum, quo cavitur tabule, ut una alteri connectatur; Anglice, a gryppynge yron." ORTUS. "A grupynge yrene, runcina." CATH. ANG. This implement, which, as it has been observed in the note on the word FORMOWRE, was probably similar to what is now termed a gouge, called by Palgrave "formour or grublyng yron;" and used to form grooves or incisions. Ang.-Sax. græp, sulcus. Palsgrave gives the verb "I growpe (Lydgate) sculpe, or suche as could graue, gropue, or carue: this word is nat used in comen spetche."

<sup>1</sup> In the Ortus agromellum and granomellum are rendered "growte;" and idromellum is explained thus: "potus ex aqua et melle, Anglice mede or growte." "Growte, idromellum, agromellum, acromellum, granomellum." CATH. ANG. This term properly implies ground malt, or the first infusion preparatory to brewing, which is thus distinguished in Harl. MS. 1002, f. 114. "Worte, siromellum, sed growte dicas agromellum." Ang.-Sax. grut, far, condimentum cerevisiae. In medieval Latin it was called grutum, or grudum; see in Rokewode's Hist. Suff. pp. 31, 32, a document in which mention occurs of grudum ordei. In old French malt was called gru, or grust, according to Roquefort; but Palgrave gives the word "grout that serueth to brewyng, in Fraunce there is none vset." G. de Bibelesworth, who wrote in the reign of Edw. I. gives a curious account of the mode of brewing, in which "grout" occurs as a gloss on the word "berzize," which is not found in the Glossaries, and may possibly be a barbarous compound of bere, a drink, or ber, barley, and zithum, which, according to Borel, was the Gaulish appellation of beer. The term grout is not used in the detailed account of brewing given by Harrison in the description of England, B. ii. c. 6, Holinsh. i. 169. In the North, according to Coles, Ray, and the Craven Glossary, grout signifies wort of the last running. Bp. Kennett gives the following note: "Grout, growt: in Leicestershire the liquor with malt infused for ale and beer, before it is fully boiled, is called grout, and before it is tinned up in the vessel, is called wyrt, or wort. A.-Sax. grut, nova cerevisia. They have in the West a thick sort of ale, which they call grout-ale, and it is in most places a common proverb, as thick as growt. Kilian, graunt, condimentum cerevisiae." Lansd. MS. 1033. The term was not, perhaps, exclusively confined to denote farinaceous mixtures for the purpose of brewing; thus land in Addington, Surrey, was held by the serjeanty of making in an earthen pot in the royal kitchen, on the day of coronation, a mess called "diligrout," as stated by Blount, in his Jocular Tenures, p. 50. In the Plac. Cor. 39 Hen. III. it is called "le mess de gyron," or if compounded with fat, it was termed "mauspigyrnum."

<sup>2</sup> In the Wycliffite version the following use of this verb is found, Jos. x. 21: "No man was hardi to grucche (eber to make pruy noise, mutire, Vulg.) agenus be sones of Israel." Sir John Maundevile speaks of "the welle that Moyses made with his hond in the desretes, whan the people grucched, for thei fownden no thing to drynke." It is said in the Golden Legend, that "when the herte is full of grace, hym oughte not grutche by impacyence." In the Vision of Piers P. and Chaucer's works, the word occurs frequently. Ang.-Sax. grunnan, grunniere. Horman says that " swyne wode for loue groyneth (subant) and let passe from them a poysen called aprine." Compare GRONYNGE of swyne, above. Palsgrave gives the verb " I grunte, as a horse dothe whan he spored, or as any beast dothe whan he complayneth, ie groigne, and ie gronce, expressed in I grude."

<sup>2</sup> GURTE, MS. In all the other MSS. as likewise in the printed editions, the word grut is given, which seems to be the correct reading, as appears also by its place in alphabetical order. Ang.-Sax. greet, pulvis.

They wer depe, and ful wyde,

<sup>3</sup> Various etymologies have been proposed of the word gugaw, in its ordinary sense; " Crepundia, toyes or gugawes for children, as rattels, clappers," &c. Junius, by Higgins. " Babiole, a trifle, whim-wham, gugaw, or small toy for a child to play withall," corc. Skinner suggests Ang.-Sax. gegaf, nuga, or heawgas, simulachra, or the French jyan, but gogue or gogaille seems more nearly to resemble it, and signifies, according to Roquefort, " bagatelle, plaisanterie. Gogoyer, se réjouir," &c. It would, however, seem that the word is here given as synonymous with flute, and the inquiry suggests itself whether it had originally denoted some musical instrument, and thence been used in a more general signification. According to Roquefort there was a wind instrument called gigue, and this statement corresponds with the observation of Ferrari, that giga, Ital. may be derived from yīppas, a kind of flute. It is singular that, according to Brockett and Jamieson, a Jew's harp is called in N. Britain a gewgaw, but in that instance, as likewise here, in the Promptorium, it seems probable that the term is used merely in reference to that with which idle disport may be taken, like trifles in childhood.

<sup>4</sup> " A gunne, fundibalum, muruscum. A gunner, fundibalarius, fundibalista." CATH. ANG. written A.D. 1483. The difficulty of ascertaining with precision the period of the introduction of engines from which missiles were propelled by means of gunpowder, arises chiefly from the circumstance, to which allusion is made by Selden, that the term gun, supposed by Somner to be merely a contraction of mango, or mangona, may have been used to denote some engine of war, long before the application of gunpowder to such purpose. Mr. Douce observes that the earliest mention of " gonnes" is found in the Romance of Kyng Alisaunder, line 3268; but in his note on that passage he says that it must not be concluded that they were used with powder, as originally they might have been engines of the catapult kind. Weber, Metr. Rom. iii. 306. The same remark applies to the account of the siege sustained by Kyng Aragus, who

With gonnes, and grete stones rounde
Were thrown downe to the gronde.” Syr Tryamoure, 955.

In the Awywyngs of Kyng Arther, a “gunne” is mentioned, the effect of which is compared to lightning, but it is still doubtful whether the term should be understood to imply a projectile impelled by any ignited substance, or merely filled therewith.

“There came flaid a gunne,
And lemet as the leuyn.” St. 65, edit. by Mr. Robson.

It seems very probable that the missile here intended was a tube filled with Greek fire, or feu volant. In several MSS. of the Practica of John Arderne, a surgeon of eminence t. Edw. III. instructions are found for compounding “fewes Gregoies” and “fewes volants:” the latter being a liquid mixture, described as of an oily nature, with which a pipe being filled, and ignited by a match, would fly in any direction. A figure is given in the margin. He proceeds to describe “fewe volant” of another kind. “Pernez j. li. de soufre vif, de charbones de saux, (i. weloghe.) ij. li., de salpetre, vj. li. si les fetez bien et sotelment moudre sur un pierre de marbre, puis bullez le poudre parmy un soltile courchief. Cest poudre vault à gettere pellettes de fer, ou de plom, ou d'areyne, ou un instrument qe l'em appelle gonne.” See Sloane MSS. 335, 795. A detailed account of passages in ancient documents or chronicles which throw light on this obscure subject has been given by Sir S. Meyrick, in his Crit. Enquiry, and a paper on the history of hand fire-arms, Archæol. xxii.; and likewise by Mr. Archibald, in his description of ancient artillery discovered on the coast of Lancashire, Archæol. xxviii. It may here suffice to state that gunpowder was known in Western Europe about the middle of the XIIIth cent.; and that the earliest recorded instance of its use in war, in this country, appears to have been in the first expedition of Edw. III. against the Scots, in 1327, when artillery, termed by Barbour “crarys of wer,” was employed. See Jamieson. There can be no doubt that Chaucer uses the term “gonne,” to signify an engine charged with gunpowder; as in the following comparison:

When fire is in the pouder ronne.” House of Fame, B. iii.

The Household of Edw. III. as appears by the ordinances which commence 1344, printed by the Ant. Soc., comprised “Ingyners lvij. Artellers vj. Gonners vj.” Their daily pay in time of war was 6d. The invention of hand fire-arms is assigned by Sir S. Meyrick, on the authority of Billius, to the Lucquese, in 1430; (Archæol. xxii. 60) yet a prior use of some weapons of the sort seems to be indicated. In an Inventory of the arms and effects of Sir Simon Burley, taken apparently after his execution, 1388, and now in the possession of Sir Thomas Phillipps, among “petites choses à Baynard Castell,” is named “j. petit gonne de feir.” In the Pell Records, 1 Hen. IV. 1400, payments appear for “quarell gunnes” at 7s. each; for saltpetre, sulphur, and wadding; and the contemporary evidence of Monstrelet shews that “bastons à feu” were among the arms of the English sent to the relief of the siege of Orleans, in 1428. Hand-guns are named among purchases for the defence of Holy Island, 1446; and were used at the siege of Caistor, in Norfolk, about 1459. Paston Lett. iv. 316. In the version of Vegetius attributed to Trevisa, and completed 1408, in the account of military engines, allusion is made to “grete gonnes that shete now a daies stones of so grete peyse that no walle may with-stonde them; as hathe be wele shewede bothe in the Northe centre, and eke in the werres of Wales.” B. iv. c. 22, Roy. <sup>1</sup> The term habergeon appears properly to be a diminutive of hawberk, although here given as synonymous. Wace, in his Roman de Rou, written about 1160, describes the Conqueror as armed, at the battle of Hastings, with a "boen hawbert;" but Odo, his half-brother, Bishop of Bayeux, who could not decorously assume the complete military equipment, and rode with a staff merely to stimulate the combatants, provided himself with this partial defence.

De sor une chemise blanche.*" T. ii. 220, edit. by Pluquet.

The precept of Randolph III., Earl of Chester, to his barons, about the close of the XIIIith cent. requires that their knights and free tenants should have "loricas, et haubergella;" and the ordinance of Hen. III. 1252, "super juratis ad arma," directs that every man, according to the rate of his land and chattels, should arm himself either with the lorica, the habergetum, called also in this document haubercus, or the perpunktum. The stat. of Winchester, 13 Edw. I. 1285, makes the same distinction between the hauberg', habergeon, and parpoint, to be used by the three classes respectively, according to their assessment. Stat. of Realm, i. 97. From these authorities it is evident that the habergeon was a defence of an inferior description to the hawberk; and when the introduction of plate armour in the reign of Edw. III. had supplied more convenient and effectual defences for the legs and thighs, the long skirt of the hawberk became superfluous; from that period the habergeon alone seems to have been worn. This, in its turn, being superseded by the cuirass, was reduced to the mere apron of mail; but at the time when the Promptorium was compiled, the expensive nature of plate armour caused its use to be restricted, and combatants of the lower classes were content to arm themselves with the brigandine, or the habergeon. The value of three "hauburiounes," in 1374, was 13 marks: See Invent. of Edw. de Appelby, Sloane Cart. xxxi. 2. Milan was celebrated for the manufacture of this defence: in a document dated 33 Hen. VI. relating to armour delivered out of the Tower, are mentioned "haberg'ons, some of Meleyn, and some of Westewale," that is, probably, Westphalia, or the Westerwald, where the iron-works of Solingen have long been in repute. Archæol. xvi. 125. In the Inventory of Sir John Fastolfe's armoury, 1459, are likewise found "ij. haburyones of l'Milayne." Archæol. xxi. 271. In the Wycliffite version Goliath is said to have had "a brasun basynet on his heed, and he was cloþid wiþ an haburion hokid (eber mailid, lorica squamata," Vulg.) "He shal cloþe riȝtfulnesse for an haburoun (pro thorace, Vulg.) and he shal take certeyn doom for a basynet." Sapiens, v. 15. "Bittx, lorica que contextitur duobus licitis accumulatis, a hawbergion; ita trilix. Pancerium est lorica, an haberyon." ORTUS. Awbrychowne.

<sup>2</sup> This dish, now considered an almost exclusively a Northern delicacy, seems to have been anciently in more general esteem. A curious metrical recipe is found in the Liber Cure cocorum, Sloane MS. 1986, f. 103. "Omasus, i. tripa vel ventriculus qui continet alia viscera, a trype, or a podyng, or a wesaunt, or hagges. <sup>1</sup> Forby explains hay-net as signifying in Norfolk "a hedge net, a long low net, to prevent hares or rabbits from escaping to covert, in or through hedges." See also Moore. In a lease dated 1572, in the manor of Hawsted, Suffolk, the landlord reserves the right of "hawking, haying," &c. that is, rabbit-netting. Cullum's Hawsted, p. 198. The word is doubtless derived from Ang.-Sax. haeg, or hege, septum. In the edition of the Ortus in Mr. Wilbraham's library, clausura is rendered "a closse, or a heye." Haye occurs elsewhere in the sense of an enclosure; thus in the gloss on the "liber vocatus equus," called in the Promptorium "Distigius," written by John de Garlandia, occurs "Cimiterium, chyrche-haye." Harl. MS. 1002. In the Golden Legend it is said, "he had—foule way thorough hayes and hedges, woodes, stones, hylles and valeyss." f. 68, b.

<sup>2</sup> "Harife, rubium minor, herba est." CATH. ANG. The Galium aparine is called in the North, according to Ray, "Hariff and catchweed, goose-grease;" according to Parkinson it was reckoned by the old botanists as a kind of madder; but he does not give the name hayryf, which is probably derived from the asperity of its stalks. In some places it is called hairough. Palsgrave gives "haylife, an herbe."

Roy. MS. 18 A. XII. f. 105. Among the trades, in the order of the pageants of the Play of Corpus Christi, at York, 1415, "hayresters" are mentioned. Drake, App. In the Golden Legend the term hayre is of frequent occurrence, signifying a garment of mortification. St. Thomas clothed himself with an "hard heyre, full of knottes, whiche was his sherte, and his breche was of the same." And again, during grievous pestilence, "they couered the crosse and the auters with blyssed hayres; and thus we shold take on vs clothyng of penaunce." In medieval Latin a shaggy garment was termed haira, according to Ducange. Ang.-Sax. haera, cilicium.

Height <sup>1</sup> is now used only to turn a cart-horse to the left; and Ree <sup>1</sup> is given by the latter as a command which causes a movement to the right. Bp. Kennett gives "to hite up and down, to run idly about, North; Hiting, gadding abroad. Sax. ytting, peregre. In Yorkshire for Geē oo, the carters say Hite and ree. Height nor ree, neither go nor drive, spoken of a wilful person." Lansd. MS. 1033. See Yorksh. Dial. p. 58. HAYNT is not found in any other MS. of the Promptorium. Harry appears to be the imperative mood of the word HARYNN, which occurs subsequently; or possibly the out-cry, haro, haroll. Both the ejaculations above given occur in the Towneley Mystery of the death of Abel, p. 9, where Cain and his plough-boy are represented as tilling the ground, and the latter cries to the horses, "Harrer, Morelle, iofurthe, hyte!"

<sup>1</sup> Among the effects of Hen. V. were "ij. tentes de bloy cardé, &c. ovec j. porche, et j. aleys." 1423, Rot. Parl. iv. 240. In a letter to Sir John Paston, 7 Hen. VII. it is said respecting preparations for the expedition into France, "y<sup>e</sup> Kync sendythe ordynaunce dayly to y<sup>e</sup> see syde, and hys tents and alys be a makynge faste;" also that great provision was made by the gentry, who were to accompany him, "for hors harness, tentes, halys, gardyuyens, carts," &c. Past. Lett. v. 412. Among the requisites provided for the Earl of Northumberland, in the French campaign in 1513, at the siege of Therouenne, are named "hayles, tents, and pavillions." Ant. Rep. iv. 364. See also Hall's Chron. 12 Hen. VIII. p. 618, last edit. "Hale in a feilde for men, tref. Hall, a long tent in a feilde, tente." Elyot gives "scena, a payllion, or haule." The hangings of a chamber, as it has been observed in the note on the word DORCERE, were termed hallings, in Latin hale, ale, or aulea. "An hallynge, auleum, anabatrum." CATH. ANG.

<sup>2</sup> Compare EYTYNDELE, and TYNTE. Ray, Bp. Kennett, in his Gloss. Coll. Lansd. MS. 1033, and Grose mention another name for the same measure, in use in the North, namely, "frundel, a measure of two pecks." As it is called eytyndele, because it is the eighth part of a coom, so also furundel, or frundele, a corruption of furthindele, as being the fourth part of a bushel. Ang.-Sax. feorðan, quartus. See Cowel's Interpr. v. Furundellus. The term "eytendele" occurs in the Hist. Eliensis, where it is recorded of Will. de Longchamp, Bp. of Ely, who died 1197, "ordinavit ut in die anniversarii sui dentur pauperibus xiiij. eytendelas de frumento." Angl. Sacra, i. 633.

<sup>3</sup> "Halfe a fardynge, calcus, calculus, minutum." CATH. ANG. See the notes on the word cu. Sherwood, in his Eng. French Dict. 1632, gives "a cue, la moitié d'un fardin, mot usé seulement des escoiers d'Oxford." There is a proverbial saying of contempt, "I would kick him for half a farding;" but the cue seems to have been as imaginary as the bodle, of like supposed value, and in the North familiarly mentioned as if it really existed. See Brockett, and the other North-country Glossarists.

 To reden artes that ben curios,

 With heuelow and rumbeloo." Rich. C. de Lion, 2521.

 Hey how and rumbylowe." Squyre of lowe degree.

It occurs likewise in Skelton's Bowge of Court; Cocke Lorelle's bote, &c. This cry appears not to have been exclusively nautical, for it forms the burden of a ballad on the Battle of Bannockburn, 1314, the alternate stanzas of which, as given in Caxton's Chron. terminate thus, "with heuelogh—with rombilogh;" or, as in Fabian, "with heue a lowe—with rumbylow." "A cor et à cry, by might and maine, with heauie and hoe." COTG. Hence seems to be derived the surname of Stephen Runnelowe, Constable of Nottingham Castle, 45 Edw. III. mentioned in Issue Roll of Exch. 1369. Compare CRYE of schypmen, that ys clepyd haue howe.

Ploughman, 4816, 4918. See Jamieson.

ANG. Instances of the use of the word “crokyd” in the sense of lame may be found in Syr Gowghter, line 673; Sir Tryamoure, line 228. So likewise in the Wicilliote version “claudum” is rendered “crokid,” Matt. xviii. 8.

XII. it is said that “halfendele the profites (dimidias pars) of the knyghtes sowde shulde be kept vnder the principalle baner.” B. ii. c. 19. In a petition from the Commons, 1442, it is said respecting the appropriation of a penalty, that “the halvyndele” should belong to the King, and the other moiety to the party suing the offender. Rot. Tusser includes both hand-barrow and wheel-barrow among the husbandly furniture, as detailed in September's husbandry. Among the quaint riddles entitled "the Demaundes Joyous," W. de Worde, 1511, is this "Demaunde. Whan antecryst is come in to this worlde, what thyng shall be hardest to hym to knowe? R. A hande-barowe, for of that he shall not knowe whiche ende shall goo before." "Hande barowe, ciuierre." PALSG.

Louis IX. 1254, it appears that they were usually of wood. It is there enjoined that "ceux qui font tables à écrire" shall not make them of mixed materials, that is, tables "de quoi li un fuelles soit de buis, et li autre de fanne; ni mettre avec buis autre manière de fust, qui ne soit plus chier que buis, c'est à savoir, cadre benus, brésil, et ciprés." Document Inédits, ed. Compare FYSCHELLE, above. " Hamper, panier, dosier, escravyn." PALSG. " Banne, benne, a maund, hamper, flasket, or great bancket. Calathe, a basket, pannier, or hamper of osiers." CORG. The term has been supposed to be a corruption of hand-panier, but, as Ducange observes, v. Hanaperium, it seems to have denoted a large vessel, or place for storing up goblets, hanapi, Ang.-Sax. hnæppa, calix. The hanaper office in the Court of Chancery derives its name from the hanaperium, a large basket wherein writs were deposited. Among places of deposit, in which instruments were stored away in the Exchequer Treasury, are named " hanaperia de virgis—of twyggs." Sir F. Palgrave has given a representation of one, date 3 Rich. II. 1380. Kalend. of Exch. i. pl. ii. See also payments to the keeper " hanaperii cancellar pro hanaperio ligneo emp' pro lit. pat. imponendis;" and for the horse that carried it. Lib. Ang.-Sax. hand-selen, mancipatio. It implies generally delivery in hand, an earnest, the first use of a possession; and likewise a reward or bribe, as in Vis. of P. Ploughman, 3128; and the Poem on the deposition of Rich. II. edit. by Mr. Wright, p. 30. Sir F. Madden explains " honde-selle " to mean a gift conferred at a particular season. Gawayn and the Grene Knyst, 66. " Hansell, or a newe yearees gifte, strena." HULOET.

"þondyr is an hous of haras that stant be the way,

"And deuyilles sall harre hym vp evene
 In the syre als he sulde stegh to heuene." Harl. MS. 6923, f. 62.

See Towneley Myst. p. 247. Fabyan says, in his relation of the murder of Bp. Sta-pylon, 1325, "the corps of y<sup>e</sup> sayde bysshop, with hys ij. seruautes, were haryed to Thamys syde, where the sayd bysshop had begonne to edyfye a toure," &c. Part. vii. The following passage occurs in Golding's version of Beza's book of Christian questions, 1572; "Whereas the same (the will) ought to be ruled by reason, as by a wagon-guider; yet, notwithstanding, how often doth it harie him headlong awaye?" Palsgrave gives the verb, "I harye, or myse entreat, or hale one, ie harie. Why do you harye the poore fellowe on thiſ facyon? I harry, or carry by force, ie trayne, and ie kerelle. He haryeth hym aboute, as if he were a traytour." Ang.-Sax. hergian, ceſtare. Forby gives harriage, signifying confusion.

<sup>4</sup> This term did not originally denote a dissolute woman, but a low fellow, a buffoon, a varlet. See Sir Cleves, line 349; Ywaine and Gawin, line 2404; Chaucer, and the Vis. of P. Ploughman. Fox speaks of a company of sectarians who were named harlots, in the reign of Hen. III. Acts and Mon. i. 305; Lambarde's Peramb. of Kent, 178. "Gerro, a tryflour, or a harlott." MED. MS. <sup>1</sup> The Campanula trachelium, Linn. is called by Parkinson throat-wort or haske-wort. Skinner gives Hask-wort, Trachelium, forte a sapore austero. Compare Dan. Sw. and Dutch, harsk, rank, or rusty. Haskard, coarse or unpolished, appears to be hence derived. Horman says that "Homer declarying a very folyshe, and an haskard felowe (ignavum) under the person of Thersyte, sayth that he was streyte in the shulders, and copheed lyke a gygge." Harsh is sometimes written harrish; thus Dr. Turner, in his Herbal, 1562, says that "dates, if they be eaten, they ar good for the harrishenes, or roughnes of the throte;" and of plums, "they that ar little ones, and harde, and harrish tarte, ar sterke noughts." "Sorbum, an harryshe pearre." ELYOT.

<sup>2</sup> " Ulphus, hassok." MED. Forby states that, in Norfolk, coarse grass, which grows in rank tufts on boggy ground, is termed hassock. In the foundation charter of Sawtrey Abbey, A.D. 1147, Simon, Earl of Northampton grants certain lands adjoining Whittlesea mere, the boundaries being minutely described: in one place the limit is defined to be " indirecte per transversum marisci, usque ad tertium hassocum a firmā terrā inter mariscum et Higgeniam." The cartulary of Ramsey supplies a repetition of this statement, contained in the attestation of Alex. Maufe regarding the disputed limits of the donation made by the Earl, his lord; in this document the Latinised word hassocum twice occurs. " Pastores vero nostri super extiores hassocos versus Walton inter pratum et mariscum debent stare, et animalia sua usque ad pedes suos venire permettere." Mon. Angl. orig. ed. t. i. pp. 850, 852, 853. Ducange, not being acquainted with the locality, interprets the word as denoting the kind of stone called tufa. In an account relating to the castle of Guynes, in 1465, among the miscell. records of the Queen's Rememb. a statement appears as to the clearing away of " cirparum ac arundinum, segges, soddes et hassokes," which grew to the obstruction of a certain mill-course. The word is still used in N. Britain. See Jamieson.

Gerarde refers the name Trimestre to the Amil-corn, or starch-corn, Triticum amylosum, cultivated in Germany and the Low Countries to make starch; but according to Parkinson the grain here alluded to appears to be the naked barley, Hordeum vernum, which, as he observes, "is not seen or sowne by any almost in this land," called in Germany Zeytgerste, or Titgerste, small barley, or "one for the present." It appears, however, that in Tusser's time the early variety was cultivated in the Eastern counties.*

larie," his three men, and the "hastalarius." The latter seems to be the same as the "hastator," named in the ordinance for the household of Louis XI. 1261, called in French hasteur. See Ducange. Humphrey de Bohun, Earl of Essex, among the household servants named in his will, 1361, as "potager, ferour, barber, ewer," &c. mentions "Will. de Barton, hastler." Roy. Wills, p. 52. In the Liber cure cocorum, the author thus states the intention of his treatise.

" Fyrst to þou I wylle schawe
bo poyntes of cure al by rawe;
And petecure I nylle forȝete." Sloane MS. 1986, f. 47.

The chapter "de cibis assatis, of rostynd mete," comprises a singular dish, termed "hasteletes on fysaþ day," consisting of figs, raisins, dates, and almonds, transfixed on a "broche of irne," and roasted; f. 86, b. Compare Forme of Cury, p. 8. Among the domestic officers of the Earl of Northumberland, 1511, was a "yoman cooke for the mouth, who doth hourelly attend in the kitching at the haistry for roysting of meat." Ant. Rep. iv. 244. Bp. Percy states that in Shropshire the fireplace is called haister; and, according to Mr. Hartshorne, an hastener, or hasteler, is a kind of screen lined with tin, used for reflecting the heat in roasting. See Salopia Ant. The derivation is evidently from hasta. "Haste, a spit or broach." cotg. Compare ROOSTARE, or hastelere, hereafter.

þe þornes beþ kene, is hattren to tereþ." Anc. Songs, p. 36.

When Philip Augustus fell into the river, in consequence of the breaking of the bridge of Gisors, Marcadeus, a captain in the host of King Richard, according to Langtoft's account, derided him thus;

þou fiskest not worþe a leke, rise and go thi ways,
For þou has wette bi breke, schent is bi hernays." R. Brunne, p. 204.

So likewise in the Romance of Kyng Alisaunder, the word signifies garments, attire: see lines 4264, 7054; and the Brahmins are said to live in austere penance, " thinne-lich y-hatered," line 5922. Ang.-Sax. haetero, vestitus. In the Vision of P. Ploughman, Haukyn makes the following excuses for his soiled garment.

" I have but oon hool hater, quod Haukyn ;
I am the lasse to blame,
Though it be soiled and seldene clene :
I slepe therinne o nyghtes." line 8900.

In line 9758, the word " haterynge " occurs in the sense of clothing. The explanation, however, given in the Promptorium, may suggest the comparison of the word with the verb, still used in Norfolk, to hatter, or exhaust by fatigue. See Bp. Kennett's Gloss. Coll. Lansd. MS. 1033. " To hatter, to expose to danger, to weary out, or wear out, as a horse by too much riding, or any utensil by too much lending is hattered about: Kent. Isl. haettur, periculosis."

<sup>2</sup> This verb occurs commonly in a composite form, to en-hance, or in-hance, as in the Vision of P. Ploughm. the Wycliffite version, and Chaucer. The lintel of a door is termed, from its position, the haunce. " Limen signifieth not only the thrashold of a doore, but also the haunce. Supercilium, the haunce whyche is ouer the doore. Hyperthyron, transumpte, or haunce." ELYOT. In the Nomenciator of Junius, translated by Higgins, a distinction is made between the Vitruvian terms hyperthyrum, and supercilium, the former being rendered "the transam, or lintell," the latter "the hanse of a door." Cotgrave gives "contrefrontail, the brow pece, or upmost post of a doore, a haunse, or breast summer." At first sight it may appear doubtful whether heynyn or heywyn (to heave) be the true reading; but by considering the position in the alphabetical arrangement of the word heynynge, subsequently, the former appears to be correct. Compare Ang.-Sax. h  an, eveh  re. Heithyn may be perhaps traced to Ang.-Sax. he  b  , culmen. In the version of Vegecius, B. iv. c. 19, it is said that the city wall, when a bastile or "somer caestel" is brought against it, should be "enhaunsed" and made higher, and described the means to be adopted by the assailants "ayenst this bighething" of the wall. Roy. MS. 18 A. XII. "I haythe, I lyfte on heythe, ie haulce. Hayth this tester (haulcez ce ciel) a lytell. I heygthen, I set vp a heythe, ie exalte. Thin balke (tref) is heythened two foote." PALSG.

Weber interprets the word as meaning hire, possession (rythmi gratia). "Havoir" occurs in Chaucer's Rom. of the Rose, line 4720, in the signification of wealth, avoir. Sir John Maundevile, describing the good dispositions of the folk of the Isle of Bragman, says that they are neither covetous nor envious, "and thei ȝive no charge of aever, ne of ricchesse:" p. 354. In the regulations for the government of Prince Edward, son of Edw. IV. 1474, is this clause: "We wyll that the hall be ordynately served, and strangers served and cherished accordeinge to their haveures." Househ. Ordin. p. *29. In the Golden Legend mention is made of "coueytous men that sette all theyr loue in hauour, and in solace of yr world." See Kennett, and Spelman, v. Avera.

"Hatche of a dore, hecg." PALSG. "Guich  t, a wicket, or hatch of a dore." cor. Forby gives "hack, half-hack, a hatch, a door divided across." In the North, a heck-door is one partly latticed and partly panelled. See Brockett.

Stat. of Realm, i. 246. The origin of the civil division of the territory into hundreds and tithings has been confidently attributed to Alfred, but, as it seems, on no sufficient evidence. In the laws of the Confessor this system of mutual suretyship is clearly set forth. Anc. Laws and Inst. i. 450. See Spelman, v. Friborga, and Borsholder.

In a medical treatise by "Maystere Lanfranke, of Meleyn," MS. in the collection of Sir T. Phillipps, No. 1381, the following occurs among several prescriptions for the "hede warke. Make lie of verveyn, or of betayne, or of wormode, and there with wasshe þin hede thryse in þe weke." See WERKYNGE, or heed ache, hereafter. In Norfolk, according to Forby, "in violent head-ache, the head works like a clock." Ang.-Sax. heafod-werc, cephalalgia.

<sup>3</sup> The following explanations are supplied by the Catholicon: "Armelausa vestis est, sic dicta quia ante et retro divisa et aperta sit, in armis tantum clausa, quasi armiclausa; et est sclavina. Ab armis (humerus) secundum Rabanum dicitur armelus, vestis humeros tantum tegens, sicut scapulare monachorum. Lacerna est pallium fimbriatum quo olim soli milites utebantur, &c.—dicitur lacerna a latere et a cerno." In Harl. MS. 1002, f. 154, levitonarius is rendered "an huke;" in the Ortus it is explained to be "collobium lineum sine manicis, i. dalmatica, quali Egyptii monachi utebantur; a tabarde." It is scarcely possible to define the garment to which, modified by the fashions of different periods, the name of hewke was assigned; it appears from citations given by Ducange that the Luca in the XIIIth cent. was furnished with a hood; it also seems to have been a military garment, and sometimes even of the number of such as were of a defensive nature, although not so accounted by Sir S. Meyrick in his paper on military garments worn in England, Archæol. xix. In the Wardrobe of Hen. Rot. Parl. iv. 225, 236. In an indenture of retainer preserved in the Tower, dated 1441, for military service in France under Richard Duke of York, James Skidmore, Esq. engaged to serve as a man at arms with six archers, and to take for himself and his men "huk' of my seid lord the duk' liv'e." Meyrick's Crit. Enqu. ii. 111. The Ordinance of Charles VII. dated 1448, respecting the equipment of the Francs-Archeres, requires every parish to provide a man armed with "jacque, ou huque de brigandine." Père Daniel, Mil. Franc. i. 238. In the Invent. of Sir John Fastolfe's wardrobe, 1459, under the head of toge, is the "Item, j. jagged huke of blakke sengle, and di' of the same." Archæol. xxi. 252. In King Ryence's chalenge the heralds are described as attired in "hewkes," and loudly crying for largesse. Percy's Rel. iii. 26. There was also a female attire called Hewke, Belg. huycke, which covered the shoulders and head. In the Acta Sanctorum Jun. vol. IV. 632, a female is described as clothed "in habitu seculari, cum peplo Brabantico nigro, Huckam vulgo vocant." Palsgrave gives "hewke, a garment for a woman, surquayne, froc; huke, surquante;" and Minsheu explains huyke, huike, or huke, to be a mantle, such as women use in Spain, Germany, and the Low Countries when they go abroad. Skelton mentions the "huke of Lyncole green" worn by Elinour Rummung. See further in Ducange and Roquesfort.

Chaucer describes the knight as attended by three mounted "hensmen." Flour and the Leaf. The pages of distinguished personages were called henxmen, as Spelman supposes, from Germ. hengst, a war-horse, or, according to Bp. Percy, from their place being at the side, or haunch of their lord. In the household of Edward IV. there were "heuxmen, vj enfautes, or more as it shall please the Kinge," who seem to have been chiefly wards of the Crown, and placed under the direction of a master of henxmen: their mode of living, and education at court, is set forth in the Household Book of Edw. IV. given among the Ordinances published by the Ant. Soc. p. 44. By the Stat. 3 Edw. IV. c. 5, "hensmen, herolds, purceyvauntes, ministrelles, et jouers en leur entreludes" were exempted from the penalties under the statute of apparel. In the household of the Earl of Northumberland, 1511, there were three haunsmen or hanshmen, who are enumerated with "yong gentlemen at their fryndes fynding, in my lord's house for the hoole yere :" the first served as cupbearer to the Earl, the second to his lady. On New-year's day they presented gloves, and had 6s. 8d. reward. Ant. Rep. iv. 199. See further in Pegge's Curialia, Lodge's Illustr. i. 359, and Privy Purse Expenses of Henry VIII. edit. by Sir H. Nicolas. "Henchman, paige d'honneur, enfant d'honneur." PALSG. "Prætextatus asecla, qui Gallice vocatur un page d'hommes; a page of honour, or a henchman." Junius, by Higins. <sup>1</sup> The hayward was the keeper of cattle in a common field, who prevented trespass on the cultivated ground. According to the Anglo-Saxon law the hæig-weard was to have his reward from the part of the crop nearest to the pastures, or, if land were allotted, it was to be adjacent to the same. See Anc. Laws and Inst. i. 441. His office is thus noticed by G. de Bibelesworth :

In everyche felde ripe in corne." K. Alis. 5756.

Bp. Kennett observes that there were two kinds of agellarii, the common herd-ward of a town or village, called bubulus, who overlooked the common herd, and kept it within bounds ; and the hayward of the lord of the manor, or religious house, who was regularly sworn at the court, took care of the tillage, paid the labourers, and looked after trespasses and encroachments : he was termed fields-man, or tithing-man, and his wages in 1425 were noble. <sup>1</sup> "An harbar, hospicium, diversorium. An harbiriour, hospe, hospita. To harber, hospitari. Harberyng, hospitalitas." CATH. ANG. "Herborouge, logis. I harborowe, I lode one in an inne, te herberge. Herberiour, that prouydeth lodgyng, fourier." PALSG. A station where a marching army rested was termed in Ang.-Sax. here-berga, from here, exercitus, beorgan, munire. In a more extended sense harbour denoted any place of refuge, or hospitable reception. See Vision of P. Ploughm.; Wicilife Version, &c. In the Golden Legend it is related that St. Amphibael "prayed Albon of herborough for the love of God; whiche Albon without faynyng, as he y<sup>t</sup> alwaye loued to do hospytalyte, graunted hym herberough, and well receyued hym." Caxton says, in the Boke for Travellers, "Grete me the damyselle of your hous, or of your he(r)berow, vostre hostel!" The verb is used by Sir John Maundevile in the sense both of giving and receiving hospitality; he says, speaking of Bethany, "there dwelte Symon leprosus, and there herberwed our Lord, and aftre he was baptised of the Apostles, and was clept Julyan, and was made Bisschoppe; and this is the same Julyan that men clepe to for gode herberghage, for our Lord herberwed with him in his hows." Voiage, p. 116. The adjective herberous has the signification of hospitable. In the version prefixed to the translation of the paraphrase of Titus by Erasmus, it occurs as follows: "A bysshop must be such as no man can complaine on—not geuen to filthy lucre, but herberous," &c. Titus, i. 8; printed by Johan Byddell, t. Hen. VIII. The remarkable name Cold-harbour, which occurs repeatedly in most counties at places adjacent to Roman roads, or lines of early communication, seems to have been derived from the station there established; but of the strange epithet thereto prefixed no satisfactory explanation has yet been suggested. See Hartsborne's Salopia Antiqua, p. 253.

<sup>2</sup> This term is derived from a sort of pyramidal candlestick, or frame for supporting lights, called hercia, or herpica, from its resemblance in form to a harrow, of which mention occurs as early as the XIIth cent. It was not, at first, exclusively a part of funeral display, but was used in the solemn services of the holy week; thus by the statute of the Synod of Exeter, 1287, every parish was bound to provide the "hercia ad tenebras." Wilkins, Conc. ii. 139. In the account of expenses at the death of Thomas, Abbot of St. Augustine's, Canterbury, 1375, occurs an item, "pro corpore facto, cum hercid." W. Thorn, X Script. 2152. See further the accounts of the obsequies of Anne the Queen of Ric. II. Gough's Sep. Mon. i. 170*, and the will of that monarch, in which he directs that for his own interment there should be prepared "tv. hercia excellentiae convenientis regali." Rym. vii. 75. In the will of John de Nevill, 1386, it is termed "hercium." Madox, Form. 429. The Pat. 1 Hen. V. 1413, recounts the orders of the King to Simon Prentout of London, "wex chaundeler," and Thomas Gloucestre, "pictori nostro," for the provision and transport to Canterbury of the "hercea" for the funeral of Henry IV. Rym. viii. 14. The ordinance which regulated the charges by wax-chandlers, stat. 11 Hen. VI. c. 12, comprises a clause to except "herces affaires pur lez nobles trespassantz." Stat. of Realm, vol. ii. 287. Chaucer appears to use the term hearse to denote the decorated bier, or funeral pageant, and not exclusively the illumination, which was a part thereof; and towards the XVIth cent. it had such a general signification alone. Hardyng describes the honours falsely bestowed upon the remains of Richard II. when cloths of gold were offered "upon his hers" by the King and lords.

<sup>1</sup> This word is repeatedly used in the later Wycliffe version. "And þe herris (eber hengis) of þe doris or þe innere hows of þe hooly of hooly bingis, and of þe doris of þe hows of þe temple weren of gold." iii. Kings, vii. 50. c. f. repositilium." The word intended may be retrosocinium, or repositinium. See Ducange. The Catholicon gives the following explanation: " Repositilium, id quod legit ignem in nocte, vel quod retro ignem ponitur; super quod a posteriori parte foci ligna ponuntur, quod vulgo lar dicitur." In Harl. MS. 1738, it is rendered " an herthe stok, or a skrene;" in the Ortus, " a huude or a sterne." A stock (Ang.-Sax. stoc, truncus) may signify primarily a large log, against which, as a foundation, the fire was piled. The cellarist of St. Edmund's-bury held Hardwick under the Abbey, and was bound annually to provide " iv. Cristmesse stocke," each of 8 feet in length. Liber Cellar. Rokewode's Suff. p. 475. Hence, probably, any contrivance whereby the fire was supported, so as to facilitate combustion, an object more perfectly attained by means of andirons (AWNDERNE, supra), was termed the hearth-stock. In Norfolk and Suffolk the back or sides of the fire-place are termed " the stock," and Forby derives the word from Ang.-Sax. stoc, locus. See KYNLYN hereafter.

<sup>2</sup> " Pessulum, a lytel lok of tre, a haspe, a cospe, a scolt." MED. MS. CANT. " Pessulum dicitur sera linea quod hostium pellitur cum seratur, Anglice a lyteke, or latche, or snecke, or barre of a dore." OBT. " Haspe of a dore, clichette." PALSG. " Agraphe, a claspe, hook, brace, grapple, haspe." COTG. In this last sense the word haspa occurs in the Sherborn Cartulary, MS. in the possession of Sir Thomas Phillips, where, among the gifts of William the sacrist (XIIth cent.?) is mentioned " Misale cum haspd argentea." Bp. Kennett observes that in Kent, Sussex, and Oxfordshire the word is pronounced " hapse, to hapse a door or cupboard. Ang.-Sax. hæps, sera, fibula." Lansd. MS. 1033. This older form is also retained in Somerset, Wilts, and in N. Britain, hasp being the corruption. See Jamieson.

<sup>1</sup> In Norfolk, according to Forby, to hitch means to change place: "a man is often desired to hitch, in order to make room; to hitch anything which happens to be in the way. Isl. hika, cedere (loco.)" To hike and to hick are used in a similar sense. To hitch is explained by Johnson as signifying "to catch, or move by jerks," and so used by Pope. Skinner would derive the expression "hitch buttock, hitch neighbours," or "level coyl, (levez le cul,)" used by boys in playing, who bid one another move, and make way for the next in turn, from Ang.-Sax. hicgan, moliri, nitti, or Fr. hocher. See Jamieson, v. Hatch, and Hotch. Brockett gives to hitch, hop on one foot.

the tree is called Holder. It was supposed that Judas hanged himself upon an elder tree, and Sir John Maundevile, who wrote in 1356, speaks of the tree as being still shown at Jerusalem. Voiage, p. 112. <sup>1</sup> The verb to hill, and the substantivite hillling, appear to be in use in many parts of England, but are not noticed in the East-Anglian Glossaries. In the writings of the older authors they occur frequently. See R. Brunne, P. Ploughm. Chaucer, and Gower. "Cooperio, to hyll to gyder. Tegmentum, a hillynge, a couerynge." ORTUS. "Tego, to hille; tegmen, an hellynge. Circumamicitus, a bowte hellynge, or clothyng. Architector, an helyour of a hous. Cooperio, to hule, or keruere (sic.)" MED. MS. CANT. "Palatif, cloaking, hilling ouer, couering, hiding. Palier, to hill ouer," &c. CORG. Ang.-Sax. helan, celare. Sir John Maundevile, speaking of the Tartars, says that "the hellynges of here houses, and the wows, and the doreen ben alle of wode." Voiage, p. 298. Walsingham calls the rebel Wat "Walterus helier, vel tyler." CAMD. ANGLICA, pp. 252, 264. In the "Objections of Freres," Wicliffe makes the observation that "Freres wollen not be apied with food and heling," that is, clothing. The accounts of the churchwardens of Walden comprise the item "à le kerk de Thaxtede pur byndyne, hyllinge et bosyng de tous les liveres en le vestiarye." Hist. of Audley End, p. 220. In the version of Vegetius attributed to Trevissa, it is said, "loke thou ordenne þat the leves of the yates be keuered and hilled with raw hides." ROY. MS. 18 A. XIII. f. 100. Bp. Kennett has the following notes in Lanesd. MS. 1033: "Helings, Stragula, bed-cloaths, vix in uen apud Oxonienses. Ial. hil, tego, hulde, texi; Sax. helan. Ejusdem originis videtur esse apud Septentrionales, to hull into bed; the hulls of corne, i. the husks; a swine hull, i. a swine stie. Anglia etiam mediterraneis to hele est tegere. A coverlet in Derbyshire is called a bed-healing, and in some other parts absolutely a healing, and a hylling. Thatchers in Yorkshire are called helliars, and so are the coverers with slat in London, and most parts of England. In old authors the eye-brows are called helings." Compare FORHELYN, celo, and HATTE, hed hillynge.

 hipping stones are steppings at the passage of a shallow stream. The word seems here to be taken from the irregular movement or hopping of the halt person. Gower says of Vulcan,

" He had a courbe upon his backe,
 And thereto he was hippe halte." Conf. Am.

In the original, " ne fut de bourras." In Norfolk, according to Forby, hards signify coarse flax, otherwise tow-hards, in other parts of England called hurds; and in many places a coarse kind of linen cloth is still termed harden, or hirden. The Invent. of effects of Sir John Conyers, of Sockburne, Durham, 1567, comprises "vij. harden

"herne, a nook of land, projecting into another district, parish, or field." At Lynn, where the Promptorium was compiled, there is a street called Cold-hirne street, which traverses an angular piece of ground adjoining the confluence of the Lyn and the Ouse. Ang.-Sax. hyrn, angulus.

<sup>1</sup> HVYE, MS. The Winch. MS. agrees here in the reading "hy," but it is evident that hybe is more correct. Ang.-Sax. hyð, portus. Hithe occurs in names of sea ports, and even landing places on rivers, far from the coast. See Forby's observations on this word. Examples are not wanting at Lynn, where a lazarus-house is mentioned at the spot called Setchhithe, in 1432; in the grant of Edw. VI. 1548, it is called Sechehithe, or the sedgy landing. Blomf. Norf. iv. 599. Oxburgh hithe is remote from the main; Woman hithe and Beck hithe occur near Cromer.

279, f. 25. Skinner derives the word from Ang.-Sax. helan, tegere. "Hull of a beans or pese, escorse. Hull or barcke of a tree, escorce." PALSG. "Gousse, the huske, swad, cod, hull of beanes, pease," &c. COTG. Gerarde says that Avena nuda is called in Norfolk and Suffolk "unhulled otes." In the Craven dialect, the hull is the skin of a potatoe, or the husk of a nut, and to hull signifies to peel off the husk of any seed : in Hampshire the husk of corn is termed the hull. "Follicula uarum, the huskes, bulles, or skinnes of grapes. Pericarpium, folliculus, silqua, the huske or hull, inclosing the seede." Junius' Nomencl. by Higgins.

<sup>2</sup> The primary meaning of the Ang.-Sax. word Holm appears to be water or ocean ; it implies also a river island, or a level meadow, especially near a stream. It is recorded in the Sax. Chron. A.D. 903, that a great fight occurred between the Kentish men and the Danes "set bam Holme," but the precise locality has not been ascertained. Holm signifies also an elevated spot, as in the instance of the Steep-holm, so called by way of distinction from the Flat-holm, islands in the mouth of the Severn. Leland, in his Comm. in Cygn. cant. (Itin. ix. 59,) would derive Dunolmus, Durham, from dune, a hill, and holme, which he interprets thus : "Holme vero eminentis loci, interdum et sylvosi, et aquis circumsepti verticem, aut eminentiam exprimit." Bp. Kennett has the following remarks : "Homes, properly holms, which signified originally river-islands, or green islands surrounded by running streams ; from a resemblance whereof meadows and pasture grounds are in some places called Homes. A meadow by the late Abbey of St. Austin's, Canterbury, commonly called North-homes ; and a flat pasture in Romney Marsh is yet called the Holmes, &c. An Holm, an island, Westm. ; hence Holme-cultram, Holmby house, &c. Mill-holms, watery places about a mill-dam, from mill, and Sax. holm, which signifies two things, as a hill or rising ground, and a green island, or place almost enclosed with water ; from whence the name of many places almost surrounded with water, as Axholm, Evesholm, corruptly Evesham, &c. The howmes, a green piece of ground near Thirske in Yorkshire, lying between the river Codbeck and the brook called Sewel." Lansd. MS. 1033. In Lincolnshire, as especially near the Trent, the name is frequent ; as likewise in Norfolk, and in the vicinity of Lynn, and denotes both low pastures, and elevations of trifling magnitude, but which were perhaps insulated, before draining had been effected. Simon Earl of Huntingdon, who founded St. Andrew's Priory, Northampton, about 1084, granted "tres dalos prati, et unum fulnum;" and in the donation of H. de Pynkeneye to Canons' Ashby, in 1298, he bestowed "totam pasturam illam que vocatur le Hulles, cum duobus holmis in campus Wedone et Westone." <sup>1</sup> Parkinson gives holm, as a name of the holly: in the North it is called hollin. Ang.-Sax. holen, aquifolium. The Gloss on Gaut. de Bibelesworth renders "hous, holyn." "Hussus est quedam arbor que semper tenet viriditatem, Anglice a holyn." ORTUS. "An holyn, hussus; an holyn bery, hussum." CATH. ANG. It is said of St. Bernard, in the Golden Legend, that after he became Abbot of Clairvaux, "he often made his portage with leues of holm." Sherwood gives "hollie, holme, or huluer tree, houx, housson, mesplier sauvage." In Norfolk the holly is called hulver, according to Forby. Compare HULWUR, tre, hereafter.

<sup>4</sup> "Holt, a wood. It is yet used for an orchard, or any place of trees, as a cherry-holt, an apple-holt, Dunelm. Isl. holite, salebra." Bp. Kennett, Lansd. MS. 1033. Skinner says that holt denotes a grove, or multitude of trees planted thick together, and Tooke asserts that it is the p. part. of Ang.-Sax. helan, to cover, and signifies a rising ground or knoll covered with trees. The word occurs in Cant. T. Prol. line 6; Lydgate's Thebes; Launfal, &c. Among the benefactions of John Hotham, Bp. Ely, it is recorded that in 1320 he appropriated, for the distribution of alms on his anniversary, "tenementum vocatum Lythgates, et Barkeres, cum quodam alneto vocato Lythgates holt." Hist. Elien. Ang. Sacra, i. 643. "Holte, a lytell woode, petit boys." PALSG. "Tufta de bois, a houlte, tuft of trees growing neere a house, and serving for a marke or grace unto the seat thereof." COTG. See Jamieson. In names of places it is of occasional occurrence, as the Holt, a wood near Havant, Hants; Knock-holt wood, near Tenterden, Kent; and in Norfolk, according to Forby, a small grove, or plantation, is called a holt, as nut-holt, osier-holt, gooseberry-holt, &c. Ang.-Sax. holt, lucus.

saken his fayth, and is worse than a misbeleued man :" (in the Wiccliffite version, " his owne, and moost of his household men.") Here, and in Gal. v. 10, Wicl. version, the word seems to be used precisely in the sense given to it in the Promptorium ; but it denotes also familiar, by acquaintance, and presuming. " Homely, famylier, through a quaynted, familiier. Homelynnesse, priualte. Homely, saucye, to perte, malapert." PALSG. Horman says that " homelynnesse (fiducia) comyng of a true harte, is a maner of vertue," where it seems to imply familiar confidence; and he uses the word also as follows : " He was homely with her, or had to do with her."

<sup>1</sup> It should seem that the eala, or swatan of the Anglo-Saxons, were not compounded with any bitter condiment, which was essential to the concoction of beer, a drink of Flemish or German origin, and until the XVIth cent. imported from the Continent, or brewed by foreigners only in this country. The Promptorium gives BERE, cervisia hummulina, as distinguished from ale, which was not hopped ; Caxton, in the Boke for Travellers, speaking of drinks, makes the distinction, " Ale of England, Byre of Ale-mayne ;" and it appears by the Customs of London, Arnold's Chron. 87, that beer was first made in London by " byere brewars, straungers—Flemyngis, Duchemen," &c. a recipe for making single beer with malt and hops is given, p. 247. It has been asserted that the use of hops was forbidden by Hen. VI. in consequence of a petition of the Commons, mentioned by Fuller, in his Worthies, under Essex, against " the wicked weed called hops ;" but no record of the prohibition has been found, and the petition does not appear on the Rolls of Parliament. In the time of Hen. VIII. some prejudice seems to have arisen regarding their use, for among the articles for the reform of sundry misuses in the royal household, 1531, is an injunction to the brewer not to put any hops or brimstone into the ale. Archæol. iii. 157. Hops, called in Dutch Hoppe, Germ. Hopfen, were introduced into England from Artois, between 10 and 15 Hen. VIII. as affirmed in Stowe's Chron. about the time of the expedition against Tournay. Bullein, in the " Bulwarke of defence," written about 1550, speaks of hops as growing in Suffolk. They are mentioned in the stat. 5 and 6 Edw. VI. c. 5, 1552, as cultivated in England ; Stat. of Realm, iii. 135. Among the privileges conceded to the strangers from the Low Countries, who settled at Stamford, 1572, is a clause regarding the free exercise of husbandry, in which are specified hops, and all things necessary to gardens. Strype, Life of Parker, App. 115. The management of hops was quickly acquired, as appears by the instructions given by Tusser, in March' and June's husbandry, published 1557. See also the Treatise by Reyn. Scott, 1574 ; and Harrison's Descr. of Brit. Holinsh. i. 110. The remarks of Leonard Mascall, in his Art of Planting, under the head of " certeyne Dutch practises," p. 85, edit. 1592, are detailed, and curious ; and he appears to have been conversant with the method adopted in Flanders. The stat. 1 Jac. I. c. 18, against the deterioration of hops, shows that a large quantity was still supplied in 1603 from foreign parts. See Beckman's Hist. of Inventions, iv. 325, and Cullum's Hawsted, 202.

<sup>2</sup> " An hopyr, ferricapsea, est molendini; saticulum, satum, seminarium." CATH. ANG. The proper distinction is here made between the hopper, or the trough wherein the grain is put in order to be ground, mentioned by Chaucer, Reve's T. 4009, so termed from the hopping movement given to it, and the seed-leep, which was also called a hopper. " Hopper of a myll, tremye." PALSG. " Seminarium, vas quo ponitur semen, an hopre." MED. It is in this last sense that Perkyn the Ploughman says that he will become a pilgrim,

Instede of a scryppe.*" Vis. of P. Ploughm. line 3917.

In Lincolnshire, according to Bp. Kennett, a little hand-basket is termed a hoppet; and in Yorkshire a hopper is " a seed lip, or basket wherein the sower puts his corn." Lansd. MS. 1033. An implement of domestic use, probably for grinding grain, is mentioned among the effects of Thos. Arkyn dall, of Northallerton, 1499. " *A leed and y' stane, xij. d. The rustic dance, to which the name of hornpipe was transferred from the instrument that served as an accompaniment, seems to be described by Jean de Meung, where he relates that Pygmalion took the "instrument de Cornouaille," or "muse," and danced to animate his statue. Rom. de la Rose, 21,874. The horn-pipe is mentioned as a musical instrument by Spenser and B. Jonson. No explanation has been found of the word palpista.

<sup>5</sup> The horse-litter, or horse-bere, Ang.-Sax. bære, feretrum, grabatus, was used at an early period in England, and probably introduced from the South. See Mr. Markland's Remarks on Carriages, Archæol. xx. 445. Bede relates that Ceolfrid, Abbot of Wiremuth, pursued his journey to Rome, during which he died, A.D. 716, "cum ad hoc per infirmitatem deveniret, ut equitare non valens feretro caballario veheretur." W. Malmesb. relates that the corpse of Rufus was conveyed by the rustics to Winchester "in rhedð caballaria," which in the Polychronicon is termed a "horse bere," and by Fabian a "horse litter." M. Westm. describes the retreat of King John from Swines-head, when, having lost his "bigas, et quadam clitelas," in the Wash, and falling sick, he was thus carried to Newark, "facit lectici equestri, descendit de pafrido, et speam intravit." G. de Bibelesworth, who wrote in the reign of Edw. I. says,

"Pur eye en litier (on hors bere) hom chiauche."

"Basterna est theca manualis vel itineris, a carre, or a chareot, or horse lytter. Lec-tica dicitur currus in quo defertur lectus; et propriæ lectus portabilis, a charet or a horslytter." ORTUS. "Horse lytter, letiere aux chevaux." PALSG. Horse litters, called by Commenius arcera or lectica, carried by two horses, according to the fashion in use in Holland, are represented in the Orbis Sensualium, p. 111, ed. 1659.

<sup>1</sup> The reading may seem here to be questionable, but the Winch. MS. agrees in giving hoos. Chaucer writes "horse of sowne," speaking of a hunter's horn. Wachter observes that hoarse seems to lead to Ger. hreis, hreisch, formed from Lat. raucus, but hoos, and hoosnesse, which occurs just below, resemble more nearly the Ang.-Sax. has, raukus, and hasnys, raucedo. In the Lat. Eng. Vocab. Roy. MS. 17 C. XVII. is given "raucedo, hasnes." Norman says, "he hath a great haskenes, gravi asthmate implicatur." Compare HARSKE, or haske, above.

<sup>2</sup> The precise nature of the article of dress, to which the name hos was given by the Anglo-Saxons, it is not easy to define: it is rendered by Elfric "caliga, ocrea." In early illuminations their legs are frequently represented as covered by bands, as it seems, wound around them, and these perhaps were termed hose-bendas, which has been supposed to denote garters. The word hose is common to the Dutch, Danish, and Icelandic languages, and the old French houses, or heuses, seem to have been identical therewith. P. Warnefridus states that the Lombards used hose (hosie), and wore over them "tubrugas birreos," when on horseback. Gest. Longob. iv. c. 23. "Calceo, t. caligas et sutulares induere, to put on hose. Oso, i. osan calciare, to house. Caliga, hose; calicula, a lytell hose." ORTUS. "Hose for ones legges, chausses. Hosyn and shossys, cha(u)ssure. Payre of hose from the kne vp, demy chausses. Payre of sloppes hoses, braieles à marinier." PALSG. In the XVIth cent. the term hose was used to denote the entire nether garment, comprising the upper stocks, or breeches, and the nether-stocks of hosen, or stockings. The directions of Queen Eliz. by proclamation in 1565 are curiously explicit as to the prescribed properties of this article of dress. Strype's Ann. Vol. i. App. 78.

Compare BEHOTYN, or make a beheste, above. Ang.-Sax. hatan, jubere; behatan, vovere. In the complaint of the Ploughman, given by Fox, under the year 1360, it is said, " though we preyen thee but a litle and shortlich, thou wilt thenken on vs, and graunten vs that vs nedeth, for so thou behighted vs somtyme :" and again, " thou yheightest some tyme, &c. He (the Pope) behoteth men the blisse of heauen, withouten any payne, that gauen him much money." Note, signifying a promise, is used by R. Brunne ; it occurs in Townl. Myst. p. 46 ; and the verb, thou hete, het or hight, thou didst promise. By R. Giouc. and other writers to note is used in the sense of to command, or to be called.

Of all that ther sitteth semeth best syre."

It signifies a cap of estate, as in the bequest of John Earl of Warren, Surrey, and Strathorne, 1347 : " Jeo devys à Monsr. Will. de Warene mon filz ma hure d'argent dorré pour Strathorne, ove le cercle d'argent dorré pour ycel." Testam. Ebor. i. 43. Margaret de Knaresburgh devises, in 1397, " flameolam de filo, cum j. caleandro, ac houfe; pannum de lak; tenam de cerico; flameolam de criebo," &c. Ibid. p. 221. In the Vision of P. Ploughm. 418, allusion is made to the " howves of selk," worn by serjeants-at-law ; and Chaucer, in the Rev's Prol. 3909, uses the phrase " set his howve;" and speaks of " an howve above a call." Troil. B. iii. 775. In 1482, a petition was preferred to Parliament by the craft of " hurers, cappers," &c. against the injurious use of machinery, then introduced to supersede manual labour, by means of a fulling mill, whereby the quality of " huers, bonettes and cappes" was depreciated. See Rot. Parl. vi. 233 ; Stat. of Realm, 22 Edw. IV., where they are termed " hurez, hurets," &c. Carton says, in the Boke for Travellers, " Maulde the huue, or calle maker (hueselier) maynteneh her wisely: she selleth dere her calles, or huues (hues), she soweth them with two semes." " Pileus, a cappe, an hatte, an hove, or a coyfe." MED. <sup>2</sup> Ground-ivy, gill, or ale-hoof, Glechoma hederacea, Linn. was anciently esteemed both in medicine and as a condiment used in the concoction of ale. G. de Bibelesworth mentions "eyre de boys, e eyre terestre (heyhewe)." Arund. MS. 220, f. 131. "Edera terrestre ys an herbe bat me clepyþ erth yuye, or heyoue;" its virtues are detailed, Roy. MS. 18 A. VI. f. 74, b. In John Arderne's Practica, Sloane MS. 56, f. 61, the use of "haihouse, vel halehouse, vel folsoyt, vel horshouse," in the composition of an unguent, called Salus populi, is set forth. Gerard calls it ale-hoof, or tun-hoof, and states that "the women of our Northern parts, especially about Wales and Cheshire, do tunne the herbe ale-hoof into their ale." Compare TUNHOVE, hereafter. Langham, in the Garden of Health, 1579, details the qualities of "Alehoofe, ground iuie, gilrumbith, ground or Tudnoore;" and Cotgrave gives "patte de chat, cat's-foot, alehoofe, tune-hoofe, ground ivy, Gill creep by the ground." Skinner thought that ale-hoof was derived from all, and behoof, utilitas, from its numerous medicinal properties, but the derivation of the name is possibly from hof, ungula, in allusion to the hoof-shaped leaf. In the West, the plant colt's-foot is called horse's hoof. It is possible that the reading of the Anglo-Saxon herbals is the ground ivy, to which, however, the name corfing was assigned.

<sup>3</sup> The reading here seems to require correction; the word does not occur in the other MSS. or in the printed editions. Amuria is explained by Ugatio, and in the Ortus, to be "inferior sex olei, dregs of oyle," but Maria signifies the "superior sex olei;" and HOVY here seems to be put for such impurities as float on the surface. Compare the verb HOVYN yn water, or oper lycoure.

<sup>4</sup> To hough, or hock the ham-strings, seems to be derivable from Ang.-Sax. hoh, popples, or possibly the etymon heawan, secare, may be preferred. In the Wycliffe version, Josh. xi. 6, it is written "thou shalt hoxe the horses, subnervabis," Vulg. A statement in Rot. Parl. vi. 38, sets forth that in a riot in Yorkshire 1472, one Rich. Williamson was "speared, and hough synued."

<sup>2</sup> This verb is used in this sense by R. Glouc. p. 218; Chaucer, Troil. B. v.; Gower, and other writers. Fabyan speaks of Jack Cade, 1450, as "houynge at Blackhethe;" and states that at Bosworth, "some stode houynge a ferre of, tyl they saw to the whyche partye the victory fyll." In the description of that conflict, as given in the song of Lady Bessy, by Humphrey Brereton, Richard says, Junius derives huckster from the Dutch Hoecker, a retailer, because he endeavours to hook, or draw in strangers; but it seems to be allied to the Ang.-Sax. eacan, augere, because he sells at a higher price than the first dealer. In Friar Michael's Satire on the people of Kildare, written about 1308, the huckster appears to have been a female victualler.

" Hail be ȝe, hokesters, dun bi þe lake,

<sup>1</sup> The holly is still called in Norfolk hulver, and in Suffolk hulva; it seems to be the tree which is called by Chaucer "an hulvere," in the Complaint of the Black Knight. Skinner supposes it may be so called from its holding or lasting long, Ang.-Sax. feor, longe, or holding fair, as being evergreen. "Houx, the holly, holme, or hulver tree. Petit houx, kneehulver, butchers broom." cor. Holland, in his translation of Pliny, speaks of the "holly or hulver tree." B. xxiv. c. 13.

Zool. iii. pp. 87, 99. This last appears to be the species here called the huske. Palgrave gives " husse, a fysahe, rousette;" and Cotgrave explains rousette to be " a little ruddie dog-fish." Libr. of the earlier Wycliffite version; " Thou shalt anoynt of it the tabernacle, &c. and the candelstik, and the hustimentis of it (utensilia, Vulg.)" Exod. xxx. 28. It occurs in several documents connected with the Eastern Counties. Joanna, relict of Sir T. Hemgrave, made, about 1421, a will under constraint of her second husband, devising to him personal effects and a sum of money, " 1150 marcs, with other jewel and hostelment that were mine other husbands goods and mine," as stated in her protest. Hist. of Hengrave, 93. John Hakone of Wynton makes the following devise in 1437; " I wyll that alle necessaries and hustyments longyng to myn howsehold, that is to sey, to halle, chaumbry, and kechene be disposed to the use of my wife." Norwich Wills, Harl. MS. 10, f. 267. In the Paston Letters, ii. 26, are mentioned " gonne, crossebows, and quarells, and alle other hostellments to the maneur (of Caistor) belonginge." 1469, 9 Edw. IV. In 1492 Robert Parker bequeaths to his wife all his " hostiliaments, utenselys, and jowellys, to his house pertaining." Cullum's Hawsted, 17. <sup>4</sup> Fractillus is explained in the Catholicon to be " cauda vel fragmen panni fissi; cauda ornatus pendens ex inferiori parte: fractillus dicitur etiam vittus in tapeo vel aliid ueste villoso." Hormann says, " he hath a pleasure in gagged clothynge, lasciuiose ueste;" and Palsgrave gives " I iagge or cutte a garment, ie chicquette, ie deschicquette, ie descouppre. I iagge nat my hosen for thrifte, but for a bradge. He is outher a landed man, or a foole y<sup>t</sup> cutteth his garments. Iagge, a cutting, chicquature. If I iagge my cappe, thou hast naught to do." This strange fashion, which, as it has been observed in the note on the word DAGGE, prevailed during the reign of Rich. II. was not disused even in the XVIth cent. It is particularly noticed by Hardyng, who states that it was described to him by the clerk of Richard's household.

" Cut werke was greate both in court and tounes,

<sup>1</sup> A full account of the defensive armour called a jack is given by Sir S. Meyrick, in his observations on ancient military garments worn in England, Archæol. xix. 224. Mention of it occurs as early as 1375, in the will of Thos. de Hemenhale, who devises "unum iakke de rubio worstede." Transcripts from Norwich Registers, Harl. MS. 10. Walsingham relates that Wat Tyler's mob, in the sack of John of Gaunt's palace at the Savoy, 1381, found "vestimentum preciosissimum ipsius, quale Iacke vocamus." Camd. p. 249. It is mentioned in the will of Henry Snayth, clericus, 1380: "Lego duas loricas ferreas, duas bacinetas cum ventall, et duas iakkys cooperitas cum fust"; and in 1391, Margery, widow of Sir Will. de Aldeburgh, bequeaths to her son "unum dupium cum lorid interius opertum cum rubeo correto capre. Item, unum iak defensionis opertum nigro velveto." Test. Ebor. i. 113, 150. Sir S. Meyrick questions the authority of Nicot's definition that the jack was an habiliment stuffed with cotton; in the Catholicon Ang. however, written 1483, is given "a iakke, bombicinium." Towards the close of the XVth cent., a less cumbersome defence of a similar nature, termed a jacket, was more in use. Palsgrave gives "iacke, harnesse, iacq, iaque: iacket, seion: iacket without sleeves, hocqueton: iacket that hath but four quarters, iacquette." Caxton says in the Boke for Travellers, "Donaas the doblet maker hath performed my doublet and my iaket, mon pourpante et mon paltocque." In the accounts of the Lestrange family, 1532, are the following entries: "Item, paid for ij. pownd of twyn for the iacks. Item, paid for iii. elnes of canvas for yr iack. Item, paid to the taylour for the wukemenshippe of iij. iacks, ix.s. iv.d. Item, paid for twyn for your iacks. Item, paid to Matthew Smith (or the smith) for making of plates for the iackets, iv.s. jj. d." The kind of jack to which this last entry relates is described in Lily's Euph. Eng. where it is said that the armour of the English consists of "corslets, Almaine rivets, shirts of male, iackes quilted, and covered over with leather, fustian, or canvas, over thick plates of yron that are sowed to yr same." It seems to have been identical with the brigandine. The jack may even have been occasionally formed with mail; in Edw. III. i. 2, Capell's Prolus. are mentioned "jackets of gymold mail." Thus Florio explains "Giacco, a iacke of maile, made like a corslet, a jacket or shirt of maile. Giachetta, a iacket or shirt of maile;" and Cotgrave gives "Iaque, a iacke or coat of mail, and thence a iacket for the body of an Irish greyhound, &c. made commonly of wild boares tanned skinne, and put on him when he is to coap with that violent beast." The sense in which baltheus is used in the Promptorium is singular; it signifies commonly a girdle, but here cote ARMURE, DOBBELET, and PALTOK, military garments, are rendered by the term baltheus.

<sup>2</sup> "Dapax, yanglyng, or spekyng of mete." MED. "To iangylle, ubi to chater. Iangyller, scitilis, poliloquus, &c. ubi chaterynge." *CATH. I dyd but iape with hym, and he toke it in good ernest. Iape, a trifyll, truffe." PALSE. " Il n'est pas gas, it is no iape." Harl. MS. 219. It is said of St. Nicholas in the Golden Legend, that " in his yonge age he eschewed y<sup>e</sup> playes and iapes of other yonge chyl-dren." Fabyan relates that William Rufus was warned of his approaching end, " but he set all at nought, and made of it a scoffie, or a iape." Horman says, " he bete me curiously with a rod, as it had ben in iape, velut per ludum. Leue thy iapys, mitte nugas. At the begynnyng I hadde wente thou haddeste iapide, putavi te joco fecisse." Junius has detailed the use of this word, especially by Chaucer, and seeks a derivation by comparison with Isl. geip, jactatio. Skinner derives it from Fr. gaber. It appears, moreover, from Speight's Glossary, appended to Chaucer, that, having become of ambiguous import, the word was scarcely admitted in polite parlance; and this is confirmed by Palsgrave, who gives the verb " I iape a wenche, ie jout, and ie bistocque. It is better to iape a wenche than to do worse."

And by the tail him tugged." Christ Kirk, st. 7.

Lansd. MS. 1033. In Roper's Life of More the term employed is " raskall." Skelton uses the word javell frequently: it is one of the opprobrious epithets that are put into the mouth of Wolsey, in " Why come ye not to Court?" and occurs in a passage cited by Hearne, and attributed to Skelton, Glossary to Langt. Chron. v. Wroken.*

Nares quotes Spenser, and other writers, by whom the word is used, and thinks it may be derived from Fr. javelle, a brush-wood faggot; a name that might be applied to such fellows as Shakespeare calls "rash bavin wits." Holland, in his version of Pliny, speaks of the "javelts," stalks, or stems of line or flax. B. xix. c. 1. See further observations in Jamieson. Compare IOPPE, or folte, Joppus, and IAPER, Gerro.

<sup>1</sup> Jesses or gesses, used in falconry, are thus defined by Nicot: "Gects (gets, or giez) sont deux petites courroies courtes de peau de chien, une en chaque jambe du faulcon près la serre; au dessus desquels sont les sonnettes tenans à une autre petite courroie à part." Latham says that "Jesses are those short straps of leather which are fastened to the hawks legges, and so to the Lease by Varvels, Anlets, or such like." The origin of the term is evident, as signified by the Emperor Fred. II. in his treatise de arte Venandi, ii. c. 38; namely, "ob hoc iacti dicuntur, quod cum eis jacuntur faltones, et emituntur ad predam." They are also called Getti. See Ducange and Menage. In "Dame Julians Bernes Processe of hawking" it is stated that "Hawkys have abowte theyr leggys gessen made of leddry moost comynly, some of sylke, whyche schold be noo lenger but that the knottys of theym sholdbe appere in myddy of the left honde, bytwene the longe fynge, and the leche fynge; by cause the Lewnes sholde be fastenyd to them wyth a payre of Tyrettys," &c. St. Alban's Book, sign. b. iiij.

<sup>2</sup> This word does not appear to be retained in the East Anglian dialect. Tusser uses it both in the sense of strutting about ostentatiously, and of actively busying oneself, or bustling to and fro. In the interesting account of his own life, he says that his desire was ease and contentment, and to live uprightly,

Or for to jet in others debt." Stanza 38.

In his Epistle to the Lady Paget, prefixed to his Book of Huswifery, among the qualities of good housewife, he says that she "should jetty from morning to night." Palgrave gives the following illustrations of the use of this word: "I iette, I make a countenaunce with my legges, ie me iamboye. I wotte nat what his herte is, but he ietteth horriblie in his pace. I iette w<sup>t</sup> facyon and countenaunce to set forth the myselfe, ie bragge. Dothe thy father fynde the in the universyte to go a iettyng a nyghtes? te bailla ton père exhibition à l'uniuersité pour aller rauder?" Cotgrave gives "Batre les rues, to iet, reuell, or swagger vp and down the streets in the night. Iamboyer, to iet, or wantonly to go in and out with the legs. Fringuer, to iet or brave it, to be fine, spruce, trimme, to wantonise it," &c. "Beverege," and at the present time Bevere, served as a retreat to the people of that city when it was burned by Hardicanute, A.D. 1041, on their resisting the payment of tribute. See the Sax. Chron. Langtoft gives a relation of these circumstances.

 And þat wer in þe ilde duelled þer for drede,

In another passage, p. 151, he relates that Richard Cœur de Lion took possession of two islands in the Mediterranean, one "that ilde hight Labamare," which is described as situated in the straits of Messina; and another "ilde" called "Griffonie," meaning, perhaps, Sicily. In Kyng Alisaunder the word "ydle," as printed by Weber, seems to be the same word, varying by local pronunciation.

<sup>1</sup> The application of enamel to every description of ornamental work in metal was much used in England from the Anglo-Saxon times, until the XVIth cent. The number of existing specimens is, indeed, small; owing, probably, to the precious metals having been most frequently employed for enamelled works, which have been melted down to form ornaments suited to the successive changes of fashion; but ancient wills and inventories, especially the lists of crown jewels printed in the Kalendars of the Exchequer Treasury, afford abundant evidence of the profusion of enamelled plate and jewellery in England. There may be but insufficient evidence to show that the earliest works of this kind, such as fibulae, and minor personal ornaments, were executed by British artificers; but the character of ornament which is presented by them, the mention that is made in early records of the skill of our countrymen, and the distinctive term of Opus Anglicanum, to designate their ornamental works in metal, give to such a supposition a high degree of probability. A specimen of interest preserved in the Brit. Mus. appears by the legend to have been the ring of Ethelwulf, King of Wessex, from 836 to 858, father of Alfred. See Archæol. vii. pl. xxx. It is of gold, and appears to be properly an enamelled work, the field, according to the ordinary process of the earlier period, being chiselled out to receive a vitrified metallic compound of a dark blue colour, which was fixed by fusion in the cavities formed by the tool, and set off the design produced by those parts of the metal that had been left in relief. Another mode of workmanship, in some degree analogous, appears in the jewel at the Ashmolean Museum, attributed to Alfred; a specimen recently discovered in London, Archæol. xxix. pl. x. and a few other instances. In these a semi-transparent substance, which appears to be rather a vitreous paste than a true enamel, fills the spaces in the field of the design, the outline being formed, not by chiselling the solid metal, but by means of thin fillets of gold, attached to the surface of the plate, and serving to detach the variously coloured portions of the design. At a later period the pre-eminent skill of the enamellers of Limoges caused their work to be highly esteemed in other countries. It appears that the tomb of Walter de Merton, Bp. Rochester, 1274, was made by Magister Johannes de Limogia, who came to England for the purpose. See the Executor’s Accounts, Thorpe’s Cust. Roff. 193. At the Reformation this memorial was destroyed; but the enamelled effigy in Westminster Abbey, representing Will. de Valence, who died 1296, if not the work of John of Limoges, affords an interesting specimen of the art practised at that place. The prevailing use of ornaments of this nature appears also from the Constit. of Will. de Bleys, 1229, and Walt. de Cantilupe, 1240, Bishops of Worcester, prescribing, among the sacred ornaments to be provided by the parishioners, “ij. pyrides, una argentea, vel eburnea, vel de opere Lemovitico, in quod hostie reserventur.” Wilk. Conc. i. 623, 666. Several of these exist; but the most curious enamelled ornaments of this period, as connected with England, are the small shrines called cofri Lemovicenses, on which is represented the martyrdom of St. Thomas of Canterbury. One of these is in the possession of the Ant. Soc. and another at Hereford Cathedral. Enamel was likewise made available for the decoration of sepulchral brasses, to a much greater extent, probably, than might be supposed from the few examples that have been preserved. In the XVth cent. the older process of chiselling out the design was abandoned, and a mode of enamelling, wholly superficial, came into general use; it appears to have been first adopted in Italy, but was practised for more than a century, in the greatest perfection, at Limoges. Chaucer speaks of "fine enamele" and gold "amiled." Rom. of Rose. Spenser uses the word "aumaid," and in some documents the word is written "anelyd." Compare ANBLYN, or enelyn metallie, above. <sup>1</sup> Chaucer uses the word to ensure in the sense of affirming by word of mouth ; it had also that of betrothing, or promising in marriage. "I ensure, I trouthe plught, as man and a woman togyther, ie fiance. I herde saye they were maryed, or euer I knewe they were ensured togyther. I insuer by maryage, id. Howe, saye you be they maryed so soone, I wiste nat that they were insured yet. I insuer, ie promayts, ie assure." PALSG. In Henry VIIIth's Primer, 1545, in the lesson at matins, the following verse occurs : "The aungell Gabriel was sent from God into a cytie of Galile named Nazareth, to a virgyn which was ensured to a man whose name was Joseph." Luke i. 27.

" So doing, more tender and greater they wex,
If peacock and turkey leave jobbing their bex."

Holland, in his version of Pliny, B. x. c. 18, says that birds that "job and pecke holes in trees," are of the race of spights, martins, or wood-peckers; and speaks of "wood-pecks, or jobbers," c. 29. "Becquer, to pecke or bob with the beake. Becquade, a pecke, job, or bob with a beake. Hocher, to shake, jog, job, nod." cORG. "Sitta, a bird called a nutjobber." GOULD. Willughby, in his Ornithology, describes the nut-hatch, or nut-jobber, Picus cinereus. Ash gives to job, in the sense of striking suddenly with a sharp instrument, as the word is used in Shropshire. See Hartshorne's Salopia.

<sup>2</sup> In Domesday mention occurs of the joculator and the joculatrix regis, T. i. f. 38, b. and 162: Ang.-Sax. gegelere, prestigiator. The juggler and the minstrel are, as Wharton observes, frequently confounded together. Music formed a part of the entertainments provided by both, and it was not, perhaps, until the XIVth cent. that the two denominations were properly distinguished. The juggler was called also TRECHT-TOWRE, a term which occurs in the Promptorium. His performances were very varied, comprising sleight of hand, tricks of all kinds, tumbling, and buffoonery. Strutt has collected much information on this subject in his Sports, B. iii. c. iv. Chaucer, in the third Book of Fame, seems to distinguish the jugglers from the minstrels and musicians, and speaks of them as playing with magicians, "trageours, and Phetonisses; charmeresses," &c.; but in the Rom. of the Rose he mentions minstrels and jugglers, as if their performances were similar. He repeatedly alludes to the wonderful tricks which were exhibited by them. "Balatro, a yogelowre. Pantomimus, a iogeloure. Parascitaster, id." MED. "To iugille, joculari. A iuguler, gesticulator, &c. ubi a harlott. A iugulynge, gesticulacio, jocamen." CATH. ANG. Horman says, "The iugler carieth cleynly under his gubletis, prestigiator scite virum ludificat cum acceptabili. A iugler with his troget castis (vaframentis) deceueth mens ayght." "Iogelour, bateleur. Iogelyng caste, passe, passe. I iogyll, is ioue de pas pas. Mathewe iogyled y<sup>e</sup> cleanest of any man in our dayes. I iugyll, &c. ie iougle." PALSG. In the Northumberland Household Book, 1511, a reward of 6s. 8d. is appointed "to the Kyngs iugler, if he haue wone." See Essay on ancient Minstrels, Percy's Reliques, i. xcii.

<sup>3</sup> This proper name was anciently used as a term of contempt, especially as applied by the Reformers to the lower classes of the Romish priesthood. See Todd's note on Spenser, Sheph. Cal. May, 309; Dr. Wordsworth's Remarks on the Life of Lord Cobham, Eccl. Biog. i. 265. John Bradford, writing to his mother, in 1553, on the revival of Popery, says, "now let the whoremonger ioy, with the dronckard, swearer, couetous, malicious, and blynd bussard Syr Iohn, for y' masse wil not bite them, neither make them to blushe as preaching woulde." <sup>1</sup> Compare JAVEL. In N. Britain a bigheaded, dull, lazy-looking fellow is called a Jupsie. See Jamieson. Coles gives "Jobelin, a sot, or fool."

<sup>3</sup> Neccham, in his Treatise de nominibus utensilium, written early in the XIIIth cent. describing the ordinary dress of the master of the family, when at home, says, "perhendinaturus (li asuurner) jupam habeat penulatam (furē) et tunicam (cole) manubitis (manches) et birris (geruns) munisit et manubiatam," &c. Titus, D. xx. f. 7, b. When mounted for the journey he was to wear the capa, with sleeves and hood. The jupa appears to have been a long garment worn by all classes, secular and religious, and both sexes. See Ducange. It was loosely made, for Chaucer uses the comparison "rueling as a gipe;" but the diminutive term jupon seems to imply that the military garment so called, which fitted the person closely, was a kind of jupa. Chaucer mentions the gipon as part of the attire of the knight, Cant. T. Prol. v. 75, and Knight's T. v. 2122. A full account of the jupon, or guipon, will be found in Sir S. Meyrick's Treatise on Military Garments worn in England, Archæol. xix. 236. In Ly beaus Disconus the garment is termed a "gypell." In N. Britain a kind of short cloak for women, as also a wide coat, is termed a jupe.

" I was the Prioresse potager,
And maad hem joutes of janglyng." 2787.

Gower speaks of Diogenes gathering "joutes" in his garden; in the context they are called "wortes." Conf. Am. B. vii. Numerous recipes for preparing joutes occur in books of ancient cookery: in a curious collection in the possession of Sir T. Phillipps is the following: "Nou greybe we loute Doré, of moni muchel y-wylned. Ye clene bete, and sclarie hokke i-boilled and wel i-bakked in an crounche clene y-washen. Hakke joutes gentil and veire; do to jeopen ouer be fure greece of pork, hakke saffron, and peopur," &c. XIVth cent. MS. Heber, 8336. Camd. 288. Holinshed, who calls him " a coleprophet," terms them " two iorden pots." Chron. iii. p. 440. Chaucer speaks of urinals and " jordanes" (Pardonere's Prol.), and if not identical, they seem to have been similar in form. See the marginal sketch in Sloane MS. 73, f. 138, b. where it is said, in the directions for preparing vermillion, " take a good thickie Iordan of glas," which, after being well covered with luting, was to be used as a sort of crucible. It is precisely of the same shape as the glass vessel usually held by the leech, or water-doctor, in ancient representations. The word is found in the Vision of P. Ploughman, and is used by Shakespeare. Skinner thinks it is not derived from the name of the river Jordan, but from Ang.-Sax. gor, sordes, and den, receptaculum; an etymology which has been adopted by the author of the Craven Glossary. The derivation from Armoric, dourden, urina, has also been suggested. Blount states that the jordan was a double urinal, but offers no explanation.

<sup>2</sup> The Jewish community being regarded as the property of the Sovereign, is termed in ancient records " Judaismus Regis, Judaismus noster, or communitas Judæorum nostrorum;" and the Jews were bound to reside only in royal cities and boroughs. See " Les Estatutz de la Jeuerie," t. Edw. I. Stat. of Realm, i. 221. They were marked by a badge, and although it does not appear that they were compelled to dwell in one part of a city, appropriated to them, as is the Ghetto in the cities of Italy, yet they seem to have congregated in a district, probably on account of the detestation in which they were held, and it is remarkable, that although more than five centuries have elapsed since they were totally expelled by Edw. I. in 1290, the memorial of their settlements in many cities in England is still preserved in the local name of Jewry. M. Paris speaks of the Judaismus at Worcester, which was ravaged by Rob. de Ferrars in 1264; and Rob. of Glouc. says of the great outrage at the accession of Richard, Coeur de Lion,

And wende in to the Gywerie, and woundede, and to drowe," &c. p. 485.

R. Brunne uses " Juerie" in a like signification. See Chaucer's account of the " Jewerie" in a Christian city in Asia; Prior. T. 13,419. Besides the Old Jewry in the metropolis, there is still the Jewry at Canterbury. Leland speaks of the street at Winchester, leading from the High Street to the North Gate, " caullyd the Jury, by cause Jues did inhabite it, and had theyr synagoge there," Itin. iii. f. 71, and says of Warwick, " The suburbe without the East-Gate is called the Smithes streete; I hard ther that the Jues some tyme dwellyd in it." Itin. iv. f. 165, a. In ancient deeds relating to Warwick " the Jurye" is mentioned, and the Jury street still exists. At Lynn, where the Promptorium was compiled, the Jews had formed a numerous settlement at an early period, and there is still the Jews' street. Blomf. Norf. iv. 578. In low Latin the part of a city reserved for the Jews was called Judearia, Juderia, Jutaria, or Judæa, in French Juierie, Juirie, or Jueterie; wherein, in some countries, they were compelled exclusively to dwell. See further of the early settlements of the Jews in England in Dr. Tovey's Anglia Judaica, and Caley's Observations, Archæol. viii. 389.

<sup>1</sup> Dieta, according to the Catholicon, signifies a day's journey : the term occurs in this sense in Bracton and Fleta, where it is said that "omnis rationabilis dieta constat ex xx. milliaribus." Chaucer uses the word in this sense, Knight's T. 2740; Chaucer's Dream, 1945; and also in that of a day's work, Rom. of Rose, 579. Journey had also the signification of a day's conflict, in like manner as the expression "the day" is used at present. Thus in the Paston Letters it is said of the Battle of St. Alban's, 1455, that "alle the Lordes that dyed at the journey arn beryed at Seynt Albanes;" and the engagement is termed "the male journey" of St. Alban's, meaning, apparently, the disastrous battle. Vol. i. 108, 110. See Jamieson, v. Jorneye. In Norfolk, Journey implies the time a man is at plough, about six hours ; if he works nine, two Journeys are taken.

named as the measure by which drinks were at certain seasons to be served by the cel-lerer. Mon. Angl. i. 149. Roquefort states that the Juste contained about a pint, but the Juta, which Ducange considers as synonymous, is accounted to hold two quarts.

<sup>2</sup> KATCHYN, ms. See CACHYN' a-way. Compare Teut. Ketasen, sectari, cursare. In Arund. MS. 42, f. 11, b. it is said that Capillus Veneris "mundefyeb be lunges, and be breste, and cacchep out wyked materes in hem;" and that "margery perles—wastyn, and fordon, and cacchen out of be body wyked humoras;" f. 12, b.

<sup>3</sup> See CAMPYN'. In ancient deeds cited in the Hist. of Hengrave, p. 11, mention occurs of "le camping close," near Fornham St. Genevieve, where Montford, Earl of Leicester, was defeated in 1173; and the name has been supposed to have some connection with that occurrence, but more probably was given to a close appropriated to camping, the favourite game of the Eastern counties. Sir Thos. Brown gives to kamp in his list of Norfolk words. Tussur speaks of the game, in December's Husbandry, as beneficial to grass land. In a publication by M. Stevenson, 1673, entitled "Norfolk drollery," is a poem in reference to this ancient game, and it is fully described by Forby.

<sup>4</sup> Loramētum is explained in the Catholicon to mean boarding or frame-work compacted together, as in the construction of a ceiling. Stathe, which here is found only in the King's Coll. MS. occurs hereafter, as follows, STATHE, waterys syde. Stacio. It signifies a landing-place for merchandise, or quay, and several instances are found at Lynn and Hull. Ducange, v. Caya, rejects Speelman's derivation of this word; "Keia, area in littore, e compactis tabulis trabibusque, clavium instar, firmata, Sax. cæg," clavis, which, however, here appears to be the correct etymology. "Key to knytte walles toguyder, clef." PALSG.

<sup>1</sup> " Reticula, a lytell nette or kalle. Reticinellum, a calle." ORT. " A kelle, reticulum, reticinellum. A kelle knytter, reticularius." CATH. ANG. The fashion of confining the hair in an ornamental network, which occasionally was jewelled, seems to have obtained in England from the time of Hen. III. until that of Elizabeth, and an endless variety of examples are afforded by illuminated MSS. and monumental effigies. It was termed calle or kelle, a term directly taken, perhaps, from the French calle, Lat. calanica or callus; and it had also the appellation " creepen," crespine, still retained in Southern Europe to denote the picturesque head-dresses of the females, formed with net-work of coloured silk, and which still present many of the fashions of ancient times. The head-attire of the lovely lady who led in Sir Galrun to the court of King Arthur is thus described (Anturs of Arther, ed. Robson, p. 14.):

Her counter-felit and hur kelle were colurt ful clene." St. 29.

See Kyng of Tars, 365; the Grene Knight, 261; Cant. Tales, 6600; Troil. iii. 775; Townl. Myst. p. 312, &c. In the minute description of the attire of Elizabeth, Queen of Hen. VII. as she appeared before her coronation, 1487, it is said that she wore " her faire yellow hair hanging down pleyne byhynd her bak, with a calle of pipes over it." Lel. Coll. iv. 220. Hall mentions the " kall" worn by Anne of Cleves at her first interview with Hen. VIII. 1547. " Call for maydens, retz de soye." PALSC. Amongst the occupations of the ancient ladies of the court of Elizabeth, Harrison mentions " caulworke." Descr. of Eng. Holinsh. Chron. i. 196. The term caul is applied likewise in other significations. Amongst the pertinencia piscatorum, Harl. MS. 1002, f. 153, is given " Calle or pu(r)snett, reticulum." The omentum of a slaughtered beast is called in Norfolk the kell. " Kell in a woman's belly, taye." PALSC. The superstition respecting the membrane which sometimes covers the head of a new-born infant, termed the caul, and in the North the silly-how, noticed by Grose and Brand, has been mentioned in the note on the word HOWE, p. 250. " Ang.-Sax. cylla, wfer." SKINNER.

<sup>1</sup> The kenet is mentioned in the "Maystere of the Game; c. xij. of rennyng houndis. There ben also renyng houndes, some lasse and some moor; and þe lasse byn clepid kenettis, and þes houndes rennen wel to al maner game, and bei servene for al game; men clepin hem heirers, and eueri hounde þat habþ corage wil falle to be an heirere of nature with litel makyng," &c. Vesp. B. XII. f. 65. From this passage it might be supposed that harriers were originally so termed as being well adapted for close pursuit, and not from their being specially used in hunting the hare. Roquefort gives "harier: presser, harceler, pourtraire." In "Dame Julians Berne doctrine, in her Boke of huntynge," it is said, "Thyse ben the names of houndes. Fyrste there is a Grehou(de), a Bastard, a Mengrell, a Mastif, a Lemor, a Spaniel, Raches, Kenettys, Teroures, Butchers houndes, dunghill dogges, Tryndeltaylles, and pryceryd currys; and smalle ladyes popes that bere awaye the flees, and dyuers smale fawtes." Sign. e. ij. v. ed. 1496. Roquefort gives "chiennet, chenet: en bas Lat. chenetus," as signifying a little dog; and the term occurs in the satirical Anglo-Norman poem, descriptive of the lady of the XIVth cent. and her dogs, who, as it is said, "pius ad cher un kenet ke nul vache hou tor." Rel. Antiqu. i. 155.

In the ancient romances the kenet is mentioned as used in the chace of the deer, and the wild-boar. See the descriptions of the hunting parties of King Arthur and his knights, in the Anturs of Arther, st. iv.; Avowyng of King Arther, st. vi. ed. Robson, pp. 2, 60. They here appear to have been led in couples, and used with the bounds called raches, and berselettes, besides greyhounds. It seems, therefore, that they were the smaller dogs, which served to find the beast of chace, and on that account kenet is here rendered reperarius. Venaticus is rendered in the Ortus "a spanyel." "A kenit, caniculus." CATH. ANG. See also Syr Gawayn and the Grene Knyȝt, line 1701, ed. Madden. Palsgrave gives "kenet coloure, cendré." and it appears from Leland that 20 miles was accounted as a kenning, probably, as the extreme distance within ordinary sight. "Scyld is a Kennyng, that is to say, about a xx. miles from the very Westeste pointe of Cornewaull." Itin. iii. f. 6. See also f. 13. In the North, according to Brockett, half bushel is called a kenning.

<sup>1</sup> In the Mayster of Game it is said of the Roe, "They hauntene in strange hattes of wood, or in stronge hethys, and somtyme in carres, and comonly in hie contrees." Vesp. B. XII. f. 32, b. John Crane, of Norton Subcours, Norwich, bequeathed to his wife, in 1484, "all the londs, merys, marysses, alderkars," &c. in Norton. Transcripts from Registers at Norwich, Harl. MS. 10, f. 195 b. Camden, in his Remains, under Surnames, explains car as signifying "a low waterie place, where alders do grow, or a poole." Car signifies in Norfolk, according to Forby, a wood or grove on a moist soil, generally of alders. Brockett gives carr, flat marshy land, or a small lake. So likewise Leland, in his description of the N. Riding, says, "there is a praty car or pole in Bishop's Dale." Itin. v. f. 116. He speaks repeatedly of "low medowes, and morisch ground ful of carres." Itin. i. f. 40, 66, 74. In Lord North's Household Book, 1512, a warrant is given for taking swans from the carre of Arrom, in the lordship of Lekinfield, Yorkshire. See Jamieson, v. Carse, and Kerss. Compare ALDYKRYR, in the Promptorium. Su. G. kaerr, Isl. kaer, palus.

" Wibouten kirtelle or kemse, saue kouerchief alle bare vis."

See Coer de Lion, 1031. Chaucer, in the Man of Law's Tale, calls it a "kercher," and alludes to the usage that the widow should conceal her face with the "coverchefe," as so frequently seen on sepulchral effigies. Wife of Bath's Prol. 6171. The kerchief was formed of silk, crape, or any thin tissue, which, when necessary, was rendered stiff by starch. See STARCHE for kyrcheys. The material termed "plytes" seems to have been imported from Flanders or Germany. Isabella Belgrave bequeaths, in 1401, "iii. pecces flam", videlicet ij. de serico, et j. de kryspe;" and in 1402 the wife of a tanner at York mentions her "flameola de threde; ij. flameola de cipres, et j. lampas volet." In the will of Isabella de Wyleby, 1415, she devises "flameolum de krespe; j. plice de lawnd; j. flameolum de Parysse; flameolum de Reyns," &c. and to the nursery women of Raby Castle, where she died, "rotulum de flameolo de coton." Testam. Ebor. i. 280, 289, 383. The material called plites is named in the Comptotus for the collection of the subsidy on importations to Hull, 1400: "M. iiiij<sup>c</sup> flammeol voc"

The functions of the trencheator, or écuier trenchant, at the table of the sovereign or noble, were regarded as of an honourable nature, and regulated by prescribed ceremonial. The details thereof may be learned from the Household Ordinances of the English Court, published by the Ant. Soc.; the ceremonial of the enthronization of Abp. Neville, 1466, Leland, Coll. vi.; the order for the government of a nobleman's house, 1605, Archæol. xiii. 315, and similar documents. At the coronation of Hen. IV. the office of carver was claimed by the Earl of Somerset, half-brother to the King, in right of his earldom of Lincoln; and on ordinary occasions the office was discharged by Bannerets, or Knights bachelors, who were called Knights of chamber, or, in their absence, by the Knights of household. See Liber Niger Edw. IV. Househ. Ord. 32. The Lords Henry Neville and Clinton were the Chief carvers at the court of Hen. VIII. 1526; and at all times the office seems to have been held by men of rank, and was conferred by patent. See the Treatise de scissur ciborum, et servicio dominorum diversis temporibus, Sloane MS. 1986, t. Hen. VI. especially the chapter de cultellis domini, in the Treatise de officiariis in curisis dominorum, which has been edited by Mr. Halliwell for the Percy Soc. Boke of Curtasye, p. 28. The minor details of the craft are given in the Boke of Kerving, W. de Word, 1508. "Karuer afore a Prince, Escvier trenchant. I kerue as a lordes karuer dothe at his table, Le trenche. I put the towell aboute a karuer or seruer's necke, that shall serue a greate man at his table, Le encolle la touaille." PALSG. The proceeding to which allusion is here made was conducted with ceremony, and was termed arming the carver; see Leland, Coll. vi. 7; Archæol. xiii. 332. At certain times both the carver and sewer performed their services kneeling on one knee, as represented in the illumination which exhibits the death of Earl Godwin at the table of Edw. the Conf. Vitell. A. XIII. Strutt's Regal Ant. pl. 2.

<sup>3</sup> Pelliris appears to have been a helm of leather, which was called also a palet, a word occurring in the Promptorium. By Uguito it is explained to have been "galea ex corio vel pelle," to which, in the Ortus, is added, "Anglice, a helme of lether. Galerus, a coye of lether." Ib. Sir W. Langford, in 1411, bequeaths to his son a "haberion," and a "ketill hatte," which is considered by Sir S. Meyrick to have been identical with the visored capeline, or steel hat, represented in Crit. Enquiry, ii. pl. 48. It would appear from the Promptorium that the kettle hat was exclusively formed of leather; it is, however, probable that the name was likewise given to the chapell de fer, or capellus ferreus, used from the time of Edw. II. until the XVIth cent. the form being at all times nearly the same, and from the wide projecting brim bearing much resemblance to a caldron. It is, however, certain, that armour of leather was silvered over, to give it the appearance of metal, and it is highly probable that cuir-bouilli, which supplied defences of a very serviceable nature, and more commodious than plate armour, was extensively used. The form of the kettle hat, at the period when the Promptorium was compiled, may be seen in the drawings in Rous' Life of Rich. Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, Julius, E. iv. Strutt's Horda, vol. ii.

The Promptorium gives CHAVYLBONE, mandibula, which may possibly give a clue to the derivation of the term kevyl, a bit for a horse. It has not been noticed as retained in any provincial dialect in England, but Jamieson gives " Kewl, a halter brought under the jaws of an unmanageable horse, and passed through his mouth."

Gouldman gives it as synonymous with faggot; and Skinner, as a word in use in Lincolnshire, as it were " fasciculus ligni cædū."

<sup>4</sup> Kedge, brisk, budge, hale and lively. Suff. Ray and Moore. Kedgie, Caigie; Jamieson. Forby gives kick, signifying in Norfolk a novelty or a dash; and kicky, showy. Both words are given in a like sense by Jamieson. " He's in high kick," is a proverb in the Craven Dialect. Compare Su. G. kaeck, Germ. keck, Isl. kiaekr, audaz, animosus.

The expression " genimina viperarum," Vulg. Luke, iii. 7, is in the Wicliffite version rendered " kindelyngis of eddris." In the Mayster of Game, Vesp. " The hare shall kendyll on the harth-stone,
My dere son, than byld thy hows of lyme and of stone."

In the St. Alban's Book mention is made of " a kyndyll of yonge cattes." Palsgrave gives the verb to " kyndyll as a she hare or cony dothe, whan they bring forthe yonge. A conny kyndylleth every moneth in the yere, porte des petis." Skinner gives the word as used in relation to rabbits, and derives it from Ang.-Sax. cennan, parere. See Craven Gloss. v. Kenne, and Jamieson, Supp. v. Kendle. Compare Belg. kinderen, to be in child-bearing; Germ. kindlein, proles.

See also lines 894, 1050; and K. Horn, 1208; R. Glouc. p. 125; R. Brunne, &c. It is still in use in the Northern dialect. See Brockett and Jamieson, v. Kep; and Bp. Kennett's Coll. Lansd. MS. 1033 : "To kep, or cep, Bor. to catch, as, kep the ball." "To kep, vide to catch." GOULD. Ang.-Sax. cepan, Teut. keppen, captare.

<sup>2</sup> The Catholicon gives the following explanation : " Telonem hortulanii vocant lignum quo hauriunt aquam, a longitudine dictum; hoc Hispani ciconiam dicunt, quia imilitetur avem illam rostrum levani et deponentem: hujus lignum modo saepe fit super putes." Hormann says, "The buckette is of fro the swepe or flayle, and falled into the welle; urnula ciconie sive teloni excidit." The term seems to be derivable from Ang.-Sax. cepan. In the North the hooks by which a pot is suspended, a contrivance somewhat similar to the telo for raising water, are termed kilps, or pot-kelps, according to Ray. "A kylpe of a caldrone, perpendiculum." CATH. ANG. See Brockett and Craven Dialect, v. Kelps.

 Si les pépignes (be kurnelles) ne plauitez.*"

Forby states that kernel signifies, in Norfolk, a grain, as "a kernel of wheat, a kernel of salt." The archaic use of the word, as denoting grain, appears in the Ortus : " Granum, Anglice corne, a kyrnell. Granellum, graynes, or a lytel kyrnel. Gramino, to borionne or kyrnell. Grano, i. granis implere, to kyrnell." "A kyrnelle, enuclea, granum, nucleus. To kyrnelle, granare, granescere." CATH. ANG. In Coverdale's version of the treatise by Wermulierius, entitled The precious Pearl, 1560, f. 80, it is said that "when the corn is threshed, the kernell lieth mixed among the chaffe, and afterward are they disseuered with the fanne or wendle." Plot speaks of corn full of "kernell." Hist. Oxf. p. 245. Compare CEEDE of corne, as kyrnel. Ang.-Sax. cyrnel, nucleus.

<sup>4</sup> " Glandula, nodus sub cute, a waxynge curnelle." MED. In Roy. MS. 17 C. <sup>1</sup> It would be scarcely possible to define the garments, varied according to the fashion of the day, from the Ang.-Sax. cyrtel, tunica, to the kirtle of crimson velvet provided amongst the Parliament robes of Edw. VI., to which this appellation was successively applied. It denoted garments worn by both sexes : R. Brunne speaks of the Empress Maud as taking flight from Oxford " withouten kirtelle or kemse," p. 122; Chaucer describes the " kirtell of a light waget" as part of the smart attire of Absolon, the parish clerk ; Miller's T. 3332. Walter de Bruge, canon of York, bequeathed in 1396, "j. gounam, cum j. curtill, et j. capucio." Test. Ebor. i. 210. The kirtle, as female attire, seems to have been a close-fitting garment, as appears in the description in Sir Launfal of the two " gentyll maydenes—ilased smalle, jolyf, and welle ;" and Rob. Henrysoun, t. Hen. VI. says, in the Garment of good Ladies,

 Lacit with lesun love."

John Payn relates in his letter to his master, John Paston, that in Cade's rebellion his wife's dwelling was attacked, and the mob " lefte her no more gode but her kyrtell and her smook." Paston Lett. i. 62. As worn by men, the kirtle seems generally to have been a short garment, and closely girt ; but the " kirtell de rouge tartarin," which formed part of the state robes of the Knights of the Bath, was full, and long-skirted. " A kyrtelle, ubi a cote. A cote, tunica, tunicella," CATH. ANG. " Kyrtell, a garment, corpset, surcot, cotelle." PALSG. " Kyrtell, cotron." Boke to lerne French, Pynson. Duves, in the Introductory for to lerne French, written for the Princess Mary, gives " the kyrtell, le corset ; the kyrtell, la cottelette." See Strutt's Dresses, ii. 238, ed. 1842 ; Douce's Illust. of Shakespeare, Hen. IV. part ii.; and Nares.

<sup>2</sup> In the Wycliffite version this word is written " cos, cosse," Luke xxii. 48. R. Brunne uses the verb " cussed ;" see also R. Glouc. p. 15. In the North it is still pronounced cus, or kuss ; see Craven Dial. and Brockett. A.-Sax. cos, osculum. Compare cus, p. 111.

In the earlier Wycliffite version, Deut. xxxiii. 22 is thus rendered : " To Dan he seith, Dan, keetylng of a lyon (catulus leonis, Vulg.) shal flowe largely fro Basan." Palsgrave gives the verb to " kyttell as a catte dothe, chatonner. Gossypp, whan your catte kyttelleth, I praye you let me haue a kytynghe (chaton).)" " Chatonner, to kittle, or bring forth young cats. Callier, to kittle as a cat. Faire ses petis, to whelp, kittle, kindle, farrow," &c. cor. See Holland's Plutarch, p. 179 ; Pliny, xxix. c. 4. Forby gives kitling, a young cat. See Ash, the Cheshire Glossary, and Jamieson.

" As dooth a kex or a candle,
That caught hath fir and blaseth." 11,804.

In an Herbal, the date of which is perhaps contemporary with the Promptorium, it is said that there are two species of hemlock, " tame and wilde. The 2 spice is cowh ynowh, to mykel, saf fore pore mennys eldynge, and childus pleynge; þey callen it þe grete homeloc; the stalkes stonden whit and ser everyzere. In some contre it is called kex, in some contre wodewhistel." Arund. MS. 42, f. 23. Elynghe here signifies fuel; see EYLDYNGE, above, p. 136. Allusion is made to the use of the stalks of hemlock instead of candles, in Turn. of Tottenham, 201. " Eruca, a humlocke, or a keyclogge." OARTUS. " Keckes of humblockes, tviæ. Kickes, the drie stalkes of humlockes or burres, tviæ." PALSG. " Sagaperism, a gumme or rosyn, whiche runneth out of a kyxe or tree, called ferula." ELYOT. " Canos de suls, a kex or hollow stick, or branch of elder, or a pot-gum made thereof. Segue, Hemlocke, humlocke, herbe Bennet, Kex." COTG. " Kecks, i. hollow stalks and sticks, cremum." GOULDIN. Holland, in his version of Pliny, B. xxv. c. 7, says that the stem of gentian " is hollow as a kex," and void within; and of line or flax, B. xix. c. 1, that " the long buns of the stalkes—will serve very well to maintaine fire under killes and leads." Shakespeare speaks of " hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs;" the proverbs, as dry as a kex, as hollow as a gun, or as a kex, are common; and the word is still used provincially. See Brockett, Craven, Hallamshire, Salopian, Wiltshire Glossaries, &c. " Kexes, kaxes, or kizes, a Fr. G. cigne, utrumque a Lat. cicuta." SKINNER. Bunne, given here as synonymous with kyx, is so given likewise previously, p. 55; where BUNKYYDE, the reading of the MS., appears to be erroneous: the King's Coll. MS. gives Bunne, kyx, but possibly a kid or faggot of buns may be intended. This word occurs in the later Wyclifite version, Isa. i. 31. " And ȝoure strengthe schal be as a deed sparle of bonyis (ether of herdis of flex);" in another MS. " bones (eiper of herdis)," where three of the MSS. give " stobil," and the earlier Version " sparle of a flax top (favilla stupæ," Vulg.) Ang.-Sax. bune, fistula.

<sup>1</sup> —gnaste, or a kandel. Emunctura, ms. " Emungo, id est cordes auferre de naso vel candel," to snuffe. Emuctorium, a snuffynge yron." OARTUS. In the earlier Wyclifite version in the Bodl. MS. by the first hand, Isa. i. 31 is thus rendered: " And ȝoure strengthe shal ben as a gnast of a flax top (favilla stupæ, Vulg.) and ȝoure werk as a sparle (scintilla)," where the corrected reading of the ordinary copies, instead of " gnast," is " deed sparke," in the later version " deed sparle." " Lichinus, gnasta or knast of a candell. Lichinus, gnast of þe candyl." MED. " Lichinus, candell weyke." OARTUS. In the Winch. MS. this word not only occurs in its proper place, but is repeated at the end of the letter κ after the word KUNY, as follows: " KNASSE, or gnaste off a candel. Muco. Versus; Est nasi mucō, candele sit tibi mucō." This was perhaps a marginal addition, misplaced by the transcriber. Compare Dan. gnast, Swed. gnista, Icel. gneisti, scintilla.

<sup>2</sup> The term knave long retained the simple meaning of the Ang.-Sax. cnafa, puer: thus, in the Wyclifite version, " pēperit filium masculum," Vulg. is rendered " sche bere a knaue child." Apoc. xii. 5. Chaucer says of Griselda,

All had hire lever han borne a knaue child." Clerk's Tale.

<sup>2</sup> In W. Thorpe's recital of his examination by Abp. Arundel, 1407, he states that when charged with having preached heresy at St. Chad's, Shrewsbury, he made answer, "As I stood there in the pulpit, busying me to teach the commandment of God, there knilled a sacring bell, and therefore mickle people turned away hastily, and with noise ran fro towards me;" this circumstance called forth the expression which had been construed into heresy. "I knolle a belle, le frappe du batant." PALSG. Ang.-Sax. cnyllan, campand signum dare. Bp. Kennett remarks that in Yorkshire a passing bell is called "a sawl-knill, from Ang.-Sax. sawl, anima, and cnyll, campana pul-satio." Lansd. MS. 1033.

<sup>3</sup> Tyro is explained in the Catholicon to be novus miles, noviter electus ad militiam, but implied, perhaps, more properly, the novice in arms, who sought occasions for warlike exercise at home and abroad, until his approved prowess should entitle him to the honour of knighthood. See Ducange, the Memoirs of St. Palaye, and other writers on chivalry. Scarcely any of the ancient Romances afford a more graphic and stirring picture of the education and adventure of the Tyro than the life of le petit Jehan de Saintré, written about the period when the Promptorium was compiled. The practice of wandering on the uncertain quest of adventure was by no means laid aside when the novice had won his spurs. "Knight of adventures, chevalier errant." PALSG.

<sup>4</sup> The verb to knit is used by old writers in the sense of to unite. Thus in Sloane MS. 3548, f. 99, b. is given an extraordinary nostram "for to knyt synous þat are brokyne. The term seems here to signify a little cook. In the Vision of P. Ploughman, line 4371, it had been supposed to have this meaning; but Mr. Wright, in his Glossary, suggests that it implies some kind of meagre food, as a small cock, which, by comparison with Turnam. of Tottenham, Anc. Poet. ii. 24, and Heywood’s Prov. pt. i. c. xi. seems highly probable. “Coquine, a cockney, simperdecockit, nice thing.” COTG. “A cockney, naias, mignot, cailhette. A waspish cockney dame, queepine.” SHERW. “A cockney, or child tenderly brought up; mammothreptus, vinciolus, pedagium, delitiae pueri,” &c. GOULD. Tusser uses the word in this last sense, as given in the Promptorium: speaking of the nursery, and defects of early training, he says, in his Points of Huswifery,

See the note on the word COKNAY, p. 86; and Fuller’s Worthies, London.

<sup>4</sup> See the note on CUKSTOLE, p. 107, where the reading cukstolle, according to the other three MSS. is probably more correct. The following observation occurs amongst Bp. Kennett’s Coll. Lansd. MS. 1033: “A goging stool, a ducking stool, orucking stool, called in Domesday cathedra stercoris, properly a gonging stool, gong stool, or gang stool. Sax. gong stole, sella familiaris, a close stool.” That such was sometimes its form is proved by the engraving in Boys’ Hist. of Sandwich, which exhibits the cucking-stool and wooden mortar used there for the punishment of scolds; see pp. 500, 785. In a satire on the evil government of the times of Edw. II. it is said, in reference to the corrupt dealings of the assisours, (Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, 345.)

It seems also to have been called thewe, as in the Plac. in Itin. apud Cestriam, 14 Hen. VII. cited by Blount, it is recorded that George Grey, Earl of Kent, claimed in his manors of Bushton and Ayton, to punish offenders against the assize of bread and ale, "per tres vices per amerciamenta, et quartā vice pistores per pillorianum, bruciatores per tumbrellum, et rizatrices per thewe, hoc est ponere eas super scabellum vocatum a fucking stool." In cases where fine was substituted for the fucking-stool, as a punishment, the lord became liable to the forfeiture of his manorial liberties, as in the case of the Dean of Lincoln, in 1384, who fined transgressors of the assize of bread and ale, in certain of his manors in Derbyshire, whereas "puniendi sunt per pillorum et tumbrellum, et non per amerciamenta;" for that offence, and the deficiency of pilory and tumbrel, his liberties were seized, and forfeited into the King's hands. Pat. 8 Ric. II. The tumbrel seems to be occasionally mentioned as distinct from the stool, and sometimes as the same mode of punishment, and from the examination of the stool and its carriage still preserved at Warwick, it is obvious that the two might be used either singly or together, according to local usage, and the nature of the offence. An extent of the manor of Marham, in Norfolk, taken about the commencement of the XVth cent. states that W. Beleth, who held the chief manor, claimed "habere libertatem in furch', tumbrell', thewe, emendacionem forisfacture pistorum, brasiliorum, mensur', galone, weyf, et stray'" and that the Abbess of Marham enjoyed the like liberties. Orig. Roll, in the possession of Sir Thos. Hare, Bart. In the XVIth cent. the punishment of the fucking stool was still fully in use: by the stat. 3 Hen. VIII. c. 6, as the penalty of fraudulent practices by carders or spinners of wool, the offender was to be "sett upon the pillorie or the fuckingstole, man or woman, as the case shall require." Stat. of Realm, iii. 28. In Mr. Beesly's Hist. of Banbury will be found several notices regarding the pilory, "kockestoll," and tumbrel, in use at that place as late as the reign of Elizabeth. Harrison, who wrote his description of England about 1579, says in the chapter of sundry kinds of punishments, "scolds are ducked vpon fucking stooles in the water." "Cucke stole, selle à ribauldes." FALSE.

Ne, though I say it, I n'am not lefe to gabbe." Miller's T. 3506.

Compare the Dutch labben, Belg. lapperen, to blab, or gossip. Labb, Dialect of Exmoor.

<sup>2</sup> It is not obvious in what sense this word is here to be taken: the Ortus follows the explanation given in the Catholicon, "labellum, i. parvum labrum, a lytelle lyppre." It appears from citations given by Ducange that labellus, lambellus, or labelletus, denoted a pendant ornament of dress, or the heraldic label, in which sense it occurs in the grant of a crest, 1324, Rym. vii. 763. MS. 4379, in Strutt's Dresses, ii. pl. 80, 112; and in the latter, the hood being brought up over the head, the use of the labels, which are attached together under the chin, is apparent. There was also a furred hood with long labels, worn by ecclesiastics, representations of which are supplied by the Missal of Philippe le Bon, Harl. PALSG. This verb is used by Shakespeare, Hen. VI. pt. 3, Act ii. In Sussex and Hants, to lade means to take water from a vessel or pond by a scoop or pail, and in Somersetshire the utensil employed for this purpose is termed a lade-pail. Ang.-Sax. hladan, haurire.

By nom hym al that he hadde."

See also line 4973. Chaucer says in the Persones's Tale, " Then cometh lachesse, that is, he that whan he beginneth any good werk, anon he wol forlete and stint it;" and uses the adjective "lache," sluggish or dull; Boec. B. iv. Gower observes that the first and chief point of sloth is "lachesse," which has this property, to leave all things in arrear. Conf. Am. B. IV. See Jamieson, v. Lasche. Palsgrave gives the verb "I latche, I lagge, I tary behynde my company, Je tarde, and Je targe."

<sup>2</sup> To latch, signifying to seize or catch, is a verb the use of which occurs in R. Brunne, p. 120; the Vision of P. Ploughm. 1279; Crede, 934; Cov. Myst. p. 29, &c. Chaucer speaks of a " nette or latch," set by Love to snare birds. In Will. and the Werwolf it is used in the sense of embracing:

" Certes Sire þat is soþ, sede Will'm þanne,
And lepes liȝthi him to, and lacches him in armes." p. 163.

See also p. 25. In Arund. MS. 42, f. 17, b. it is related how the wood of aloes is obtained, which grows on the mountain tops, near a lake beyond Babylon, and falling into the water, either from age and decay, or blown by the wind, the "folk þat dwellen in þat countre, or nere, casten nettys, or oper slayztes, and lacchyn it, and so it is had." Palsgrave gives the verb "I latche, I catche a thyng that is throwen to me in my handes, or it fall to the grounde, Je hoppe. If I had latched the potte betyme, it had nat fallen to the grounde." Forby gives to latch as used in Norfolk in this sense; and Brockett states that it is still retained in the Northern dialect. Ang.-Sax.  læccan, prehendere.

<sup>3</sup> Cithara is rendered, in the Medulla, "a harpe," in the Ortus "a lewte;" and in the latter occurs "cithariso, to syng with a harpe." LAY HARPE seems here to denote the instrument in its use as an accompaniment to the voice. Thus Chaucer says,

" Thise old gentil Britons in hir dayes
Of diuers auentures maden layes,
Rimeyed in hire firste Breton tongue
Which layes with her instrumentys they songe." Cant. T. 11,022.

See Tyrwhitt's observations on the derivation of the word lay. Ang.-Sax. ley, canticum.
As, however, sambuca is defined by Papias, and other glossarists, to have the sense of
"cithara rustica," lay harp may, possibly, imply the instrument used by the vulgar.

<sup>3</sup> Compare DYSPREYSYN', or lackyń'. "Vituperium, blame or lacke." ORT. To lakk, depravare, &c. ubi to blame." CATH. ANG. In the Vision of P. Ploughman, Envy says that when his neighbour met with a customer, whilst he sold nothing, he was ever ready "To lyne and to loure on my negheboore,

Chaucer uses the word precisely in the same sense, in Rom. of Rose. Fabyan, in "Lenouy" of his viith part, excuses himself as unable to adapt his Chronicle to the liking of every reader,

"And specyally to suche as hane theyr delyghtynge
 Euer wyth dysclaundre moste wryters to lacke,
 And barke whyle they maye, to sette good wryters a backe."

"I lacke a thyng, I fynde faute at it, Ie trouue à redire. I lacke, I wante a thyng, I'ay faulte. I lacke a penne." PALSG. Compare Dutch laecken, minuere, deterere. Lydgate uses the substantive lack in the sense of dispraise. See his poem to put in remembrance of virtue and vice, of the diligent and the indolent. (Minor Poems, p. 84.)

"Lame of one hande, manchet. Lame of all ones lymmes, perclus. Lame-nesse, mehaygneth." PALSG. Ang.-Sax. lam, claudus.

<sup>2</sup> On the calends, or first of August, the festival of St. Peter ad vincula, it was customary in Anglo-Saxon times to make a votive offering of the first-fruits of the harvest, and thence the feast was termed hlaf-mæsse, Lammas, from hlaf, panis, and mæsse, missa, festum. In the Sarum Manual it is called Benedictio novorum fructuum. "Lammas, a feest, la Saint Pierre aux liens." PALSG. See Brand's Popular Antiquities.

Magister Joh. de Garlandia, speaking in his Dictionary of the trades of Paris in the XIIIth cent. says that the Merchants who dwelt on the great bridge sold " capistra, et lombaria, vel lombanaria, ligulas et marsupia de corio porcino vel cervino; " where the gloss is as follows : " ligule, lamibres, vel formechez." In the accounts of Lucas le Borgne, tailor of Philippe de Valois, printed by Leber, is the item, in 1338, " ij. livres de soie de plusieure couleure, pour faire lamières pour le Roy." Charles VI. in 1398, in consequence of a change in the fashion of nether garments, granted licence to the chauettiers of Paris to sell " chausses garnies d'aiguilettes ou lamières." Leber, Invent. 467. Laniers, usually called points, from the tags with which they were tipped, were much used in ordinary dress, and for attaching the various portions of armour: when so employed they were termed arming points. Archæol. xvii. 296. In Chaucer's brilliant picture of the preparations for a tournament, the following duties appear to have pertained to the esquires :

Gigging of shields, with laniers lacing." Knight's Tale.

In Norfolk the lash of a whip is called the lanner, or lanyer, which in Suffolk denotes only the leathern lash. See Forby, and Moore, v. Lanna.

<sup>4</sup> In the North to langel signifies to hopple, or fasten the legs with a thong. " Lanyels, side-lanyels, hopples for horses. Yorksh. Dial. p. 44." Bp. Kennett, Lansd. MS. 1033. See Grose, Craven Dialect, and Jamieson. To langle, in Norfolk, implies to saunter slowly, as if it were difficult to advance one foot before the other.

<sup>1</sup> The word lap, according to many ancient writers, signified the skirt of a garment. Thus G. de Biblesworth says,

 Et d'en costé sont vos girouns (sidgoren.)"

It denoted likewise the hinder skirt, as in Seuyn Sages, 899, where the herdsman is described as picking haws, and filling with them first his "barm," and afterwards "his other lappe." In Emare also, v. 652, Egarye, being cruelly exposed with her child, conceals her face "with the bynther lappes" of her large and wide surcote. See moreover Amis and Amiloun, 988; Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, 8461. In the Life of St. Dominic, in the Golden Legend, it is related that on a certain occasion, when the friars had little bread, there came two young men, "whiche entred into the refectorye or fraytour, and the lappes of theyr mantells y' henge on theyr necke were full of breed," which they gave to the Saint. "Lappe, or skyrtle, gyron." PALSG. "Gabinus, a garment with two lappes, wherof the one cast backward," &c. ELYOT. Ang.-Sax. lappa, fimbria. The word is also used, by analogy, to denote the lower part of the ear: "A lappe of y' ere, cartilagia, legia." CATH. ANG. Horman says that "yf the lappe of the eare wax redde, there is somewhat amyase. Labo rubescente aliquod peccatum est."

"To lappe, volvere, convolvore. To lapp in, intricare, involvere. A lappyng in," &c. CATH. ANG. This verb is used most commonly in the sense of wrapping, as a garment. See Cheuelere Assigne, p. 101; Wicl. Version, Math. xxvii. 59; Gower, Conf. Am.; Cov. Myst. p. 125. In the Wicllifite version it is written repeatedly "wlappe," as in Isai. xxxvii. 1, "Whanne Kyng Ezechie hadde herd, he to rent hise cloþis, and he was wlappid in a sak (obvolvus est sacco," Vulg.) See also Job, iii. 5.; Mark, xv. 46. John Paston writes to his wife, about 1490, for a plaster of her "flos unguentorum," to be applied to the knee of the Attorney-general, to whom he was under obligation; and bids her write "whethyr he must lape eny more cloþys aboute the playster to kepe it warme, or nought." Paston Letters, V. 346. To bi-lappe signifies to surround, or close in. Sir Amiloun in a dream saw his brother Amis "bilappid among his son." Amis and Amil. 1014. Hampole uses the compounded word "umbilape" (Ang.-Sax. umbe, ymb, circum), as in the Prick of Conscience, where he says amongst the pains of hell, that the "vermyne selle vmbelape bain all abowte." Harl. MS. 6923, f. 94. Latimer, in his Vth sermon on the Lord's Prayer, says, "Note here that our Saviour biddeth us to say, us; this us lappeth in all other men with my prayer." Palsgrave gives the following phrases: "Lappe this chylde well, for the weather is colde, envelopes bien, &c. Lappe this hoode aboute your head, affublez vous de ce chaperon." "Plisser, to plait, foul'd, lap up, or one within another, whence also to plash." COTG. To lap is still used in the sense of wrapping, in Warwickshire. Compare WAPPOÑ, or hyllyn wythe clothys: Tego; and WAPPYN', or wyndyn a-bowte yn clothys: Involvo.

Palsgrave gives only " lashe, nat fast, lache. Lasshnesse, lascheté." In the North cold and moist weather, when it does not actually rain, is called lasche. Brockett.

Harrison, speaking of the partition of England into shires and lathes, says, " Some as it were roming or rouing at the name Lath, do saie that it is derived of a barn, which is called in Old English a lathe, as they conjecture. From which speech in like sort some deriuue the word Laistow, as if it should be trulie written Lathstow, a place wherein to laie vp or laie on things." Descr. of Eng. Holinsh. Chron. i. 153. Skinner gives Lath as most commonly used in Lincolnshire, and derives it from to lade, because it is loaded with the fruits of the earth. Bp. Kennett notices it also as a Lincolnshire word, and gives the derivation Ang.-Sax. gelaðian, congregare fruges. Lansd. MS. 1033. It is retained in the dialect of the North. <sup>1</sup> Compare HALY, or behatyd, Erosus. "Huly, peevish, fretfull. When a man is not easily pleased, or seems captious and froward, he is said to be huly, and a huly man; Dunelm." Bp. Kennett, Lansd. MS. 1033.

<sup>3</sup> Latten, a hard mixed metal much resembling brass, was largely used in former times, especially in the formation of sepulchral memorials. The precise nature of its composition does not appear to have been accurately ascertained. It is repeatedly mentioned as a metal of a bright and golden colour; Chaucer uses the comparison that Phœbus "hewed like latoun." Gower speaks of it as distinct from brass, as it seems properly to have been, although occasionally confounded therewith, and even with copper. "Auricalcum, i. fix aurii, laten or coper." ORTUS. "Auricalcum, Anglice goldefome; Electrinum, latyne." Harl. MS. 1002, f. 149. "Latyn metall, latn." PALSG. Latten was probably obtained from Germany. In the covenants for the workmanship of the effigy of Richard Beauchamp, 1454, by Thos. Stevyns, copper-smith of London, the metal is described as "latten," or "Cullen plate." (Cologne?) the value of which was 10d. a pound. The remote derivation of the word is very obscure: it was probably adopted in England from the German Letton, or French laton. Compare Dutch latoen, Isl. laatun, Ital. ottone, lattone, Span. alaton, laton. Plate tin had also the appellation latten. See Forby and Brockett, and the remarks of Nares and Jamieson.

<sup>2</sup> The precise nature of this weapon, as likewise the etymology of its name, is still questionable; it was probably adopted in this country from the French, but the derivation from the name of an Eastern or Moorish weapon, called zagaye, arzegaye, or assagay, seems more reasonable than that which has been proposed, lance aigüe. That it was a missile weapon is apparent from Guill. de St. André, who wrote about the middle of XIVth cent. and speaks of throwing "dardes, javelots, lanceen-gayes;" but Guiart seems to mention the "archegaie" as a thrusting weapon, rather than a missile. Carré gives a comparison of the Lance-guaye, or archegaye, of the Franks, with the Oriental zagaye, and considers them as missiles. Armes des Français, p. 198. From "the Rime of Sire Thopas," which describes him as going forth to ride with "a lancegay" in his hand and long sword at his side, it appears to have been a weapon carried for occasional defence, rather than a proper part of equipment for war or the tournament." Cant. T. 13,682. The stat. 7 Ric. III. c. 13, confirming the stat. of Northampton, 2 Edw. III. c. 3, against riding, or appearing in public assemblies, with force and arms, ordains "qe desoromes nulle homme chivache deinz el Roialme armez—ne ovesque lancegay deinz mesme de Roialme, les queux lancegays soient de tout ouster deinz le dit Roialme, come chose defendue par nostre seigneur le Roi, sur peine de forfaiture dicels lancegates, armures, et autres herneys quelconques." Compare stat. 20 Ric. II. c. 1; Stat. of Realm, ii. 35, 92. In the Rolls of Parl. V. 212, there is a petition for vengeance by the widow of a person who had been murdered in 1450 by a gang of men "arraied in fourme of werre, with jakkes, salettes, longe swerdes, long-debois, boresperes, and other unmerciable forbodon wepons," one of whom "smote him with a lancegay thorough the body, a fote and more." In 1459 there were found in the Great Hall of Sir John Fastolfe, at Caistor, Norfolk, cross-bows, a boar-spear, a target, "xxij. speris: Item, j. launcegay." Archæol. xxi. 272. "Launce gay, tauseleyne." PALSG.

<sup>1</sup> Camden, in his Remains, explains laund as signifying a plain among trees. Thus in the account of the hunting expedition, Ipomydon, 383, the Queen's pavillion was pitched at "laund on hight," whence she might command a view of all the game of the forest. Compare Vision of P. Ploughm. 5098, 10,248; Chaucer, Compl. of Black Knyght; Shakespeare, Hen. VI. pt. i. III. 1. In Cullum's Hawsted a rental dated 1509 makes mention of "9 acres in campo vocato le lawnde." "Indago, a parke, a hunting place, or a lawnde." ORTUS. "A lawnde, saltus." CATH. ANG. <sup>3</sup> "A lese, laxa." CATH. ANG. "Lesshe for a grehounds, lais, lessae." PALSG. In the note on the word FUTE, p. 183, it was suggested that the term feuterer might thence be derived; Sir F. Madden likewise, in his Glossary to Gawain, had explained "Vewter," Gawain and Grene Knyt, 1146, as denoting the huntsman who tracked the deer by the fewte or odour. It seems probable, however, that the derivation given by Blount, Bp. Kennett, and other glossarists, is more correct. The Gaulish hounds, of which Martial and Ovid speak, termed vertagi, or veltres, appear to have been greyhounds, and hence the appellations veltro, Ital. viautre, vautre, Fr. Welter, Germ. The Promptorium gives GREHOWNDE, veltres, p. 209; and from the practice of leading these dogs in couples, the leash appears to have received the name veltrea, here given, a word unnoticed by Ducange. The "ministerium de Veltrariis" is mentioned in Rot. Pip. 5 Steph. In the Household Constitutions of Hen. II. Liber Niger Scacc. i. 356, amongst the stipends assigned to the different officers connected with the chace, is the statement, "Veltrarii, unusquisque ij.d. in die, et ij.d. hominibus suis; et unicuique leporario ob. in die." Blount has cited the Tenure of Setene, in Kent, by the service of providing one veltrarius, to lead three greyhounds, when the King should go into Gascony, as appears by Esch. 34 Edw. I. and Rot. Fin. 2 Edw. II. where the word is written vaultrarius. Various details regarding the duties of the "foutreres," and their fee, or share of the produce of the chace, will be found in the Mayster of Game, Vesp. B. XII. f. 99, 104, b. Of the dogs termed veltres, veltrahi, vertragi, &c. see further in Ducange, v. Canis. At a later time the vaultre was a mongrel hound, used in hunting bears and boars, as Nicot observes, "C'est une espèce de chien entre allant et mastin, dont on chasse aux ours et sangliers." The feuterers appear to have been at a later period termed "children of the lesh;" they were four in number, in the household of Hen. VIII. 1526, as appears by the Ordinances of Eltham.

servrgion. I leche, I heale one of a sore wounde as a cyrurgyen dothe. Iegucris." PALSG. Ang.-Sax. læce, medicus. The appellation was used to denote those who professed any branch of the healing art, as well as the ladies, who frequently supplied the place of the regular practitioners. Amongst the innumerable treatises of the ancient herbalists few afford a more curious insight into the practices of leech-craft, about the period when the Promptorium was compiled, than Arund. MS. 42. The author, who had a herb-garden at Stepney, states that he "knew a lady, þe lady Sowche, þe beste Godys leche of Bryȝt-lond, in women," and recounts her practice in preparing a nostrum, termed "nerual." f. 22. The fourth, or ring finger, was called the leech finger, from the pulsation therein found, and supposed to be in more direct communication with the heart, as in the tract attributed to Joh. de Garlandia, under the title of Distigius, Harl. MS. 1002, f. 115, it is said, "Stat medius (medyll fyngure) medio, medicus (leche fyngure) jam convenit (accordyt) egro." In another line the fingers are thus enumerated: "Polle, index, medius, medicus, auricularis." CATH. ANG. See Brand's Popular Antiquities.

<sup>1</sup> The term leche, which occurs frequently in connection with ancient cookery, had two distinct significations. It denoted such viands as it was usual to serve in slices, probably for the sake of convenience, before the general use of forks. "Lesche, a long slice, or shive of bread, &c." CORG. The nature and variety of dishes thus to be served may be learned from Harl. MS. 279, where recipes are given for 64 different "Leche vyaundys;" and where the meaning of the verb to leche is evident from such directions as the following: "Brawn in comfyte—leche it fayre wyth a knyff, but not to þinne, and þan ȝif þou wolt þou myȝt take þe rybbys of þe bore al bare, and chete hem enlongys þow þe lechys, an so serue forth a leche or to in every dysshē." f. 27, b. Compare the use of the verb to "leshe," Forme of Cury, pp. 36, 56, 57; "yleeslied," p. 18. Compare the "leyched beefe" as ordered for supper in the dietary of the Princess Cecill, with the item "beefe sliced," in the Ordinances of Eltham, Househ. Ord. pp. *38, 181. R. Holme gives this signification, iii. p. 78, and another sense, namely, "a kind of jelly, made of cream, isinglass, sugar, and almonds." p. 83. "White leach, gelatina amigdalorum." BABET. "Leche made of fleshe, gélée." PALSG. One lechement appears to have formed an ordinary portion of every course, as may be gathered from the bills of fare at various great festivities, Harl. MS. 279, f. 44, and from the accounts of the installation feasts of Abp. Nevill, 1466, Lel. Coll. vi. 6; of Abp. Morton, 1478, Arnold's Chron. 239; and the coronation banquet of Elizabeth, Queen of Hen. VII. 1487, Lel. Coll. iv. 226. The various kinds of "leche" named in these documents appear to have ranged with "suttleties," such as "leche Lumbart gylt, partie gelly, leche porpul, damaske, reiall, ciprus, rube, Florentine," &c. See further the Roll of Cookery appended to the Household Ordinances; the Liber cure cocorum, Sloane MS. 1986; and Cott. MS. Jul. D. VIII. Skinner interprets brawn lechyd, which is mentioned in the St. Alban's Book, as signifying "aper medicatus, aromatis conditus;" as if the term had some connection with Ang.-Sax. læce, medicus.

<sup>1</sup> An instance of this use of the verb to lead has been already given in the note on CARTYN', p. 62. Sir John Maundevile uses it in the sense of carrying, generally, as in the following passage: "That arke or hucche, with the relikes, Tytus ledde with hym to Rome, whan he had scomfyted alle the Jewes." Voiage, p. 102. In the Liber Niger Regis Edw. IV. an ordinance is given that no seller of wheat for the use of the King's house "be compelled to lede or carrie his wheete, pourveyed for this household, towards the Kinges garner," more than the distance of 10 miles at his own cost. Household Ordin. p. 68. A municipal regulation, cited in Beesley's Hist. of Banbury, p. 233, prescribed in 1564, "that no maner of person shall feche, leed, or cary any donge or mucke furthe of the towne, but betwene the fyrt day of May and the feest of Seint Michell th' Arckangell." Among the trades enumerated in the order of the pageants of the play of Corpus Christi at York, 1415, occur "water leders." Drake's Hist. App. "I lede a man or thyng aboute a towne vpon a hardell, or after a horse, Ie trayne." PALSG.

<sup>2</sup> Lixinum, ms. and s. Ugutio gives lixen, aqua, whence "lixinum, quia sit ex aqua et cinere." Arund. MS. 508. The early romances and Chaucer's poems afford evidence that yellow or light-coloured hair was in special esteem. The fashion prevailed at a very early period, as appears from the writings of Tertullian, who reproaches Christian women with an affection of seeking to resemble in this respect those of Germany and Gaul. The art of producing this colour artificially was termed crocephantea, and is condemned by St. Cyprian and St. Jerome as a sinful vanity, and by Galen as prejudicial to health. At the time when the Promptorium was compiled this fashion continued in full force, and numerous artificial expedients had been devised for supplying the defect of nature, by means of some vegetable decoction or lye, whereby, with subsequent exposure to the sun, the hair might be made to assume the desired colour. The herbals and medicinal treatises of the XVth cent. indicate a great variety of processes which were adopted for colouring or preserving the hair. In Arundel MS. 42, f. 82, the decoction of madder is recommended to make it red, and the juice of sage applied in the hot sun to make it black; f. 77, b. The virtues of the lily are commended for making hair to grow again, and the oil of hazel nuts as infallible against "mowtyng of here," f. 59; and an effectual depilatory "for-doyng here" is given at f. 35. The strongest substances were in request for such purposes: thus in Jul. D. viii. f. 79, b. "lixivium de cinere fini columbi" is recommended as an approved remedy against the falling of hair. The extent to which such artificial aids were made available at a later period appears from the numberless prescriptions given by Gerard, Parkinson, Langham, in his Garden of Health, 1579, and similar writers. See the satirical observations of Bulwer on this subject, in the Artificial Changling, 1653. Horman, who wrote at the commencement of the reign of Hen. VIII. says that "maydens were sylken callis, with the whiche they keeps in ordre theyr heare made yelowe with lye; comas lixivio ruffatas sive rutulatas. Women chaunge the naturall colour of theyr heare with crafty colour and sonnyng. Some cherishe theyr busshis of heare with moche kymbeyng and weashyng in lye. He maketh his heare yelowe bycause he wolde seme lustye; rutilat capillos ut vegetus appareat. His heare was lyght ambre." Vulgaris, 1519. To such practices allusion is perhaps made in the Promptorium by the word HEED WASCHYNGE, which will be found above, p. 232. "Lee, lixivium, locum." CATH. ANG. Palsgrave gives only "lye to wasshe with, lessive." Ang.-Sax. leah, lixivium.

<sup>3</sup> Leme, a shining light, Ang.-Sax. leoma, jubar, is a word not uncommonly used by the old writers; see R. Glouc. p. 186; Vision of Pieri P. 12,324; Cant. Tales, 14,836. “Fulgor, lemynge bat touchethe. Fulgor, lemynge bat brennethe. Casma, breanynge of the leeme of the fyre.” MED. MS. CANT. In the Abbreviata Chronica printed by the Camb. Antiqu. Soc. from the MS. at Caius Coll. it is recorded, A.D. 1402, “hoc anno apparuit stella comata, Anglice vocata lemyng sterr, prognosticans bellum futurum, vid. bellum Salopie.” Fabyan relates that in 7 Will. Rufus “gryaly and vncouth syghtes were sene, as hostes of men fightyng in y<sup>e</sup> skye, and fyre lemys and other.” Compare GLEMYNGE, or lemyng of lyghte, p. 198. See also hereafter STEEM, or lowe of fyre, and STEMYNGE, or lemyng of fyrr. Bp. Kennett notices leam as signifying a flash or blaze of fire, in Durham; Lansd. MS. 1033; and Brockett gives leam, as retained in the Northern Dialect.

<sup>4</sup> Junius derives this term from Ang.-Sax. leaf, dilectus, and man, denoting the human species generally, without distinction of sex. Hickes in his A.S. Grammar gives leue-mon, amasius, Norm.-Sax.; by R. Glouc. the word is written lefmon, p. 344; and in the Winchester MS. of the Promptorium lefmon’ is given as synonymous with SPECYAL, concubyne, the man. The editor of the Towneley Mysteries would deduce an argument for the antiquity of that work from the fact that lemanian occurs therein solely in the primary and simple sense of a person beloved. It is thus used also by R. Brunne, p. 236; but it more commonly denotes one loved illicitly, or with mere gallantry, as the word is used by Chaucer and Gower, and applied to either sex. “Bassaris, a mylche cowe, or a prestys lemande.” Vocab. Harl. MS. 1002. “A leman, amasius, amasia, concubina, focaria, pelex: pelignus, peligna, filius vel filia eius; multicube, multigamus, polidamas. A lemanry, concubitus, concubinatus.” CATH. <sup>2</sup> It has been affirmed that leprosy was brought into Europe by the crusaders; in the Ang.-Sax. vocabulary, however, which has been attributed to Elfric, occurs the word "leprosus, hreoffig, oððe licðrowera." Jul. A. II. f. 123. In the Assisa de Foresta, which is of uncertain date, but is assigned by Manwood to 6 Edw. I. it is enacted that if any beast of chase be found wounded or dead, "caro mittatur ad domum leprosi, si qua prope fuerit," or otherwise given to the infirm and poor. Stat. of Realm. i. 244. In Lynn, where the Promptorium was compiled, there were several spital houses, or hospitals of lepers. The most ancient, the hospital of St. Mary Magdalen, was founded in the reign of Stephen by Petrus Capellanus for a prior and twelve brethren, of whom three were to be lepers. See Parkins' account of Lynn, Blomf. Norf. iv. 608. Mackarell, in his Hist. of that town, p. 255, mentions a bequest to the leprous men and women in 1408; and Parkins records the devise of Stephen Guybore to every house of lepers about Lynn, in 1432, namely at West Lynn, Cowgate, Herdwyk, Setchethit, Mawdelyn, and Geywode. The number of these charitable institutions in England was considerable; permission had been granted by Pope Alex. III. in 1179, that leprous persons, being excluded from all communion with their fellow-men, might, wherever

The term mesel is very commonly used to designate a leprous person, and appears to be directly taken from the French mezel; some writers have, however, supposed a distinction to have existed between mesellerie and ladrerie. See MASYL, hereafter.

<sup>1</sup> The double signification of the verb to lere occurs in most of the old writers; R. Glouc., R. Brunne, and Minot use it in both senses; Chaucer uses it in that of learning, Frankel. <sup>3</sup> The lectern is not named amongst the appliances of sacred use enumerated by Ælfric, Cott. MS. Julius, A. ii. f. 126, b.; in the Regula Bened. mention, however, occurs of the reading-scambol. The various uses of the lectern in cathedral or collegiate establishments may be gathered from the ancient rites of Durham, in which it appears that there was a pelican "lettern" of brass at the north side of the high altar, where the Epistle and Gospel were sung; a second lower down in the choir, in the form of an eagle of brass, used at mattins, or other times when the legends were read; and there was also a "letterne" of wood, like a pulpit, standing and adjoining to the organ over the door of the choir. It seems highly probable, as Mr. Rudge supposes, that the white marble desk discovered in 1813 near the site of the abbey church of Evesham, formed part of the lectern that was erected about 1218 by Thos. de Marleberg, at that time sacrist, and subsequently Abbot, according to the following record:

"Fecit lectricum retro chorūm, quod prius non erat factūm in ecclēsiā Eveshamensi, et legebantur lectio[n]es iuxta tumbam S. Wilsini." Cott. MS. Vesp. B. xxiv. This lectern is represented in Archæol. xvii. pl. 23. A lectern of marble, resembling such as is quarried in Derbyshire, exists at Crowle, in Worcestershire; it appears to be a work of the XIIth cent. Another beautifully-sculptured specimen is preserved in the ancient abbatial house at Wenlock, Salop. In the former instance alone, the arrangement whereby the desk was supported on small columns may be ascertained. Of the moveable lecterns of a later period numerous specimens have escaped the ravages of the XVIth and XVIIth centuries. Carved lecterns of wood exist at Bury, Huntingdonshire, date about 1300; at Ramsey; Swanscombe, and Lenham, in Kent; Hawsted, in Suffolk; and in many other churches. Those of brass are mostly of the XVth cent. or later date. At Rouen Cathedral an ancient lectern of iron may be seen, which, being hinged together like a faldistorium, and furnished with a socket for a candle on one side, might be folded up when not in use, and laid aside, so as not to encumber the area of the choir. The lectern was adorned with a covering, frequently termed the "des-cloth," of rich material conformable to the suit, or complete vestment, of which it formed a part. In the Inventory of the Church of St. Faith, in the crypt at St. Paul's, 1298, is mentioned "pannus de pal ad lectrinum." In the Wardrobe Book 27 Edw. I. amongst the furniture and ornaments of the royal chapel, occurs "unum manutergium curfum, sutum de auro et serico, pro lectrone." p. 352. John of Gaunt bequeathed, 1399, a richly-embroidered vestment of white satin to the high altar at St. Paul's, the "couverte pour la letteron" forming an item in the description, as likewise in that of a vestment of red cloth of gold, wrought with gold falcons, devised by him to the "Mousterie de N. Dame de Nicole." Test. Ebor. i. 227, 228. "Lectrinum, lectrum, et legium pro eodem, scilicet pro pulpite: et dicuntur a lego, a pulpite, or a lectrone." ORTUS. <sup>1</sup> The etymology and precise meaning of this word are exceedingly obscure: it is used by Chaucer, in the tale of the Cambridge scholars, who came to the Miller of Trumpington to have their grain ground, and left their horse under a pent-house or out-building, instead of putting him into the "lathe;" the Miller, to play them a shrewd trick, slipped off the bridle, and let the horse run.

" He looked up and doun, till he had yfound
The clerkes horse, there as he stood ybound,
Behind the mill, under a lessel." Reve's Tale, 4059.

Tyrwhitt prints the word "levesell," and its meaning here is less obscure than in a passage in the Persone's Tale, where it again occurs. Chaucer defines the difference between pride in the heart of man, and pride shown in external show and costly array: "But nathelesse, that one of these spices of pride is signe of that other, right as the gaye levesell at the taverne is signe of the wine that is in the seller." Speght, who had here consulted the Promptorium, explains the word as signifying a bush, or a hovel, which is repeated by Skinner, with the suggestion that it may be derived from the French "lais, vepres, virgulta, addid term. dim. ell." This derivation seems little to the purpose. According to Cotgrave lais, or layes, are trees left as marks in cutting a copse wood. Tyrwhitt in his notes says confidently that the word is derived from <sup>2</sup> The lightning, or any sudden gleam of light, is frequently termed by the old writers levene, a word which has been derived from Ang.-Sax. hlifian, rutilare. See Lye, and Jamieson, v. Levin. R. Brunne, describing the engines devised by Richard Coeur de Lion, to throw wild-fire and stones, at the siege of Acre, says that "as leuen be fire out schete." Langt. Chron. p. 174. Compare Havelok, 2690; Ywaine and Gawin, Rits. Metr. R. i. p. 17; Cant. Tales, 5858; Gower, Conf. Am.; Townel. Myst. pp. 39, 116; Cov. Myst. 156. Fabyan relates that in 7 Hen. I. "was sene an vncouth starre, whyche nyghtely appered at one howre, and continued so by the space of xxv. days; and fore agaynst that, oute of the Eest parte, appered a great leuyn or beme of bryghtnes, whyche stretched towarde the sayde starre." Spenser uses the word "levin" repeatedly. "Fulgur, leuenynghe that brenneth. Fulgetrum, a shynynge of leuenynghe that brenneth. Fulmen, leuenynghe, or lyghtynnge." ORTUS. "To leyne, or to smyte wylh leuenynghe, casmatisere, fulgore fulminare. A leuenynghe, caema, fulgur, fulmen, fulgetrum, ignis. A leuenynghe smyttynghe, fulgoratus." CATH. ANG. In the Vocabulary, Roy. MS. 17 C. XVII. are given "Fulgor, fulmen, leuenynges, Fulgorat, (it) lewnes." Palsgrave gives the verb it "leueneth as the lyghtenyng dothe, il escle. Dyd you nat se it leuen right nowe?" "Leving, vide lightning." GOULD.M.

<sup>4</sup> Clergy, as it has been remarked in the note, p. 81, signifies erudition, precisely according to the sense of the French clergie; and the word is thus to be understood in the term "benefit of clergy." See Barrington's observations on stat. 4 Hen. VII. The use of the word in this acceptation is, however, a striking evidence of the general ignorance that prevailed amongst all classes, churchmen alone excepted, so that the community might be classed under two great divisions, clerks and "lewed," R. Glouc. p. 471; or "lered and lewed," R. Brunne, p. 8. It is needless to cite instances of the frequent use of the word lewd in its primitive signification by the old writers. <sup>2</sup> Culusus is given only in the Harl. and Winch. MSS. The word is not noticed by Ducange, and possibly is erroneously written for culullus, which, according to Papias, is calix fictilis. "Fidelia, olla vel ciphus, or a cherne." MED. Ang.-Sax. lið, poculum.

<sup>3</sup> "Lentus, slowe and febulle, or lethys, moyste." MED. MS. CANT. "Lentesco, to waxe slowe or lethys, i. tardum esse." ORTUS. Nich. Munshull also gives in his verbale, Harl. MS. 1002, f. 131, "lentesco, to wex lethys." "Lethi" occurs in the Vision of P. Ploughm. 5979, and is explained by Mr. Wright as signifying hateful, but its precise meaning is not obvious. In a Treatise on Obstetrics, of the later part of XVth cent. Add. MS. 12,195, particular instructions are given "at what age a maydyn may vse of drwerry," and it sets forth the evils arising from the anticipation of the age of puberty, "for trewly and sche vs bat deduyt or bat tyme, on of bes ij. thynges, or elles alle schalle falle to her: owder sche xalle be baren, or her brethe schalle haf an yll savore, or sche xalle be to lythy, or lauy of her body to oper han to here hosbunde; but for be ij. fyrt ȝe xalle fynde medysignys here after, and be ij. is vnde curabylle." "Lethe, delyuuer of ones lymmes, souple." PALSG. Lathy is given by Moore as a Suffolk epithet, signifying thin in person. Ang.-Sax. lið, tencr. Compare LYTHR, hereafter.

<sup>4</sup> Leik, Havelok, 2793, and liche, Vision of P. Ploughm. signify a living body, as in line 5599, where Dame Studie is described as "lene of lere, and of liche both;" it is so used likewise in K. Alis. 3482. This is perfectly in accordance with the signification of the Ang.-Sax. etymon lice, corpus, a body, either living or dead. The latter seems, however, to have been the more usual sense of the word. Chaucer, in the Knight's Tale, 2960, speaks of the "liche-wake" at the burning of the corpse of Arcite. In the North the custom of watching the corpse, termed lyke-wake, is not entirely laid aside: see Brockett, v. Lake-wake, and Jamieson, v. Lyk-waik. It is by corruption termed late-wake; Pennant, Tour in Scotl. i. 112. The term is evidently derived from Ang.-Sax. lic, cadaver, and warce, vigilia. A full account of the usages and abuses customary on these occasions will be found in Brand's Popular Antiqu. and Ducange, v. Vigiliae. In the Invent. taken 1421, church of St. John Baptist, Glastonbury, printed by Warner, are mentioned "ij. lyche bells;" in the Invent. of St. Dunstan's, Canterbury, 1500, termed "bells for mortuarys." of Abp. Peckham, 1280, which sets forth the articles to be provided by the parishioners, these bells are designated as “campanæ manuales pro mortuis.” Wilk. Conc. ii. 49. Of the local use of the term lich-gate, signifying the outer gate of the cemetery, beneath which the corpse is placed, whilst awaiting the officiating minister, see the Glossary of Architecture, Cheshire and Shropshire Glossaries. In the West, the path by which the corpse is carried to the grave is known as the leach-way; in Cheshire it is called the lich-road. Coles gives “lich fowles, carcass bird, scritch-owls, night-ravens.”

<sup>2</sup> LEDER, MS. Lither, or lidder, has in the North the signification of idle or sluggish. In the Vis. of P. Ploughman the expression “luther sleuthe” occurs; and “lithere” in King Estmere. One of the evils of the times enumerated in the curious lines, Roy. MS. 7 A. VI. f. 38, b. is that “Lex is layde, and lethryly lukes.” Tusser speaks of the unprofitableness of the “litherly lubber.” Lyndsay uses the word “lidder” in the sense of backward or shy, which approaches more nearly to that assigned to it in the Promptorium. “Desidieus, idle, lazie, lither, slouthfull. Ignave, lazy, lither,” &c. cor. “Lither, fingard, festard, faineant, nice, oisif, paresseux.” SHERW. See Brockett, v. Lither, and Janieson, v. Lidder.

Mony ledron, mony schrewe.*” K. Alis. 3210.

Weber explains the word ledron as signifying here a leper, or any mean person. Skelton uses the word, in the poem entitled Sclaunder, and false detractions.

“*But my learning is of an other degree,
To taunt theim like lyddrons, lewde as they be.*”

“Laideron, somewhat ugly, pretty and foule.” cor. It must, however, be observed that as lidorus has not been found in the Latin glossarists, it cannot be asserted positively that lydraön is to be taken in this sense in the Promptorium.

<sup>4</sup> The term “lithes,” occurring in Havelok, 2163, is explained by Sir F. Madden as signifying the toes, the extreme articulations. In the Grene Knight, 56, the expression "wounded both lim and lighth" is found; and in Syr Gawene and the Carle, 190, "lyme and lythe." The usher of King Arthur's court is described as repulsing Sir Cleges with these discourteous words,

" I schall the bette ebery leth,
Hede and body, wythout greth,
Yf thou make more pressyngē." Sir Cleges, 292.

<sup>4</sup> Compare HETHE, or lynge, fowaly, p. 238. This name of the Calluna vulgaris, Linn. occurs in the Tale of Robin Hood, Hartsh. Metr. T. 189. It is still retained in the North, according to Brockett; but Jamieson states that in Scotland various species of grass growing in mossy ground are called ling. In Arund. MS. 42, f. 23 b. it is said that "in Wiltsire nere Shafteberie, is an heth þat growþ ful of bat (Juniperus femel) and of lynk, and þe lynk is heyere þan bat, and is faste by an heyh wey." "Erica, brya silvestris, sweete-broome, heath, or linge." Junius, by Higgins. Skinner gives ling as the common appellation of heath in Lincolnshire. Moore says that in Suffolk it signifies the turf of heath or heather. Dan. lyng; Isl. ling, frutex, species ericæ.

<sup>1</sup> Lignoul, or lignel, signifies, according to Roquefort, the strong thread used by shoemakers or saddlers. “Lignoul, lignel, shoomaker’s thread, or a tatching end.” cotg. Brocket gives liniel as a word still in use in the North. Compare Lingan and Lingel, which have the like meaning; Jamieson. “Lynzell that souters sowe with, chefgyros, lignier. Lynger to sowe with, poulcier.” PALSG. This term denotes also a thong or strap. “Lingula, a lachet or lingell. Cohum, a thonge or lynzell, wherwith the oxe-bowe and the yoke are bounden together.” ELYOT. “A lignel, lingula, ligula.” GOULD. See Nares.

<sup>2</sup> Forby gives “link, a sausage; we call two together a latch of links. In some counties a far more correct expression is used, a link of sausages.” Links have the same meaning in Suffolk, and Ray speaks of black-puddings, or links, as a term used in the South. See Rops, North C. words. “Andouille, a linke, or chitterling; a big hogs-gut stuffed with small guts, cut into small pieces, and seasoned with pepper and salt. Friuenelles, slender and small chitterlings, or linkes.” cotg.

<sup>3</sup> Compare FRENCE, or lyowre. Tenia. In the third book of the Boke of Curtasye, de Officiis in curiis dominorum, it is said that the garciones, or grooms, were to make pallet beds, and beds for lords,

“ That henget shalle be with hole sylour,
 With crochettes and louyps sett on lyour.” Sloane MS. 1986.

That is, with hooks and eyes sown to the binding of the bed-furniture. In the Household Book of Sir John Howard payments appear, in 1465, to “the bedmaker at London for x.li. lyere for the grete costere, v.s.” for canvas, and making the “costeres.” Househ. Exp. in England, presented to the Roxburgh Club by B. Botfield, Esq. p. 486. In the Wardrobe accounts of Edw. IV. edited by Sir H. Nicolas, a delivery appears in 1480, for the office of the beda, of 55lb. “ corde, and liour for liring and lowping” of certain hangings of arras. See further in the Indexes to those accounts, and the Privy Purse Expenses of Eliz. of York, 1503.

Walsingham relates that the Commons made a rising in the Eastern Counties, in 1380, at the time of Jack Straw's rebellion, their leader in Norfolk being "quodam tinctore de Norwico, cuius nomen erat Johannes Littestere," who called himself King of the Commons, and was beheaded by the Bp. of Norwich: ed. Camd. 263. In the Paston Letters, iii. 424, mention occurs of another Norwich "lyster." The word occurs also in the Towneley Mysteries. At Lynn, where the Promptorium was compiled, the continuation of Broad Street, otherwise Websters Row, is called Lister Gate Street. See Jamieson.

<sup>2</sup> The reader, who occupied the second place in the holy orders of the Church, is probably here intended. In the Vision of P. Ploughman mention is made of "lym-tours and listres;" 2747. Mr. Wright, however, supposes that the word signifies deceivers.

<sup>3</sup> The term "liser" occurs in the Vision of P. Ploughman, 2891, in connection with the "drapiers," or weavers of cloth. "Lisière, the list of cloth, or of stoffe; the edge, or hem of a garment." COR. Palsgrave gives also "Lyste of clothe, lisière. I lyste a garment, or border it rounde aboute with a lyst, ie bende d'une lisière. I haue lysted my cote within to make it laste better, am nat I a good housebande?" Phillipps' MS. Lyth, or bryghtnesse, &c.; and in the Winch. MS. Lyth, Lyȝth, Lyth, Lyhtsum. These irregularities are to be attributed to the second hand, who, writing by ear, vitiated the spelling of the original MS.

<sup>5</sup> A livery denoted whatever was dispensed by the lord to his officials or domestics annually, or at certain seasons; whether money, victuals, or garments. Even in the Saxon times there appears to have been a distribution of this nature, the gafol-hwitel, saga vectigalis, of the Laws of Ina, which was, as Spelman observes, a kind of livery. The term chiefly denoted external marks of distinction, such as the roba festialis, and hemalis, given to the officers and retainers of the Court, as appears by the Wardrobe Book, 28 Edw. I. p. 310, and the Household Ordinances. The practice of distributing such tokens of general adherence to the service or interests of the individual who granted them, for the maintenance of any private quarrel, was carried to an injurious extent during the reigns of Edw. III. and Rich. II. and was forbidden by several statutes, which allowed liveries to be borne only by menials, or the members of gilds, &c. See Stat. of Realm, ii. pp. 3, 74, 93, 156, 167. The "liverée des chaperons," often mentioned in these documents, was an hood or tippet, which, being of a colour strongly contrasted to that of the garment, was a kind of livery much in fashion, and well adapted to serve as a distinctive mark. This, in later times, assumed the form of a round cap, to which was appended the long liripipum, which might be rolled around the head, but more commonly was worn hanging over the arm, and vestiges of it may still be traced in the dress of civic livery-men. The Stat. 7 Henry IV. expressly permits the adoption of such distinctive dress by fraternities, and "les gentz de meastere," the trades of the cities of the realm, being ordained with good intent; and to this prevalent usage Chaucer alludes where he describes five artificers of various callings, who joined the pilgrimage, clothed all "in o liverye of a solempne and grete fraternite." Prol. v. 365. By the same Stat. lords, knights, and esquires were allowed, in time of war, to distinguish their retainers by similar external marks, the prototypes of military uniforms. In the metrical paraphrase of Vegecius, entitled "Of Knyghthode and Batayle," Cott. MS. Titus, A. xxiiii. f. 22, it is said that ancient usage had ordained three kinds of signs in an army, vocal, semivocal, as trumpet or clarion, and a third which is noiseless,

" And mute it hight, or dombe, as is dragoun,
Or th'egil, or th'ymage, or the penoun,
Baner, pensel, plesaunce, or tufte, or creste,
Or lyuereys on shilder, arm, or breste."

In this passage the collar is evidently one of the liveries to which allusion is made. It was much in fashion at the time when the Promptorium was compiled. See COLLER, or lyuerey, p. 87; and the curious dissertations on collars of the royal livery, by Mr. J. G. Nichols, Gent. Mag. 1842. Much information respecting external distinctions, as the original of uniforms, will be found in the Traité des marques nationales, by Benetou de Peyrins. "A lyveray of clothe, liberata; hic et hec liberalalis." CATH. ANG. "Lyueray gyuen of a gentylman, liueret." PALSG. See Douce's Illustr. of Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew, Act IV.

<sup>1</sup> " Corrodium, a lyuerey in a abbaye." MED. Harl. MS. 2257. "A lyveray of mete, corrodium." CATH. ANG. Conredium, corredum, or corrodism, implied generally an alimony or allowance, "præbenda monachi vel canonici." DUC. Thus in the Custumal of Evesham it is directed that for a whole year after the decease of an abbot or monk, his entire "corredum" should be allowed, to be given to the poor, for the good of his soul." Mon. Ang. i. 149. The term "livrere—liueray" occurs in this sense of a daily pittance for food, Amis and Amil. 1640, 1659; in the Household Ordinances the daily allowance of meat and drink received by each individual is commonly termed his livery, and the livery cupboard was the buffet appointed in apartments of greater state to receive this provision at certain times. The term corrody implied also more particularly a kind of pension, either for life or in reversion, with which a monastery was charged, granted by the founder to a kinsman or retainer, or by the house for service rendered, or some valuable consideration. The Sovereign instituted corrodies in favour of royal dependants, and Spelman observes that 119 monasteries, charged with one, and in some cases two such corrodies, were, as it may thence be supposed, of royal foundation. The injurious practice by heads of monasteries, who made traffic in such pensions for their own advantage, was restricted by the Constitutions of the Legate Othoboni, in 1267, which forbade them to sell and charge their establishments with "liberationes seu corrodia," especially when granted in perpetuity. See further the notes of Joh. de Athona, Constit. Legatin. p. 150, ed. 1679; and Ducange, v. Conredium.

The wether was lythe on le." 833; Ritson, Metr. R. ii.

In the Seuyn Sages, 2517, when the caldron, which was discovered boiling with seven "walmes," had been stilled by the directions of Merlin, it is said that the water "bicom faire and liþe." In the sense of soft to the touch lythe is used by Chaucer, Dream, 953; H. of Fame, i. 119. "Lyþth, or sotylle, agilis, levus, efficax." Vocab. Roy. MS. 17 C. xvii. "Lethe, delyuer of ones lymmes, souple. Lythenesse, de-lyuerenesse, souplesse." PALSG. "Mol, soft, supple, tender, lithe, limber." cORG. Bp. Kennett gives lith as used in the North in the sense of soft or flexible; see likewise Craven Dial. and Jamieson. The compound word lith-wake is also used there; Ang.-Sax. liðewac; Glos. AElfr. Jul. A. ii. Bp. Kennett cites Davies' Rites of Durham, 105, where it is related that the body of St. Cuthbert was found uncorrupted, flexible, and "leath-wake;" and remarks "potius lith-wake, a Saz. lið, membrum, et wace, flexibilis. A lith-wake man, a clever, nimble fellow. Durham." Lansd. MS. 1033. Compare Craven Dial. "Lith wayke, flexibilis." CATH. ANG. The word occurs in the Hymn to the Holy Ghost, by W. Herebert; MS. in the possession of Sir Thos. Phillipps.

"Ther oure body is leothe-wok, ȝyf strengthe vrom aboue." Rel. Ant. i. 229.

The verb to lithen, Ang.-Sax. liðian, lenire, is used by Chaucer, Troil. iv. 754; in Arund. MS. 42, f. 42, b. one of the virtues of bardana is stated to be that "it lyþyn nayles þat ben scabbe and sore;" and of "squylle—if it ben etyn with hony, it lyþþ wombe." f. 53, b.

may be preferred, as expressive of the burden conveyed by him. Lodesman generally signifies the leader of a ship,—pilot, as the term is used by Chaucer, Legend of Hippomphile, and by Gower. In the Wardrobe Book 28 Edw. I. p. 273, a payment appears “pro vadis unitus lodmanni conducti pro nave guiana,” apparently bringing supplies to Karlaverok. “Lodesman of a shippe, pilotte.” PALSG. “Lodesman, a guide, perductor.” GOULD. See Jamieson, v. Ledisman. In Stat. 31 Edw. III. c. 2, a fishing vessel is named, termed a “lode ship.”

<sup>2</sup> In the Latin-English Vocabulary, Roy. MS. 17 C. XVII. under Nomina vermium, f. 55, b. is given “Multipes, lugdorre.” Jamieson states that the Lumbricus marinus, Linn. a worm which is dug out of the sand, and used for bait, is called a lug. The name dor denoted a beetle or chafer, but more properly a drone. A.-Sax. dora, fucus.

<sup>3</sup> “Apostaticus, i. perverse, a renegade or a Lollarde. Hereticus, errans in fide, an heretyke, or Lollarde.” ORTUS. “Lollar, heretique.” The sect of Lollards appears to have arisen in Germany as early as 1309, according to Hocsemius, and the rise of Lollardy in this country during the reign of Richard II. was probably due to the influence of his alliance with Anne of Bohemia. Knyghton states that the “Wycliviani, qui et Lollardi dicti sunt,” flourished and increased about 1387; and gives a summary of their peculiar opinions. Ed. Twysden, col. 2706. The derivation of the name has been much discussed; some with Chaucer, Lyndwode, and Fox tracing it to tolium, as comparing them to the darnel among the wheat—others to the name of an early promoter of the heresy. The suggestion, however, of Ducange, that it was taken from Lollaerd, miserator, seems most reasonable. Gower speaks in his Prologue of “this newe secte of Lollardye.”

<sup>1</sup> In the Harl. MS. this word seems to denote only a sudden or boisterous noise; but the King's Coll. MS. gives Dynche, and Pynson's edition Dunchinge, or lunchinge, as signifying tuscio, percussio. In Norfolk, according to Forby, to lunge signifies to lean forward, to throw one's whole weight on anything, to thrust with full force, possibly from the Fr. allonger. Mr. Wilbraham gives lungeous, ill-tempered, disposed to do some bodily harm by a blow or otherwise. Cheshire Glossary. See also Grose; Heref. and Shropshire Glossaries. A violent kick of a horse is termed a lunge. Dunsh, signifying a shove or punch, is a word used in Suffolk and N. Britain. See Moore and Jamieson. Compare Teut. donsen, pugno in dorso percusse; Su. <sup>1</sup> Compare LURCARE, lurco; and see the note on LURDEYNE, p. 317. Verstegan defines a losel to be "one that hath lost, neglected, or cast off his own good, and so is become lewde, and careless of credit and honesty." Names of Contempt, p. 262. Lorel has been derived from Ang.-Sax. leoran, as likewise losel from leosan, perdere. Both occur repeatedly in the Vis. of P. Ploughman; Chaucer, in his version of Boethius, B. i. renders "perditissimum—lorell," and uses the word in the Wife of Bath's Prol. 5855, and Plowman's Tale, ed. Speght, 1601, f. 91. See also Ly beaus disconus, 259, "lorell and kaytf." In Rich. C. de Lion, 1864, 1875, the French King speaks of the English as cowards and "losards." In the Boke of Curtesy, t. Hen. VI. the youth sitting at the table of a great man is admonished thus:

Before no mon of god, for drede." Sloane MS. 1986, p. 21.

Holinshed terms Wat Tyler "a naughtie and lewd loxzell." Chron. iii. 432. Skelton uses the word "losery," and both "lorrell" and "lozell" occur in Spenser, and other later writers. "Lorrell or losell, fetari, loricart." PALEG. "Loricard, a luske, lowt, lorell, slow-backe. Maschefouyn, a chuffe, bore, lobcock, lozell; one that's fitter to feed with cattle, then to converse with men. Vastibousier, a lusk, lubber, loggarhead, lozell, hoiden, lobcock. Aujourd'huy Seigneur, demain singe ord, Prov. To day a goodly lord, to morow an ouglie lozell." CORG. "Lorel, or losell, t. clown; also fraudulent." GOULD.

<sup>2</sup> Tooke considers this word as derived evidently from the past part. of Ang.-Sax. hlisan, celebrare: it is, however, more probable that it was taken from the French, los, los, which seems to be always used in a good sense, whereas the English word signifies either praise or dispraise,—renown on account of vice, as well as of virtue. In the sense of praise it occurs, R. Glouc. p. 189; R. Brunne, p. 25; Vis. of P. Ploughm. 7164; Cant. T. 16, 836; Gower, Conf. Am. In the Tale of Sir Gowgarter, 186, it is said that, in consequence of his outrageous and sacrilegious acts, "his losse sprong ful wide;" see also the tale of the King of Calabria, Sewyn Sage, 1586; and Ritson, Met. Rom. ii. 2. Sir John Maundevile uses the word in the like secondary sense, "je schulle undirstonde that in that time there weren iij. Heroudes of gret name and loos for here crueltee." Voiage, 108. Chaucer uses the expression "name of badde loos," Teat. of Love, i. 278. "Defamo, to mislose. Fama, a loos. Infamia, wikknd loos. Infamis, losud." MED. "Fama, good lose, or fame." ORTUS. Compare FAME, or loos of name, p. 148.

<sup>3</sup> Compare SPANGLE, or losangle (sic). Lorale. In the Ortus Lorale is rendered "a lorynayne, a brydell," but lorum implies any strap or band of leather; and as at the period when the Promptorium was compiled the fashion of attaching pendant ornaments to the girdle and the baldric, the reins and the trappings of horses, was singularly prevalent, it may perhaps be concluded that LOSANGE, or spangle, here denotes these decorations, which were occasionally, but not invariably, of a lozenge form.

This word occurs, Awntyrs of Arthure, vii. 5; it is written "leye" in the Vis. of P. Ploughman, lines 11,783, 11,921. Gower uses "loweth," signifying kindleth. In the Dialect of the North a blaze is called a low, and the verb to low, or flame, is still in use. See Craven Dial.; Brockett, and Jamieson. <sup>2</sup> The received derivation of this term is that suggested by Minsheu, from the French l'ouverte, the open turret or lantern on the roof of an house which permitted the escape of smoke. In the article on dialects in the Quart. Rev. lv. 373, the Icelandic lióri, foramen pinnaculi domus, is proposed as an etymon; the sort of cupola with a trap-door which, in the Northern countries, serves the double purpose of a chimney and a sky-light, is called in Norway liore, in W. Gothland liura. Lodium, a word unnoticed by Ducange, who gives only lucanar in the same sense, is explained in the Ortus as signifying " a louer ; dicitur de lux et do, quasi dans lucem." In the Latin-English Vocab. Roy. MS. 17 C. XVII. are given " Lodium, lucare, impluviare, lowere;" f. 27. " Fumarium, a chymeney or a lovyre. Imbricium, a gotyre, or a lovyre." MED. MS. CANT. <sup>1</sup> LOWNYSHE, ms. lowmysshe, K. B. S. P. The following explanation is given in the Catholicon: "Ab ardeo dicitur hic ardolio, i. leccator, quia ardens est in leccacitate;" the Ortus gives "Ardelio, inquietus; qui mittit se omnibus negotiis, a medler of many matters." "Ardelio, one full of gesture, a busie man, a medler in all matters, a smatterer in all things." MOREL. Jamieson gives loamy, slothful, inactive. "Lome, vetus Holl. tardus, piger." KILIAN. Dan. <sup>3</sup> The verb to lout occurs frequently in the old writers as signifying to bow down, to bend to, or stoop. See Sir F. Madden's Glossary to Gawayn; Syr Tryamoure, 1062; Vis. of P. Ploughman; Cant. T. 14,168, 15,654; Gower, Townl. Myst. p. 18, &c. In the earlier Wicliffite version, Numb. xxii. 31 is thus rendered: "Anoon the Lord openyde the eyen of Balaam, and he lowtide hym redi to the erthe;" in the later version, "worshipide hym lowlin in to erthe." In the Liber Festivalis it is said of the Virgin Mary, "She lyued so cleane and so honestly y' all her felawes called her quene of maydens; and whan ony man spake to her, mekely she lowtyd with her head, and sayd, Deo gracias." Ed. Rouen, 1499, f. 144, b. "I lowte, I gyue reuerence to one, Le me cambre, le tuy fais la reuerence. It is a worlde to se him lowte and knele." PALSG. Ang.-Sax. lutan, inclinare. Compare BOWYN', or lowtyn', p. 46; and BEK, or lowte, p. 29. In the North to bow in the rustic fashion is still termed to lout. See Brockett and Jamieson.

<sup>1</sup> Fabyan, in his Chron. part vi. c. 197, suggests the fanciful etymology of this term, which is likewise given by Boethius, in his Hist. Scot. published in 1526, lib. x. s. 20, and adopted by Verstegan, in his remarks on names of contempt, c. x. namely, that a Dane being quartered as a spy in every family in England, was, from his tyranny, called Lord Dane, "quhilk now tanе for ane ydylly lymmer that seikis his leuyng on other mennis laubouris," as Bellenden expresses it in his version. The immediate derivation is, however, evidently from the French; "Lourdin, lourdayne; blunt, somewhat blockish; a little clownish, lumpish, rude; smelling of the churle, or lobeck." COTG. "Lourdein: idiot, lourdaud, maladroit, sot; en bar Lat. Lurdus." ROQUEF. R. Brunne says that Sibrith, King of Weasex, when driven from his realm, "as a lordan gan lusk;" p. 9. The word occurs in the Vision of P. Ploughman, lines 12,278, 14,302; Townl. Myst. pp. 60, and 308. "A lurdane, ubi a thefe." CATH. ANG. "Lurdayne, lourdavit. It is a goodly syght to se a yonge lourdayne play the lorell (loricarder) on thiſ facyon." PALSG. "A lourdon, or sot, bardus." GOULD. It denotes a vile person, a sot or blockhead, a clownish churl, or a sluggard. Andrew Boorde, in the Breviary of Health, 1573, quaintly observes at the close of his directions regarding fevers, "The 151 chapter doth shew of an euyll feuer the which doth comber yonge persons, named the feuer lurdens," with which many are sore affected now a days, from bad education, or natural habit. In the last case he pronounces it incurable, but offers the following nostrum: "There is nothing so good for the feuer lurdens as angustifolium bacalimum, that is to saye, Take a sticke or wan of a yارد of length and more, and let it be as great as a man's fynger, and with it anoint the backe and the shoulders well morning and euening, and doo this xxj. dayes; and if this fever will not be holpen in that time, let them beware of wagging in the galowes; and whiles they do take their medicine, put no Lubberwort into their potage, and be(w)are of knauering about their heart; and if this will not help, send them to Newgate, for if you wyll not, they wyll bryng them selfe thereth at length." In c. 262 he speaks also of "luskeſnes, brother to the feuer lurdens." See Brockett and Jamieson.

Lutsenborgh, or Luxemburgh, a fact sufficiently evident from the word LVCEMBOR., LVSENBOR., or LVSEBVRGENSIS, forming part of the legend which occurs on many of these pieces. H. Knyghton thus records their importation in 1347 : " Eodem anno deferitur in Angliam per alienigenas et indigenas mercatores falsa moneta quæ lussheturue appellata est; unde apud Londonias multi mercatores et alii plures tracti sunt et suspensi, et quidam magno precio vitam redemerunt." Chron. Cott. MSS. Claud. E. III. f. 253 ; Tib. C. VII. f. 152, v°. In the margin is written " moneta loysburues." It appears by the Rolls of Parliament, vol. ii. 160, that early in that year (20 Edw. III.) a petition had been presented by the Commons, which set forth that merchants and others exported the good sterling coin, and " de jour en autre reportent diverses fausses monoies appellez Lusshbourues, dont la libre poët estre achate par dela pur oyt souldz, ou pur meyns," with which the country was filled. The King's pleasure was that such offenders should be judged according to law, as " fauſe moneouſe." In the year following the Commons again petitioned " pur ce qe la fauſe monoie de Lusshbourues encrest de jour en autre," an evil attributed to the infrequency and short duration of the sittings of the judges of assize, praying for " plus aspre remedie." Rolls of Parl. ii. 167. In 1351 these false sterlings are again mentioned in the petition that declaration should be made by the King as to what offences should be adjudged treason, of which one was the importation of false coin, " sicome la monoie appelle Lusseburghe," or other resembling the coin of the realm, as fully declared in the Stat. 25 Edw. III. c. 2, where the word is written " Lucynburgh." Compare Rolls of Parl. ii. 239, and Stat. of Realm, i. 320. These fallacious monies are named in the Vision of P. Ploughman, which was composed, as it is conjectured, about 1362.

And yet loketh he lik a sterlyng,
The merk of that monee is good,
Ac the metal is feble." v. 10,322.

In the Cant. Tales, which, according to Tyrwhitt, were written subsequently to 1382, allusion occurs to " Lusheburghes." as coins of base alloy ; Monks Tale, v. 13,968 : as likewise in Piers of Fulham, p. 128, ed. Hartshorne,

" No lusshborues, but money of fyne assay."

It must be observed, that in Twysden's edition of Knyghton, as likewise in the printed text of the Rolls of Parliament, the term has been given as Lussheburne, apparently in consequence of its origin having been forgotten ; it seems, however, evident that the true reading should be Lussheburue, which is merely a variation from Lussheburwe, or Lucyngburgh. See further on this subject Ruding, i. 922 ; Snelling's Plates of counterfeit Sterlings, and the Blätter für Münzkunde, 1839. The import of the word Papirus in relation to base coin is obscure. It is found in the Winchester MS. only. The coins of the Byzantine emperors, called perpari, and the Italian paparini, were monies of considerable value, but there was a base coinage in France during the XIVth cent. of pieces of bad alloy, called parpilloles. See Charpentier.

Page 5, b. line 26, for A-cethēn, read A-cethe. The word is written in the Harl. MS. a-cethē, but it would appear that the final contraction must be regarded as an error of the transcript. In the Winchester MS. it is written a-cethe. Compare Ful-fillyn', or make a-cethe in thynḡ þat wantythe, p. 182; and Make a-ceethe.

Page 73, a. line 8 ; the reading of the MS. as here printed seems very questionable. Compare Fretyn', or chervyn', p. 179. The Winchester MS., however, agrees here with the Harl. MS., and gives Cherwyn', or tetyn'.
