

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

THE BOOK OF P S A L M S.

PSALM I.

BLESSED is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful.

² But his delight is in the law of the LORD; ³ and in his law doth he meditate day and night.

³ Josh. 1. 8. Psal. 119. 1.

⁴ The ungodly are not so: but are 'like the chaff which the wind driveth away.

⁶ Psal. 35. 5. Isa. 17. 13.

PSALMS.—In the original, the title of this book is סֵפֶר תְּהִלִּים sepher tehillim, "the book of praises," or "hymns." In the common editions of the Septuagint it is simply entitled ΨΑΛΜΟΙ, "Psalms," while the Alexandrian manuscript in the British Museum has ΨΑΛΤΗΡΙΟΝ ΜΕΤ' ΩΔΑΙΣ, "the Psalter with Odes or Hymns;" these odes being the poetical effusions dispersed through the Old and New Testaments. The Syriac version entitles it, "The Book of Psalms of David, the King and Prophet;" and the Arabic has, "The Book of Psalms of David the Prophet, king of the sons of Israel."—In a general sense the Psalms are ascribed to David, because he was the author of a greater proportion of them than any other individual. Some indeed have thought him the author of the whole number, and conclude that those which are said, in the title, to be Psalms of Asaph, or of Heman, &c., should be rendered, "to Asaph"—"to Heman," &c.; and only denote that the Psalms were delivered to them to be publicly sung. There is plain internal evidence that this must be wrong. It is highly probable that some were written in the time of Moses, and it is certain that others are so late as the Captivity. They may therefore be taken to extend over a period of about one thousand years; without believing, with some, that the oldest are as early as Adam, or, with others, that the latest are as late as the Maccabees. The present titles ascribe seventy-one of the Psalms to David; and the Septuagint gives him eleven others. It is probable that many of these are erroneously assigned to him; while it is still more probable that many of those to which no names are prefixed are of his composition. We shall not however enlarge on the authorship of the respective Psalms, intending, as we proceed, to make such observations on the subject as may seem necessary. It will be understood, where we say nothing as to the authorship of particular Psalms, that they are usually attributed to David on grounds which appear the most satisfactory that can be obtained.

By whom the book was compiled in its present form, is another question which has raised some discussion. Some of the Rabbins hold that this was the work of David, and seem to deny him any other share in the book than that of collecting into one volume the sacred songs of his predecessors and contemporaries. But this is too absurd to need refutation. Neither do we think that there is any foundation for the opinion which ascribes the compilation to Ezra. But there seems no objection to combine the two statements and infer that David did form a collection, for the sacred service, of the Psalms written by himself, and others that were composed in and before his own time. This formed, probably, the psalm book that was used in the services of the first Temple: and to which was afterwards added, most probably by Ezra, such divine songs as had since been written, down to the time of the return of the Jews from captivity and the foundation of the second Temple.

Verse 3. "A tree planted by the rivers of water."—Here is a beautiful comparison, derived from the contrast, often exhibited in the East, between the exuberant production near the rivers and water-courses, and the desolation and nakedness of places destitute of natural or artificial irrigation. Often, while traversing plains perfectly destitute of tree, shrub, or bush of any kind, have we been able to trace for miles the course of a distant stream by the thick and tall growth of trees and underwood upon its banks. Indeed, to perceive this was to feel assured of the presence of the water that could not be seen. The scenery of Asia, generally speaking, is a continual alternation of such marked contrasts. The soil is thronged with vegetation wherever water can be found; while, beyond the extent in which the streams, usually few and distant, can be made to operate, there is only a "waste, howling wilderness."—As a suitable illustration of this we have introduced a cut of one of the streams of Lebanon—the Nahr Quades, or "Holy River," showing the rich and crowded vegetation which its valley exhibits.

HOLY RIVER (NAHR QUADES), LEBANON.—FROM CASSAS.

4. "Like the chaff which the wind driveth away."—Here is a reference to the process of winnowing corn. When it had been threshed, or rather, crushed and trodden, in the open threshing floor, it was thrown out, altogether, into the middle of the floor; it was then tossed up into the wind, which removed the broken straw and the chaff, while the grain, the unthreshed ears, and clods of earth with grain adhering to them, fell in a separate heap. The earth and other impurities were then removed from the grain by means of a sieve; and the winnowed heap containing many ears that were broken, but not fully crushed out, was exposed again to the threshing operation. This was again thrown across the wind by a shovel (מִזְרֶה mizreh, rendered "fan" in our version of Isaiah xxx. 24.), when the pure grain fell to the ground and the light chaff was borne away by the wind, as the psalmist here describes. The scattered straw, so far as required for the fodder of cattle and the making of bricks, was collected for use; but the light chaff of the second winnowing was left in the ground entangled with the stubble (the threshing-floor being in the harvest-field), with which it was burnt in the ground to help to manure the soil. It therefore furnished a fit symbol of the destruction of the wicked. These winnowing processes are still followed in the East; and, as far as appears by their paintings, are much the same as were practised by the ancient Egyptians.

PSALM II.

1 The kingdom of Christ. 10 Kings are exhorted to accept it.

WHY 'do the heathen 'rage, and the people 'imagine a vain thing?

2 The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the LORD, and against his anointed, saying,

3 Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us.

4 'He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the LORD shall have them in derision.

5 Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and 'vex them in his sore displeasure.

6 Yet have I 'set my king 'upon my holy hill of Zion.

7 I will declare 'the decree: the LORD hath said unto me, 'Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee.

8 'Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession.

9 'Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel.

10 Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth.

11 Serve the LORD with fear, and rejoice with trembling.

12 Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. 'Blessed are all they that put their trust in him.

⁷ Heb. upon Zion, the hill of my holiness. ⁸ Or, for a decree. ⁹ Acts 13. 33. Heb. 1. 5. ¹⁰ Psal. 72. 8. ¹¹ Revel. 2. 27. and 19. 15.
¹² Prov. 16. 20. Isa. 30. 18. Jer. 17. 7. Rom. 9. 33. and 10. 11. 1 Pet. 2. 6.

PSALM II.—This Psalm is supposed to have been written when the nations subdued by David were meditating a revolt, or had already revolted. Its reference, by application, to the Messiah, is admitted by the Jews.

Verse 12. "Kiss the Son."—This is doubtless to be understood as an act of homage and reverence. There are few acts bearing more diversified and contrasted significations than the kiss. It denotes as well the tenderest affection as the most profound and even adoring reverence. As an act of homage it needs little explanation, since it is still our own custom to express homage by kissing the monarch's hand. It was also so far a mark of general respect among our fathers, that for one person to say in a letter or message, that he "kissed the hands" of another, was a formula for expressing his respect for that person, and was of equivalent import with the expressions of servitude and obedience with which communications to superiors are now usually attended. See the note to 1 Sam. x. 1.

PSALM III.

The security of God's protection.

A Psalm of David, 'when he fled from Absalom his son.

LORD, how are they increased that trouble me? many are they that rise up against me.

2 Many there be which say of my soul, There is no help for him in God. Selah.

3 But thou, O LORD, art a shield 'for me; my glory, and the lifter up of mine head.

4 I cried unto the LORD with my voice, and he heard me out of his holy hill. Selah.

5 'I laid me down and slept; I awaked; for the LORD sustained me.

6 'I will not be afraid of ten thousands of people, that have set themselves against me round about.

7 Arise, O LORD; save me, O my God: for thou hast smitten all mine enemies upon the cheek bone; thou hast broken the teeth of the ungodly.

Verse 2. "Selah."—This is evidently a musical term, occurring only in the Psalms and in Habakkuk iii. Its meaning has been a subject of much dispute. It usually occurs at the end of a period or strophe; but sometimes at the end only of a clause. Gesenius (in ללה) observes, that in explaining a word of so much difficulty, it is undoubtedly safest to follow the usus loquendi of the Hebrew dialect: and therefore he seems disposed to concur in the explanation of the learned rabbi Kimchi, who derives the word from ללה salah, "to raise up, or elevate," which would make it signify an elevation of the voice; and so, perhaps, be a sign for changing the key, or for repeating the same tune some notes higher. Not very different from this is the interpretation usually given to the word διαψαλμα, diapsalma, which is explained to mean a variation in singing and melody, to correspond perhaps with a transition from one subject to another or sentiment in the words; or to be a musical sign for a bold symphony, intimating that the singers should raise their voices, and that all the instruments should sound along with them in one grand chorus. (See Ewing in Διάψαλμα.) The Chaldee Paraphrast renders it by "for ever," understanding probably with Jerome, that "Selah" connected what followed with that which went before, and further expresses that the words to which it is affixed are of eternal moment—not applicable to any particular person, or temporary circumstances, but ought to be remembered by all men and for ever. Aben Ezra says that it is like the conclusion of a prayer, answering nearly to "Amen;" and that the Jews, in this sense, usually put it at the end of their books and epitaphs. Fenwick, followed by Parkhurst and others, hold that the word is intended to direct particular attention to the passage, as: N.B., attend to, or mind this. Dr. Wall is of opinion that it is a note directing that the last words to which it is added should be repeated by the chorus; and observes that it is always put after some remarkable or pathetic clause. Meibomius also thinks it means "a repeat," and is equivalent to the Italian Da Capo. Some conclude that it directed the time of the music, and was perhaps equivalent to our word "slow," or, according to some of our provincial dialects, "slaw," which in a rapid pronunciation might easily be taken for Selah. Calmet thinks the word was sometimes put in the margin of the Hebrew psalters, to indicate that a musical pause was to be made and that the tune was ended: and this is also the opinion which Dr. Burney deduces from the "diapsalma" of the Septuagint. Rosenmüller, after detailing the opinions of others, decides to prefer that which supposes that the word Selah indicates a rest, or pause, for the vocal performers, and that the musical instruments only were to be heard.—These are the principal opinions, and from their diversity we may probably conclude that Selah is a musical direction, the meaning of which is altogether lost. (See Calmet's 'Dissertation sur ces deux termes Hébreux, Lâmnatseach et Sela;' and Fenwick, Dodd, and Hewlett, in loc.)

7. "Cheek bone . . . teeth."—The allusion is here, probably, to the condition of a beast of prey which is completely disabled from taking and devouring its prey by having the jaws and teeth broken. (See the note on Job xix. 20.) However, the breaking of the jaws and knocking out of the teeth were common circumstances in ancient warfare, in which the opposing parties were much accustomed to fling stones at one another's heads.

PSALM IV.

1 David prayeth for audience. 2 He reproveth and exhorteth his enemies. 6 Man's happiness is in God's favour.

To the 'chief Musician on Neginoth, A Psalm of David.

HEAR me when I call, O God of my righteousness: thou hast enlarged me when I was in distress; ¹have mercy upon me, and hear my prayer.

2 O ye sons of men, how long will ye turn my glory into shame? how long will ye love vanity, and seek after leasing? Selah.

3 But know that the LORD hath set apart him that is godly for himself:

the LORD will hear when I call unto him.

4 Stand in awe, and sin not: commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still. Selah.

5 Offer ²the sacrifices of righteousness, and put your trust in the LORD.

6 There be many that say, Who will shew us any good? LORD, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us.

7 Thou hast put gladness in my heart, more than in the time that their corn and their wine increased.

8 ³I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou, LORD, only makest me dwell in safety.

³ Psal. 50. 14, and 51. 19.

⁴ Psal. 3. 5.

TITLE. "To the chief Musician."—The word thus rendered (למנצח lumnatseach) has not passed without discussion. The general opinion, which our translators followed, seems to be well authorised in rendering "chief musician." Whenever the word occurs historically, with a reference to persons, it denotes those who have the superintendence or oversight, whether of works or workmen; and hence, in the general sense, an "overseer." So when it thus occurs, as prefixed to a psalm, it is not easy to suppose it can allow of any other reference than to the president or leader of a band of singers or musicians. The Septuagint, and after it the Vulgate, regards it as without a personal application, and renders it by "for ever;" understanding it to denote a psalm which deserved to be sung eternally, and to be ever in the mouth of God's servants. The Chaldee has, "for praise," seemingly under a similar impression. The Jews themselves are not agreed about it; but the majority concur with our version. The old Greek interpreters differ also; but in general they suppose it to denote the psalm to be one of victory. One very good reason for adhering to our own version is, that on examining the numerous psalms which are thus inscribed, they have by no means that uniformity of subject or general purport which a characterizing title would seem to require. The reader who wishes to look further into this, may consult Calmet's 'Dissertation sur ces deux termes Hébreux, Lámnatseach et Séla.'

"Neginoth."—This word (נְגִינוֹת), which occurs in the titles of seven psalms, has occasioned some discussion. The Septuagint and the Vulgate render it by "song." (Sept. ὕμνος, ψαλμός. Vulg. carmen, canticum.) The verb from which the noun is derived implies "to play upon a stringed instrument," whence it is concluded that the plural noun in the titles of the psalms, denotes such stringed instruments. What they were we do not know; but under this view Neginoth may possibly be a general word for all the stringed instruments then in use. Wherever the word does occur as a noun, however, other than in the titles of the psalms, the context determines that it must mean songs (as in Job xxx. 9: Lam. iii. 14), and probably such songs as were intended for the accompaniment of stringed instruments. The difference is therefore not greater than whether stringed instruments, or songs or music intended for stringed instruments, be denoted by the word Neginoth.

PSALM V.

1 David prayeth, and professeth his study in prayer. 4 God favoureth not the wicked. 7 David, professing his faith, prayeth unto God to guide him, 10 to destroy his enemies, 11 and to preserve the godly.

To the chief Musician upon Nehiloth, A Psalm of David.

3 ¹My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O LORD; in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up.

4 For thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness: neither shall evil dwell with thee.

5 The foolish shall not stand ²in thy sight: thou hatest all workers of iniquity.

6 Thou shalt destroy them that speak leasing: the LORD will abhor ³the bloody and deceitful man.

7 But as for me, I will come into thy house in the multitude of thy mercy; and in thy fear will I worship toward thy holy temple.

8 Lead me, O LORD, in thy righteousness because of ⁴mine enemies; make thy way straight before my face.

9 For there is no ⁵'faithfulness' in their mouth; their inward part is ⁶'very wickedness'; ⁷'their throat is an open sepulchre'; they flatter with their tongue.

10 ⁸Destroy thou them, O God; let them fall ⁹'by their own counsels'; cast them out in the multitude of their transgressions; for they have rebelled against thee.

11 But let all those that put their trust in thee rejoice: let them ever shout for joy, because ¹⁰thou defendest them: let them also that love thy name be joyful in thee.

TITLE. "Nehiloth."—The word is נְחִילוֹת, and its obvious derivation from חָלַל chalal, "to bore through," whence חָלִיל chalil, "a pipe," would suggest that wind instruments are here meant. We do not feel it necessary to inquire, with some writers, whether flutes or bagpipes be intended. We may suppose it a general term for all the softer sorts of wind instruments, if not for all sorts. The Septuagint, Vulgate, and other ancient versions, however, find the root in נָחַל nachal, "to inherit," and render, with some variation of phrase, "For that which (or she who) obtained (or obtains, or shall obtain) the inheritance." The Arabic has simply, "Concerning the inheritance." The Targum, however, renders the title, both of this and the preceding psalm, "To sing upon the dances a song of David;" while Aben Ezra understands this word, as he does neginoth, to denote some old and well-known melody, to which this psalm was to be played. On this see further in the note to Ps. xvi.

⁵ Or, every night.

TITLE, "Sheminith."—Literally, "the eighth." In 1 Chron. xv. 21, the word occurs in connection with harps, whence it is commonly thought to denote an eight-stringed harp. Of this, however, our translators appear to have been doubtful, for they introduce the original word untranslated, "With harps on the Sheminith to excel." If we took this explanation, we should suppose that the person to whom this is addressed, was he who, in the great division of Neginoth, or stringed instruments, had particular charge of the eight-stringed harps. But of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks?

6 I am weary with my groaning; 'all the night make I my bed to swim; I water my couch with my tears.

7 Mine eye is consumed because of grief; it waxeth old because of all mine enemies.

8 'Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity; for the LORD hath heard the voice of my weeping.

9 The LORD hath heard my supplication; the LORD will receive my prayer.

10 Let all mine enemies be ashamed and sore vexed; let them return and be ashamed suddenly.

we do not see any satisfactory evidence from the text in Chronicles that any musical instrument is intended. Calmet thinks that it denotes the eighth band of musicians; and as, in that case, this band consisted of harpers, the present psalm would, on this ground, be addressed to the chief of the harpers. Gesenius thinks that the word is a musical term, denoting a particular tone; adding, "From 1 Chron. xv. 21, it appears to have been the lowest of the three parts or voices; according to Forkel, the fundamental base, sung by men."

PSALM VII.

1 David prayeth against the malice of his enemies, professing his innocency. 10 By faith he seeth his defence, and the destruction of his enemies.

Shiggaion of David, which he sang unto the LORD, concerning the 'words of Cush the Benjamite.

O LORD my God, in thee do I put my trust: save me from all them that persecute me, and deliver me:

2 Lest he tear my soul like a lion, rending it in pieces, while there is 'none to deliver.

3 O LORD my God, if I have done this; if there be iniquity in my hands;

4 If I have rewarded evil unto him that was at peace with me; (yea, I have delivered him that without cause is mine enemy:)

5 Let the enemy persecute my soul, and take it; yea, let him tread down my life upon the earth, and lay mine honour in the dust. Selah.

6 Arise, O LORD, in thine anger, lift up thyself because of the rage of mine enemies:

and awake for me to the judgment that thou hast commanded.

7 So shall the congregation of the people compass thee about: for their sakes therefore return thou on high.

8 The LORD shall judge the people: judge me, O LORD, 'according to my righteousness, and according to mine integrity that is in me.

9 Oh let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end; but establish the just: 'for the righteous God trieth the hearts and reins.

10 'My defence is of God, which saveth the upright in heart.

11 'God judgeth the righteous, and God is angry with the wicked every day.

⁹ Psal. 19. 15, and 10. 2. Prov. 5. 22.

TITLE, "Shiggaion."—This word (שִׁגְגִּיּוֹן) is very difficult to explain. The Septuagint has simply, "Psalm of David," and so the Vulgate. That the term refers to the psalm itself, and not to any instrument or other circumstance, is evident from what follows, "which he sang unto the Lord." The word שִׁגְגָה shagah, from which it is usually derived, means "to err or wander;" but how this sense is to be introduced has puzzled the commentators. Some apply the error or wandering to David's conduct, and read, "for the sin (or ignorance) of David;" others call it "a wandering song" with respect to its metre, and others with a reference to the supposed circumstances under which it may have been written, when David wandered from one place to another to avoid the persecution of Saul. Calmet, however, as well as Kennicot, Rosenmüller, Geddes, and others, derive the word from an Arabic word signifying sadness, distress, and therefore consider the word Shiggaion as equivalent to an elegy or lamentation.

"Cush the Benjamite."—We read of no person of this name in the history of David; but there were two Benjamites, Saul and Shimei, from whom David received very injurious treatment. One of these persons is therefore generally supposed to be referred to. If so, the probability would seem to be that Saul is intended, as his father's name was Kish (כִּישׁ), a name not very different from Cush (כּוּשׁ), and then the "words" of which David complains may be those found in 1 Sam. xxii. 7, 8, which Saul addressed to his officers, and which resulted in the massacre of the priests for having relieved David. It is possible, however, that Cush is here not a proper name, but an epithet, black, which in all ages expresses moral turpitude when transferred to the mind. It would then remain uncertain whether Saul, Shimei, or some other Benjamite be intended.

Verse 15. "He made a pit, and digged it."—The practice of making pitfalls was anciently not only employed for ensnaring wild beasts, but was also a stratagem used against men—the enemy—in time of war. The idea therefore refers to a man who having made such a pit, whether for man or beast, and covered it over so as completely to disguise the danger, did himself inadvertently tread on his own trap, and fall into the pit he had prepared for another.

PSALM VIII.

God's glory is magnified by his works, and by his love to man.

To the chief Musician upon Gittith, A Psalm of David.

O LORD our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! who hast set thy glory above the heavens.

2 'Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou 'ordained strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger.

3 When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained;

4 'What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?

5 For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honour.

6 Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; 'thou hast put all things under his feet:

7 'All sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field;

8 The fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas.

⁵ Heb. Flocks and oxen all of them.

TITLE, "Gittith."—This word is usually derived from גִּתְּיָה Gath, but variously explained. In the first place, the word Gath is the name of one of the Philistine cities; and it is therefore supposed by some that the word denotes that the psalm was to be played upon some instrument which had been invented or made at Gath, and which had from thence been introduced among the Hebrews. So the Targum Paraphrase, "upon the harp which was brought from Gath." But others suppose that the psalm was composed while David was at Gath, and has hence its title. Then again, gath signifies a "wine-press;" and hence the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Ethiopic render, "for the wine-presses," supposing, perhaps, that it was composed to be sung at the feast of tabernacles when the vintage was just got in; or indeed, if this idea be followed out, why might it not have been sung by the treading of the grapes? for that they did sing as they trod in the wine-press we know.

Verse 6. "All things under his feet."—This allusion is taken from the custom of setting the foot upon a conquered enemy—implying the most humble subjection of the latter, and the most complete and triumphant superiority of the former. We have already illustrated this custom. The allusion to it is almost everywhere preserved in popular language, in which the oppressed are said to be trodden under feet, and so on. In the East, it is used however less to denote oppression than in acknowledging or claiming a proper superiority or subjection.

Mr. Roberts illustrates this from the popular phraseology of the Hindoos. "The worshippers of the gods often say in their devotions: 'We put your feet upon our heads.' 'Truly the feet of Siva are upon my head.' 'My gooroo, my gooroo, have I not put your feet upon my head?' 'My lord, believe not that man; your feet have always been upon my head.' 'Ah! what a mighty king was he; all things were under his feet.'"

PSALM IX.

1 David praiseth God for executing of judgment. 11 He inciteth others to praise him. 13 He prayeth that he may have cause to praise him.

To the chief Musician upon Muth-labben, A Psalm of David.

I WILL praise thee, O LORD, with my whole heart; I will shew forth all thy marvellous works.

2 I will be glad and rejoice in thee: I will sing praise to thy name, O thou most High.

3 When mine enemies are turned back, they shall fall and perish at thy presence.

4 For 'thou hast maintained my right and my cause; thou satest in the throne judging 'right.

5 Thou hast rebuked the heathen, thou hast destroyed the wicked, thou hast put out their name for ever and ever.

6 'O thou enemy, destructions are come to a perpetual end: and thou hast destroyed cities; their memorial is perished with them.

7 But the LORD shall endure for ever: he hath prepared his throne for judgment.

8 And 'he shall judge the world in righteousness, he shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness.

9 'The LORD also will be 'a refuge for the oppressed, a refuge in times of trouble.

10 And they that know thy name will put their trust in thee: for thou, LORD, hast not forsaken them that seek thee.

11 Sing praises to the LORD, which dwelleth in Zion: declare among the people his doings.

12 'When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them: he forgetteth not the cry of the 'humble.

13 Have mercy upon me, O LORD; consider my trouble which I suffer of them that hate me, thou that liftest me up from the gates of death:

14 That I may shew forth all thy praise in the gates of the daughter of Zion: I will rejoice in thy salvation.

15 'The heathen are sunk down in the pit that they made: in the net which they hid is their own foot taken.

16 The LORD is known by the judgment which he executeth: the wicked is snared in the work of his own hands. Higgaion. Selah.

17 The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God.

18 For the needy shall not alway be forgotten: the expectation of the poor shall not perish for ever.

19 Arise, O LORD; let not man prevail: let the heathen be judged in thy sight.

20 Put them in fear, O LORD: that the nations may know themselves to be but men. Selah.

TITLE, "Upon Muth-labben."—These words have been very variously read. They are על מות לבן al muth labben as read by our translators. But as the first two words occur as one word in the title to Ps. xlv., and as a great number of manuscripts and editions have them as one here, we will take them to be so understood. Then עלמות almuth, as the plural of עלמה almah, denotes "damsels" or "virgins," and may be supposed to refer to a company or choir of female singers or musicians; then the word לבן la-ben, meaning in the obvious signification, "with a youth," we seem to arrive at the signification that the words indicate the musical performers of the psalm, and that it was intended to be sung or performed by a chorus of damsels, to whom the youths answered in alternate responses. The frequent changes of person in this psalm favour the conclusion that it is of this responsive kind. Calmet, however, who concedes that almuth refers to a band of maidens, conceives that la-ben means "to Ben;" for Ben happens to be the name of one of the chief musicians enumerated in 1 Chron. xv. 18; and finding him to be thus associated with the almuth, he may be concluded to have been the superintendent or director of the performances of the female choir. These two seem the best alternatives; and we scarcely know which of them to consider preferable.

PSALM X.

1 David complaineth to God of the outrage of the wicked.
 12 He prayeth for remedy. 16 He professeth his confidence.

WHY standest thou afar off, O LORD? why hidest thou thyself in times of trouble?

2 The wicked in his pride doth persecute the poor: let them be taken in the devices that they have imagined.

3 For the wicked boasteth of his heart's desire, and blesseth the covetous, whom the LORD abhorreth.

4 The wicked, through the pride of his countenance, will not seek after God: God is not in all his thoughts.

5 His ways are always grievous; thy judgments are far above out of his sight: as for all his enemies, he puffeth at them.

6 He hath said in his heart, I shall not be moved: for I shall never be in adversity.

7 His mouth is full of cursing and deceit and fraud: under his tongue is mischief and vanity.

8 He sitteth in the lurking places of the villages: in the secret places doth he murder the innocent: his eyes are privily set against the poor.

9 He lieth in wait secretly as a lion in his den: he lieth in wait to catch the poor: he doth catch the poor, when he draweth him into his net.

10 He croucheth, and humbleth himself, that the poor may fall by his strong ones.

11 He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten: he hideth his face; he will never see it.

12 Arise, O LORD; O God, lift up thine hand: forget not the humble.

13 Wherefore doth the wicked contemn God? he hath said in his heart, Thou wilt not require it.

14 Thou hast seen it; for thou beholdest mischief and spite, to requite it with thy hand: the poor committeth himself unto thee; thou art the helper of the fatherless.

15 Break thou the arm of the wicked and the evil man: seek out his wickedness till thou find none.

16 The LORD is King for ever and ever: the heathen are perished out of his land.

17 LORD, thou hast heard the desire of the humble: thou wilt prepare their heart, thou wilt cause thine ear to hear:

PSALM X.—This psalm is joined to and a continuation of the preceding in the Septuagint and Vulgate versions and those by which they are followed. Hence in these versions the numeration of the psalms differs from ours; for psalms ix. and x. being united, their account is one number below ours on to cxiv. and cxv., which also are united. This would put their enumeration two figures below ours; but, immediately after, the Psalm cxvi. is divided into two, which restores the original difference of one only: and at last all difference is removed and the number of psalms equalized by the division of Psalm cxlvii. into two. Our version follows the original Hebrew. It is possible that the present psalm was originally joined to the preceding, on account of its having no title, and that the present division is correct. If so, it is not known when, or by whom it was written. The Jews indeed have a rule, that when we come to a psalm that has no title, or any number of such psalms, we are to go on ascribing them to the author of the last preceding psalm that had a title. This rule will however by no means hold good, as we shall have occasion to show when we come to the psalms ascribed to Moses. Many however conclude that the present psalm was written by David, perhaps during the persecutions of Saul, although Calmet and others incline to assign it to the captives at Babylon, or to the period between the Assyrian and Babylonian captivities.

Verse 5. "He puffeth at them."—Puffing is in the East an expression of supreme contempt. Indeed, such terms as "poh," "pshaw," "pish," and so on, are but modifications of the same meaning, softened by articulation. The Persians say "Poof!" as an expression of contempt.

PSALM XI.

1 David encourageth himself in God against his enemies. 4 The providence and justice of God.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

IN the LORD put I my trust: how say ye to my soul, Flee as a bird to your mountain?

2 For, lo, the wicked bend their bow, they make ready their arrow upon the string, that they may 'privily shoot at the upright in heart.

3 If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?

4 ²The LORD is in his holy temple, the LORD's throne is in heaven: his eyes behold, his eyelids try, the children of men.

5 The LORD trieth the righteous: but the wicked and him that loveth violence his soul hateth.

6 Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and ³an horrible tempest: this shall be the portion of their cup.

7 For the righteous LORD loveth righteousness; his countenance doth behold the upright.

PSALM XI.—David is generally supposed to have written this Psalm during the persecutions of Saul—probably when his friends advised him to seek for refuge in the mountains of Judah, as he did ultimately. The three first verses seem to contain the advice, and the remainder David's reply.

Verse 4.—“His eyes behold, his eyelids try.”—This reference to the eyelids, or rather “eyebrows,” is very striking when we recollect that the eyebrows are sensibly affected and visibly exerted when we regard any object earnestly. In Homer and other ancient poets there are many fine allusions to the action of the eyebrows.

PSALM XII.

1 David, destitute of human comfort, craveth help of God.

3 He comforteth himself with God's judgments on the wicked, and confidence in God's tried promises.

To the chief Musician 'upon Sheminith, A Psalm of David.

²Help, LORD; for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men.

PSALM XIII.

1 David complaineth of delay in help. 3 He prayeth for preventing grace. 5 He boasteth of divine mercy.

To the 'chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

How long wilt thou forget me, O LORD? for ever? how long wilt thou hide thy face from me?

2 How long shall I take counsel in my soul, having sorrow in my heart daily? how long shall mine enemy be exalted over me?

3 Consider and hear me, O LORD my God: lighten mine eyes, lest I sleep the sleep of death;

4 Lest mine enemy say, I have prevailed against him; and those that trouble me rejoice when I am moved.

PSALM XIV.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE 'fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. They are corrupt, they have done abominable works, there is none that doeth good.

PSALM XIV.—This Psalm is usually supposed to have been composed by David, on the revolt of Absalom. Theodoret supposes it refers to the invasion of Judea by Sennacherib, with the blasphemy and menaces of Rabshakeh. Calmet, Mudge, and others, think it belongs to the captivity in Babylon; and the latter infers, from verses 4 and 5, that it arose from a particular incident, when the heathen, in the midst of impious carousals, were thrown into some great terror. This might refer to the impious feast of Belshazzar when the sacred utensils were profaned, probably in studied insult to the God of Israel; and where the appearance of the handwriting on the wall filled them with alarm and consternation. There is however, altogether, something very uncertain in these conjectural appropriations of particular Psalms.

Verse 4. "Eat up my people as they eat bread."—"That vile king eats the people as he does his rice," is adduced, by Mr. Roberts, as a parallel expression, in use among the Hindoos.

PSALM XV.

David describeth a citizen of Zion.

A Psalm of David.

nor doeth evil to his neighbour, nor 'taketh up a reproach against his neighbour.

4 In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoureth them that fear the LORD. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not.

5 'He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved.

PSALM XV.—Most commentators conceive that this Psalm was composed by David when the ark was brought to Mount Zion. The conclusion, however, "He that doeth these things shall never be moved"—that is, probably, never removed or expelled from his native land—would rather suggest that it was composed after the ten tribes had been carried away by Shalmaneser, if not during the Babylonian Captivity. Calmet is of this opinion; but he attributes a far greater number of the Psalms to the Captivity than perhaps most readers would be willing to admit.

TITLE, "Michtam."—Besides the present Psalm, this title is prefixed to five others; namely, lvi.—lx. The word (מִכְתָּם) is rendered στήλογραφία, "inscription upon a column," by the Septuagint; probably understanding such a pillar as conquerors were wont to erect, or else to indicate that it deserved to be inscribed in characters more than usually durable. The Targum also renders, "a right engraving." The word michtam seems to be equivalent to mithchab (מִתְחָב) by the commutation of מ and ב at the end; and hence to mean "a writing," or, by way of eminence, "a song." Many, however, derive the word from כְּתֹם (chelem), "gold;" and hence understand the Psalms distinguished by this title to be called "golden psalms," by way of eminence. But this, though better than some other conjectures that have been proposed, seems rather forced; for, as Gesenius observes, "כְּתֹם is barely a poetical name for gold, and there appears no special reason in these psalms for this designation." It is however hazardous to determine the meaning of the titles from the internal evidence of the Psalms; for, as Dodd properly states, "it is very certain that many of the titles were either wrongly placed at first, or have suffered a confusion since: which observation will apply to the authors and subjects, as they stand at present, prefixed to each psalm."

Aben Ezra applies here also his general observation, which we have already mentioned, that this and other strange words are the names of old melodies. There is no Jewish commentator whose opinions in such matters are entitled to greater respect than those of Aben Ezra; and the more we investigate the subject, the more we incline to his opinion, although we have not attained such entire conviction as to make this exclude all other explanations. Rosenmüller, in a passage which we find translated in Burder's 'Oriental Customs,' states the opinions of two German writers, Forkel and I. C. Faber, from which it appears that they both took the same view with the Jewish Rabbi. Forkel considers it more than probable that the Hebrews had not a particular tune for each poem. We find this want of sufficient melodies in all ancient nations, among whom music had attained only a moderate degree of cultivation. The case was the same through the middle ages; when not only spiritual but worldly songs were sung after a few generally known melodies. This custom is still found in countries where there is no other music than that of the national songs; for example, in New Zealand (see Forster's 'Voyage'), Siberia, Tartary, and in all the East. Everywhere the national melodies were fixed once for all, and unchangeable, and all national new songs must be contrived to suit them. And indeed, in our own collections of psalms and hymns, for how large a proportion of them are not a few well-known tunes made to serve? "In general," says Forkel, "popular manners and customs are of so durable and unchangeable a nature, are propagated from nation to nation with so little of change for thousands of years, or arise with as inconsiderable differences among every nation, on similar occasions and in a similar manner, that I am very much inclined to believe that not only the Hebrew custom of the superscriptions to the hymns and songs, but also many other peculiarities belonging to them, existed through the greater part of the middle ages, and even subsist in modern times." He refers to the instance of the master-singers of the middle ages who used similar superscriptions referring to some particular melodies to which poems were to be sung—as "In the quick plough tune," "In the high cheerful praise tune," &c. The melodies thus referred to as examples are unknown, while the superscriptions themselves remain intelligible. The analogy would explain why the Hebrew superscriptions, if we suppose them correctly explained, have often no assignable connection with the sense of the psalm which follows, as well or better than the conjecture that the superscriptions have in some instances been removed from the psalms to which they were originally prefixed. The view which we have thus stated, chiefly after Forkel, had also been taken in part by Faber, particularly as to the illustration to be derived from the practice of the master-singers, and that some of the titles were in like manner indicative of melodies at that time well known. One of the master-singer superscriptions, "The golden tune," answers remarkably to one of the interpretations which, as we have seen, has been assigned to that of the present psalm.

PSALM XVII.

¹ David, in confidence of his integrity, craveth defence of God against his enemies. ¹⁰ He sheweth their pride, craft, and eagerness. ¹³ He prayeth against them in confidence of his hope.

A Prayer of David.

HEAR 'the right, O LORD, attend unto my cry, give ear unto my prayer, that goeth 'not out of feigned lips.

2 Let my sentence come forth from thy presence; let thine eyes behold the things that are equal.

3 Thou hast proved mine heart; thou hast visited me in the night; thou hast tried me, and shalt find nothing; I am purposed that my mouth shall not transgress.

4 Concerning the works of men, by the word of thy lips I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer.

9 From the wicked 'that oppress me, from 'my deadly enemies, who compass me about.

10 They are inclosed in their own fat: with their mouth they speak proudly.

11 They have now compassed us in our steps: they have set their eyes bowing down to the earth;

12 'Like as a lion that is greedy of his prey, and as it were a young lion 'lurking in secret places.

13 Arise, O LORD, 'disappoint him, cast him down: deliver my soul from the wicked, 'which is thy sword:

14 'From men which are thy hand, O LORD, from men of the world, which have their portion in this life, and whose belly thou fillest with thy hid treasure: 'they are full of children, and leave the rest of their substance to their babes.

Verse 8. "Keep me as the apple of the eye, hide me under the shadow of thy wings."—No one fails to observe the beauty of these simple images. The first evidently refers to the solicitude with which one guards that most precious and delicate organ, the eye, in time of danger; but it is not agreed whether the other refers to the outspread wings of the cherubim over the mercy-seat, or to the tender assiduities of the parent hen in covering her brood with her wings. We know the latter circumstance supplied a touching image to our Saviour (Matt. xxiii. 37).

10. "In their own fat."—We know that, in the figurative language of Scripture, fatness denotes pride. This connection of ideas is still maintained in the East, where, when it is intended to indicate a proud man, he is said to be fat, or to look fat, whether really so or not. In China the ideas of dignity and fatness are so closely associated, that no man who is lean can well hope to obtain a place of authority or distinction.

13, 14. "Thy sword...thy hand," &c.—Dr. Hammond renders these clauses more intelligibly, "Deliver my soul from the wicked by thy sword, and by thy hand from the men of this age. Houbigant, Bishops Lowth and Hare, and Boothroyd, take the same view.

—"Thy hid treasure."—Better, "choice things," or "dainties."

PSALM XVIII.

David praiseth God for his manifold and marvellous blessings.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, the servant of the LORD, who spake unto the LORD the words of 'this song in the day that the LORD delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul: And he said,

I WILL love thee, O LORD, my strength.

2 The LORD is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, 'my strength, in whom I will trust; my buckler, and the horn of my salvation, and my high tower.

3 I will call upon the LORD, who is worthy to be praised: so shall I be saved from mine enemies.

4 ³The sorrows of death compassed me, and the floods of 'ungodly men made me afraid.

5 The 'sorrows of hell compassed me about: the snares of death prevented me.

6 In my distress I called upon the LORD, and cried unto my God: he heard my voice out of his temple, and my cry came before him, even into his ears.

7 Then the earth shook and trembled; the foundations also of the hills moved and were shaken, because he was wroth.

8 There went up a smoke 'out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it.

9 He bowed the heavens also, and came down: and darkness was under his feet.

10 And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly: yea, he did fly upon the wings of the wind.

11 He made darkness his secret place; his pavilion round about him were dark waters and thick clouds of the skies.

12 At the brightness that was before him his thick clouds passed, hail stones and coals of fire.

13 The LORD also thundered in the heavens, and the Highest gave his voice; hail stones and coals of fire.

14 Yea, he sent out his arrows, and scattered them; and he shot out lightnings, and discomfited them.

15 Then the channels of waters were seen, and the foundations of the world were discovered at thy rebuke, O LORD, at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils.

16 He sent from above, he took me, he drew me out of 'many waters.

17 He delivered me from my strong enemy, and from them which hated me: for they were too strong for me.

18 They prevented me in the day of my calamity: but the LORD was my stay.

19 He brought me forth also into a large place; he delivered me, because he delighted in me.

20 The LORD rewarded me according to my righteousness; according to the cleanness of my hands hath he recompensed me.

21 For I have kept the ways of the LORD, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

22 For all his judgments were before me, and I did not put away his statutes from me.

23 I was also upright 'before him, and I kept myself from mine iniquity.

24 Therefore hath the LORD recompensed me according to my righteousness, according to the cleanness of my hands 'in his eyesight.

25 With the merciful thou wilt shew thyself merciful; with an upright man thou wilt shew thyself upright;

26 With the pure thou wilt shew thyself pure; and with the froward thou wilt 'shew thyself froward.

27 For thou wilt save the afflicted people; but wilt bring down high looks.

28 For thou wilt light my 'candle: the LORD my God will enlighten my darkness.

29 For by thee I have 'run through a troop; and by my God have I leaped over a wall.

30 As for God, his way is perfect: 'the word of the LORD is 'tried: he is a buckler to all those that trust in him.

31 'For who is God save the LORD? or who is a rock save our God?

32 It is God that girdeth me with strength, and maketh my way perfect.

33 He maketh my feet like hinds' feet, and setteth me upon my high places.

34 He teacheth my hands to war, so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms.

35 Thou hast also given me the shield of thy salvation: and thy right hand hath holden me up, and 'thy gentleness hath made me great.

36 Thou hast enlarged my steps under me, that 'my feet did not slip.

TRIUMPH OF DAVID.—RAFFAELLE.

"In the day that the LORD delivered him from the hand of all his enemies."

PSALM XVIII.—This sublime ode is the same, with some alterations, as that which has been already given in 2 Sam. xxii., where the occasion that gave rise to it is particularly stated. Dr. Kennicott justly describes this magnificent psalm, as containing the noblest imagery that ever was expressed in words; particularly in that portion which describes the coming of the Lord in anger to avenge and deliver his afflicted servant.

Verse 8. "There went up a smoke out of his nostrils."—

Chandler (in his 'History of David') observes, that this expresses the Lord's anger and indignation by a comparison derived from the circumstances which indicate such emotions in man. The ancients made the nose or nostrils the seat of angry emotions, on account of the heated, vehement breath which came from them under such conditions. On the same grounds, the physiognomists regarded wide, open nostrils as a sign of angry and fiery dispositions.

10. "The wings of the wind."—To ascribe wings to the wind is a striking but sufficiently obvious metaphor. It occurs in the heathen poets. They are also represented as winged on ancient monuments. On the Tower of Winds, at Athens, the eight principal winds are exhibited like young men with wings. Virgil ascribes wings to the lightning also ('Æneid,' v. 319).

29. "Leaped over a wall."—This probably refers to his having taken some remarkable town by scaling the ramparts.

33. "My feet like hinds' feet, and setteth me upon my high places."—This is repeated by Habakkuk nearly in the same words (Hab. iii. 19). It offers a double allusion, not only to the proverbial swiftness of the animal, but to the ease and safety with which it stands and leaps in high and dangerous places—upon the mountains and among the rocks. Bochart conjectures that there may also, in the first clause, be an allusion to the uncommon solidity and hardness of the hoofs, which

Virgil compares to brass, and by which the animal is the better enabled to tread the rocks with ease.

34. "A bow of steel is broken by mine arms."—Instead of "steel," we should read "brass." We do not see any difficulty in understanding this text as our version gives it. As it was a test of great strength to bend certain large and very strong bows, how much more so to bring the string home with such force and compression as to break the bow. Then also there may be an emphasis in "by my arms," which would seem to denote that he could do this with the strength of his arms only, without requiring the assistance of the foot, which was so usually employed that the phrase usually rendered "to bend the bow," is literally "to tread the bow." We think this brings out a better view than that which modern interpreters have usually chosen, after some of the ancient versions, "maketh my arms like a bow of brass."

PSALM XIX.

1 The creatures shew God's glory. 7 The word his grace.
12 David prayeth for grace.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE 'heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handywork.

2 Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge.

3 There is no speech nor language,
'where their voice is not heard.

4 'Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun,

5 Which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race.

6 His going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it: and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.

7 The 'law of the LORD is perfect, 'converting the soul: the testimony of the LORD is sure, making wise the simple.

8 The statutes of the LORD are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the LORD is pure, enlightening the eyes.

9 The fear of the LORD is clean, enduring for ever: the judgments of the LORD are 'true and righteous altogether.

10 More to be desired are they than gold, 'yea, than much fine gold: 'sweeter also than honey and 'the honeycomb.

11 Moreover by them is thy servant warned: and in keeping of them there is great reward.

12 Who can understand his errors? cleanse thou me from secret faults.

13 Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me: then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from 'the great transgression.

fresh honeycomb before the cups or cells have been opened, is sensible of a peculiar delicacy of flavour which will be sought for in vain after the honey has for any length of time been expressed or clarified. (See further in Harmer, Obs. xli.)

PSALM XX.

1 The church blesseth the king in his exploits. 7 Her confidence in God's succour.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE LORD hear thee in the day of trouble; the name of the God of Jacob defend thee.

2 Send thee help from the sanctuary, and strengthen thee out of Zion.

3 Remember all thy offerings, and accept thy burnt sacrifice. Selah.

4 Grant thee according to thine own heart, and fulfil all thy counsel.

5 We will rejoice in thy salvation, and in the name of our God we will set up our banners: the LORD fulfil all thy petitions.

6 Now know I that the LORD saveth his anointed; he will hear him from his holy heaven with the saving strength of his right hand.

7 Some trust in chariots, and some in horses: but we will remember the name of the LORD our God.

8 They are brought down and fallen: but we are risen, and stand upright.

9 Save, LORD: let the king hear us when we call.

PSALM XX.—This psalm is generally supposed to have been composed by David about the time of the war with the Ammonites and Syrians, as recorded in 2 Sam. 10. There were a great number of chariots and horses brought into the field against him on that occasion; and to this he seems to refer in verse 7.

PSALM XXI.

1 A thanksgiving for victory. 7 Confidence of further success.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE king shall joy in thy strength, O LORD; and in thy salvation how greatly shall he rejoice!

2 Thou hast given him his heart's desire, and hast not withholden the request of his lips. Selah.

3 For thou preventest him with the blessings of goodness: thou settest a crown of pure gold on his head.

4 He asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever.

5 His glory is great in thy salvation: honour and majesty hast thou laid upon him.

6 For thou hast made him most blessed for ever: thou hast made him exceeding glad with thy countenance.

7 For the king trusteth in the LORD, and through the mercy of the most High he shall not be moved.

8 Thine hand shall find out all thine enemies: thy right hand shall find out those that hate thee.

9 Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger: the LORD shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them.

10 Their fruit shalt thou destroy from the earth, and their seed from among the children of men.

11 For they intended evil against thee: they imagined a mischievous device, which they are not able to perform.

12 Therefore shalt thou make them turn their back, when thou shalt make ready thine arrows upon thy strings against the face of them.

13 Be thou exalted, LORD, in thine own strength: so will we sing and praise thy power.

³ Or, thou shalt set them as a butt.

PSALM XXI.—Calmet thinks he discovers an intimate connection between this and the preceding psalm, and concludes that this was composed after the victory which God gave David over the Ammonites and Syrians, and the preceding during the war.

PSALM XXII.

1 David complaineth in great discouragement. 9 He prayeth in great distress. 23 He praiseth God.

To the chief Musician upon ¹Aijeleth Shahar, A Psalm of David.

MY ²God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? why art thou so far ³from helping me, and from the words of my roaring?

2 O my God, I cry in the daytime, but thou hearest not; and in the night season, and ⁴am not silent.

3 But thou art holy, O thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel.

4 Our fathers trusted in thee: they trusted, and thou didst deliver them.

5 They cried unto thee, and were delivered: they trusted in thee, and were not confounded.

6 But I am a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people.

7 ⁵All they that see me laugh me to scorn: they ⁶shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying,

8 ⁷He trusted on the LORD that he would deliver him: let him deliver him, ⁸seeing he delighted in him.

9 But thou art he that took me out of the womb: thou ¹⁰didst make me hope when I was upon my mother's breasts.

10 I was cast upon thee from the womb: thou art my God from my mother's belly.

11 Be not far from me; for trouble is near; for there is ¹¹none to help.

12 Many bulls have compassed me; strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round.

13 They ¹²gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravening and a roaring lion.

14 I am poured out like water, and all my bones are ¹³out of joint: my heart is like wax; it is melted in the midst of my bowels.

15 My strength is dried up like a potsherd; and my tongue cleaveth to my jaws; and thou hast brought me into the dust of death.

16 For dogs have compassed me; the assembly of the wicked have inclosed me: ¹⁴they pierced my hands and my feet.

17 I may tell all my bones: they look and stare upon me.

18 ¹⁵They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture.

19 But be not thou far from me, O LORD: O my strength, haste thee to help me.

20 Deliver my soul from the sword; ¹⁶my darling ¹⁷from the power of the dog.

21 Save me from the lion's mouth: for thou hast heard me from the horns of the unicorns.

22 ¹⁸I will declare thy name unto my brethren: in the midst of the congregation will I praise thee.

23 Ye that fear the LORD, praise him; all ye the seed of Jacob, glorify him; and fear him, all ye the seed of Israel.

24 For he hath not despised nor abhorred the affliction of the afflicted; neither hath he hid his face from him; but when he cried unto him, he heard.

25 My praise shall be of thee in the great congregation: I will pay my vows before them that fear him.

26 The meek shall eat and be satisfied: they shall praise the LORD that seek him: your heart shall live for ever.

27 ¹⁹All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the LORD: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee.

28 For the kingdom is the LORD's: and he is the governor among the nations.

29 All they that be fat upon earth shall eat and worship: all they that go down to the dust shall bow before him: and none can keep alive his own soul.

30 A seed shall serve him: it shall be accounted to the LORD for a generation.

31 They shall come, and shall declare his righteousness unto a people that shall be born, that he hath done this.

TITLE, "Ajeleth Shahar."—This title has occasioned some discussion; and as there are several others to which any considerations associated with it will equally apply, we will here state such observations as seem to be required.

The words literally understood mean "the Hind of the Morning;" the different opinions are chiefly as to the import of such a designation; and the various constructions to which it is liable, may thus be classed and illustrated:—

1. That the title has no connection with the contents of the psalm, or with any other circumstance belonging to it, except to intimate the tune to which it was to be played. And therefore that "the Hind of the Morning" formed the title, perhaps the first words, of the melody which this psalm was to follow. This is that view of Aben Ezra, on which we have already remarked under Ps. xvi. The nature of the title seems to afford very considerable support to this conjecture; and supersedes the difficult attempt to find a connection or an application between the psalm itself and such titles as "the Hind of the Morning,"—"the Lily of the Testimony," (Ps. lx.)—or "the Dove dumb in distant places (or among strangers)" Ps. lvi. If we saw such titles prefixed to poems of our own, we should—after having read it and observed the apparent want of connection—conclude that it was the name or commencing words of some melody which was intended to be followed. Faber quotes as parallel illustrations the superscriptions of the pieces of the master-singers of the middle ages, expressing the titles of the tunes to which they were to be sung or played; such as, "The short tune—the silver melody—the rose tune melody—the golden tune—the morning melody—the high mountain melody," &c.

2. That such superscriptions have not, indeed, any obvious connection with the psalms to which they are prefixed, but that still they have a specific appropriation to such psalms, as titles of that fanciful and irrelevant character which the Orientals are accustomed to give to their compositions. This view was suggested by Harmer ('Observations,' v.); and in proof of this characteristic of Oriental titles he quotes D'Herbelot, who tells us that a Persian metaphysical poem was called—the Rose-bush; a collection of moral essays—the Garden of Anemones; another eastern book—the Lion of the Forest, to which (as Dr. Clarke subjoins) might be added other titles as, Gulistan, the Region of Roses; Boostan, the Garden; Derj el Durrar, the Casket of Pearls; Bahar Danish, the Spring of Knowledge; Nigaristan, the Gallery of Pictures. An Arabian History of Granada is called A Specimen of the Full Moon; a Chronology—Silken Vest, embroidered with a needle; a Collection of Lives—Fragrant Plants; a Tract on Constancy of Mind—Approved Butter, &c. The Rabbinical writers afford similar instances: thus a Treatise on Morals is entitled A Tried Stone; a Collection of Songs—The Tablets and Ear-rings; another collection—The Book of the Giant. Other instances will occur to the reader, as similar forms of titles have become not unusual in this country.

3. Some, however, think that the designation alludes metaphorically to the time at which the psalm was to be performed, namely, at the dawn; and this is the opinion of many Hebrew writers, followed by some modern interpreters, among them Boothroyd, who explains Ajeleth Shahar to mean "the dawn of day." This explanation perhaps supposes that the sun is meant by "the Hind of the Morning," which is certainly not impossible, as the Arabian poets do sometimes apply to the sun the name of the gazelle. Calmet, however, conjectures that the band of musicians which performed the morning duty, was called, for some reason or other, "the Hind of the Morning," but offers nothing in support of this conjecture.

Lastly. Many think that the title, in the present instance, has a mystical reference to the Messiah, to whom it is agreed both by Jewish and Christian commentators that this psalm prophetically relates. Christ therefore is thus understood to be denoted as "the Hind of the Morning." It is highly probable that Cowper had this title and this interpretation in view when penning the following beautiful lines:—

"I was a stricken deer that left the herd
Long since. With many an arrow deep infix'd
My panting side was charged, when I withdrew,
To seek a tranquil death in distant shades.
There I was found by one, who had himself
Been hurt by the archers. In his side he bore,
And in his hands and feet, the cruel scars."

Task, b. iii.

7. "Shoot out the lip."—To protrude the lower lip is, in the East, considered a very strong indication of contempt. Its employment is chiefly confined to the lower orders.

12. "Bulls."—In Scripture bulls seem to be emblematical of violent and wicked men. Among the ancients generally, including the Hebrews, horned beasts were symbolical of power—and hence horns alone had the same import. The strength, courage, and ferocity of the bull, rendered it, in this connection of ideas, peculiarly suitable to symbolize the violent and powerful oppressor. At present, in the East, strong and violent fellows, who insult and domineer over others, are still called "bulls." Hence, also, in the same association of ideas, our word "bully," for similar characters.

16. "Dogs have compassed me."—The English reader is apt to be surprised that dogs, which exhibit so many amiable and interesting qualities, should always be mentioned with contempt and aversion in the Scriptures. But the known character of the dog is in a great degree an improvement, resulting from perfect domestication and kind treatment. In the East he is not domesticated or treated well; and for this reason he is there a fierce, cruel, greedy, and base creature, such as the Scriptures describe him. Mohammedanism, which now prevails in Western Asia, proscribes dogs as unclean; and hence, although they are exceedingly numerous in many of the towns, they are not attached to particular houses, nor belong to particular persons. They live in the streets and open places, and subsist upon offal, with some uncertain assistance from the charity of individuals. We shall reserve some particulars of their condition in the East to illustrate the several texts in which the animal is mentioned. But this is a proper place to notice its ferocity. As even in the highly domesticated condition of the dog in this country, great numbers of them retain the disposition to assault strangers, it will be easily understood that this disposition must be more strongly manifested by the half-savage dogs of eastern towns. In large towns, where there is much activity and intercourse, the dogs do not generally offer any molestation to any person in the daytime, or only to persons whom they detect by the scent or costume to be decided foreigners; but at night it is very hazardous to pass the streets, and few like to do so alone, and never without being properly armed. When two persons go together, both armed with strong sticks, they are seldom molested. One person alone, and particularly if unarmed, would be in danger of being seriously injured, if not torn in pieces, unless assistance came, as the attack of one dog would serve as a signal to bring others in great numbers to the assault. In small towns and villages seldom visited by strangers, the dogs know the inhabitants and do not molest them, unless perhaps when any one of them should happen to stir abroad at night; but a stranger of any description often dares not approach such places even by day, unless under the conduct of an inhabitant. When the attempt is made, the dogs afford every demonstration of a disposition to tear him in pieces: and we have ourselves, when halting on a journey near such places, observed powerful and resolute men, natives of the country, abandon attempts to enter, in consequence of the opposition which the fierce and savage dogs offered, and waited till the protection of an inhabitant could be obtained. These last observations apply also to the encampments of the Arabs, and other nomades, who allow the presence of dogs on account of the assistance they give in managing the flocks and in protecting the encampment; for the dogs of the East are unanimous in their hatred to strangers, and in resisting their approach. These dogs are however nearly as much neglected as those in towns, and are by no means to be put upon a level with the shepherd dogs of Europe. When the party with which they are connected happens to be of those who assemble in villages during winter, the dogs maintain the connection, and guard the village from intrusion as zealously as they did the camp: and it is to such villages chiefly that the above observations apply; for in other villages and small places, dogs are not very common.

PSALM XXIII.

David's confidence in God's grace.

A Psalm of David.

THE LORD is 'my shepherd; I shall not want.

2 He maketh me to lie down in 'green pastures: he leadeth me beside the 'still waters.

3 He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

4 Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, 'I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.

5 Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou 'anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

6 Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the LORD 'for ever.

⁵ Heb. makest fat.

Verse 5. "Thou anointest my head with oil."—This does not appear to refer to the regal anointing, but to the custom of anointing the head with oil and fragrant unguents on occasions of festivity and rejoicing. To anoint the head also was an honour paid to a distinguished guest; and, in Luke vii. 46, our Saviour seems to refer to the omission of it as rather inhospitable in his host, the Pharisee. The same customs, as to anointing the head, were in operation among the Greeks and

Romans. At present, in Western Asia, people generally shave their heads, which has there put an end to these ancient usages. But they still subsist, more to the East, in India. "At their marriages and other festive times (says Roberts), the young and old may be seen with their long black tresses tied neatly on the crown of the head, shining and smooth like polished ebony."

PSALM XXIV.

¹ God's lordship in the world. ³ The citizens of his spiritual kingdom. ⁷ An exhortation to receive him.

A Psalm of David.

THE 'earth is the LORD's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.

2 'For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods.

3 'Who shall ascend into the hill of the LORD? or who shall stand in his holy place?

4 'He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully.

5 He shall receive the blessing from the LORD, and righteousness from the God of his salvation.

6 This is the generation of them that seek him, that seek thy face, 'O Jacob, Selah.

7 Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in.

8 Who is this King of glory? The LORD strong and mighty, the LORD mighty in battle.

9 Lift up your heads, O ye gates; even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in.

¹ David's confidence in prayer. 7 He prayeth for remission of sins, 16 and for help in affliction.

A Psalm of David.

UNTO thee, O LORD, do I lift up my soul.

2 O my God, I 'trust in thee: let me not be ashamed, let not mine enemies triumph over me.

3 Yea, let none that wait on thee be ashamed: let them be ashamed which transgress without cause.

4 ^{*}Shew me thy ways, O LORD; teach me thy paths.

5 Lead me in thy truth, and teach me: for thou art the God of my salvation; on thee do I wait all the day.

6 Remember, O LORD, ^{*}'thy tender mercies and thy lovingkindnesses; for they have been ever of old.

7 Remember not the sins of my youth, nor my transgressions: according to thy mercy remember thou me for thy goodness' sake, O LORD.

8 Good and upright is the LORD: therefore will he teach sinners in the way.

9 The meek will he guide in judgment: and the meek will he teach his way.

10 All the paths of the LORD are mercy

and truth unto such as keep his covenant and his testimonies.

11 For thy name's sake, O LORD, pardon mine iniquity; for it is great.

12 What man is he that feareth the LORD? him shall he teach in the way that he shall choose.

13 His soul 'shall dwell at ease; and his seed shall inherit the earth.

14 ^{*}The secret of the LORD is with them that fear him; 'and he will shew them his covenant.

15 Mine eyes are ever toward the LORD; for he shall 'pluck my feet out of the net.

16 Turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me; for I am desolate and afflicted.

17 The troubles of my heart are enlarged: O bring thou me out of my distresses.

18 Look upon mine affliction and my pain; and forgive all my sins.

19 Consider mine enemies; for they are many: and they hate me with 'cruel hatred.

20 O keep my soul, and deliver me: let me not be ashamed; for I put my trust in thee.

21 Let integrity and uprightness preserve me; for I wait on thee.

PSALM XXV.—This Psalm, in the original, is the first of the alphabetical or acrostical poems. In these, each line or stanza, as may be, begins with the consecutive letters of the Hebrew alphabet, twenty-two in number, the first with A (א), the second with B (ב), and so on. Of such poems there are twelve in the Hebrew Scriptures, three of which (Ps. cxi. cxii., Lament. iii.) are perfectly alphabetical, every line beginning with the proper initial; whereas, in the other nine (Ps. xxv., xxxiv., xxxvii., cxix., cxlv., Prov. xxxi. 10–31, Lament. i., ii., iv.), the stanzas only so commence. We will state, as they occur, the other peculiarities by which these alphabetical psalms are distinguished from each other. The present is one of six, that consist of stanzas of two lines, each of these stanzas being marked by initial letters, with the exception of some irregularities which appear to have proceeded from the misapprehension of transcribers.

This alphabetical arrangement appears to have been adopted for the assistance of the memory, and was chiefly employed in subjects of common use, as maxims of morality and forms of devotion, which being expressed in detached sentences or aphorisms (the form in which the sages of most ancient times delivered their instructions), the inconvenience arising from the subject, the want of connection in the parts, and of a regular train of thought carried through the whole, was remedied by this artificial contrivance in the form. It is however thought, by Bishop Lowth, that this practice of marking the lines or stanzas by the letters of the alphabet in regular succession did not exist in the time of David, and that this and other alphabetical psalms were composed during the captivity.

PSALM XXVI.

David resorteth unto God in confidence of his integrity.

A Psalm of David.

JUDGE me, O LORD; for I have walked in mine integrity: I have trusted also in the LORD; therefore I shall not slide.

2 'Examine me, O LORD, and prove me; try my reins and my heart.

3 For thy lovingkindness is before mine eyes : and I have walked in thy truth.

4 ¹I have not sat with vain persons, neither will I go in with dissemblers.

5 I have hated the congregation of evil doers ; and will not sit with the wicked.

6 I will wash mine hands in innocency : so will I compass thine altar, O LORD :

7 That I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works.

8 LORD, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place ²where thine honour dwelleth.

9 ³Gather not my soul with sinners, nor my life with ⁴bloody men :

10 In whose hands is mischief, and their right hand is ⁵full of bribes.

11 But as for me, I will walk in mine integrity : redeem me, and be merciful unto me.

12 My foot standeth in an even place : in the congregations will I bless the LORD.

² Heb. of the tabernacle of thy honour.

³ Or, Take not away.

⁴ Heb. men of blood.

⁵ Heb. filled with.

PSALM XXVI.—Calmet thinks that this psalm should be assigned to the time of the Captivity ; but the majority conceive that it was composed about the time when David, being pursued by Saul, was constrained to withdraw into the land of the Philistines.

Verse 6. “I will wash mine hands in innocency ; so will I compass thine altar.”—It was customary among the Jews, as now the Mohammedans, to wash before prayers ; but the priests in particular, when they had laid on the sacrifice, were wont to go round the altar in order to sprinkle and pour out the blood at the four corners, previously to which they washed their hands, as they had done before. It is probably to this that the Psalmist alludes.

FORTITUDE.—REYNOLDS.

“Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear.”—Verse 3.

PSALM XXVII.

¹ David sustaineth his faith by the power of God, ⁴ by his love to the service of God, ⁹ by prayer.

A Psalm of David.

THE LORD is ¹my light and my salvation ; whom shall I fear ? ²the LORD is the strength of my life ; of whom shall I be afraid ?

² When the wicked, even mine enemies and my foes, ³came upon me to eat up my flesh, they stumbled and fell.

⁴ One thing have I desired of the LORD, that will I seek after ; that I may dwell in the house of the LORD all the days of my life, to behold ⁵the beauty of the LORD, and to enquire in his temple.

⁵ For in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion : in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me ; he shall set me upon a rock.

⁶ And now shall mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me : therefore will I offer in his tabernacle sacrifices ⁶of joy ; I will sing, yea, I will sing praises unto the LORD.

⁷ Hear, O LORD, when I cry with my voice : have mercy also upon me, and answer me.

⁸ When thou saidst, Seek ye my face ; my heart said unto thee, Thy face, LORD, will I seek.

¹⁰ When my father and my mother forsake me, then the LORD ¹¹will take me up.

¹¹ 'Teach me thy way, O LORD, and lead me in ¹²a plain path, because of ¹³mine enemies.

¹⁴ ¹⁵Wait on the LORD : be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart : wait, I say, on the LORD.

TITLE.—The Septuagint and Vulgate add to this title "before he was anointed;" but he was three times anointed, and the words are of no authority. Calmet thinks that, as well as the two preceding, it was written during the Captivity. Bishop Patrick conceives that it was probably composed by David on occasion of that danger and deliverance, mentioned in 2 Sam. xxi. 17, which induced his subjects to request that he would no more go to battle in person.

Verse 13. "I had fainted, &c."—The words, "I had fainted," are not in the original. Most of the versions have supposed that something was here wanting to complete the sense, and which accordingly has been variously supplied. On the other hand, Dr. Hammond contends that nothing ought to be supplied, there being an intentional and beautiful abruptness, which he compares to the famous one in the threat of Neptune, in Virgil. Dr. Boothroyd completes the sense without a marked abruptness, on the one hand, or conjectural addition on the other: "Yet I believe that I shall enjoy good, O Jehovah, in the land of the living." In this, however, as well as in the common version, the expression of this confidence is less strongly put than in the original. It is emphatic: "I firmly believe;" or, as in the Prayer-book version, "I believe verily."

PSALM XXVIII.

¹ David prayeth earnestly against his enemies. ⁶ He blesseth God. ⁹ He prayeth for the people.

A Psalm of David.

UNTO thee will I cry, O LORD my rock ; be not silent ¹to me : ²lest, if thou be silent to me, I become like them that go down into the pit.

² Hear the voice of my supplications, when I cry unto thee, when I lift up my hands ³toward thy holy oracle.

9 Save thy people, and bless thine inheritance: ⁷feed them also, and lift them up for ever.

PSALM XXVIII.—This Psalm is usually conceived to have been composed during the revolt of Absalom. Calmet, however, attributes it to the captives in Babylon.

Verse 2. "When I lift up my hand."—This seems to have been a common attitude of prayer among the Hebrews. The action is very natural, and not by any means confined to the Jews. The Greeks, Romans, and others also lifted up their hands in prayer; and, judging from their sculptures and cylinders, the ancient Persians and Babylonians did the same. At present the hands are elevated in one of the attitudes which the Moslems assume in their prayers; and in their occasional and less formal devotions, this more than any other is the posture they assume—standing or walking with uplifted hands.

PSALM XXIX.

1 David exhorteth princes to give glory to God, 3 by reason of his power, 11 and protection of his people.

A Psalm of David.

GIVE unto the LORD, O 'ye mighty, give unto the LORD glory and strength.

2 Give unto the LORD ²the glory due unto his name; worship the LORD ³in the beauty of holiness.

3 The voice of the LORD is upon the waters: the God of glory thundereth: the LORD is upon ⁴'many waters.

4 The voice of the LORD is ⁵'powerful; the voice of the LORD is ⁶'full of majesty.

5 The voice of the LORD breaketh the cedars: yea, the LORD breaketh the cedars of Lebanon.

³ Or, in his glorious sanctuary.

⁴ Or, great waters.

⁵ Heb. in power.

⁶ Heb. in majesty.

⁸ Heb. cutteth out.

⁹ Or, to be in pain.

¹⁰ Or, every whit of it uttereth, &c.

6 He maketh them also to skip like a calf; Lebanon and ⁷Sirion like a young unicorn.

7 The voice of the LORD ⁸'divideth the flames of fire.

8 The voice of the LORD shaketh the wilderness; the LORD shaketh the wilderness of Kadesh.

9 The voice of the LORD maketh the hinds ⁹'to calve, and discovereth the forests: and in his temple ¹⁰'doth every one speak of his glory.

10 The LORD sitteth upon the flood; yea, the LORD sitteth King for ever.

11 The LORD will give strength unto his people; the LORD will bless his people with peace.

PSALM XXIX.—This Psalm was perhaps composed during or after some remarkable thunder-storm—such as it describes—and which had possibly been connected with some peculiar circumstances of judgment or mercy.

Verse 3. "The voice of the Lord."—Thunder is intended, as shown by the ensuing clause.

4. "Breaketh the cedars."—It is the lightning, the electric fluid, that produces the effect which is here poetically ascribed to the thunder, or rather, perhaps, to the storm in general.

9. "Maketh the hinds to calve."—This image does not seem to assort well with the others, or to sustain the dignity of the subject. Most recent translators have adopted the well-supported opinion of Bishop Lowth, that the word (אֵילִית) translated "hinds" should be rendered "oaks," or, at any rate, "trees." So Boothroyd: "The voice of Jehovah shaketh the oaks."—With respect to the sense conveyed in our common version, it may however be observed that it is a very ancient and still subsisting belief, that many animals cast their young prematurely under the terror which thunder-storms inspire.

PSALM XXX.

¹ David praiseth God for his deliverance. ⁴ He exhorteth others to praise him by example of God's dealing with him.

A Psalm and Song at the dedication of the house of David.

I WILL extol thee, O LORD; for thou hast lifted me up, and hast not made my foes to rejoice over me.

² O LORD my God, I cried unto thee, and thou hast healed me.

⁵ For 'his anger endureth but a moment; in his favour is life: weeping may endure 'for a night, but 'joy cometh in the morning.

² Heb. there is but a moment in his anger.

³ Heb. in the evening.

⁴ Heb. singing.

⁵ Heb. settled strength for my mountain.

⁶ Psal. 6, 5, and 88. 11, and 115, 17.

⁷ That is, my tongue, or, my soul.

⁶ And in my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.

⁷ LORD, by thy favour thou hast 'made my mountain to stand strong: thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled.

⁸ I cried to thee, O LORD; and unto the LORD I made supplication.

¹⁰ Hear, O LORD, and have mercy upon me: LORD, be thou my helper.

¹² To the end that 'my glory may sing praise to thee, and not be silent. O LORD my God, I will give thanks unto thee for ever.

TITLE, "A Psalm and Song."—The "and" is supplied; "Psalm-song" would be more correct. A psalm, properly speaking, is a piece for instrumental performance; a song, to be sung by the voice. It may be conjectured that in a "psalm-song," the instruments preceded the voice, while in the "song-psalm" the voice preceded the music. Or, as it may perhaps be traced that the compositions designated by either of these compound terms are of a responsive character, we may suppose that part was vocal and part instrumental, and that the title not only denotes this, but by the order of the words, "psalm-song," or "song-psalm," expresses whether the instruments or the voices were to open the performance.

PSALM XXXI.

¹ David shewing his confidence in God craveth his help. ⁷ He rejoiceth in his mercy. ⁹ He prayeth in his calamity. ¹⁹ He praiseth God for his goodness.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

IN 'thee, O LORD, do I put my trust; let me never be ashamed: deliver me in thy righteousness.

² Bow down thine ear to me; deliver me speedily: be thou 'my strong rock, for an house of defence to save me.

⁴ Pull me out of the net that they have laid privily for me: for thou art my strength.

⁵ 'Into thine hand I commit my spirit: thou hast redeemed me, O LORD God of truth.

⁶ I have hated them that regard lying vanities: but I trust in the LORD.

⁸ And hast not shut me up into the hand of the enemy: thou hast set my foot in a large room.

¹¹ I was a reproach among all mine enemies, but especially among my neighbours, and a fear to mine acquaintance: they that did see me without fled from me.

¹³ For I have heard the slander of many:

² Heb. to me for a rock of strength.

³ Luke 23. 46.

⁴ Heb. a vessel that perisheth.

fear was on every side: while they took counsel together against me, they devised to take away my life.

14 But I trusted in thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my God.

15 My times are in thy hand: deliver me from the hand of mine enemies, and from them that persecute me.

16 Make thy face to shine upon thy servant: save me for thy mercies' sake.

17 Let me not be ashamed, O LORD; for I have called upon thee: let the wicked be ashamed, and ³let them be silent in the grave.

18 Let the lying lips be put to silence; which speak ⁴'grievous things proudly and contemptuously against the righteous.

19 ⁵'Oh how great is thy goodness, which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee;

which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee before the sons of men!

20 Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man: thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues.

21 Blessed be the LORD: for he hath shewed me his marvellous kindness in a ⁶strong city.

22 For I said in my haste, I am cut off from before thine eyes: nevertheless thou heardest the voice of my supplications when I cried unto thee.

23 O love the LORD, all ye his saints: for the LORD preserveth the faithful, and plentifully rewardeth the proud doer.

24 ⁷'Be of good courage, and he shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the LORD.

³ Or, let them be cut off for the grave.

⁴ Heb. a hard thing.

⁵ Isa. 64. 4. 1 Cor. 2. 9.

⁶ Or, fenced city.

⁷ Psal. 27. 14.

PSALM XXXI.—It is generally conceived that this psalm was composed upon, or with reference to, the occasion stated at the latter end of 1 Sam. xxiii., when David was so closely pursued by Saul in the wilderness of Maon that he must infallibly have been taken, had not the king been providentially recalled from the pursuit by the intelligence of an invasion from the Philistines. Mudge, however, is of opinion that there are various circumstances in the phraseology and allusions which might rather lead to the impression that the psalm was composed by Jeremiah.

Verse 9. "Mine eye is consumed with grief."—The Rabbi Jarchi explains this to mean, that his sight was so dim as that of a man who is obliged to put a glass before his eyes to see what is beyond the glass. This is of no value as an explanation; but as Jarchi died in the twelfth century, it might be cited as affording probable evidence that spectacles were known at least two centuries before the date ascribed to the invention.

PSALM XXXII.

1 Blessedness consisteth in remission of sins. 3 Confession of sins giveth ease to the conscience. 8 God's promises bring joy.

¹A Psalm of David, Maschil.

BLESSED is he whose ²transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.

2 Blessed is the man unto whom the LORD imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile.

3 When I kept silence, my bones waxed old through my roaring all the day long.

4 For day and night thy hand was heavy upon me: my moisture is turned into the drought of summer. Selah.

5 I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. ³I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the LORD; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Selah.

6 For this shall every one that is godly pray unto thee 'in a time when thou mayest be found: surely in the floods of great waters they shall not come nigh unto him.

7 ⁴'Thou art my hiding place; thou shalt preserve me from trouble; thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance. Selah.

8 I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: ⁵'I will guide thee with mine eye.

9 ⁶'Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding: whose mouth must be held in with bit and bridle, lest they come near unto thee.

⁴ Prov. 28. 13. Isa. 65. 24. 1 John 1. 9.

⁵ Heb. I will counsel thee, mine eye shall be upon thee.

⁶ Heb. in a time of finding. ⁷ Prov. 26. 3.

10 Many sorrows shall be to the wicked: but he that trusteth in the LORD, mercy shall compass him about.

11 Be glad in the LORD, and rejoice, ye righteous: and shout for joy, all ye that are upright in heart.

TITLE, "Maschil."—Thirteen psalms bear this title, which, as usual, Aben Ezra supposes to denote the tune to which it was to be performed. The usual explanation given of it, is, in the various versions, more or less equivalent to that which the marginal reading conveys, "A Psalm of David, giving instruction."—This psalm is usually supposed to have been composed when the rebellion of Absalom awoke David to renewed lamentation for his sin in the matter of Uriah—the calamities into which he then fell having been predicted by Nathan as a punishment for that deplorable transgression.

Verse 4. "The drought of summer."—We are not to suppose that the Psalmist alludes to any season of extraordinary drought, but to the ordinary heat and dryness of the summer—to which the most extraordinary drought of our own summers cannot be compared. Near rivers and other sources of natural or artificial irrigation, verdure and beauty are preserved; but as no rain falls, the verdure of the unwatered plains soon disappears under the intense warmth of the season;—every flower fades, and every green thing withers; and a brown and arid desert alone remains, the parched herbage of which crackles beneath the feet of those who walk. A little rain, when it comes in its season, produces an equally rapid and marked change of an opposite character.

PSALM XXXIII.

¹ God is to be praised for his goodness, 6 for his power, 12 and for his providence. 20 Confidence is to be placed in God.

REJOICE in the LORD, O ye righteous: for praise is comely for the upright.

2 Praise the LORD with harp: sing unto him with the psaltery and an instrument of ten strings.

3 Sing unto him a new song; play skillfully with a loud noise.

4 For the word of the LORD is right; and all his works are done in truth.

5 He loveth righteousness and judgment: 'the earth is full of the 'goodness of the LORD.

6 'By the word of the LORD were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth.

7 He gathereth the waters of the sea together as an heap: he layeth up the depth in storehouses.

8 Let all the earth fear the LORD: let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him.

9 For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast.

10 'The LORD 'bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought: he maketh the devices of the people of none effect.

11 'The counsel of the LORD standeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart 'to all generations.

12 'Blessed is the nation whose God is the LORD; and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance.

13 The LORD looketh from heaven; he beholdeth all the sons of men.

14 From the place of his habitation he looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth.

15 He fashioneth their hearts alike; he considereth all their works.

16 There is no king saved by the multitude of an host: a mighty man is not delivered by much strength.

17 An horse is a vain thing for safety: neither shall he deliver any by his great strength.

18 'Behold, the eye of the LORD is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy;

19 To deliver their soul from death, and to keep them alive in famine.

20 Our soul waiteth for the LORD: he is our help and our shield.

21 For our heart shall rejoice in him, because we have trusted in his holy name.

22 Let thy mercy, O LORD, be upon us, according as we hope in thee.

¹ Psal. 119. 64. ^{} Or, mercy. ^{} Gen. 1. 6. 7. ^{} Isa. 19. 3. ^{} Heb. maketh frustrate. ^{*} Prov. 19. 21. Isa. 46. 10.
⁷ Heb. to generation and generation. ^{} Psal. 65. 4, and 114. 15. ^{} Job 36. 7. Psal. 34. 15. 1 Pet. 3. 12.

PSALM XXXIII.—Although this psalm has no title, it is usually attributed to David.

Verse 2. "Harp...psallery...instrument of ten strings."—We shall notice the principal classes of musical instruments separately in our progress of the book of Psalms. Without, under this psalm, entering generally into the subject, we take the opportunity of introducing (after Rosellini) a cut which is entitled to be regarded with peculiar interest as showing, from their own paintings, the form and character of the principal musical instruments in use among the ancient Egyptians. It may be taken as a general introduction to the more detailed illustrations we shall presently begin to offer, when we shall have occasion to refer back to the information which may be derived from the representation now given of a band of musical performers of ancient Egypt.

PSALM XXXIV.

1 David praiseth God, and exhorteth others thereto by his experience. 8 They are blessed that trust in God. 11 He exhorteth to the fear of God. 15 The privileges of the righteous.

A Psalm of David, when he changed his behaviour before Abimelech; who drove him away, and he departed.

I WILL bless the LORD at all times: his praise shall continually be in my mouth.

2 My soul shall make her boast in the LORD: the humble shall hear thereof, and be glad.

3 O magnify the LORD with me, and let us exalt his name together.

4 I sought the LORD, and he heard me, and delivered me from all my fears.

5 ²They looked unto him, and were lightened: and their faces were not ashamed.

6 This poor man cried, and the LORD heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles.

7 The angel of the LORD encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.

8 O taste and see that the LORD is good: blessed is the man that trusteth in him.

9 O fear the LORD, ye his saints: for there is no want to them that fear him.

10 The young lions do lack, and suffer hunger: but they that seek the LORD shall not want any good thing.

11 Come, ye children, hearken unto me: I will teach you the fear of the LORD.

12 ³What man is he that desireth life, and loveth many days, that he may see good?

13 Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile.

14 Depart from evil, and do good: seek peace, and pursue it.

15 ⁴The eyes of the LORD are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry.

16 The face of the LORD is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth.

17 ⁵The righteous cry, and the LORD heareth, and delivereth them out of all their troubles.

18 The LORD is nigh ⁶unto them that are of a broken heart; and saveth ⁷such as be of a contrite spirit.

19 Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the LORD delivereth him out of them all,

20 He keepeth all his bones: not one of them is broken.

21 Evil shall slay the wicked: and they that hate the righteous ⁸shall be desolate.

22 The LORD redeemeth the soul of his servants: and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate.

³ 1 Pet. 3. 10.

⁴ Job 36. 7. Psal. 33. 18. 1 Pet. 3. 12.

⁵ Heb. to the broken heart.

⁷ Or, shall be guilty.

PSALM XXXIV.—This is another psalm of the alphabetical class. It is, like Psalm xxv., one of the six in stanzas of two lines apiece, each stanza commencing with the successive letters of the alphabet. The title describes the occasion on which the psalm was composed. But it will be observed that the name of the king of Gath, who is of course here referred to, is, in the history, Achish, not Abimelech; the latter was therefore probably a title of dignity among the sovereigns of that state, like “Pharaoh” among the Egyptians, or “Caesar” among the Romans.

Verse 8. “Taste and see that the LORD is good.”—It is a very common form of expression in the East to discriminate the characters, qualities, and tempers of particular persons, by reference to experience derived from taste. It is hence not unusual to hear one person say of another that he has tasted him and found him good, pleasant, sweet, bad, bitter, or sour, as the case may be.

20. “He keepeth all his bones, not one of them is broken.”—The Jews explain this with reference to their own peculiar ideas concerning the resurrection. The statement (as given in the ‘Quarterly Review,’ vol. xxi.) is worth quoting, as illustrating the character of the Jewish traditions and notions. Some parts of it might be fine if metaphorically understood—but it is not so understood:—“The body, according to their notion, has a certain indestructible part called luz, which is the seed from whence it is to be reproduced. It is described as a bone, in shape like an almond, and having its place at the end of the vertebrae. This bone, according to the rabbis, can neither be broken by any force of man, nor consumed by fire, nor dissolved by water: and they tell us that the fact was proved before the emperor Adrian, upon whom they imprecate their usual malediction, ‘May his bones be broken!’ In his presence, Rabbi Joshua Ben Chauma produced a luz; it was ground between two millstones, but it came out as whole as it had been put in. They burnt it in the fire, and it was found incombustible. They cast it in the water, and it could not be softened. Lastly, they hammered it on an anvil, and both the anvil and hammer were broken, without affecting the luz. The rabbinical writers, with their wonted perversion of Scripture, support this silly notion by a verse from the Psalms, He keepeth all his bones; not one of them is broken. A dew is to descend upon the earth, preparatory to the resurrection, and to quicken into life and growth these seeds of the dead.” See also the same statement in Lightfoot upon John xi. 25.

PSALM XXXV.

¹ David prayeth for his own safety, and his enemies' confusion. ¹¹ He complaineth of their wrongful dealing. ²² Thereby he inciteth God against them.

A Psalm of David.

PLEAD my cause, O LORD, with them that strive with me: fight against them that fight against me.

2 Take hold of shield and buckler, and stand up for mine help.

3 Draw out also the spear, and stop the way against them that persecute me: say unto my soul, I am thy salvation.

4 'Let them be confounded and put to shame that seek after my soul: let them be turned back and brought to confusion that devise my hurt.

5 'Let them be as chaff before the wind: and let the angel of the LORD chase them.

6 Let their way be ³dark and slippery: and let the angel of the LORD persecute them.

7 For without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit, which without cause they have digged for my soul.

8 Let destruction come upon him 'at un-awares; and let his net that he hath hid catch himself: into that very destruction let him fall.

9 And my soul shall be joyful in the LORD: it shall rejoice in his salvation.

10 All my bones shall say, LORD, who is like unto thee, which deliverest the poor from him that is too strong for him, yea, the poor and the needy from him that spoileth him?

11 'False witnesses did rise up; 'they laid to my charge things that I knew not.

12 They rewarded me evil for good to the 'spoiling of my soul.

13 But as for me, when they were sick, my clothing was sackcloth: I 'humbled my soul with fasting; and my prayer returned into mine own bosom.

14 I 'behaved myself ¹⁰as though he had been my friend or brother: I bowed down heavily, as one that mourneth for his mother.

15 But in mine ¹¹adversity they rejoiced, and gathered themselves together: yea, the abjects gathered themselves together against me, and I knew it not; they did tear me, and ceased not:

16 With hypocritical mockers in feasts, they gnashed upon me with their teeth.

17 LORD, how long wilt thou look on? rescue my soul from their destructions, ¹²my darling from the lions.

19 Let not them that are mine enemies ¹⁵wrongfully rejoice over me: neither let them wink with the eye that hate me without a cause.

20 For they speak not peace: but they devise deceitful matters against them that are quiet in the land.

21 Yea, they opened their mouth wide against me, and said, Aha, aha, our eye hath seen it.

22 This thou hast seen, O LORD: keep not silence: O LORD, be not far from me.

23 Stir up thyself, and awake to my judgment, even unto my cause, my God and my Lord.

24 Judge me, O LORD my God, according to thy righteousness; and let them not rejoice over me.

25 Let them not say in their hearts, ¹⁶Ah, so would we have it: let them not say, We have swallowed him up.

26 Let them be ashamed and brought to confusion together that rejoice at mine hurt: let them be clothed with shame and dishonour that magnify themselves against me.

27 Let them shout for joy, and be glad, that favour ¹⁷my righteous cause: yea, let them say continually, Let the LORD be magnified, which hath pleasure in the prosperity of his servant.

28 And my tongue shall speak of thy righteousness and of thy praise all the day long.

PSALM XXXV.—This Psalm is generally supposed to have been composed by David, during his persecutions from Saul.

Verse 14. "As one that mourneth for his mother."—This indication is particularly impressive, as illustrated by the existing state of feeling of sons towards their mothers in the East. The relations between the father and the son in early life, are not calculated to call forth the tender feelings of the latter in any very eminent degree. The father is looked up to distantly; is respected, venerated, but seldom loved. The restraint and deference which characterise his limited intercourse with his father, direct all his tender affections with double force towards his mother; whose indulgence and attachment towards him are so continually evinced, as enable her to establish an influence over him which seldom terminates but with her life. He constantly turns to her, with perfect confidence, on all occasions in which his feelings are interested; he usually commits to her the choice of his wife or wives; and when he settles in life, she commonly takes the charge of his domestic establishment, becomes the real head of his household, and remains his nearest counsellor and friend, as she had been in his childhood. This station is the highest object of woman's ambition in the East. It is as a mother, not as a wife, that she attains the most independent and honoured station to which the condition of society allows her to aspire; and this it is, principally, which makes a woman in the East so anxious to have male children, and so comparatively indifferent about daughters; and this also induces the mother to exert herself in every possible way to fix and cultivate her son's affection, and in which she seldom fails so to succeed, that "to bow down heavily, as one that mourneth for his mother," would at once be understood by an Oriental as expressing the utmost profundity of grief.

21. "Opened their mouth wide... and said, Aha, aha, our eye hath seen it."—That is, they had seen what they long wished to see, his humiliation. Mr. Roberts has given the following very striking parallel from the usages of the Hindoos. "See that rude fellow who has triumphed over another; he distends his mouth to the utmost, then claps his hands, and bawls out, 'Agā! Agā!'—I have seen, I have seen!" So provoking is this exclamation, that a man, though vanquished, will often commence another attack. An officer who has lost his situation is sure to have this salutation from those he has injured. Has a man been foiled in argument, has he failed in some feat he promised to perform, has he in any way made himself ridiculous, the people open their mouths and shout aloud, saying 'Agā!'—finished, finished! fallen, fallen!" Then they laugh and clap their hands till the poor fellow gets out of sight." ('Oriental Illustrations,' p. 328.)

PSALM XXXVI.

1 The grievous estate of the wicked. 5 The excellency of God's mercy. 10 David prayeth for favour to God's children.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David the servant of the LORD.

THE transgression of the wicked saith within my heart, that there is no fear of God before his eyes.

2 For he flattereth himself in his own eyes, 'until his iniquity be found to be hateful.

3 The words of his mouth are iniquity and deceit: he hath left off to be wise, and to do good.

• 4 He deviseth ²mischief upon his bed; he setteth himself in a way that is not good; he abhorreth not evil.

5 Thy mercy, O LORD, is in the heavens; and thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds.

6 Thy righteousness is like 'the great mountains; thy judgments are a great deep: O LORD, thou preservest man and beast.

7 How 'excellent is thy lovingkindness, O God! therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings.

8 They shall be 'abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures.

9 For with thee is the fountain of life: in thy light shall we see light.

10 O 'continue thy lovingkindness unto them that know thee; and thy righteousness to the upright in heart.

11 Let not the foot of pride come against me, and let not the hand of the wicked remove me.

12 There are the workers of iniquity fallen: they are cast down, and shall not be able to rise.

* Heb. precious.

* Heb. watered.

* Heb. draw out at length.

PSALM XXXVI.—Calmet assigns this psalm to the Captivity; but most interpreters conclude that it was composed by David during Saul's persecutions; and many suppose it was after he had spared the infatuated king's life in the cave of En-gedi.

PSALM XXXVII.

David persuadeth to patience and confidence in God, by the different estate of the godly and the wicked.

A Psalm of David.

FRET 'not thyself because of evildoers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity.

2 For they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb.

3 Trust in the LORD, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and 'verily thou shalt be fed.

4 Delight thyself also in the LORD; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart.

5 'Commit thy way unto the LORD; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass.

6 And he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday.

7 'Rest in the LORD, and wait patiently for him: fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass.

8 Cease from anger, and forsake wrath: fret not thyself in any wise to do evil.

9 For evildoers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the LORD, they shall inherit the earth.

10 For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be.

11 'But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace.

12 The wicked 'plotteth against the just, and gnasheth upon him with his teeth.

13 'The LORD shall laugh at him: for he seeth that his day is coming.

14 The wicked have drawn out the sword, and have bent their bow, to cast down the poor and needy, and to slay 'such as be of upright conversation.

15 Their sword shall enter into their own heart, and their bows shall be broken.

16 A little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked.

17 For the arms of the wicked shall be broken: but the LORD upholdeth the righteous.

18 The LORD knoweth the days of the upright: and their inheritance shall be for ever.

evil time: and in the days of famine they shall be satisfied.

21 The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again: but the righteous sheweth mercy, and giveth.

22 For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off.

23 The steps of a good man are ¹¹ordered by the LORD: and he delighteth in his way.

24 Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down: for the LORD upholdeth him with his hand.

25 I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread.

26 He is ¹²ever merciful, and lendeth; and his seed is blessed.

27 Depart from evil, and do good; and dwell for evermore.

28 For the LORD loveth judgment, and forsaketh not his saints; they are preserved for ever: but the seed of the wicked shall be cut off.

29 The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever.

30 The mouth of the righteous speaketh wisdom, and his tongue talketh of judgment.

31 The law of his God is in his heart; none of his ¹³steps shall slide.

32 The wicked watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him.

33 The LORD will not leave him in his hand, nor condemn him when he is judged.

34 Wait on the LORD, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it.

35 I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like ¹⁴a green bay tree.

36 Yet he passed away, and, lo, he was not: yea, I sought him, but he could not be found.

37 Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace.

38 But the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off.

39 But the salvation of the righteous is of the LORD: he is their strength in the time of trouble.

PSALM XXXVII.—This is one of the alphabetical psalms. In the two that have already occurred, the stanzas commencing with the successive initials which the alphabet offers, consist of only two lines each; but the present has four lines to each stanza thus marked, which accounts for its greater length, notwithstanding the acrostical restriction. It is indeed the longest of these psalms, and consequently the only one that has four lines to each stanza. Calmet thinks this psalm was written during the captivity at Babylon, for the consolation of the captives; but the more general opinion is, that it was composed by David towards the latter end of his life.

35. "A green bay tree."—The word (אֲזָרַח azrach) occurs only in this text, and has been variously explained. Most of the Rabbins, followed by Mudge, Waterland, Gesenius, and many others, prefer that which is given in our marginal reading, denoting an indigenous tree—implying the flourishing condition of that which grows in its native and congenial soil. This we certainly prefer. But the Septuagint, Vulgate, and some other ancient versions, followed by Houbigant, Boothroyd, and other good authorities, have "cedar." For the reading of "bay tree," we are not aware of any authority, except the very feeble one which is offered by some of the older of the modern versions, in this country and on the Continent. Images, comparing the transitory nature of human hope and prosperity to the sudden blight and overthrow which so often befall the glory of the forest or the pride of the garden, are at once so beautiful and natural that they have been employed by poets of every country and age as often as by those of Israel. A passage in one of our own poets (Shakspeare) furnishes a beautiful paraphrase on the present text.

"This is the state of man! To-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls, never to hope again."

PSALM XXXVIII.

David moveth God to take compassion of his pitiful case.

A Psalm of David, to bring to remembrance.

O LORD, rebuke me not in thy wrath: neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure.

2 For thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore.

3 There is no soundness in my flesh because of thine anger; neither is there any rest in my bones because of my sin.

4 For mine iniquities are gone over mine head: as an heavy burden they are too heavy for me.

5 My wounds stink and are corrupt because of my foolishness.

6 I am ¹troubled; I am bowed down greatly; I go mourning all the day long.

7 For my loins are filled with a loathsome disease: and there is no soundness in my flesh.

8 I am feeble and sore broken: I have roared by reason of the disquietness of my heart.

9 LORD, all my desire is before thee; and my groaning is not hid from thee.

10 My heart panteth, my strength faileth me: as for the light of mine eyes, it also ³is gone from me.

11 My lovers and my friends stand aloof from my 'sore; and 'my kinsmen stand afar off.

12 They also that seek after my life lay snares for me: and they that seek my hurt speak mischievous things, and imagine deceits all the day long.

13 But I, as a deaf man, heard not; and I was as a dumb man that openeth not his mouth.

14 Thus I was as a man that heareth not, and in whose mouth are no reproofs.

15 For, 'in thee, O LORD, do I hope: thou wilt 'hear, O LORD my God.

16 For I said, Hear me, lest otherwise they should rejoice over me: when my foot slippeth, they magnify themselves against me.

17 For I am ready ⁸to halt, and my sorrow is continually before me.

18 For I will declare mine iniquity; I will be sorry for my sin.

19 But mine enemies ⁹are lively, and they are strong: and they that hate me wrongfully are multiplied.

20 They also that render evil for good are mine adversaries; because I follow the thing that good is.

TITLE, "To bring to remembrance."—This is also prefixed to Ps. lxx. The superscription is, as usual, differently understood: but it is generally understood to characterize the object of the psalm, between which and the title some agreement may be traced. Gesenius paraphrases it, "To bring (one's self) into remembrance (with God)." Waterland compresses the whole title into "David's memorial Psalm."

It is agreed that this psalm was composed by David. It was probably written during a sickness which afforded him opportunity of calling to remembrance his deep sin in the matter of Bathsheba and Uriah, and the various calamities which had befallen him on that account; and gave him occasion to lament his miserable condition. The description may thus have a two-fold reference—the disease of soul being figuratively included in the bodily disease. There are, however, many who think that the description is wholly a figurative account of David's spiritual condition: and in this there is nothing unlikely; it being quite common in Scripture to describe diseases of the moral and spiritual condition by comparisons taken from diseases of the body. However understood, it is clear that he felt the condition he describes as a chastisement on account of his sins.

PSALM XXXIX.

¹ David's care of his thoughts. 4 The consideration of the brevity and vanity of life, 7 the reverence of God's judgments, 10 and prayer, are his bridles of impatience.

TITLE, "Jeduthun."—From 1 Chron. xvi. 42; xxv. 1; 2 Chron. v. 12, it appears that Jeduthun was one of the chief musicians. This therefore strengthens the conclusions stated in the note to Ps. iv.

This psalm is generally regarded as a sequel to the preceding, and on the same occasion. Some, however, think that it was occasioned by the death of Absalom, after Joab had represented to David the inconsistency of the vehement grief in which he had then indulged.

RESIGNATION.—FROM A MONUMENT BY CHANTREY.

"I waited patiently for the Lord."—Verse 1.

PSALM XL.—This is usually considered a psalm of thanksgiving by David on his recovery from the diseased condition of body or mind, or both, to which the two preceding psalms refer.

6. "Mine ears hast thou opened," or "bored."—There is probably here an allusion to a custom of Hebrew bondage, as explained in Exod. xxi. 5, 6 ; Deut. xv. 7. Every one who had sold his liberty was to go free at the jubilee ; but if any one so loved his master as to prefer to continue in bondage, his ear was bored in token of his willing subjection.

7. "In the volume of the book."—This, which seems a reiteration, is not such. The word "volume" appears to apply to the manner in which manuscripts were rolled up to form a book.

12 And as for me, thou upholdest me in mine integrity, and settest me before thy face for ever.

13 Blessed be the LORD God of Israel from everlasting, and to everlasting. Amen, and Amen.

PSALM XLI.—It is generally agreed that David composed this psalm with reference to the conspiracy of Absalom, his best beloved son, and the treachery of Achitophel, the familiar friend in whom he trusted. If so, it might seem, from the mention of his sickness (if it be a real and not a figurative disease), and from the reference, in verse 5, to the expectation of his enemies that he would die, that the sickness to which the preceding chapters refer occurred just before the revolt of Absalom, who, from the intimations here given, may seem to have suspended his design, in the hope that the death of his father would give him all the advantages he could hope from the open revolt to which he resorted when the king's recovery frustrated this expectation. Perhaps the incaution into which the conspirators were betrayed by the expectation of his death, conveyed to him some intimation of their plans. Under this view, the present psalm may perhaps have been composed just before, or not long after, David fled from Jerusalem with the faithful party which remained true in his cause.

Verse 13. "Amen and amen."—With this concludes the first of the five books into which the Jews have divided the book of Psalms. Perhaps this division was made with a reference to the number of the books contained in the Pentateuch. Some think that the division shows the order in which the book, as it now appears, was collected, the first section being the original collection, to which the other four were successively added. Under this view, it is also conceived, that this first book was the collection made by David, whose name is prefixed to all the psalms contained in it, four excepted (i., ii., x., and xxxiii.) But this opinion will not bear examination; for some of the psalms in this first portion appear to belong to the Babylonish captivity, while all the remaining books contain some psalms of David. The second division ends with Ps. lxxii.; the third with Ps. lxxxix.; the fourth with Ps. cvi.; and the fifth with the end of the book. It will be seen that each section ends with a doxology, for the sake of concluding with which the division was probably made at these particular points, although some think that these doxologies were added by the person (probably Ezra) who collected and digested the psalms into their present form. The division of the psalms into five portions is very ancient, as it existed before the Septuagint version was executed: but from the manner in which the psalms of late date are interspersed, it may be concluded with some certainty that the book does not consist of five original collections joined together; but that the division was made after the psalms had been collected into one book.

HART (Antelope Arabica).—MALE, FEMALES, AND YOUNG.

PSALM XLII.—Bishop Lowth considers this psalm one of the most beautiful specimens of the Hebrew elegy. It seems to have been composed by David when he was expelled from his kingdom by his rebellious son, and compelled to fly to the borders of Lebanon, as it is plain he did, from 2 Sam. xvii. 24, 26, 27. Undoubtedly, whoever composed this psalm, was expelled from the sacred city, and wandered as an exile in the regions of Hermon and the heights of Lebanon (verse 7). David was never here during the persecutions of Saul, and it is therefore preferable to select the period of Absalom's revolt. Here then he pitched his camp, protected by the surrounding mountains and woods; and hither the veteran soldiers, attached personally to him and averse to change, resorted from every part of Palestine. Here also, indulging his melancholy, the prospect and objects about him suggested many of the ideas in this poem. Observing the deer, which constantly came from the distant valleys to the fountains of Lebanon, and comparing this circumstance with his earnest desire to revisit the temple of God, and perhaps elevating his thoughts to a higher celestial temple, he commences his poem, "As the hart panteth after the water-brooks," &c. (See Michaelis, as quoted in a note to Lowth's 23rd Lecture.)

Verse 1. "As the hart panteth after the water brooks," &c. —"The hart, naturally of a hot and arid constitution, suffers much from thirst in the Oriental regions. He therefore seeks the fountain or the stream with intense desire, particularly when his natural thirst has been aggravated by the pursuit of the hunter. Panting and braying with eagerness, he precipitates himself into the river, that he may quench at once the burning fever which consumes his vitals in its cooling waters" (Bochart, in Paxton, vol. ii. p. 167). Such animals also suffer much, and pant painfully for water, when they have been chased from their favourite haunts in the waterless plains by the fiercer inmates of the forest or the glade, and are afraid to return to the water lest they should again be molested. And when the unconquerable wants of nature compel them at last

"coming down from the high place, with a psaltery, a tabret, and a pipe, and a kinnor." (1 Sam. x. 5.) Next we find it noticed as used by private persons, such as shepherds and others, for their own solace; and that, when skilfully played, it was considered to have much influence upon the human passions, and in soothing the disturbed mind. For when Saul was afflicted with his melancholy madness, it was recommended that recourse should be had to "a man who is a cunning player upon the kinnor:" the shepherd David was selected, and when the evil spirit came upon Saul, "David took a kinnor, and played with his hand: so Saul was refreshed and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him." From this time we read frequently of the kinnor. The example of David, as king, probably recommended it to more extensive use; besides which the kinnor acquired a very distinguished place in the musical establishment which David formed for the tabernacle, and, prospectively, for the Temple. It is remarkable indeed, that in the Law there are no regulations concerning music, except as to the blowing of horns and trumpets on stated occasions. As to David himself his kinnor is so often mentioned, and he is so frequently described as playing on it, that we seem to have a sort of notion that he had this favourite instrument always at hand. Such indeed was the idea entertained by the Christian fathers; one of whom, Eusebius, says that David carried his lyre (so he calls it—and we doubt not correctly) with him, wherever he went, to console him in his affliction, and to sing to it the praises of God. And in his preface to the Psalms, he asserts that this prince, as head of the prophets, was generally in the tabernacle with his lyre, amidst the other prophets and singers; and that each of them prophesied, and sung his canticle as inspiration came upon him. Another intimation informs us that the frame of the kinnor was of wood; for we are told that Solomon "made of the alnum trees... harps (kinnoroth) also, and psalteries for singing." (1 Kings x. 12.) It was the kinnor also which the captives at Babylon suspended upon the willows by the Euphrates; and from the Babylonians being desirous to hear them sing to the lyre their native songs, it would seem that the Hebrews had become celebrated for their music, and particularly for their skill on the kinnor. Other notices concerning the kinnor are, that it was used in feasts (Isa. v. 12); that females sometimes played it (Isa. xxiii. 16); that it was common at Tyre (Ezek. xxvi. 13); that its notes were cheerful (Job xxi. 2; xxx. 31); and might be mournful (Isa. xvi. 11.) We believe these are the principal points of information which the Scripture offers concerning this instrument. It would be

We may mention another reason in favour of the lyre, as the national and favourite instrument of the Hebrews; this is its high antiquity, which is allowed to have far exceeded that of all other instruments in the class to which it belongs: and we know that the kinnor is one of the two instruments which the Scriptures assign to an antediluvian age. Indeed, it may be said that the lyre, in its various modifications of form, seems to have been the most common stringed instrument of all nations; whence it is impossible to suppose that it was not known to the Jews; or that, being known, it could be denoted by any other of the names of musical instruments than that of the kinnor. We are not however to suppose that the Hebrew lyre was at all times of the same form and power, or that different forms and powers did not at the same time coexist. The diversity of the forms which the lyre bore among ancient nations will appear from our wood cuts, the different representations in which have been selected with great care from ancient monuments. It is of course not supposed that all these forms were known to the Hebrews; but it is probable that many of them were so; and we may be tolerably sure that, whatever we judge as to precise details of form, the principle of the instrument was the same as these cuts exhibit, and that the applications of the principle were similarly diversified. A large proportion of our figures are Greek and Roman, and it may be asked how these can illustrate Hebrew instruments, since the Greeks certainly claimed the invention of the instruments used by themselves? The answer is easy:—There is every reason to believe that the instruments used by the Greeks and Romans did come from the East, and were originally the same as those used by the Egyptians, Chaldeans, Phœnicians, and Syrians. It is therefore not impossible to recover, through the representations left by the Greeks and Romans, forms of lyres and other instruments nearly approximating to, if not identical with, those used by the Jews and other Orientals. The Greeks, always vain, and always jealous of their own glory, asserted that most of the musical instruments used by them were the invention of their gods or ancient poets. So they said of most other inventions in science and art. But in the present instance, the Scripture alone suffices to overthrow such pretensions, since it mentions some of the instruments thus claimed as existing in times long anterior to even the ages of Greek fable. The Romans derived many of their instruments, and the traditions connected with them, from the Greeks; but their writers intimate that additions were made to them from Syria. Thus Juvenal (Sat. iii.) sneers at the influx of Syrian customs and musical instruments; and Livy (lib. xxxix.) mentions the great number of instrumental performers which came to Rome from Syria, after the wars between the Romans and Antiochus the Great. But even the Greeks are not consistent in their tales, being sometimes obliged to recur to the true source of most of their musical instruments: and this is always in the East—in some instances Phrygia or Lydia, in others Egypt,

Syria, or Persia. As for the Hebrews, we need not suppose that they were themselves the inventors of the instruments they employed. They do not appear to have been ever remarkable for invention; and the instruments of neighbouring nations are in general so similar, that it is not necessary to seek anything peculiar in them. They were probably supplied from the same sources which supplied Greece and Rome:—the Chaldeans, from among whom their fathers came; the Egyptians, among whom they so long lived; the Arabians, Syrians, and Phoenicians, by whom they were surrounded,—probably furnished them with the models of most of the instruments they possessed.

Many of the remarks we have made will serve as introductory to the general subject of musical instruments, as well as being applicable to the lyre in particular. With respect to the particular forms of lyres we shall not add much, as our cuts will convey far more satisfactory information than any quantity of written statement.

One account of the origin of the lyre, and consequently of all stringed instruments, attributes it to an observation made by Apollo upon the twanging of a bow-string. Of this view we shall, in due season, be prepared to adduce some pictorial corroborations; and at present only direct attention to the illustration which the cuts we now give afford to the other, which is that given by Apollodorus, who states that a dead tortoise having been left by the retiring waters of the Nile, the flesh was soon wasted, and nothing left within the shell but nerves and cartilages, and these being braced and contracted by desiccation were rendered sonorous. Mercury happening to strike his foot against it as he passed along was so attracted by the sound produced, that it suggested to him the idea of a lyre, which he afterwards constructed in the form of a tortoise and strung it with the dried sinews of dead animals. Assigning the discovery to some human being, this story has so much probability as can be afforded by the fact that many figures of ancient lyres, and these apparently the most ancient, do actually bear the figure of a tortoise. This lyre was called by the Greeks chelys (χελύς), and by the Romans testudo, that is, tortoise. It seems that in these the magas, or concavity formed towards the base of the lyre, to augment the sound, was really formed of the shell of the tortoise; for Pausanias speaks of a breed of tortoises on Mount Parthenius excellently suited to furnish bellies for lyres. The arms of the instrument seem to have been furnished by two horns approaching each other at the extremities which were connected by a bar from which the strings were extended to the base. The general form thus produced—and preserved in many other forms of the lyre in which the tortoise shell, or any thing in its shape, is absent—has considerable resemblance to a tortoise. But the variations in the framework of lyres are so numerous and fanciful (some are perfectly quadrangular) as to confuse any attempt at classification. And, therefore, were we to attempt a classification of ancient lyres, we would take no notice of external outline, but would first attend to those that have at the base the magas, of whatever form, for the sake of the resounding effect: then we would attend to those, more simple, which are without such an appendage. We cannot doubt that these were considered anciently to form grand distinctions, although we cannot discover the terms by which they were discriminated. Another great distinction, applicable however to lyres of every form, arose from the number of strings. The number belonging to the kinnor is nowhere expressly mentioned in Scripture. Instruments of three, six, eight, and ten strings are supposed to be mentioned. It is however uncertain whether the two middle terms refer to musical instruments at all: and although the first and last certainly do so, it is not certain that the kinnor is intended. We think, however, that the word which may be literally rendered "three," without addition, does refer to the kinnor; but without implying that there were not others with more strings. The most ancient lyre is said to have had three strings, and was very famous, the strings being managed with so much art that the instrument was said to produce more potent effects than those with a greater number of strings, afterwards introduced. The strings ultimately amounted, in some kinds of lyres, to as many as twenty; and it was so much the ancient opinion that the real effect of the music was weakened in proportion as the strings increased, that every addition was at first unpopular. The lyres of three and of seven strings were most famous. Our cuts contain some specimens of lyres with the magas at the base for the sake of resonance. These sometimes rendered the instrument so heavy that it was slung from the shoulder by a belt. Most of our readers will probably give their first attention to the Egyptian lyres which we have copied from Rosellini. It is remarkable that although the tradition we have quoted assigns the invention of the lyre to Egypt, none of the instruments which their paintings exhibit are of the tortoise kind. Their appearance is shown in the cuts; and one very remarkable distinction is, that they are generally held horizontally by the players, not perpendicularly as by the Greeks and Romans. The lyre is still in use among the Abyssinians; and it is observable that, although the sides are formed of wood, it is cut in a spiral-twisted form, to represent horns, the ancient material; while the hard gourd, from which the bellies are made, is carved and cut so as to resemble the shell of a tortoise.

We have only to add, that the ancient lyres were either played with the fingers or struck with an instrument called a plectrum. This implement seems to have been generally a piece of ivory, polished wood, or metal, in the form of a quill. Other forms are preserved, some of which seem to have been too clumsy to extract from the lyre tones of much sweetness or delicacy. Hawkins says that the lower joint of a goat's foot was sometimes employed. It appears that the plectrum was only used with the larger species of the lyre. When employed, it was held in the right hand; and while the player struck the cords with it, the fingers of the left hand also touched the strings. When the fingers only were used, those of both hands were generally employed: but some ancient lyrists were celebrated for their performances with one hand, and that too sometimes the left hand. Josephus says that the kinnorim of the Temple were played with the plectrum: and this may have been, although it appears from Scripture that the common lyres were played with the hand.

PSALM XLIV.

1 The church, in memory of former favours, 7 complaineth of their present evils. 17 Professing her integrity, 24 she fervently prayeth for succour.

To the chief Musician for the sons of Korah, Maschil.

WE have heard with our ears, O God, our fathers have told us, what work thou didst in their days, in the times of old.

2 How thou didst drive out the heathen with thy hand, and plantedst them; how thou didst afflict the people, and cast them out.

3 For they got not the land in possession by their own sword, neither did their own arm save them: but thy right hand, and thine arm, and the light of thy countenance, because thou hadst a favour unto them.

4 Thou art my King, O God: command deliverances for Jacob.

5 Through thee will we push down our enemies: through thy name will we tread them under that rise up against us.

6 For I will not trust in my bow, neither shall my sword save me.

7 But thou hast saved us from our enemies, and hast put them to shame that hated us.

8 In God we boast all the day long, and praise thy name for ever. Selah.

9 But thou hast cast off, and put us to shame; and goest not forth with our armies.

10 Thou makest us to turn back from the enemy: and they which hate us spoil for themselves.

11 Thou hast given us 'like sheep appointed for meat; and hast scattered us among the heathen.

12 Thou sellest thy people 'for nought, and dost not increase thy wealth by their price.

13 'Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us.

14 'Thou makest us a byword among the heathen, a shaking of the head among the people.

15 My confusion is continually before me, and the shame of my face hath covered me.

16 For the voice of him that reproacheth and blasphemeth; by reason of the enemy and avenger.

17 All this is come upon us; yet have we not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant.

21 Shall not God search this out ? for he knoweth the secrets of the heart.

22 'Yea, for thy sake are we killed all the day long ; we are counted as sheep for the slaughter.

23 Awake, why sleepest thou, O LORD ? arise, cast us not off for ever.

24 Wherefore hidest thou thy face, and forgettest our affliction and our oppression ?

PSALM XLIV.—Calmet attributes this Psalm to the captives in Babylon. It is evident that it describes the Hebrews as being in a most oppressed and afflicted condition, and in entire or partial captivity. But many think they can gather that, nevertheless, the Jews still had a national existence, and maintained the worship of God ; and therefore fix the date of this psalm at such different periods as they respectively conceive to meet the required condition. Bishop Patrick selects the time of Hezekiah ; while others (as Calvin) refer it to the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, in the time of the Maccabees. But this was too late ; and therefore some, who hold this opinion, suppose it was written by David in the spirit of prophecy. This is the only alternative which assigns it to David.

Verse 11. "Like sheep appointed for meat."—This very strongly and strikingly intimates the extent of the persecution and slaughter to which they were exposed ; there being no creature in the world of which such vast numbers are constantly slaughtered as of sheep for the subsistence of man. The constancy of such slaughter is also mentioned in verse 22 as illustrating the continual oppression to which the Hebrews were subject.

12. "Dost not increase thy wealth by their price."—The whole verse probably refers to their being sold for slaves. If so, the first clause would intimate that they were sold for a very inconsiderable price ; which price, whether great or small, could not (as the present clause intimates) be any increase of wealth to the Almighty.

25. "Our belly cleaveth unto the earth."—This, as figurative of a depressed and degraded condition, is probably derived from the crawling of serpents and other reptiles upon their belly. So God cursed the serpent—"Upon thy belly shalt thou go," &c. (Gen. iii. 14.)

PSALM XLV.

15 With gladness and rejoicing shall they be brought: they shall enter into the king's palace.

16 Instead of thy fathers shall be thy children, whom thou mayest make princes in all the earth.

17 I will make thy name to be remembered in all generations: therefore shall the people praise thee for ever and ever.

TITLE. "Upon Shoshannim."—This is very commonly translated "Upon the Lilies;" but what the Lilies are intended to denote has been very variously understood. We shall not enlarge on this point however, as the alternatives of interpretation (equally applicable here) have already been sufficiently stated in the note on the title of Psalm xxii. The word seems so obviously to mean "Lilies" (which in the singular is שושן shushan), that we are disinclined to go out of the way to שש shesh, "six," in order to obtain the sense of "six-stringed instruments." It is however not impossible that a musical instrument should be called a "Lily;" and if the name had reference to the form, it might perhaps have been a cymbal. If the word occurred alone, one might suppose the name of the tune to be intended; but this appears to be otherwise mentioned under the name Maschil. The whole matter is however attended with great uncertainty; and while we feel that "Lilies" are to be understood by "Shoshannim," we must leave the reader to apply, in the present instance, the alternatives of explanation which we have stated in the note on the title of Psalm xxii.

—"A song of loves."—So called, doubtless, with reference to its subject, which is obviously a marriage. Some render, as Waterland, "Song of the beloved maids," that is, the bridesmaids—the virgins who were wont to attend the bride, and sing the nuptial song. Gesenius however regards it as a commendatory title, "a lovely song." The word rendered "love" is ידית jediduth, and is therefore supposed by some also to bear an allusion to the name Jedidiah, which Nathan gave to Solomon. It is generally conceived that this psalm was probably composed on occasion of Solomon's marriage, probably to Pharaoh's daughter; although it is on all hands allowed to have a much higher prophetic reference to the Messiah. This is indeed allowed by the best Jewish interpreters, and fully believed by all Christian churches. "We must say," says Patrick, "as our Saviour did in another case 'Behold, a greater than Solomon is here.'"

Verse 8. "Myrrh."—See the note on Gen. xliii. 11.

"Aloes."—The word is אהלית ahaloth, the same that is rendered in other places by "lign-aloes." The word has generally been understood by both Jewish and Christian writers, to denote a fragrant wood from India. No objection can arise from the fact that the tree does not grow in Western Asia, for it is mentioned as a costly aromatic, and such the Hebrews were accustomed to obtain from the Arabians and others, who probably got them from India. It is true that the tree furnishes a comparison to Baalam in Num. xxiv. 6; but this scarcely proves, as some suppose, that the ahalim were therefore necessarily Syrian trees; for the precious aromatic being doubtless known, and reports concerning the tree which afforded it current, it might be alluded to in Hebrew poetry as our poets speak of the palm. Assuming this conclusion, the product in question may, with every probability, be identified with the fragrant wood from India (i. e., from India by way of Arabia) which Dioscorides mentions under the name of agallochum. This name is, with slight variation, the same which the Arabians and Persians apply to the eagle-wood of India, to which, on account of some fancied analogy of sound, the name of "aloe" and "aloes-wood" has been popularly, but very improperly given; while, in scientific works, the proper name of agallocha has been retained to distinguish the family of Indian plants by which the eagle-wood is afforded. Of these there are several species: but the wood to which the name of Eagle-wood is most frequently applied, is that of the Garo of Malacca, figured and described by Lamarck under the name of Aquilaria Malaccensis. This was introduced by Dr. Roxburgh into the botanic garden of Calcutta, and did not appear to be distinguishable from specimens of the Ugoor, a large tree which is a native of the mountainous tracts east and south-east from Silhet, between 24° and 25° of N. lat., and which flowers in April and ripens its seed in August. As the Malacca specimen had not flowered, Dr. Roxburgh was not quite assured of its identity with those from Silhet, and which he therefore distinguished under the name of Aquilaria agallocha, as another species of the same genus. "There can be little doubt," he says, "that this is the tree which furnishes the real calambac or agallochum of the ancients." He adds that the eagle-wood imported by sea, from the eastward, to Calcutta is deemed inferior to that from Silhet. [See "Flora Indica," ii. 423; and "Penny Cyclopædia," Art. "Eagle-wood."] The full aromatic power which lies in the wood is not so well developed in every plant as to render the aloe-wood in its best state other than precious even in India, where it is said to have been anciently more precious than gold. The trees producing this precious wood are accounted sacred by the Indians, and are not felled without religious ceremonies. The Jews believe that the ahalim grew in the garden of Eden, which is also believed by the Orientals of the tree which affords the eagle-wood; whence it is also called "the tree of Paradise." The strong fragrance of its wood not only recommended it as a perfume of the first class for clothes and apartments, but caused it to be offered as incense in the heathen sacrifices. It was also highly valued for its cordial properties as a medicine. Captain Saris thus describes the appearance and qualities of the eagle-wood, in teaching traders how to select that of the best description: "Lignum-aloes, a wood so called by the English, is named by the Malays garrd. The best sort comes from Malacca, Siam, and Cambaya. Choose that which is in large round sticks and very massy, being black, marbled with ash-coloured veins, somewhat bitter in taste, and is likewise of an odoriferous scent, and that burns like pitch in bubbles, a splinter being laid upon a fire coal; for if it be good, it will not leave frying till it be consumed, yielding a most grateful odour."

"Cassia."—See the note to Exod. xxx. 24.

Laurus Cassia.

"Ivory palaces."—The precise reference is not very well determined; but supposing it to be, as is usually understood, to the royal palaces, it would of course intimate that ivory figured so conspicuously in the interior decorations, as to entitle particular structures to be characterised as "ivory palaces" by way of distinction. It will be recollected that the practice of inlaying or covering the walls of state apartments with valuable metals, woods, and other substances, was in very extensive use in the ancient Oriental and classical nations. The tabernacle and the temple were inlaid with gold, for example. Instances of the same taste occur in the classical poets, in which we find ivory mentioned among the substances thus employed. It is thus mentioned by Homer, in alluding to the splendid palace of Menelaus. Lucan, in describing the banqueting-hall of Cleopatra, queen of Egypt, affords some interesting intimations of the extent and diversified forms in which this practice of inlaying or covering was carried.

"Rich as some fane by lavish zealots rear'd,
For the proud banquet stood the hall prepared:
Thick golden plates the latent beams infold,
And the high roof was fretted o'er with gold:
Of solid marble all, the walls were made,
And onyx ev'n the meaner floor inlaid;
While porphyry and agate, round the court,
In massy columns rose, a proud support.
Of solid ebony each post was wrought,
From swarthy Meroë profusely brought:
With ivory was the entrance crusted o'er,
And polish'd tortoise hid each shining door:
While on the cloudy spots enchased was seen,
The lively emerald's never-fading green."

Pharsalia, x. 119 et seq.

Ultimately, among the Romans, ivory inlaying seems to have become rather a common method of ornamenting the interiors of mansions owned by the wealthy. Horace mentions it as an evidence of his humble way of life that, "no walls inlaid with ivory adorned his house" (Ode 18, b. ii.). It will be observed that in the extract from Lucan, ivory is mentioned next to ebony; and as we find the two substances frequently mentioned in this connection, we may infer that they were associated when used for interior ornament: and this was doubtless for the sake of the effect obtained from the contrast, as intimated by Virgil (Æn. x. 135), when he tells us that "the Dardan boy," with "his radiant temples bare," shone

—"Like wrought ivory, when the workman's sleight Circles with ebony the glossy white."—SYMMONS.

We would therefore venture to suggest that the ebony was employed to form a sort of panel-work, in numerous compartments, disposed in complicated but regular forms, the ribs, or framework, being of ebony, and the compartments filled up with the polished ivory. This idea is suggested by the frequent occasion we have had to notice such panel-work in different parts of Western Asia, particularly as used for ceilings. In this case, however, wood only is used—often valuable wood, or, if not, painted, the ribs being gilt, or painted with a colour different from that of the body of the work, so as to suggest the idea of a different substance. The Orientals still exhibit much partiality for inlaying their grand apartments; but we are not aware that ivory is now employed for this purpose. Looking-glass is commonly chosen; and some of the most splendid halls of regal palaces are thus inlaid. Ornamental work in stucco is also much employed in interior decoration: and the manner in which certain prominent parts are covered with gilding, other parts richly covered, with intervals of clear white, has often suggested ideas of the ivory, ebony, sapphire, and fretted gold which ancient descriptions indicate.

13, 14. "Her clothing is of wrought gold... she shall be brought... in raiment of needlework."—Both expressions appear to refer to the same dress, and would seem to imply that the garment was embroidered with figures worked with threads of gold. It will be remembered that the bride in this "song of loves" is supposed to have been Pharaoh's daughter, and if so, her costly dress was doubtless of Egyptian manufacture, and, as a rich foreign article, would naturally attract the more attention. The Egyptians were in ancient times celebrated for their manufactures in linen, and the Scripture itself bears repeated testimony to this fact, as we shall have occasion to point out as we proceed. Confining our present attention to the intimation in the text, we may observe that some mummies have been found (as that described by Mrs. Lushington) wrapped up in garments curiously wrought with gold lace. The embroidered work of Egypt is mentioned in Ezek. xxvii. 7, and is probably analogous in some degree to the "needle work" to which the text before us refers. At the present day, as well in Egypt as in the countries of Western Asia, it is common among the ladies, even of the highest rank, to employ much of their time in embroidering linen and cotton tissues, particularly veils and handkerchiefs, with threads of silver or gold and silk of various colours. How much such work was prized in times still earlier than those to which this psalm refers, appears from the remarkably repeated mention of it which Sisera's mother is represented as making when anticipating the glorious spoil which she expected her conquering son to bring home: "A prey of divers colours, a prey of divers colours of needlework, of divers colours of needlework on both sides, meet for the necks of them that take the spoil." (Judges v. 30.)

PSALM XLVI.—This psalm is generally supposed to have been composed by David on occasion of the victory over the Philistines and Moabites, recorded in 2 Sam. viii. 1, 2. Calmet, however, assigns it to the Captivity.

Verse 9. "He breaketh the bow...cutteth the spear...burneth the chariot."—This probably alludes to a custom of collecting the arms and armour of the victors into a heap, and setting it on fire. This was particularly done when the victors were unable to remove them or so to dispose of them as to preclude the danger of their being again used against themselves. This was also a Roman custom, and is alluded to by Virgil. (Æn. viii. 560). A medal struck under Vespasian to commemorate the termination of his wars, represents Peace holding an olive-branch with one hand, and in the other a lighted torch, with which she sets fire to a heap of armour. As a symbolical action, representing the conclusion of wars, this is very expressive.

PSALM XLVIII.—This psalm appears to commemorate some deliverance which the Lord granted to Jerusalem after it had been assaulted or threatened by some powerful confederacy. Some think that it refers to the ineffectual attempt of Rezin, king of Syria, and Pekah, king of Israel (Isa. vii); but its occasion is more generally supposed to have been the victory which the Lord gave Jehoshaphat over the Moabites and Ammonites when the victors returned to Jerusalem “with psalteries and harps and trumpets” (2 Chron. xx). Calmet thinks this and the preceding psalm were composed for the dedication of the second temple.

Verse 2. “Mount Zion.”—For a general statement concerning Mount Zion, see the note to 2 Sam. v. We had some intention of examining the grounds on which Dr. Clarke ventured to question the established conclusion concerning the site of Mount Zion; but as his arguments have had little weight with subsequent travellers, and as we should conclude such an investigation by declaring our adherence to the general opinion, it seems scarcely desirable to open the discussion in our pages. We have therefore the less to add to the particulars already given at p. 98 of the present volume.

We have already mentioned that Mount Zion is nearly excluded from the walls of the present city. That part which is within it is occupied by an Armenian convent, with its church and gardens. Chateaubriand describes the hill as of a yellowish colour and barren appearance, opening in the form of a crescent towards the city. “From the top of the hill you see, to the south, the valley of Ben-Hinnom; beyond this, the Field of Blood, purchased with the thirty pieces of silver given to Judas, the hill of Evil Counsel, the tombs of the judges, and the whole desert towards Hebron and Bethlehem: to the north, the wall of Jerusalem, which passes over the top of Zion, intercepts the view of the city, the site of which gradually slopes from this place towards the valley of Jehoshaphat.”

SUMMIT OF MOUNT ZION, WITH THE MOSQUE OF DAVID.—FROM AN ORIGINAL DRAWING.

On passing from the city by the Zion gate, the first object that meets the eye is a large dingy-looking Turkish mosque, situated in the middle of Mount Zion, and called the Mosque of David, and believed to have been built over his tomb, which is still exhibited in the interior, and held in the highest possible veneration by the Moslems. The Santons belonging to this mosque are the most powerful in Jerusalem. Part of this building was anciently the church of the Cenaculum, where it is said that our Saviour ate the Last Supper with his disciples: and Dr. Richardson was shown into an upper room in the front of the building, which both the Santon and the ciceroni assured him to be the identical apartment in which that memorable event took place; forgetting that "Ruin's merciless ploughshare" did, after that, more than once pass over "the joy of the whole earth." To the right of this mosque, and between it and the city gate, there is a small Armenian chapel, said to be built on the spot where once stood the palace of Caiaphas. It is remarkable for nothing but an unpolished block of compact limestone, the same with the rock on which the city stands, and which is built in an altar at the upper end of it. This stone is alleged to be that with which the sepulchre of Christ was closed; and is kissed and caressed, like other precious relics, by the pilgrims.

A few paces to the west of the chapel there is a Christian burying-ground, among the tombstones of which there are several with inscriptions in the English language. A little to the south of this is shown the spot where the Virgin Mary is said to have expired; and on the north side of the gate is shown the place where the cock crew to Peter.

These are the points of interest to which the local guides exclusively direct the attention of the pilgrim to Mount Zion. Dr. Richardson, from whose excellent 'Travels' the above details are chiefly drawn, thus concludes his account of this interesting spot. "At the time when I visited this sacred ground, one part of it supported a crop of barley; another was undergoing the labour of the plough, and the soil turned up consisted of stone and lime mixed with earth, such as is usually met with in the foundations of ruined cities. It is nearly a mile in circumference, is highest on the west side, and towards the east falls down in broad terraces on the upper part of the mountain, and narrow ones on the side, as it slopes down towards the brook Kedron. Each terrace is divided from the one above it by a low wall, built of the ruins of this celebrated spot. The terraces near the bottom of the hill are still used as gardeus, and are watered from the pool of Siloam. They belong chiefly to the inhabitants of the small village of Siloa, immediately opposite. We have here another remarkable instance of the special fulfilment of prophecy:—'Therefore shall Zion, for your sake, be ploughed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps.' " (Micah iii. 12).

PSALM XLIX.

1 An earnest persuasion to build the faith of resurrection, not on worldly power, but on God. 16 Worldly prosperity is not to be admired.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm for the sons of Korah.

HEAR this, all ye people; give ear, all ye inhabitants of the world:

2 Both low and high, rich and poor, together.

3 My mouth shall speak of wisdom; and the meditation of my heart shall be of understanding.

4 ²I will incline mine ear to a parable: I will open my dark saying upon the harp.

5 Wherefore should I fear in the days of evil, when the iniquity of my heels shall compass me about?

6 They that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches;

7 None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him:

8 (For the redemption of their soul is precious, and it ceaseth for ever:)

9 That he should still live for ever, and not see corruption.

10 For he seeth that wise men die, likewise the fool and the brutish person perish, and leave their wealth to others.

11 Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever, and their dwelling places ³to all generations; they call their lands after their own names.

12 Nevertheless man being in honour abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish.

13 This their way is their folly: yet their posterity ⁴approve their sayings. Selah.

14 Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their ⁵beauty shall consume ⁶in the grave from their dwelling.

15 But God will redeem my soul ⁷from the power of ⁸the grave: for he shall receive me. Selah.

16 Be not thou afraid when one is made rich, when the glory of his house is increased;

17 ⁹For when he dieth he shall carry nothing away: his glory shall not descend after him.

18 Though ¹⁰while he lived he blessed his soul: and men will praise thee, when thou doest well to thyself.

19 ¹¹He shall go to the generation of his fathers; they shall never see light.

20 Man that is in honour, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish.

PSALM XLIX.—Nothing is known, or conjectured with tolerable probability, concerning the author, time, or occasion of this excellent psalm. Calmet supposes of this, as well as of others with a similar superscription, that it was composed by (not for) one of the sons of Korah, during the Captivity, for the use and comfort of his captive brethren. Others ascribe it to David. Ten psalms bear the superscription “For the sons of Korah:” but from the uncertainty of the prefixed preposition (ל) it has always been doubted whether these psalms were written by or for them. It seems most probable that these psalms were composed by them, from certain peculiarities of style in which they agree with each other, and differ from the psalms which bear the name of David. Who the sons of Korah were is not very clear: but it is generally supposed that they were the descendants of that Korah, the distinguished Levite who perished, in the rebellion in the wilderness, with Dathan and Abiram. (Num. xvi.) It is certain from the record of that transaction, that all Korah’s children did not perish with him; and we learn from 1 Chron. vi. 22, 37, that some of their descendants were among those who presided over the Temple music. These circumstances strengthen the probability that to the descendants of those whom the Lord’s mercy spared from the ruin of their father’s house, we owe some of the most beautiful of all the divine songs which the book of Psalms contains.

PSALM L.

1 The majesty of God in the church. 5 His order to gather saints. 7 The pleasure of God is not in ceremonies, 14 but in sincerity of obedience.

A Psalm of Asaph.

THE mighty God, even the LORD, hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof.

2 Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined.

3 Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him.

4 He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people.

5 Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.

6 And the heavens shall declare his righteousness: for God is judge himself. Selah.

7 Hear, O my people, and I will speak; O Israel, and I will testify against thee: I am God, even thy God.

8 I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices or thy burnt offerings, to have been continually before me.

9 I will take no bullock out of thy house, nor he goats out of thy folds.

10 For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills.

11 I know all the fowls of the mountains: and the wild beasts of the field are mine.

12 If I were hungry, I would not tell thee: for the world is mine, and the fulness thereof.

13 Will I eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats?

14 Offer unto God thanksgiving; and pay thy vows unto the most high:

15 And call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.

16 But unto the wicked God saith, What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my covenant in thy mouth?

17 ‘Seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behind thee.

18 When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him, and *’*hast been partaker with adulterers.

19 ‘Thou givest thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit.

20 Thou sittest and speakest against thy brother; thou slanderest thine own mother’s son.

21 These things hast thou done, and I kept silence; thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself: but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes.

22 Now consider this, ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver.

23 Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me: and to him *’*that ordereth his conversation aright will I shew the salvation of God.

TITLE. The prepositional prefix rendered “of” in the present superscription is the same (ל) that is given as “for” in that of the preceding psalm. The same considerations are therefore here applicable, and incline us to conclude that the psalms which bear the name of Asaph were written by him. Asaph is frequently mentioned in the historical books as the chief, or one of the chiefs, of the choirs of Israel in the time of David. The psalms ascribed to him are twelve (l. lxxiii.—lxxxiii.) Two of these however (lxxiv. lxxix.) could not have been written by him or in his time; as their contents evidently assign them to the period of the Captivity. The subject of Asaph's psalms are doctrinal or preceptive: their style, though less sweet than that of David, is much more vehement, and little inferior to the grandest parts of the prophecies of Isaiah and Habakkuk. The present psalm in particular is characterized by a very deep strain of thought, and lofty tone of sentiment. See Horne's 'Introduction,' vol. iv. p. 102. Bishop Lowth has some interesting observations on the poetical character of this psalm in his 27th Lecture.

PSALM LI.

1 David prayeth for remission of sins, whereof he maketh a deep confession. 6 He prayeth for sanctification. 16 God delighteth not in sacrifice, but in sincerity. 18 He prayeth for the church.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, 'when Nathan the prophet came unto him, after he had gone in to Bath-sheba.

HAVE mercy upon me, O God, according to thy lovingkindness: according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions.

2 Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin.

3 For I acknowledge my transgressions: and my sin is ever before me.

4 Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight: 'that thou mightest be justified when thou speakest, and be clear when thou judgest.

5 Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother 'conceive me.

6 Behold thou desirest truth in the inward parts: and in the hidden part thou shalt make me to know wisdom.

7 'Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean: wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

8 Make me to hear joy and gladness; that the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice.

9 Hide thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities.

10 Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew 'a right spirit within me.

11 Cast me not away from thy presence; and take not thy holy spirit from me.

12 Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free spirit.

13 Then will I teach transgressors thy ways; and sinners shall be converted unto thee.

14 Deliver me from 'bloodguiltiness, O God, thou God of my salvation: and my tongue shall sing aloud of thy righteousness.

15 O LORD, open thou my lips; and my mouth shall shew forth thy praise.

16 For thou desirest not sacrifice; 'else would I give it: thou delightest not in burnt offering.

17 'The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise.

18 Do good in thy good pleasure unto Zion: build thou the walls of Jerusalem.

19 Then shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifices of righteousness, with burnt offering and whole burnt offering: then shall they offer bullocks upon thine altar.

TITLE. It is the general opinion that this pathetic psalm was composed on the occasion which the title indicates. It is so well suited to the circumstances, that the only doubt which has been raised on the subject proceeds from verses 18 and 19, which certainly seem, at the first view, more applicable to the time of the Captivity than to that of David. If no other reference could be found, we should rather incline to Venema's opinion that these two verses were added after the Jews had returned to captivity, than to that of Calmet, who assigns the whole psalm to that period. These verses appear to have such a want of connection with what precedes as strongly to sanction the former opinion. However, both these verses may have been written by David under some such interpretation as that which supposes him to refer to the completion of the walls which he had commenced, with perhaps a prospective reference in the last verse to that future Temple in which he was so deeply interested.

Verse 7. "Purge me with hyssop."—The Psalmist here refers to the ceremonies used in the purification from leprosy, as described in Lev. xiv.

enemy—implying the most humble subjection of the latter, and the most complete and triumphant superiority of the former. We have already illustrated this custom. The allusion to it is almost everywhere preserved in popular language, in which the oppressed are said to be trodden under feet, and so on. In the East, it is used however less to denote oppression than in acknowledging or claiming a proper superiority or subjection.

Mr. Roberts illustrates this from the popular phraseology of the Hindoos. "The worshippers of the gods often say in their devotions: 'We put your feet upon our heads.' 'Truly the feet of Siva are upon my head.' 'My gooroo, my gooroo, have I not put your feet upon my head?' 'My lord, believe not that man; your feet have always been upon my head.' 'Ah! what a mighty king was he; all things were under his feet.'"

PSALM IX.

1 David praiseth God for executing of judgment. 11 He inciteth others to praise him. 13 He prayeth that he may have cause to praise him.

To the chief Musician upon Muth-labben, A Psalm of David.

I WILL praise thee, O LORD, with my whole heart; I will shew forth all thy marvellous works.

2 I will be glad and rejoice in thee: I will sing praise to thy name, O thou most High.

3 When mine enemies are turned back, they shall fall and perish at thy presence.

4 For 'thou hast maintained my right and my cause; thou satest in the throne judging 'right.

5 Thou hast rebuked the heathen, thou hast destroyed the wicked, thou hast put out their name for ever and ever.

6 'O thou enemy, destructions are come to a perpetual end: and thou hast destroyed cities; their memorial is perished with them.

7 But the LORD shall endure for ever: he hath prepared his throne for judgment.

8 And 'he shall judge the world in righteousness, he shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness.

9 'The LORD also will be 'a refuge for the oppressed, a refuge in times of trouble.

10 And they that know thy name will put their trust in thee: for thou, LORD, hast not forsaken them that seek thee.

11 Sing praises to the LORD, which dwelleth in Zion: declare among the people his doings.

12 'When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them: he forgetteth not the cry of the 'humble.

13 Have mercy upon me, O LORD; consider my trouble which I suffer of them that hate me, thou that liftest me up from the gates of death:

14 That I may shew forth all thy praise in the gates of the daughter of Zion: I will rejoice in thy salvation.

15 'The heathen are sunk down in the pit that they made: in the net which they hid is their own foot taken.

16 The LORD is known by the judgment which he executeth: the wicked is snared in the work of his own hands. Higgaion. Selah.

17 The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God.

18 For the needy shall not alway be forgotten: the expectation of the poor shall not perish for ever.

19 Arise, O LORD; let not man prevail: let the heathen be judged in thy sight.

20 Put them in fear, O LORD: that the nations may know themselves to be but men. Selah.

TITLE, "Upon Muth-labben."—These words have been very variously read. They are על מות לבן al muth labben as read by our translators. But as the first two words occur as one word in the title to Ps. xlv., and as a great number of manuscripts and editions have them as one here, we will take them to be so understood. Then עלמות almuth, as the plural of עלמה almah, denotes "damsels" or "virgins," and may be supposed to refer to a company or choir of female singers or musicians; then the word לבן la-ben, meaning in the obvious signification, "with a youth," we seem to arrive at the signification that the words indicate the musical performers of the psalm, and that it was intended to be sung or performed by a chorus of damsels, to whom the youths answered in alternate responses. The frequent changes of person in this psalm favour the conclusion that it is of this responsive kind. Calmet, however, who concedes that almuth refers to a band of maidens, conceives that la-ben means "to Ben;" for Ben happens to be the name of one of the chief musicians enumerated in 1 Chron. xv. 18; and finding him to be thus associated with the almuth, he may be concluded to have been the superintendent or director of the performances of the female choir. These two seem the best alternatives; and we scarcely know which of them to consider preferable.

PSALM X.

1 David complaineth to God of the outrage of the wicked.
 12 He prayeth for remedy. 16 He professeth his confidence.

WHY standest thou afar off, O LORD? why hidest thou thyself in times of trouble?

2 'The wicked in his pride doth persecute the poor: 'let them be taken in the devices that they have imagined.

3 For the wicked boasteth of his 'heart's desire, and 'blesseth the covetous, whom the LORD abhorreth.

4 The wicked, through the pride of his countenance, will not seek after God: 'God is not in all his 'thoughts.

5 His ways are always grievous; thy judgments are far above out of his sight: as for all his enemies, he puffeth at them.

7 'His mouth is full of cursing and 'deceit and fraud: under his tongue is mischief and 'vanity.

8 He sitteth in the lurking places of the villages: in the secret places doth he murder the innocent: his eyes 'are privily set against the poor.

9 He lieth in wait 'secretly as a lion in his den: he lieth in wait to catch the poor: he doth catch the poor, when he draweth him into his net.

10 'He croucheth, and humbleth himself, that the poor may fall 'by his strong ones.

11 He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten: 'he hideth his face; he will never see it.

12 Arise, O LORD; O God, lift up thine hand: forget not the 'humble.

13 Wherefore doth the wicked contemn God? he hath said in his heart, Thou wilt not require it.

14 Thou hast seen it; for thou beholdest mischief and spite, to requite it with thy hand: the poor 'committeth himself unto thee; thou art the helper of the fatherless.

15 Break thou the arm of the wicked and the evil man: seek out his wickedness till thou find none.

16 'The LORD is King for ever and ever: the heathen are perished out of his land.

PSALM X.—This psalm is joined to and a continuation of the preceding in the Septuagint and Vulgate versions and those by which they are followed. Hence in these versions the numeration of the psalms differs from ours; for psalms ix. and x. being united, their account is one number below ours on to cxiv. and cxv., which also are united. This would put their enumeration two figures below ours; but, immediately after, the Psalm cxvi. is divided into two, which restores the original difference of one only: and at last all difference is removed and the number of psalms equalized by the division of Psalm cxlvii. into two. Our version follows the original Hebrew. It is possible that the present psalm was originally joined to the preceding, on account of its having no title, and that the present division is correct. If so, it is not known when, or by whom it was written. The Jews indeed have a rule, that when we come to a psalm that has no title, or any number of such psalms, we are to go on ascribing them to the author of the last preceding psalm that had a title. This rule will however by no means hold good, as we shall have occasion to show when we come to the psalms ascribed to Moses. Many however conclude that the present psalm was written by David, perhaps during the persecutions of Saul, although Calmet and others incline to assign it to the captives at Babylon, or to the period between the Assyrian and Babylonian captivities.

Verse 5. "He puffeth at them."—Puffing is in the East an expression of supreme contempt. Indeed, such terms as "poh," "pshaw," "pish," and so on, are but modifications of the same meaning, softened by articulation. The Persians say "Poof!" as an expression of contempt.

PSALM XI.

1 David encourageth himself in God against his enemies. 4
The providence and justice of God.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

VOL. III.

C

6 Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and ³an horrible tempest: this shall be the portion of their cup.

7 For the righteous LORD loveth righteousness; his countenance doth behold the upright.

PSALM XI.—David is generally supposed to have written this Psalm during the persecutions of Saul—probably when his friends advised him to seek for refuge in the mountains of Judah, as he did ultimately. The three first verses seem to contain the advice, and the remainder David's reply.

Verse 4.—“His eyes behold, his eyelids try.”—This reference to the eyelids, or rather “eyebrows,” is very striking when we recollect that the eyebrows are sensibly affected and visibly exerted when we regard any object earnestly. In Homer and other ancient poets there are many fine allusions to the action of the eyebrows.

PSALM XIV.—This Psalm is usually supposed to have been composed by David, on the revolt of Absalom. Theodoret supposes it refers to the invasion of Judea by Sennacherib, with the blasphemy and menaces of Rabshakeh. Calmet, Mudge, and others, think it belongs to the captivity in Babylon; and the latter infers, from verses 4 and 5, that it arose from a particular incident, when the heathen, in the midst of impious carousels, were thrown into some great terror. This might refer to the impious feast of Belshazzar when the sacred utensils were profaned, probably in studied insult to the God of Israel; and where the appearance of the handwriting on the wall filled them with alarm and consternation. There is however, altogether, something very uncertain in these conjectural appropriations of particular Psalms.

⁵ There 'were they in great fear: for God is in the generation of the righteous.

Verse 4. "Eat up my people as they eat bread."—"That vile king eats the people as he does his rice," is adduced, by Mr. Roberts, as a parallel expression, in use among the Hindoos.

PSALM XV.

David describeth a citizen of Zion.

A Psalm of David.

nor doeth evil to his neighbour, nor 'taketh up a reproach against his neighbour.

⁴ In whose eyes a vile person is condemned; but he honoureth them that fear the LORD. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not.

⁵ 'He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved.

PSALM XV.—Most commentators conceive that this Psalm was composed by David when the ark was brought to Mount Zion. The conclusion, however, "He that doeth these things shall never be moved"—that is, probably, never removed or expelled from his native land—would rather suggest that it was composed after the ten tribes had been carried away by Shalmaneser, if not during the Babylonian Captivity. Calmet is of this opinion; but he attributes a far greater number of the Psalms to the Captivity than perhaps most readers would be willing to admit.

TITLE, "Michtam."—Besides the present Psalm, this title is prefixed to five others; namely, lvi.—lx. The word (מִכְתָּם) is rendered στήλο-γραφία, "inscription upon a column," by the Septuagint; probably understanding such a pillar as conquerors were wont to erect, or else to indicate that it deserved to be inscribed in characters more than usually durable. The Targum also renders, "a right engraving." The word michtam seems to be equivalent to mithchab (מִתְחָב) by the commutation of מ and ב at the end; and hence to mean "a writing," or, by way of eminence, "a song." Many, however, derive the word from כֶּתֶם (chetem), "gold;" and hence understand the Psalms distinguished by this title to be called "golden psalms," by way of eminence. But this, though better than some other conjectures that have been proposed, seems rather forced; for, as Gesenius observes, "כֶּתֶם is barely a poetical name for gold, and there appears no special reason in these psalms for this designation." It is however hazardous to determine the meaning of the titles from the internal evidence of the Psalms; for, as Dodd properly states, "it is very certain that many of the titles were either wrongly placed at first, or have suffered a confusion since: which observation will apply to the authors and subjects, as they stand at present, prefixed to each psalm."

Aben Ezra applies here also his general observation, which we have already mentioned, that this and other strange words are the names of old melodies. There is no Jewish commentator whose opinions in such matters are entitled to greater respect than those of Aben Ezra; and the more we investigate the subject, the more we incline to his opinion, although we have not attained such entire conviction as to make this exclude all other explanations. Rosenmüller, in a passage which we find translated in Burder's 'Oriental Customs,' states the opinions of two German writers, Forkel and I. C. Faber, from which it appears that they both took the same view with the Jewish Rabbi. Forkel considers it more than probable that the Hebrews had not a particular tune for each poem. We find this want of sufficient melodies in all ancient nations, among whom music had attained only a moderate degree of cultivation. The case was the same through the middle ages; when not only spiritual but worldly songs were sung after a few generally known melodies. This custom is still found in countries where there is no other music than that of the national songs; for example, in New Zealand (see Forster's 'Voyage'), Siberia, Tartary, and in all the East. Everywhere the national melodies were fixed once for all, and unchangeable, and all national new songs must be contrived to suit them. And indeed, in our own collections of psalms and hymns, for how large a proportion of them are not a few well-known tunes made to serve? "In general," says Forkel, "popular manners and customs are of so durable and unchangeable a nature, are propagated from nation to nation with so little of change for thousands of years, or arise with as inconsiderable differences among every nation, on similar occasions and in a similar manner, that I am very much inclined to believe that not only the Hebrew custom of the superscriptions to the hymns and songs, but also many other peculiarities belonging to them, existed through the greater part of the middle ages, and even subsist in modern times." He refers to the instance of the master-singers of the middle ages who used similar superscriptions referring to some particular melodies to which poems were to be sung—as "In the quick plough tune," "In the high cheerful praise tune," &c. The melodies thus referred to as examples are unknown, while the superscriptions themselves remain intelligible. The analogy would explain why the Hebrew superscriptions, if we suppose them correctly explained, have often no assignable connection with the sense of the psalm which follows, as well or better than the conjecture that the superscriptions have in some instances been removed from the psalms to which they were originally prefixed. The view which we have thus stated, chiefly after Forkel, had also been taken in part by Faber, particularly as to the illustration to be derived from the practice of the master-singers, and that some of the titles were in like manner indicative of melodies at that time well known. One of the master-singer superscriptions, "The golden tune," answers remarkably to one of the interpretations which, as we have seen, has been assigned to that of the present psalm.

PSALM XVII.

¹ David, in confidence of his integrity, craveth defence of God against his enemies. ¹⁰ He sheweth their pride, craft, and eagerness. ¹³ He prayeth against them in confidence of his hope.

A Prayer of David.

HEAR 'the right, O LORD, attend unto my cry, give ear unto my prayer, that goeth 'not out of feigned lips.

2 Let my sentence come forth from thy presence; let thine eyes behold the things that are equal.

3 Thou hast proved mine heart; thou hast visited me in the night; thou hast tried me, and shalt find nothing; I am purposed that my mouth shall not transgress.

4 Concerning the works of men, by the word of thy lips I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer.

5 Hold up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps 'slip not.

6 I have called upon thee, for thou wilt hear me, O God: incline thine ear unto me, and hear my speech.

7 Shew thy marvellous lovingkindness, O thou 'that savest by thy right hand them which put their trust in thee from those that rise up against them.

8 Keep me as the apple of the eye, hide me under the shadow of thy wings,

9 From the wicked 'that oppress me, from 'my deadly enemies, who compass me about.

10 They are inclosed in their own fat: with their mouth they speak proudly.

11 They have now compassed us in our steps: they have set their eyes bowing down to the earth;

12 'Like as a lion that is greedy of his prey, and as it were a young lion 'lurking in secret places.

13 Arise, O LORD, 'disappoint him, cast him down: deliver my soul from the wicked, ¹⁰*which* is thy sword:

14 ¹¹From men which are thy hand, O LORD, from men of the world, which have their portion in this life, and whose belly thou fillest with thy hid treasure: ¹²they are full of children, and leave the rest of their substance to their babes.

¹² Or, their children are full.

Verse 8. "Keep me as the apple of the eye, hide me under the shadow of thy wings."—No one fails to observe the beauty of these simple images. The first evidently refers to the solicitude with which one guards that most precious and delicate organ, the eye, in time of danger; but it is not agreed whether the other refers to the outspread wings of the cherubim over the mercy-seat, or to the tender assiduities of the parent hen in covering her brood with her wings. We know the latter circumstance supplied a touching image to our Saviour (Matt. xxiii. 37).

10. "In their own fat."—We know that, in the figurative language of Scripture, fatness denotes pride. This connection of ideas is still maintained in the East, where, when it is intended to indicate a proud man, he is said to be fat, or to look fat, whether really so or not. In China the ideas of dignity and fatness are so closely associated, that no man who is lean can well hope to obtain a place of authority or distinction.

13, 14. "Thy sword...thy hand," &c.—Dr. Hammond renders these clauses more intelligibly, "Deliver my soul from the wicked by thy sword, and by thy hand from the men of this age. Houbigant, Bishops Lowth and Hare, and Boothroyd, take the same view.

—"Thy hid treasure."—Better, "choice things," or "dainties."

PSALM XVIII.

David praiseth God for his manifold and marvellous blessings.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, the servant of the LORD, who spake unto the LORD the words of 'this song in the day that the LORD delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul: And he said,

I WILL love thee, O LORD, my strength.

2 The LORD is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, 'my strength, in whom I will trust; my buckler, and the horn of my salvation, and my high tower.

3 I will call upon the LORD, who is worthy to be praised: so shall I be saved from mine enemies.

4 ³The sorrows of death compassed me, and the floods of 'ungodly men made me afraid.

5 The 'sorrows of hell compassed me about: the snares of death prevented me.

6 In my distress I called upon the LORD, and cried unto my God: he heard my voice out of his temple, and my cry came before him, even into his ears.

7 Then the earth shook and trembled; the foundations also of the hills moved and were shaken, because he was wroth.

8 There went up a smoke 'out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it.

9 He bowed the heavens also, and came down: and darkness was under his feet.

10 And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly: yea, he did fly upon the wings of the wind.

11 He made darkness his secret place; his pavilion round about him were dark waters and thick clouds of the skies.

12 At the brightness that was before him his thick clouds passed, hail stones and coals of fire.

13 The LORD also thundered in the heavens, and the Highest gave his voice; hail stones and coals of fire.

14 Yea, he sent out his arrows, and scattered them; and he shot out lightnings, and discomfited them.

15 Then the channels of waters were seen, and the foundations of the world were discovered at thy rebuke, O LORD, at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils.

16 He sent from above, he took me, he drew me out of 'many waters.

17 He delivered me from my strong enemy, and from them which hated me: for they were too strong for me.

18 They prevented me in the day of my calamity: but the LORD was my stay.

19 He brought me forth also into a large place; he delivered me, because he delighted in me.

20 The LORD rewarded me according to my righteousness; according to the cleanness of my hands hath he recompensed me.

21 For I have kept the ways of the LORD, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

22 For all his judgments were before me, and I did not put away his statutes from me.

23 I was also upright 'before him, and I kept myself from mine iniquity.

24 Therefore hath the LORD recompensed me according to my righteousness, according to the cleanness of my hands 'in his eyesight.

25 With the merciful thou wilt shew thyself merciful; with an upright man thou wilt shew thyself upright;

26 With the pure thou wilt shew thyself pure; and with the froward thou wilt 'shew thyself froward.

27 For thou wilt save the afflicted people; but wilt bring down high looks.

28 For thou wilt light my 'candle: the LORD my God will enlighten my darkness.

29 For by thee I have 'run through a troop; and by my God have I leaped over a wall.

30 As for God, his way is perfect: 'the word of the LORD is 'tried: he is a buckler to all those that trust in him.

31 'For who is God save the LORD? or who is a rock save our God?

32 It is God that girdeth me with strength, and maketh my way perfect.

33 He maketh my feet like hinds' feet, and setteth me upon my high places.

34 He teacheth my hands to war, so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms.

35 Thou hast also given me the shield of thy salvation: and thy right hand hath holden me up, and 'thy gentleness hath made me great.

36 Thou hast enlarged my steps under me, that 'my feet did not slip.

37 I have pursued mine enemies, and overtaken them: neither did I turn again till they were consumed.

TRIUMPH OF DAVID.—RAFFAELLE.

"In the day that the LORD delivered him from the hand of all his enemies."

PSALM XVIII.—This sublime ode is the same, with some alterations, as that which has been already given in 2 Sam. xxii., where the occasion that gave rise to it is particularly stated. Dr. Kennicott justly describes this magnificent psalm, as containing the noblest imagery that ever was expressed in words; particularly in that portion which describes the coming of the Lord in anger to avenge and deliver his afflicted servant.

Verse 8. "There went up a smoke out of his nostrils."—

Chandler (in his 'History of David') observes, that this expresses the Lord's anger and indignation by a comparison derived from the circumstances which indicate such emotions in man. The ancients made the nose or nostrils the seat of angry emotions, on account of the heated, vehement breath which came from them under such conditions. On the same grounds, the physiognomists regarded wide, open nostrils as a sign of angry and fiery dispositions.

10. "The wings of the wind."—To ascribe wings to the wind is a striking but sufficiently obvious metaphor. It occurs in the heathen poets. They are also represented as winged on ancient monuments. On the Tower of Winds, at Athens, the eight principal winds are exhibited like young men with wings. Virgil ascribes wings to the lightning also ('Æneid,' v. 319).

29. "Leaped over a wall."—This probably refers to his having taken some remarkable town by scaling the ramparts.

33. "My feet like hinds' feet, and settleth me upon my high places."—This is repeated by Habakkuk nearly in the same words (Hab. iii. 19). It offers a double allusion, not only to the proverbial swiftness of the animal, but to the ease and safety with which it stands and leaps in high and dangerous places—upon the mountains and among the rocks. Bochart conjectures that there may also, in the first clause, be an allusion to the uncommon solidity and hardness of the hoofs, which

Virgil compares to brass, and by which the animal is the better enabled to tread the rocks with ease.

34. "A bow of steel is broken by mine arms."—Instead of "steel," we should read "brass." We do not see any difficulty in understanding this text as our version gives it. As it was a test of great strength to bend certain large and very strong bows, how much more so to bring the string home with such force and compression as to break the bow. Then also there may be an emphasis in "by my arms," which would seem to denote that he could do this with the strength of his arms only, without requiring the assistance of the foot, which was so usually employed that the phrase usually rendered "to bend the bow," is literally "to tread the bow." We think this brings out a better view than that which modern interpreters have usually chosen, after some of the ancient versions, "maketh my arms like a bow of brass."

PSALM XIX.

1 The creatures shew God's glory. 7 The word his grace.
12 David prayeth for grace.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE 'heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handywork.

2 Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge.

3 There is no speech nor language,
² where their voice is not heard.

4 "Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun,

5 Which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race.

6 His going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it: and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.

7 The 'law of the LORD is perfect, 'converting the soul: the testimony of the LORD is sure, making wise the simple.

8 The statutes of the LORD are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the LORD is pure, enlightening the eyes.

9 The fear of the LORD is clean, enduring for ever: the judgments of the LORD are ⁸ true and righteous altogether.

10 More to be desired are they than gold, ⁹ yea, than much fine gold: ¹⁰ sweeter also than honey and ¹¹ the honeycomb.

11 Moreover by them is thy servant warned: and in keeping of them there is great reward.

Verse 10. "Sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb."—We speak of the sweetness of honey, without making any such distinctions of quality as here implied. But whoever has eaten honey newly taken out of a honeycomb, or chewed the fresh honeycomb before the cups or cells have been opened, is sensible of a peculiar delicacy of flavour which will be sought for in vain after the honey has for any length of time been expressed or clarified. (See further in Harmer, Obs. xli.)

PSALM XX.

1 The church blesseth the king in his exploits. 7 Her confidence in God's succour.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE LORD hear thee in the day of trouble; the name of the God of Jacob defend thee.

2 Send thee help from the sanctuary, and strengthen thee out of Zion.

6 Now know I that the LORD saveth his anointed; he will hear him from his holy heaven with the saving strength of his right hand.

7 Some trust in chariots, and some in horses: but we will remember the name of the LORD our God.

8 They are brought down and fallen: but we are risen, and stand upright.

9 Save, LORD: let the king hear us when we call.

PSALM XX.—This psalm is generally supposed to have been composed by David about the time of the war with the Ammonites and Syrians, as recorded in 2 Sam. 10. There were a great number of chariots and horses brought into the field against him on that occasion; and to this he seems to refer in verse 7.

PSALM XXI.

1 A thanksgiving for victory. 7 Confidence of further success.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE king shall joy in thy strength, O LORD; and in thy salvation how greatly shall he rejoice!

2 Thou hast given him his heart's desire, and hast not withholden the request of his lips. Selah.

3 For thou preventest him with the blessings of goodness: thou settest a crown of pure gold on his head.

4 He asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever.

5 His glory is great in thy salvation: honour and majesty hast thou laid upon him.

6 For thou hast made him most blessed for ever: thou hast made him exceeding glad with thy countenance.

² Heb. gladdened him with joy.

³ Or, thou shalt set them as a butt.

⁴ Heb. shoulder.

through the mercy of the most High he shall not be moved.

8 Thine hand shall find out all thine enemies: thy right hand shall find out those that hate thee.

9 Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger: the LORD shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them.

10 Their fruit shalt thou destroy from the earth, and their seed from among the children of men.

11 For they intended evil against thee: they imagined a mischievous device, which they are not able to perform.

12 Therefore shalt thou make them turn their back, when thou shalt make ready thine arrows upon thy strings against the face of them.

13 Be thou exalted, LORD, in thine own strength: so will we sing and praise thy power.

PSALM XXI.—Calmet thinks he discovers an intimate connection between this and the preceding psalm, and concludes that this was composed after the victory which God gave David over the Ammonites and Syrians, and the preceding during the war.

PSALM XXII.

1 David complaineth in great discouragement. 9 He prayeth in great distress. 23 He praiseth God.

To the chief Musician upon ¹Aijeleth Shahar, A Psalm of David.

MY ²God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? why art thou so far ³from helping me, and from the words of my roaring?

2 O my God, I cry in the daytime, but thou hearest not; and in the night season, and ⁴am not silent.

3 But thou art holy, O thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel.

4 Our fathers trusted in thee: they trusted, and thou didst deliver them.

5 They cried unto thee, and were delivered: they trusted in thee, and were not confounded.

6 But I am a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people.

7 ⁵All they that see me laugh me to scorn: they ⁶shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying,

8 ⁷He trusted on the LORD that he would deliver him: let him deliver him, ⁸seeing he delighted in him.

9 But thou art he that took me out of the womb: thou ¹⁰didst make me hope when I was upon my mother's breasts.

10 I was cast upon thee from the womb: thou art my God from my mother's belly.

11 Be not far from me; for trouble is near; for there is ¹¹none to help.

12 Many bulls have compassed me; strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round.

13 They ¹²gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravening and a roaring lion.

14 I am poured out like water, and all my bones are ¹³out of joint: my heart is like wax; it is melted in the midst of my bowels.

15 My strength is dried up like a potsherd; and my tongue cleaveth to my jaws; and thou hast brought me into the dust of death.

16 For dogs have compassed me; the assembly of the wicked have inclosed me: ¹⁴they pierced my hands and my feet.

17 I may tell all my bones: they look and stare upon me.

18 ¹⁵They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture.

19 But be not thou far from me, O LORD: O my strength, haste thee to help me.

20 Deliver my soul from the sword; ¹⁶my darling ¹⁷from the power of the dog.

21 Save me from the lion's mouth: for thou hast heard me from the horns of the unicorns.

22 ¹⁸I will declare thy name unto my brethren: in the midst of the congregation will I praise thee.

23 Ye that fear the LORD, praise him; all ye the seed of Jacob, glorify him; and fear him, all ye the seed of Israel.

24 For he hath not despised nor abhorred the affliction of the afflicted; neither hath he hid his face from him; but when he cried unto him, he heard.

25 My praise shall be of thee in the great congregation: I will pay my vows before them that fear him.

26 The meek shall eat and be satisfied: they shall praise the LORD that seek him: your heart shall live for ever.

27 ¹⁹All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the LORD: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee.

28 For the kingdom is the LORD's: and he is the governor among the nations.

29 All they that be fat upon earth shall eat and worship: all they that go down to the dust shall bow before him: and none can keep alive his own soul.

30 A seed shall serve him: it shall be accounted to the LORD for a generation.

31 They shall come, and shall declare his righteousness unto a people that shall be born, that he hath done this.

TITLE, "Ajeleth Shahar."—This title has occasioned some discussion; and as there are several others to which any considerations associated with it will equally apply, we will here state such observations as seem to be required.

The words literally understood mean "the Hind of the Morning;" the different opinions are chiefly as to the import of such a designation; and the various constructions to which it is liable, may thus be classed and illustrated:—

1. That the title has no connection with the contents of the psalm, or with any other circumstance belonging to it, except to intimate the tune to which it was to be played. And therefore that "the Hind of the Morning" formed the title, perhaps the first words, of the melody which this psalm was to follow. This is that view of Aben Ezra, on which we have already remarked under Ps. xvi. The nature of the title seems to afford very considerable support to this conjecture; and supersedes the difficult attempt to find a connection or an application between the psalm itself and such titles as "the Hind of the Morning,"—"the Lily of the Testimony," (Ps. lx.)—or "the Dove dumb in distant places (or among strangers)" Ps. lvi. If we saw such titles prefixed to poems of our own, we should—after having read it and observed the apparent want of connection—conclude that it was the name or commencing words of some melody which was intended to be followed. Faber quotes as parallel illustrations the superscriptions of the pieces of the master-singers of the middle ages, expressing the titles of the tunes to which they were to be sung or played; such as, "The short tune—the silver melody—the rose tune melody—the golden tune—the morning melody—the high mountain melody," &c.

2. That such superscriptions have not, indeed, any obvious connection with the psalms to which they are prefixed, but that still they have a specific appropriation to such psalms, as titles of that fanciful and irrelevant character which the Orientals are accustomed to give to their compositions. This view was suggested by Harmer ('Observations,' v.); and in proof of this characteristic of Oriental titles he quotes D'Herbelot, who tells us that a Persian metaphysical poem was called—the Rose-bush; a collection of moral essays—the Garden of Anemones; another eastern book—the Lion of the Forest, to which (as Dr. Clarke subjoins) might be added other titles as, Gulistan, the Region of Roses; Boostan, the Garden; Derj el Durrar, the Casket of Pearls; Bahar Danish, the Spring of Knowledge; Nigaristan, the Gallery of Pictures. An Arabian History of Granada is called A Specimen of the Full Moon; a Chronology—Silken Vest, embroidered with a needle; a Collection of Lives—Fragrant Plants; a Tract on Constancy of Mind—Approved Butter, &c. The Rabbinical writers afford similar instances: thus a Treatise on Morals is entitled A Tried Stone; a Collection of Songs—The Tablets and Ear-rings; another collection—The Book of the Giant. Other instances will occur to the reader, as similar forms of titles have become not unusual in this country.

3. Some, however, think that the designation alludes metaphorically to the time at which the psalm was to be performed, namely, at the dawn; and this is the opinion of many Hebrew writers, followed by some modern interpreters, among them Boothroyd, who explains Ajeleth Shahar to mean "the dawn of day." This explanation perhaps supposes that the sun is meant by "the Hind of the Morning," which is certainly not impossible, as the Arabian poets do sometimes apply to the sun the name of the gazelle. Calmet, however, conjectures that the band of musicians which performed the morning duty, was called, for some reason or other, "the Hind of the Morning," but offers nothing in support of this conjecture.

Lastly. Many think that the title, in the present instance, has a mystical reference to the Messiah, to whom it is agreed both by Jewish and Christian commentators that this psalm prophetically relates. Christ therefore is thus understood to be denoted as "the Hind of the Morning." It is highly probable that Cowper had this title and this interpretation in view when penning the following beautiful lines:—

"I was a stricken deer that left the herd
Long since. With many an arrow deep infix'd
My panting side was charged, when I withdrew,
To seek a tranquil death in distant shades.
There I was found by one, who had himself
Been hurt by the archers. In his side he bore,
And in his hands and feet, the cruel scars."

TASK, b. iii.

7. "Shoot out the lip."—To protrude the lower lip is, in the East, considered a very strong indication of contempt. Its employment is chiefly confined to the lower orders.

12. "Bulls."—In Scripture bulls seem to be emblematical of violent and wicked men. Among the ancients generally, including the Hebrews, horned beasts were symbolical of power—and hence horns alone had the same import. The strength, courage, and ferocity of the bull, rendered it, in this connection of ideas, peculiarly suitable to symbolize the violent and powerful oppressor. At present, in the East, strong and violent fellows, who insult and domineer over others, are still called "bulls." Hence, also, in the same association of ideas, our word "bully," for similar characters.

16. "Dogs have compassed me."—The English reader is apt to be surprised that dogs, which exhibit so many amiable and interesting qualities, should always be mentioned with contempt and aversion in the Scriptures. But the known character of the dog is in a great degree an improvement, resulting from perfect domestication and kind treatment. In the East he is not domesticated or treated well; and for this reason he is there a fierce, cruel, greedy, and base creature, such as the Scriptures describe him. Mohammedanism, which now prevails in Western Asia, proscribes dogs as unclean; and hence, although they are exceedingly numerous in many of the towns, they are not attached to particular houses, nor belong to particular persons. They live in the streets and open places, and subsist upon offal, with some uncertain assistance from the charity of individuals. We shall reserve some particulars of their condition in the East to illustrate the several texts in which the animal is mentioned. But this is a proper place to notice its ferocity. As even in the highly domesticated condition of the dog in this country, great numbers of them retain the disposition to assault strangers, it will be easily understood that this disposition must be more strongly manifested by the half-savage dogs of eastern towns. In large towns, where there is much activity and intercourse, the dogs do not generally offer any molestation to any person in the daytime, or only to persons whom they detect by the scent or costume to be decided foreigners; but at night it is very hazardous to pass the streets, and few like to do so alone, and never without being properly armed. When two persons go together, both armed with strong sticks, they are seldom molested. One person alone, and particularly if unarmed, would be in danger of being seriously injured, if not torn in pieces, unless assistance came, as the attack of one dog would serve as a signal to bring others in great numbers to the assault. In small towns and villages seldom visited by strangers, the dogs know the inhabitants and do not molest them, unless perhaps when any one of them should happen to stir abroad at night; but a stranger of any description often dares not approach such places even by day, unless under the conduct of an inhabitant. When the attempt is made, the dogs afford every demonstration of a disposition to tear him in pieces: and we have ourselves, when halting on a journey near such places, observed powerful and resolute men, natives of the country, abandon attempts to enter, in consequence of the opposition which the fierce and savage dogs offered, and waited till the protection of an inhabitant could be obtained. These last observations apply also to the encampments of the Arabs, and other nomades, who allow the presence of dogs on account of the assistance they give in managing the flocks and in protecting the encampment; for the dogs of the East are unanimous in their hatred to strangers, and in resisting their approach. These dogs are however nearly as much neglected as those in towns, and are by no means to be put upon a level with the shepherd dogs of Europe. When the party with which they are connected happens to be of those who assemble in villages during winter, the dogs maintain the connection, and guard the village from intrusion as zealously as they did the camp: and it is to such villages chiefly that the above observations apply; for in other villages and small places, dogs are not very common.

PSALM XXIII.

David's confidence in God's grace.

A Psalm of David.

THE LORD is 'my shepherd; I shall not want.

2 He maketh me to lie down in 'green pastures: he leadeth me beside the 'still waters.

3 He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

⁴ Psal. 3. 6, and 118. 6.

⁵ Heb. makest fat.

² Heb. pastures of tender grass.

⁶ Heb. to length of days.

³ Heb. waters of quietness.

4 Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, 'I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.

5 Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou 'anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

6 Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the LORD 'for ever.

Verse 5. "Thou anointest my head with oil."—This does not appear to refer to the regal anointing, but to the custom of anointing the head with oil and fragrant unguents on occasions of festivity and rejoicing. To anoint the head also was an honour paid to a distinguished guest; and, in Luke vii. 46, our Saviour seems to refer to the omission of it as rather inhospitable in his host, the Pharisee. The same customs, as to anointing the head, were in operation among the Greeks and

Romans. At present, in Western Asia, people generally shave their heads, which has there put an end to these ancient usages. But they still subsist, more to the East, in India. "At their marriages and other festive times (says Roberts), the young and old may be seen with their long black tresses tied neatly on the crown of the head, shining and smooth like polished ebony."

A Psalm of David.

THE 'earth is the LORD's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.

2 'For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods.

3 'Who shall ascend into the hill of the LORD? or who shall stand in his holy place?

4 'He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully.

5 He shall receive the blessing from the LORD, and righteousness from the God of his salvation.

6 This is the generation of them that seek him, that seek thy face, 'O Jacob, Selah.

1 David's confidence in prayer. 7 He prayeth for remission of sins, 16 and for help in affliction.

A Psalm of David.

UNTO thee, O LORD, do I lift up my soul.

2 O my God, I 'trust in thee: let me not be ashamed, let not mine enemies triumph over me.

3 Yea, let none that wait on thee be ashamed: let them be ashamed which transgress without cause.

4 'Shew me thy ways, O LORD; teach me thy paths.

5 Lead me in thy truth, and teach me: for thou art the God of my salvation; on thee do I wait all the day.

6 Remember, O LORD, 'thy tender mercies and thy lovingkindnesses; for they have been ever of old.

7 Remember not the sins of my youth, nor my transgressions: according to thy mercy remember thou me for thy goodness' sake, O LORD.

8 Good and upright is the LORD: therefore will he teach sinners in the way.

9 The meek will he guide in judgment: and the meek will he teach his way.

10 All the paths of the LORD are mercy

and truth unto such as keep his covenant and his testimonies.

11 For thy name's sake, O LORD, pardon mine iniquity; for it is great.

12 What man is he that feareth the LORD? him shall he teach in the way that he shall choose.

13 His soul 'shall dwell at ease; and his seed shall inherit the earth.

14 'The secret of the LORD is with them that fear him; 'and he will shew them his covenant.

15 Mine eyes are ever toward the LORD; for he shall 'pluck my feet out of the net.

16 Turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me; for I am desolate and afflicted.

17 The troubles of my heart are enlarged: O bring thou me out of my distresses.

18 Look upon mine affliction and my pain; and forgive all my sins.

19 Consider mine enemies; for they are many: and they hate me with 'cruel hatred.

20 O keep my soul, and deliver me: let me not be ashamed; for I put my trust in thee.

21 Let integrity and uprightness preserve me; for I wait on thee.

PSALM XXV.—This Psalm, in the original, is the first of the alphabetical or acrostical poems. In these, each line or stanza, as may be, begins with the consecutive letters of the Hebrew alphabet, twenty-two in number, the first with A (א), the second with B (ב), and so on. Of such poems there are twelve in the Hebrew Scriptures, three of which (Ps. cxi. cxii., Lament. iii.) are perfectly alphabetical, every line beginning with the proper initial; whereas, in the other nine (Ps. xxv., xxxiv., xxxvii., cxix., cxlv., Prov. xxxi. 10–31, Lament. i., ii., iv.), the stanzas only so commence. We will state, as they occur, the other peculiarities by which these alphabetical psalms are distinguished from each other. The present is one of six, that consist of stanzas of two lines, each of these stanzas being marked by initial letters, with the exception of some irregularities which appear to have proceeded from the misapprehension of transcribers.

This alphabetical arrangement appears to have been adopted for the assistance of the memory, and was chiefly employed in subjects of common use, as maxims of morality and forms of devotion, which being expressed in detached sentences or aphorisms (the form in which the sages of most ancient times delivered their instructions), the inconvenience arising from the subject, the want of connection in the parts, and of a regular train of thought carried through the whole, was remedied by this artificial contrivance in the form. It is however thought, by Bishop Lowth, that this practice of marking the lines or stanzas by the letters of the alphabet in regular succession did not exist in the time of David, and that this and other alphabetical psalms were composed during the captivity.

PSALM XXVI.

David resorteth unto God in confidence of his integrity.

A Psalm of David.

JUDGE me, O LORD; for I have walked in mine integrity: I have trusted also in the LORD; therefore I shall not slide.

2 'Examine me, O LORD, and prove me; try my reins and my heart.

3 For thy lovingkindness is before mine eyes: and I have walked in thy truth.

4 ¹ I have not sat with vain persons, neither will I go in with dissemblers.

5 I have hated the congregation of evil doers; and will not sit with the wicked.

6 I will wash mine hands in innocency: so will I compass thine altar, O LORD:

7 That I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works.

8 LORD, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place ² where thine honour dwelleth.

9 ³ Gather not my soul with sinners, nor my life with ⁴ bloody men:

10 In whose hands is mischief, and their right hand is ⁵ full of bribes.

11 But as for me, I will walk in mine integrity: redeem me, and be merciful unto me.

12 My foot standeth in an even place: in the congregations will I bless the LORD.

² Heb. of the tabernacle of thy honour.

³ Or, Take not away.

⁴ Heb. men of blood.

⁵ Heb. filled with.

PSALM XXVI.—Calmet thinks that this psalm should be assigned to the time of the Captivity; but the majority conceive that it was composed about the time when David, being pursued by Saul, was constrained to withdraw into the land of the Philistines.

Verse 6. "I will wash mine hands in innocency; so will I compass thine altar."—It was customary among the Jews, as now the Mohammedans, to wash before prayers; but the priests in particular, when they had laid on the sacrifice, were wont to go round the altar in order to sprinkle and pour out the blood at the four corners, previously to which they washed their hands, as they had done before. It is probably to this that the Psalmist alludes.

FORTITUDE.—REYNOLDS.

"Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear."—Verse 3.

PSALM XXVII.

¹ David sustaineth his faith by the power of God, 4 by his love to the service of God, 9 by prayer.

A Psalm of David.

THE LORD is ¹my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? ²the LORD is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?

² When the wicked, even mine enemies and my foes, ³came upon me to eat up my flesh, they stumbled and fell.

⁴ One thing have I desired of the LORD, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the LORD all the days of my life, to behold ⁵the beauty of the LORD, and to enquire in his temple.

⁵ For in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion: in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me; he shall set me upon a rock.

⁶ And now shall mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me: therefore will I offer in his tabernacle sacrifices ⁶of joy; I will sing, yea, I will sing praises unto the LORD.

⁷ Hear, O LORD, when I cry with my voice: have mercy also upon me, and answer me.

⁸ 'When thou saidst, Seek ye my face; my heart said unto thee, Thy face, LORD, will I seek.

¹⁰ When my father and my mother forsake me, then the LORD ¹⁰will take me up.

¹¹ 'Teach me thy way, O LORD, and lead me in ¹⁰a plain path, because of ¹¹mine enemies.

¹⁴ 'Wait on the LORD: be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart: wait, I say, on the LORD.

³ Heb. approached against me.

⁴ Psal. 3. 6.

⁵ Or, the delight.

⁶ Heb. of shouting.

⁷ Or, My heart said unto thee, Let my face seek thy face, &c.

⁸ Heb. will gather me.

⁹ Psal. 25. 4, and 86. 11, and 119.

¹⁰ Heb. a way of plainness.

¹¹ Heb. those which observe me.

¹² Psal. 31. 24. Isa. 25. 9. Heb. 2. 3.

TITLE.—The Septuagint and Vulgate add to this title "before he was anointed;" but he was three times anointed, and the words are of no authority. Calmet thinks that, as well as the two preceding, it was written during the Captivity. Bishop Patrick conceives that it was probably composed by David on occasion of that danger and deliverance, mentioned in 2 Sam. xxi. 17, which induced his subjects to request that he would no more go to battle in person.

Verse 13. "I had fainted, &c."—The words, "I had fainted," are not in the original. Most of the versions have supposed that something was here wanting to complete the sense, and which accordingly has been variously supplied. On the other hand, Dr. Hammond contends that nothing ought to be supplied, there being an intentional and beautiful abruptness, which he compares to the famous one in the threat of Neptune, in Virgil. Dr. Boothroyd completes the sense without a marked abruptness, on the one hand, or conjectural addition on the other: "Yet I believe that I shall enjoy good, O Jehovah, in the land of the living." In this, however, as well as in the common version, the expression of this confidence is less strongly put than in the original. It is emphatic: "I firmly believe;" or, as in the Prayer-book version, "I believe verily."

PSALM XXVIII.

¹ David prayeth earnestly against his enemies. 6 He blesseth God. 9 He prayeth for the people.

A Psalm of David.

UNTO thee will I cry, O LORD my rock; be not silent ¹to me: ²lest, if thou be silent to me, I become like them that go down into the pit.

² Hear the voice of my supplications, when I cry unto thee, when I lift up my hands ³toward thy holy oracle.

³ Draw me not away with the wicked, and with the workers of iniquity, ⁴which speak peace to their neighbours, but mischief is in their hearts.

and according to the wickedness of their endeavours: give them after the work of their hands; render to them their desert.

5 Because they regard not the works of the LORD, nor the operation of his hands, he shall destroy them, and not build them up.

6 Blessed be the LORD, because he hath heard the voice of my supplications.

7 The LORD is my strength and my shield;

⁵ Or, his strength.

⁶ Heb. strength of salvations.

⁷ Or, rule.

my heart trusted in him, and I am helped: therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth; and with my song will I praise him.

8 The LORD is 'their strength, and he is the 'saving strength of his anointed.

9 Save thy people, and bless thine inheritance: 'feed them also, and lift them up for ever.

PSALM XXVIII.—This Psalm is usually conceived to have been composed during the revolt of Absalom. Calmet, however, attributes it to the captives in Babylon.

Verse 2. "When I lift up my hand."—This seems to have been a common attitude of prayer among the Hebrews. The action is very natural, and not by any means confined to the Jews. The Greeks, Romans, and others also lifted up their hands in prayer; and, judging from their sculptures and cylinders, the ancient Persians and Babylonians did the same. At present the hands are elevated in one of the attitudes which the Moslems assume in their prayers; and in their occasional and less formal devotions, this more than any other is the posture they assume—standing or walking with uplifted hands.

PSALM XXIX.

1 David exhorteth princes to give glory to God, 3 by reason of his power, 11 and protection of his people.

A Psalm of David.

GIVE unto the LORD, O 'ye mighty, give unto the LORD glory and strength.

2 Give unto the LORD 'the glory due unto his name; worship the LORD 'in the beauty of holiness.

3 The voice of the LORD is upon the waters: the God of glory thundereth: the LORD is upon 'many waters.

4 The voice of the LORD is 'powerful; the voice of the LORD is 'full of majesty.

5 The voice of the LORD breaketh the cedars: yea, the LORD breaketh the cedars of Lebanon.

6 He maketh them also to skip like a calf; Lebanon and 'Sirion like a young unicorn.

7 The voice of the LORD 'divideth the flames of fire.

8 The voice of the LORD shaketh the wilderness; the LORD shaketh the wilderness of Kadesh.

9 The voice of the LORD maketh the hinds 'to calve, and discovereth the forests: and in his temple 'doth every one speak of his glory.

10 The LORD sitteth upon the flood; yea, the LORD sitteth King for ever.

11 The LORD will give strength unto his people; the LORD will bless his people with peace.

² Heb. the honour of his name.

³ Or, in his glorious sanctuary.

⁴ Or, great waters.

⁵ Heb. in power.

⁶ Heb. in majesty.

⁷ Deut. 3. 9.

⁸ Heb. cutteth out.

⁹ Or, to be in pain.

¹⁰ Or, every whit of it uttereth, &c.

PSALM XXIX.—This Psalm was perhaps composed during or after some remarkable thunder-storm—such as it describes—and which had possibly been connected with some peculiar circumstances of judgment or mercy.

Verse 3. "The voice of the Lord."—Thunder is intended, as shown by the ensuing clause.

4. "Breaketh the cedars."—It is the lightning, the electric fluid, that produces the effect which is here poetically ascribed to the thunder, or rather, perhaps, to the storm in general.

9. "Maketh the hinds to calve."—This image does not seem to assort well with the others, or to sustain the dignity of the subject. Most recent translators have adopted the well-supported opinion of Bishop Lowth, that the word (אֵילִים) translated "hinds" should be rendered "oaks," or, at any rate, "trees." So Boothroyd: "The voice of Jehovah shaketh the oaks."—With respect to the sense conveyed in our common version, it may however be observed that it is a very ancient and still subsisting belief, that many animals cast their young prematurely under the terror which thunder-storms inspire.

PSALM XXX.

¹ David praiseth God for his deliverance. ⁴ He exhorteth others to praise him by example of God's dealing with him.

A Psalm and Song at the dedication of the house of David.

I WILL extol thee, O LORD; for thou hast lifted me up, and hast not made my foes to rejoice over me.

² O LORD my God, I cried unto thee, and thou hast healed me.

⁴ Sing unto the LORD, O ye saints of his, and give thanks 'at the remembrance of his holiness.

⁵ For 'his anger endureth but a moment; in his favour is life: weeping may endure 'for a night, but 'joy cometh in the morning.

¹ Or, to the memorial. ² Heb. there is but a moment in his anger. ³ Heb. in the evening. ⁴ Heb. singing.
⁵ Heb. settled strength for my mountain. ⁶ Psal. 6. 5, and 88. 11, and 115. 17. ⁷ That is, my tongue, or, my soul.

⁶ And in my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.

⁷ LORD, by thy favour thou hast 'made my mountain to stand strong: thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled.

⁸ I cried to thee, O LORD; and unto the LORD I made supplication.

¹⁰ Hear, O LORD, and have mercy upon me: LORD, be thou my helper.

¹² To the end that 'my glory may sing praise to thee, and not be silent. O LORD my God, I will give thanks unto thee for ever.

TITLE, "A Psalm and Song."—The "and" is supplied; "Psalm-song" would be more correct. A psalm, properly speaking, is a piece for instrumental performance; a song, to be sung by the voice. It may be conjectured that in a "psalm-song," the instruments preceded the voice, while in the "song-psalm" the voice preceded the music. Or, as it may perhaps be traced that the compositions designated by either of these compound terms are of a responsive character, we may suppose that part was vocal and part instrumental, and that the title not only denotes this, but by the order of the words, "psalm-song," or "song-psalm," expresses whether the instruments or the voices were to open the performance.

PSALM XXXI.

¹ David shewing his confidence in God craveth his help. ⁷ He rejoiceth in his mercy. ⁹ He prayeth in his calamity. ¹⁹ He praiseth God for his goodness.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

IN 'thee, O LORD, do I put my trust; let me never be ashamed: deliver me in thy righteousness.

² Bow down thine ear to me; deliver me speedily: be thou 'my strong rock, for an house of defence to save me.

⁴ Pull me out of the net that they have laid privily for me: for thou art my strength.

⁵ 'Into thine hand I commit my spirit: thou hast redeemed me, O LORD God of truth.

⁶ I have hated them that regard lying vanities: but I trust in the LORD.

⁸ And hast not shut me up into the hand of the enemy: thou hast set my foot in a large room.

¹¹ I was a reproach among all mine enemies, but especially among my neighbours, and a fear to mine acquaintance: they that did see me without fled from me.

¹² I am forgotten as a dead man out of mind: I am like 'a broken vessel.

¹³ For I have heard the slander of many:

fear was on every side: while they took counsel together against me, they devised to take away my life.

14 But I trusted in thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my God.

15 My times are in thy hand: deliver me from the hand of mine enemies, and from them that persecute me.

16 Make thy face to shine upon thy servant: save me for thy mercies' sake.

17 Let me not be ashamed, O LORD; for I have called upon thee: let the wicked be ashamed, and ⁵let them be silent in the grave.

18 Let the lying lips be put to silence; which speak ⁶grievous things proudly and contemptuously against the righteous.

19 'Oh how great is thy goodness, which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee;

which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee before the sons of men!

20 Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man: thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues.

21 Blessed be the LORD: for he hath shewed me his marvellous kindness in a ⁷strong city.

22 For I said in my haste, I am cut off from before thine eyes: nevertheless thou heardest the voice of my supplications when I cried unto thee.

23 O love the LORD, all ye his saints: for the LORD preserveth the faithful, and plentifully rewardeth the proud doer.

PSALM XXXI.—It is generally conceived that this psalm was composed upon, or with reference to, the occasion stated at the latter end of 1 Sam. xiii., when David was so closely pursued by Saul in the wilderness of Maon that he must infallibly have been taken, had not the king been providentially recalled from the pursuit by the intelligence of an invasion from the Philistines. Mudge, however, is of opinion that there are various circumstances in the phraseology and allusions which might rather lead to the impression that the psalm was composed by Jeremiah.

Verse 9. "Mine eye is consumed with grief."—The Rabbi Jarchi explains this to mean, that his sight was so dim as that of a man who is obliged to put a glass before his eyes to see what is beyond the glass. This is of no value as an explanation; but as Jarchi died in the twelfth century, it might be cited as affording probable evidence that spectacles were known at least two centuries before the date ascribed to the invention.

PSALM XXXII.

1 Blessedness consisteth in remission of sins. 3 Confession of sins giveth ease to the conscience. 8 God's promises bring joy.

¹A Psalm of David, Maschil.

BLESSED is he whose ²transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.

2 Blessed is the man unto whom the LORD imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile.

3 When I kept silence, my bones waxed old through my roaring all the day long.

4 For day and night thy hand was heavy upon me: my moisture is turned into the drought of summer. Selah.

5 I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. ³I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the LORD; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Selah.

6 For this shall every one that is godly pray unto thee ⁴in a time when thou mayest be found: surely in the floods of great waters they shall not come nigh unto him.

7 ⁵Thou art my hiding place; thou shalt preserve me from trouble; thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance. Selah.

8 I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: ⁶I will guide thee with mine eye.

9 ⁷Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding: whose mouth must be held in with bit and bridle, lest they come near unto thee.

³ Prov. 28. 13. Isa. 65. 24. 1 John 1. 9.

⁴ Heb. in a time of finding.

⁵ Psal. 9. 9.

⁶ Heb. I will counsel thee, mine eye shall be upon thee.

⁷ Prov. 26. 3.

10 Many sorrows shall be to the wicked: but he that trusteth in the LORD, mercy shall compass him about.

11 Be glad in the LORD, and rejoice, ye righteous: and shout for joy, all ye that are upright in heart.

TITLE, "Maschil."—Thirteen psalms bear this title, which, as usual, Aben Ezra supposes to denote the tune to which it was to be performed. The usual explanation given of it, is, in the various versions, more or less equivalent to that which the marginal reading conveys, "A Psalm of David, giving instruction."—This psalm is usually supposed to have been composed when the rebellion of Absalom awoke David to renewed lamentation for his sin in the matter of Uriah—the calamities into which he then fell having been predicted by Nathan as a punishment for that deplorable transgression.

Verse 4. "The drought of summer."—We are not to suppose that the Psalmist alludes to any season of extraordinary drought, but to the ordinary heat and dryness of the summer—to which the most extraordinary drought of our own summers cannot be compared. Near rivers and other sources of natural or artificial irrigation, verdure and beauty are preserved; but as no rain falls, the verdure of the unwatered plains soon disappears under the intense warmth of the season;—every flower fades, and every green thing withers; and a brown and arid desert alone remains, the parched herbage of which crackles beneath the feet of those who walk. A little rain, when it comes in its season, produces an equally rapid and marked change of an opposite character.

PSALM XXXIII.

¹ God is to be praised for his goodness, 6 for his power, 12 and for his providence. 20 Confidence is to be placed in God.

REJOICE in the LORD, O ye righteous: for praise is comely for the upright.

2 Praise the LORD with harp: sing unto him with the psaltery and an instrument of ten strings.

3 Sing unto him a new song; play skillfully with a loud noise.

4 For the word of the LORD is right; and all his works are done in truth.

5 He loveth righteousness and judgment: 'the earth is full of the 'goodness of the LORD.

6 'By the word of the LORD were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth.

7 He gathereth the waters of the sea together as an heap: he layeth up the depth in storehouses.

8 Let all the earth fear the LORD: let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him.

9 For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast.

10 'The LORD 'bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought: he maketh the devices of the people of none effect.

11 'The counsel of the LORD standeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart 'to all generations.

12 'Blessed is the nation whose God is the LORD; and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance.

13 The LORD looketh from heaven; he beholdeth all the sons of men.

14 From the place of his habitation he looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth.

15 He fashioneth their hearts alike; he considereth all their works.

16 There is no king saved by the multitude of an host: a mighty man is not delivered by much strength.

17 An horse is a vain thing for safety: neither shall he deliver any by his great strength.

18 'Behold, the eye of the LORD is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy;

19 To deliver their soul from death, and to keep them alive in famine.

20 Our soul waiteth for the LORD: he is our help and our shield.

21 For our heart shall rejoice in him, because we have trusted in his holy name.

22 Let thy mercy, O LORD, be upon us, according as we hope in thee.

¹ Psal. 119. 64. ² Or, mercy. ³ Gen. 1. 6. 7. ⁴ Isa. 19. 3. ⁵ Heb. maketh frustrate. ⁶ Prov. 19. 21. Isa. 46. 10.

PSALM XXXIII.—Although this psalm has no title, it is usually attributed to David.

Verse 2. "Harp...psallery...instrument of ten strings."—We shall notice the principal classes of musical instruments separately in our progress of the book of Psalms. Without, under this psalm, entering generally into the subject, we take the opportunity of introducing (after Rosellini) a cut which is entitled to be regarded with peculiar interest as showing, from their own paintings, the form and character of the principal musical instruments in use among the ancient Egyptians. It may be taken as a general introduction to the more detailed illustrations we shall presently begin to offer, when we shall have occasion to refer back to the information which may be derived from the representation now given of a band of musical performers of ancient Egypt.

PSALM XXXIV.

1 David praiseth God, and exhorteth others thereto by his experience. 8 They are blessed that trust in God. 11 He exhorteth to the fear of God. 15 The privileges of the righteous.

A Psalm of David, when he changed his behaviour before Abimelech; who drove him away, and he departed.

I WILL bless the LORD at all times: his praise shall continually be in my mouth.

2 My soul shall make her boast in the LORD: the humble shall hear thereof, and be glad.

3 O magnify the LORD with me, and let us exalt his name together.

4 I sought the LORD, and he heard me, and delivered me from all my fears.

5 ²They looked unto him, and were lightened: and their faces were not ashamed.

6 This poor man cried, and the LORD heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles.

7 The angel of the LORD encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.

8 O taste and see that the LORD is good: blessed is the man that trusteth in him.

9 O fear the LORD, ye his saints: for there is no want to them that fear him.

10 The young lions do lack, and suffer hunger: but they that seek the LORD shall not want any good thing.

11 Come, ye children, hearken unto me: I will teach you the fear of the LORD.

12 ³What man is he that desireth life, and loveth many days, that he may see good?

13 Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile.

14 Depart from evil, and do good: seek peace, and pursue it.

15 ⁴The eyes of the LORD are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry.

16 The face of the LORD is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth.

17 The righteous cry, and the LORD hear-eth, and delivereth them out of all their troubles.

18 The LORD is nigh ⁵unto them that are of a broken heart; and saveth ⁶such as be of a contrite spirit.

19 Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the LORD delivereth him out of them all.

20 He keepeth all his bones: not one of them is broken.

21 Evil shall slay the wicked: and they that hate the righteous ⁷shall be desolate.

22 The LORD redeemeth the soul of his servants: and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate.

⁷ Or, shall be guilty.

PSALM XXXIV.—This is another psalm of the alphabetical class. It is, like Psalm xxv., one of the six in stanzas of two lines apiece, each stanza commencing with the successive letters of the alphabet. The title describes the occasion on which the psalm was composed. But it will be observed that the name of the king of Gath, who is of course here referred to, is, in the history, Achish, not Abimelech; the latter was therefore probably a title of dignity among the sovereigns of that state, like "Pharaoh" among the Egyptians, or "Cæsar" among the Romans.

Verse 8. "Taste and see that the LORD is good."—It is a very common form of expression in the East to discriminate the characters, qualities, and tempers of particular persons, by reference to experience derived from taste. It is hence not unusual to hear one person say of another that he has tasted him and found him good, pleasant, sweet, bad, bitter, or sour, as the case may be.

20. "He keepeth all his bones, not one of them is broken."—The Jews explain this with reference to their own peculiar ideas concerning the resurrection. The statement (as given in the 'Quarterly Review,' vol. xxi.) is worth quoting, as illustrating the character of the Jewish traditions and notions. Some parts of it might be fine if metaphorically understood—but it is not so understood:—"The body, according to their notion, has a certain indestructible part called luz, which is the seed from whence it is to be reproduced. It is described as a bone, in shape like an almond, and having its place at the end of the vertebræ. This bone, according to the rabbis, can neither be broken by any force of man, nor consumed by fire, nor dissolved by water: and they tell us that the fact was proved before the emperor Adrian, upon whom they imprecate their usual malediction, 'May his bones be broken!' In his presence, Rabbi Joshua Ben Chauma produced a luz; it was ground between two millstones, but it came out as whole as it had been put in. They burnt it in the fire, and it was found incombustible. They cast it in the water, and it could not be softened. Lastly, they hammered it on an anvil, and both the anvil and hammer were broken, without affecting the luz. The rabbinical writers, with their wonted perversion of Scripture, support this silly notion by a verse from the Psalms, He keepeth all his bones; not one of them is broken. A dew is to descend upon the earth, preparatory to the resurrection, and to quicken into life and growth these seeds of the dead." See also the same statement in Lightfoot upon John xi. 25.

PSALM XXXV.

1 David prayeth for his own safety, and his enemies' confusion. 11 He complaineth of their wrongful dealing. 22 Thereby he inciteth God against them.

A Psalm of David.

PLEAD my cause, O LORD, with them that strive with me: fight against them that fight against me.

2 Take hold of shield and buckler, and stand up for mine help.

3 Draw out also the spear, and stop the way against them that persecute me: say unto my soul, I am thy salvation.

4 'Let them be confounded and put to shame that seek after my soul: let them be turned back and brought to confusion that devise my hurt.

5 'Let them be as chaff before the wind: and let the angel of the LORD chase them.

6 Let their way be 'dark and slippery: and let the angel of the LORD persecute them.

7 For without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit, which without cause they have digged for my soul.

8 Let destruction come upon him 'at un-awares; and let his net that he hath hid catch himself: into that very destruction let him fall.

9 And my soul shall be joyful in the LORD: it shall rejoice in his salvation.

10 All my bones shall say, LORD, who is like unto thee, which deliverest the poor from him that is too strong for him, yea, the poor and the needy from him that spoileth him?

11 'False witnesses did rise up; 'they laid to my charge things that I knew not.

12 They rewarded me evil for good to the 'spoiling of my soul.

13 But as for me, when they were sick, my clothing was sackcloth: I 'humbled my soul with fasting; and my prayer returned into mine own bosom.

14 I 'behaved myself ¹⁰as though he had been my friend or brother: I bowed down heavily, as one that mourneth for his mother.

15 But in mine ¹¹adversity they rejoiced, and gathered themselves together: yea, the abjects gathered themselves together against me, and I knew it not; they did tear me, and ceased not:

16 With hypocritical mockers in feasts, they gnashed upon me with their teeth.

20 For they speak not peace: but they devise deceitful matters against them that are quiet in the land.

21 Yea, they opened their mouth wide against me, and said, Aha, aha, our eye hath seen it.

22 This thou hast seen, O LORD: keep not silence: O LORD, be not far from me.

23 Stir up thyself, and awake to my judgment, even unto my cause, my God and my Lord.

24 Judge me, O LORD my God, according to thy righteousness; and let them not rejoice over me.

25 Let them not say in their hearts, ¹⁶Ah, so would we have it: let them not say, We have swallowed him up.

26 Let them be ashamed and brought to confusion together that rejoice at mine hurt: let them be clothed with shame and dishonour that magnify themselves against me.

27 Let them shout for joy, and be glad, that favour ¹⁷my righteous cause: yea, let them say continually, Let the LORD be magnified, which hath pleasure in the prosperity of his servant.

PSALM XXXV.—This Psalm is generally supposed to have been composed by David, during his persecutions from Saul.

Verse 14. "As one that mourneth for his mother."—This indication is particularly impressive, as illustrated by the existing state of feeling of sons towards their mothers in the East. The relations between the father and the son in early life, are not calculated to call forth the tender feelings of the latter in any very eminent degree. The father is looked up to distantly; is respected, venerated, but seldom loved. The restraint and deference which characterise his limited intercourse with his father, direct all his tender affections with double force towards his mother; whose indulgence and attachment towards him are so continually evinced, as enable her to establish an influence over him which seldom terminates but with her life. He constantly turns to her, with perfect confidence, on all occasions in which his feelings are interested; he usually commits to her the choice of his wife or wives; and when he settles in life, she commonly takes the charge of his domestic establishment, becomes the real head of his household, and remains his nearest counsellor and friend, as she had been in his childhood. This station is the highest object of woman's ambition in the East. It is as a mother, not as a wife, that she attains the most independent and honoured station to which the condition of society allows her to aspire; and this it is, principally, which makes a woman in the East so anxious to have male children, and so comparatively indifferent about daughters; and this also induces the mother to exert herself in every possible way to fix and cultivate her son's affection, and in which she seldom fails so to succeed, that "to bow down heavily, as one that mourneth for his mother," would at once be understood by an Oriental as expressing the utmost profundity of grief.

21. "Opened their mouth wide . . . and said, Aha, aha, our eye hath seen it."—That is, they had seen what they long wished to see, his humiliation. Mr. Roberts has given the following very striking parallel from the usages of the Hindoos. "See that rude fellow who has triumphed over another; he distends his mouth to the utmost, then claps his hands, and bawls out, 'Agā! Agā!'—I have seen, I have seen!" So provoking is this exclamation, that a man, though vanquished, will often commence another attack. An officer who has lost his situation is sure to have this salutation from those he has injured. Has a man been foiled in argument, has he failed in some feat he promised to perform, has he in any way made himself ridiculous, the people open their mouths and shout aloud, saying 'Agā!'—finished, finished! fallen, fallen!" Then they laugh and clap their hands till the poor fellow gets out of sight." ('Oriental Illustrations,' p. 328.)

PSALM XXXVI.

1 The grievous estate of the wicked. 5 The excellency of God's mercy. 10 David prayeth for favour to God's children.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David the servant of the LORD.

THE transgression of the wicked saith within my heart, that there is no fear of God before his eyes.

2 For he flattereth himself in his own eyes, 'until his iniquity be found to be hateful.

3 The words of his mouth are iniquity and deceit: he hath left off to be wise, and to do good.

4 He deviseth ¹'mischief upon his bed; he setteth himself in a way that is not good; he abhorreth not evil.

² Or, vanity.

5 Thy mercy, O LORD, is in the heavens; and thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds.

6 Thy righteousness is like 'the great mountains; thy judgments are a great deep: O LORD, thou preservest man and beast.

7 How 'excellent is thy lovingkindness, O God! therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings.

8 They shall be 'abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures.

9 For with thee is the fountain of life: in thy light shall we see light.

10 O 'continue thy lovingkindness unto them that know thee; and thy righteousness to the upright in heart.

11 Let not the foot of pride come against me, and let not the hand of the wicked remove me.

12 There are the workers of iniquity fallen: they are cast down, and shall not be able to rise.

PSALM XXXVI.—Calmet assigns this psalm to the Captivity; but most interpreters conclude that it was composed by David during Saul's persecutions; and many suppose it was after he had spared the infatuated king's life in the cave of En-gedi.

PSALM XXXVII.

David persuadeth to patience and confidence in God, by the different estate of the godly and the wicked.

A Psalm of David.

FRET 'not thyself because of evildoers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity.

2 For they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb.

3 Trust in the LORD, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and 'verily thou shalt be fed.

4 Delight thyself also in the LORD; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart.

5 'Commit thy way unto the LORD; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass.

6 And he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday.

7 'Rest in the LORD, and wait patiently for him: fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass.

8 Cease from anger, and forsake wrath: fret not thyself in any wise to do evil.

9 For evildoers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the LORD, they shall inherit the earth.

10 For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be.

11 'But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace.

12 The wicked 'plotteth against the just, and gnasheth upon him with his teeth.

13 'The LORD shall laugh at him: for he seeth that his day is coming.

14 The wicked have drawn out the sword, and have bent their bow, to cast down the poor and needy, and to slay 'such as be of upright conversation.

15 Their sword shall enter into their own heart, and their bows shall be broken.

16 A little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked.

17 For the arms of the wicked shall be broken: but the LORD upholdeth the righteous.

18 The LORD knoweth the days of the upright: and their inheritance shall be for ever.

evil time: and in the days of famine they shall be satisfied.

20 But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the LORD shall be as ¹⁰the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away.

21 The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again: but the righteous sheweth mercy, and giveth.

22 For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off.

23 The steps of a good man are ¹¹ordered by the LORD: and he delighteth in his way.

24 Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down: for the LORD upholdeth him with his hand.

25 I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread.

26 He is ¹²ever merciful, and lendeth; and his seed is blessed.

27 Depart from evil, and do good; and dwell for evermore.

28 For the LORD loveth judgment, and forsaketh not his saints; they are preserved for ever: but the seed of the wicked shall be cut off.

29 The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever.

30 The mouth of the righteous speaketh

wisdom, and his tongue talketh of judgment.

31 The law of his God is in his heart; none of his ¹³steps shall slide.

32 The wicked watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him.

33 The LORD will not leave him in his hand, nor condemn him when he is judged.

34 Wait on the LORD, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it.

35 I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like ¹⁴a green bay tree.

36 Yet he passed away, and, lo, he was not: yea, I sought him, but he could not be found.

37 Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace.

38 But the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off.

39 But the salvation of the righteous is of the LORD: he is their strength in the time of trouble.

40 And the LORD shall help them, and deliver them: he shall deliver them from the wicked, and save them, because they trust in him.

PSALM XXXVII.—This is one of the alphabetical psalms. In the two that have already occurred, the stanzas commencing with the successive initials which the alphabet offers, consist of only two lines each; but the present has four lines to each stanza thus marked, which accounts for its greater length, notwithstanding the acrostical restriction. It is indeed the longest of these psalms, and consequently the only one that has four lines to each stanza. Calmet thinks this psalm was written during the captivity at Babylon, for the consolation of the captives; but the more general opinion is, that it was composed by David towards the latter end of his life.

35. "A green bay tree."—The word (אֲזָרַח azrach) occurs only in this text, and has been variously explained. Most of the Rabbins, followed by Mudge, Waterland, Gesenius, and many others, prefer that which is given in our marginal reading, denoting an indigenous tree—implying the flourishing condition of that which grows in its native and congenial soil. This we certainly prefer. But the Septuagint, Vulgate, and some other ancient versions, followed by Houbigant, Boothroyd, and other good authorities, have "cedar." For the reading of "bay tree," we are not aware of any authority, except the very feeble one which is offered by some of the older of the modern versions, in this country and on the Continent. Images, comparing the transitory nature of human hope and prosperity to the sudden blight and overthrow which so often befall the glory of the forest or the pride of the garden, are at once so beautiful and natural that they have been employed by poets of every country and age as often as by those of Israel. A passage in one of our own poets (Shakspeare) furnishes a beautiful paraphrase on the present text.

"This is the state of man! To-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls, never to hope again."

PSALM XXXVIII.

David moveth God to take compassion of his pitiful case.

A Psalm of David, to bring to remembrance.

O LORD, rebuke me not in thy wrath: neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure.

2 For thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore.

3 There is no soundness in my flesh because of thine anger; neither is there any rest in my bones because of my sin.

4 For mine iniquities are gone over mine head: as an heavy burden they are too heavy for me.

5 My wounds stink and are corrupt because of my foolishness.

6 I am ¹troubled; I am bowed down greatly; I go mourning all the day long.

7 For my loins are filled with a loathsome disease: and there is no soundness in my flesh.

8 I am feeble and sore broken: I have roared by reason of the disquietness of my heart.

9 LORD, all my desire is before thee; and my groaning is not hid from thee.

10 My heart panteth, my strength faileth me: as for the light of mine eyes, it also ³is gone from me.

TITLE, "To bring to remembrance."—This is also prefixed to Ps. lxx. The superscription is, as usual, differently understood: but it is generally understood to characterize the object of the psalm, between which and the title some agreement may be traced. Gesenius paraphrases it, "To bring (one's self) into remembrance (with God)." Waterland compresses the whole title into "David's memorial Psalm."

It is agreed that this psalm was composed by David. It was probably written during a sickness which afforded him opportunity of calling to remembrance his deep sin in the matter of Bathsheba and Uriah, and the various calamities which had aloof from my 'sore; and 'my kinsmen stand afar off.

12 They also that seek after my life lay snares for me: and they that seek my hurt speak mischievous things, and imagine deceits all the day long.

13 But I, as a deaf man, heard not; and I was as a dumb man that openeth not his mouth.

14 Thus I was as a man that heareth not, and in whose mouth are no reproofs.

15 For, 'in thee, O LORD, do I hope: thou wilt 'hear, O LORD my God.

16 For I said, Hear me, lest otherwise they should rejoice over me: when my foot slippeth, they magnify themselves against me.

17 For I am ready 'to halt, and my sorrow is continually before me.

18 For I will declare mine iniquity; I will be sorry for my sin.

19 But mine enemies 'are lively, and they are strong: and they that hate me wrongfully are multiplied.

20 They also that render evil for good are mine adversaries; because I follow the thing that good is.

22 Make haste ¹⁰to help me, O LORD my salvation.

befallen him on that account; and gave him occasion to lament his miserable condition. The description may thus have a two-fold reference—the disease of soul being figuratively included in the bodily disease. There are, however, many who think that the description is wholly a figurative account of David's spiritual condition: and in this there is nothing unlikely; it being quite common in Scripture to describe diseases of the moral and spiritual condition by comparisons taken from diseases of the body. However understood, it is clear that he felt the condition he describes as a chastisement on account of his sins.

sions; make me not the reproach of the foolish.

TITLE, "Jeduthun."—From 1 Chron. xvi. 42; xxv. 1; 2 Chron. v. 12, it appears that Jeduthun was one of the chief musicians. This therefore strengthens the conclusions stated in the note to Ps. iv.

This psalm is generally regarded as a sequel to the preceding, and on the same occasion. Some, however, think that it was occasioned by the death of Absalom, after Joab had represented to David the inconsistency of the vehement grief in which he had then indulged.

2 He brought me up also out of 'an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings.

3 And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God: many shall see it, and fear, and shall trust in the LORD.

4 Blessed is that man that maketh the LORD his trust, and respecteth not the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies.

RESIGNATION.—FROM A MONUMENT BY CHANTREY.

"I waited patiently for the Lord."—Verses 1.

PSALM XL.—This is usually considered a psalm of thanksgiving by David on his recovery from the diseased condition of body or mind, or both, to which the two preceding psalms refer.

6. "Mine ears hast thou opened," or "bored."—There is probably here an allusion to a custom of Hebrew bondage, as explained in Exod. xxi. 5, 6 ; Deut. xv. 7. Every one who had sold his liberty was to go free at the jubilee ; but if any one so loved his master as to prefer to continue in bondage, his ear was bored in token of his willing subjection.

7. "In the volume of the book."—This, which seems a reiteration, is not such. The word "volume" appears to apply to the manner in which manuscripts were rolled up to form a book.

10 But thou, O LORD, be merciful unto me, and raise me up, that I may requite them.

11 By this I know that thou favourest me, because mine enemy doth not triumph over me.

12 And as for me, thou upholdest me in mine integrity, and settest me before thy face for ever.

13 Blessed be the LORD God of Israel from everlasting, and to everlasting. Amen, and Amen.

PSALM XLI.—It is generally agreed that David composed this psalm with reference to the conspiracy of Absalom, his best beloved son, and the treachery of Achitophel, the familiar friend in whom he trusted. If so, it might seem, from the mention of his sickness (if it be a real and not a figurative disease), and from the reference, in verse 5, to the expectation of his enemies that he would die, that the sickness to which the preceding chapters refer occurred just before the revolt of Absalom, who, from the intimations here given, may seem to have suspended his design, in the hope that the death of his father would give him all the advantages he could hope from the open revolt to which he resorted when the king's recovery frustrated this expectation. Perhaps the incaution into which the conspirators were betrayed by the expectation of his death, conveyed to him some intimation of their plans. Under this view, the present psalm may perhaps have been composed just before, or not long after, David fled from Jerusalem with the faithful party which remained true in his cause.

Verse 13. "Amen and amen."—With this concludes the first of the five books into which the Jews have divided the book of Psalms. Perhaps this division was made with a reference to the number of the books contained in the Pentateuch. Some think that the division shows the order in which the book, as it now appears, was collected, the first section being the original collection, to which the other four were successively added. Under this view, it is also conceived, that this first book was the collection made by David, whose name is prefixed to all the psalms contained in it, four excepted (i., ii., x., and xxxiii.) But this opinion will not bear examination; for some of the psalms in this first portion appear to belong to the Babylonish captivity, while all the remaining books contain some psalms of David. The second division ends with Ps. lxxii.; the third with Ps. lxxxix.; the fourth with Ps. cvi.; and the fifth with the end of the book. It will be seen that each section ends with a doxology, for the sake of concluding with which the division was probably made at these particular points, although some think that these doxologies were added by the person (probably Ezra) who collected and digested the psalms into their present form. The division of the psalms into five portions is very ancient, as it existed before the Septuagint version was executed: but from the manner in which the psalms of late date are interspersed, it may be concluded with some certainty that the book does not consist of five original collections joined together; but that the division was made after the psalms had been collected into one book.

HART (Antelope Arabica).—MALE, FEMALES, AND YOUNG.

PSALM XLII.—Bishop Lowth considers this psalm one of the most beautiful specimens of the Hebrew elegy. It seems to have been composed by David when he was expelled from his kingdom by his rebellious son, and compelled to fly to the borders of Lebanon, as it is plain he did, from 2 Sam. xvii. 24, 26, 27. Undoubtedly, whoever composed this psalm, was expelled from the sacred city, and wandered as an exile in the regions of Hermon and the heights of Lebanon (verse 7). David was never here during the persecutions of Saul, and it is therefore preferable to select the period of Absalom's revolt. Here then he pitched his camp, protected by the surrounding mountains and woods; and hither the veteran soldiers, attached personally to him and averse to change, resorted from every part of Palestine. Here also, indulging his melancholy, the prospect and objects about him suggested many of the ideas in this poem. Observing the deer, which constantly came from the distant valleys to the fountains of Lebanon, and comparing this circumstance with his earnest desire to revisit the temple of God, and perhaps elevating his thoughts to a higher celestial temple, he commences his poem, "As the hart panteth after the water-brooks," &c. (See Michaelis, as quoted in a note to Lowth's 23rd Lecture.)

Verse 1. "As the hart panteth after the water brooks," &c. —"The hart, naturally of a hot and arid constitution, suffers much from thirst in the Oriental regions. He therefore seeks the fountain or the stream with intense desire, particularly when his natural thirst has been aggravated by the pursuit of the hunter. Panting and braying with eagerness, he precipitates himself into the river, that he may quench at once the burning fever which consumes his vitals in its cooling waters" (Bochart, in Paxton, vol. ii. p. 167). Such animals also suffer much, and pant painfully for water, when they have been chased from their favourite haunts in the waterless plains by the fiercer inmates of the forest or the glade, and are afraid to return to the water lest they should again be molested. And when the unconquerable wants of nature compel them at last to venture, or when they discover some other source from which they may be gratified, the intense and panting eagerness which they exhibit furnishes a beautiful verification of the comparison employed by the Psalmist.

We agree with Dr. Shaw in thinking that the word (אֵיל ail) rendered "hart," and (fem. ailah) "hind," in the Scripture, is a general name for all or any animals of the antelope kind. We are therefore spared the necessity of attempting a specific determination, and for an illustration take the most beautiful and common species of Syria and Arabia. It is properly the gazelle of the Arabians, and we think it far more likely than any other animal of the antelope genus which we have seen in the East to be the צִבְיָה (tzebi) of Scripture, which, being a specific name, affords ground for a specific distinction, which the other word, ail, does not offer. The word tzebi is usually rendered "roebuck" in our version; as in Deut. xii., where we have considered it as the gazelle, and have given a representation of the common gazelle (Antelope dorcas). The gazelle of the Levant, however, though closely allied to this, is distinguished by a more light and elegant form, and by a darker colour; and we feel happy that the recent publication of Hemprich and Ehrenberg enables us to furnish an appropriate pictorial group of these graceful creatures, from which the poetry of Western Asia (including probably that of the Hebrews) has borrowed some of its most beautiful comparisons and images.

3. "My tears have been my meat day and night."—"It seems odd to an English reader to represent tears as meat or food; but we should remember that the sustenance of the ancient Hebrews consisted for the most part of liquids, such as broths, pottages, &c." (Henley: note in Lowth.)

PSALM XLIII.

1 David, praying to be restored to the temple, promiseth to serve God joyfully. 5 He encourageth his soul to trust in God.

JUDGE me, O God, and plead my cause against an 'ungodly nation: O deliver me² from the deceitful and unjust man.

2 For thou art the God of my strength; why dost thou cast me off? why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?

3 O send out thy light and thy truth:

let them lead me; let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles.

4 Then will I go unto the altar of God, unto God³ my exceeding joy: yea, upon the harp will I praise thee, O God my God.

⁴ Psal. 42. 5, 11.

PSALM XLIII.—This Psalm is so closely connected with the preceding in its subject and sentiment, that there is little doubt that they formed originally but one psalm. More than thirty manuscripts confirm this impression.

Verse 4. "Harp."—From the peculiarly poetical character of the book of Psalms, and the frequent references it offers to music and musical instruments, we have judged it best to include within its limits the greater part of the pictorial, illustrative, and elucidatory statements which the general subject seemed to require. We begin here with the musical instruments; and in the course of the book we shall notice most of those mentioned in the Hebrew Scriptures; reserving, however, for the proper place those which occur only in the Chaldee of Daniel.

The whole subject of the musical instruments of the Hebrews is beset with great and insuperable difficulties, when we come to investigate minute distinctions, and attempt a precise analysis of terms and identification of instruments. These difficulties are indeed experienced even with respect to the instruments of the Greeks and Romans, although numerous examples of the forms which they bore are extant in sculpture and painting: and how much more, then, must this be the case when we inquire concerning those of the Hebrews, who have left us no representations, and whose allusions to them in their writings are exceedingly brief and indeterminate? Yet it seems to us that, apart from those considerations by which perplexity is occasioned, it may be possible to arrive at some tolerably satisfactory conclusions or approximations.

From the cuts which we now offer, the reader will at once perceive that we are disposed to seek for the representation of the "harp" of our version, in the lyres of Egypt, Greece, and

Rome. The original word is קִנּוֹר kinnor; which the Septuagint usually either throws into a Greek form, κινύρα, kinura, or renders by κιθάρα, cithara; which last is commonly chosen also by the Vulgate. It will be observed that these ancient versions select their names, of equivalents for the kinnor, from the names which the Greeks and Romans gave to different forms of lyres, of which there were many. We possess various figures of ancient lyres, and various names (lyra, chelys, testudo, cithara, barbitos) by which their principal varieties were distinguished; but as, although we have both names and figures, it remains uncertain to what figures the specific names are applicable, we must be content to know that the ancient translators believed lyres to be denoted in the Hebrew text; and, from their selecting different names to render the same word, that they were uncertain about the particular species of lyre, but thought kinnor to be a generic term (like lyre), including several varieties, of which they sometimes made choice of one and sometimes of another. The brief intimations in Scripture are in full accordance with this statement; for it is not described as such an instrument—large, heavy, and resting on the ground when played—as the word "harp" suggests to our minds; but as a light, portable instrument, which the player carried in his hand or on his arm, and might walk or dance the while. In fact, Scripture describes the kinnor as being used in such a manner, and on such occasions, as we know the lyre to have been by the ancients, who indeed had not, so far as we know, any harps large, and resting on the ground, like ours. We speak only of the Greeks and Romans, however, for the Egyptians had large standing harps; from which we shall, in a future note, take occasion to conclude that such were also known to the Hebrews, while we retain our impression that the lyre is denoted by the kinnor. This instrument was known before the flood, being one of the two invented by Jubal, "the father of such as handle the kinnor and the organ." (Gen. iv. 21.) It is not again mentioned till six hundred years after the deluge, and then so as to denote that it was used on festal occasions; since Laban complains that the private departure of Jacob precluded him from sending him away "with songs, with tabret, and with kinnor." The kinnor is not again noticed in the Pentateuch, nor till the time of Samuel, when we first find it mentioned so as to show that it was used by the prophets in their sacred music; for Samuel foretold Saul that he should meet a company of prophets,

APOLLO MUSAGETES WITH AN IMPROVED FORM OF LYRE, TAKEN FROM A GRECIAN STATUE.

"coming down from the high place, with a psaltery, a tabret, and a pipe, and a kinnor." (1 Sam. x. 5.) Next we find it noticed as used by private persons, such as shepherds and others, for their own solace; and that, when skilfully played, it was considered to have much influence upon the human passions, and in soothing the disturbed mind. For when Saul was afflicted with his melancholy madness, it was recommended that recourse should be had to "a man who is a cunning player upon the kinnor:" the shepherd David was selected, and when the evil spirit came upon Saul, "David took a kinnor, and played with his hand: so Saul was refreshed and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him." From this time we read frequently of the kinnor. The example of David, as king, probably recommended it to more extensive use; besides which the kinnor acquired a very distinguished place in the musical establishment which David formed for the tabernacle, and, prospectively, for the Temple. It is remarkable indeed, that in the Law there are no regulations concerning music, except as to the blowing of horns and trumpets on stated occasions. As to David himself his kinnor is so often mentioned, and he is so frequently described as playing on it, that we seem to have a sort of notion that he had this favourite instrument always at hand. Such indeed was the idea entertained by the Christian fathers; one of whom, Eusebius, says that David carried his lyre (so he calls it—and we doubt not correctly) with him, wherever he went, to console him in his affliction, and to sing to it the praises of God. And in his preface to the Psalms, he asserts that this prince, as head of the prophets, was generally in the tabernacle with his lyre, amidst the other prophets and singers; and that each of them prophesied, and sung his canticle as inspiration came upon him. Another intimation informs us that the frame of the kinnor was of wood; for we are told that Solomon "made of the alnum trees... harps (kinnoroth) also, and psalteries for singing." (1 Kings x. 12.) It was the kinnor also which the captives at Babylon suspended upon the willows by the Euphrates; and from the Babylonians being desirous to hear them sing to the lyre their native songs, it would seem that the Hebrews had become celebrated for their music, and particularly for their skill on the kinnor. Other notices concerning the kinnor are, that it was used in feasts (Isa. v. 12); that females sometimes played it (Isa. xxiii. 16); that it was common at Tyre (Ezek. xxvi. 13); that its notes were cheerful (Job xxi. 2; xxx. 31); and might be mournful (Isa. xvi. 11.) We believe these are the principal points of information which the Scripture offers concerning this instrument. It would be interesting, but it would occupy too much of our space, to adduce from ancient poetry, sculpture, and painting, instances of the use of the ancient lyre, similar to those which the Scriptures give of the kinnor.

We may mention another reason in favour of the lyre, as the national and favourite instrument of the Hebrews; this is its high antiquity, which is allowed to have far exceeded that of all other instruments in the class to which it belongs: and we know that the kinnor is one of the two instruments which the Scriptures assign to an antediluvian age. Indeed, it may be said that the lyre, in its various modifications of form, seems to have been the most common stringed instrument of all nations; whence it is impossible to suppose that it was not known to the Jews; or that, being known, it could be denoted by any other of the names of musical instruments than that of the kinnor. We are not however to suppose that the Hebrew lyre was at all times of the same form and power, or that different forms and powers did not at the same time coexist. The diversity of the forms which the lyre bore among ancient nations will appear from our wood cuts, the different representations in which have been selected with great care from ancient monuments. It is of course not supposed that all these forms were known to the Hebrews; but it is probable that many of them were so; and we may be tolerably sure that, whatever we judge as to precise details of form, the principle of the instrument was the same as these cuts exhibit, and that the applications of the principle were similarly diversified. A large proportion of our figures are Greek and Roman, and it may be asked how these can illustrate Hebrew instruments, since the Greeks certainly claimed the invention of the instruments used by themselves? The answer is easy:—There is every reason to believe that the instruments used by the Greeks and Romans did come from the East, and were originally the same as those used by the Egyptians, Chaldeans, Phœnicians, and Syrians. It is therefore not impossible to recover, through the representations left by the Greeks and Romans, forms of lyres and other instruments nearly approximating to, if not identical with, those used by the Jews and other Orientals. The Greeks, always vain, and always jealous of their own glory, asserted that most of the musical instruments used by them were the invention of their gods or ancient poets. So they said of most other inventions in science and art. But in the present instance, the Scripture alone suffices to overthrow such pretensions, since it mentions some of the instruments thus claimed as existing in times long anterior to even the ages of Greek fable. The Romans derived many of their instruments, and the traditions connected with them, from the Greeks; but their writers intimate that additions were made to them from Syria. Thus Juvenal (Sat. iii.) sneers at the influx of Syrian customs and musical instruments; and Livy (lib. xxxix.) mentions the great number of instrumental performers which came to Rome from Syria, after the wars between the Romans and Antiochus the Great. But even the Greeks are not consistent in their tales, being sometimes obliged to recur to the true source of most of their musical instruments: and this is always in the East—in some instances Phrygia or Lydia, in others Egypt,

Syria, or Persia. As for the Hebrews, we need not suppose that they were themselves the inventors of the instruments they employed. They do not appear to have been ever remarkable for invention; and the instruments of neighbouring nations are in general so similar, that it is not necessary to seek anything peculiar in them. They were probably supplied from the same sources which supplied Greece and Rome:—the Chaldeans, from among whom their fathers came; the Egyptians, among whom they so long lived; the Arabians, Syrians, and Phœnicians, by whom they were surrounded,—probably furnished them with the models of most of the instruments they possessed.

Many of the remarks we have made will serve as introductory to the general subject of musical instruments, as well as being applicable to the lyre in particular. With respect to the particular forms of lyres we shall not add much, as our cuts will convey far more satisfactory information than any quantity of written statement.

One account of the origin of the lyre, and consequently of all stringed instruments, attributes it to an observation made by Apollo upon the twanging of a bow-string. Of this view we shall, in due season, be prepared to adduce some pictorial corroborations; and at present only direct attention to the illustration which the cuts we now give afford to the other, which is that given by Apollodorus, who states that a dead tortoise having been left by the retiring waters of the Nile, the flesh was soon wasted, and nothing left within the shell but nerves and cartilages, and these being braced and contracted by desiccation were rendered sonorous. Mercury happening to strike his foot against it as he passed along was so attracted by the sound produced, that it suggested to him the idea of a lyre, which he afterwards constructed in the form of a tortoise and strung it with the dried sinews of dead animals. Assigning the discovery to some human being, this story has so much probability as can be afforded by the fact that many figures of ancient lyres, and these apparently the most ancient, do actually bear the figure of a tortoise. This lyre was called by the Greeks chelys (χελύς), and by the Romans testudo, that is, tortoise. It seems that in these the magas, or concavity formed towards the base of the lyre, to augment the sound, was really formed of the shell of the tortoise; for Pausanias speaks of a breed of tortoises on Mount Parthenius excellently suited to furnish bellies for lyres. The arms of the instrument seem to have been furnished by two horns approaching each other at the extremities which were connected by a bar from which the strings were extended to the base. The general form thus produced—and preserved in many other forms of the lyre in which the tortoise shell, or any thing in its shape, is absent—has considerable resemblance to a tortoise. But the variations in the framework of lyres are so numerous and fanciful (some are perfectly quadrangular) as to confuse any attempt at classification. And, therefore, were we to attempt a classification of ancient lyres, we would take no notice of external outline, but would first attend to those that have at the base the magas, of whatever form, for the sake of the resounding effect: then we would attend to those, more simple, which are without such an appendage. We cannot doubt that these were considered anciently to form grand distinctions, although we cannot discover the terms by which they were discriminated. Another great distinction, applicable however to lyres of every form, arose from the number of strings. The number belonging to the kinnor is nowhere expressly mentioned in Scripture. Instruments of three, six, eight, and ten strings are supposed to be mentioned. It is however uncertain whether the two middle terms refer to musical instruments at all: and although the first and last certainly do so, it is not certain that the kinnor is intended. We think, however, that the word which may be literally rendered "three," without addition, does refer to the kinnor; but without implying that there were not others with more strings. The most ancient lyre is said to have had three strings, and was very famous, the strings being managed with so much art that the instrument was said to produce more potent effects than those with a greater number of strings, afterwards introduced. The strings ultimately amounted, in some kinds of lyres, to as many as twenty; and it was so much the ancient opinion that the real effect of the music was weakened in proportion as the strings increased, that every addition was at first unpopular. The lyres of three and of seven strings were most famous. Our cuts contain some specimens of lyres with the magas at the base for the sake of resonance. These sometimes rendered the instrument so heavy that it was slung from the shoulder by a belt. Most of our readers will probably give their first attention to the Egyptian lyres which we have copied from Rosellini. It is remarkable that although the tradition we have quoted assigns the invention of the lyre to Egypt, none of the instruments which their paintings exhibit are of the tortoise kind. Their appearance is shown in the cuts; and one very remarkable distinction is, that they are generally held horizontally by the players, not perpendicularly as by the Greeks and Romans. The lyre is still in use among the Abyssinians; and it is observable that, although the sides are formed of wood, it is cut in a spiral-twisted form, to represent horns, the ancient material; while the hard gourd, from which the bellies are made, is carved and cut so as to resemble the shell of a tortoise.

We have only to add, that the ancient lyres were either played with the fingers or struck with an instrument called a plectrum. This implement seems to have been generally a piece of ivory, polished wood, or metal, in the form of a quill. Other forms are preserved, some of which seem to have been too clumsy to extract from the lyre tones of much sweetness or delicacy. Hawkins says that the lower joint of a goat's foot was sometimes employed. It appears that the plectrum was only used with the larger species of the lyre. When employed, it was held in the right hand; and while the player struck the cords with it, the fingers of the left hand also touched the strings. When the fingers only were used, those of both hands were generally employed: but some ancient lyrists were celebrated for their performances with one hand, and that too sometimes the left hand. Josephus says that the kinnorim of the Temple were played with the plectrum: and this may have been, although it appears from Scripture that the common lyres were played with the hand.

PSALM XLIV.

1 The church, in memory of former favours, 7 complaineth of their present evils. 17 Professing her integrity, 24 she fervently prayeth for succour.

To the chief Musician for the sons of Korah, Maschil.

WE have heard with our ears, O God, our fathers have told us, what work thou didst in their days, in the times of old.

2 How thou didst drive out the heathen with thy hand, and plantedst them; how thou didst afflict the people, and cast them out.

3 For they got not the land in possession by their own sword, neither did their own arm save them: but thy right hand, and thine arm, and the light of thy countenance, because thou hadst a favour unto them.

4 Thou art my King, O God: command deliverances for Jacob.

5 Through thee will we push down our enemies: through thy name will we tread them under that rise up against us.

6 For I will not trust in my bow, neither shall my sword save me.

7 But thou hast saved us from our enemies, and hast put them to shame that hated us.

8 In God we boast all the day long, and praise thy name for ever. Selah.

9 But thou hast cast off, and put us to shame; and goest not forth with our armies.

10 Thou makest us to turn back from the enemy: and they which hate us spoil for themselves.

11 Thou hast given us 'like sheep appointed for meat; and hast scattered us among the heathen.

12 Thou sellest thy people 'for nought, and dost not increase thy wealth by their price.

13 'Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us.

14 'Thou makest us a byword among the heathen, a shaking of the head among the people.

15 My confusion is continually before me, and the shame of my face hath covered me.

16 For the voice of him that reproacheth and blasphemeth; by reason of the enemy and avenger.

17 All this is come upon us; yet have we not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant.

20 If we have forgotten the name of our God, or stretched out our hands to a strange god ;

21 Shall not God search this out ? for he knoweth the secrets of the heart.

22 'Yea, for thy sake are we killed all the day long ; we are counted as sheep for the slaughter.

23 Awake, why sleepest thou, O LORD ? arise, cast us not off for ever.

24 Wherefore hidest thou thy face, and forgettest our affliction and our oppression ?

PSALM XLIV.—Calmet attributes this Psalm to the captives in Babylon. It is evident that it describes the Hebrews as being in a most oppressed and afflicted condition, and in entire or partial captivity. But many think they can gather that, nevertheless, the Jews still had a national existence, and maintained the worship of God ; and therefore fix the date of this psalm at such different periods as they respectively conceive to meet the required condition. Bishop Patrick selects the time of Hezekiah ; while others (as Calvin) refer it to the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, in the time of the Maccabees. But this was too late ; and therefore some, who hold this opinion, suppose it was written by David in the spirit of prophecy. This is the only alternative which assigns it to David.

Verse 11. "Like sheep appointed for meat."—This very strongly and strikingly intimates the extent of the persecution and slaughter to which they were exposed ; there being no creature in the world of which such vast numbers are constantly slaughtered as of sheep for the subsistence of man. The constancy of such slaughter is also mentioned in verse 22 as illustrating the continual oppression to which the Hebrews were subject.

12. "Dost not increase thy wealth by their price."—The whole verse probably refers to their being sold for slaves. If so, the first clause would intimate that they were sold for a very inconsiderable price ; which price, whether great or small, could not (as the present clause intimates) be any increase of wealth to the Almighty.

25. "Our belly cleaveth unto the earth."—This, as figurative of a depressed and degraded condition, is probably derived from the crawling of serpents and other reptiles upon their belly. So God cursed the serpent—"Upon thy belly shalt thou go," &c. (Gen. iii. 14.)

TITLE. "Upon Shoshannim."—This is very commonly translated "Upon the Lilies;" but what the Lilies are intended to denote has been very variously understood. We shall not enlarge on this point however, as the alternatives of interpretation (equally applicable here) have already been sufficiently stated in the note on the title of Psalm xxii. The word seems so obviously to mean "Lilies" (which in the singular is שושן shushan), that we are disinclined to go out of the way to שש shesh, "six," in order to obtain the sense of "six-stringed instruments." It is however not impossible that a musical instrument should be called a "Lily;" and if the name had reference to the form, it might perhaps have been a cymbal. If the word occurred alone, one might suppose the name of the tune to be intended; but this appears to be otherwise mentioned under the name Maschil. The whole matter is however attended with great uncertainty; and while we feel that "Lilies" are to be understood by "Shoshannim," we must leave the reader to apply, in the present instance, the alternatives of explanation which we have stated in the note on the title of Psalm xxii.

—"A song of loves."—So called, doubtless, with reference to its subject, which is obviously a marriage. Some render, as Waterland, "Song of the beloved maids," that is, the bridesmaids—the virgins who were wont to attend the bride, and sing the nuptial song. Gesenius however regards it as a commendatory title, "a lovely song." The word rendered "love" is ידידת jediduth, and is therefore supposed by some also to bear an allusion to the name Jedidiah, which Nathan gave to Solomon. It is generally conceived that this psalm was probably composed on occasion of Solomon's marriage, probably to Pharaoh's daughter; although it is on all hands allowed to have a much higher prophetic reference to the Messiah. This is indeed allowed by the best Jewish interpreters, and fully believed by all Christian churches. "We must say," says Patrick, "as our Saviour did in another case 'Behold, a greater than Solomon is here.'"

Verse 8. "Myrrh."—See the note on Gen. xliii. 11.

"Aloes."—The word is אהלית ahaloth, the same that is rendered in other places by "lign-aloes." The word has generally been understood by both Jewish and Christian writers, to denote a fragrant wood from India. No objection can arise from the fact that the tree does not grow in Western Asia, for it is mentioned as a costly aromatic, and such the Hebrews were accustomed to obtain from the Arabians and others, who probably got them from India. It is true that the tree furnishes a comparison to Baalam in Num. xxiv. 6; but this scarcely proves, as some suppose, that the ahalim were therefore necessarily Syrian trees; for the precious aromatic being doubtless known, and reports concerning the tree which afforded it current, it might be alluded to in Hebrew poetry as our poets speak of the palm. Assuming this conclusion, the product in question may, with every probability, be identified with the fragrant wood from India (i. e., from India by way of Arabia) which Dioscorides mentions under the name of agallochum. This name is, with slight variation, the same which the Arabians and Persians apply to the eagle-wood of India, to which, on account of some fancied analogy of sound, the name of "aloe" and "aloes-wood" has been popularly, but very improperly given; while, in scientific works, the proper name of agallocha has been retained to distinguish the family of Indian plants by which the eagle-wood is afforded. Of these there are several species: but the wood to which the name of Eagle-wood is most frequently applied, is that of the Garo of Malacca, figured and described by Lamarck under the name of Aquilaria Malaccensis. This was introduced by Dr. Roxburgh into the botanic garden of Calcutta, and did not appear to be distinguishable from specimens of the Ugoor, a large tree which is a native of the mountainous tracts east and south-east from Silhet, between 24° and 25° of N. lat., and which flowers in April and ripens its seed in August. As the Malacca specimen had not flowered, Dr. Roxburgh was not quite assured of its identity with those from Silhet, and which he therefore distinguished under the name of Aquilaria

agallocha, as another species of the same genus. "There can be little doubt," he says, "that this is the tree which furnishes the real calambac or agallochum of the ancients." He adds that the eagle-wood imported by sea, from the eastward, to Calcutta is deemed inferior to that from Silhet. [See "Flora Indica," ii. 423; and "Penny Cyclopædia," Art. "Eagle-wood."] The full aromatic power which lies in the wood is not so well developed in every plant as to render the aloe-wood in its best state other than precious even in India, where it is said to have been anciently more precious than gold. The trees producing this precious wood are accounted sacred by the Indians, and are not felled without religious ceremonies. The Jews believe that the ahalim grew in the garden of Eden, which is also believed by the Orientals of the tree which affords the eagle-wood; whence it is also called "the tree of Paradise." The strong fragrance of its wood not only recommended it as a perfume of the first class for clothes and apartments, but caused it to be offered as incense in the heathen sacrifices. It was also highly valued for its cordial properties as a medicine. Captain Saris thus describes the appearance and qualities of the eagle-wood, in teaching traders how to select that of the best description: "Lignum-aloes, a wood so called by the English, is named by the Malays garrû. The best sort comes from Malacca, Siam, and Cambaya. Choose that which is in large round sticks and very massy, being black, marbled with ash-coloured veins, somewhat bitter in taste, and is likewise of an odoriferous scent, and that burns like pitch in bubbles, a splinter being laid upon a fire coal; for if it be good, it will not leave frying till it be consumed, yielding a most grateful odour."

"Cassia."—See the note to Exod. xxx. 24.

Laurus Cassia.

"Ivory palaces."—The precise reference is not very well determined; but supposing it to be, as is usually understood, to the royal palaces, it would of course intimate that ivory figured so conspicuously in the interior decorations, as to entitle particular structures to be characterised as "ivory palaces" by way of distinction. It will be recollected that the practice of inlaying or covering the walls of state apartments with valuable metals, woods, and other substances, was in very extensive use in the ancient Oriental and classical nations. The tabernacle and the temple were inlaid with gold, for example. Instances of the same taste occur in the classical poets, in which we find ivory mentioned among the substances thus employed. It is thus mentioned by Homer, in alluding to the splendid palace of Menelaus. Lucan, in describing the banquetting-hall of Cleopatra, queen of Egypt, affords some interesting intimations of the extent and diversified forms in which this practice of inlaying or covering was carried.

"Rich as some fane by lavish zealots rear'd,
For the proud banquet stood the hall prepared:
Thick golden plates the latent beams infold,
And the high roof was fretted o'er with gold:
Of solid marble all, the walls were made,
And onyx ev'n the meaner floor inlaid;
While porphyry and agate, round the court,
In massy columns rose, a proud support.
Of solid ebony each post was wrought,
From awarthy Meroë profusely brought:
With ivory was the entrance crusted o'er,
And polish'd tortoise hid each shining door:
While on the cloudy spots enchased was seen,
The lively emerald's never-fading green."

Pharsalia, x. 119 et seq.

Ultimately, among the Romans, ivory inlaying seems to have become rather a common method of ornamenting the interiors of mansions owned by the wealthy. Horace mentions it as an evidence of his humble way of life that, "no walls inlaid with ivory adorned his house" (Ode 18, b. ii.). It will be observed that in the extract from Lucan, ivory is mentioned next to ebony; and as we find the two substances frequently mentioned in this connection, we may infer that they were associated when used for interior ornament: and this was doubtless for the sake of the effect obtained from the contrast, as intimated by Virgil (Æn. x. 135), when he tells us that "the Dardan boy," with "his radiant temples bare," shone

—"Like wrought ivory, when the workman's sleight Circles with ebony the glossy white."—SYMMONS.

We would therefore venture to suggest that the ebony was employed to form a sort of panel-work, in numerous compartments, disposed in complicated but regular forms, the ribs, or framework, being of ebony, and the compartments filled up with the polished ivory. This idea is suggested by the frequent occasion we have had to notice such panel-work in different parts of Western Asia, particularly as used for ceilings. In this case, however, wood only is used—often valuable wood, or, if not, painted, the ribs being gilt, or painted with a colour different from that of the body of the work, so as to suggest the idea of a different substance. The Orientals still exhibit much partiality for inlaying their grand apartments; but we are not aware that ivory is now employed for this purpose. Looking-glass is commonly chosen; and some of the most splendid halls of regal palaces are thus inlaid. Ornamental work in stucco is also much employed in interior decoration: and the manner in which certain prominent parts are covered with gilding, other parts richly covered, with intervals of clear white, has often suggested ideas of the ivory, ebony, sapphire, and fretted gold which ancient descriptions indicate.

13, 14. "Her clothing is of wrought gold... she shall be brought... in raiment of needlework."—Both expressions appear to refer to the same dress, and would seem to imply that the garment was embroidered with figures worked with threads of gold. It will be remembered that the bride in this "song of loves" is supposed to have been Pharaoh's daughter, and if so, her costly dress was doubtless of Egyptian manufacture, and, as a rich foreign article, would naturally attract the more attention. The Egyptians were in ancient times celebrated for their manufactures in linen, and the Scripture itself bears repeated testimony to this fact, as we shall have occasion to point out as we proceed. Confining our present attention to the intimation in the text, we may observe that some mummies have been found (as that described by Mrs. Lushington) wrapped up in garments curiously wrought with gold lace. The embroidered work of Egypt is mentioned in Ezek. xxvii. 7, and is probably analogous in some degree to the "needle work" to which the text before us refers. At the present day, as well in Egypt as in the countries of Western Asia, it is common among the ladies, even of the highest rank, to employ much of their time in embroidering linen and cotton tissues, particularly veils and handkerchiefs, with threads of silver or gold and silk of various colours. How much such work was prized in times still earlier than those to which this psalm refers, appears from the remarkably repeated mention of it which Sisera's mother is represented as making when anticipating the glorious spoil which she expected her conquering son to bring home: "A prey of divers colours, a prey of divers colours of needlework, of divers colours of needlework on both sides, meet for the necks of them that take the spoil." (Judges v. 30.)

PSALM XLVI.—This psalm is generally supposed to have been composed by David on occasion of the victory over the Philistines and Moabites, recorded in 2 Sam. viii. 1, 2. Calmet, however, assigns it to the Captivity.

Verse 9. "He breaketh the bow...cutteth the spear...burneth the chariot."—This probably alludes to a custom of collecting the arms and armour of the victors into a heap, and setting it on fire. This was particularly done when the victors were unable to remove them or so to dispose of them as to preclude the danger of their being again used against themselves. This was also a Roman custom, and is alluded to by Virgil. (Æn. viii. 560). A medal struck under Vespasian to commemorate the termination of his wars, represents Peace holding an olive-branch with one hand, and in the other a lighted torch, with which she sets fire to a heap of armour. As a symbolical action, representing the conclusion of wars, this is very expressive.

PSALM XLVIII.—This psalm appears to commemorate some deliverance which the Lord granted to Jerusalem after it had been assaulted or threatened by some powerful confederacy. Some think that it refers to the ineffectual attempt of Rezin, king of Syria, and Pekah, king of Israel (Isa. vii); but its occasion is more generally supposed to have been the victory which the Lord gave Jehoshaphat over the Moabites and Ammonites when the victors returned to Jerusalem “with psalteries and harps and trumpets” (2 Chron. xx). Calmet thinks this and the preceding psalm were composed for the dedication of the second temple.

Verse 2. “Mount Zion.”—For a general statement concerning Mount Zion, see the note to 2 Sam. v. We had some intention of examining the grounds on which Dr. Clarke ventured to question the established conclusion concerning the site of Mount Zion; but as his arguments have had little weight with subsequent travellers, and as we should conclude such an investigation by declaring our adherence to the general opinion, it seems scarcely desirable to open the discussion in our pages. We have therefore the less to add to the particulars already given at p. 98 of the present volume.

We have already mentioned that Mount Zion is nearly excluded from the walls of the present city. That part which is within it is occupied by an Armenian convent, with its church and gardens. Chateaubriand describes the hill as of a yellowish colour and barren appearance, opening in the form of a crescent towards the city. “From the top of the hill you see, to the south, the valley of Ben-Hinnom; beyond this, the Field of Blood, purchased with the thirty pieces of silver given to Judas, the hill of Evil Counsel, the tombs of the judges, and the whole desert towards Hebron and Bethlehem: to the north, the wall of Jerusalem, which passes over the top of Zion, intercepts the view of the city, the site of which gradually slopes from this place towards the valley of Jehoshaphat.”

SUMMIT OF MOUNT ZION, WITH THE MOSQUE OF DAVID.—FROM AN ORIGINAL DRAWING.

On passing from the city by the Zion gate, the first object that meets the eye is a large dingy-looking Turkish mosque, situated in the middle of Mount Zion, and called the Mosque of David, and believed to have been built over his tomb, which is still exhibited in the interior, and held in the highest possible veneration by the Moslems. The Santons belonging to this mosque are the most powerful in Jerusalem. Part of this building was anciently the church of the Coenaculum, where it is said that our Saviour ate the Last Supper with his disciples: and Dr. Richardson was shown into an upper room in the front of the building, which both the Santon and the ciceroni assured him to be the identical apartment in which that memorable event took place; forgetting that "Ruin's merciless ploughshare" did, after that, more than once pass over "the joy of the whole earth." To the right of this mosque, and between it and the city gate, there is a small Armenian chapel, said to be built on the spot where once stood the palace of Caiaphas. It is remarkable for nothing but an unpolished block of compact limestone, the same with the rock on which the city stands, and which is built in an altar at the upper end of it. This stone is alleged to be that with which the sepulchre of Christ was closed; and is kissed and caressed, like other precious relics, by the pilgrims.

A few paces to the west of the chapel there is a Christian burying-ground, among the tombstones of which there are several with inscriptions in the English language. A little to the south of this is shown the spot where the Virgin Mary is said to have expired; and on the north side of the gate is shown the place where the cock crew to Peter.

These are the points of interest to which the local guides exclusively direct the attention of the pilgrim to Mount Zion. Dr. Richardson, from whose excellent 'Travels' the above details are chiefly drawn, thus concludes his account of this interesting spot. "At the time when I visited this sacred ground, one part of it supported a crop of barley; another was undergoing the labour of the plough, and the soil turned up consisted of stone and lime mixed with earth, such as is usually met with in the foundations of ruined cities. It is nearly a mile in circumference, is highest on the west side, and towards the east falls down in broad terraces on the upper part of the mountain, and narrow ones on the side, as it slopes down towards the brook Kedron. Each terrace is divided from the one above it by a low wall, built of the ruins of this celebrated spot. The terraces near the bottom of the hill are still used as gardens, and are watered from the pool of Siloam. They belong chiefly to the inhabitants of the small village of Siloa, immediately opposite. We have here another remarkable instance of the special fulfilment of prophecy:—'Therefore shall Zion, for your sake, be ploughed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps.' " (Micah iii. 12).

PSALM XLIX.

1 An earnest persuasion to build the faith of resurrection, not on worldly power, but on God. 16 Worldly prosperity is not to be admired.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm for the sons of Korah.

HEAR this, all ye people; give ear, all ye inhabitants of the world:

2 Both low and high, rich and poor, together.

3 My mouth shall speak of wisdom; and the meditation of my heart shall be of understanding.

4 ²I will incline mine ear to a parable: I will open my dark saying upon the harp.

5 Wherefore should I fear in the days of evil, when the iniquity of my heels shall compass me about?

6 They that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches;

7 None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him:

8 (For the redemption of their soul is precious, and it ceaseth for ever:)

9 That he should still live for ever, and not see corruption.

10 For he seeth that wise men die, likewise the fool and the brutish person perish, and leave their wealth to others.

11 Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever, and their dwelling places ³to all generations; they call their lands after their own names.

12 Nevertheless man being in honour abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish.

13 This their way is their folly: yet their posterity ⁴approve their sayings. Selah.

14 Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their ⁵beauty shall consume ⁶in the grave from their dwelling.

15 But God will redeem my soul ⁷from the power of ⁸the grave: for he shall receive me. Selah.

16 Be not thou afraid when one is made rich, when the glory of his house is increased;

17 ⁹For when he dieth he shall carry nothing away: his glory shall not descend after him.

18 Though ¹⁰while he lived he blessed his soul: and men will praise thee, when thou doest well to thyself.

19 ¹¹He shall go to the generation of his fathers; they shall never see light.

20 Man that is in honour, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish.

PSALM XLIX.—Nothing is known, or conjectured with tolerable probability, concerning the author, time, or occasion of this excellent psalm. Calmet supposes of this, as well as of others with a similar superscription, that it was composed by (not for) one of the sons of Korah, during the Captivity, for the use and comfort of his captive brethren. Others ascribe it to David. Ten psalms bear the superscription "For the sons of Korah:" but from the uncertainty of the prefixed preposition (ל) it has always been doubted whether these psalms were written by or for them. It seems most probable that these psalms were composed by them, from certain peculiarities of style in which they agree with each other, and differ from the psalms which bear the name of David. Who the sons of Korah were is not very clear: but it is generally supposed that they were the descendants of that Korah, the distinguished Levite who perished, in the rebellion in the wilderness, with Dathan and Abiram. (Num. xvi.) It is certain from the record of that transaction, that all Korah's children did not perish with him; and we learn from 1 Chron. vi. 22, 37, that some of their descendants were among those who presided over the Temple music. These circumstances strengthen the probability that to the descendants of those whom the Lord's mercy spared from the ruin of their father's house, we owe some of the most beautiful of all the divine songs which the book of Psalms contains.

PSALM L.

1 The majesty of God in the church. 5 His order to gather saints. 7 The pleasure of God is not in ceremonies, 14 but in sincerity of obedience.

A Psalm of Asaph.

THE mighty God, even the LORD, hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof.

2 Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined.

3 Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him.

4 He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people.

5 Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.

6 And the heavens shall declare his righteousness: for God is judge himself. Selah.

7 Hear, O my people, and I will speak; O Israel, and I will testify against thee: I am God, even thy God.

8 I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices or thy burnt offerings, to have been continually before me.

9 I will take no bullock out of thy house, nor he goats out of thy folds.

10 For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills.

11 I know all the fowls of the mountains: and the wild beasts of the field are mine.

12 If I were hungry, I would not tell thee: ³for the world is mine, and the fulness thereof.

13 Will I eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats?

14 Offer unto God thanksgiving; and pay thy vows unto the most high:

15 And call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.

16 But unto the wicked God saith, What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my covenant in thy mouth?

17 'Seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behind thee.

18 When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him, and ¹hast been partaker with adulterers.

19 'Thou givest thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit.

20 Thou sittest and speakest against thy brother; thou slanderest thine own mother's son.

21 These things hast thou done, and I kept silence; thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself: but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes.

22 Now consider this, ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver.

23 Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me: and to him ²that ordereth his conversation aright will I shew the salvation of God.

TITLE. The prepositional prefix rendered "of" in the present superscription is the same (ל) that is given as "for" in that of the preceding psalm. The same considerations are therefore here applicable, and incline us to conclude that the psalms which bear the name of Asaph were written by him. Asaph is frequently mentioned in the historical books as the chief, or one of the chiefs, of the choirs of Israel in the time of David. The psalms ascribed to him are twelve (l. lxxiii.—lxxxi.) Two of these however (lxxiv. lxxix.) could not have been written by him or in his time; as their contents evidently assign them to the period of the Captivity. The subject of Asaph's psalms are doctrinal or preceptive: their style, though less sweet than that of David, is much more vehement, and little inferior to the grandest parts of the prophecies of Isaiah and Habakkuk. The present psalm in particular is characterized by a very deep strain of thought, and lofty tone of sentiment. See Horne's 'Introduction,' vol. iv. p. 102. Bishop Lowth has some interesting observations on the poetical character of this psalm in his 27th Lecture.

PSALM LI.

1 David prayeth for remission of sins, whereof he maketh a deep confession. 6 He prayeth for sanctification. 16 God delighteth not in sacrifice, but in sincerity. 18 He prayeth for the church.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, 'when Nathan the prophet came unto him, after he had gone in to Bath-sheba.

HAVE mercy upon me, O God, according to thy lovingkindness: according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions.

2 Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin.

3 For I acknowledge my transgressions: and my sin is ever before me.

4 Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight: 'that thou mightest be justified when thou speakest, and be clear when thou judgest.

5 Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother 'conceive me.

6 Behold thou desirest truth in the inward parts: and in the hidden part thou shalt make me to know wisdom.

7 'Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean: wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

8 Make me to hear joy and gladness; that the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice.

9 Hide thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities.

10 Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew 'a right spirit within me.

11 Cast me not away from thy presence; and take not thy holy spirit from me.

12 Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free spirit.

13 Then will I teach transgressors thy ways; and sinners shall be converted unto thee.

14 Deliver me from 'bloodguiltiness, O God, thou God of my salvation: and my tongue shall sing aloud of thy righteousness.

15 O Lord, open thou my lips; and my mouth shall shew forth thy praise.

16 For thou desirest not sacrifice; 'else would I give it: thou delightest not in burnt offering.

17 'The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise.

18 Do good in thy good pleasure unto Zion: build thou the walls of Jerusalem.

19 Then shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifices of righteousness, with burnt offering and whole burnt offering: then shall they offer bullocks upon thine altar.

TITLE. It is the general opinion that this pathetic psalm was composed on the occasion which the title indicates. It is so well suited to the circumstances, that the only doubt which has been raised on the subject proceeds from verses 18 and 19, which certainly seem, at the first view, more applicable to the time of the Captivity than to that of David. If no other reference could be found, we should rather incline to Venema's opinion that these two verses were added after the Jews had returned to captivity, than to that of Calmet, who assigns the whole psalm to that period. These verses appear to have such a want of connection with what precedes as strongly to sanction the former opinion. However, both these verses may have been written by David under some such interpretation as that which supposes him to refer to the completion of the walls which he had commenced, with perhaps a prospective reference in the last verse to that future Temple in which he was so deeply interested.

Verse 7. "Purge me with hyssop."—The Psalmist here refers to the ceremonies used in the purification from leprosy, as described in Lev. xiv.

PSALM LII.

1 David, condemning the spitefulness of Doeg, prophesieth his destruction. 6 The righteous shall rejoice at it. 8 David, upon his confidence in God's mercy, giveth thanks.

To the chief Musician, Maschil, A Psalm of David, 'when Doeg the Edomite came and told Saul, and said unto him, David is come to the house of Ahimelech.

WHY boastest thou thyself in mischief, O mighty man? the goodness of God endureth continually.

2 Thy tongue deviseth mischiefs; like a sharp razor, working deceitfully.

3 Thou lovest evil more than good; and lying rather than to speak righteousness. Selah.

4 Thou lovest all devouring words, ²O thou deceitful tongue.

² Or, and the deceitful tongue.

5 God shall likewise ³destroy thee for ever, he shall take thee away, and pluck thee out of thy dwelling place, and root thee out of the land of the living. Selah.

6 The righteous also shall see, and fear, and shall laugh at him:

7 Lo, this is the man that made not God his strength; but trusted in the abundance of his riches, and strengthened himself in his 'wickedness.

8 But I am like a green olive tree in the house of God: I trust in the mercy of God for ever and ever.

9 I will praise thee for ever, because thou hast done it: and I will wait on thy name; for it is good before thy saints.

³ Heb. beat thee down.

⁴ Or, substance.

Verse 8. "A green olive tree."—As some have objected that the olive-tree is not remarkable for its greenness, we may observe that the word רָעָנָן ranan, does not so much refer to colour as to a fresh, vigorous, and flourishing condition. Hence this word is used to express fresh oil (Ps. xcii. 11); and, in Dan. iv. 4, a flourishing condition of kingly power. There is a particular propriety in such comparisons as that of the present text, from the fact that the olive is an evergreen; and is also, considering its size, very long-lived.

PSALM LIII.

1 David describeth the corruption of a natural man. 4 He convinceth the wicked by the light of their own conscience. 6 He glorieth in the salvation of God.

To the chief Musician upon Mahalath, Maschil, A Psalm of David.

THE 'fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. Corrupt are they, and have done abominable iniquity: ²*there is* none that doeth good.

2 God looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, that did seek God.

3 Every one of them is gone back: they

¹ Psal. 10. 4, and 14. 1, &c.

² Rom. 3. 10.

³ Heb. they feared a fear.

⁴ Heb. Who will give salvations, &c.

are altogether become filthy; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

4 Have the workers of iniquity no knowledge? who eat up my people as they eat bread: they have not called upon God.

5 There ³were they in great fear, where no fear was: for God hath scattered the bones of him that encampeth against thee: thou hast put them to shame, because God hath despised them.

6 'Oh that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! When God bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.

PSALM LIII.—This psalm is nearly the same as the 14th; the chief difference being in the sixth verse. The title is new, however. The Septuagint and Vulgate, like our version, have not attempted to explain the word Mahalath. It is of course liable to the alternatives of interpretation which we have suggested under former psalms, and need not here repeat. Calmet concludes that the word means a dance,—referring to such dances as were used at particular festivals and occasions (Exod. xv. 20; Judges xxi. 21; 1 Sam. xviii. 6); and understands that the psalm is addressed to the principal musician who had the superintendence and direction of such dances.

Jerome, Houbigant, and others, render it chorus; many refer it to musical instruments; and some conclude that it denotes the tune which took its name from some old song in which mahalath was a leading word. The Rev. T. H. Horne adopts the first (Calmet's) opinion; the reader is prepared to expect that we should prefer the last, if we did not consider the present title even more than usually doubtful. The title ascribes the psalm to David: but there is certainly sufficient internal evidence to justify the doubt which some commentators entertain, whether it should not rather be referred to the Captivity.

PSALM LIV.

1 David, complaining of the Ziphims, prayeth for salvation.
4 Upon his confidence in God's help he promiseth sacrifice.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, Maschil, A Psalm of David, 'when the Ziphims came and said to Saul, Doth not David hide himself with us?

SAVE me, O God, by thy name, and judge me by thy strength.

2 Hear my prayer, O God; give ear to the words of my mouth.

3 For strangers are risen up against me, and oppressors seek after my soul: they have not set God before them. Selah.

4 Behold, God is mine helper: the LORD is with them that uphold my soul.

5 He shall reward evil unto ²mine enemies: cut them off in thy truth.

6 I will freely sacrifice unto thee: I will praise thy name, O LORD; for it is good.

PSALM LV.

1 David in his prayer complaineth of his fearful case. 9 He prayeth against his enemies, of whose wickedness and treachery he complaineth. 16 He comforteth himself in God's preservation of him, and confusion of his enemies.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, Maschil, A Psalm of David.

GIVE ear to my prayer, O God; and hide not thyself from my supplication.

2 Attend unto me, and hear me: I mourn in my complaint, and make a noise;

3 Because of the voice of the enemy, because of the oppression of the wicked: for they cast iniquity upon me, and in wrath they hate me.

4 My heart is sore pained within me: and the terrors of death are fallen upon me.

5 Fearfulness and trembling are come upon me, and horror hath overwhelmed me.

6 And I said, Oh that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away, and be at rest.

7 Lo, then would I wander far off, and remain in the wilderness. Selah.

8 I would hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest.

9 Destroy, O LORD, and divide their tongues: for I have seen violence and strife in the city.

10 Day and night they go about it upon the walls thereof: mischief also and sorrow are in the midst of it.

11 Wickedness is in the midst thereof: deceit and guile depart not from her streets.

12 For it was not an enemy that reproached me; then I could have borne it: neither was it he that hated me that did magnify himself against me; then I would have hid myself from him:

13 But it was thou, ²a man mine equal, my guide, and mine acquaintance.

14 ³We took sweet counsel together, and walked unto the house of God in company.

15 Let death seize upon them, and let them go down quick into hell: for wickedness is in their dwellings, and among them.

16 As for me, I will call upon God; and the LORD shall save me.

17 Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice.

18 He hath delivered my soul in peace from the battle that was against me: for there were many with me.

19 God shall hear, and afflict them, even he that abideth of old. Selah. ⁴Because they have no changes, therefore they fear not God.

PSALM LV.—This psalm was evidently composed with reference to the treachery of David's dear and trusted friend Achitophel, as recorded in 2 Sam. xv.

Verse 6. "Oh that I had wings like a dove !"—This is one of the several beautiful allusions to the flight of the dove. The rapidity of her flight and her sustained power of wing were doubtless in the view of the Psalmist in the present text ; and these and other characteristics of this interesting bird are brought before us in other passages, and will be duly noticed as they occur. The poets of all ages have derived some of their most beautiful figures and metaphorical allusions from the same source. The following from Virgil is, in some respects, an interesting illustration of the present text :—

"—In her nest, within some cavern hung,

The dove sits trembling o'er her callow young,

Till roused at last, by some impetuous shock,
She starts surprised, and beats around the rock ;
Then to the open field for refuge flies,
And the free bird expatiates in the skies ;
Her pinions poised, through liquid air she springs,
And smoothly glides, nor moves her levell'd wings."

—Æneid, iv. PITT.

21. "Drawn swords."—It is quite usual in the figurative language of the East to compare severe, unkind, or abusive words to swords, daggers, arrows, &c. From this we are not ourselves far removed when we describe such words as keen, cutting, piercing, or when we speak of the wounds which they inflict. We have also the phrase "to speak daggers," which Shakespeare puts into the mouth of Hamlet.

"Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days."—Verse 23.

RUBENS.

PSALM LVI.

¹ David, praying to God in confidence of his word, complaineth of his enemies. ⁹ He professeth his confidence in God's word, and promiseth to praise him.

To the chief Musician upon Jonath-elim-rechokim, 'Michtam of David, when the 'Philistines took him in Gath.

Be merciful unto me, O God: for man would swallow me up; he fighting daily oppresseth me.

² Mine enemies would daily swallow me up: for they be many that fight against me, O thou most high.

³ What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee.

⁴ In God I will praise his word, in God I have put my trust; I will not fear what flesh can do unto me.

⁵ Every day they wrest my words: all their thoughts are against me for evil.

⁶ They gather themselves together, they hide themselves, they mark my steps, when they wait for my soul.

⁷ Shall they escape by iniquity? in thine anger cast down the people, O God.

⁸ Thou tellest my wanderings: put thou my tears into thy bottle: are they not in thy book?

⁹ When I cry unto thee, then shall mine enemies turn back: this I know; for God is for me.

¹⁰ In God will I praise his word: in the LORD will I praise his word.

¹¹ In God have I put my trust: I will not be afraid what man can do unto me.

¹² Thy vows are upon me, O God: I will render praises unto thee.

³ Heb. Mine observers.

TITLE, "Upon Jonath-elim-rechokim."—This title has much exercised the ingenuity of interpreters. As to the explanation of the words,—the Septuagint leads one class of interpretations by rendering, "For the people distant from the sanctuary," which, with some slight variations (as "the saints" instead of "the sanctuary"), is followed by the Vulgate and other versions. Houbigant, partly following the Septuagint, translates, "Upon the oppression of the banished people," which is substantially adopted by Parkhurst and others. A third, more received and more obvious interpretation, refers it to a mute and banished dove, in such versions as "The silent (mute, dumb) dove afar off"—or "in distant places," &c. Or else, "The dove mute in distant places," &c. Besides its acceptance with many modern commentators, this view has the ancient support of Aquila and Jerome. But Bochart renders elim not by "mute," but by "woods," and translates, "The dove in the remote woods." But those who agree in the main as to this view, differ as to its applications; the range of alternatives being the same as has already been discriminated under Ps. xxii., to which the reader is referred; and he will probably think it easiest to understand that the present psalm is here directed to be sung or played to the tune of "The silent dove afar off."

Verse 8. "Put thou my tears into thy bottle."—In the Roman tombs are found small bottles (usually called lachrymatories) of glass or pottery, but most commonly glass, and of various forms, but generally with long narrow necks. These are commonly supposed to have contained tears shed by the surviving friends of the deceased, and to have been deposited in the sepulchres as memorials of affection and distress. We might very well suppose that the present text alludes to such a custom; and it would therefore imply that it existed very anciently in the East, and particularly among the Hebrews. It must not however be concealed, that the use assigned to these phials is a modern conjecture, and that there is no trace of such a custom in ancient writings or sculptures; whence Shoëfflin, Paciaudi, and others were rather led to conclude that these phials were intended to contain the perfumes used in sprinkling the funeral pile. This is not the place to discuss such a question; but we may add, that the representation of one or two eyes which is observed upon some of these vessels, is a circumstance in favour of the common opinion. Whatever be concluded on this point, we have little doubt that the Psalmist does refer to some custom then existing of putting tears in small bottles, particularly as there are still some traces of such a usage in the East. Thus, in the annual lamentations of the Persians for the slaughtered sons of Ali, their tears are copiously excited by passionate discourses and tragical recitations. When at the height of their grief, a priest sometimes goes round to each person and collects the tears with a piece of cotton, from which he presses them into a bottle, preserving them with the greatest care. This seems a striking illustration of the present text, which takes its allusion from one person putting the tears of another into a bottle. The Persians believe that there is a peculiar virtue in the tears shed on the occasion mentioned; so that persons at the point of death have revived when a drop has been administered to them. This is the reason why they are so carefully collected.

PSALM LVII.

¹ David in prayer fleeing unto God complaineth of his dangerous case. ⁷ He encourageth himself to praise God.

PSALM LVIII.

1 David reproveth wicked judges, 3 describeth the nature of the wicked, 6 devoteth them to God's judgments, 10 wherewith the righteous shall rejoice.

To the chief Musician, 'Al-taschith, Michtam of David.

Do ye indeed speak righteousness, O congregation? do ye judge uprightly, O ye sons of men?

2 Yea, in heart ye work wickedness; ye weigh the violence of your hands in the earth.

3 The wicked are estranged from the womb: they go astray ²as soon as they be born, speaking lies.

4 Their poison is ³like the poison of a serpent: they are like the deaf ⁴adder that stoppeth her ear;

5 Which will not hearken to the voice of charmers, ⁵charming never so wisely.

6 Break their teeth, O God, in their mouth: break out the great teeth of the young lions, O LORD.

7 Let them melt away as waters which run continually: when he bendeth his bow to shoot his arrows, let them be as cut in pieces.

8 As a snail which melteth, let every one of them pass away: like the untimely birth of a woman, that they may not see the sun.

9 Before your pots can feel the thorns, he shall take them away as with a whirlwind, ⁶both living, and in his wrath.

10 The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance: he shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked.

Verse 5. "The voice of charmers."—The present text furnishes the earliest existing reference to a class of persons who still practise their art in the East. These are the serpent-charmers,—men who were believed to possess some natural endowment or acquired secret, which subjected the serpents in a very peculiar manner to their perceptions and control, rendered harmless any wounds which the animals might inflict upon their persons, and enabled them to cure those which others had received. In general these serpent-charmers were, and are, distinct tribes of men in their several countries, professing the power they claim, to be an inherent and natural function. The most famous serpent-charmers of antiquity were the Psylli, a people of Cyrenaica; and that theirs was believed to be a natural power appears from the story told by Pliny, that they were accustomed to try the legitimacy of their newborn children by exposing them to the most cruel and venomous serpents, who dared not molest or even approach them unless they were illegitimate. He thinks their power resided in some peculiar odour in their persons, which the serpents abhorred ('Nat. Hist.' lib. vii. c. 2). Lucan says the same: and the passage in which that poet speaks of them affords a complete exposition of the ancient belief concerning the charming of serpents. He chiefly describes the measures which they took to protect the Roman camp. When the encampment was marked out, they marched around it chanting their charms, the "mystic sound" of which chased the serpents far away. But not trusting entirely to this, they kept up fires, of different kinds of wood, beyond the furthest tents, the smell of which prevented the serpents from approaching. Thus the camp was protected during the night. But if any soldier, when abroad in the day-time, happened to be bitten, the Paylli exerted their powers to effect a cure. First they rubbed the wounded part around with saliva, to prevent, as they said, the poison from spreading while they assayed their arts to extract it:—

"Then sudden he begins the magic song,
And rolls the numbers hasty o'er his tongue;
Swift he runs on, nor pauses once for breath,
To stop the progress of approaching death:
He fears the cure might suffer by delay,
And life be lost but for a moment's stay.
Thus oft, though deep within the veins it lies,
By magic numbers chased, the mischief flies:
But if it hear too slow,—if still it stay,
And scorn the potent charmer to obey;
With forceful lips he fastens on the wound,
Drains out and spits the venom to the ground."

Pharsalia, ix. ROWE.

In this account we find the voice repeatedly mentioned; and it is to "the voice of the charmer" that the Psalmist refers. We may suppose that, as in the passage we have quoted, the charmers used a form of words—a charm, or else chanted a song in some peculiar manner. So Eusebius, in mentioning that Palestine abounded in serpent-charmers in his time, says that they usually employed a verbal charm. This is still one of the processes of the Oriental serpent-charmers. Roberts says that the following is considered in India the most potent form of words against serpents: "Oh! serpent, thou who art coiled in my path, get out of my way; for around thee are the mongoos, the porcupine, and the kite in his circles is ready to take thee!" The Egyptian serpent-charmers also employ vocal sounds and a form of words to draw the venomous creatures from their retreats. Mr. Lane says: "He assumes an air of mystery, strikes the walls with a short palm-stick, whistles, makes a clucking noise with his tongue, and spits upon the ground; and generally says, 'I adjure you by God, if ye be above, or if ye be below, that ye come forth: I adjure ye by the most Great Name, if ye be obedient, come forth; and if ye be disobedient, die! die! die!'" (Mod. Egyptians, vol. ii. p. 104.) In these cases we may be sure that if any true effect were produced, it was by the sound of the voice, not by the form of words, which was doubtless addressed to other ears than those of serpents: and in the latter instance we may conclude the whistling and clucking to have been the most operative parts of the process.

But music is also much employed by the charmers of serpents. By means of pipes, flutes, whistles (calls), or small drums, they profess to attract them from their retreats, to subdue their ferocity, and (when the serpents are tame ones, exhibited by themselves) to make them dance, and perform various motions regulated by the notes of the music. We see nothing difficult to believe in the statement that serpents may be, as some other creatures are, influenced or attracted by music, or even the voice of man, properly regulated; or that the proper regulation of the music or the voice for the designed end, may not have been discovered and rendered most effective, by men who for successive generations have given their sole attention to the subject. Indeed, it is perhaps capable of proof that music, even in common hands, has power over serpents. Sir William Jones believed so, although not on ocular evidence. Enumerating instances of the powerful effects of music upon animals, he says, "A learned native of this country (India) told me, that he had frequently seen the most venomous and malignant snakes leave their holes, upon hearing notes from a flute, which, as he supposed, gave them peculiar delight." (Asiatic Researches, vol. iii. p. 315.)

As to their pretension of being in their own persons insensible to the poison of serpents, we have never met with any satisfactory proof of it. Those which they exhibit, and by which they often allow themselves to be bitten, are confessedly deprived of all or most of their venomous power by the extraction of their poison-fangs. But nevertheless, we know ourselves, and have read, many authenticated instances of their fearless handling of very venomous serpents in their native state: and it is therefore our impression, that they possess some knack in seizing and handling such serpents, which prevents them from biting till their poison-fangs have been extracted. Their presence of mind and the possession of such a secret easily accounts for all the stories told on this point. But when they do happen to fail, and to receive a bite from the serpent, they suffer as others. They seem also to trust to the effect of their music in so diverting the attention of the serpents as to prevent them from attempting to exercise the fatal power they possess. In this also they sometimes fail. Roberts mentions an Indian serpent-charmer who came to a gentleman's house to exhibit his tame snakes. He was told that there was a cobra di capello in a cage, and asked if he could charm it. "Oh, yes!" said the charmer; and the serpent was accordingly released from its cage. The man began his incantations and charms; but the reptile fastened upon his arm, and he was dead before night. This serpent "would not listen to the voice of the charmer."

We will now briefly specify the principal forms in which the serpent-charmers exercise the powers which they claim. As the houses in some parts of the East are much infested with serpents, the most profitable part of the charmer's business is to detect their retreat and draw them forth. They certainly discover where they are without ocular evidence, and make them come forth, either in the manner already described, or by the notes of a pipe. It is often said, that the charmer introduces his tame serpents, and that they obey the accustomed call, and are exhibited in proof of the triumph of the charmer's art. This may sometimes be the case: but instances are known in which there could not have been any collusion or contrivance; and, after the severest test and scrutiny, many have been obliged to rest in the conclusion, that the charmers do really possess the physical means of discovering the presence of serpents without seeing them, and of attracting them from their lurking places. This is Mr. Lane's conclusion, who also suspects that they discover the presence of serpents by the smell, and compares their attractive powers to those of the fowler, who by the fascination of his voice allures the bird into his net. In the Missionary Magazine for March, 1837, a missionary to India (G. Gogerly) states that some incredulous persons, after the most minute and careful precaution against artifice of any kind, sent a serpent-charmer into the garden. "The man began playing with his pipe, and proceeding from one part of the garden to another for some minutes, stopped at a part of the wall much injured by age, and intimated that a serpent was within. He then played quicker, and his notes were louder, when almost immediately a large cobra di capello put forth his hooded head, and the man fearlessly ran to the spot, seized it by the throat, and drew it forth. He then showed the poison-fangs, and beat them out; afterwards it was taken to the room where his baskets were left, and deposited among the rest." From the statement of the precautions used on this occasion, for which we refer to the publication, this was a very fair trial. Does not his beating out the poison-fangs explain what follows in the next verse? "Break their teeth, O God, in their mouth." This is usually done by the serpent-charmers, who then tame them, and use them in various exhibitions. These exhibitions are much the same everywhere. The most usual are thus described by Mr. Gogerly, in the paper above cited, which we the rather quote, as it partly serves to explain our present cut: "Taking out eight or ten different kinds, they cast them on the ground. The animals immediately make off in different directions. The sap-wullah (charmer) then applies his pipe to his mouth, and sends forth a few of his peculiar notes, and all the serpents stop as though enchanted; they then turn towards the musician, and approaching him within two feet, raise their heads from the ground, and bending backward and forward, keep time with the tune. When he ceases playing, they drop their heads, and remain quiet on the ground." He adds that there is another and inferior kind of serpent-charmers, who are Bengalese of the lowest caste. They do not use the pipe, but merely beat with their fingers a small drum which is held in the hand. Sometimes these men, sitting on the ground, hold the cover of a basket with one hand, and with the other pull the tails of the serpents, and otherwise irritate them, until the animals become so infuriated that they dart forward and seize the naked arm of the sap-wullah, which he exposes for the purpose. They sometimes allow their arms to be bitten in this manner till they are covered with blood.

Other serpent-charmers allow large serpents to twine round their bodies, as if merely to show their perfect tameness, and the impunity with which they are able "To dally with the crested worm,

To stroke his azure neck, or to receive
The lambent homage of his arrowy tongue."

Others again, in this situation, allow themselves, when compressed in the serpent's folds, to be dreadfully wounded in many places (the poisoned fangs of course being wanting), till, when streaming with blood, tortured, swollen, and in a really dangerous condition, the coadjutor makes his appearance, and applies the pipe or whistle to his lips. The serpents listen to the music, gradually unloose their coils, and creep back to the cage from which they had been released at the commencement of the awful and cruel exhibition. Of such a display there is a very detailed account in Captain Riley's 'Narrative of the Loss of the American Brig Commerce' (New York, 1817). One of the serpents employed was the Effah, of which a figure is given under Job xx. There are other allusions in the Scripture to the charming of serpents; as in Eccles. x. 11, and Jer. viii. 17. Such passages intimate the existence of the art, without denying or affirming the power and skill to which the charmers pretend.

8. "Snail."—(שבלול shabbetul.) The original word seems to come from another, which signifies a trail or a path; and is therefore very descriptive of a creature so remarkable for leaving its path or trail behind it. The glutinous secretion assists its progress, but then every excursion is undertaken at the expense of its own substance. To modify this inconvenience it prefers travelling in the night, or after a shower, when the expenditure is consequently least, or at its minimum. If in a hot climate it were cast a great distance from damp or a sheltered spot, it would in all likelihood soon perish from the loss of moisture. The number of words (as marked by Italics) brought in to make out the sense, seems to intimate something obscure in our version. We should be disposed to render the first part of this verse by,—“Like the snail which wastes away as it goes.”

PSALM LIX.

1 David prayeth to be delivered from his enemies. 6 He complaineth of their cruelty. 8 He trusteth in God. 11 He prayeth against them. 16 He praiseth God.

To the chief Musician, ¹Al-taschith, Michtam of David; ²when Saul sent, and they watched the house to kill him.

¹ Or, Destroy not, A golden Psalm of David.

DELIVER me from mine enemies, O my God :
³ defend me from them that rise up against me.

2 Deliver me from the workers of iniquity, and save me from bloody men.

³ 1 Sam. 19. 11.

² Heb. set me on high.

3 For, lo, they lie in wait for my soul: the mighty are gathered against me; not for my transgression, nor for my sin, O LORD.

4 They run and prepare themselves without my fault: awake to help me, and behold.

5 Thou therefore, O LORD God of hosts, the God of Israel, awake to visit all the heathen: be not merciful to any wicked transgressors. Selah.

6 They return at evening: they make a noise like a dog, and go round about the city.

7 Behold, they belch out with their mouth: swords are in their lips: for who, say they, doth hear?

8 But thou, O LORD, shalt laugh at them; thou shalt have all the heathen in derision.

9 Because of his strength will I wait upon thee: for God is my defence.

10 The God of my mercy shall prevent me: God shall let me see my desire upon mine enemies.

11 Slay them not, lest my people forget: scatter them by thy power; and bring them down, O LORD our shield.

12 For the sin of their mouth and the words of their lips let them even be taken in their pride: and for cursing and lying which they speak.

13 Consume them in wrath, consume them, that they may not be: and let them know that God ruleth in Jacob unto the ends of the earth. Selah.

14 And at evening let them return; and let them make a noise like a dog, and go round about the city.

15 Let them wander up and down for meat, and grudge if they be not satisfied.

16 But I will sing of thy power; yea, I will sing aloud of thy mercy in the morning: for thou hast been my defence and refuge in the day of my trouble.

17 Unto thee, O my strength, will I sing: for God is my defence, and the God of my mercy.

⁹ Or, if they be not satisfied, then they will stay all night.

Verse 15. "Wander up and down for meat."—Dogs may in England do this for amusement, when their essential wants are provided for by their masters: but in the East, where they have no particular masters, they are obliged to do so from necessity. Retaining much of their native habits, as beasts of prey, they do this chiefly by night, as the text intimates, being in general dozy and inactive in the day-time. This contributes to render their presence in an Oriental city more formidable, to passengers, at night than by day. In their night prowlings they effectually clear the streets of whatever offal or carrion may be in them; and their want of squeamish appetites is then, as well as by day, evinced to an extent which would alone well account for all the abhorrent allusions which the Scriptures contain. They refuse scarcely any thing (except crude vegetables) capable of mastication; and yet are for ever lean, hungry, and unsatisfied: which seems to intimate that the dog was so much intended for and suited to complete domestication, that even while in a position more favourable than that which any other undomesticated beast obtains, it is only in fellowship with man that he can arrive at a prosperous condition of existence.

PSALM LX.

1 David, complaining to God of former judgment, 4 now, upon better hope, prayeth for deliverance. 6 Comforting himself in God's promises, he craveth that help whereon he trusteth.

To the chief Musician upon Shushan-eduth, 'Michtam of David, to teach; when he strove with Aram-naharaim and with Aram-zobah, when Joab returned, and smote of Edom in the valley of salt twelve thousand.

O God, thou hast cast us off, thou hast

'scattered us, thou hast been displeased; O turn thyself to us again.

2 Thou hast made the earth to tremble; thou hast broken it: heal the breaches thereof; for it shaketh.

3 Thou hast shewed thy people hard things: thou hast made us to drink the wine of astonishment.

² Or, triumph thou over me (by an irony).

³ Heb. city of strength.

⁴ Psal. 44. 9, and 108. 11.

TITLE, "Shushan-eduth."—"The Lily of the testimony," is the obvious translation of these words. But see the note on the title to Psalm xlv. The present word, shushan, in the singular form, has received the same interpretations and applications as the plural, shushanim, which there occurs.

Verse 4. "Thou hast given a banner," &c.—This is perhaps explained by a custom mentioned by Richardson in his 'Dissertation on the Language, &c. of Eastern Nations' (p. 269, edit. 1778). "The khalif along with the alcab or titles, used generally to send to their feudatory princes a banner, which, whilst they preserved their allegiance, was always carried before them. It was thus that the Khalif Wathek invested Taher ben Abdallah, about the year 873, in the principality of Khorassan." The delivery of a banner seems also to have involved an obligation on the part of the giver to protect those to whom it was given: in support of which view, Harmer cites Albertus Aquensis, who states that when Jerusalem was taken by the Crusaders in 1099, about three hundred Saracens got upon the roof of a very lofty building, and earnestly begged for quarter; but they could not be induced by any promises of safety to come down, until they had received the banner of Tancred (one of the Christian generals) as a pledge of life.

8. "My washpot . . . my shoe."—These expressions imply that Moab and Edom should be reduced to slavery, as intimated by a reference to some of the lowest offices which a slave performs, as presenting the washing-basin to the master, and taking charge of his sandals.

9. "The strong city."—This was probably Petra; and is remarkably appropriate with reference to that city, which the researches of Burckhardt, Laborde, and others, have made known to us under that name.

PSALM LXI.

1 David fleeth to God upon his former experience. 4 He voweth perpetual service unto him, because of his promises.

To the chief Musician upon Neginah, A Psalm of David.

HEAR my cry, O God; attend unto my prayer.

2 From the end of the earth will I cry unto thee, when my heart is overwhelmed: lead me to the rock that is higher than I.

3 For thou hast been a shelter for me, and a strong tower from the enemy.

4 I will abide in thy tabernacle for ever:

I will 'trust in the covert of thy wings. Selah.

5 For thou, O God, hast heard my vows: thou hast given me the heritage of those that fear thy name.

6 'Thou wilt prolong the king's life: and his years 'as many generations.

8 So will I sing praise unto thy name for ever, that I may daily perform my vows.

¹ Or, make my refuge.

³ Heb. as generation and generation.

PSALM LXI.—The occasion on which this psalm was composed is very uncertain; perhaps when, in consequence of the rebellion of Absalom, David remained in a banished condition in the land beyond Jordan.

PSALM LXII.

To the chief Musician, to Jeduthun, A Psalm of David.

'TRULY my soul ²waiteth upon God: from him cometh my salvation.

² He only is my rock and my salvation; he is my ³defence; I shall not be greatly moved.

³ How long will ye imagine mischief against a man? ye shall be slain all of you: as a bowing wall shall ye be, and as a tottering fence.

⁴ They only consult to cast him down from his excellency: they delight in lies: they bless with their mouth, but they curse ⁵inwardly. Selah.

⁵ My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him.

⁶ He only is my rock and my salvation: he is my defence; I shall not be moved.

⁷ In God is my salvation and my glory: the rock of my strength, and my refuge, is in God.

⁸ Trust in him at all times; ye people, pour out your heart before him: God is a refuge for us. Selah.

¹⁰ Trust not in oppression, and become not vain in robbery: if riches increase, set not your heart upon them.

PSALM LXII.—Bishop Patrick thinks that, from the internal evidence, this psalm was composed when David had overcome all the fears which the rebellion of Absalom had at first occasioned, but before he was fully restored to his kingdom.

PSALM LXIII.

¹ David's thirst for God. ⁴ His manner of blessing God. ⁹ His confidence of his enemies' destruction, and his own safety.

A Psalm of David, when he was in the wilderness of Judah.

O God, thou art my God; early will I seek thee: my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee in a dry and ¹thirsty land, ²where no water is;

² To see thy power and thy glory, so as I have seen thee in the sanctuary.

³ Because thy lovingkindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee.

⁴ Thus will I bless thee while I live: I will lift up my hands in thy name.

⁵ My soul shall be satisfied as with ⁶marrow and fatness; and my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips:

⁶ When I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches.

⁷ Because thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice.

⁸ My soul followeth hard after thee: thy right hand upholdeth me.

⁹ But those that seek my soul, to destroy it, shall go into the lower parts of the earth.

Verse 11. "The king."—Here David speaks of himself as king, whereas the title fixes the psalm to the time before he became king, when the enmity of Saul made him a banished man. Some therefore think it could not have been composed by David. But we may suppose him to be here speaking not of his existing condition, but of what he should be—a king rejoicing in God—when evil days were passed, and when he should be delivered from the persecutions of evil men. David knew and believed that it was the Lord's purpose that he should be king; and he might well refer to that prospect.

PSALM LXIV.

7 But God shall shoot at them with an arrow: suddenly ⁶shall they be wounded.

8 So they shall make their own tongue to fall upon themselves: all that see them shall flee away.

9 And all men shall fear, and shall declare the work of God; for they shall wisely consider of his doing.

PSALM LXIV.—It is not agreed whether this psalm should be referred either to the time of Saul's persecution or Absalom's rebellion.

PSALM LXV.

- 1 David praiseth God for his grace. 4 The blessedness of God's chosen by reason of benefits.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm and Song of David.

PRAISE ¹waiteth for thee, O God, in Sion: and unto thee shall the vow be performed.

2 O thou that hearest prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come.

3 ²Iniquities prevail against me: as for our transgressions, thou shalt purge them away.

9 Thou visitest the earth, and ⁴waterest it: thou greatly enrichest it with the river of God, which is full of water: thou preparest them corn, when thou hast so provided for it.

10 Thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly: ⁵thou settlest the furrows thereof: ⁶thou makest it soft with showers: thou blessest the springing thereof.

11 Thou crownest ⁷the year with thy goodness; and thy paths drop fatness.

12 They drop upon the pastures of the wilderness: and the little hills ⁸rejoice on every side.

13 The pastures are clothed with flocks; the valleys also are covered over with corn; they shout for joy, they also sing.

PSALM LXV.—It is the general opinion that this psalm was composed by David, on occasion of the return of plenty, after the three years of drought and famine which followed Absalom's rebellion; as recorded in 2 Sam. xxii.

PSALM LXVI.

1 David exhorteth to praise God, 5 to observe his great works, 8 to bless him for his gracious benefits. 12 He voweth for himself religious service to God. 16 He declareth God's special goodness to himself.

To the chief Musician, A Song or Psalm.

MAKE a joyful noise unto God, 'all ye lands:

2 Sing forth the honour of his name: make his praise glorious.

3 Say unto God, How terrible art thou in thy works! through the greatness of thy power shall thine enemies 'submit themselves unto thee.

4 All the earth shall worship thee, and shall sing unto thee; they shall sing to thy name. Selah.

5 Come and see the works of God: he is terrible in his doing toward the children of men.

6 He turned the sea into dry land: they went through the flood on foot: there did we rejoice in him.

7 He ruleth by his power for ever; his eyes behold the nations: let not the rebellious exalt themselves. Selah.

8 O bless our God, ye people, and make the voice of his praise to be heard:

9 Which 'holdeth our soul in life, and suffereth not our feet to be moved.

PSALM LXVI.—The author and occasion of this psalm are not well determined. The writer signalises the Lord's mercies to Israel in general, and to himself in particular, in a connec-

10 For thou, O God, hast proved us: thou hast tried us, as silver is tried.

11 Thou broughtest us into the net; thou laidst affliction upon our loins.

12 Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads; we went through fire and through water: but thou broughtest us out into a 'wealthy place.

13 I will go into thy house with burnt offerings: I will pay thee my vows, 14 Which my lips have 'uttered, and my mouth hath spoken, when I was in trouble.

15 I will offer unto thee burnt sacrifices of 'fatlings, with the incense of rams; I will offer bullocks with goats. Selah.

16 Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul.

17 I cried unto him with my mouth, and he was extolled with my tongue.

18 If I regard iniquity in my heart, the LORD will not hear me:

19 But verily God hath heard me; he hath attended to the voice of my prayer.

20 Blessed be God, which hath not turned away my prayer, nor his mercy from me.

tion of ideas which reminds us of David, who was probably the author; although some conceive that it rather relates to the restoration of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity.

PSALM LXVII.

1 A prayer for the enlargement of God's kingdom, 3 to the joy of the people, 6 and the increase of God's blessings.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, A Psalm or Song.

God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine 'upon us. Selah.

2 That thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations.

3 Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

4 O let the nations be glad and sing for joy: for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and 'govern the nations upon earth. Selah.

5 Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

6 Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us.

7 God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear him.

PSALM LXVII.—It is agreed that this psalm was written by the same author as the preceding. Bishop Patrick concludes that its time may be placed after the settlement of David in his kingdom and the removal of the ark to Mount Zion, when he blessed the people in the name of the Lord of Hosts (2 Sam. vi. 17, 18), perhaps in the words of this psalm. But Calmet thinks that this, as well as the two preceding psalms, were composed after the return from Babylon; and that the particular occasion was the restoration of fertility to the soil, after the long period of drought and scarceness recorded by Haggai (chap. i. 10, 11; ii. 17—19).

PSALM LXVIII.

1 A prayer at the removing of the ark. 4 An exhortation to praise God for his mercies, 7 for his care of the church, 19 for his great works.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm or Song of David.

LET ¹God arise, let his enemies be scattered: let them also that hate him flee ²before him.

2 As smoke is driven away, so drive them away: as wax melteth before the fire, so let the wicked perish in the presence of God.

3 But let the righteous be glad; let them rejoice before God: yea, let them ³exceedingly rejoice.

4 Sing unto God, sing praises to his name: extol him that rideth upon the heavens by his name JAH, and rejoice before him.

5 A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation.

6 God setteth the solitary ⁴in families: he bringeth out those which are bound with chains: but the rebellious dwell in a dry land.

7 O God, when thou wentest forth before thy people, when thou didst march through the wilderness; Selah:

8 The earth shook, the heavens also dropped at the presence of God: even Sinai itself was moved at the presence of God, the God of Israel.

9 Thou, O God, didst ⁵send a plentiful rain, whereby thou didst ⁶confirm thine inheritance, when it was weary.

10 Thy congregation hath dwelt therein: thou, O God, hast prepared of thy goodness for the poor.

PSALM LXVIII.—This noble psalm, which begins with the well-known exordium on the removal of the ark, is concluded to have been composed by David, in order to be sung in the procession of the ark from the house of Obed-edom to Mount Zion. It is divided into nine parts, suited to the several divisions of the march, and which were probably sung by different choirs.

Verses 13. "Though ye have lien among the pots."—Harmer ingeniously conjectures that the state of Israel in Egypt is here compared to that of a dove making its abode in the hollow of a rock, which had been smutted by the fires which shepherds had made in it, for the heating of their milk or other culinary purposes. He supposes that the "pots" are the little heaps of stones on which the pots were set, having a hollow under them to receive the fuel; this being a common way of cooking under such circumstances. This and every other explanation is however attended with great uncertainty; and indeed the present verse is unquestionably the most difficult in the present psalm, if not in the whole book of Psalms. In this member of the verse, the difficulty is in the word rendered "pots" (פִּתְּוֹת shophetaim), which is the same that is rendered "hooks" in Ezek. xl. 43. Boothroyd renders, "When ye lie down within your own boundaries;" which we do not think a very clear translation: but, as he observes, "there is no authority for rendering 'between the pots;' no one of the old translators has so rendered." He follows Jerome. Other versions are, "among the furnaces;" or "the fire-ranges;" or "the watering troughs." Gesenius thinks the word is equivalent to מִשְׁפָּתַיִם mishpethaim, there being only the difference of the formative פ; and this latter word is rendered, no doubt correctly, "sheepfolds," in our version of Judges v. 16. If we gave the same meaning here, it may refer to the condition of the Israelites when living among their flocks in the wilderness. Others have "crooks," as instruments of war; others "armies" or "between two armies in battle array;" and, to notice no more, "among the stones (cinders) of the hearth." It is difficult to decide between so many alternatives; and the only course seems to be to take that sense which may seem to agree best with what follows.

—"The wings of a dove, covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold."—This second member of the verse is perhaps not less difficult than the preceding. The plumage of some of the doves of the East might very well be compared to silver; but there is no source of comparison to gold, unless in those brilliant and sometimes golden reflections which the lustrous plumage of some doves exhibits. And this is the more probable when we consider that the reference is not necessarily to the colour but to the brilliancy of gold, whatever be the hue. Thus understood, the image affords a very intelligible contrast of condition, which might perhaps thus be interpreted:—"Although you were reduced to lie down among the ashes, ye rose therefrom with the silver wings of a dove, her feathers lustrous as gold." Harmer conjectures that, as the doves were sacred among the Syrians, and as it was customary among the ancients to adorn their sacred animals with trinkets of gold, there may here be some reference to a dove thus adorned. However, those who assign a warlike interpretation to the first member of the verse, sustain their view by concluding that the dove referred to was one wrought in vivid colours upon a standard; and that there is a reference, perhaps prophetic, to the Assyrian standard, which is assumed to have borne the image of that bird; and then, by an altered but warranted construction, the passage may refer to the humiliation of such a standard as borne by the Assyrians, Syrians, Canaanites, or others; or, on the other hand, as some think, to its triumph after previous humiliation, as borne by the Hebrews themselves. We prefer the more simple explanation, but should not like to insist upon it; for we are disposed, with Bishop Lowth, to give up this and the following verse as inexplicable by any information we now possess.

14. "White as snow in Salmon."—There was a mountain of this name in the tribe of Ephraim, which may be here intended; particularly if the reference be, as some suppose, retrospectively, to the defeat of the kings of Canaan. Some however doubt whether a mountain be at all intended. Boothroyd has, "The Almighty, having scattered those kings, hath by this turned death-shade to splendour;" the version after Parkhurst, "It snowed in Salmon;" Carrières, in his Paraphrase, has, "You became white as the snow on Mount Salmon;" and Calmet, more paraphrastically, "You were covered with a lustre like that of the snow which covers Mount Salmon." We certainly think that Carrières has seized the right idea. The intention evidently is to describe, by a figure, the honour and prosperity the Hebrews acquired by the defeat of their enemies; and to express this by whiteness, and, superlatively, by the whiteness of snow. Nothing can be more usual, in Persia for instance, than for a person to say, under an influx of prosperity or honour, or on receiving happy intelligence, "My face is made white;" or, gratefully, in return for a favour or compliment, "You have made my face white:" so also, "His face is whitened," expresses the sense which is entertained of the happiness or favour which another has received. When Sir Gore Ouseley, the British ambassador to Persia, spoke to the king in high terms of the manner in which the Persian ambassador to England had discharged his functions, the king, highly pleased, said to the latter, "You have made my face white in a foreign country, and I will make your face white in this." And when, many years after, the king addressed some complimentary expressions, the same former ambassador to England, who was present as master of the ceremonies, said, addressing the English envoy (Sir J. Macdonald), "Your face is whitened, your consequence is increased by his Majesty's condescension." Such a figurative use of the idea of whiteness does, we imagine, furnish the best explanation of the present and some other texts of Scripture.

25. "The singers went before," &c.—This doubtless refers to the order of the procession then on its march, and to that of religious processions in general. In the religious and festal processions of the Hindoos there is the same order and classes of performers. The singers, men and women, precede, singing songs appropriate to the occasion; and then the players on instruments follow after.

30. "The company of spearmen."—The marginal reading, "The beasts of the reeds," is doubtless the most correct. It is not agreed whether this phrase denotes lions, boars, river-horses, or crocodiles. We apprehend that all wild and savage beasts inhabiting the banks of rivers are intended, without any particular reference to the species.

"Calves of the people."—This expression may probably denote the mass of the people, undistinguished for rank or power, and particularly the young men; while the "bulls" are probably their mature and influential leaders. Some apply this in a military sense, and understand that the calves were the troops, and the bulls the commanders.

PSALM LXIX.

1 David complaineth of his affliction. 13 He prayeth for deliverance. 22 He devoteth his enemies to destruction. 30 He praiseth God with thanksgiving.

To the chief Musician upon Shoshannim, A Psalm of David.

SAVE me, O God; for the waters are come in unto my soul.

2 I sink in 'deep mire, where there is no standing: I am come into 'deep waters, where the floods overflow me.

3 I am weary of my crying: my throat is dried: mine eyes fail while I wait for my God.

4 They that hate me without a cause are more than the hairs of mine head: they that would destroy me, being mine enemies wrongfully, are mighty: then I restored that which I took not away.

5 O God, thou knowest my foolishness; and my 'sins are not hid from thee.

6 Let not them that wait on thee, O Lord God of hosts, be ashamed for my sake: let not those that seek thee be confounded for my sake, O God of Israel.

7 Because for thy sake I have borne reproach; shame hath covered my face.

8 I am become a stranger unto my brethren, and an alien unto my mother's children.

9 'For the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up; 'and the reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me.

10 When I wept, and chastened my soul with fasting, that was to my reproach.

11 I made sackcloth also my garment; and I became a proverb to them.

12 They that sit in the gate speak against me; and I was the song of the 'drunkards.

13 But as for me, my prayer is unto thee, O LORD, in an acceptable time: O

God, in the multitude of thy mercy hear me, in the truth of thy salvation.

14 Deliver me out of the mire, and let me not sink: let me be delivered from them that hate me, and out of the deep waters.

15 Let not the waterflood overflow me, neither let the deep swallow me up, and let not the pit shut her mouth upon me.

16 Hear me, O LORD; for thy loving-kindness is good: turn unto me according to the multitude of thy tender mercies.

17 And hide not thy face from thy servant; for I am in trouble: 'hear me speedily.

18 Draw nigh unto my soul, and redeem it: deliver me because of mine enemies.

19 Thou hast known my reproach, and my shame, and my dishonour: mine adversaries are all before thee.

20 Reproach hath broken my heart; and I am full of heaviness: and I looked for some 'to take pity, but there was none; and for comforters, but I found none.

21 They gave me also gall for my meat; 'and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink.

22 'Let their table become a snare before them: and that which should have been for their welfare, let it become a trap.

23 Let their eyes be darkened, that they see not; and make their loins continually to shake.

24 Pour out thine indignation upon them, and let thy wrathful anger take hold of them.

25 Let 'their habitation be desolate; and 'let none dwell in their tents.

26 For they persecute him whom thou hast smitten; and they talk to the grief of 'those whom thou hast wounded.

27 Add 'iniquity unto their iniquity: and let them not come into thy righteousness.

PSALM LXIX.—The expressions in the two last verses led Calmet to ascribe this psalm to the Captivity: but it is usually attributed to David, although it must remain uncertain whether it was composed during the persecutions of Saul or the rebellion of Absalom. This psalm is several times quoted in the New Testament, in such a manner as to evince that it bears a prophetic reference to the sufferings of Christ.

PSALM LXX.

David soliciteth God to the speedy destruction of the wicked, and preservation of the godly.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, to bring to remembrance.

5 But I am poor and needy: make haste unto me, O God: thou art my help and my deliverer; O LORD, make no tarrying.

PSALM LXX.—This is very nearly the same as the latter part of the fortieth psalm.

PSALM LXXI.

¹ David, in confidence of faith, and experience of God's favour, prayeth both for himself, and against the enemies of his soul. 14 He promiseth constancy. 17 He prayeth for perseverance. 19 He praiseth God, and promiseth to do it cheerfully.

8 Let my mouth be filled with thy praise and with thy honour all the day.

9 Cast me not off in the time of old age; forsake me not when my strength faileth.

10 For mine enemies speak against me; and they that ³lay wait for my soul take counsel together, 11 Saying, God hath forsaken him: persecute and take him; for there is none to deliver him.

12 O God, be not far from me: O my God, make haste for my help.

13 Let them be confounded and consumed that are adversaries to my soul; let them be covered with reproach and dishonour that seek my hurt.

14 But I will hope continually, and will yet praise thee more and more.

15 My mouth shall shew forth thy righteousness and thy salvation all the day; for I know not the numbers thereof.

16 I will go in the strength of the Lord God: I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only.

17 O God, thou hast taught me from my youth: and hitherto have I declared thy wondrous works.

18 Now also 'when I am old and grey-headed, O God, forsake me not; until I have shewed ³thy strength unto this generation, and thy power to every one that is to come.

19 Thy righteousness also, O God, is very high, who hast done great things: O God, who is like unto thee!

20 Thou, which hast shewed me great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me again, and shalt bring me up again from the depths of the earth.

21 Thou shalt increase my greatness, and comfort me on every side.

22 I will also praise thee 'with the psaltery, even thy truth, O my God: unto thee will I sing with the harp, O thou Holy One of Israel.

PSALM LXXI.—Although this psalm has no title, it is by general consent ascribed to David, and supposed to have been composed during Absalom's revolt, as he mentions his old age, and his danger of perishing. It is almost a copy of Psalm xxxi.; and as the passages, in the present psalm, which refer to his advanced age are wanting in the other, it seems as if the thirty-first psalm (written probably during the persecutions of Saul) was taken, and adapted, by a little alteration and addition, to his later affliction.

TITLE, "For Solomon."—This psalm was evidently written when David caused Solomon to be proclaimed king, as recorded in 1 Kings i.

Verse 8. "From sea to sea."—In the obvious sense, with reference to Solomon—for we are not here or elsewhere investigating the ulterior reference of the psalms to the Messiah—this probably means from the Red Sea to the Mediterranean.

"From the river unto the ends of the earth."—That is, from the Euphrates to the shores of the Mediterranean. In this and many other passages "the land" would be better than "the earth." Properly understood, the expression is not peculiarly Oriental, meaning no more than is meant by the names—such as "Land's End," "Finisterre," &c.—which Europeans apply to the utmost land points of their respective territories. As the Hebrew word (עֵרֶץ eretz) is used to denote not only the earth in a general sense, but also particular countries, and even the jurisdiction of a city, the largest term, "the earth," is rather too frequently given as the equivalent in our version.

20. "The prayers of David. . . . are ended."—As David did not long survive the solemn appointment of Solomon as king, it is very probable that the present was the last psalm he composed, and therefore may have been placed last in any original collection of the psalms penned exclusively by him. It is certain, however, that in the present order of the psalms, many in the remaining portion of the book were composed by David. The second of the five books into which the Hebrews divide the psalms ends here.

PSALM LXXIII.

TRULY God is good to Israel, even to such as are 'of a clean heart.

2 But as for me, my feet were almost gone ; my steps had well nigh slipped.

3 'For I was envious at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked.

4 For there are no bands in their death : but their strength is 'firm.

5 They are not 'in trouble as other men ; neither are they plagued 'like other men.

6 Therefore pride compasseth them about as a chain ; violence covereth them as a garment.

7 Their eyes stand out with fatness : 'they have more than heart could wish.

8 They are corrupt, and speak wickedly concerning oppression : they speak loftily.

9 They set their mouth against the heavens, and their tongue walketh through the earth.

10 Therefore his people return hither : and waters of a full cup are wrung out to them.

11 And they say, How doth God know ? and is there knowledge in the most high ?

12 Behold, these are the ungodly, who prosper in the world ; they increase in riches.

13 Verily I have cleansed my heart in vain, and washed my hands in innocency.

14 For all the day long have I been plagued, and 'chastened every morning.

15 If I say, I will speak thus ; behold, I should offend against the generation of thy children.

16 When I thought to know this, 'it was too painful for me ;

17 Until I went into the sanctuary of God ; then understood I their end.

TITLE.—We have already under Psalm l. stated that the psalms thus superscribed are usually attributed to that Asaph who was chief musician in the time of David. Calmet, however, thinks that from the internal evidence which they offer, these psalms could not have been composed in the time of David; but some in the time of Jehoshaphat, and others during the Captivity; and that they were probably written by some descendants of this celebrated master of the temple music, whose name they, by way of distinction, prefixed to their psalms.

Verse 6. "As a chain."—This reference is probably to a chain worn around the neck for ornament.

PSALM LXXIV.

1 The prophet complaineth of the desolation of the sanctuary.
10 He moveth God to help in consideration of his power, 18 of his reproachful enemies, of his children, and of his covenant.

¹Maschil of Asaph.

O God, why hast thou cast us off for ever? why doth thine anger smoke against the sheep of thy pasture?

2 Remember thy congregation, which thou hast purchased of old; the ²rod of thine inheritance, which thou hast redeemed; this mount Zion, wherein thou hast dwelt.

3 Lift up thy feet unto the perpetual desolations; even all that the enemy hath done wickedly in the sanctuary.

4 Thine enemies roar in the midst of thy congregations; they set up their ensigns for signs.

5 A man was famous according as he had lifted up axes upon the thick trees.

6 But now they break down the carved work thereof at once with axes and hammers.

7 ³They have cast fire into thy sanctuary, they have defiled by casting down the dwelling place of thy name to the ground.

8 They said in their hearts, Let us 'destroy them together: they have burned up all the synagogues of God in the land.

9 We see not our signs: there is no more any prophet: neither is there among us any that knoweth how long.

10 O God, how long shall the adversary reproach? shall the enemy blaspheme thy name for ever?

DE LOUTHERBOURG.

PSALM LXXIV.—This is one of the Psalms which, from its marked reference to the taking of Jerusalem and destruction of the Temple, could not have been written (unless in the spirit of prophecy) earlier than the Captivity. Bishop Patrick thinks its author may have been one of the descendants of Asaph, who was allowed to remain at Jerusalem with the Chaldeans. Some think that the psalm has a prophetic reference to the desolation of the city and Temple under Antiochus Epiphanes, or even to the final destruction by the Romans.

Verses 13, 14. "Dragons... Leviathan."—Pharaoh and his host are undoubtedly figuratively designated by these terms. This use of the name "Leviathan," as a symbol of the Egyptians or of their king, strengthens the conclusion that the crocodile is the animal intended by that name, since it could only have been known to the Jews as a beast of the Nile, and as such was the most fitting symbol that could be chosen.

PSALM LXXV.

1 The prophet praiseth God. 2 He promiseth to judge uprightly. 4 He rebuketh the proud by consideration of God's providence. 9 He praiseth God, and promiseth to execute justice.

To the chief Musician, 'Al-taschith, A Psalm or Song of Asaph.

² Or, for Asaph.

2 'When I shall receive the congregation I will judge uprightly.

3 The earth and all the inhabitants thereof are dissolved : I bear up the pillars of it. Selah.

4 I said unto the fools, Deal not foolishly : and to the wicked, Lift not up the horn :

5 Lift not up your horn on high : speak not with a stiff neck.

6 For promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the 'south.

7 But God is the judge : he putteth down one, and setteth up another.

8 For in the hand of the Lord there is a cup, and the wine is red ; it is full of mixture ; and he poureth out of the same : but the dregs thereof, all the wicked of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them.

9 But I will declare for ever ; I will sing praises to the God of Jacob.

10 All the horns of the wicked also will I cut off ; but the horns of the righteous shall be exalted.

^a Or, When I shall take a set time.

PSALM LXXV.—This psalm is generally supposed to have been composed on occasion of the defeat of Sennacherib's army, in the time of Hezekiah. Some, however, think it was written by David, during Saul's persecutions ; and Calmet assigns it to the Babylonish captivity.

Verse 8. "The wine is red."—This verse has not been well understood even by Harmer, who has done much to elucidate it. If he had made as much use of Sir John Chardin's published Travels as he did of his manuscript notes, he would more nearly have guessed its meaning. The word rendered "red" is not usual in Hebrew. It is חמר chamar, and every one seeks its root in the Arabic. In that language it has the meanings of "to be red," and also "to mix, agitate, reverse." Our translators have chosen the former sense, supposing the reference to be to the colour of the wine. But as applied to wine by the Arabians, the latter sense is usually if not always intended ; and then it is not applied to the quality of the wine, to denote its being turbid or mixed with dregs, as some suppose, but to its effects upon the drinker, confounding, bewildering, intoxicating. So Chardin, with his usual accuracy, observes that the vessels in which the Persians keep their wine are called by them khomr, an Arabic word for wine, and which comes from a verb that signifies "to mix," because the wine mixes and confounds the understanding. ('Voyages,' tome iv. p. 72, edit. 1811.)

"It is full of mixture."—Green takes the very great liberty of rendering "is unmixed," which really spoils the sense he intended to make more clear. It is evident that wine of the strongest quality is intended ; and having no idea of other mixing than with water, which would weaken the wine, he translates "unmixed," meaning unmixed with water. Now the fact is, that the best wines of the East are much mixed with dregs, as in the vessels in which they are preserved, so that commonly, when drawn out, the liquor is strained for use. It is to this condition of the wine, most obviously, that the text refers ; and how clearly does it explain what follows ! "He poureth out of the same : but the dregs thereof, all the wicked of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them." This is probably intended to denote that the pure and clear wine should be given as a wine of blessing to the righteous, while the wicked should drink the thick and turbid residue.

PSALM LXXVI.

1 A declaration of God's majesty in the church. 11 An exhortation to serve him reverently.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, A Psalm or Song 'of Asaph.

IN Judah is God known : his name is great in Israel.

2 In Salem also is his tabernacle, and his dwelling place in Zion.

3 There brake he the arrows of the bow, the shield, and the sword, and the battle. Selah.

5 The stouthearted are spoiled, they have slept their sleep : and none of the men of might have found their hands.

6 At thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, both the chariot and horse are cast into a dead sleep.

7 Thou, even thou, art to be feared : and who may stand in thy sight when once thou art angry ?

PSALM LXXVI.—This psalm is generally supposed to refer to the same event (the defeat of the Assyrians) and by the same author as the preceding. It will be observed, that after that victory, Hezekiah “commanded the Levites to sing praise unto the Lord with the words of David and of Asaph the seer.” (2 Chron. xxix. 30.) Three psalms appear to be denoted as those of “Asaph the seer;” but it is not well agreed whether this Asaph was the same who lived in the time of David, and whose words were adopted as suitable to the occasion, or another Asaph who lived in the time of Hezekiah. Bishop Patrick and Calmet, with many others, are of the latter opinion. Those who are of the former, suppose its original reference was to the victory obtained by David over the Ammonites, or over the Philistines in the valley of Rephaim.

19 Thy way is in the sea, and thy path in the great waters, and thy footsteps are not known.

20 Thou leddest thy people like a flock by the hand of Moses and Aaron.

PSALM LXXVII.—This psalm is very generally allowed to have been written by the Asaph who lived in the time of David and Solomon, and addressed by him to Jeduthun; as it is not likely that two persons of such names should be associated at a later time, in such a manner as were two others of the same names who lived at the time indicated. Calmet, however, overcomes this difficulty by concluding that the bands of musicians descended from Asaph, Jeduthun, and other founders, took the names of those founders, and bore them even during the Captivity, to which he ascribes the present psalm. Bishop Patrick and others conceive that the author was another Asaph, individually; and that it was composed either during the invasion of Sennacherib, or in the Babylonish captivity.

PSALM LXXVIII.

¹ An exhortation both to learn and to preach the law of God.
⁹ The story of God's wrath against the incredulous and disobedient. ⁶⁷ The Israelites being rejected, God chose Judah, Zion, and David.

GIVE ear, O my people, to my law : incline your ears to the words of my mouth.

² I will open my mouth in a parable : I will utter dark sayings of old :

³ Which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us.

⁵ For he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers, ³that they should make them known to their children :

⁷ That they might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments :

⁹ The children of Ephraim, being armed, and ³carrying bows, turned back in the day of battle.

¹⁰ They kept not the covenant of God, and refused to walk in his law ;

¹¹ And forgot his works, and his wonders that he had shewed them.

¹² Marvellous things did he in the sight of their fathers, in the land of Egypt, in the field of Zoan.

¹³ He divided the sea, and caused them to pass through ; and he made the waters to stand as an heap.

¹⁴ In the daytime also he led them with a cloud, and all the night with a light of fire.

¹⁵ He clave the rocks in the wilderness, and gave them drink as out of the great depths.

¹⁶ He brought streams also out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers.

¹⁷ And they sinned yet more against him by provoking the most high in the wilderness.

¹⁸ And they tempted God in their heart by asking meat for their lust.

¹⁹ Yea, they spake against God ; they said, Can God ¹⁰furnish a table in the wilderness ?

²¹ Therefore the LORD heard this, and was wroth : so a fire was kindled against Jacob, and anger also came up against Israel ;

²² Because they believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation :

²³ Though he had commanded the clouds from above, and opened the doors of heaven, ²⁴ ¹²And had rained down manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven.

²⁵ ¹³Man did eat angels' food : he sent them meat to the full.

²⁶ He caused an east wind ¹⁴to blow in the heaven : and by his power he brought in the south wind.

²⁷ He rained flesh also upon them as dust, and ¹⁵feathered fowls like as the sand of the sea :

²⁸ And he let it fall in the midst of their camp, round about their habitations.

²⁹ So they did eat, and were well filled : for he gave them their own desire ;

³⁰ They were not estranged from their lust. But ¹⁶while their meat was yet in their mouths, 35 And they remembered that God was their rock, and the high God their redeemer.

36 Nevertheless they did flatter him with their mouth, and they lied unto him with their tongues.

37 For their heart was not right with him, neither were they stedfast in his covenant.

38 But he, being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity, and destroyed them not: yea, many a time turned he his anger away, and did not stir up all his wrath.

46 ²⁵He gave also their increase unto the caterpillar, and their labour unto the locust.

47 ²⁶He ²⁷destroyed their vines with hail, and their sycomore trees with ²⁸frost.

48 ²⁹He gave up their cattle also to the hail, and their flocks to ³⁰hot thunderbolts.

49 He cast upon them the fierceness of his anger, wrath, and indignation, and trouble, by sending evil angels among them.

50 ³¹He made a way to his anger; he spared not their soul from death, but gave ³²their life over to the pestilence;

51 ³³And smote all the firstborn in Egypt; the chief of their strength in the tabernacles of Ham:

52 But made his own people to go forth like sheep, and guided them in the wilderness like a flock.

53 And he led them on safely, so that they feared not: but the sea ³⁴³⁵overwhelmed their enemies.

54 And he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain, which his right hand had purchased.

55 He cast out the heathen also before them, and ³⁶divided them an inheritance by line, and made the tribes of Israel to dwell in their tents.

56 Yet they tempted and provoked the most high God, and kept not his testimonies:

57 But turned back, and dealt unfaithfully like their fathers: they were turned aside like a deceitful bow.

58 ³⁷For they provoked him to anger with their high places, and moved him to jealousy with their graven images.

59 When God heard this, he was wroth, and greatly abhorred Israel:

60 ³⁸So that he forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh, the tent which he placed among men;

61 And delivered his strength into captivity, and his glory into the enemy's hand.

62 He gave his people over also unto the sword; and was wroth with his inheritance.

63 The fire consumed their young men; and their maidens were not ³⁹given to marriage.

64 Their priests fell by the sword; and their widows made no lamentation.

65 Then the LORD awaked as one out of sleep, and like a mighty man that shouteth by reason of wine.

66 And he smote his enemies in the hinder part: he put them to a perpetual reproach.

67 Moreover he refused the tabernacle of Joseph, and chose not the tribe of Ephraim:

68 But chose the tribe of Judah, the mount Zion which he loved.

69 And he built his sanctuary like high palaces, like the earth which he hath ⁴⁰established for ever.

70 ⁴¹He chose David also his servant, and took him from the sheepfolds:

PSALM LXXVIII.—Although Calmet concludes (from verses 9 and 67—69) that this psalm commemorates the victory which king Asa gained over the ten tribes, we see no reason to question that it was written by the celebrated Levite of David's time, if not by David himself. It contains a short account of the history of the Jews from the deliverance from Egypt till the time of David, all the particulars of which have already engaged our attention.

Verse 12. "Zoan."—See the note on Num. xiii. 22.

25. "Angels' food."—The marginal reading, "the bread of the mighty," is preferable; for nowhere does the word אֲכִילִים abbirim, mean "angels," but great, powerful, or chief persons. The meaning therefore is "princely food"—food so good, delicious, and nourishing, that the rich and great would have been glad to obtain it.

47. "Vines."—With respect to the presence of vines in Egypt, see the note on Gen. xl. 9.

"Sycamore trees."—See an observation on this text in the note on 1 Kings x. 27.

63. "Their maidens were not given to marriage."—This clause has been very variously rendered even in the ancient versions. The Septuagint, the Arabic, and the Vulgate, nearly agree in rendering the verse, "The fire destroyed the young men, and the virgins did not lament them;" and we should think this preferable, for it is that which spontaneously occurred to us, on reading the Hebrew, before consulting the versions. The Targum, however, followed by Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, has, "were not praised, or, celebrated in songs;" which sense our translators give as a marginal reading. This would perhaps refer to the praise of their accomplishments and beauty; but more probably to the nuptial songs, chanted by the maidens at the marriage of their friends. This interpretation therefore comes to the ultimate sense conveyed in our version; and then the antithesis in this and the following verse would be certainly brought out better than in any other view: the songs for the brides and the lamentations of the widows being equally unheard in times of great calamity.

64. "Their widows made no lamentation."—This implies the extent of the destruction, and is full of meaning to one who has been in an Oriental city, during a plague or other devastating calamity. At first the cry of wailing, which always follows a death in ordinary circumstances, is loud and frequent; but such cries do not increase, but subside, with the increase of the calamity and desolation. Death becomes a familiar object in every house: and every one, absorbed in his own losses, has little sympathy to spare for others. Hence the loudest lamentations cease to be noticed, or to draw condoling friends to the house of mourning; and therefore, as well as from the stupefaction of feeling which scenes of continued horror never fail to produce, a new death is received in silence, or only with sighs and tears. In fact, all the usual observances are suspended. The dead are carried out and buried without mourning ceremonies, and without the presence of surviving friends, by men who make it an employment to take away the dead, on the backs of mules or asses, from the homes they leave desolate. We have seen this.

PSALM LXXIX.

1 The psalmist complaineth of the desolation of Jerusalem.
8 He prayeth for deliverance, 13 and promiseth thankfulness.

A Psalm 'of Asaph.

O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance; thy holy temple have they defiled; they have laid Jerusalem on heaps.

2 The dead bodies of thy servants have they given to be meat unto the fowls of the heaven, the flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the earth.

3 Their blood have they shed like water round about Jerusalem; and there was none to bury them.

4 'We are become a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and derision to them that are round about us.

5 'How long, LORD? wilt thou be angry for ever? shall thy jealousy burn like fire?

6 'Pour out thy wrath upon the heathen that have not known thee, and upon the kingdoms that have not called upon thy name.

7 For they have devoured Jacob, and laid waste his dwelling place.

8 'O remember not against us 'former iniquities: let thy tender mercies speedily prevent us: for we are brought very low.

9 Help us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of thy name: and deliver us, and purge away our sins, for thy name's sake.

10 Wherefore should the heathen say, Where is their God? let him be known among the heathen in our sight by the 're-vengeing of the blood of thy servants which is shed.

11 Let the sighing of the prisoner come before thee; according to the greatness of 'thy power 'preserve thou those that are appointed to die;

12 And render unto our neighbours sevenfold into their bosom their reproach, wherewith they have reproached thee, O LORD.

13 So we thy people and sheep of thy pasture will give thee thanks for ever: we will shew forth thy praise ¹⁰to all generations.

PSALM LXXIX.—It is not doubted that this psalm was written after the ruin of the city and temple, and the destruction and captivity of the nation by Nebuchadnezzar. It appears to have been composed while the scenes of death and desolation were actually present or fresh in recollection: and some have supposed that it was written by Jeremiah, not only because he was the person then living who seems most likely to have been its author, but because it is very much in the style of his writings; and more than a whole verse of it (verses 6, 7) is found in Jer. x. 25.

PSALM LXXX.

¹ The psalmist in his prayer complaineth of the miseries of the church. ⁸ God's former favours are turned into judgments. ¹⁴ He prayeth for deliverance.

To the chief Musician upon Shoshannim-Eduth, A Psalm 'of Asaph.

GIVE ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that ledest Joseph like a flock; thou that dwellest between the cherubims, shine forth.

² Before Ephraim and Benjamin and Manasseh stir up thy strength, and ²come and save us.

³ Turn us again, O God, and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.

⁴ O LORD God of hosts, how long ³wilt thou be angry against the prayer of thy people?

⁵ Thou feedest them with the bread of tears; and givest them tears to drink in great measure.

⁶ Thou makest us a strife unto our neighbours: and our enemies laugh among themselves.

⁷ Turn us again, O God of hosts, and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.

⁸ Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt:

thou hast cast out the heathen, and planted it.

⁹ Thou preparedst room before it, and didst cause it to take deep root, and it filled the land.

¹⁰ The hills were covered with the shadow of it, and the boughs thereof were like 'the goodly cedars.

¹¹ She sent out her boughs unto the sea, and her branches unto the river.

¹² Why hast thou then broken down her hedges, so that all they which pass by the way do pluck her?

¹³ The boar out of the wood doth waste it, and the wild beast of the field doth devour it.

¹⁴ Return, we beseech thee, O God of hosts: look down from heaven, and behold, and visit this vine;

¹⁵ And the vineyard which thy right hand hath planted, and the branch that thou madest strong for thyself.

¹⁶ It is burned with fire, it is cut down: they perish at the rebuke of thy countenance.

¹⁷ Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand, upon the son of man whom thou madest strong for thyself.

18 So will not we go back from thee: quicken us, and we will call upon thy name.

19 Turn us again, O LORD God of hosts, cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.

PSALM LXXX.—This psalm is generally supposed to refer to the state of the Hebrew nation during the Babylonish captivity: but it is not agreed whether it was written during the captivity, or in the spirit of prophecy at an earlier period. Some however refer it to the captivity of the ten tribes by the Assyrians, while others (as Bishop Patrick) would rather assign it to an intermediate period—as the invasion of Judea by the Assyrians under Sennacherib.

Verse 12, 13. "All they which pass by the way do pluck her. The boar out of the wood doth waste it."—The Rev. J. Hartley, in his 'Researches in Greece and the Levant' (p. 234), has given a very interesting illustration of this passage. He says:—"The propriety of the image in the 12th verse of this psalm must be familiar to all who have visited grape countries—All they which pass, &c.; but the force and beauty of the succeeding figure, derived from a practice connected with the natural history of the wild boar, has probably been seldom observed. My friend, the Rev. Mr. Leeves, was proceeding in the dusk of the evening, from Constantinople to Therapia. Passing a vineyard, he observed an animal of large size rushing forth from among the vines. The Greek syrogee, who was riding first, exclaimed Γουπόβρι, Γουπόβρι, 'Wild-boar! wild-boar!'—and really it proved a wild-boar, who was retreating from the vineyards to the woods. 'What has the wild-boar to do with the vineyards?' inquired Mr. Leeves. 'Oh!' said the syrogee, 'tis the custom of the wild-boars to frequent the vineyards, and to devour the grapes.' And it is astonishing what havoc a wild-boar is capable of effecting during a single night. What with eating, and what with trampling underfoot, he will destroy an immense quantity of grapes.—With what fatal propriety does this affecting image retain its force, up to the present moment! Still is the vine of Israel broken down, ravaged, cut down, burnt with fire."

The abode of the Oriental wild-boars is chiefly in the woods, from whence they rush and ravage the fields, plantations, gardens, and vineyards, in the season of production. What they eat is of small consequence compared with the havoc which they occasion by trampling with their feet, turning up roots, breaking the branches, and lacerating the stem with their tusks. Thus a fine garden or vineyard may in one night be completely ruined. For such reasons it was a custom among the Greeks and Romans to sacrifice a hog to Ceres, at the beginning of harvest, and another to Bacchus at the commencement of the vintage,—the ravages of this animal being equally detrimental to the corn-field and the vineyard. It will be recollected also that the wild hogs, where they are numerous, forage in herds, led on by some old boars, running with great speed and fierceness, which renders their injuries far more extensive than they could be from the operations of single animals. Mr. Roberts, in describing their depredations in India, observes, "Should there be a fence, they will go round till they find a weak place, and then they all rush in."—Our present cut is one of those valuable contributions to the natural history of Scripture, for which we are indebted to the researches of Hemprich and Ehrenberg.

PSALM LXXXI.

1 An exhortation to a solemn praising of God. 4 God challengeth that duty by reason of his benefits. 8 God, exhorting to obedience, complaineth of their disobedience, which proveth their own hurt.

To the chief Musician upon Gittith, A Psalm 'of Asaph.

SING aloud unto God our strength: make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob.

PSALM LXXXI.—It is supposed that this psalm was composed for the feast of trumpets (Lev. xxiii. 24), and it is still used by the Jews for that occasion. Its date cannot be determined; but it is probably older than the time of David.

Verse 5. "I heard a language that I understood not."—The difference of language between the Hebrews and the Egyptians in the time of Joseph, is distinctly intimated in the account of his interview with his brethren, when their communications were through an interpreter: and when the brethren made private observations to each other, in their own language, evidently calculating that Joseph, whom they supposed to be an Egyptian, could not understand what they said.

6. "I removed his shoulder from the burden."—This verse is well illustrated by the cuts given under Neh. ix. (See also the note there.)

10. "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it."—This strong figure obviously implies that the largest expectation of good from the Lord's bounty should be abundantly satisfied. Perhaps the figure is not derived from any further source than the common act of taking food. Some, however, seek for it in the manner in which young birds instinctively open their mouths when in want of food. But may we not also conjecture that there may be an allusion to such a custom as that, which still exists in some countries, for an entertainer to testify his regard for his guest by filling his mouth with choice morsels of food? In Persia it is customary for kings and princes to honour a person who has given pleasure by some matter of verbal utterance—as an eloquent speech, fine verses, or an ingenious compliment—by ordering his mouth to be filled with sweetmeats. Hence, "May your mouth be filled with sugar-candy!" is a common compliment to persons who have given satisfaction by something they have said or recited.

PSALM LXXXII.—As this psalm is an admonition to judges, it is usually supposed to have been written either in the time of Jehoshaphat, who found it necessary to make great reforms in the administration of justice, or in that of Hezekiah, when we find Isaiah complaining very strongly of the conduct of the judges.

15 So persecute them with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm.

16 Fill their faces with shame; that they may seek thy name, O LORD.

17 Let them be confounded and troubled for ever; yea, let them be put to shame, and perish:

18 That men may know that thou, whose name alone is JEHOVAH, art the most high over all the earth.

PSALM LXXXIII.—It is generally concluded that this psalm was composed in the time of Jehoshaphat, when the Ammonites and the Moabites were leagued with the Edomites and other nations against Judah; but were destroyed with their own arms and weapons, as recorded in 2 Chron. xx. It is not by any means unlikely that the writer was Jahaziel, that "Levite of the sons of Asaph," whom the Lord commissioned to assure Jehoshaphat of a signal deliverance from the powerful confederacy formed against him.

Verse 13. "Like a wheel: as the stubble before the wind."—The word rendered "wheel," some translate "whirlwind," or else the matter acted upon by a whirlwind, as the "whirling chaff" of Boothroyd. It does not matter, as the identity of the reference is preserved in each interpretation. It is clear that the whirlwind is in view—such as sweeps into its vortex, and whirls about with violence, whatever light substances it encounters. We think the force of this, and some other texts which refer to the whirlwind, may be best explained by reference to those sudden, partial, and strong currents of air which sometimes arise when, in other respects, there is perfect calm, or when the wind changes; and which sweep into their vortex not only chaff and stubble, but sand and branches of trees, with which are formed moving columns that appear almost to reach to the clouds. These whirlwinds, although less formidable than those of the deserts, are sometimes of great strength, and the weakest of them whirl off in a moment all the chaff and stubble within their scope.

14. "The flame setteth the mountains on fire."—This allusion is doubtless derived from the accidental or intentional kindling of the dried herbage, when the flames sometimes extend to the woods, which sustain great devastation. The text of course supposes the mountains to be wooded.

⁷ Psal. 2. 12.

PSALM LXXXIV.—This psalm was probably composed by David, either during the persecutions of Saul or the rebellion of Absalom.

Verse 3. "Sparrow."—The Hebrew word צִפּוֹר tzippor, occurs very frequently in the Scriptures, but is only twice rendered "sparrow" in our version—here and in Ps. xcii. 7; in the other places it is usually translated "bird" or "fowl." The fact is, that although the name be in some cases that of a particular species of bird, which species is agreed to be the sparrow, it is also a general name for all birds declared by the law to be clean, if not for all birds, clean or unclean. It is not always easy to determine in what passages the word should be understood in the more restricted signification of "sparrow;" but the present is certainly one of the number. It is not necessary to say anything concerning the appearance or habits of a bird so well known as this; but it may be observed, that familiar and bold as the bird is in our own country, it is much more so in the East. For as birds are there exposed to the least possible molestation from man, those which are naturally disposed to live in or near towns, and construct their nests among human habitations, do so with more confidence and freedom, and with less curious search for secret and inaccessible positions than we should be disposed to imagine. Nevertheless, we are not to understand literally that either the sparrow or swallow built their nests upon or against the altar itself, where they would have been continually disturbed by the officiating priests; but the altar is here put as a part for the whole, so that the precincts of the tabernacle are to be understood, within which, among the beams and rafters of the sacred enclosure, or of the offices within it, the sparrows and swallows were allowed to build their nests. David had probably particularly noticed them in his visits to the tabernacle; and now, banished and desolate, he longs for a privilege from which even the birds of smallest account were not excluded. Some however remove all consideration on this point by translating, "Even as the sparrow findeth her house, and the swallow her nest, where she hath laid her young; so would I find thine altars, O Lord of hosts," &c.

"The swallow."—The word here is דֶּרֶר derur, which the old versions render by "turtle-dove," probably from the resemblance of the name to תּוֹר tur, the common name of that bird. The Hebrew interpreters believe it is the swallow, and are followed by our version. The word means "freedom, deliverance," and may be supposed to refer to the free manner in which the swallow flies. It is only mentioned again, at least by this name, in Prov. xxvi. 2; and is there also associated with the tzippor, which our version there renders "bird," instead of "sparrow." In both texts the meaning agrees better with the swallow than the turtle-dove. It is not necessary to describe particularly the appearance and habits of so well-known a bird as this: and some of the observations in the preceding note are equally applicable here.

Swallow of Palestine.

6. "Valley of Baca."—Most translations render "Baca" rather as an appellative than a proper name; and we think rightly. So understood, it would mean "the valley of weeping," or "vale of tears;" unless, with some, we suppose it to mean a valley in which the plant baca abounded,—and therefore a dry, desolate valley.

PSALM LXXXVII.—The occasion and author of this psalm are uncertain. Calmet supposes it was written a little before or soon after the captives from Babylon arrived at Jerusalem. Other opinions are, that it was composed after the completion of Solomon's Temple; or when the invading host of Assyrians, under Sennacherib, prevented the Levites from proceeding, in their courses, to the Temple at Jerusalem.

Verse 4. "Rahab."—This is generally understood to mean Egypt, for which it is a poetical name. In Isa. xxx. 7, where it is certainly applied to Egypt, there is an allusion to its meaning (pride), which has occasioned its being there translated in our version, instead of being given as a proper name. Jarchi's explanation of this and the following verse is usually adopted; and he supposes it to mean that, whereas the Philistines and others held Egypt and Babylon in such high esteem for their antiquity, arts, and learning, so that a person was honoured by its being said that he was born there; so thenceforward should the citizens of Zion be so privileged and distinguished, that the same should, with greater justice, be said of them.

PSALM LXXXVIII.

A prayer containing a grievous complaint.

A Song or Psalm ¹for the sons of Korah, to the chief Musician upon Mahalath Leannoth, ²Maschil of Heman the Ezrahite.

O LORD God of my salvation, I have cried day and night before thee:

2 Let my prayer come before thee: incline thine ear unto my cry;

3 For my soul is full of troubles: and my life draweth nigh unto the grave.

4 I am counted with them that go down into the pit: I am as a man that hath no strength:

5 Free among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more: and they are cut off ³from thy hand.

6 Thou hast laid me in the lowest pit, in darkness, in the deeps.

7 Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Selah.

8 Thou hast put away mine acquaintance far from me; thou hast made me an abomination unto them: I am shut up, and I cannot come forth.

9 Mine eye mourneth by reason of affliction: LORD, I have called daily upon thee, I have stretched out my hands unto thee.

10 Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? shall the dead arise and praise thee? Selah.

11 Shall thy lovingkindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction?

12 Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?

13 But unto thee have I cried, O LORD; and in the morning shall my prayer prevent thee.

14 LORD, why castest thou off my soul? why hidest thou thy face from me?

15 I am afflicted and ready to die from my youth up: while I suffer thy terrors I am distracted.

16 Thy fierce wrath goeth over me; thy terrors have cut me off.

17 They came round about me 'daily like water; they compassed me about together.

GUIDO.

TITLE, "Mahalath Leannoth."—Concerning the first of these words, see the note on the title of Psalm llii.; the other (לַעֲנֹת from עָנָה anah, "to answer") is supposed to denote that the psalm was to be sung responsively by opposite choirs. (See Lowth's 19th Lecture, and Henley's note thereon.)

"Heman the Ezrahite."—This might be supposed to be the same as the chief musician of the name, in the time of David. But he was a Levite, whereas the present Heman is called an Ezrahite, which is understood to denote a descent from Zerah, the son of Judah, who had a son called Heman

(1 Chron. ii. 6). If therefore the chief musician be intended, some transcriber must have made a mistake in assigning to him a paternity that belonged to another person of the same name. But this psalm is generally concluded to have been written during the captivity; and, if so, we may suppose that it was written by a person called Heman, descended from the son of Zerah of that name, or else, supposing the term "Ezrahite" erroneously applied, by a person descended from the chief musician, and belonging to the band founded by him, and perhaps distinguished by his name.

PSALM LXXXIX.

ders, O LORD: thy faithfulness also in the congregation of the saints.

6 For who in the heaven can be compared unto the LORD? who among the sons of the mighty can be likened unto the LORD?

7 God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are about him.

8 O LORD God of hosts, who is a strong LORD like unto thee? or to thy faithfulness round about thee?

9 Thou rulest the raging of the sea: when the waves thereof arise, thou stillest them.

10 Thou hast broken 'Rahab in pieces, as one that is slain; thou hast scattered thine enemies 'with thy strong arm.

11 'The heavens are thine, the earth also is thine: as for the world and the fulness thereof, thou hast founded them.

12 The north and the south thou hast created them: Tabor and Hermon shall rejoice in thy name.

13 Thou hast 'a mighty arm: strong is thy hand, and high is thy right hand.

14 Justice and judgment are the 'habitation of thy throne: mercy and truth shall go before thy face.

15 Blessed is the people that know the 'joyful sound: they shall walk, O LORD, in the light of thy countenance.

16 In thy name shall they rejoice all the day: and in thy righteousness shall they be exalted.

17 For thou art the glory of their strength: and in thy favour our horn shall be exalted.

18 For 'the LORD is our defence; and the Holy One of Israel is our king.

19 Then thou spakest in vision to thy holy one, and saidst, I have laid help upon one that is mighty; I have exalted one chosen out of the people.

20 'I have found David my servant; with my holy oil have I anointed him:

21 With whom my hand shall be established: mine arm also shall strengthen him.

22 The enemy shall not exact upon him; nor the son of wickedness afflict him.

23 And I will beat down his foes before his face, and plague them that hate him.

24 But my faithfulness and my mercy shall be with him: and in my name shall his horn be exalted.

25 I will set his hand also in the sea, and his right hand in the rivers.

26 He shall cry unto me, Thou art my father, my God, and the rock of my salvation.

27 Also I will make him my firstborn, higher than the kings of the earth.

28 My mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him.

29 His seed also will I make to endure for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven.

30 If his children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments;

31 If they 'break my statutes, and keep not my commandments;

32 Then will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes.

33 Nevertheless my lovingkindness 'will I not utterly take from him, nor suffer my faithfulness 'to fail.

34 My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips.

35 Once have I sworn by my holiness 'that I will not lie unto David.

36 'His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me.

37 It shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. Selah.

38 But thou hast cast off and abhorred, thou hast been wroth with thine anointed.

39 Thou hast made void the covenant of thy servant: thou hast profaned his crown by casting it to the ground.

40 Thou hast broken down all his hedges; thou hast brought his strong holds to ruin.

41 All that pass by the way spoil him: he is a reproach to his neighbours.

42 Thou hast set up the right hand of his adversaries; thou hast made all his enemies to rejoice.

TITLE, "Ethan."—A person of this name was one of the chief musicians in the time of David (see the note 1 Chron. xxvi.); but he was a Levite, whereas the present is called an Ezrahite. In fact, the considerations stated in the note to the preceding psalm are exactly applicable here also. It is generally believed that this psalm was written early in the Captivity, probably soon after the ruin of the city and temple by the Babylonians.

Verse 10. "Broken Rahab in pieces."—This doubtless alludes to the destruction of the Egyptians in the Red Sea.

25. "I will set his hand also in the sea, and his right hand in the rivers."—This means that his power should extend from the Mediterranean to the Euphrates. There is a similar form of expression in the speech, which, according to Quintus Curtius (vii. 8), was addressed to Alexander by the Scythian ambassadors. "If," said they, "the gods had given thee a body proportionable to thy insatiable mind, the world would not be able to contain thee. Thou wouldst stretch forth one hand to the furthest extremities of the east, and the other to the utmost west."

38. "Thine anointed."—This and what follows may be supposed to refer to Zedekiah, who was blinded, and kept as a prisoner at Babylon for the remainder of his life.

52. "Amen."—Here ends the third of the five books into which the Hebrews divide the Psalms.

5 Thou carriest them away as with a flood; they are as a sleep: in the morning they are like grass which groweth up.

6 In the morning it flourisheth, and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down, and withereth.

7 For we are consumed by thine anger, and by thy wrath are we troubled.

8 Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance.

9 For all our days are 'passed away in thy wrath: we spend our years 'as a tale that is told.

10 'The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labour and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away.

11 Who knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath.

CANOVA.

TITLE, "Moses."—It is generally agreed that this psalm was really written by Moses, as the title intimates. To him also the Hebrews attribute the nine following psalms ; for which they do not appear to have any other foundation than their own absurd canon of criticism, under which they assign all anonymous psalms to that author whose name occurred in the last preceding title. It is clear, for instance, that the ninety-ninth psalm could not have been written by Moses, since the sixth verse mentions Samuel, who was not born till very long after his death.

Verse 6. "In the morning it flourisheth," &c.—Here is another comparison, derived from the transitory character of vegetable life, not less beautiful than that which we have noticed in Ps. xxxvii. 35. We illustrated that instance by an extract from one of our elder poets ; and we cannot forbear from here quoting a fine passage in which Tasso adopts and amplifies the same image which the present text offers.

"The gently budding rose (quoth he) behold,
That first scant peeping forth with virgin beams,
Half ope, half shut, her beauties doth up-fold
In their dear leaves, and less seen fairer seems,
And after spreads them forth more broad and bold,
Then languishes and dies in last extremes.
So in the passing of a day doth pass
The bud and blossom of the life of man,
Nor e'er doth flourish more, but like the grass
Cut down, becometh withered, pale and wan."

FAIRFAX. Edit. Windsor, 1817.

10. "Threescore years and ten."—Drs. Kennicott, Geddes, and others, incline to consider that this furnishes evidence that the psalm must have been of later date than the time of Moses. He lived himself to the age of a hundred and twenty years, when "his eye was not dim nor his natural force abated;" and the days of the other eminent persons of that period, whose ages are recorded, considerably exceeded four-score years. Aaron lived to the same age as Moses, Joshua to a hundred and ten years, and Caleb could scarcely have been younger when he died. But all these were probably special instances of the Divine favour. "The decree which abbreviated the life of man, as a general rule, to seventy or eighty years," observes Dr. J. M. Good, "was given as a chastisement upon the whole race of Israelites in the wilderness; and with these few exceptions, none of them, at the date of this psalm, could have reached more than seventy, and few of them so high a number. But it does not appear that the term of life was lengthened afterwards. Samuel died about seventy years old, David under seventy-one, and Solomon under sixty; and the history of the world shows that the abbreviation of life in other countries was nearly in the same proportion.

PSALM XCI.—This psalm is ascribed to David in the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Arabic; and many acquiesce in this determination, while others prefer, with the Jews, to attribute it to the author of the preceding psalm. There is no internal evidence that bears very distinctly on the question: but such as can be traced seems rather to favour the latter than the former alternative. For instance, the preceding psalm dwells

8 Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked.

9 Because thou hast made the LORD which is my refuge, even the most high, thy habitation;

10 There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling.

11 'For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways.

12 They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone.

13 Thou shalt tread upon the lion and 'adder: the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet.

14 Because he hath set his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him: I will set him on high, because he hath known my name.

15 He shall call upon me, and I will answer him: I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him, and honour him.

16 With 'long life will I satisfy him, and shew him my salvation.

on the brevity of human life, and the present concludes with a promise of lengthened days to the righteous.

PSALM XCII.—Some of the Rabbins depart from their plan of attributing the whole of the psalms, on which we are now engaged, to Moses, in favour of a fancy which they have, that the present psalm was written by Adam, soon after his creation. It is scarcely worth while to notice so absurd a notion: but the reader will observe the mention of musical instruments in verse 2, which were not invented (and then only one of them) till the time of Jubal, a descendant of Cain: and when Adam was in Eden, where were the brutish foolish men of whom the psalm speaks; and where the wicked men, his enemies, that rose up against him? The cedars of Lebanon also are mentioned in verse 12. The Rabbins could scarcely have found a psalm less likely to have been written by Adam. David is probably its author; not Moses, because the musical instruments mentioned were not introduced into the sacred services till David's time.

Verse 3. "Psaltery."—The original word is נבל nebel, which is preserved in the Greek ναβλα, and the Latin nablum. Our information concerning it is still less distinct than concerning the kinnor. The only tolerably probable conclusion with respect to it is that it was a stringed instrument, and that of the harp or lyre kind. The following is we believe the amount of the information to be gleaned from the Scriptures. The nebel is first, chronologically, mentioned in the Psalms of David, which may assure us that it was not of nearly so high antiquity as the kinnor and some other instruments. From 1 Kings x. 12, we learn that this instrument as well as the kinnor was of precious wood; although, if we are to believe Josephus, it would seem that some of them—those used in the Temple—were ultimately made of that species of precious mixed metal called electrum. It is usually mentioned in connection with the kinnor. It was employed in the services of religion; but does not, so far as Scripture shows, appear to have been in use as a private instrument; whence we may perhaps infer that it was larger and more costly. It is also associated with the "instrument of ten strings" (עשור assur) of our version, and which, in Ps. xxxii. 2, and cxliv. 9, might seem to refer to the nebel itself, were it not that they are distinguished in the present text, where we have "upon an instrument of ten strings (עשור) and upon the psaltery (נבל)." In fact, whatever inference we draw from the independent exhibition of the assur in the present text, we cannot but think that elsewhere it describes the number of strings either of the common nebel or of a particular variety of that instrument. This seems to be all the information we gain from the Scriptures on the subject. Josephus says the instrument was played with the fingers, and had twelve strings; we suppose it may have had more or fewer in different times and other different circumstances. In short, the general impression is, that the nebel was an instrument of the harp or lyre kind.

The form of the instrument has been a subject of very wide conjecture, into which we cannot profitably enter; and with respect to which it is scarcely possible to arrive at a perfectly satisfactory conclusion. We shall therefore confine our attention to the illustration of two ideas; one, founded on the most tangible intimations furnished by preceding writers; and the other offered by ourselves, as a conjecture founded on the observation of certain forms of Egyptian instruments,—with which we have only in the course of the present century become acquainted, and from which, consequently, the laborious writers of the last century could obtain no assistance in their investigations.

The general statement which has come down to us from the Christian fathers amounts to little more than that the nebel was in the form of the Greek letter delt (Δ). They say the same indeed of the assur (עשור) mentioned above; but if the names express distinct instruments, we conjecture this to be true of one only, and this we will for the present assume to be the nebel rather than the assur. On the hint thus furnished we have sought for examples of stringed instruments of the form indicated; and we have done this the more cheerfully, because we saw reason to conclude that instruments of this form must have been known to the Hebrews, by whatever name they called them: and it is really of less consequence to determine the precise appropriation of names than to ascertain the forms and characters of instruments and objects.

Triangular forms of stringed instruments do not frequently occur on ancient classical monuments; and then they are very different from our harps, to which the mere mention of the triangular form has led some to compare them. The usual form is very simple, that of an irregular triangle, open on one side, and crossed by strings the number of which is various. The manner in which it was held and played is shown in the figure of the dancing Cupid, from Herculaneum, and another cut shows a more complete representation of a similar instrument from the same source. Now it was allowed by the Greeks that instruments of the trigonal form came from the East. It is usually said to have been borrowed from the Syrians, those near neighbours of the Jews, if the denomination did not indeed, in the Greek acceptance, include the Jews themselves.

The triangular form was also in use with the Egyptians. Athenæus mentions a certain musician called Alexander Alexandrinus, who was so admirable a performer on the trigonum, and gave such proof of his abilities at Rome, that he made the inhabitants μουσικαρεῖν—musically mad. Burney, who cites this, observes, that the performer being a native of Alexandria, as his name implies, makes it probable that it was an Egyptian instrument upon which he gained his high reputation at Rome. Burney also refers to the figure of the Theban harp, engraved in his work after a drawing from Bruce, in proof that the Egyptians had the triangular form of the instrument: but, unfortunately, the triangulation is one of the errors into which Bruce fell, the particular harp in view being really in the form of a bow. But the observation, although not the reference, is still applicable, as very distinct triangular instruments have been found represented in the paintings of the ancient Egyptians. Of these we have copied one of the most remarkable from Rosellini. It is played on, with both hands, by one of those monsters which the Egyptian mind was so prolific in producing; and whether we consider its size, its peculiar character and form, no instrument of the kind claims a more attentive consideration. Another stringed instrument of the Egyptians, also triangular, but very different in its form and principle from the preceding, is shown in the other engraving. It is given by Rosellini, not from a painting, but from a real instrument found in Egypt, and deposited in the museum at Florence. In this, the strings (originally ten in number, as appears from the pegs) form a triangle by their extension from the upper end of a piece inserted at right angles into a large harmonical body of wood, with which the strings are at the other extremity connected; as shown in the above engraving. Portions of the strings still remain, and appear to have been formed from the intestines of animals. Remembering that Solomon obtained wood for his "psalteries" by distant commerce, it is remarkable that the wood of this instrument is what Rosellini calls "a mahogany (Suietana) from the East Indies;" and which the Egyptians must have obtained through commercial channels. Coupling the delta form, which the old authorities assign to the nebel, with the number of the strings, Rosellini himself suggests that the present instrument has probably some resemblance to the עשור נבל, "the ten-stringed nebel" of the Hebrews. He of course thinks that the assur and nebel are identical. Besides these, the Egyptians had one or two other stringed instruments of a triangular form, distinct from those which we have represented, as well as from the harps and lyres of that people; and if any reliance may be placed on the conclusion that the nebel was of a triangular figure, it becomes interesting to discover that stringed instruments of this form were in use among the ancient neighbours of the Jews, although we may be unable with any certainty to point out the particular instruments with which the Jews were acquainted. It is remarkable that the Egyptian instruments of this class have generally one side of the triangle open: but one of our cuts shows a very curious and beautiful instrument, which has a complete frame, and which is a sort of nondescript, being a combination of the triangular forms which now engage our attention, and the arched ones which we shall hereafter notice. As a suitable, though not, strictly speaking, an authentic illustration, we have introduced below a specimen of the lyre, in the form of a perfect Δ , and struck with a sort of stylus or plectrum, which the ancient illuminators of psalters were accustomed to represent in the hands of David.—Josephus says that the nebel was played upon with the hand, as is the case in the figure from Egypt, and that from Herculaneum; but the plectrum may have been employed in some forms of the instruments. We do not know whether the nebel was the same instrument as the ναβλα or nablum of the Greeks and Romans; nor is this of much consequence, as we have little information concerning the latter. It seems however to have been highly appreciated. One proof of this has been given; and another has been adduced by Bochart, from the 'Adulterer' of Philemon, where, when one says that he is ignorant of the nabla, it is answered, "Not know the nabla! then thou knowest nothing that is good."

Instrument and Plectrum of adjoining figure.

"The harp with a solemn sound."—The word translated "solemn sound" is הִגְגָּיוֹן higgaion, which occurs untranslated in Psal. ix. 17; and in xix. 14, is rendered "meditation." Some think that it means a musical instrument; and if so, it would doubtless denote a species of harp or lyre of peculiarly grave tone: others refer it not to any distinct instrument, but to the modulation of the common kinnor, as, "In a soft whisper upon the harp" (Mudge): "Upon the murmuring harp" (Parkhurst): "With the sweet melody of the harp" (Boothroyd): and see the marginal reading. The Septuagint renders it by song, "With a song upon the cithara;" and so the Vulgate, followed by Waterland and others, and approved by Gesenius. All these modifications of meaning are derivable from the primary sense in הָגָה "hagah, to meditate," or, "to speak" with reflection: and we should certainly prefer, in the present text, to understand it as an epithet applied to the notes of the kinnor, rather than as describing a particular instrument.

13. "Shall flourish in the courts of our God."—We should not wonder if there were here an allusion to the actual presence of palm-trees, if not cedars, in the courts of houses. Of domesticated cedars we cannot speak: but it is quite usual for trees to be planted in the courts both of religious buildings and domestic habitations in the East; and while residing in the countries of the palm (Turkish Arabia for instance) we observed that this tree was almost invariably employed for the purpose. It is equally recommended to this preference by the elegance of its form, the excellence of its fruit, and the broken shade which its spreading head diffuses over the court in which it is placed.

14. "They shall still bring forth fruit in old age."—The literal reference is evidently to the palm-tree, which is very long lived for a fruit-tree, and continues in fertility and vigour at an age far more than equivalent to the extreme old age of man. The palm-tree reaches its full maturity in about thirty years (but bears fruit much earlier); and continues in full productiveness and perfect beauty for about seventy years longer. After this it begins gradually to decline, and perishes towards the latter end of its second century. This may serve as a general statement; but it is liable to large exceptions. Trees far more than two centuries old have been known; and perhaps the best general rule is afforded by the popular expression of the Arabs, which states that, after it has attained maturity, it remains in undiminished vigour during three human generations. The fruit is produced in clusters, which grow from the trunk of the tree, between the branches, or rather, leaves. The form of these clusters is best shown in our engraving. In a good tree, and productive season, there may be from fifteen to twenty of these clusters, each weighing about as many pounds; but this differs with differing circumstances, and in the different varieties, of which there are many. The same variation extends to the size and quality of the fruit itself. When perfectly ripe, the most common sort is soft and pulpy, and very sweet, without any acidity. But those that are intended to be dried are not allowed to attain their softest condition. Great quantities are dried, and are then very hard, and have a shrunk and shrivelled appearance. They are then of great service as a standing article of food; and, from their hardness and portability, are very valuable to persons on a journey. The date has an exceedingly hard and solid kernel; but, like every other part of this precious tree, this is valuable, forming a most nourishing and acceptable food to camels and other cattle, when ground, or softened by being soaked for two or three days in water. In the date countries, so much of man's subsistence depends upon this fruit, that the season of gathering is watched for with all the anxiety, and attended with all the joy, of the harvest or the vintage of other lands. After this, it will be perceived that palm-trees must form a valuable property, and confer importance on their owners: so much is this the case, that there is an Arabic proverb reflecting on the custom for persons, who affect consequence to which they have no claim, to pretend that the dates they consume are produced by trees of their own. (See Burckhardt's 'Arabic Proverbs,' No. 126.) These observations are chiefly confined to the fruit; but we shall perhaps avail ourselves of another occasion to notice the tree itself more particularly.

PSALM XCIII.

The majesty, power, and holiness of Christ's kingdom.

THE LORD reigneth, he is clothed with majesty; the LORD is clothed with strength, wherewith he hath girded himself: the world also is stablished, that it cannot be moved.

2 Thy throne is established ¹of old: thou art from everlasting.

3 The floods have lifted up, O LORD, the floods have lifted up their voice; the floods lift up their waves.

4 The LORD on high is mightier than the noise of many waters, yea, than the mighty waves of the sea.

5 Thy testimonies are very sure: holiness becometh thine house, O LORD, ²for ever.

² Heb. to length of days.

PSALM XCIII.—The Septuagint and other ancient versions attribute this psalm to David; and there does not appear any good ground for disputing this conclusion.

PSALM XCIV.

1 The prophet, calling for justice, complaineth of tyranny and impiety. 8 He teacheth God's providence. 12 He sheweth the blessedness of affliction. 16 God is the defender of the afflicted.

O LORD 'God, to whom vengeance belongeth; O God, to whom vengeance belongeth, 'shew thyself.

2 Lift up thyself, thou judge of the earth: render a reward to the proud.

3 LORD, how long shall the wicked, how long shall the wicked triumph?

4 How long shall they utter and speak hard things? and all the workers of iniquity boast themselves?

5 They break in pieces thy people, O LORD, and afflict thine heritage.

6 They slay the widow and the stranger, and murder the fatherless.

7 'Yet they say, The LORD shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard it.

8 Understand, ye brutish among the people: and ye fools, when will ye be wise?

9 'He that planted the ear, shall he not hear? he that formed the eye, shall he not see?

10 He that chastiseth the heathen, shall not he correct? he that teacheth man knowledge, shall not he know?

11 'The LORD knoweth the thoughts of man, that they are vanity.

12 Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest, O LORD, and teachest him out of thy law;

13 That thou mayest give him rest from the days of adversity, until the pit be digged for the wicked.

14 For the LORD will not cast off his people, neither will he forsake his inheritance.

15 But judgment shall return unto righteousness: and all the upright in heart 'shall follow it.

16 Who will rise up for me against the evildoers? or who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity?

17 Unless the LORD had been my help, my soul had 'almost dwelt in silence.

18 When I said, My foot slippeth; thy mercy, O LORD, held me up.

19 In the multitude of my thoughts within me thy comforts delight my soul.

20 Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by a law?

21 They gather themselves together against the soul of the righteous, and condemn the innocent blood.

22 But the LORD is my defence; and my God is the rock of my refuge.

23 And he shall bring upon them their own iniquity, and shall cut them off in their own wickedness; yea, the LORD our God shall cut them off.

PSALM XCIV.—The Septuagint and Vulgate ascribe this psalm also to David; nor is there anything in it calculated to render this determination improbable; although Calmet and some others seem rather disposed to refer it to the Captivity.

PSALM XCV.

1 An exhortation to praise God, 3 for his greatness, 6 and for his goodness, 8 and not to tempt him.

O COME, let us sing unto the LORD: let us make a joyful noise to the rock of our salvation.

2 Let us 'come before his presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms.

3 For the LORD is a great God, and a great King above all gods.

^a Heb. if they enter into my rest.

PSALM XCV.—This psalm is likewise attributed to David in the Greek and Latin copies. It is certain that St. Paul (Heb. iv. 7) quotes a passage (verses 7 and 8) under his name; and this strengthens the probability, but is not perfectly conclusive, since it was usual, popularly, to call the whole book

'The Psalms of David.' It was probably intended as an invitation or introduction to worship on certain solemn occasions. We do not see on what foundation Calmet ascribes it to the Captivity.

PSALM XCVI.

1 An exhortation to praise God, 4 for his greatness, 8 for his kingdom, 11 for his general judgment.

O 'SING unto the LORD a new song: sing unto the LORD, all the earth.

2 Sing unto the LORD, bless his name; shew forth his salvation from day to day.

3 Declare his glory among the heathen, his wonders among all people.

4 For the LORD is great, and greatly to be praised: he is to be feared above all gods.

11 Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof.

12 Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein: then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice

13 Before the LORD: for he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth: he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth.

PSALM XCVI.—This psalm corresponds to the latter half of that which is given in 1 Chron. xvi., and which David is there said to have "delivered first to thank the Lord into the hand of Asaph and his brethren," on the day when the ark was removed from the house of Obed-edom to Mount Zion. There are, however, in the present psalm some alterations, which are supposed to have been made by Ezra, when the Temple was rebuilt, after the Captivity.

⁷ Or, to the memorial.

PSALM XCVII.—The Septuagint and Vulgate call this "A Psalm of David when his land was restored." It is not clear what they mean by this: but the psalm probably was written by David, though it may be difficult to determine the occasion on which it was written. Indeed there is something very uncertain in attempting, without strong internal evidence, to determine the occasion of particular psalms; since it is probable that very many were written without reference to particular circumstances, or, at least, to any such circumstances as history records.

Verse 11. "Light is sown for the righteous."—The Prayer-book version is, "There is sprung up a light for the righteous," which certainly furnishes a more natural image, and is sanctioned by all the ancient versions, except the Syriac, which has, "Light has shone." They appear to have read the word a letter differently (לֹאֵל for אֵל) from our present copies, which require the version which our translation exhibits.

PSALM XCVIII.

1 The psalmist exhorteth the Jews, 4 the Gentiles, 7 and all the creatures to praise God.

A Psalm.

O SING unto the LORD a new song; for he hath done marvellous things: his right hand, and his holy arm, hath gotten him the victory.

2 'The LORD hath made known his salvation: his righteousness hath he 'openly shewed in the sight of the heathen.

3 He hath remembered his mercy and his truth toward the house of Israel: all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God.

4 Make a joyful noise unto the LORD, all the earth: make a loud noise, and rejoice, and sing praise.

5 Sing unto the LORD with the harp; with the harp, and the voice of a psalm.

6 With trumpets and sound of cornet make a joyful noise before the LORD, the King.

7 Let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.

8 Let the floods clap their hands: let the hills be joyful together

9 Before the LORD; 'for he cometh to judge the earth: with righteousness shall he judge the world, and the people with equity.

² Or, revealed.

³ Psal. 96. 13.

PSALM XCVIII.—This psalm also is ascribed to David in the Greek and Latin versions; and it is generally believed to have been written by him, although Calmet and some others would rather ascribe it to the Captivity.

Verse 6. "Trumpets...cornet."—With respect to these wind instruments, our information is rather more distinct and satisfactory than with reference to any others mentioned in Scripture. Concerning the cornets or horns we have already spoken in the note to Josh. vi. 4. The trumpets of the last Temple were probably formed after the ancient model; and as these are represented among the spoils of that temple on the triumphal arch of Titus at Rome (see the engraving, vol. i. p. 205), we are enabled to see that they were long, straight trumpets, of a form which has always been and continues to be common. Straight trumpets, as well as curved horns, natural or artificial, are rather common on the ancient monuments of Greece and Rome; and the former sometimes occur in Egyptian paintings. In Rosellini's 'Monumenti dell' Egitto,' there is a plate (M. R. xcii.) representing a battle-scene, copied from a painting on the walls of an Egyptian tomb, and in which a trumpeter, blowing vehemently a trumpet of this form, makes a very conspicuous appearance. He has another of the same sort under his left arm. They are both painted yellow, to indicate, probably, that they were either of gold or brass; and, as compared with the trumpeter's stature, seem to be about eighteen inches in length. Trumpets and horns are the only instruments concerning which any directions are given in the Law. "In the infancy of a state," says Burney, "a nation has but little leisure for cultivating music any otherwise than as it is connected with religious rites and the military art;" and it is thus that he accounts for the fact that (with the exception of Miriam's timbrel) no instruments but horns and trumpets are noticed in the Law. And indeed it may be said that they are scarcely mentioned as musical instruments, but as suited to and employed for making signals, calls, and conveying intimations during the religious solemnities, and in the field of war. In the main, the trumpet thus served the same purpose, in a religious and civil sense, as bells among Christians, and the voice among Mohammedans. Indeed, it is understood that Mohammed directed the voice to be employed, in order to mark a distinction between his own sect and the Jews with their trumpets and the Christians with their bells. It is clear, however, that trumpets and cornets were introduced into the musical choirs in the time of David; while they still continued to be employed in their former service. The following particulars concerning the use of trumpets in the Temple will be useful, and are collected chiefly from Lightfoot's 'Temple Service.' The trumpets were sounded exclusively by the priests who stood not in the Levitical choir, but apart, and opposite to the Levites, on the other side of the altar, both parties looking towards it—the priests on the west side and the Levites on the east. The trumpets did not join in the concert; but were sounded during certain regulated pauses in the vocal and instrumental music. "The manner of their blowing with their trumpets was first a long plain blast; then a blast with breakings and quaverings; and then a long plain blast again....

PSALM XCIX.

1 The prophet, setting forth the kingdom of God in Zion, 5 exhorteth all, by the example of forefathers, to worship God at his holy hill.

THE LORD reigneth; let the people tremble: he sitteth between the cherubims; let the earth ¹be moved.

2 The LORD is great in Zion; and he is high above all the people.

3 Let them praise thy great and terrible name; for it is holy.

Idea (not on ancient authority) of a Levitical Trumpeter. From Van Bleywyck's figure, in Calmet.

The priests did never blow but these three blasts went together.... The Jews do express these three several soundings that they made at one blowing by the words (translated) 'An alarm in the midst, and a plain note before and after it:—which our Christian writers do most commonly express by, Taratantara; though that word seems to put the quavering sound before and after, and the plain in the midst, contrary to the Jewish description of it." The trumpets sounded this taratantara in the morning when the gates were opened, and served to call the Levites and others to their duties, and the people to worship. They were again sounded at the times of sacrifice; and again, several times, as above intimated, in the course of the musical service. They were never sounded in one day less than seven times, nor more than sixteen, that is, taking the three distinct blowings as one sounding—a point which has been much disputed by the Hebrew writers. The number of trumpets was not, according to regulation, to be less than two, nor more than a hundred and twenty. This information is of course derived from Rabbinical authorities, and refers particularly to the temple service in the times of the New Testament, although much, if not all of it, may be supposed equally applicable to a much earlier period.

4 The king's strength also loveth judgment; thou dost establish equity, thou executest judgment and righteousness in Jacob.

5 Exalt ye the LORD our God, and worship at his footstool; for ²he is holy.

6 Moses and Aaron among his priests, and Samuel among them that call upon his name; they called upon the LORD, and he answered them.

² Or, it is holy.

7 He spake unto them in the cloudy pillar: they kept his testimonies, and the ordinance that he gave them.

8 Thou answeredst them, O LORD our God: thou wast a God that forgavest them, though thou tookest vengeance of their inventions.

9 Exalt the LORD our God, and worship at his holy hill; for the LORD our God is holy.

PSALM XCIX.—The old versions attribute this psalm to David: and there does not appear any better conclusion. It would seem to have been written when he was quietly and firmly established in his kingdom. But Calmet, with the concurrence of some other Biblical critics, rather conceives that it was used at the dedication of the second temple, or of the city walls, after the Captivity. The mention of Samuel, in verse 7, shows that it could not have been written by Moses, and strengthens the probability of its being the composition of David. If it had been written after the Captivity, it is likely that some other and later prophet would also have been mentioned.

PSALM C.

1 An exhortation to praise God cheerfully, 3 for his greatness, 4 and for his power.

5 For the LORD is good; his mercy is everlasting; and his truth endureth ⁴to all generations.

PSALM C.—The Septuagint ascribes this as well as the preceding psalms to David. It is not very clear by whom it was written; but it is generally believed that it was designed to be used when the sacrifices of thanksgiving (Lev. vii. 12) were offered. The present is the only psalm that bears this title; in which the word translated "praise" is, as the marginal reading intimates, the same that is rendered "thanksgiving" in verse 4.

PSALM CI.

David maketh a vow and profession of godliness.

A Psalm of David.

I WILL sing of mercy and judgment: unto thee, O LORD, will I sing.

2 I will behave myself wisely in a perfect way. O when wilt thou come unto me? I will walk within my house with a perfect heart.

7 He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house: he that telleth lies ³shall not tarry in my sight.

8 I will early destroy all the wicked of the land; that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the LORD.

PSALM CI.—This psalm appears to have been written when David was established in his kingdom, and to express the views with which he purposed to conduct its government. Some think it was written soon after he became king of all Israel.

PELICAN AND YOUNG (Pelecanus onocrotalus).

PSALM CII.

A Prayer 'of the afflicted, when he is overwhelmed, and poureth out his complaint before the LORD.

HEAR my prayer, O LORD, and let my cry come unto thee.

2 Hide not thy face from me in the day when I am in trouble; incline thine ear unto me: in the day when I call answer me speedily.

3 For my days are consumed ¹like smoke, and my bones are burned as an hearth.

4 My heart is smitten, and withered like grass; so that I forget to eat my bread.

5 By reason of the voice of my groaning my bones cleave to my ²skin.

6 I am like a pelican of the wilderness: I am like an owl of the desert.

7 I watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the house top.

8 Mine enemies reproach me all the day; and they that are mad against me are sworn against me.

9 For I have eaten ashes like bread, and mingled my drink with weeping, 10 Because of thine indignation and thy wrath: for thou hast lifted me up, and cast me down.

11 'My days are like a shadow that declineth; and I am withered like grass.

12 But thou, O LORD, shalt endure for ever; and thy remembrance unto all generations.

13 Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion: for the time to favour her, yea, the set time, is come.

14 For thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favour the dust thereof.

15 So the heathen shall fear the name of the LORD, and all the kings of the earth thy glory.

16 When the LORD shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory.

17 He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer.

18 This shall be written for the generation to come: and the people which shall be created shall praise the LORD.

27 But thou art the same, and thy years shall have no end.

28 The children of thy servants shall continue, and their seed shall be established before thee.

PSALM CII.—It appears from verse 13, that this psalm was written towards the end of the Captivity; but its author cannot be determined. Daniel and Nehemiah have been named.

Verse 6. "Pelican."—(תנ"ך kaath). The pelican (Pelecanus onocrotalus) is spread over many parts of Asia, Africa, and Europe. Its plumage, when full grown, is nearly all white; with an expanse of wings that sometimes reaches to twelve feet. The most remarkable feature in the pelican is the pouch, a curious dilatation of the throat, for the bestowment of the food till the hour of retirement and eating has come round. We have often seen one of the species sitting on the ledge of a rock, a foot or two above the surface of the water, in pensive silence during the whole day; the continuity of its proceeding being only interrupted at distant intervals by the near approach of some unlucky fish, upon which it darted with unerring certainty, and then resumed its wonted stillness. At other times we have observed them urging their way, with rapid flight, thirty or forty miles into the country, after a day's fishing, to feast in the lonely wilderness upon the contents of their well-stored pouches: and were then reminded of the words, "I am like a pelican in the wilderness."

7. "Sparrow."—The word תנ"ך tzippor, we have explained elsewhere to be a general term for birds, or perhaps for small birds in particular, while at the same time, it is the proper name of the sparrow. It is quite clear that the word should be understood here in its general, not in its restricted signification; for the intimations do not by any means agree with a pert, active, chattering bird, fond of society, like the sparrow, but seems rather to require some moping bird, that sits watching solitary upon the house tops in the night season. The owl might well enough be understood; but it is safer to take the reference indefinitely, as indeed most translators do, having, instead of "sparrow alone,"—"solitary bird," or "solitary little bird;" and "bird alone," or "little bird alone."

PSALM CIII.

1 An exhortation to bless God for his mercy, 15 and for the constancy thereof.

A Psalm of David.

BLESS the LORD, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name.

2 Bless the LORD, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits:

3 Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases;

4 Who redeemeth thy life from destruction; who crowneth thee with lovingkindness and tender mercies;

5 Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things; so that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's.

6 The LORD executeth righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed.

7 He made known his ways unto Moses, his acts unto the children of Israel.

10 He hath not dealt with us after our sins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities.

11 For ³as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear him.

12 As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us.

13 Like as a father pitieth his children, so the LORD pitieth them that fear him.

21 Bless ye the LORD, all ye his hosts; ye ministers of his, that do his pleasure.

22 Bless the LORD, all his works in all places of his dominion: bless the LORD, O my soul.

PSALM CIII.—Patrick, Delaney, and others, conceive this psalm to have been composed after David had recovered from a dangerous illness; but Dathe concludes that it was written after his affliction for the child of Bathsheba.

Verse 5. "Thy youth is renewed like the eagle's."—This most probably alludes to the renewal of vigour and activity in birds after the moulting season, when they appear with full and renovated plumage. The change is of course most remarkable in such full-feathered and powerful birds as the eagle. That the eagle actually renews its youth, is one of those old absurdities, to which this text, properly understood, affords no sanction.

PSALM CIV.

¹ A meditation upon the mighty power, 'and wonderful providence of God. 31 God's glory is eternal. 33 The prophet voweth perpetually to praise God.

BLESS the LORD, O my soul. O LORD my God, thou art very great; thou art clothed with honour and majesty.

2 Who coverest thyself with light as with a garment: who stretchest out the heavens like a curtain:

3 Who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters: who maketh the clouds his chariot: who walketh upon the wings of the wind:

4 'Who maketh his angels spirits; his ministers a flaming fire:

5 'Who laid the foundations of the earth, that it should not be removed for ever.

6 Thou coveredst it with the deep as with a garment: the waters stood above the mountains.

7 At thy rebuke they fled; at the voice of thy thunder they hasted away.

8 'They go up by the mountains; they go down by the valleys unto the place which thou hast founded for them.

9 Thou hast set a bound that they may not pass over; that they turn not again to cover the earth.

10 'He sendeth the springs into the valleys, which 'run among the hills.

11 They give drink to every beast of the field: the wild asses 'quench their thirst.

12 By them shall the fowls of the heaven have their habitation, which 'sing among the branches.

13 He watereth the hills from his chambers: the earth is satisfied with the fruit of thy works.

14 He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man: that he may bring forth food out of the earth;

15 And 'wine that maketh glad the heart of man, and 'oil to make his face to shine, and bread which strengtheneth man's heart.

16 The trees of the LORD are full of sap; the cedars of Lebanon, which he hath planted;

17 Where the birds make their nests: as for the stork, the fir trees are her house.

18 The high hills are a refuge for the wild goats; and the rocks for the conies.

PSALM CIV.—This psalm is generally admitted to have been written by David, with whose name it is superscribed in the old versions. Bishop Louth in different Lectures returns repeatedly to this magnificent composition, which he puts under the head of the Idyllium. “The hundred and fourth psalm,” he observes, “demonstrates the glory of the Creator from the wisdom, beauty, and variety of his works. The poet embellishes this noble subject with the clearest and most splendid colouring of language; and with imagery the most magnificent, lively, diversified, and pleasing, at the same time select, and happily adapted to the subject. There is nothing of the kind extant, indeed nothing can be conceived, more perfect than this hymn, whether it be considered with respect to its intrinsic beauties, or as a model of that species of composition.”

Verse 17. “As for the stork, the fir trees are her house.”—We have spoken generally of the stork in the note to Levit. xi. 19, and have given a representation of it under Job xxxix. In the note, we mentioned the situations in which the bird prefers to establish its nest, being the elevated points of public buildings and private houses. That it does not usually build in trees, has been urged as an objection to our considering the stork to be intended in the present text. But this objection has less weight than appears at first view. The storks will build any where, rather than on the ground or in very low situations; and in the East the roofs are flat, and form in some sort an occupied part of the house; while those high stacks of chimneys are wanting which in Europe afford them an ample choice of convenient foundations for their nests. It is true the wind chimneys mentioned under Levit. xi., furnish an admirable substitute; but these occur only in a limited region of Asia, and then only to the better sort of houses. It hence follows that when all the elevated points have been secured, there remain some birds, and in some situations the greater number of them, that have no other alternative than to resort to the trees in the neighbourhood. Never having had occasion to observe their habits in a place where fir-trees grew, we cannot from our own knowledge speak of their preference for such trees: but Shaw says that then “the fir and other trees” became the dwelling of the stork in Barbary. In fact, we conjecture that the psalmist does not speak of a general but a local habit. The stork in every locality naturally selects the trees best adapted to its purpose; and we may suppose that this happened to be the fir-tree in the place where this psalm was written.

21. “The young lions roar after their prey.”—With respect to the lion, the ideas of prey and roaring are almost constantly associated in the Bible. Accordingly, it is commonly stated that the lion does not roar except when he has his prey in view, or is in the act of striking it down. This the more explains, also, the terror which all creatures manifest at the lion’s roar, since it affords them ground to suspect that they are themselves the objects of his destroying notice.

PSALM CV.

1 An exhortation to praise God, and to seek out his works.
 7 The story of God's providence over Abraham, 16 over Joseph, 23 over Jacob in Egypt, 26 over Moses delivering the Israelites, 37 over the Israelites brought out of Egypt, fed in the wilderness, and planted in Canaan.

O 'GIVE thanks unto the LORD; call upon his name: make known his deeds among the people.

2 Sing unto him, sing psalms unto him: talk ye of all his wondrous works.

3 Glory ye in his holy name: let the heart of them rejoice that seek the LORD.

4 Seek the LORD, and his strength: seek his face evermore.

5 Remember his marvellous works that he hath done; his wonders, and the judgments of his mouth;

6 O ye seed of Abraham his servant, ye children of Jacob his chosen.

7 He is the LORD our God: his judgments are in all the earth.

8 He hath remembered his covenant for ever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations.

9 'Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac;

10 And confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant:

11 Saying, 'Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, 'the lot of your inheritance:

12 When there were but a few men in number; yea, very few, and strangers in it.

13 When they went from one nation to another, from one kingdom to another people;

14 He suffered no man to do them wrong: yea, he reprov'd kings for their sakes;

15 Saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.

16 Moreover he called for a famine upon the land: he brake the whole staff of bread.

17 He sent a man before them, 'even Joseph, who was sold for a servant:

18 'Whose feet 'they hurt with fetters: 'he was laid in iron:

19 Until the time that his word came: the word of the LORD tried him.

20 'The king sent and loosed him; even the ruler of the people, and let him go free.

21 'He made him lord of his house, and ruler of all his ¹⁰substance:

22 To bind his princes at his pleasure; and teach his senators wisdom.

23 ¹¹Israel also came into Egypt; and Jacob sojourn'd in the land of Ham.

24 And he increased his people greatly; and made them stronger than their enemies.

25 ¹²He turned their heart to hate his people, to deal subtilly with his servants.

26 ¹³He sent Moses his servant; and Aaron whom he had chosen.

27 ¹⁴They shewed ¹⁵his signs among them, and wonders in the land of Ham.

28 ¹⁶He sent darkness, and made it dark; and they rebelled not against his word.

29 ¹⁷He turned their waters into blood, and slew their fish.

30 ¹⁸Their land brought forth frogs in abundance, in the chambers of their kings.

31 ¹⁹He spake, and there came divers sorts of flies, and lice in all their coasts.

32 ²⁰ ²¹He gave them hail for rain, and flaming fire in their land.

33 He smote their vines also and their fig trees; and brake the trees of their coasts.

34 ²²He spake, and the locusts came, and caterpillars, and that without number,

35 And did eat up all the herbs in their land, and devoured the fruit of their ground.

36 ²³He smote also all the firstborn in their land, the chief of all their strength.

37 ²⁴He brought them forth also with silver and gold: and there was not one feeble person among their tribes.

38 ²⁵Egypt was glad when they departed: for the fear of them fell upon them.

39 ²⁶He spread a cloud for a covering; and fire to give light in the night.

PSALM CV.—The first part of this psalm (to verse 16) is the same, with some small variation, as that given in 1 Chron. xvi., which was sung on the bringing of the ark to Mount Zion; and some think that the remainder was added by David at a subsequent period. But it is the opinion of Calmet and Dathe that the sequel was added by some holy person after the Captivity, and sung at the dedication of the second temple. This and the following psalm are chiefly historical, and refer to circumstances which have already engaged our attention.

PSALM CVI.

1 The psalmist exhorteth to praise God. 4 He prayeth for pardon of sin, as God did with the fathers. 7 The story of the people's rebellion, and God's mercy. 47 He concludeth with prayer and praise.

¹ PRAISE ye the LORD. O ²give thanks unto the LORD; for he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever.

2 Who can utter the mighty acts of the LORD? who can shew forth all his praise?

3 Blessed are they that keep judgment, and he that doeth righteousness at all times.

4 Remember me, O LORD, with the favour that thou bearest unto thy people: O visit me with thy salvation;

5 That I may see the good of thy chosen, that I may rejoice in the gladness of thy nation, that I may glory with thine inheritance.

6 We have sinned with our fathers, we have committed iniquity, we have done wickedly.

7 Our fathers understood not thy wonders in Egypt; they remembered not the multitude of thy mercies; ³but provoked him at the sea, even at the Red sea.

8 Nevertheless he saved them for his name's sake, that he might make his mighty power to be known.

9 He rebuked the Red sea also, and it was dried up: so he led them through the depths, as through the wilderness.

10 And he saved them from the hand of him that hated them, and redeemed them from the hand of the enemy.

11 ⁴And the waters covered their enemies: there was not one of them left.

12 ⁵Then believed they his words; they sang his praise.

13 ⁶They soon forgot his works; they waited not for his counsel:

14 ⁷But ⁸lusted exceedingly in the wilderness, and tempted God in the desert.

15 ⁹And he gave them their request; but sent leanness into their soul.

16 ¹⁰They envied Moses also in the camp, and Aaron the saint of the LORD.

17 ¹¹The earth opened and swallowed up Dathan, and covered the company of Abiram.

18 ¹²And a fire was kindled in their company; the flame burned up the wicked.

19 ¹³They made a calf in Horeb, and worshipped the molten image.

20 Thus they changed their glory into the similitude of an ox that eateth grass.

21 They forgot God their saviour, which had done great things in Egypt;

22 Wondrous works in the land of Ham, and terrible things by the Red sea.

23 ¹⁴Therefore he said that he would destroy them, had not Moses his chosen stood before him in the breach, to turn away his wrath, lest he should destroy them.

24 Yea, they despised ¹⁵the pleasant land, they believed not his word:

25 ¹⁷But murmured in their tents, and hearkened not unto the voice of the LORD.

26 Therefore he lifted up his hand against them, to overthrow them in the wilderness:

27 ¹⁸To overthrow their seed also among the nations, and to scatter them in the lands.

28 ¹⁹They joined themselves also unto Baal-peor, and ate the sacrifices of the dead.

29 Thus they provoked him to anger with their inventions: and the plague brake in upon them.

30 ²⁰Then stood up Phinehas, and executed judgment: and so the plague was stayed.

31 And that was counted unto him for righteousness unto all generations for evermore.

32 ²¹They angered him also at the waters of strife, so that it went ill with Moses for their sakes:

33 Because they provoked his spirit, so that he spake unadvisedly with his lips.

34 They did not destroy the nations, ²²concerning whom the LORD commanded them:

35 ²³But were mingled among the heathen, and learned their works.

36 And they served their idols: which were a snare unto them.

37 Yea, they sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto devils, 38 And shed innocent blood, even the blood of their sons and of their daughters, whom they sacrificed unto the idols of Canaan: and the land was polluted with blood.

39 Thus were they defiled with their own works, and went a whoring with their own inventions.

40 Therefore was the wrath of the LORD kindled against his people, insomuch that he abhorred his own inheritance.

41 And he gave them into the hand of the heathen; and they that hated them ruled over them.

42 Their enemies also oppressed them, and they were brought into subjection under their hand.

43 ²⁴Many times did he deliver them; but they provoked him with their counsel, and were ²⁵brought low for their iniquity.

44 Nevertheless he regarded their affliction, when he heard their cry:

45 ²⁶And he remembered for them his covenant, and repented according to the multitude of his mercies.

46 He made them also to be pitied of all those that carried them captives.

47 Save us, O LORD our God, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name, and to triumph in thy praise.

48 Blessed be the LORD God of Israel from everlasting to everlasting: and let all the people say, Amen. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CVI.—The first and two last verses of this psalm are ascribed to David in 1 Chron. xvi., which affords a reason for concluding that the whole was written by him. Yet it is supposed by many to have been composed during the Captivity: but this opinion does not seem to be well supported, for verse 47, on which it chiefly rests, happens to be one of those which occur in the psalm of David, in 1 Chron. xvi. This psalm ends the fourth of the books into which the Psalms are divided by the Jews.

Verse 28. "Ate the sacrifices of the dead."—It appears that "the dead," is a term of contempt applied to idols; perhaps not without some reference to the fact that many of these idols were no other than men, deified after their deaths. To eat of what had been offered to them in sacrifice, implied a certain participation in the act of sacrifice. Some interpreters are, however, of opinion that the sacrifices which it was usual among the heathen to offer in honour of the dead, are here intended.

4 They wandered in the wilderness in a solitary way ; they found no city to dwell in.

5 Hungry and thirsty, their soul fainted in them.

6 Then they cried unto the LORD in their trouble, and he delivered them out of their distresses.

7 And he led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation.

8 Oh that men would praise the LORD for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men !

9 For he satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness.

10 Such as sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, being bound in affliction and iron ;

11 Because they rebelled against the words of God, and contemned the counsel of the most High :

13 Then they cried unto the LORD in their trouble, and he saved them out of their distresses.

14 He brought them out of darkness and the shadow of death, and brake their bands in sunder.

26 They mount up to the heaven, they go down again to the depths : their soul is melted because of trouble.

27 They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and 'are at their wit's end.

28 Then they cry unto the LORD in their trouble, and he bringeth them out of their distresses.

29 He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still.

30 Then are they glad because they be quiet ; so he bringeth them unto their desired haven.

PSALM CVII.—The author of this psalm is not known; but it was probably David, although some think it better to consider it as having been written after the return from the Babylonish captivity. This psalm is of very singular construction, and was obviously intended to be sung in responses. It has a frequently recurring double burden, or intercalary verse. The first burden is found in verses 6, 13, 19, 28; the second, 8, 15, 21, 31; that is, after the description of a class of calamities comes the first chorus expressing the cry to the Lord for deliverance; then a single verse describes the deliverance as granted, after which follows the chorus of thanksgiving—and thus on to verse 35, where the system ends. The last two burdens are however separate by two verses, instead of one, as before. It will also be observed that the second chorus has sometimes annexed another reflective distich illustrative of the sentiment, as in verses 9, 16. There are many other examples of a similar arrangement to be found in the psalms; but, in Lowth's opinion, few of them are equal, and none superior to this.

"They mount up to the heaven, they go down again to the depths: their soul is melted because of trouble."—Verse 26.

²Psalm 60. 5.

PSALM CVIII.—This Psalm is made up out of two others, lvii. and lx., as indicated in the marginal references.

Verse 2. "Psalter."—Having already, under Psalm xci., illustrated that old opinion which assigns a triangular form to the nebel, we are now prepared to illustrate another view, which was suggested to us by the examination of some of the splendid works which, in the course of the present century, have made us so well acquainted with the public and private life of the ancient Egyptians, and which are calculated to afford us, indirectly, much valuable information concerning the arts and implements of their neighbours, and more particularly of the Jews.

At p. 43, in the note on the kinnor, we noticed the tradition which ascribed the origin of stringed instruments of the lyre or harp class to an observation of the sound caused by the twanging of a bow. It might therefore be inferred that the earliest instruments founded on this idea would bear the form of a bow. Yet we have not met with any figures from Greek or Roman monuments which bear in their form any indication of such an origin, whilst all the harps of Egypt are more or less of the bow shape, so that the idea of such an origin would be suggested even were there no tradition to support it. This the reader will perceive by an examination of the harps in our present engravings, as well as by those contained in the group of musical performers at p. 28. Indeed we think that the engravings, taken together, will enable him to trace the progress of the idea from the simplest modification of the bow form to the large and magnificent bowed harp. The most simple application of this idea seems to be that afforded by the instrument represented in the figure hereto annexed; and which is given by Rosellini, as copied from a real instrument preserved in the Museum at Florence. It is constructed of the same materials as that triangular instrument represented in the fourth figure under Ps. xcii., and preserved in the same Museum. From the number of the pegs, the strings seem to have been four in number; and which appear to have been conducted through a box or belly, framed at one extremity of the arc, in order to strengthen the sound. Fig. 2 exhibits another instrument of the same kind, with the four strings stretched over a box. This figure is further interesting, as showing the manner in which the instrument was played, as carried upon the shoulder. In the two very interesting and highly enriched instruments played by the two central figures in the engraving given under Ps. xxxiii., the very simply arched figure is preserved, but, instead of a rather extraneous box, more of unity is obtained by an extensive hollow, gradually widening, being formed between the outer and inner surfaces of the arched frame. It is also large, and is not portable while played, but rests rather awkwardly upon the ground, without any base for its support. Fig. 3 exhibits another smaller instrument of this description; and fig. 4 shows the largest of the class, and which has the same number of strings that Josephus gives to the Hebrew nebel. Our remaining small cuts exhibit instruments also of the arc form, but in which the arc is more bent. In all these the hollow frame is much enlarged towards the lower end, and its bend there sometimes furnishes a sort of base, on which the instrument may be more conveniently poised than those last noticed. None of them seem to be portable; and as they are short, they are either placed on a stand, or the player sits on the ground, on which the instrument is rested. One of these cuts (fig. 7) is particularly interesting, as from the fine manner in which the player's head is thrown back, with the mouth open, he appears to be singing, proving that the performer sometimes accompanied the instrument with his voice.

Our large cut exhibits what seems the most perfect and finished forms to which the Egyptian harp ultimately arrived. It is from a painting on the walls of what, on account of this and another similar representation, is called the "Harp Tomb," at Thebes. Bruce was the first to describe these representations, in a letter to Dr. Burney, which the latter printed in his 'History of Music.' He also gave a drawing, engraved in that work, which appears to have been intended to represent the harp of our engraving. It is however so different in form and principle, though some resemblance is observable, that, as Browne suspected, it was probably finished from recollection. Denon afterwards gave, in a rude sketch, a more correct representation, preserving the arc form which Bruce had destroyed. Then came the great French work on Egypt, which gave the more finished engraving, from which ours is copied; and also of the other, which is so similar that we have not thought it necessary to be here inserted. We are aware that the accuracy of even these representations has been strongly questioned by Dr. Richardson and others; but so far as we can ascertain, the objections refer chiefly to colouring, and to some small matters of detail, which do not affect the general accuracy, particularly in a wood engraving. The only serious error seems to be, that, according to Rosellini, the second harp contains thirteen strings, not eighteen, as stated by Bruce, nor twenty-one, as in the French work. We need not expatiate on the form of the harp, which our engraving so adequately represents. But we will quote a few of the observations of Bruce, whose written account is much better than his figure, and correct, except as to his fundamental error in the form of the harp and the number of the strings. After describing correctly the figure of the player, he says, "To guess by the detail of the figure, the painter should have had about the same degree of merit with a good sign painter in Europe; yet he has represented the action of the musician in a manner never to be mistaken. His left (right) hand seems employed in the upper part of the instrument among the notes in alto, as if in arpeggio; while stooping forwards, he seems with his right (left) hand to be beginning with the lowest string, and promising to ascend with the most rapid execution; this action, so obviously rendered by an indifferent artist, shows that it was a common one in his time; or, in other words, that great hands were then frequent, and consequently that music was well understood and diligently followed. If we allow the performer's stature to be about five feet ten inches, then we may compute the harp, in its extreme length, to be somewhat less than six feet and a half. It seems to support itself in equilibrio on its foot, or base, and needs only the player's guidance to keep it steady. It has thirteen (eleven) strings, and the length of these, with the force and liberty with which they are treated, show that they are made in a very different manner from those of the lyre." He observes, that the absence of a forepiece, opposed to the longest string, must have improved its tone; but at the same time must have rendered the instrument itself weaker, and more liable to accidents, if carriage had not been so convenient in Egypt. He adds, "Besides that the whole principles upon which the harp is constructed are rational and ingenious, the ornamental parts are likewise executed in the very best manner: the bottom and sides of the frame seem to be finereed, or inlaid, probably with ivory, tortoiseshell, and mother-of-pearl; the ordinary produce of the neighbouring seas and deserts. It would be even now impossible to furnish an instrument with more taste and elegance." Dr. Burney himself has some interesting remarks on the same subject (vol. i. p. 224, et seq.), liable however to the correction necessary from his having been in some respects misled by Bruce's drawing.

When, some years after his letter to Dr. Burney, Bruce published his own work, he gave a representation of the second harp, which, although considerably "improved," is far more faithfully copied than the other. With reference to both he says, "These harps, in my opinion, overturn all the accounts hitherto given of the earliest state of music and musical instruments in the East; and are altogether, in their form, ornaments, and compass, an incontestable proof, stronger than a thousand Greek quotations, that geometry, drawing, mechanics, and music, were at the greatest perfection when this instrument was made; and that the period from which we date the invention of these arts was only the beginning of the æra of their restoration. This was the sentiment of Solomon, a writer who lived about the time when these harps were painted. 'Is there,' says Solomon, 'any thing whereof it may be said, See, this is new! It hath been already of old time which was before us.'"

Here then we observe real harps—the only ones of which antiquity has left any trace, and differing very considerably from any of those in use among ourselves. Such harps being in use among the Egyptians, the probability will scarcely be disputed that they were known also to the Jews; and then when we reflect that the nebel appears to have been a large stringed instrument of the harp kind, it will appear as good a probability as can be obtained that the name is applicable to some such instruments as our present cuts exhibit. However, we are not solicitous to contend that this harp must certainly have been the nebel of the Hebrews. But if it be allowed that they were acquainted with such an instrument, we will not contend that it might not be denoted by some other undetermined name of stringed instruments, such as "the instrument of ten strings," "the harp of solemn sound," or "the pleasant harp," rather than that of the nebel; and shall therefore not object to be understood as introducing, under a name not distinctly appropriated, an instrument which may possibly not have been the nebel of the Hebrews, but which, by whichever of the undetermined names they called it, could scarcely fail to have been known to them. It may also be observed, that the two great harps, having, respectively, eleven and thirteen strings, have only one less and one more than the twelve which Josephus assigns to the nebel. Several of the smaller ones also offer such a number of strings as would alone suffice to suggest an approximation to the instrument in question.

PSALM CIX.

- 1 David, complaining of his slanderous enemies, under the person of Judas devoteth them. 16 He sheweth their sin.
 21 Complaining of his own misery, he prayeth for help.
 29 He promiseth thankfulness.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

HOLD not thy peace, O God of my praise;

2 For the mouth of the wicked and the 'mouth of the deceitful' are opened against me: they have spoken against me with a lying tongue.

3 They compassed me about also with words of hatred; and fought against me without a cause.

4 For my love they are my adversaries: but I give myself unto prayer.

5 And they have rewarded me evil for good, and hatred for my love.

² Heb. have opened themselves.

6 Set thou a wicked man over him : and let ²Satan stand at his right hand.

7 When he shall be judged, let him ³be condemned : and let his prayer become sin.

8 Let his days be few ; and ⁴let another take his ⁵office.

9 Let his children be fatherless, and his wife a widow.

10 Let his children be continually vagabonds, and beg : let them seek their bread also out of their desolate places.

11 Let the extortioner catch all that he hath ; and let the strangers spoil his labour.

12 Let there be none to extend mercy unto him : neither let there be any to favour his fatherless children.

13 Let his posterity be cut off ; and in the generation following let their name be blotted out.

14 Let the iniquity of his fathers be remembered with the LORD ; and let not the sin of his mother be blotted out.

15 Let them be before the LORD continually, that he may cut off the memory of them from the earth.

16 Because that he remembered not to shew mercy, but persecuted the poor and needy man, that he might even slay the broken in heart.

17 As he loved cursing, so let it come unto him : as he delighted not in blessing, so let it be far from him.

18 As he clothed himself with cursing like as with his garment, so let it come ⁶into his bowels like water, and like oil into his bones.

19 Let it be unto him as the garment which covereth him, and for a girdle where-with he is girded continually.

20 Let this be the reward of mine adversaries from the LORD, and of them that speak evil against my soul.

21 But do thou for me, O God the Lord, for thy name's sake : because thy mercy is good, deliver thou me.

22 For I am poor and needy, and my heart is wounded within me.

23 I am gone like the shadow when it declineth : I am tossed up and down as the locust.

24 My knees are weak through fasting ; and my flesh faileth of fatness.

25 I became also a reproach unto them : when they looked upon me they shook their heads.

26 Help me, O LORD my God : O save me according to thy mercy :

27 That they may know that this is thy hand ; that thou, LORD, hast done it.

28 Let them curse, but bless thou : when they arise, let them be ashamed ; but let thy servant rejoice.

29 Let mine adversaries be clothed with shame, and let them cover themselves with their own confusion, as with a mantle.

30 I will greatly praise the LORD with my mouth ; yea, I will praise him among the multitude.

31 For he shall stand at the right hand of the poor, to save him ⁷from those that condemn his soul.

² Or, an adversary.

⁴ Heb. go out guilty, or wicked.

⁵ Acts 1. 20.

⁶ Or, charge.

⁷ Heb. within him.

³ Heb. from the judges of his soul.

Verse 18. "Like water."—There is probably an allusion here to the water of jealousy. See Num. v. 19.

23. "Tossed up and down as the locust."—The locusts fly in enormous compact swarms, which are often tossed to and fro and broken by gales of wind, which very often also drive them over the sea, into which they fall when no longer able to sustain their flight. The wind is the great agent in the confusion and destruction of their devastating hosts.

PSALM CX.

1 The kingdom, 4 the priesthood, 5 the conquest, 7 and the passion of Christ.

A Psalm of David.

THE 'LORD said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool.

2 The LORD shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion : rule thou in the midst of thine enemies.

¹ Matt. 22. 44. Mark 12. 36. Luke 20. 42. Acts 2. 34. 1 Cor. 15. 25. Heb. 1. 13.

3 Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holiness ²from the womb of the morning: thou hast the dew of thy youth.

4 The LORD hath sworn, and will not repent, ³Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek.

5 The Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath.

6 He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; he shall wound the heads over 'many countries.

7 He shall drink of the brook in the way: therefore shall he lift up the head.

² Or, more than the womb of the morning: thou shalt have, &c.

³ Heb. 5. 6, and 7. 17.

Verse 3. "From the womb of the morning: thou hast the dew of thy youth."—"In the interpretation of this passage," says Bishop Lowth, "what monstrous blunders has an ignorance of the Hebrew idiom produced!" But he adds, "In this passage however the mixture of the metaphor and comparison as well as the ellipses of the word to be repeated, creates a degree of obscurity: 'Beyond the womb of the morning is the dew of thine offspring to thee;' that is, 'Preferable to the dew which proceeds from the womb of the morning; more copious, more abundant.'" This explanation is now generally received.

PSALM CXI.

1 The psalmist by his example inciteth others to praise God for his glorious, 5 and gracious works. 10 The fear of God breedeth true wisdom.

'PRAISE ye the LORD. I will praise the LORD with my whole heart, in the assembly of the upright, and in the congregation.

2 The works of the LORD are great, sought out of all them that have pleasure therein.

3 His work is honourable and glorious: and his righteousness endureth for ever.

4 He hath made his wonderful works to be remembered: the LORD is gracious and full of compassion.

5 He hath given ²meat unto them that fear him: he will ever be mindful of his covenant.

6 He hath shewed his people the power of his works, that he may give them the heritage of the heathen.

7 The works of his hands are verity and judgment; all his commandments are sure.

8 They ³stand fast for ever and ever, and are done in truth and uprightness.

9 He sent redemption unto his people: he hath commanded his covenant for ever: holy and reverend is his name.

10 'The fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom: ⁴a good understanding have all they ⁵that do his commandments: his praise endureth for ever.

³ Heb. are established.

⁴ Job 28. 28. Prov. 1. 7, and 9. 10. Eccus. 1. 16.

⁵ Or, good success.

⁶ Heb. that do them.

PSALM CXI.—This and the following psalm are two of the twelve alphabetical poems, and two of the three which are more strictly alphabetical than the other nine, inasmuch as every line, not merely every stanza, begins with its proper initial. The third of the poems thus perfectly alphabetical is Lament. iii.

PSALM CXII.

1 Godliness hath the promises of this life, 4 and of the life to come. 10 The prosperity of the godly shall be an eyesore to the wicked.

'PRAISE ye the LORD. Blessed is the man that feareth the LORD, that delighteth greatly in his commandments.

2 His seed shall be mighty upon earth: the generation of the upright shall be blessed.

3 Wealth and riches shall be in his house: and his righteousness endureth for ever.

4 Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness: he is gracious, and full of compassion, and righteous.

5 A good man sheweth favour, and lendeth: he will guide his affairs with discretion.

6 Surely he shall not be moved for ever: the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance.

7 He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixed, trusting in the LORD.

8 His heart is established, he shall not be afraid, until he see his desire upon his enemies.

9 ³He hath dispersed, he hath given to the poor; his righteousness endureth for ever; his horn shall be exalted with honour.

10 The wicked shall see it, and be grieved; he shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away: the desire of the wicked shall perish.

^{*} Heb. judgment.

^{*} 2 Cor. 9. 9.

PSALM CXII.—Although this psalm has no superscription, it is usually ascribed to David.

PSALM CXIII.

1 An exhortation to praise God for his excellency, 6 for his mercy.

¹PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise, O ye servants of the LORD, praise the name of the LORD.

2 ²Blessed be the name of the LORD from this time forth and for evermore.

3 ³From the rising of the sun unto the going down of the same the LORD's name is to be praised.

4 The LORD is high above all nations, and his glory above the heavens.

5 Who is like unto the LORD our God, who 'dwelleth on high,

6 Who humbleth himself to behold the things that are in heaven, and in the earth!

7 ⁷He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth the needy out of the dung-hill;

8 That he may set him with princes, even with the princes of his people.

9 He maketh the barren woman 'to keep house, and to be a joyful mother of children. Praise ye the LORD.

³ Mal. 1. 11.

⁴ Heb. exalteth himself to dwell.

⁵ 1 Sam. 2. 8. Psal. 107. 41.

⁶ Heb. to dwell in an house.

PSALM CXIII.—This psalm is also generally attributed to David. This, and the five that follow, are the psalms which the Jews used to recite at their tables on occasions of religious festival, and particularly on the Paschal night, after the lamb had been eaten. A portion of these psalms probably composed "the hymn" which was sung by our Saviour and his disciples after the Passover. (Matth. xxvi. 30; Mark xiv. 26.)

Verse 9. "He maketh the barren woman to keep house."—Probably this means no more than that she, thus blessed, becomes the maternal head of a family. However the literal meaning, as given in our version, is susceptible of illustration from the usages of the harems or female establishments of the East. The virgins, and those who have borne no children, live together in community; but when one bears a son, she becomes entitled to a distinct establishment for herself, with suitable appointments and attendance. In the East it is always a joyful thing to be the mother of children; and in establishments of this nature, the distinction of being allowed to "keep house" does of course give added intensity to the joys of motherhood.

PSALM CXIV.

An exhortation, by the example of the dumb creatures, to fear God in his church.

WHEN ¹Israel went out of Egypt, the house of Jacob from a people of strange language;

2 Judah was his sanctuary, and Israel his dominion.

3 ³The sea saw it, and fled: ³Jordan was driven back.

4 The mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs.

³ Josh. 3. 13.

5 What ailed thee, O thou sea, that thou fleddest? thou Jordan, that thou wast driven back?

6 Ye mountains, that ye skipped like rams; and ye little hills, like lambs?

7 Tremble, thou earth, at the presence of the LORD, at the presence of the God of Jacob;

8 'Which turned the rock into a standing water, the flint into a fountain of waters.

⁴ Exod. 17. 6. Num. 20. 11.

PSALM CXIV.—This and all the remaining untitled psalms are usually ascribed to David, unless where a note conveys a contrary intimation. Many of them are however ascribed by Calmet and some others to the Captivity, as we shall particularly state when there appears any satisfactory ground for such a conclusion.

PSALM CXV.

¹ Because God is truly glorious, 4 and idols are vanity, 9 he exhorteth to confidence in God. 12 God is to be blessed for his blessings.

NOT unto us, O LORD, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake.

2 Wherefore should the heathen say, 'Where is now their God?

3 'But our God is in the heavens: he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased.

4 'Their idols are silver and gold, the work of men's hands.

5 They have mouths, but they speak not: eyes have they, but they see not:

6 They have ears, but they hear not: noses have they, but they smell not:

7 They have hands, but they handle not: feet have they, but they walk not: neither speak they through their throat.

8 They that make them are like unto them; so is every one that trusteth in them.

9 O Israel, trust thou in the LORD: he is their help and their shield.

10 O house of Aaron, trust in the LORD: he is their help and their shield.

11 Ye that fear the LORD, trust in the LORD: he is their help and their shield.

12 The LORD hath been mindful of us: he will bless us; he will bless the house of Israel; he will bless the house of Aaron.

13 He will bless them that fear the LORD, both small 'and great.

14 The LORD shall increase you more and more, you and your children.

15 Ye are blessed of the LORD which made heaven and earth.

¹ The psalmist professeth his love and duty to God for his deliverance. 12 He studieth to be thankful.

I LOVE the LORD, because he hath heard my voice and my supplications.

2 Because he hath inclined his ear unto me, therefore will I call upon him 'as long as I live.

^a 2 Cor. 4. 13.

^b Rom. 3. 4.

Verse 13. "The cup of salvation," &c.—This is doubtless an allusion to the drink offering of strong wine poured out before the Lord in the holy place. (Num. xxviii. 7.) But the Jews had also in their families a more private cup of thanksgiving, as well for the common benefits of life as for the more marked instances of the Lord's mercies and deliverances. The use of this was daily, at each meal, and more solemn at a festival. On the daily occasions, the master took the cup, and thus "called upon the name of the Lord : 'Blessed be our God, the Lord of the world, who hath created the fruit of the vine ;'" and having first drunk of it himself, it was presented in order to all who were present. This observance was more marked at the celebration of the passover ; and was followed by Christ at the last passover which he kept with his disciples.

PSALM CXVII.

An exhortation to praise God for his mercy and truth.

dureth* for ever.

3 Let the house of Aaron now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

4 Let them now that fear the LORD say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

¹⁰ Heb. This is from the LORD.

¹¹ Matth. 21. 9.

Verse 12. "They compassed me about like bees."—Homer employs a similar figure, more expanded, to describe the congregation of a hostile multitude:

"As in the hovel, where the peasant milks
His kine in spring-time, when his pails are fill'd
Thick clouds of humming insects on the wing
Swarm all around him, so the Grecians swarm'd,
An unsumm'd multitude, o'er all the plain,
Bright-arm'd, high-crested, and athirst for war."

Iliad, ii. 530. COWPER.

"They are quenched as the fire of thorns."—This is very elliptical, and in the true genius of Hebrew poetry, which frequently leaves more than half of what is intended to be understood from what is expressed. The quenching the hostile array suddenly, as the most easily quenched fire, implies the previous comparison of such array to a fire. It is remarkable that, in a similar connection, Homer has such a comparison of an hostile army to fire, in which he expresses what David left to be understood, and omits (for he had no occasion to introduce) what David expresses, namely, the sudden quenching of the fire:

"As when devouring flames some forest seize
On the high mountains, splendid from afar,
The blaze appears, so, moving in the plain,
The steel-clad host innum'rous flash'd to heav'n."

Iliad, ii. 516. COWPER.

✠ ALEPH.

BLESSED are the ¹undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the LORD.

2 Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and that seek him with the whole heart.

3 They also do no iniquity: they walk in his ways.

4 Thou hast commanded us to keep thy precepts diligently.

5 O that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes!

6 Then shall I not be ashamed, when I have respect unto all thy commandments.

7 I will praise thee with uprightness of heart, when I shall have learned thy righteous judgments.

8 I will keep thy statutes: O forsake me not utterly.

² Heb. judgments of thy righteousness.

14 I have rejoiced in the way of thy testimonies, as much as in all riches.

15 I will meditate in thy precepts, and have respect unto thy ways.

16 I will delight myself in thy statutes: I will not forget thy word.

1 GIMEL.

17 Deal bountifully with thy servant, that I may live, and keep thy word.

18 ^oOpen thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law.

19 ⁱI am a stranger in the earth: hide not thy commandments from me.

20 My soul breaketh for the longing that it hath unto thy judgments at all times.

21 Thou hast rebuked the proud that are cursed, which do err from thy commandments.

22 Remove from me reproach and contempt; for I have kept thy testimonies.

23 Princes also did sit and speak against me: but thy servant did meditate in thy statutes.

24 Thy testimonies also are my delight and ^omy counsellors.

7 DALETH.

25 My soul cleaveth unto the dust: quicken thou me according to thy word.

26 I have declared my ways, and thou heardest me: ^oteach me thy statutes.

27 Make me to understand the way of thy precepts: so shall I talk of thy wondrous works.

28 My soul ^omelteth for heaviness: strengthen thou me according unto thy word.

29 Remove from me the way of lying: and grant me thy law graciously.

30 I have chosen the way of truth: thy judgments have I laid before me.

31 I have stuck unto thy testimonies: O LORD, put me not to shame.

32 I will run the way of thy commandments, when thou shalt enlarge my heart.

17 HE.

33 Teach me, O LORD, the way of thy statutes; and I shall keep it unto the end.

34 Give me understanding, and I shall keep thy law: yea, I shall observe it with my whole heart.

35 Make me to go in the path of thy commandments; for therein do I delight.

36 Incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not to covetousness.

37 ^oTurn away mine eyes from beholding vanity; and quicken thou me in thy way.

38 Stablish thy word unto thy servant, who is devoted to thy fear.

39 Turn away my reproach which I fear: for thy judgments are good.

40 Behold, I have longed after thy precepts: quicken me in thy righteousness.

1 VAU.

41 Let thy mercies come also unto me, O LORD, even thy salvation, according to thy word.

42 ^oSo shall I have wherewith to answer him that reproacheth me: for I trust in thy word.

43 And take not the word of truth utterly out of my mouth; for I have hoped in thy judgments.

44 So shall I keep thy law continually for ever and ever.

45 And I will walk ¹⁰at liberty: for I seek thy precepts.

46 I will speak of thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed.

47 And I will delight myself in thy commandments, which I have loved.

48 My hands also will I lift up unto thy commandments, which I have loved; and I will meditate in thy statutes.

1 ZAIN.

49 Remember the word unto thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to hope.

50 This is my comfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me.

51 The proud have had me greatly in derision: yet have I not declined from thy law.

52 I remembered thy judgments of old, O LORD; and have comforted myself.

53 Horror hath taken hold upon me because of the wicked that forsake thy law.

⁵ Heb. Reveal. ⁴ Gen. 47. 9. 1 Chron. 29. 16. Psal. 39. 12. Heb. 11. 13. ⁶ Heb. men of my counsel. ⁷ Heb. droppeth. ⁸ Heb. Make to pass. ⁹ Or, So shall I answer him that reproacheth me in a thing. ¹⁰ Heb. at large.

54 Thy statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage.

55 I have remembered thy name, O LORD, in the night, and have kept thy law.

56 This I had, because I kept thy precepts.

7 CHETH.

57 Thou art my portion, O LORD: I have said that I would keep thy words.

58 I intreated thy ¹¹favour with my whole heart: be merciful unto me according to thy word.

59 I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies.

60 I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments.

61 The ¹²bands of the wicked have robbed me: but I have not forgotten thy law.

62 At midnight I will rise to give thanks unto thee because of thy righteous judgments.

63 I am a companion of all them that fear thee, and of them that keep thy precepts.

64 The earth, O LORD, is full of thy mercy: teach me thy statutes.

10 TETH.

65 Thou hast dealt well with thy servant, O LORD, according unto thy word.

66 Teach me good judgment and knowledge: for I have believed thy commandments.

67 Before I was afflicted I went astray: but now have I kept thy word.

68 Thou art good, and doest good; teach me thy statutes.

69 The proud have forged a lie against me: but I will keep thy precepts with my whole heart.

70 Their heart is as fat as grease; but I delight in thy law.

71 It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy statutes.

72 ¹³The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver.

11 JOD.

73 Thy hands have made me and fashioned me: give me understanding, that I may learn thy commandments.

74 They that fear thee will be glad when they see me; because I have hoped in thy word.

75 I know, O LORD, that thy judgments are ¹⁴right, and that thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me.

76 Let, I pray thee, thy merciful kindness be ¹⁵for my comfort, according to thy word unto thy servant.

77 Let thy tender mercies come unto me, that I may live: for thy law is my delight.

78 Let the proud be ashamed; for they dealt perversely with me without a cause: but I will meditate in thy precepts.

79 Let those that fear thee turn unto me, and those that have known thy testimonies.

80 Let my heart be sound in thy statutes; that I be not ashamed.

12 CAPH.

81 My soul fainteth for thy salvation: but I hope in thy word.

82 Mine eyes fail for thy word, saying, When wilt thou comfort me?

83 For I am become like a bottle in the smoke; yet do I not forget thy statutes.

84 How many are the days of thy servant? when wilt thou execute judgment on them that persecute me?

85 The proud have digged pits for me, which are not after thy law.

86 All thy commandments are ¹⁶faithful: they persecute me wrongfully; help thou me.

87 They had almost consumed me upon earth; but I forsook not thy precepts.

88 Quicken me after thy lovingkindness; so shall I keep the testimony of thy mouth.

13 LAMED.

89 For ever, O LORD, thy word is settled in heaven.

90 Thy faithfulness is ¹⁷unto all generations: thou hast established the earth, and it ¹⁸abideth.

91 They continue this day according to thine ordinances: for all are thy servants.

I should then have perished in mine affliction.

93 I will never forget thy precepts: for with them thou hast quickened me.

94 I am thine, save me; for I have sought thy precepts.

95 The wicked have waited for me to destroy me: but I will consider thy testimonies.

96 I have seen an end of all perfection: but thy commandment is exceeding broad.

MEM.

97 O how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day.

98 Thou through thy commandments hast made me wiser than mine enemies: for "they are ever with me.

99 I have more understanding than all my teachers: for thy testimonies are my meditation.

100 I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts.

101 I have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep thy word.

102 I have not departed from thy judgments: for thou hast taught me.

103 ²⁰How sweet are thy words unto my ²¹taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth!

104 Through thy precepts I get understanding: therefore I hate every false way.

NUN.

105 Thy word is a ²²lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.

106 I have sworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments.

107 I am afflicted very much: quicken me, O LORD, according unto thy word.

108 Accept, I beseech thee, the freewill offerings of my mouth, O LORD, and teach me thy judgments.

109 My soul is continually in my hand: yet do I not forget thy law.

110 The wicked have laid a snare for me: yet I erred not from thy precepts.

111 Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever: for they are the rejoicing of my heart.

112 I have inclined mine heart ²³to perform thy statutes alway, even unto the end.

D SAMECH.

113 I hate vain thoughts: but thy law do I love.

114 Thou art my hiding place and my shield: I hope in thy word.

115 ²⁴Depart from me, ye evildoers: for I will keep the commandments of my God.

116 Uphold me according unto thy word, that I may live: and let me not be ashamed of my hope.

117 Hold thou me up, and I shall be safe: and I will have respect unto thy statutes continually.

118 Thou hast trodden down all them that err from thy statutes: for their deceit is falsehood.

119 Thou ²⁵puttest away all the wicked of the earth like dross: therefore I love thy testimonies.

120 My flesh trembleth for fear of thee; and I am afraid of thy judgments.

Y AIN.

121 I have done judgment and justice: leave me not to mine oppressors.

122 Be surety for thy servant for good: let not the proud oppress me.

123 Mine eyes fail for thy salvation, and for the word of thy righteousness.

124 Deal with thy servant according unto thy mercy, and teach me thy statutes.

125 I am thy servant; give me understanding, that I may know thy testimonies.

126 It is time for thee, LORD, to work: for they have made void thy law.

127 ²⁶Therefore I love thy commandments above gold; yea, above fine gold.

128 Therefore I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right; and I hate every false way.

D PE.

129 Thy testimonies are wonderful: therefore doth my soul keep them.

130 The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple.

PSALM CXIX.—This very remarkable psalm is generally admitted to have been written by David; and from its length and very artificial construction, we may infer with Bishop Patrick, that he was “in a very sedate condition, under no extraordinary motions, when he composed this psalm, but quietly considered things as they were represented to his remembrance.” The construction of the psalm is, that it is divided into as many parts as there are letters in the Hebrew alphabet: each of these parts consists of eight verses, and every verse begins with that letter from which the section takes its name. Thus the initial letter of each verse in the first section is aleph (א), in the second beth (ב), and so on. Thus there are altogether eight initial repetitions of every letter which the Hebrew alphabet contains. For this reason the psalm is, in the Masora, styled, ‘The Great Alphabet.’ The intention of this arrangement obviously was to facilitate the labour of those who learned the psalm by heart, or who wished to refer to particular verses, which would otherwise have been a matter of some difficulty in so long a psalm, consisting for the most part of unconnected sentences.

It is further remarkable in this psalm, that there are not more than two or three verses in it in which there is not some word or other signifying the law of God. Ten different terms, correctly rendered in our version, are employed for this purpose, the law, the testimonies, the statutes, the commandments, the judgments, the word, the ways, the precepts, the righteousness, and the truth of God. Sometimes two of these terms occur in the same verse.

Verse 70. “Their heart is as fat as grease.”—Fatness of heart is used to express the insensibility, dullness, or sensuality of those feelings or affections of which the heart is considered the seat. There is much propriety in this as a figure, if, as physiologists inform us, the lean, membranous parts of our bodily frame are the only sensitive ones.

83. “Like a bottle in the smoke.”—This doubtless refers to a leathern bottle, of kid or goat-skin. The peasantry of Asia keep many articles, both dry and liquid, in such bottles, which, for security, are suspended from the roof or hung against the walls of their humble dwellings. Here they soon become quite black with smoke; for as, in the dwellings of the peasantry, there are seldom any chimneys, and the smoke can only escape through an aperture in the roof, or by the door, the apartment is full of dense smoke whenever a fire is kindled in it. And in those nights and days, when the smokiness of the hovels in which we daily rested during a winter’s journey in Persia, Armenia, and Turkey, seemed to make the cold and weariness of actual travel a relief, we had ample occasion to observe the peculiar blackness of such skin vessels, arising from the manner in which substances offering a surface of this sort, receive the full influence of the smoke, and detain the minute particles of soot which rest upon them. When such vessels do not contain liquids, and are not quite filled by the solids which they hold, they contract a shrunk and shrivelled appearance, to which the Psalmist may also possibly allude as well as to the blackness. But we presume that the leading idea refers to the latter circumstance, as in the East blackness has an opposite signification to that felicitous meaning of whiteness which we have explained in the note to Psalm lxviii. 14. Perhaps a contrast is intended between such skin bottles and the rich vessels of gold and silver employed in the palaces of kings.

103. “How sweet are thy words unto my taste!”—To characterise words of instruction or affection by the quality of sweetness, and, superlatively, by the sweetness of honey, is still very common in the East.

136. “Rivers of waters run down mine eyes.”—The Orientals are in general very copious weepers; and this strong hyperbole is still much employed among them to express the highest degree of lamenting grief.

148. “The night watches.”—The Hebrews divided the natural day into three portions—morning, noon, and evening. These are mentioned by David as hours or times of prayer. The night also was divided into three parts, called “watches.” Those are mentioned indefinitely by the Psalmist; but in Lament. ii. 19, we read of the first or beginning watches; in Judg. vii. 19, of the middle watch; and in Exod. xiv. 24, of the morning watch. In Homer and the early Greek writers there are references to a similar division of the night. But, afterwards, the strictness of military discipline occasioned the introduction of a fourth night watch among the Greeks and Romans, from whom it was ultimately borrowed by the Jews. Hence we read of “the fourth watch of the night” in the New Testament (Matth. xiv. 25), and the four are mentioned together in Mark xiii. 35. The precise beginning and ending of these four watches is thus determined by Dr. Hales, to whose elaborate work we may refer for more detailed information in this matter.

“1. Οψε, the late, began at sunset, and ended with the third hour of the night, including the evening-dawn, or twilight. It was also called οψια ὥρα, eventide, Mark xi. 11; or simply οψια, evening, John xx. 19, &c.—2. Μεσονυκτιον, the midnight, lasted from the third hour till midnight.—3. Αλεκτοροφωνια, the cock-crowing, lasted from midnight till the third hour after, or the ninth hour of the night. It included the two cock-crowings, with the second or principal of which it ended.—4. Πρωι, the early, lasted from the ninth to the twelfth hour of the night, or sunrise, including the morning-dawn, or twilight. It is also called πρωια, morning, or morning-tide, ὥρα being understood, John xviii. 28, &c.”

TITLE, "Song of degrees."—Fifteen psalms bear this title, which has given occasion to an immense quantity of discussion, an able analysis of which may be found in Calmet's 'Dissertation sur les quinze Psaumes Graduels.' The word rendered "degrees" (מַעְלִיֹּת) implies, radically, ascents, and is susceptible of shades of meaning which have respectively been taken to support various theories. "Degrees" is most usually given, and from its indefinite character is suited to the obscurity in which the subject is involved. Some call them "Songs of the steps," and suppose that they were sung on the Temple steps; and their nearly uniform shortness has been alleged in favour of this opinion. Others call them "songs of ascent, or ascension," and suppose they were intended to be sung either on ascending the hill upon which the Temple stood; or else, at intervals, during the journey which the people made to Jerusalem three times in every year. But others, who similarly translate, think that the occasion on which they were employed, was during the journey of the returning captives from Babylon to Jerusalem. Calmet, after stating numerous alternatives of explanation, and characterising many of them as "vaines et frivoles conjectures," takes up this last as the most probable opinion. It seems indeed clear, that at least some of them must be understood with reference to that occasion; but it does not necessarily follow that they were all written for it. It is possible that some of the psalms were originally composed to be sung by the Jews in their three annual journeys to Jerusalem; and these, being judged by the returning captives suitable to their longer journey, were appropriated to the occasion, with the addition of some other psalms bearing a more distinct reference to their own actual circumstances. There are some, however, who reject this line of explanation altogether, and understand that the word in question, whether rendered degrees, ascents, or elevations, has no other reference than to some circumstance, common to all the fifteen psalms, in the versification or the music—and particularly, perhaps, to the uniform or gradually elevated voice with which they were sung. Some others consider the title as one of excellence, applied either to the music or the words, equivalent, in fact, to "an exalted song." There are other opinions: but these are all we feel it necessary to state on a subject involved in great uncertainty, and concerning which it is perhaps now impossible to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion.

It will appear from the preceding statement that authorities must necessarily differ as to the time and the author, or authors, of these psalms. The question of time is involved in that of author: we have therefore only to state that some ascribe the whole of them to David, and conclude that those which appear to refer to the Babylonish captivity were composed in the spirit of prophecy. Some have attributed them to Solomon, on the same principle, and apparently because the 127th psalm bears his name. Others conceive that they were all composed on occasion of the return from Captivity. A middle opinion seems more probable; which is, that some were composed by David, others by Solomon, and a few perhaps by other writers who lived afterwards, before the Captivity; and that a further addition was made by one or more of the prophets (Ezra, Haggai, or Zechariah) after the edict had been issued for the restoration of the Jews to the city of their fathers. These observations may serve as a general introduction to the whole fifteen "songs of degrees."

Verse 4. "Coals of juniper."—See the note on 2 Kings xix. 4. It would appear that this shrub burnt with more intense flame, or that its embers continued longer to glow, than most other kinds of wood used for fuel by the Hebrews.

5. "Sojourn in Mesech. . . dwell in the tents of Kedar."—Meshech was a son of Japhet, whose descendants are supposed to have settled between the Caspian and Black Seas, and the Kedarites were a people of Arabia. As it seems difficult to suppose that the former nation can be here intended, in a literal sense, even with respect to the captives at Babylon, and much less to David; some suppose that this Meshech was a part of Arabia, the nomades of which lived in tents covered with skins, as the word implies a skin in Chaldee and Syriac. Others, feeling the same objection, relinquish the proper name, and recur to one of the significations of the word, implying extension or prolongation, and render, "Woe is me! for my sojourning is prolonged." As to Kedar, it does not appear that either David or the captives dwelt among the Arabians, although it seems that the former remained on the skirts of Arabia, at one period of his wanderings; therefore some also give up the word as a proper name, and, with reference to its primary signification of blackness, as figuratively expressive of a depressed and sorrowful condition, translate, "in the tents of mourning." The proper names may, however, be retained, if we understand that there is merely a figurative comparison of the condition which the psalm describes, to that of one who dwells among a wandering people, averse to peace, and living by rapine and plunder. However, we will suggest another consideration, without pretending to think it conclusive. This is, that possibly some of the captives of the first Captivity (of Israel) may have been transported to the northern country, near the sources of the river Cyrus (Kur), denoted by the word Meshech; while it is certain, on the other hand, that Babylonia, and indeed all the country eastward to the Tigris, was, and is to this day, considered part of Arabia, and continues to bear the name of Irak-Arabi. Thus understood, therefore, the sojournings in Meshech and Kedar might be supposed to refer to the captive condition of the two great sections of the seed of Abraham.

PSALM CXXI.

The great safety of the godly, who put their trust in God's protection.

A Song of degrees.

¹ I WILL lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help.

2 My help cometh from the LORD, which made heaven and earth.

3 He will not suffer thy foot to be moved: he that keepeth thee will not slumber.

4 Behold, he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep.

5 The LORD is thy keeper: the LORD is thy shade upon thy right hand.

6 The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night.

7 The LORD shall preserve thee from all evil: he shall preserve thy soul.

8 The LORD shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore.

¹ Or, Shall I lift up mine eyes to the hills? whence should my help come?

² Psal. 124. 8.

Verse 6. "The sun shall not smite thee by day."—We have already had occasion to notice the effect of the powerful sunbeams of the East, as manifested in what is called a sun-stroke. This is probably here alluded to. Those on whom this visitation falls sometimes perish instantly, others die soon from its effects, some live on in a state of idiocy—and there are comparatively few who survive and perfectly recover.

"Nor the moon by night."—The meaning of the psalmist is not very clear. His general intention obviously is to describe the Lord as protecting his people from the calamities of the day and of the night, the sun and the moon being perhaps mentioned, poetically, merely as the presiding luminaries of each season. But if, in conformity with popular opinion, he ascribes deleterious influences on the human body to the moonbeams, we may observe that this belief is to this day almost universal in the East. We have already had several occasions to notice the custom of sleeping in the open air during the nights of summer. Where the air is dry, and night dews do not fall, this custom is perfectly safe; but where the night air is moist, or where the cold of the night is too strongly contrasted with the heat of the day, bad consequences often follow, which are almost invariably attributed to the moon. For this reason people are always careful, even in places where the nights are dry, to cover their heads and faces when they sleep in the open air, to exclude the malign influence of the beams. Although the moon thus gets the blame of all the evils produced by the dews and the cold night air, it may be well worth inquiry whether some foundation may not exist for an opinion which describes the moonbeams as injuriously affecting those who lie passively exposed to them. As Europeans do not sleep in the open air, their experience affords no data for a satisfactory solution of the enquiry: and for ourselves, we can only say that we have slept full in the moonbeams, during whole summers, without any bad effect, although we neglected the Oriental precaution of covering our face. But this was in one of the driest countries of Western Asia.

4 Whither the tribes go up, the tribes of the LORD, unto the testimony of Israel, to give thanks unto the name of the LORD.

5 For there 'are set thrones of judgment, the thrones of the house of David.

6 Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: they shall prosper that love thee.

7 Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces.

8 For my brethren and companions' sakes, I will now say, Peace be within thee.

9 Because of the house of the LORD our God I will seek thy good.

PSALM CXXII.—This psalm very strongly favours the opinion, that at least some of the "songs of degrees" were originally composed for the periodical journeys of the tribes to Jerusalem.

PSALM CXXIII.

1 The godly profess their confidence in God, 3 and pray to be delivered from contempt.

A Song of degrees.

UNTO thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwellest in the heavens.

2 Behold, as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress; so our eyes wait upon the LORD our God, until that he have mercy upon us.

3 Have mercy upon us, O LORD, have mercy upon us: for we are exceedingly filled with contempt.

4 Our soul is exceedingly filled with the scorning of those that are at ease, and with the contempt of the proud.

Verse 2. "The eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters."—It is the custom in the East to convey orders to attendants or officers by slight but well understood motions of the hands or fingers. Thus a person while entertaining guests or visitors, and conversing with them, will give directions to the attendants by a very slight motion, which is seldom noticed by the strangers, as he does not interrupt the conversation or make any marked movement, not even to look towards those for whom his intimation is intended, as he well knows that their attention is steadily directed to the hands of their master. Thus a despot has been known, while in company, to convey silent orders for the decapitation of scores of persons, by a slight horizontal movement of his hand. The hands are also employed, by clapping them together, to summon the servants who may be in waiting outside, but not in immediate attendance—as there are no domestic bells in the East.

PSALM CXXIV.

The church blesseth God for a miraculous deliverance.

A Song of degrees of David.

IF it had not been the LORD who was on our side, now may Israel say;

2 If it had not been the LORD who was on our side, when men rose up against us:

3 Then they had swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us:

4 Then the waters had overwhelmed us, the stream had gone over our soul:

5 Then the proud waters had gone over our soul.

6 Blessed be the LORD, who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth.

7 Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken, and we are escaped.

8 'Our help is in the name of the LORD, who made heaven and earth.

PSALM CXXV.

1 The safety of such as trust in God. 4 A prayer for the godly, and against the wicked.

A Song of degrees.

THEY that trust in the LORD shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever.

2 As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the LORD is round about his people from henceforth even for ever.

3 For the rod of 'the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous; lest the righteous put forth their hands unto iniquity.

4 Do good, O LORD, unto those that be good, and to them that are upright in their hearts.

5 As for such as turn aside unto their crooked ways, the LORD shall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity: but peace shall be upon Israel.

PSALM CXXVI.

1 The church, celebrating her incredible return out of captivity, 4 prayeth for, and prophesieth the good success thereof.

A Song of degrees.

WHEN the LORD 'turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream.

2 Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing: then said they among the heathen,

The LORD ²hath done great things for them.

3 The LORD hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad.

4 Turn again our captivity, O LORD, as the streams in the south.

² Heb. hath magnified to do with them.

5 They that sow in tears shall reap in ³joy.

6 He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing ⁴precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

⁴ Or, seed basket.

Verse 6. "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed," &c.—What is meant by this is explained in the preceding verse. If it be more than a current proverbial expression, it probably refers to the dangers which attend agricultural labours, particularly the sowing and the harvest, in countries so unsettled as Judea appears to have been when the captive Jews returned thither. In neighbourhoods infested by the wandering herdsmen, who neither sow nor reap themselves, and obtain the corn which they require by depredations or exactions upon the cultivators of the soil, it is truly a dangerous undertaking to carry forth the "precious seed" to sow the field. It is carried from the town or the village with anxiety and fear; and very often the presence of armed men is found necessary to protect the conveyance of the seed and the operation of sowing. The same danger and dread again occur at the season of harvest; and he is counted happy who has been enabled to sow his seed and reap his harvest in peace. None in this country can imagine the continual anxiety which is felt in unsettled or exposed neighbourhoods in the East, about the safety of the corn in all circumstances, and the extraordinary expedients which are resorted to for its protection. It is very often deposited in pits or dry cisterns, very carefully concealed: and on one occasion, when in the monastery of Eutch Kelesia in Armenia, near Mount Ararat, the writer saw the corn belonging to the establishment heaped up in the church, which is a building highly venerated, and a place of pilgrimage to the Armenians. It was placed there, as the monks explained to us, that it might be, as they conceived, under the more special protection of God; and partly in the hope, that should the Koords break into the monastery to look for corn, the reputed sanctity of the church would deter them from intruding to carry off that which lay there.

PSALM CXXVII.

1 The virtue of God's blessing. 3 Good children are his gift.

A Song of degrees ¹for Solomon.

EXCEPT the LORD build the house, they labour in vain ²that build it: except the LORD keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain.

2 It is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrows: for so he giveth his beloved sleep.

² Heb. that are builders of it in it.

³ Heb. hath filled his quiver with them.

⁴ Or, shall subdue, as Psal. 18. 47, or, destroy.

3 Lo, children are an heritage of the LORD: and the fruit of the womb is his reward.

4 As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man; so are children of the youth.

5 Happy is the man that ³hath his quiver full of them: they shall not be ashamed, but they ⁴shall speak with the enemies in the gate.

PSALM CXXVIII.

The sundry blessings which follow them that fear God.

A Song of degrees.

BLESSED is every one that feareth the LORD; that walketh in his ways.

2 For thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands: happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee.

3 Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine by the sides of thine house: thy children like olive plants round about thy table.

4 Behold, that thus shall the man be blessed that feareth the LORD.

5 The LORD shall bless thee out of Zion: and thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem all the days of thy life.

6 Yea, thou shalt see thy children's children, and peace upon Israel.

Verse 3. "Fruitful vine by the sides of thine house... olive plants round about thy table."—We do not remember to have met with a single instance, in the East, of vines trained against the walls of a house, or of olives near or about a house. Neither have we read of such instances. The passage doubtless derives its figures from the fertility of the vine, and from the appearance of the olive, or the order in which olive trees are planted. The construction would then be: "Thy wife, in the sides (interior apartments) of thy house, shall be as the fruitful vine; and thy children, round about thy table, like olive plants."

PSALM CXXIX.

1 An exhortation to praise God for saving Israel in their great afflictions. 5 The haters of the church are cursed.

A Song of degrees.

1 MANY a time have they afflicted me from my youth, may Israel now say:

2 Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth: yet they have not prevailed against me.

3 The plowers plowed upon my back: they made long their furrows.

4 The LORD is righteous: he hath cut asunder the cords of the wicked.

5 Let them all be confounded and turned back that hate Zion.

6 Let them be as the grass upon the house-tops, which withereth afore it groweth up:

7 Wherewith the mower filleth not his hand; nor he that bindeth sheaves his bosom.

8 Neither do they which go by say, The blessing of the LORD be upon you: we bless you in the name of the LORD.

Verse 3. "Plowed upon my back...made long their furrows."—The apparent harshness of this figure will disappear if it be considered to refer to severe public scourgings. To those who have been so unhappy as to witness such scourgings, this allusion will then appear most expressive. The long weals or wounds which the scourge leaves at each stroke may most aptly be compared either to furrows or (as the original admits) to the ridges between the furrows. The furrows made by the plough in the East are very superficial, and (although straight) are usually carried to a great length, the fields not being enclosed as in this country.

6. "The grass upon the housetops."—The Orientals generally endeavour to cover their flat roofs with some compost, which shall at the same time be impervious to the wet and prevent vegetation. But it frequently happens that the local want or the cost of proper materials, prevents these objects from being fully realized, particularly in the humbler class of houses. But still the attempt, so far as local or individual means allow, is generally so far successful that, although grass will arise in the tufts and patches after the roof has been partially saturated by the rains, the want of depth of soil, with the mixture and preparation it has received, renders the growth feeble and sickly, and it soon perishes when the return of drought and heat has absorbed the very superficial moisture to which it owes its existence.

8. "Neither do they which go by say, The blessing of the Lord be upon you: we bless you in the name of the Lord."—Precisely the same customs of salutation which are here indicated still prevail in Mohammedan Asia. Nearly the same form of words, implying the blessing and peace of God, is retained, and the neglect to give the salutation is still an indignity and insult.

Mohammed did not, as is commonly supposed, establish the existing usages in this matter. The Scripture proves the contrary. But he made imperative, as practical duties of religion, what had been mere matters of usage and spontaneous civility. It appears also from Imran-bin-Husain, that he made some change in the previous formulary; for that authority says: "In the days of ignorance we used to Salâm by these words: 'May God brighten our eyes by thee,' and 'May your morning be happy.' Then when we became Muslemans, we were forbidden these words." The substituted forms and existing usages are very well stated by Mr. Lane in his recent work on the 'Modern Egyptians' (vol. i. p. 250): "Several of their (the Mohammedans') most common usages are founded upon precepts of their religion. Among these is their custom of greeting each other with the salutation of 'Peace be on you!' To which the reply is, 'On you be peace, and the mercy of God, and his blessings!' This salutation is never to be addressed by a Mooslim to one whom he knows to be of another religion, nor vice versâ. The giving it by one Mooslim to another is a duty, but one that may be omitted without sin: the returning it is absolutely obligatory... Should a Mooslim however thus salute, by mistake, a person not of the same faith, the latter should not return it; and the former, on discovering his mistake, generally revokes his salutation; so also he sometimes does if a Mooslim refuse to return his salutation; usually saying, 'Peace be on us, and on [all] the right worshippers of God.'"

The present text shows the manifestation of degradation and insult by either the omission of any salutation, or by one different from the customary formularies, as illustrated by the above extract. We subjoin a few sentences from the book of Mohammedan traditions (Mischat ul Masabih), which will show the importance attached to the Salâm, and explain the manner in which the Arabians were instructed to treat the Jews. "Omar said, a man asked his majesty (Mohammed), 'What quality is best for a Musleman?' He said, 'Giving food to others, and returning the salutation of acquaintance or strangers.'" Mohammed is also reported by Abuhurairah to have said, "You shall not enter into paradise until you believe; and you will not complete your faith till you love one another; and that is, making Salâm to friends and strangers." Again, "The person riding must make Salâm to him on foot first; and he that goes along to a person who is sitting down; and a small party must Salâm to a large party; and the young to the old." And further, "Do not Salâm first to Jews and Christians; and when one of them meets you in a road, tell him to go on one side." He states also, that the Jews, out of spite to Mohammedans, and under the covert of equivocal or imperfect utterance, were in the habit of saying, Al-sâmo-âlaica ("Death unto you!"), instead of Al-salâmo-alaica ("Peace be upon you"); and he tells his followers to reply, O-âlaicum ("Be the same to you"). Mohammed's wife, Aayeshah, relates that when once saluted, as above, by a party of Jews, he gave the answer intimated; but that she herself, less patient, answered, "Al-sâmo-âlaicum, and may God curse and be angry with you." She adds, "Then his highness said, 'Be mild, O Aayeshah! and make a point of being kind, and withhold yourself from speaking harshly.' I said, 'Did you not hear what they said?' His majesty answered, 'Did you not hear what I said? I answered them by what they said, and my prayer for them will be accepted, but not theirs for me.'" We will conclude with a strikingly illustrative passage. Mohammed had said, "Refrain from sitting by the roads;" and the account goes on—"The companions said, 'O messenger of God! certainly we must sit in roads, because we converse with one another.' His highness then said, 'If you do not desist from sitting in the roads, give the road its right.' The companions asked, 'What is the right of the road?'"

He said, 'It is, not to look at people passing; and to remove anything inconvenient to passengers, as stones and thorns; and to answer the Salâm of people passing; and to tell people to act agreeably to the laws; and to hinder them from that which is unlawful; and to show them the road.' This last extract illustrates several customs of the road mentioned in Scripture.

PSALM CXXX.

¹ The psalmist professeth his hope in prayer, 5 and his patience in hope. 7 He exhorteth Israel to hope in God.

A Song of degrees.

Verse 2. "Went down to the skirts of his garments."—See the notes on Exod. xxx. 25, and Levit. viii. 12.

3. "Dew of Hermon."—This Hermon is not supposed to be the same as that of Lebanon, mentioned in the note to Deut. iii. 8; but another—the same that is associated with Tabor in Ps. lxxxix. 12. It is described by Buckingham as a range of hills, running for several miles east and west, and forming the southern boundary of the plain of Esdraelon, in which Mount Tabor is situated. Speaking of this Hermon, Maundrell says:—"We were sufficiently instructed by experience what the psalmist means by 'the dew of Hermon,' our tents being as wet with it as if it had rained all night." ('Journey,' p. 57, edit. 1707.)

Verse 7. "Lightnings for the rain."—This probably refers to the regular rainy season of autumn. This comes on towards the latter end of September, in which month there is lightning almost every night; and when this is seen in the western hemisphere, accompanied by thunder, the very near approach of rain is considered certain.

PSALM CXXXVI.—This psalm is, in substance, very nearly the same as the preceding; and, although the author cannot be distinctly determined, there is sufficient probability in the common opinion which ascribes them to David. They appear to have been both intended for use on stated and recurring occasions.

PSALM CXXXVII.—This psalm was of course written during the Captivity, and, as it would seem, not long after the arrival of the captives at Babylon. It expresses very strongly the feelings of a people who had still fresh in their recollection the ruin of their glorious city, the profanation and destruction of their Temple, and the scenes of blood and rapine which had rendered their own homes desolate. It shows how acutely they, captives in the monotonous and sultry plains of Babylonia, regretted their own pleasant land—the land of the olive and the vine (which Babylonia is not)—and their own possessions and comforts there. Their condition must have been very miserable in the first years of their captivity, before their minds were subdued to their depressed condition, and before that condition became itself somewhat ameliorated, as appears to have been the case ultimately; and this was partly, perhaps, through the favour of the Babylonian kings to Daniel and his three friends, and the power in the state which they acquired, and through which it pleased God to evince that his mercy had not wholly departed from the house of Israel.

Verse 2. "Hanged our harps upon the willows."—On the 5 If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning.

6 If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above 'my chief joy.

7 Remember, O LORD, 'the children of Edom in the day of Jerusalem; who said, 'Rase it, rase it, even to the foundation thereof.

8 O daughter of Babylon, who art to be 'destroyed; happy shall he be, 'that rewardeth thee as thou hast served us.

9 Happy shall he be, that taketh and 'dasheth thy little ones against ¹⁰the stones.

banks of the Babylonian rivers (say the Euphrates and Tigris) there are no woods or forests, or any considerable trees besides the cultivated date-palm. But these rivers are in some parts rather extensively lined with a growth of tall shrubs and bushes, interspersed with some small, and a few middling trees, among which the willow is at this day the most frequent and remarkable.

5. "Let my right hand forget her cunning."—There is a striking and appropriate point in this, which has been overlooked. It is, that, as it is customary for people in the East to swear by their possessions, so one who has no possessions—who is poor and destitute, and has nothing of recognised value in the world—swears by his right hand, which is his sole stake in society, and by the "cunning" of which he earns his daily bread. Hence the common Arabic proverb (given by Burckhardt, No. 550) reflecting on the change of demeanour produced by improved circumstances:—"He was wont to swear 'by the cutting off of his right hand!' He now swears, 'by the giving of money to the poor.'"

PSALM CXXXVIII.

1 David praiseth God for the truth of his word. 4 He prophesieth that the kings of the earth shall praise God. 7 He professeth his confidence in God.

A Psalm of David.

I WILL praise thee with my whole heart:

'before the gods will I sing praise unto thee.

2 I will worship toward thy holy temple, and praise thy name for thy lovingkindness and for thy truth: for thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name.

3 In the day when I cried thou answeredst me, and strengthenedst me with strength in my soul.

4 All the kings of the earth shall praise thee, O LORD, when they hear the words of thy mouth.

5 Yea, they shall sing in the ways of the LORD: for great is the glory of the LORD.

6 Though the LORD be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off.

7 Though I walk in the midst of trouble, thou wilt revive me: thou shalt stretch forth thine hand against the wrath of mine enemies, and thy right hand shall save me.

8 The LORD will perfect that which concerneth me: thy mercy, O LORD, endureth for ever: forsake not the works of thine own hands.

"Whither shall I go from thy spirit?... If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there."—Verses 7, 8.

GUIDO.

PSALM CXXXIX.

1 David praiseth God for his allseeing providence, 17 and for his infinite mercies. 19 He defileth the wicked. 23 He prayeth for sincerity.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

O LORD, thou hast searched me, and known me.

2 Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising, thou understandest my thought afar off.

3 Thou 'compassest my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways.

4 For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O LORD, thou knowest it altogether.

5 Thou hast beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand upon me.

6 Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it.

7 Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?

8 ¹If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there.

9 If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea;

10 Even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me.

11 If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me.

12 Yea, ²the darkness ³hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: ⁴the darkness and the light are both alike to thee.

13 For thou hast possessed my reins: thou hast covered me in my mother's womb.

14 I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: marvellous are thy works; and that my soul knoweth ⁵'right well.

15 My ⁶'substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth.

16 Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book ⁷'all my members were written, ⁸'which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them.

17 ⁹How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them!

18 If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand: when I awake, I am still with thee.

19 Surely thou wilt slay the wicked, O God: depart from me therefore, ye bloody men.

20 For they speak against thee wickedly, and thine enemies take thy name in vain.

21 Do not I hate them, O LORD, that hate thee? and am not I grieved with those that rise up against thee?

22 I hate them with perfect hatred: I count them mine enemies.

23 Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts:

24 And see if there be any ¹⁰'wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting.

⁷ Heb. all of them.

⁸ Or, what days they should be fashioned.

⁹ Psal. 40. 5.

¹⁰ Heb. way of pain, or, grief.

Verse 9. "The wings of the morning."—This probably refers to the rapidity with which the morning rises to perfect day, and which is particularly marked in the East, where the morning and evening twilights are very short. On the same idea, Aurora, or the morning, was represented with wings by the European ancients. We imagine this general idea to be preferable to the common one, which supposes that the rays of the rising sun are called "the wings of the morning," from their inconceivable rapidity. The essential meaning is however the same.

15. "Curiously wrought."—The word thus rendered is that which is usually employed to describe embroidery or designing in needlework. Whether the image implied in the term be taken directly from the work of the embroiderer, or refers generally, by a derived figure, to any work of a complicated and involved nature, but furnishing beautiful results—it may be difficult to determine. Ainsworth at once renders, "embroidered;" and Lowth, who translates, equivalently, "wrought with a needle," adds, "Whoever observes this, (in truth he will not be able to observe it in the common translations,) and at the same time reflects upon the wonderful mechanism of the human body, the various implications of the veins, arteries, fibres, and membranes, and the undescribable texture of the whole fabric, will feel the beauty and gracefulness of this well-adapted metaphor." Many parts of this fine hymn, which celebrate the wisdom of God in the organization of the human frame, might receive very effective illustration from physiological statements: but these are not usually furnished, nor does it fall within our own line of illustration to supply them.

PSALM CXL.

1 David prayeth to be delivered from Saul and Doeg. 8 He prayeth against them. 12 He comforteth himself by confidence in God.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

DELIVER me, O LORD, from the evil man: preserve me from the ¹'violent man;

2 Which imagine mischiefs in their heart; continually are they gathered together for war.

3 They have sharpened their tongues like a serpent; ²'adders' poison is under their lips. Selah.

² Psal. 58. 4. Rom. 3. 13.

4 Keep me, O LORD, from the hands of the wicked; preserve me from the violent man; who have purposed to overthrow my goings.

5 The proud have hid a snare for me, and cords; they have spread a net by the wayside; they have set gins for me. Selah.

6 I said unto the LORD, Thou art my God: hear the voice of my supplications, O LORD.

7 O God the LORD, the strength of my salvation, thou hast covered my head in the day of battle.

8 Grant not, O LORD, the desires of the wicked: further not his wicked device; ³lest they exalt themselves. Selah.

9 As for the head of those that compass me about, let the mischief of their own lips cover them.

10 Let burning coals fall upon them: let them be cast into the fire; into deep pits, that they rise not up again.

11 Let not ⁴an evil speaker be established in the earth: evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him.

12 I know that the LORD will maintain the cause of the afflicted, and the right of the poor.

13 Surely the righteous shall give thanks unto thy name: the upright shall dwell in thy presence.

³ Or, let them not be exalted.

⁴ Heb. a man of tongue.

⁵ Or, an evil speaker, a wicked man of violence, be established in the earth: let him be hunted to his overthrow.

Verse 3. "Adders' poison."—The word rendered "adder," אַשְׁכּוּב akshub, occurs here only; and it is perhaps impossible to determine what species is intended. As the word, in its proper signification, seems to express coiling, or bending back—an act common to most serpents, the name has perhaps no determinate reference; or it may be another name for the pe-then, mentioned under Job xx.; which seems also to have been the opinion of the Seventy, as they render both words by ἀσπίς, and are followed by the Vulgate (aspis).

As to the poison, it will be observed, that in the venomous serpents there is a gland under the eye secreting the poisonous matter, which is conveyed, in a small tube or canal, to the end of a fang which lies concealed at the roof of the mouth. This fang is moveable at the pleasure of the serpent, and is protruded when it is about to strike at an antagonist. The situation of this poison, which is, in a manner, behind the upper lip, gives great propriety to the expression, "adders' poison is under their lips." The usage of the Hebrew language renders it by no means improbable that the fang itself is called לָשׁוֹן lashon, "a tongue," in the present text: and a serpent might then be said to sharpen its tongue, when, in preparing to strike, it protruded its fangs. We do not see any explanation by which a more consistent meaning may be extracted from the expression here employed.

PSALM CXLI.

1 David prayeth that his suit may be acceptable, 3 his conscience sincere, 7 and his life safe from snares.

A Psalm of David.

LORD, I cry unto thee: make haste unto me; give ear unto my voice, when I cry unto thee.

2 Let my prayer be ¹set forth before thee as incense; and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice.

3 Set a watch, O LORD, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips.

4 Incline not my heart to any evil thing, to practise wicked works with men that work iniquity: and let me not eat of their dainties.

5 ²Let the righteous smite me; it shall be a kindness: and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head: for yet my prayer also shall be in their calamities.

6 When their judges are overthrown in stony places, they shall hear my words; for they are sweet.

7 Our bones are scattered at the grave's mouth, as when one cutteth and cleaveth wood upon the earth.

8 But mine eyes are unto thee, O God the Lord: in thee is my trust; ³leave not my soul destitute.

9 Keep me from the snares which they have laid for me, and the gins of the workers of iniquity.

10 Let the wicked fall into their own nets, whilst that I withal ⁴escape.

² Or, Let the righteous smite me kindly, and reprove me; let not their precious oil break my head, &c.

³ Heb. make not my soul bare.

⁴ Heb. pass over.

PSALM CXLII.—This psalm appears to have been composed by David, during that life of banishment and trouble which the hostility of Saul obliged him to lead.

Verse 2. "Incense... evening sacrifice."—This verse probably expresses David's desire that, being precluded from his customary attendance at the regular ordinances of religion, his simple prayer might be accepted, the same as though he had been present at the offering of the morning incense or the evening sacrifice. The variation of phrase expresses a reference to the first and last daily acts of public worship. For the people prayed without, while the incense was offered in the holy place. In the morning this took place before the sacrifice was laid upon the altar of burnt offering; but in the evening (at the ninth hour), after the sacrifice was laid upon the altar; and then, consequently, the sacrifice and the incense were at the same time offered. See Lightfoot's 'Temple Service,' c. ix. sect. 5.

"The lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice."—At the morning and evening sacrifice the priests blessed the people in the form of words in Num. vi. 24—26; and, as they did this, they lifted their hands high above their heads, with their fingers spread out. This uplifting of the hands was on some particular days omitted at the evening service, but never in the morning. See Lightfoot, as above.

5. "Let the righteous smite me," &c.—This verse has greatly exercised the ingenuity of interpreters. The Septuagint and other ancient versions generally seem to understand it to express that the reproofs and smittings of the righteous were better than the rich and fragrant oils of the ungodly. We are rather disposed to understand, as in our version, that the intention is to affirm that the corrections of the righteous are, from their good intentions and beneficial effects, as excellent oils, which do not wound but heal the head on which they fall. Mr. Roberts informs us that in India common correction is usually administered on the crown of the head. Then, on the other hand, to anoint the head is a common practice; and there are certain oils which are believed, by external application, to have a most salutary effect on the head, in the cure or prevention of the complaints to which it is subject. Now from a combination of the ideas resulting from these usages arise certain popular forms of expression precisely equivalent to that which appears in the present text, as, to quote no more, "My master has been beating my head, but it has been good oil for me." The Arabs have a proverb of equivalent meaning: "The blow that is profitable does not hurt the neck."

PSALM CXLII.

David sheweth that in his trouble all his comfort was in prayer unto God.

¹Maschil of David; A Prayer when he was in the cave.

I CRIED unto the LORD with my voice; with my voice unto the LORD did I make my supplication.

2 I poured out my complaint before him; I shewed before him my trouble.

3 When my spirit was overwhelmed within me, then thou knewest my path. In the way wherein I walked have they privily laid a snare for me.

4 ²I looked on my right hand, and beheld, but there was no man that would know me: refuge ³failed me: 'no man cared for my soul.

5 I cried unto thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my refuge and my portion in the land of the living.

6 Attend unto my cry; for I am brought very low: deliver me from my persecutors; for they are stronger than I.

7 Bring my soul out of prison, that I may praise thy name: the righteous shall compass me about; for thou shalt deal bountifully with me.

¹ Or, A Psalm of David, giving instruction.

² Or, Look on the right hand, and see.

³ Heb. perished from me.

⁴ Heb. no man sought after my soul.

TITLE, "The cave."—In the history we read particularly of two caves in which David took shelter, those of Adullam and Engedi: the latter is most generally supposed to be here intended.

PSALM CXLIII.

1 David prayeth for favour in judgment. 3 He complaineth of his griefs. 5 He strengtheneth his faith by meditation and prayer. 7 He prayeth for grace, 9 for deliverance, 10 for sanctification, 12 for destruction of his enemies.

A Psalm of David.

HEAR my prayer, O LORD, give ear to my supplications: in thy faithfulness answer me, and in thy righteousness.

2 And enter not into judgment with thy servant: for 'in thy sight shall no man living be justified.

3 For the enemy hath persecuted my soul; he hath smitten my life down to the ground; he hath made me to dwell in darkness, as those that have been long dead.

4 Therefore is my spirit overwhelmed within me; my heart within me is desolate.

5 I remember the days of old; I meditate on all thy works; I muse on the work of thy hands.

¹ Exod. 34. 7. Rom. 3. 20. Gal. 2. 16.

6 I stretch forth my hands unto thee: my soul thirsteth after thee, as a thirsty land. Selah.

7 Hear me speedily, O LORD: my spirit faileth: hide not thy face from me, ²lest I be like unto them that go down into the pit.

8 Cause me to hear thy lovingkindness in the morning; for in thee do I trust: cause me to know the way wherein I should walk; for I lift up my soul unto thee.

² Or, for I am become like, &c.

9 Deliver me, O LORD, from mine enemies: I ³flee unto thee to hide me.

10 Teach me to do thy will; for thou art my God: thy spirit is good; lead me into the land of uprightness.

11 Quicken me, O LORD, for thy name's sake: for thy righteousness' sake bring my soul out of trouble.

12 And of thy mercy cut off mine enemies, and destroy all them that afflict my soul: for I am thy servant.

³ Heb. hide me with thee.

PSALM CXLIII.—In some copies of the Septuagint, and in the Vulgate, this psalm has a title, describing it as having been composed during Absalom's rebellion: the general opinion concurs in this appropriation.

PSALM CXLIV.

1 David blesseth God for his mercy both to him and to man. 5 He prayeth that God would powerfully deliver him from his enemies. 9 He promiseth to praise God. 11 He prayeth for the happy state of the kingdom.

A Psalm of David.

BLESSED be the LORD 'my strength, 'which teacheth my hands 'to war, and my fingers to fight:

2 'My goodness, and my fortress; my high tower, and my deliverer; my shield, and he in whom I trust; who subdueth my people under me.

3 'LORD, what is man, that thou takest knowledge of him! or the son of man, that thou makest account of him!

4 'Man is like to vanity: his days are as a shadow that passeth away.

5 Bow thy heavens, O LORD, and come down: touch the mountains, and they shall smoke.

6 'Cast forth lightning, and scatter them: shoot out thine arrows, and destroy them.

7 Send thine 'hand from above; rid me, and deliver me out of great waters, from the hand of strange children;

8 Whose mouth speaketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falsehood.

9 I will sing a new song unto thee, O God: upon a psaltery and an instrument of ten strings will I sing praises unto thee.

10 It is he that giveth ¹⁰salvation unto kings: who delivereth David his servant from the hurtful sword.

11 Rid me, and deliver me from the hand of strange children, whose mouth speaketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falsehood:

12 That our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner stones, ¹¹polished after the similitude of a palace:

13 That our garners may be full, affording ¹²all manner of store: that our sheep may bring forth thousands and ten thousands in our streets:

14 That our oxen may be ¹³strong to labour; that there be no breaking in, nor going out; that there be no complaining in our streets.

PSALM CXLIV.—This is clearly a song of triumph for victory, or series of victories, gained by David, and may perhaps be referred to the war with the Ammonites, 2 Sam. x.

Verse 8. "Their right hand is a right hand of falsehood."—This probably refers to the use of the right hand, as explained on a former occasion, in the act of taking an oath.

The expression of course describes the parties as covenant breakers.

12. "Corner stones polished after the similitude of a palace."—The paraphrase of Bishop Patrick doubtless conveys the real meaning: "Tall and beautiful, like those polished pillars which are the ornaments of a palace."

13. "In our streets."—Streets are not proper places for sheep. The word (חֲצוֹת chutzoth) is different from that properly rendered "streets," in the ensuing verse, and is the same that is translated "fields" in Job v. 10. The word literally means "out-places," and as such is susceptible of various applications; in the present text it probably denotes the out-pastures in the commons and deserts.

PSALM CXLV.

1 David praiseth God for his fame, 8 for his goodness, 11 for his kingdom, 14 for his providence, 17 for his saving mercy.

David's Psalm of praise.

I WILL extol thee, my God, O king; and I will bless thy name for ever and ever.

2 Every day will I bless thee; and I will praise thy name for ever and ever.

3 Great is the LORD, and greatly to be praised; and his greatness is unsearchable.

4 One generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts.

5 I will speak of the glorious honour of thy majesty, and of thy wondrous works.

6 And men shall speak of the might of thy terrible acts: and I will declare thy greatness.

7 They shall abundantly utter the memory of thy great goodness, and shall sing of thy righteousness.

8 The LORD is gracious, and full of compassion; slow to anger, and of great mercy.

9 The LORD is good to all: and his tender mercies are over all his works.

10 All thy works shall praise thee, O LORD; and thy saints shall bless thee.

¹ Heb. and of his greatness there is no search.

11 They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power;

12 To make known to the sons of men his mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of his kingdom.

13 Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations.

14 The LORD upholdeth all that fall, and raiseth up all those that be bowed down.

15 The eyes of all wait upon thee; and thou givest them their meat in due season.

16 Thou openest thine hand, and satisfiest the desire of every living thing.

17 The LORD is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works.

18 The LORD is nigh unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth.

19 He will fulfil the desire of them that fear him: he also will hear their cry, and will save them.

20 The LORD preserveth all them that love him: but all the wicked will he destroy.

21 My mouth shall speak the praise of the LORD: and let all flesh bless his holy name for ever and ever.

PSALM CXLV.—This is one of the alphabetical psalms, in which each verse begins with its proper initial. But it will be observed that there are but twenty-one verses, whereas the Hebrew alphabet has twenty-two letters. This is because the psalm appears to be imperfect, as a verse beginning with ן (n) is wanting in the present Hebrew copies. A verse occupying the place in which we should expect to find it, appears in the Septuagint and Vulgate, whence we may perhaps infer that it existed in the more ancient Hebrew copies, and has since been lost. It would come between verses 13 and 14, and is, "The LORD is faithful in all his words, and holy in all his works," being nearly the same as verse 17.

PSALM CXLVI.

1 The psalmist voweth perpetual praises to God. 3 He exhorteth not to trust in man. 5 God, for his power, justice, mercy, and kingdom, is only worthy to be trusted.

'PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise the LORD, O my soul.

to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.

5 Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the LORD his God:

6 Which made heaven, and earth, the sea, and all that therein is: which keepeth truth for ever:

7 Which executeth judgment for the oppressed: which giveth food to the hungry. The LORD looseth the prisoners:

8 The LORD openeth the eyes of the blind: the LORD raiseth them that are bowed down: the LORD loveth the righteous:

9 The LORD preserveth the strangers; he relieveth the fatherless and widow: but the way of the wicked he turneth upside down.

10 'The LORD shall reign for ever, even thy God, O Zion, unto all generations. Praise ye the LORD.

⁴ Exod. 15. 18.

PSALM CXLVI.—This and the four following psalms are particularly styled the "Hallelujahs," because they all begin and end with the word "Hallelujah" (הלל יה), that is, "Praise ye JAH," or, as invariably given in our version, "Praise ye the LORD." The psalm is generally supposed to have been written after the Captivity, in the time when the Jews were distressed by the powerful opposition which was made to the rebuilding of the Temple. The Septuagint and Vulgate attribute it to Haggai and Zechariah.

PSALM CXLVII.

1 The prophet exhorteth to praise God for his care of the church, 4 his power, 6 and his mercy: 7 to praise him for his providence: 12 to praise him for his blessings upon the kingdom, 15 for his power over the meteors, 19 and for his ordinances in the church.

PRAISE ye the LORD: for it is good to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant; and praise is comely.

2 The LORD doth build up Jerusalem: he gathereth together the outcasts of Israel.

3 He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their ¹wounds.

4 He telleth the number of the stars; he calleth them all by their names.

5 Great is our LORD, and of great power: ²his understanding is infinite.

6 The LORD lifteth up the meek: he casteth the wicked down to the ground.

7 Sing unto the LORD with thanksgiving; sing praise upon the harp unto our God:

9 ³He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens which cry.

10 He delighteth not in the strength of the horse: he taketh not pleasure in the legs of a man.

11 The LORD taketh pleasure in them that fear him, in those that hope in his mercy.

12 Praise the LORD, O Jerusalem; praise thy God, O Zion.

13 For he hath strengthened the bars of thy gates; he hath blessed thy children within thee.

14 'He maketh peace in thy borders, and filleth thee with the ⁵finest of the wheat.

15 He sendeth forth his commandment upon earth: his word runneth very swiftly.

16 He giveth snow like wool: he scattereth the hoarfrost like ashes.

17 He casteth forth his ice like morsels: who can stand before his cold?

18 He sendeth out his word, and melteth them: he causeth his wind to blow, and the waters flow.

PSALM CXLVII.—This psalm of praise is generally supposed to have been composed when the returned captives had at last been allowed to complete the re-establishment of their city and temple. The Septuagint ascribes the psalm to Haggai and Zechariah; but some rather suppose Nehemiah to have been the author.

Verse 10. "The legs of a man."—Infantry is doubtless intended by this rather remarkable expression, as is cavalry by "the strength of the horse" in the preceding clause.

16. "Snow like wool."—Snow to cover the ground, as wool does the sheep, both being white. Another explanation might perhaps be suggested by the fact, that the word for wool (צמר tzemer) is, in the plural form, by a transfer of ideas not unusual in Hebrew, sometimes applied to the foliage of trees: the comparison might then be derived from the fall of leaves from the trees.

"Hoarfrost like ashes."—When a fire of wood is made in the open air, the fine light ashes, dispersed by the wind over the adjoining grass and bushes, give an appearance which may not inaptly be compared to that of hoarfrost. We suppose this to be intended.

17. "Ice like morsels."—Hail or sleet is unquestionably intended.

PSALM CXLVIII.

1 The psalmist exhorteth the celestial, 7 the terrestrial, 11 and the rational creatures to praise God.

¹PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise ye the LORD from the heavens: praise him in the heights.

2 Praise ye him, all his angels: praise ye him, all his hosts.

3 Praise ye him, sun and moon: praise him, all ye stars of light.

4 Praise him, ye heavens of heavens, and ye waters that be above the heavens.

5 Let them praise the name of the LORD: for he commanded, and they were created.

6 He hath also stablished them for ever and ever: he hath made a decree which shall not pass.

7 Praise the LORD from the earth, ye dragons, and all deeps:

8 Fire, and hail; snow, and vapours; stormy wind fulfilling his word:

9 Mountains, and all hills; fruitful trees, and all cedars:

10 Beasts, and all cattle; creeping things, and ²flying fowl:

11 Kings of the earth, and all people; princes, and all judges of the earth:

12 Both young men, and maidens; old men, and children:

13 Let them praise the name of the LORD: for his name alone is ³excellent; his glory is above the earth and heaven.

14 He also exalteth the horn of his people, the praise of all his saints; even of the children of Israel, a people near unto him. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXLVIII.—The author and occasion of this psalm, if it had any particular occasion, are equally uncertain. Calmet regards it as a sequel to the preceding, and supposes that it was sung at the dedication of the walls of Jerusalem. Others attribute it to David. This fine ode, in which the whole creation is called upon to unite in one grand chorus of praise to God, has been beautifully imitated by Milton, in that well-known morning hymn which he has given to Adam in paradise. See 'Paradise Lost,' b. v. l. 153, &c.

PSALM CXLIX.

1 The prophet exhorteth to praise God for his love to the church, 5 and for that power which he hath given to the church.

¹PRAISE ye the LORD. Sing unto the LORD a new song, and his praise in the congregation of saints.

2 Let Israel rejoice in him that made him: let the children of Zion be joyful in their King.

3 Let them praise his name ²in the dance: let them sing praises unto him with the timbrel and harp.

4 For the LORD taketh pleasure in his people: he will beautify the meek with salvation.

5 Let the saints be joyful in glory: let them sing aloud upon their beds.

6 Let the high praises of God be ³in their mouth, and a twoedged sword in their hand;

² Or, with the pipe.

7 To execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people;

8 To bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron;

9 'To execute upon them the judgment written: this honour have all his saints. Praise ye the LORD.

⁴ Deut. 7. 1, 2.

PSALM CXLIX.—This, being a song of victory, is usually ascribed to David, in whose reign the most distinguished victories were obtained by the Hebrews.

Verse 3. "Timbrel."—This is the same word (תוף toph) elsewhere rendered "tabret." There is a note concerning it under Gen. xxxi. 27. The mention of it in that early portion of Scripture evinces the antiquity of its origin, and intimates that origin to have been Oriental; for the great ancient European nations did not exist until ages long subsequent to the mention of the toph in the East; and, in later ages, it was confessed by the Greeks and Romans that their instruments of this class were derived from the Egyptians and Syrians. The forms, therefore, which our engravings exhibit, although derived from the antiquities of Egypt, Greece, and Rome, may be fairly supposed to suggest the forms of the instruments known to the Hebrews, particularly as most of these forms, together with many others, are still preserved in the East.

EGYPTIAN TAMBOURINE PLAYERS.—FROM ROSELLINI.

It is interesting to observe, that the sculptures and paintings of Egyptian and European antiquity, exhibit instruments of this class as being employed in precisely the same manner as mentioned in Scripture. They are almost always represented in the hands of females, as in choral dances, and religious or festal processions. This is the case in the above engraving, which we consider of great interest, not only as exhibiting in the most authentic shape the manner in which such instruments were employed "in the dance," as the verse before us describes, but also as exhibiting the forms which those instruments bore among the Egyptians. Some of these forms are very remarkable, and different from any known to ourselves, or which the Greeks and Romans appear to have possessed. Out of four, only one has that round form which is invariably exhibited in the tambourines of classical antiquity, as well as in our own. They are moreover very simple, none having any such addition of bells, jingles, or rappers, which are often attached to such instruments, and which appear in our other (classical) specimens. Of these the next engraving exhibits the most usual forms found in ancient paintings and sculptures, and the one that follows shows the manner in which they were played.

The principle of a tambourine, that of a prepared skin stretched on a hoop or frame, is well known. The only difference to be sought is in the compass and depth of the circle, the nature of the additions, the ornaments, and the manner of playing. All the specimens in the above cut, and many other varieties, are still in use in the East, where they doubtless originated. In fig. a we see, attached to the frame, strings terminating in weights, which, by the twirling of the tambourine, strike on the skin, and produce or assist the sound required. This one is probably covered on both sides, and is now known to us only as an Oriental instrument. One of the kind is given by Dr. Burney, in his 'History of Music;' but he does not appear to have understood it, perhaps from being unacquainted with the similar Oriental tambourine. Fig. b is of a mixed character: it not only has these rappers, but what appear to be bells. It was probably struck by the hand, and the rappers only intended to vary the effect. This specimen, and the others, have the covering painted or stained in ornamental figures, as mentioned by ancient writers. Fig. c has the frame surrounded with bells, and is of the same kind as those in the hands of the opposite playing figures. This sort is very common in ancient remains. Fig. d is a large tambourine, without additions, as are many of those used in the East. Our common tambourine, with small cymbals inserted in the frame, also appears in some paintings, and is now very common in Western Asia, as appears in the cut below. We are told that the frame was either of metal or wood, and that the ass's skin was usually employed for the covering. They were not always played by the naked hand; but some were sometimes struck with small batons, or with a knotty whip with many thongs, instead of which, on particular festivals, a sprig of some tree or plant, considered suitable to the occasion, was sometimes employed.

CLASSICAL TAMBOURINES OF EASTERN ORIGIN.

The vignette below represents instruments of the drum and tambourine kind, in present use among the Egyptians and Western Asiatics. As far as their history can be traced, they appear mostly to be of very ancient origin, and some of them may very possibly have been known to the Jews. The upright figure in the centre of the cut, represents the darabooka of Modern Egypt—a kind of drum used chiefly by the female peasants and the boatmen of the Nile. It consists of a case of pottery, over the funnel-shaped head of which a covering of parchment is strained and glued. We direct particular attention to it, as the same sort of instrument is represented (though rarely) among the ancient paintings at Thebes. This drum is and was beaten by the hand. This was also the case with another drum, represented in the sculptures at Thebes, which consisted of a barrel-shaped case of wood or copper, two feet or two feet and a half in length, covered at both ends with parchment or leather, and braced by cords extended diagonally over the exterior of the case. This sort of drum appears to have been chiefly a military instrument. When in use, the drummer held it suspended before him by a band from his neck; and during a march he bore it at his back in a vertical position. The ancient Egyptians had also another drum, about the same length, but broader in proportion than the former, and more resembling our own common drum in shape and construction. This was beaten with two wooden sticks. We have introduced these particulars concerning drums, under the impression that all instruments of the tympanum kind, known to the Hebrews, are probably included under the general term toph, which also appears to have been applied, in a sense more or less loose, to any of the several instruments which the class contained.

Verse 5. "Upon their beds."—That is, upon the divans or couches (too frequently called "beds" in our version), on which they were wont to recline or sit, when at ease.

PSALM CL.

1 An exhortation to praise God, 3 with all kind of instruments.

'PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise God in his sanctuary: praise him in the firmament of his power.

2 Praise him for his mighty acts: praise him according to his excellent greatness.

3 Praise him with the sound of the trumpet: praise him with the psaltery and harp.

4 Praise him with the timbrel and dance: praise him with stringed instruments and organs.

^a Or, cornet.

5 Praise him upon the loud cymbals: praise him upon the high sounding cymbals.

6 Let every thing that hath breath praise the LORD. Praise ye the LORD.

^b Or, pipe.

PSALM CL.—This appears to be a sequel to the preceding psalm, and forms a most appropriate conclusion to the whole book. The tradition of the Jews concerning this psalm, however, is that, when the people of any place brought up their first-fruits to Jerusalem, as soon as they came to the mountain of the Temple, every one took his basket into his hand and sung this psalm, till they came to the court of the Lord's house, where the Levites met them singing the 30th Psalm.

Verse 4. "Organs."—In the note to Gen. iv. 21, we have stated the common opinion, which we see no reason to dispute, that the Hebrew אֵלֶּיךָ ougab, mentioned as existing before the Deluge, was the still common instrument called a "mouth organ," or the syrinx of the ancients. The classical ancients ascribed the invention of it to Pan, the great sylvan god; and accordingly he was usually figured with the instrument in his hands. The fable states that he formed it of reeds that grew by the river, and caused it to produce all kinds of agreeable sounds, while his goats were skipping around him, and feeding on the banks. This shows that it was regarded as properly a sylvan and pastoral instrument; and so it seems to be mentioned by Job (ch. xxi. 11, 12). Another story shows that a very good opinion of this instrument was entertained by, at least, the alleged inventor. He even thought it superior to the lyre of Apollo, whom he challenged to the trial; and, the challenge being accepted, the umpire (being no other than Midas) decided in favour of Pan's pipe. It is indeed remarkable that the lyre (kinnor) and syrinx (ougab), were the two first instruments of music, the invention of which is recorded in Scripture, and the only ones that are mentioned before the Deluge; and that subsequently the ougab is almost always mentioned in connection with the kinnor. The principle of the instrument is so simple that it has been one of the most diffused of musical instruments. "A syrinx or fistula Panis, made of reeds tied together, exactly resembling that of the ancients, has been found to be in common use in the island of New Amsterdam, in the South Seas, as flutes and drums have been in Otaheite and New Zealand; which indisputably proves them to be instruments natural to every people in a state of barbarism. They were first used by the Egyptians and Greeks, during the infancy of the musical art among them; and they seem to have been invented and practised at all times by nations remote from each other, and between whom it is hardly possible that there even could have been the least intercourse or communication." (Burney, vol. i. p. 267.) The combination of pipes in question is still used in different parts of Asia. The number of tubes which these instruments exhibit on ancient monuments varies from seven to eleven. Our cut exhibits the most usual forms. There is also another, in which the tubes are square; and, in the larger and deeper sorts, the tubes are sometimes confined by three bands. Independently of the general opinion, which considers the name ougab to refer to instruments of this class, it will be observed that, from the general diffusion of the syrinx, it is scarcely possible that it could have been unknown to the Hebrews.

5. "The loud cymbals . . . the high-sounding cymbals."—The original word, here and elsewhere translated by "cymbals," is צִלְצְלִים tzeltzelim, which both the Septuagint and Vulgate render by cymbala. This singular name is undoubtedly intended to make an approach to the sound which the instruments afforded, as happens in several of our own names for musical instruments; and this sound we shall find in the instruments of the cymbal or sistrum kind. The present text speaks of two kinds of tzeltzelim, namely "the voice-tzeltzelim" (rendered "loud cymbals," though the contrary is probably meant), and the "high-sounding tzeltzelim," and it therefore appears that there was more than one instrument of the class, and we may infer that tzeltzelim was a general name for all metallic instruments of agitation, including probably the cymbal and sistrum kinds. Some indeed think the sistrum to be exclusively meant by this word; and that cymbals, properly speaking, are denoted by the word שְׁלִישִׁים shalishim, in 1 Sam. xviii. 6, which is equally with the other rendered cymbala by the Septuagint and the Vulgate, and which our version translates, "instruments of music." We are not anxious to inquire minutely into those distinctions, but being satisfied with the admission involved in either alternative, that both cymbals and sistrums were in use among the Jews—and which, on any probable grounds, there is not the least reason to question—we take the opportunity of laying the more common ancient forms of both sorts of instruments before our readers.

The ancient cymbals were of sonorous brass or copper, and exhibit greater diversity of form than our own instruments of the same name. Most of these variations may be estimated from our miscellaneous engraving. The differences are in size, in the depth or shallowness of the bowl, in the presence or absence of the border or rim, and in the form and character of the handle by which the player held the instrument. All this is better seen by our engraving than from description. The variety most markedly different from our own is that, shown in our engraving (a), in which the cymbals not only want the brim, but their convexities terminate in erect points which furnished the player his required hold. Most of them have a deeper concavity than our own instruments of the same class. The ancient Egyptians had cymbals exactly resembling those now commonly used in Europe, but smaller, being from five inches and a half to seven inches in diameter.

Cymbals were much employed in the sacred mysteries and religious processions of the ancient pagans; so that those people who were the most noted for their mysteries were also the most celebrated for their skill with the cymbals. They particularly figured in the services of Cybele and Bacchus; and the aversion with which men of sense and reflection, among the Romans, regarded the disgraceful orgies of the Bacchanalia, seems to have extended in some degree to the instruments which were associated with them. Thus Cicero reproaches Piso for using the cymbals. Livy says that the reason why these and the tambourines were employed in the more ancient mysteries of paganism was, that their loud noise might drown the cries and complaints of those who were slain, or on whom other violence was committed.

Another set of instruments of the same class, and which were probably included under the name of tzeltzelim, or some one other of the undetermined names of the Hebrew, were the castagnets, or crotala, snapped with the fingers to mark the time in choral dances. The sound they gave is compared by some ancient writers to that which a stork makes by the concussion of its mandibles—a comparison which also, not unaptly, illustrates the mode in which they were used. Their form and the manner in which they were played are shown in the annexed engraving. We suspect that the small instruments in the left hands of the two standing figures in the engraving at the end of this note, from a curious Egyptian painting, are intended for the same purpose, although of a different form from any that we have elsewhere seen.

We now come to the sistrum; the general form and character of which instrument will be best understood from the fig. b, of the annexed engraving. It is composed of a frame of sonorous metal, crossed by bars of the same. These bars move freely in the holes through which they are passed; and, when the instrument is agitated, the reverted ends, striking upon the frame, produce the sound. It is sometimes crowned with the figure of a cat, as a symbol of Isis, by whom it was said to have been invented, and in whose worship it was abundantly employed. They are often, however, seen, very simple and even rude in form, and without any ornament, as in fig. a, and also in those represented in the final engraving, Dancing Figures, with Castagnets.—From Herculaneum.

where the performers appear to be delivering to the seated personage their sistra in exchange for the other instruments which they have in their left hands. The engraving is copied from Rosellini, and would prove, if any proof were wanting, the great antiquity of the instrument among the Egyptians. But this, although questioned by Winckelmann, has long since been demonstrated not only by the evidence of most ancient Egyptian monuments, but by the discovery of actual specimens of the instrument. Three of these are now in the British Museum, and others in different European collections. They are all of bronze, contain (or are pierced for) three or four bars, and, with difference of detail, are generally similar to the specimen in fig. b. One curious specimen, in the Berlin Museum, has but one bar, on which are three moveable rings. When employed at sacrifices, the agitation of the sistrum is said to have been understood to denote, mystically, the motion of the universe. It appears to have been sometimes used in war to give signals: and the Greeks also employed it to mark the rhythm in noted music, the sound given as the bars struck right and left serving to mark the cadence. It is remarkable that the Abyssinians, who confess that they derived the instrument from Egypt, employ it conspicuously in their religious services. Bruce says, "It is used in the quick measure, or in allegros of singing psalms or thanksgivings. Each priest has a sistrum, which he shakes in a very threatening manner at his neighbour, leaping and turning round with such an indecent violence, that he resembles rather a priest of paganism, whence this instrument was derived, than a Christian."

We have now only to add, that some writers think that the Hebrews had a knowledge of an instrument of this class, consisting of a round, oval, or triangular metallic rod, which afforded its sound by being struck with another straight rod, like our "triangle." The last-named instrument is indeed of Oriental origin, and some of the same kind (triangular) are supposed, both by Calmet and Gesenius, to be denoted by the Hebrew word shalishim, mentioned above. In some instruments of this class a jingling was produced by the insertion of moveable rings—as shown in one of the figures (e) of the central group of instruments (consisting of this, a pipe, and a pair of cymbals) given in the engraving at the bottom of page 143.

CHAPTER I.

¹ The use of the proverbs. ⁷ An exhortation to fear God, and believe his word. ¹⁰ To avoid the enticings of sinners. ²⁰ Wisdom complaineth of her contempt. ²⁴ She threat- eneth her contemners.

HE proverbs of Solomon the son of David, king of Israel;

⁸ My son, hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother:

⁹ For they shall be ⁶an ornament of grace unto thy head, and chains about thy neck.

¹⁰ ¶ My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not.

¹¹ If they say, Come with us, let us lay

PROVERBS. It has never been disputed that Solomon was, in the general sense, the author of this Book : but from variations of style, frequent repetitions of the same sentence, and other circumstances, many conceive that it is not necessary to suppose every sentence it contains proceeded from him ; but that, when the collection was formed, some proverbs were introduced, which had been delivered by wise men and prophets, whose sayings were not thought unworthy of being preserved in the same collection with those of the wise king. We are indeed expressly told that the thirtieth chapter contains "the words of Agur the son of Jakeh ;" while the thirty-first offers "the words of Lemuel," whose identity with Solomon, although generally admitted, has been questioned by some commentators. We are told in 1 Kings iv. 13, that Solomon "spoke three thousand proverbs," but it is not intimated that he wrote any, or formed any collection of those which he seems, in the first instance, to have orally delivered : much stress is not indeed to be laid on this ; but there seems sufficient probability in the opinion, that the collection of such of his proverbs as have been preserved was formed by different persons ; and it is expressly intimated that the chapters xxv.—xxix. consist of proverbs collected very long after the death of Solomon by "the men of Hezekiah." But on this point some further observations will be found in a note to chap. xxv. The Jews believe that Solomon wrote the Canticles, or song bearing his name, in his youth, the Proverbs in his riper years, and Ecclesiastes in his old age.

"This work," says Bishop Lowth, "consists of two parts. The first, serving as a proem or exordium, includes the nine first chapters ; and is varied, elegant, sublime, and truly poetical ; the order of the subject is in general excellently preserved, and the parts are very aptly connected among themselves. It is embellished with many beautiful descriptions and personifications ; the diction is polished, and abounds with all the ornaments of poetry ; inasmuch that it scarcely yields in elegance and splendour to any of the sacred writings. The second part, which extends from the beginning of the tenth chapter to the end of the book, consists almost entirely of detached parables or maxims, which have but little in them of the sublime or poetical, except in a certain energetic and concise form of expression." This latter portion is susceptible of certain distinct subdivisions which we shall point out as we proceed.

The first portion, on which we now enter, "is chiefly confined to the conduct of juvenescence, or early life, before a permanent condition is made choice of...and all the most formidable dangers to which this season of life is exposed, and the sins which most easily beset it, are painted with the hand of a master. And while the progress and issues of vice are exhibited, under a variety of the most striking delineations and metaphors, in their utmost deformity and horror, all the beauties of language, and all the force of eloquence, are poured forth to win the ingenuous youth to virtue and piety, and to fix him in the steady pursuit of his duties towards God and towards man." Dr. J. M. Good, in the 'Memoir of his Life,' by Dr. Gregory ; see also Horne's 'Introduction,' vol. i. p. 119, &c.

Verse 20. "Wisdom crieth without."—The accumulation of phrases implying publicity—the streets, the chief place of concourse, the openings of the gates, the city—probably refer to the custom in the East, particularly among the Arabians, for people to hold discussions and conversations in religion and morals in the open air, and especially in the more public parts of the town, to which the inhabitants resort for the sake of society. It is not unusual indeed for a man, respected for his eloquence, learning, or reputed sanctity, to collect in such places, a congregation, which listens with attention and interest to the address he delivers. Thus such wisdom as they possess may be said to "cry in the streets ;" and, as the people read very little, if at all, a very large part of the information and mental cultivation which they possess is derived from the discussions, conversations, recitations, and lectures, on various subjects, which they hear in the streets and public places.

CHAPTER II.

¹ Wisdom promiseth godliness to her children, 10 and safety from evil company, 20 and direction in good ways.

My son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee ;

2 So that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding ;

3 Yea, if thou criest after knowledge, and ¹lifest up thy voice for understanding ;

4 ²If thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures ;

5 Then shalt thou understand the fear of the LORD, and find the knowledge of God.

8 He keepeth the paths of judgment, and preserveth the way of his saints.

9 Then shalt thou understand righteousness, and judgment, and equity; yea, every good path.

10 ¶ When wisdom entereth into thine heart, and knowledge is pleasant unto thy soul;

11 Discretion shall preserve thee, understanding shall keep thee:

12 To deliver thee from the way of the evil man, from the man that speaketh froward things;

13 Who leave the paths of uprightness, to walk in the ways of darkness;

14 Who rejoice to do evil, and delight in the frowardness of the wicked;

15 Whose ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths:

16 To deliver thee from the strange woman, 'even from the stranger which flattereth with her words;

17 Which forsaketh the guide of her youth, and forgetteth the covenant of her God.

Verse 4. "Seekest her as silver."—Probably the allusion is to the extraction of silver with labour and difficulty from the mine. Of "hid treasures" we shall have another occasion to speak.

16. "The strange woman... the stranger."—These expressions are elsewhere applied to women of bad character: and, as it was usual for such women to withdraw from their own country and live among strangers, that their families might not be disgraced by their conduct, we are probably to understand the expression in the literal sense, as denoting a foreigner, or at least, one not a native of, or connected by any natural tie with, the place in which she resided.

My son, forget not my law; ¹but let thine heart keep my commandments:

2 For length of days, and ²long life, and peace, shall they add to thee.

3 Let not mercy and truth forsake thee: ³bind them about thy neck; write them upon the table of thine heart:

18 She is a tree of life to them that lay hold upon her: and happy is every one that retaineth her.

19 The LORD by wisdom hath founded the earth; by understanding hath he ¹⁹established the heavens.

20 By his knowledge the depths are broken up, and the clouds drop down the dew.

21 ¶ My son, let not them depart from thine eyes: keep sound wisdom and discretion:

22 So shall they be life unto thy soul, and grace to thy neck.

23 ¹⁶ Then shalt thou walk in thy way safely, and thy foot shall not stumble.

24 When thou liest down, thou shalt not be afraid: yea, thou shalt lie down, and thy sleep shall be sweet.

25 Be not afraid of sudden fear, neither of the desolation of the wicked, when it cometh.

26 For the LORD shall be thy confidence, and shall keep thy foot from being taken.

27 ¶ Withhold not good from ¹⁷them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thine hand to do it.

28 Say not unto thy neighbour, Go, and come again, and to morrow I will give; when thou hast it by thee.

29 ¹⁸Devise not evil against thy neighbour, seeing he dwelleth securely by thee.

30 ¶ Strive not with a man without cause, if he have done thee no harm.

31 ¶ ¹⁹Envy thou not ²⁰the oppressor, and choose none of his ways.

32 For the froward is abomination to the LORD: ²¹but his secret is with the righteous.

33 ¶ ²²The curse of the LORD is in the house of the wicked: but he blesseth the habitation of the just.

Verse 8. "Health to thy navel."—Chardin thinks that this expression is derived from the habit, in the Oriental villages, of applying, for the cure of most diseases, plasters, ointments, oils, and frictions externally, to the stomach and belly; the knowledge of, and the art of preparing, internal medicines, being very little known. Roberts, however, after truly observing that the navel of an infant is often clumsily managed in the East, so that it is no uncommon thing to see that part greatly enlarged and diseased, states that such a reference as the present to the navel, as being connected with earthly prosperity, is still common in India; where, for instance, it will be said of a person who has risen from poverty to affluence, "his navel has grown much larger."

CHAPTER IV.

1 Solomon, to persuade obedience, 3 sheweth what instruction he had of his parents, 5 to study wisdom, 14 and to shun the path of the wicked. 20 He exhorteth to faith, 23 and sanctification.

HEAR, ye children, the instruction of a father, and attend to know understanding.

2 For I give you good doctrine, forsake ye not my law.

3 For I was my father's son, ¹tender and only beloved in the sight of my mother.

4 ²He taught me also, and said unto me, Let thine heart retain my words: keep my commandments, and live.

5 Get wisdom, get understanding: forget it not; neither decline from the words of my mouth.

RAFFAELLE.

6 Forsake her not, and she shall preserve thee: love her, and she shall keep thee.

7 Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom: and with all thy getting get understanding.

8 Exalt her, and she shall promote thee: she shall bring thee to honour, when thou dost embrace her.

9 She shall give to thine head ³an ornament of grace: ⁴a crown of glory shall she deliver to thee.

10 Hear, O my son, and receive my sayings: and the years of thy life shall be many.

11 I have taught thee in the way of wisdom; I have led thee in right paths.

12 When thou goest, thy steps shall not be straitened; ⁵and when thou runnest, thou shalt not stumble.

13 Take fast hold of instruction; let her not go: keep her; for she is thy life.

14 ¶ ⁶Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men.

15 Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away.

16 For they sleep not, except they have done mischief; and their sleep is taken away, unless they cause some to fall.

17 For they eat the bread of wickedness, and drink the wine of violence.

18 But the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

19 The way of the wicked is as darkness: they know not at what they stumble.

20 ¶ My son, attend to my words; incline thine ear unto my sayings.

21 Let them not depart from thine eyes; keep them in the midst of thine heart.

22 For they are life unto those that find them, and ⁷health to all their flesh.

23 ¶ Keep thy heart ⁸with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life.

Verse 18. "That shineth more and more unto the perfect day."—This beautiful metaphor is derived from the light of the sun, which, from the appearance of its first faint radiance in the East, nothing can retard or prevent from rising to the glory of perfect day.

23. "Out of it are the issues of life."—The word rendered "the issues" is, literally, "the goings forth." There is most probably a latent metaphor alluding to the heart as the fountain from which the blood is diffused in streams to the different parts of the body. This is also corroborated by the fact that "the blood" is metaphorically called "the life" in the Hebrew, as in Gen. ix. 4, "Flesh with the blood thereof, which is the life thereof, shall ye not eat."

CHAPTER V.

¹ Solomon exhorteth to the study of wisdom. ³ He sheweth the mischief of whoredom and riot. ¹⁵ He exhorteth to contentedness, liberality, and chastity. ²² The wicked are overtaken with their own sins.

My son, attend unto my wisdom, and bow thine ear to my understanding:

2 That thou mayest regard discretion, and that thy lips may keep knowledge.

3 ¶ ¹For the lips of a strange woman drop as an honeycomb, and her ²mouth is smoother than oil:

4 But her end is bitter as wormwood, sharp as a twoedged sword.

5 ³Her feet go down to death; her steps take hold on hell.

6 Lest thou shouldest ponder the path of life, her ways are moveable, that thou canst not know them.

7 Hear me now therefore, O ye children, and depart not from the words of my mouth.

8 Remove thy way far from her, and come not nigh the door of her house:

9 Lest thou give thine honour unto others, and thy years unto the cruel:

10 Lest strangers be filled with ⁴thy wealth; and thy labours be in the house of a stranger;

11 And thou mourn at the last, when thy flesh and thy body are consumed,

12 And say, How have I hated instruction, and my heart despised reproof;

13 And have not obeyed the voice of my teachers, nor inclined mine ear to them that instructed me!

14 I was almost in all evil in the midst of the congregation and assembly.

15 ¶ Drink waters out of thine own cistern, and running waters out of thine own well.

16 Let thy fountains be dispersed abroad, and rivers of waters in the streets.

17 Let them be only thine own, and not strangers' with thee.

18 Let thy fountain be blessed: and rejoice with the wife of thy youth.

19 Let her be as the loving hind and pleasant roe; let her breasts ⁵satisfy thee at all times; and ⁶be thou ravished always with her love.

20 And why wilt thou, my son, be ravished with a strange woman, and embrace the bosom of a stranger?

21 ⁷For the ways of man are before the eyes of the Lord, and he pondereth all his goings.

22 ¶ His own iniquities shall take the wicked himself, and he shall be holden with the cords of his ⁸sins.

Verse 4. "Wormwood."—The word לענה laanah, certainly denotes an extremely disagreeable and bitter plant: and that it was wormwood is a well-supported and probable interpretation. We therefore give a cut of the artemisia absinthium.

It must be confessed, however, that the Scripture seems to attribute to the laanah stronger effects than the wormwood of Europe will produce. We may therefore perhaps understand that some more hurtful species is intended; unless, as suggested by Gesenius, in the strong passages which seem to call for such an explanation, the name of the plant is employed figuratively to express poison.

19. "The loving hind and pleasant roe."—A reference to these animals, or at least to the latter, which we have supposed to be the gazelle, is still employed in the East to express whatever is graceful and beautiful in woman. We see in the Scriptures that, when a comparison drawn from it is applied to man, it is with reference to its agility and speed; but when to woman, the comparison regards its graceful form, timidity, and gentleness. This is precisely the same among the modern Orientals, with whom, in fact, the gazelle and the monkey represent the extremes of beauty and ugliness. It is rare to find a piece of amatory poetry in which the lady is not compared to the gazelle, or her eyes to the soft and lustrous ones of that most elegant creature. This has been well observed by D'Arvieux: "The Arabs express a woman's beauty by saying, she has the eyes of the gazelle. The burden of their love-songs is the gazelle's eyes; and it is to this creature they invariably compare their mistresses when they wish to give, in one word, the idea of a perfect beauty. These gazelles are indeed very pretty creatures; and there is especially a certain innocent fear about them, that may well be compared to the modesty and bashfulness of a young girl."

16 Seven things hateful to God. 20 The blessings of obedience. 25 The mischiefs of whoredom.

MY son, if thou be surety for thy friend,
if thou hast stricken thy hand with a stranger,

2 Thou art snared with the words of thy mouth, thou art taken with the words of thy mouth.

3 Do this now, my son, and deliver thyself, when thou art come into the hand of thy friend;
go, humble thyself, and make sure thy friend.

4 Give not sleep to thine eyes, nor slumber to thine eyelids.

5 Deliver thyself as a roe from the hand of the hunter, and as a bird from the hand of the fowler.

6 ¶ Go to the ant, thou sluggard;

8 Provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest.

9 "How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard?
when wilt thou arise out of thy sleep?

10 Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep:

11 "So shall thy poverty come as one

27 Can a man take fire in his bosom, and his clothes not be burned?

28 Can one go upon hot coals, and his feet not be burned?

Verse 1. "Stricken thy hand."—This refers to the almost universal custom of striking hands to confirm a bargain or compact.

6. "Go to the ant!...consider her ways and be wise."—The study of the ways of the ant, which the wisest of men here recommends as calculated to furnish lessons of wisdom, has indeed been found most useful and instructive, revealing to us the wisdom of God as manifested in the humblest of his creatures, and furnishing important practical lessons, which the humbleness of the teacher should not lead us to despise, but to value the more highly.

The researches of Reaumur, Huber, Kirby, Spence, and other naturalists, into the habits and pursuits of these wonderful little beings, enable us much better than the early commentators to appreciate the force and propriety of this reference, whether understood with regard to the industry, the skill, or the economy which their communities exhibit.

Our wood-cuts show what only is capable of pictorial illustration—the skill, industry, and labour with which the domiciles of the different kinds of ants are constructed, and which, considered relatively to the size and resources of the respective architects, far exceed many of those greatest results of human ingenuity and labour by which the world has been astonished. Whether as masons, carpenters, miners, or carvers of wood, they offer examples which the most ingenious need not refuse to admire, and by which the wisest may be instructed. In the various species of ants the constructions are various, and none unworthy of attention. The mason-ant offers to our contemplation its earthen hillock, the interior of which exhibits a series of labyrinths, lodges, vaults, and galleries; its construction skilful, and its situation chosen with judgment. Such nests are sometimes constructed in twenty stories above and as many below the ground, by which arrangement the ants are enabled to regulate with great facility the heat, withdrawing to the underground apartments when those above become too warm, and proceeding upward when their lower rooms are too cold. With equal skill, and perhaps greater labour, do the carpenter-ants chisel their stories, chambers, galleries, and colonnades in the bodies or roots of growing trees. Then, other species construct nests among or upon the branches of trees, various in their kinds and dimensions, but all wonderful instances of the results of the art and industry of co-operating numbers, even among creatures so small that myriads may be crushed unregarded beneath the foot. Some of these nests are as large as hogsheads; others from the size of a human head to a fist,—the latter being formed by the powerful bending of large leaves, and glueing the points of them together so as to form a purse. "But when we look at the buildings erected by the white ants of tropical climates, all that we have been conveying dwindles into insignificance. Their industry appears greatly to surpass that of our ants and bees, and they are certainly more skilful in architectural contrivances. The elevation also of their edifices is more than five hundred times the height of the builders. Were our houses built according to the same proportions, they would be twelve or fifteen times higher than the London Monument, and four or five times higher than the pyramids of Egypt, with corresponding dimensions in the basement of the edifice. These statements are perhaps necessary to impress the extraordinary labours of ants upon the mind, for we are all more or less sensible to the force of comparisons." See 'Insect Architecture,' chap. xiv.—xvi., for this and most of the other facts in this note; and where also may be found numerous details concerning the ingenuity and industry of ants, to which our limits do not allow us to refer, however illustrative they might be considered. The nests just mentioned are frequently twelve feet high, and some have been mentioned so high as twenty feet, and large enough to contain twelve men. This is an exterior shell containing an interior building, in which are formed a vast number of apartments, galleries, and magazines. In the same regions also does the smaller white ant erect its strong pillar, with its overhanging roof or capital, in the form of a mushroom. These erections are about three feet high, the interior being divided into numerous angular cells which furnish lodging to the industrious little beings which construct this singular monument.

Pyramidal Nests of the Termites.

Turret-Nests of the White Ant.

Although we have taken this line of illustration as the most eligible for our purpose, there is much in the economy and character of these insects not less worthy of admiration. Their unwearied industry and indomitable perseverance, the arduous and sincere exertions of every individual towards the common object, their regulated labour, the alacrity and zeal with which the overburdened are assisted, their care in observing the times and seasons, the judgment with which they avail themselves of favourable circumstances, and the grand evidence which even these minute creatures are enabled to offer of the effects producible by the co-operation of numbers in a good and useful object,—are all circumstances which explain and enforce the injunction of the sacred writer: "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways and be wise."

13. "Eyes... feet... fingers."—The Orientals are very expert in making communications to each other by means of signs and gestures, with the eyes, hands, or feet. The number of signs of this sort, having a well-understood conventional meaning, and in current use among the people, is very great, and which, although unintelligible to Europeans, are common to different nations in the East. But, besides such common significant movements or signs, it is a fact that artificial systems of signs, by which any kind of communication may be held without speaking, and by means of which even the deaf and dumb may receive instruction, and communicate and understand, existed in the East long before such systems were thought of in Europe for the education of the deaf and dumb; and it is not impossible that something of the sort may be alluded to in the present text, as employed by guilty persons in making their communications to each other. In confirmation of this observation, we may refer to the mutes of the Grand Signior's seraglio at Constantinople, which we cannot do better than in a brief extract from the excellent account, given more than two centuries ago, by "Master Robert Withers," in Purchas. In the seraglio "there are many dumbe men, both old and young, who have libertie to goe in and out with leave of the Capee Agha. And this is worthie the observation, that in the seraglio both the king and others can reason and discourse of any thing, as well and as distinctly, alla mutesca, by nods and signes, as they can with words: a thing well befitting the gravitie of the better sort of Turkes, who care not for much babling. The same is also used among the sultanaes and other the king's women: for with them likewise there are divers dumbe women, both olde and young. And this hath been an ancient custom in the seraglio: wherefore they get as many mutes as they can possibly find: and chiefly for this one reason, that they hold it not a thing befitting the Grand Signior, neither stands it with his greatnesse, to speak to any about him familiarly: but he may in that manner more tractably and domestically jest and sport with the mutes than with others that are about him." The public officers and governors, who acquire the knowledge of this system of communication when young, in the seraglio, for the sake of communicating with the mutes, employ it afterwards among themselves in their secret transactions and communications.

25. "Neither let her take thee with her eyelids."—This probably refers to the care with which women in the East paint their eyelids, in a great measure in order to captivate the men, who, from the manner in which they are muffled up, can often see no more of their persons than their eyes—which may indeed be one reason why so much pains are taken to set them off.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Solomon persuadeth to a sincere and kind familiarity with wisdom. 6 In an example of his own experience, he sheweth 10 the cunning of an whore, 22 and the desperate simplicity of a young wanton. 24 He dehortheth from such wickedness.

My son, keep my words, and lay up my commandments with thee.

2 Keep my commandments, and live; and my law as the apple of thine eye.

3 Bind them upon thy fingers, write them upon the table of thine heart.

4 Say unto wisdom, Thou art my sister; and call understanding thy kinswoman:

5 That they may keep thee from the strange woman, from the stranger which flattereth with her words.

6 ¶ For at the window of my house I looked through my casement,

7 And beheld among the simple ones, I discerned among the youths, a young man void of understanding,

8 Passing through the street near her corner; and he went the way to her house,

9 In the twilight, in the evening, in the black and dark night:

10 And, behold, there met him a woman with the attire of an harlot, and subtil of heart.

11 (She is loud and stubborn; her feet abide not in her house:

12 Now is she without, now in the streets, and lieth in wait at every corner.)

13 So she caught him, and kissed him, and with an impudent face said unto him, 14 I have peace offerings with me; this day have I paid my vows.

15 Therefore came I forth to meet thee, diligently to seek thy face, and I have found thee.

16 I have decked my bed with coverings of tapestry, with carved works, with fine linen of Egypt.

17 I have perfumed my bed with myrrh, aloes, and cinnamon.

18 Come, let us take our fill of love until the morning: let us solace ourselves with loves.

19 For the goodman is not at home, he is gone a long journey:

20 He hath taken a bag of money with him, and will come home at the day appointed.

21 With her much fair speech she caused him to yield, with the flattering of her lips she forced him.

22 He goeth after her straightway, as an ox goeth to the slaughter, or as a fool to the correction of the stocks;

23 Till a dart strike through his liver; as a bird hasteth to the snare, and knoweth not that it is for his life.

24 ¶ Hearken unto me now therefore, O ye children, and attend to the words of my mouth.

25 Let not thine heart decline to her ways, go not astray in her paths.

26 For she hath cast down many wounded: yea, many strong men have been slain by her.

Verse 10. "The attire of an harlot."—It seems, from this and other passages, that women of this class were obliged or accustomed to distinguish themselves by some peculiarity of dress. In some parts of Greece also they were obliged to dress differently from other women. Speaking with reference to the present text, Archbishop Potter observes, "What sort of habit this was is not certain; but, if the Athenian custom was in this, as in many other things, taken from the Jews, we may conclude that their harlots wore flowered garments; for the Athenian lawgiver, thinking it necessary to distinguish women of innocent conversation from harlots by some open and visible mark, ordered that those should never appear abroad but in grave and modest apparel, and that the rest should always wear flowered garments. Hence Clemens of Alexandria hath remarked that, 'As fugitive slaves are known by their stigmata, so flowered garments are the indication of an harlot.' " In India, women of this class usually dress in scarlet (see Rev. xvii. 4). The customs in this matter vary in different parts of the East, and frequently there is no other distinction than that of choice, which operates in rendering the dress of such persons more gay and less concealing than that of respectable women. Perhaps no more is meant in the present text.

16. "Fine linen of Egypt."—In different parts of the Hebrew Scriptures there are several very different words, all of which are equally rendered "fine linen" in our version. And this seems very proper; for, as it is impossible to distinguish the character and quality of the several tissues which the respective words denote, it was as well to take one general name for all as to offer uncertain conjectures. At present we will be content to assume two points as perfectly clear, namely, that the Jews derived their fine stuffs from Egypt; which we know, indeed, from profane sources, to have been famous for its "linen" manufactures, which formed a principal branch of industry to its inhabitants, and from which the nearer nations in Asia and Europe were supplied with goods of this description; and that, from the variety of the terms employed, fabrics of different qualities, and all highly appreciated by foreign nations, were produced by the Egyptian loom. Dr. Clarke, in his 'Commentary,' laboured under a very great error when he called the Egyptian manufactures "coarse;" it may indeed be true generally of the linen (for it is linen) in which the mummies are wound up, and from which his inference was derived. But this was only one of many sorts concerning which the dresses of the numerous figures, and other draperies, painted in Egyptian tombs, enable us to draw some tolerably certain inferences. These exhibit a large variety of qualities, colours, and patterns. Some sorts are so fine and transparent that every detail of the figures which they envelop is seen with perfect clearness through them—suggesting the idea of fine muslin or gauze; while other qualities, of various thickness, exhibit, so far as can be judged from paintings, rich and delicate workmanship; and sometimes furnish patterns and styles not unworthy our imitation, and always a brilliancy of colour which we can scarcely rival.

In the present instance it is to be understood that the whole of the verse applies to one and the same article. In this description some difficulty arises from the occurrence of two principal words which we find nowhere else in the Bible. These are, that rendered "carved works" (חֲצִבּוֹת chatzaboth), and that translated "fine linen" (אַטֻּן aitun); and which possibly form the Egyptian name of the Egyptian manufacture. By comparing the intimations of the text with the more probable interpretations of the ancient versions, the following may perhaps be offered as the meaning of the verse:—"I have covered my couch with variegated coverings of Egyptian tapestry." To which it may also be added, that the use of the word ἀμφίπαρα in the Septuagint would suggest that it was the same on both sides. From this, in connection with the use to which the text states it to have been applied, we may gather that it was some rich figured stuff, employed for coverings to divans or sofas (which must often be understood where our version has "beds"), and perhaps also to cover such thin mattresses or quilts as now serve in Western Asia for coverlets or counterpanes. This forms, in fact, one of the chief articles of domestic luxury in the East; for, as the best rooms have no other furniture than sofas and cushions, every one desires that the stuffs with which these are covered should furnish evidence of his taste and wealth. This also extends to the curtains with which the doors are hung during the warm weather; and in general it may be said, that, studious as the Orientals are of richness in their personal attire, they are not less, and perhaps still more, anxious about the draperies of their principal apartments. The present, and other texts of similar force, seem to evince that the case was the same in ancient times. The Medes and Babylonians were famous for their stuffs of the description indicated; and we know that their noted tapestries, &c., were figured by the needle. But we are also informed that in even this class of fabrics the Egyptians rivalled the Babylonians; and this we may well believe, when we consider the various evidence of their skill to which we have already alluded. If the variegated coverings mentioned in the text had been Babylonian, we should have concluded that they contained figures wrought by the needle; but, as the Egyptians not only excelled in needlework, but also produced variegated patterns in the loom, as well as by the subsequent application of colours to stuffs that were woven plain, this is a point concerning which no satisfactory conclusion can be obtained.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 The fame, 6 and evidency of wisdom. 10 The excellency, 12 the nature, 15 the power, 18 the riches, 22 and the eternity of wisdom. 32 Wisdom is to be desired for the blessedness it bringeth.

DOTH not 'wisdom cry? and understanding put forth her voice?

2 She standeth in the top of high places, by the way in the places of the paths.

3 She crieth at the gates, at the entry of the city, at the coming in at the doors.

4 Unto you, O men, I call; and my voice is to the sons of man.

5 O ye simple, understand wisdom: and, ye fools, be ye of an understanding heart.

6 Hear; for I will speak of excellent things; and the opening of my lips shall be right things.

7 For my mouth shall speak truth; and wickedness is 'an abomination to my lips.

8 All the words of my mouth are in righteousness; there is nothing 'froward or perverse in them.

9 They are all plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge.

10 Receive my instruction, and not silver; and knowledge rather than choice gold.

11 'For wisdom is better than rubies; and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it.

12 I wisdom dwell with 'prudence, and find out knowledge of witty inventions.

13 The fear of the Lord is to hate evil: pride, and arrogancy, and the evil way, and the froward mouth, do I hate.

14 Counsel is mine, and sound wisdom: I am understanding; I have strength.

15 By me kings reign, and princes decree justice.

16 By me princes rule, and nobles, even all the judges of the earth.

17 I love them that love me; and those that seek me early shall find me.

18 'Riches and honour are with me ; yea, durable riches and righteousness.

19 'My fruit is better than gold, yea, than fine gold ; and my revenue than choice silver.

20 I 'lead in the way of righteousness, in the midst of the paths of judgment :

21 That I may cause those that love me to inherit substance ; and I will fill their treasures.

22 The LORD possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old.

23 I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was.

24 When there were no depths, I was brought forth ; when there were no fountains abounding with water.

25 Before the mountains were settled, before the hills was I brought forth :

26 While as yet he had not made the earth, nor the 'fields, nor ¹⁰the highest part of the dust of the world.

27 When he prepared the heavens, I was there : when he set ¹¹a compass upon the face of the depth :

28 When he established the clouds above :

when he strengthened the fountains of the deep :

29 ¹²When he gave to the sea his decree, that the waters should not pass his commandment : when he appointed the foundations of the earth :

30 Then I was by him, as one brought up with him : and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him ;

31 Rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth ; and my delights were with the sons of men.

32 Now therefore hearken unto me, O ye children : for ¹³blessed are they that keep my ways.

33 Hear instruction, and be wise, and refuse it not.

34 Blessed is the man that heareth me, watching daily at my gates, waiting at the posts of my doors.

35 For whoso findeth me findeth life, and shall ¹⁴obtain favour of the LORD.

CHAPTER IX.

1 The discipline, 4 and doctrine of wisdom. 13 The custom, 16 and error of folly.

WISDOM hath builded her house, she hath hewn out her seven pillars :

2 She hath killed 'her beasts ; she hath mingled her wine ; she hath also furnished her table.

3 She hath sent forth her maidens : she crieth upon the highest places 'of the city,

4 Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither : as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith to him,

5 Come, eat of thy bread, and drink of the wine which I have mingled.

6 Forsake the foolish, and live ; and go in the way of understanding.

7 He that reproveth a scorner getteth to himself shame : and he that rebuketh a wicked man getteth himself a blot.

8 'Reprove not a scorner, lest he hate thee : rebuke a wise man, and he will love thee.

9 Give instruction to a wise man, and he will be yet wiser ; teach a just man, and he will increase in learning.

10 'The fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom : and the knowledge of the holy is understanding.

11 'For by me thy days shall be multiplied, and the years of thy life shall be increased.

12 If thou be wise, thou shalt be wise for thyself : but if thou scornest, thou alone shalt bear it.

13 ¶ ¹A foolish woman is clamorous : she is simple, and knoweth nothing.

14 For she sitteth at the door of her house, on a seat in the high places of the city,

15 To call passengers who go right on their ways :

16 Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither : and as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith to him, 17 Stolen waters are sweet, and bread ⁶*eaten* in secret is pleasant.

18 But he knoweth not that the dead are there ; and that her guests are in the depths of hell.

⁵ Chap. 7. 11.

⁶ Heb. of secreties.

Verse 1. "Seven pillars."—"Seven" is much employed in Scripture as a definite number denoting one that is indefinite.

14, 15. "She sitteth at the door of her house to call passengers," &c.—This is mentioned as a gross indecorum, and is in fact what none but the most impudent public women will dare to do, particularly when unveiled, even in the most dissolute cities of the East. Cairo, which is one of these cities, furnishes ample illustrations of all the vicious usages which the wise man rebukes. Joseph Pitts describes such women as sitting at their doors and walking in the streets unveiled, and adds, "These sparks go along the streets smoking their pipes four or five feet long ; and when they sit at their doors a man can scarce pass by but they will endeavour to decoy him in." Lane also takes notice of their custom of sitting or walking about the streets unveiled ; and their importunity to passengers.

CHAPTER X.

From this chapter to the five and twentieth are sundry observations of moral virtues, and their contrary vices.

THE proverbs of Solomon. ¹A wise son maketh a glad father : but a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother.

2 ²Treasures of wickedness profit nothing : but righteousness delivereth from death.

3 ³The LORD will not suffer the soul of the righteous to famish : but he casteth away ⁴the substance of the wicked.

4 ⁵He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand : but the hand of the diligent maketh rich.

5 He that gathereth in summer is a wise son : but he that sleepeth in harvest is a son that causeth shame.

6 Blessings are upon the head of the just : but ⁶violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.

7 ⁷The memory of the just is blessed : but the name of the wicked shall rot.

8 The wise in heart will receive commandments : but ⁸a prating fool ⁹shall fall.

9 ¹⁰He that walketh uprightly walketh surely : but he that perverteth his ways shall be known.

10 ¹¹He that winketh with the eye causeth sorrow : but a prating fool ¹²shall fall.

11 ¹³The mouth of a righteous man is a well of life : but violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.

12 Hatred stirreth up strifes : but ¹⁴love covereth all sins.

13 In the lips of him that hath understanding wisdom is found : but a rod is for the back of him that is void of ¹⁵understanding.

14 Wise men lay up knowledge : but the mouth of the foolish is near destruction.

15 ¹⁶The rich man's wealth is his strong city : the destruction of the poor is their poverty.

16 The labour of the righteous tendeth to life : the fruit of the wicked to sin.

17 He is in the way of life that keepeth instruction : but he that refuseth reproof ¹⁷ereth.

18 He that hideth hatred with lying lips, and he that uttereth a slander, is a fool.

19 In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin : but he that refraineth his lips is wise.

CHAP. X.—The book of Proverbs, properly so called, may be said to begin with this chapter, the portion through which we have passed being to be regarded in the light of a general introduction to the whole. The portion on which we now enter is susceptible of a sufficiently distinct division into four parts, the first of which extends from hence to chap. xxii. 16, and consists of brief and pointed expressions, for the most part antithetical, and in which, of course, from the very nature of this kind of composition, little if any connection between the several sentences is to be found or expected. A “proverb,” strictly speaking, is a short moral sentence, which means something else than the words naturally and literally imply. A great number of the sentences in the present book correspond to this definition; but the Hebrew word (מְשֻׁלִּים meshlim) has a larger meaning, comprehending, also, plain maxims, sentiments, and declarative expressions—such as compose by far the greatest portion of the book of “Proverbs.”

Verse 11. “A well of life.”—This means the same as “a living well,” that is, a well supplied by a perennial spring, as distinguished from the reservoirs and cisterns in which rain-water was preserved.

31. “The froward tongue shall be cut out.”—It is very possible that this alludes to a punishment actually inflicted upon those who indulged their tongue in offensive licence. This at least sometimes happens in the East, and particularly in Persia, where we have sometimes met with persons whose tongues have been cut out, by royal or princely order, for offences with that organ. The most notorious modern instance is perhaps that of the late king’s treatment of his aged vizier, Hajee Ibrahim, who, when the machinations of his enemies prevailed (in 1802), was degraded and condemned to lose his eyes; and when, with Persian liberty of speech, he exclaimed against the injustice and ingratitude of his royal master, the king ordered his tongue to be cut out. He did not long survive.

5 The righteousness of the perfect shall ⁷direct his way: but the wicked shall fall by his own wickedness.

6 The righteousness of the upright shall deliver them: but ⁸transgressors shall be taken in their own naughtiness.

JUSTICE.—REYNOLDS.

'Lying lips are abomination to the Lord : but they that deal truly are his delight.'—Verses 22.

19 The lip of truth shall be established for ever: but a lying tongue is but for a moment.

20 Deceit is in the heart of them that imagine evil: but to the counsellors of peace is joy.

21 There shall no evil happen to the just: but the wicked shall be filled with mischief.

22 Lying lips are abomination to the LORD: but they that deal truly are his delight.

23 ¹⁶A prudent man concealeth knowledge: but the heart of fools proclaimeth foolishness.

24 ¹⁷The hand of the diligent shall bear rule: but the ¹⁸slothful shall be under tribute.

25 ¹⁹Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop: but a good word maketh it glad.

26 The righteous is more ²⁰excellent than his neighbour: but the way of the wicked seduceth them.

27 The slothful man roasteth not that which he took in hunting: but the substance of a diligent man is precious.

28 In the way of righteousness is life; and in the pathway thereof there is no death.

¹⁸ Or, deceitful.

¹⁹ Chap. 15. 13.

²⁰ Or, abundant.

Verse 27. "The slothful man roasteth not that which he took in hunting."—This is a difficult text, and has been variously translated and explained. The difficulty arises from the uncertainty of the word (חַרַק charak), which occurs nowhere else, except in the Chaldee of Daniel iii. 29, where it certainly means, to singe or burn. But it does not follow that it has the same meaning in the Hebrew, which has other, common, words to express this. If therefore we neglect the Chaldee, and seek a meaning in the Hebrew only, we shall be rather led to conclude that it means to seize, or secure. This sense is indeed that which the ancient versions give, and furnishes a clear meaning which it is perhaps difficult to obtain from the present translation. It might then intimate that diligence is in every way so essential, that not only the occupations of men, but many of their amusements—such as hunting, would be abortive without it: thus, "The slothful (hunter) secures not his prey."

CHAPTER XIII.

A WISE son heareth his father's instruction: but a scorner heareth not rebuke.

2 ¹A man shall eat good by the fruit of his mouth: but the soul of the transgressors shall eat violence.

3 He that keepeth his mouth keepeth his life: but he that openeth wide his lips shall have destruction.

4 The soul of the sluggard desireth, and hath nothing: but the soul of the diligent shall be made fat.

5 A righteous man hateth lying: but a wicked man is loathsome, and cometh to shame.

6 ²Righteousness keepeth him that is upright in the way: but wickedness overthroweth ³the sinner.

7 There is that maketh himself rich, yet hath nothing: there is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches.

8 The ransom of a man's life are his riches: but the poor heareth not rebuke.

9 The light of the righteous rejoiceth:

⁴but the ⁵lamp of the wicked shall be put out.

10 Only by pride cometh contention: but with the well advised is wisdom.

11 ⁶Wealth gotten by vanity shall be diminished: but he that gathereth ⁷by labour shall increase.

12 Hope deferred maketh the heart sick: but when the desire cometh, it is a tree of life.

13 Whoso despiseth the word shall be destroyed: but he that feareth the commandment ⁸shall be rewarded.

14 ⁹The law of the wise is a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death.

15 Good understanding giveth favour: but the way of transgressors is hard.

16 ¹⁰Every prudent man dealeth with knowledge: but a fool ¹¹layeth open his folly.

17 A wicked messenger falleth into mischief: but a faithful ambassador is health.

21 Evil pursueth sinners : but to the righteous good shall be repayed.

22 A good man leaveth an inheritance to his children's children : and the ¹³wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just.

23 ¹⁴Much food is in the tillage of the poor : but there is that is destroyed for want of judgment.

24 ¹⁵He that spareth his rod hateth his son : but he that loveth him chasteneth him betimes.

Verse 20. "He that walketh with wise men shall be wise." —The Orientals abound in proverbs, maxims, and apologues, designed to express the influence upon the character of good or evil associations. So the Arabic proverbs :—"Live with him who prays, and thou prayest; live with the singer, and thou singest."—"He who intimately frequents people for forty days has become one of their number."—"He has been among the onions and returns with their strong smell."—

The last finds a beautiful contrast in the apologue of the Persian moralist Saadi :—"A friend of mine put into my hands a piece of scented clay. I took it, and said to it, 'Art thou musk or ambergris, for I am charmed with thy perfume?' It answered, 'I was a despicable piece of clay, but I was sometime in the company of the rose: the sweet quality of my companion was communicated to me; otherwise I should only be a bit of clay, as I appear to be.'"

CHAPTER XIV.

EVERY wise woman buildeth her house : but the foolish plucketh it down with her hands.

2 He that walketh in his uprightness feareth the LORD : ¹but he that is perverse in his ways despiseth him.

3 In the mouth of the foolish is a rod of pride : but the lips of the wise shall preserve them.

4 Where no oxen are, the crib is clean : but much increase is by the strength of the ox.

5 ²A faithful witness will not lie : but a false witness will utter lies.

6 A scorner seeketh wisdom, and findeth it not : but ³knowledge is easy unto him that understandeth.

7 Go from the presence of a foolish man, when thou perceivest not in him the lips of knowledge.

8 The wisdom of the prudent is to understand his way : but the folly of fools is deceit.

9 ⁴Fools make a mock at sin : but among the righteous there is favour.

10 The heart knoweth ⁵his own bitterness ; and a stranger doth not intermeddle with his joy.

11 The house of the wicked shall be overthrown : but the tabernacle of the upright shall flourish.

12 ⁶There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death.

13 Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful ; and the end of that mirth is heaviness.

14 The backslider in heart shall be ⁷filled with his own ways : and a good man shall be satisfied from himself.

15 The simple believeth every word : but the prudent man looketh well to his going.

16 A wise man feareth, and departeth from evil : but the fool rageth, and is confident.

17 He that is soon angry dealeth foolishly : and a man of wicked devices is hated.

18 The simple inherit folly : but the prudent are crowned with knowledge.

19 The evil bow before the good ; and the wicked at the gates of the righteous.

20 ⁸The poor is hated even of his own neighbour : but ⁹the rich hath many friends.

23 In all labour there is profit: but the talk of the lips tendeth only to penury.

24 The crown of the wise is their riches: but the foolishness of fools is folly.

25 ¹¹A true witness delivereth souls: but a deceitful witness speaketh lies.

26 In the fear of the LORD is strong confidence: and his children shall have a place of refuge.

27 ¹²The fear of the LORD is a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death.

28 In the multitude of people is the king's honour: but in the want of people is the destruction of the prince.

29 He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding: but he that is ¹³hasty of spirit exalteth folly.

30 A sound heart is the life of the flesh: but envy the rottenness of the bones.

31 ¹⁴He that oppresses the poor reproacheth his Maker: but he that honoureth him hath mercy on the poor.

32 The wicked is driven away in his wickedness: but the righteous hath hope in his death.

33 Wisdom resteth in the heart of him that hath understanding: but that which is in the midst of fools is made known.

34 Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach ¹⁵to any people.

35 The king's favour is toward a wise servant: but his wrath is against him that causeth shame.

Verse 13. "Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful."—This finely alludes to the natural or forced laugh of agony or sorrow, which is far more terrible than tears, and which shows that the utmost extremes of hilarity on the one hand, and of bitterness on the other, may be equally expressed by the same sign—laughter, but not the same laughter. The Arabians have observed this, and in their proverbs compare such laughter to "the laughter of the nut (when cracked) between two stones," or to "the laughter of serpents in the sack of burning lime." The last refers to the agonized hissing of serpents, when tortured by being put into bags of unslaked lime, on which water is poured.

CHAPTER XV.

A 'SOFT answer turneth away wrath: but grievous words stir up anger.

2 The tongue of the wise useth knowledge aright: ²but the mouth of fools ³poureth out foolishness.

3 'The eyes of the LORD are in every place, beholding the evil and the good.

4 'A wholesome tongue is a tree of life: but perverseness therein is a breach in the spirit.

5 'A fool despiseth his father's instruction: but he that regardeth reproof is prudent.

6 In the house of the righteous is much treasure: but in the revenues of the wicked is trouble.

7 The lips of the wise disperse knowledge: but the heart of the foolish doeth not so.

8 'The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the LORD: but the prayer of the upright is his delight.

9 The way of the wicked is an abomination unto the LORD: but he loveth him that followeth after righteousness.

10 'Correction is grievous unto him that forsaketh the way: and he that hateth reproof shall die.

11 'Hell and destruction are before the LORD: how much more then the hearts of the children of men?

12 A scorner loveth not one that reproveth him: neither will he go unto the wise.

13 ¹⁰A merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance: but by sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken.

14 The heart of him that hath understanding seeketh knowledge: but the mouth of fools feedeth on foolishness.

18 ¹³A wrathful man stirreth up strife: but he that is slow to anger appeaseth strife.

19 The way of the slothful man is as an hedge of thorns: but the way of the righteous ¹⁴*is* made plain.

20 ¹⁵A wise son maketh a glad father: but a foolish man despiseth his mother.

21 ¹⁶Folly is joy to him that is ¹⁷destitute of wisdom: but a man of understanding walketh uprightly.

22 ¹⁸Without counsel purposes are disappointed: but in the multitude of counselors they are established.

23 A man hath joy by the answer of his mouth: and a word spoken ¹⁹in due season, how good is it!

24 ²⁰The way of life is above to the wise, that he may depart from hell beneath.

25 ²¹The LORD will destroy the house of the proud: but he will establish the border of the widow.

26 ²²The thoughts of the wicked are an abomination to the LORD: but the words of the pure are ²³pleasant words.

27 He that is greedy of gain troubleth his own house; but he that hateth gifts shall live.

28 The heart of the righteous studieth to answer: but the mouth of the wicked poureth out evil things.

29 ²⁴The LORD is far from the wicked: but ²⁵he heareth the prayer of the righteous.

30 The light of the eyes rejoiceth the heart: and a good report maketh the bones fat.

31 The ear that heareth the reproof of life abideth among the wise.

32 He that refuseth ²⁶instruction despiseth his own soul: but he that ²⁷heareth reproof ²⁸getteth understanding.

Verse 17. "A dinner of herbs... a stalled ox."—There here seems an evident intention to place in the most marked opposition the commonest repasts of the people with the most luxurious entertainments of the great. It may seem to us remarkable that beef should be fixed upon as the prominent and characteristic article in the feasting of the wealthy. The text, however, merely corroborates observations we have already made, that the mass of the people seem to have made their principal daily meal upon pottages or crude vegetables, and that animal food was only in common use among the rich. Numerous passages, supported by the current usages of the East, might be cited in support of this statement. It is indeed true that the Hebrews appear to have had flocks and herds in abundance: but this is no objection to the conclusion: for it is a singular fact that a pastoral people (such as the Arabs) eat even less animal food than the inhabitants of towns. They prefer to live on the produce of their cattle, than to diminish their stock by constant slaughter. Besides this, the daily necessity for such food is not generally recognised in the East, although often indulged in, beyond all reasonable bounds of moderation, when it can be obtained. See the note on chap. xxiii. 20.

PRUDENCE.—REYNOLDS.

“The wise in heart shall be called prudent.”—Verse 21.

7 When a man's ways please the LORD, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him.

8 ⁹ Better is a little with righteousness than great revenues without right.

9 ¹⁰ A man's heart deviseth his way: but the LORD directeth his steps.

10 ¹¹ A divine sentence is in the lips of the king: his mouth transgresseth not in judgment.

11 ¹² A just weight and balance are the LORD's: ¹³ all the weights of the bag are his work.

12 It is an abomination to kings to commit wickedness: for the throne is established by righteousness.

13 Righteous lips are the delight of kings; and they love him that speaketh right.

14 The wrath of a king is as messengers of death: but a wise man will pacify it.

15 In the light of the king's countenance is life; and ¹⁴ his favour is as a cloud of the latter rain.

16 ¹⁵ How much better is it to get wisdom than gold? and to get understanding rather to be chosen than silver?

17 The highway of the upright is to depart from evil: he that keepeth his way preserveth his soul.

18 ¹⁶ Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall.

19 Better it is to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud.

21 The wise in heart shall be called prudent: and the sweetness of the lips increaseth learning.

22 ¹⁹Understanding is a wellspring of life unto him that hath it: but the instruction of fools is folly.

23 The heart of the wise ²⁰teacheth his mouth, and addeth learning to his lips.

24 Pleasant words are as an honeycomb, sweet to the soul, and health to the bones.

25 ²¹There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death.

26 ²²He that laboureth laboureth for himself; for his mouth ²³craveth it of him.

27 ²⁴An ungodly man diggeth up evil: and in his lips there is as a burning fire.

28 ²⁵A froward man ²⁶soweth strife: and a whisperer separateth chief friends.

29 A violent man enticeth his neighbour, and leadeth him into the way that is not good.

30 He shutteth his eyes to devise froward things: moving his lips he bringeth evil to pass.

31 The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness.

32 He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city.

Verse 14. "The wrath of a king is as messengers of death."—This doubtless refers to the manner in which execution was, and is still, in the East, performed upon persons who were high enough to incur the immediate wrath of the king. This may be explained by an account of the usage in Persia. When the king has determined on the death of a governor of a province, or a nobleman residing at court, an order for his execution is made out, sealed with the royal signet, and committed to an officer appointed for the purpose. "This man," to continue in the language of Mr. Fraser, "rides post, pressing horses as he requires them. Then, presenting himself to the principal person of the place, he shows the royal mandate, and forces the individual to accompany him, and lend his assistance. He enters the house of the condemned, booted, armed, and travel-stained, walks straight up to his victim, takes the warrant from his bosom, and places it in the hands of his witness; then, drawing his scimitar, he rushes on the unfortunate criminal, exclaiming, 'It is the king's command,' cuts him down, and strikes off his head. Resistance is seldom offered; for, were the delinquent powerful enough for the attempt, the messenger of death would never arrive to execute the decree; and there have been instances, when the person proscribed was not in actual rebellion, of his causing the fatal officer to be robbed of his warrant, thus gaining time till intercession could be made for his pardon. But when once his destination is reached, escape is scarcely possible; for terror of the royal name arms every one against him who is denounced,—even in his own house he is viewed as an excommunicated wretch, whom to assist or touch were ruin. Should the sentence only imply disgrace, or when its extent is yet unknown, it is melancholy to see how the object of kingly displeasure is instantaneously forsaken like an infected creature. 'All nature,' says Chardin, 'seems roused against him; and the man, the glance of whose eye but a moment before would have shed delight upon thousands of dependants, might then in vain solicit a cup of water or the use of a calceon.' This will enable the reader to understand the strong terms in which the wrath of a king is described throughout the present book; and it may be well to compare it with the account, in 1 Kings ii., of Joab's execution by the order of its royal author.

Verse 12. "A bear robbed of her whelps."—This image several times occurs in the Scriptures. The rage of the female bear, when her young have been killed or taken from her, has been often noticed, and forms the subject of many interesting anecdotes in voyages and travels. There do not indeed seem to be any animals which, more strongly than the bear, manifest that attachment to their young which the wise providence of God has implanted, with various degrees of intensity, in most brute creatures. In the narrative of Lord Mulgrave's voyage for the discovery of a north-west passage, there is a touching story of a bear whose young had been shot from the ship. Though herself wounded, she scorned to withdraw and leave her young behind. She would not understand that they were dead; she placed meat before them, and by every endearing motion solicited them to eat; she endeavoured to raise them with her paws; she withdrew and looked back as expecting them to follow; but, seeing that they lay motionless, she returned, and with inexpressible fondness walked round them, pawing them, licking their wounds, and moaning bitterly the while. "It would," says the narrator, "have drawn tears of compassion from the eyes of any but those who possessed hearts of adamant, to observe the affectionate concern of this poor beast." At last, as if receiving the unwilling conviction that her young were dead indeed, she turned towards the ship, and uttered a fierce and bitter growl against the murderers, which they answered by a volley of shot that laid her dead beside her young. So fine a trait in the character of the bear might well be noticed by the Sacred writers. It is said that the attachment between the dam and her young is reciprocal, and that no circumstance of danger or alarm can drive the latter from their dead or living mother.

Oriental Gate.

19. "He that exalteth his gate seeketh destruction."—This is literally true at the present day in the East; but whether this literal interpretation be that which the sacred writer had in view it may be difficult to determine. It will be remembered that the Oriental houses do not front the street, but that the entrance from thence leads to a court in which, or in another beyond it, the front of the main building appears. Hence little indication can be gathered in the street concerning the probable character of the interior building, or the rank or wealth of its inmate, but from the appearance of the gate. Aware of this, and aware also that to excite the cupidity of the ruling powers by any indication of wealth is to seek destruction, the wealthiest persons are careful, among other precautions, that their gate shall not betray them, by being less low or mean than the gates of their neighbours. In going through a street, the doors are almost invariably of the most beggarly description, very low, and, although strong, formed of rough, unpainted wood: and on visiting persons whom he may know to be wealthy, the traveller is surprised to be conducted to a gate which in his own country he would consider unworthy of a stable or an outhouse, and which but ill prepares him for the splendour and luxury which he may probably find when he reaches the interior. Yet the Orientals are vain of appearances; and it does sometimes happen that a wealthy man so far forgets himself, or thinks he has such ground for confidence, as to exalt his gate, in the style which our present engraving exhibits: but it rarely happens that he has long to wait, before he finds cause to learn that by this act he sought his own destruction. In the city of Bagdad, the only exalted gate to a private residence which the present writer recollects to have seen, belonged to the house of a Moslem of large wealth, and of so much influence in the city as, he thought, might allow him to display it freely. He was mistaken. One day when riding through the street in which we lived, he was dragged from his horse, near our door, and put to death on the spot, by order of the pasha, who immediately took possession of all his property.

CHAPTER XVIII.

'THROUGH desire a man, having separated himself, seeketh and intermeddeth with all wisdom.

2 A fool hath no delight in understanding, but that his heart may discover itself.

3 When the wicked cometh, then cometh also contempt, and with ignominy reproach.

4 'The words of a man's mouth are as deep waters, and the wellspring of wisdom as a flowing brook.

5 'It is not good to accept the person of the wicked, to overthrow the righteous in judgment.

6 A fool's lips enter into contention, and his mouth calleth for strokes.

7 'A fool's mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul.

8 'The words of a 'talebearer are 'as wounds, and they go down into the 'innermost parts of the belly.

9 He also that is slothful in his work is brother to him that is a great waster.

10 'The name of the LORD is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and ¹⁰is safe.

11 'The rich man's wealth is his strong city, and as an high wall in his own conceit.

12 'Before destruction the heart of man is haughty, and before honour is humility.

13 He that ¹³answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him.

14 The spirit of a man will sustain his infirmity; but a wounded spirit who can bear?

15 The heart of the prudent getteth knowledge; and the ear of the wise seeketh knowledge.

16 'A man's gift maketh room for him, and bringeth him before great men.

17 He that is first in his own cause seemeth just; but his neighbour cometh and searcheth him.

18 The lot causeth contentions to cease, and parteth between the mighty.

19 A brother offended is harder to be won than a strong city: and their contentions are like the bars of a castle.

20 'A man's belly shall be satisfied with the fruit of his mouth; and with the increase of his lips shall he be filled.

21 Death and life are in the power of the tongue: and they that love it shall eat the fruit thereof.

22 'Whoso findeth a wife findeth a good thing, and obtaineth favour of the LORD.

23 The poor useth intreaties; but the rich answereth 'roughly.

24 A man that hath friends must shew himself friendly: ¹⁸and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.

Verse 16. "A man's gift maketh room for him," &c.—This is remarkably true, at this day, in the East, where, as we have noticed on several former occasions, a complimentary present is most essential as an introduction to the presence and favourable notice of the great.

18. "The lot causeth contentions to cease."—The lot under various forms, is still much employed in the East to decide among equally balanced claims or alternatives, or in other matters which the judgment finds no way to determine with satisfaction: as its award is seldom disputed, the reference to it is all the more frequent.

CHAPTER XIX.

¹BETTER is the poor that walketh in his integrity, than he that is perverse in his lips, and is a fool.

²Also, that the soul be without knowledge, it is not good; and he that hasteth with his feet sinneth.

³The foolishness of man perverteth his way: and his heart fretteth against the LORD.

⁴Wealth maketh many friends; but the poor is separated from his neighbour.

⁵A false witness shall not be 'unpunished, and he that speaketh lies shall not escape.

⁶Many will intreat the favour of the prince: and every man is a friend to 'him that giveth gifts.

⁷All the brethren of the poor do hate him: how much more do his friends go far from him? he pursueth them with words, yet they are wanting to him.

⁸He that getteth 'wisdom loveth his own soul: he that keepeth understanding shall find good.

⁹A false witness shall not be unpunished, and he that speaketh lies shall perish.

¹⁰Delight is not seemly for a fool; much less 'for a servant to have rule over princes.

¹¹The 'discretion of a man deferreth his anger; and it is his glory to pass over a transgression.

¹²The king's wrath is as the roaring of a lion; but his favour is as dew upon the grass.

¹³A foolish son is the calamity of his father: 'and the contentions of a wife are a continual dropping.

¹⁴House and riches are the inheritance of fathers: and 'a prudent wife is from the LORD.

¹⁵Slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep; and an idle soul shall 'suffer hunger.

¹⁶'He that keepeth the commandment keepeth his own soul; but he that despiseth his ways shall die.

¹⁷'He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the LORD; and 'that which he hath given will he pay him again.

¹⁸'Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare 'for his crying.

¹⁹A man of great wrath shall suffer punishment: for if thou deliver him, yet thou must 'do it again.

²⁰Hear counsel, and receive instruction, that thou mayest be wise in the latter end.

²¹'There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless the counsel of the LORD, that shall stand.

²²The desire of a man is his kindness: and a poor man is better than a liar.

²³The fear of the LORD tendeth to life: and he that hath it shall abide satisfied; he shall not be visited with evil.

²⁴'A slothful man hideth his hand in his bosom, and will not so much as bring it to his mouth again.

²⁵'Smite a scorner, and the simple 'will beware: and reprove one that hath understanding, and he will understand knowledge.

²⁶He that wasteth his father, and chaseth away his mother, is a son that causeth shame, and bringeth reproach.

²⁷Cease, my son, to hear the instruction that causeth to err from the words of knowledge.

²⁸'An ungodly witness scorneth judgment: and the mouth of the wicked devour-eth iniquity.

²⁹Judgments are prepared for scorners, and stripes for the back of fools.

Verse 24. "A slothful man hideth his hand in his bosom."—Instead of "bosom," read "dish," which is unquestionably the right meaning. It is known that the Orientals in eating use no knives, forks, or (except for liquids) spoons. In eating certain dishes, as rice or stews, it is therefore not merely necessary to pick up a morsel, but to collect and detain it in the hand: but however it is considered highly indecorous to introduce much of the hand into the dish; the proper way being to collect and take up the mouthful with the fingers only, or indeed, in strict propriety, with only three fingers. Now we understand the text to express, that a slothful man will be guilty of the gross indecorum of hiding his hand in the dish, in order to take up a large handful, rather than be at the trouble of repeating the action of the hand between the dish and the mouth as often as an adherence to the rules of decorum would render necessary. For a man to hide his hand in the dish among the Orientals, is nearly as great an impropriety as it would be among ourselves for a man to put his hand in the dish at all.

CHAPTER XX.

WINE is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.

2 ¹The fear of a king is as the roaring of a lion: whoso provoketh him to anger sinneth against his own soul.

3 It is an honour for a man to cease from strife: but every fool will be meddling.

4 ²The sluggard will not plow by reason of the ³cold; therefore shall he beg in harvest, and have nothing.

5 ⁴Counsel in the heart of man is like deep water; but a man of understanding will draw it out.

6 Most men will proclaim every one his own ⁵goodness: but a faithful man who can find?

7 The just man walketh in his integrity: ⁶his children are blessed after him.

8 A king that sitteth in the throne of judgment scattereth away all evil with his eyes.

9 ⁷Who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin?

10 ⁸⁹Divers weights, and ¹⁰divers measures, both of them are alike abomination to the LORD.

11 Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right.

12 ¹¹The hearing ear, and the seeing eye, the LORD hath made even both of them.

13 ¹²Love not sleep, lest thou come to poverty; open thine eyes, and thou shalt be satisfied with bread.

14 It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is ¹³gone his way, then he boasteth.

15 There is gold, and a multitude of rubies: but the lips of knowledge are a precious jewel.

16 ¹⁴Take his garment that is surety for a stranger: and take a pledge of him for a strange woman.

17 ¹⁵Bread of deceit is sweet to a man; but afterwards his mouth shall be filled with gravel.

18 ¹⁶*Every* purpose is established by counsel; and with good advice make war.

19 ¹⁷He that goeth about as a talebearer revealeth secrets: therefore meddle not with him that ¹⁸flattereth with his lips.

20 ¹⁹Whoso curseth his father or his mother, his ²⁰lamp shall be put out in obscure darkness.

21 An inheritance may be gotten hastily at the beginning; but the end thereof shall not be blessed.

22 ²¹Say not thou, I will recompense evil; but wait on the LORD, and he shall save thee.

23 ²²Divers weights are an abomination unto the LORD; and ²³a false balance is not good.

Verse 26. "Bringeth the wheel over them."—This is most probably an allusion to one of the ancient and still subsisting processes employed in the East for threshing corn. This is not by the simple treading of cattle, but by driving over the corn a sort of sledge, furnished with wheels which act upon it. The sledge, as now employed in Egypt and elsewhere, consists of two pieces of wood joined together by two cross-pieces. Between the larger sides of this sledge are fixed, transversely, three rows of small wheels, made of iron, and narrowed off towards their circumference. Upon the sledge is a high and broad seat, on which a man sits to drive the oxen which are harnessed to the machine. The whole moves on slowly, and always in a circular direction, over every part, till no more grain remains in the straw. There is a representation of this in an engraving under Deut. xxv.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE king's heart is in the hand of the LORD, as the rivers of water : he turneth it whithersoever he will.

2 ¹ Every way of a man is right in his own eyes : but the LORD pondereth the hearts.

3 ² To do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the LORD than sacrifice.

4 ³ An high look, and a proud heart, and ⁴ the plowing of the wicked, is sin.

5 The thoughts of the diligent tend only to plenteousness ; but of every one that is hasty only to want.

6 ⁵ The getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro of them that seek death.

7 The robbery of the wicked shall ⁶ destroy them ; because they refuse to do judgment.

8 The way of man is froward and strange : but as for the pure, his work is right.

9 ⁷ It is better to dwell in a corner of the housetop, than with ⁸ a brawling woman in ⁹ a wide house.

14 ¹⁵A gift in secret pacifieth anger: and a reward in the bosom strong wrath.

15 It is joy to the just to do judgment: but destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity.

16 The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead.

17 He that loveth ¹⁶pleasure shall be a poor man: he that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich.

18 ¹⁷The wicked shall be a ransom for the righteous, and the transgressor for the upright.

19 ¹⁸*It is* better to dwell ¹⁹in the wilderness, than with a contentious and an angry woman.

20 There is treasure to be desired and oil in the dwelling of the wise; but a foolish man spendeth it up.

Verse 1. "As the rivers of water: he turneth it."—This seems to allude to the manner in which gardens and plantations are watered in the East, by means of various small trenches or canals, into or from any of which the gardener turns the rills of water at pleasure.

9. "It is better to dwell in a corner of the housetop," &c. —Although it is very common in the East for people who sleep on the house-tops during the nights of summer to have their beds on the perfectly open terrace, yet in some parts and in some households it is preferred to have on the roof, during that season, certain slight constructions, frequently of wicker, forming very small closets, without any door, in which the persons severally sleep. These are by no means suited for occupation during the day, and still less for permanent residence; and perhaps Solomon means that it were better to reside by day, or even constantly, in these little tenements, than in a wide house with a contentious woman. The cut we offer in illustration is drawn from a model of an Egyptian house in the collection of the late Mr. Salt.

Verse 13. "There is a lion without," &c.—The slothful man is probably here represented as making an excuse from attending to any duty which required him to go out at night or early in the morning. That such an excuse could be made, seems to imply that the presence of a lion in the streets, although unlikely, was not an impossible circumstance. In fact, it is a long time before countries bordered by deserts or thinly peopled regions, and containing woods and mountains, cease to be infested by wild beasts, which, when hard pressed by hunger, will at night enter the villages and unwall'd towns. It is said of the lion, as of many other beasts of prey, that although while young and active it subsists by hunting, and seldom quits its native desert or forest, yet that when its powers of exertion become impaired by age, it approaches frequented places, and becomes more dangerous to man and the domestic animals. We read, long after the time of Solomon, that the Cuthites, whom the king of Assyria settled in Samaria, suffered so greatly from the lions, as to occasion them to send a representation of their condition to the Assyrian court: and although these lions were sent among them by the special judgment of God, the fact has an illustrative connection with the present text, as showing that the animals from which they suffered so terribly, occasionally manifested their presence in the settled parts of the country, even in the most prosperous days of the Hebrew commonwealth.

17. "Bow down thine ear," &c.—The part from hence to the end of chap. xxiv., is usually considered to form the third of the distinctly marked sections, into which this book may be divided. Dr. Good says, "It commences with an obvious break and apostrophe at the seventeenth verse, and intimates in the twentieth verse, when correctly rendered, that it is a third undertaking, division, or series of the subject." He also thinks, which some may doubt, that this intimation also imports that the arrangement was made by Solomon himself. It is, as he describes, "A miscellaneous collection of proverbs and parables, brief axioms, and figurative descriptions. It is consequently modelled after both the preceding parts, and contains moral instruction for all the different stages of life."

CHAPTER XXIII.

WHEN thou sittest to eat with a ruler, consider diligently what is before thee:

2 And put a knife to thy throat, if thou be a man given to appetite.

3 Be not desirous of his dainties: for they are deceitful meat.

4 ¹Labour not to be rich: cease from thine own wisdom.

5 ²Wilt thou set thine eyes upon that which is not? for riches certainly make themselves wings; they fly away as an eagle toward heaven.

6 Eat thou not the bread of him that hath an evil eye, neither desire thou his dainty meats:

7 For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he: Eat and drink, saith he to thee; but his heart is not with thee.

8 The morsel which thou hast eaten shalt thou vomit up, and lose thy sweet words.

9 Speak not in the ears of a fool: for he will despise the wisdom of thy words.

Verse 2. "Put a knife to thy throat."—The common explanation of this is, that a person of intemperate appetites does, at the tables of the great, expose himself to as much danger as if a knife were at his throat. Perhaps it may mean, that he should eat as guardedly as if a knife were at his throat. But we suspect that the real point of the allusion is lost; nor is this wonderful, when we consider that in all countries there are proverbial expressions to which a meaning is conventionally assigned, which the words do not naturally suggest, and which no foreigner would suspect. Many such expressions also originate in incidents, the memory of which is often in the course of time lost, even by those who continue to use the proverb in the sense which it has always borne.

6. "Him that hath an evil eye."—We have seen this text illustrated by ample details of the superstitions concerning what is called the "evil eye." But is not such a line of illustration improper, as tending to intimate that the Scripture gives its sanction to so very foolish a delusion? Besides the context clearly shows that nothing more is intended than to express the disquiet with which a niggardly person regards what another consumes at his table.

20. "Riotous eaters of flesh."—To us this seems a singular expression. But it will be recollected that, as we have explained on two or three former occasions, flesh is not habitually eaten in the East, and there are very many who rarely indeed taste it; but when they do get enough of it, they indulge in it most intemperately, and manifest a degree of hilarity very much like that which would attend the consumption of strong drink in our northern climates. We have the Arabs more especially, but not by any means exclusively, in view; for the present expression has on several occasions been brought forcibly to our recollection on witnessing the strong and irrepressible satisfaction with which a party of these people would receive the present of a live sheep, the haste with which it was slaughtered and dressed, the voracity with which it was devoured, and the high glee, not unattended with the dance and song, which crowned the feast. Perhaps, however, under that feeling, with respect to the use of animal food, which is here indicated, the sacred writer intends to characterise the frequent use of flesh as a wasteful extravagance.

30. "That tarry long at the wine."—This is exactly what the Orientals do in their potations. They have no notion of enjoyment in drink separately from the intoxication it produces; and hence when they get drink, they usually indulge in it to the last degree of excess. When a man wishes to entertain his friends with wine, they generally meet early, and continue at it for a whole day, or a whole night, or even a day and night together, with intervals of eating, and amusement of songs, music, and recitation. D'Arvieux has a very illustrative story on this subject. While he was staying among the Arabs of Mount Carmel, a wreck took place on the coast, from which one of the emirs obtained two large casks of wine. He forthwith sent to the neighbouring emirs, inviting them to come and drink it. They gladly came, and continued drinking for two days and two nights, till not a drop of the wine was left. Still unsatisfied, they considered how to obtain a further supply, but seeing no prospect of success, departed to their respective camps. During all this time they never quitted the table, except to rest in some corner of the tent, after which they resumed their places. (See verse 35.) In like manner Tavernier relates that the king of Persia sent for him early one morning (see Isa. v. 11) to the palace where, with other persons, he was obliged to sit all the day, and till late at night, drinking wine with the Shah; but at last, "the king growing sleepy, gave us leave to depart, which we did very willingly, having had hard labour for seventeen hours together."

CHAPTER XXIV.

BE not thou 'envious against evil men, neither desire to be with them.

2 'For their heart studieth destruction, and their lips talk of mischief.

3 Through wisdom is an house builded; and by understanding it is established:

4 And by knowledge shall the chambers be filled with all precious and pleasant riches.

5 A wise man 'is strong; yea, a man of knowledge 'increaseth strength.

6 'For by wise counsel thou shalt make thy war: and in multitude of counsellors there is safety.

7 Wisdom is too high for a fool: he openeth not his mouth in the gate.

8 He that deviseth to do evil shall be called a mischievous person.

9 The thought of foolishness is sin: and the scorner is an abomination to men.

10 If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is 'small.

11 'If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain;

12 If thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not; doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it? and he that keepeth thy soul, doth not he know it? and shall not he render to every man 'according to his works?

13 My son, eat thou honey, because it is good; and the honeycomb, which is sweet 'to thy taste:

14 'So shall the knowledge of wisdom be unto thy soul: when thou hast found it, 'then there shall be a reward, and thy expectation shall not be cut off.

15 Lay not wait, O wicked man, against the dwelling of the righteous; spoil not his resting place:

16 'For a just man falleth seven times, and riseth up again: but the wicked shall fall into mischief.

17 'Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth, and let not thine heart be glad when he stumbleth:

18 Lest the LORD see it, and 'it displease him, and he turn away his wrath from him.

19 'Fret not thyself because of evil men, neither be thou envious at the wicked;

20 For there shall be no reward to the evil man; 'the 'candle of the wicked shall be put out.

21 My son, fear thou the LORD and the king: and meddle not with 'them that are given to change:

22 For their calamity shall rise suddenly; and who knoweth the ruin of them both?

23 These things also belong to the wise. 'It is not good to have respect of persons in judgment.

24 'He that saith unto the wicked, Thou art righteous; him shall the people curse, nations shall abhor him:

25 But to them that rebuke him shall be delight, and 'a good blessing shall come upon them.

Verse 11. "To deliver them that are drawn unto death."—Perhaps this alludes to a very humane precaution, which, as the Hebrew writers inform us, was used in case of capital convictions. The condemned criminal was at once taken from the judgment-seat to outside the town for execution; and as he was led slowly along, a crier went before, proclaiming his crime, and calling on those who had aught, even then, to allege in his behalf, to come forward. If any one responded to the call, the convict was led back to the tribunal, for the new evidence to be heard. This also happened when the criminal himself stated that he had something further to allege in his own defence; and he might five times avail himself of this indulgence. And still further, as it might occur that a person would apply to the judges to offer evidence while the culprit was led to execution, a man was stationed at the door of the court-house with a linen cloth in his hand, which, when this happened, he waved as a signal to another man stationed at some distance on a swift horse, who immediately rode off to arrest the execution. The text may thus be understood to declare it the duty of every one to stand forth and state what he could in the condemned man's behalf. (See Lewis's 'Origines Hebrææ,' vol. i. p. 71.)

Verse 1. "Which the men of Hezekiah...copied out."—We now enter upon what may properly be regarded as an appendix; and this character of it, seems clearly enough to imply that the preceding portions were collected and arranged in their present form, if not in the time and under the direction of Solomon himself, at least before that of Hezekiah, to whose reign the collection of the five first chapters of this appendix is expressly assigned in the present verse. As we know from Scripture that Solomon composed more works than our Bibles exhibit, it is probable that the present collection (to the end of chap. xxix.), forming the fourth portion of the book, was made from a larger number left by Solomon among the archives of the royal library, which descended to Hezekiah: the copyists, being the scribes or other confidential officers of Hezekiah's court, are supposed by Grotius and others, from 2 Kings xviii. 18, to have been Eliakim, Shebna, and Joab, acting under the king's commands; but who are rather supposed by Dr. Good to have been the Ithiel and Ucal named in chap. xxx. 1. Whoever copied them, nothing can be more probable than that, in taking this measure, the king acted under the advice, if not by the direction, of the inspired prophets who lived in his reign—as Isaiah, Hosea, and Micah; and it is very possible that they, or some one of them, actually made the selection.

11. "Apples of gold in pictures of silver."—Some, understanding the "apples of gold" to be fruits of a golden colour, as citrons or oranges, render "apples of gold in baskets of silver," or, as Patrick, "in baskets of silver net-work;" but this last is a paraphrase, and to be literal, if we retain "net-work," we must omit "basket," and read, with Lowth, "Apples of gold in a network of silver." Others, however, conceive that the "apples of gold" mean figures of the fruit in the precious metal, and render, "Apples of gold enchased in silver," or "among figures of silver." It is difficult to say which of these interpretations is the best; but as we know that the Hebrews, in their highest style of costly ornament, employed figures of fruits in precious metal, we rather incline to the last stated explanation.

13. "The cold of snow in the time of harvest."—Many modern interpreters suppose that this intimates that the Hebrews, during their hot summers, were accustomed to cool their drinks with snow or ice. This is very probable; for the practice prevailed in very ancient times, and still does so in the East, wherever ice or snow can be procured. The Persians, for instance, consume great quantities of ice during the summer, which they obtain and preserve in pits, according to a process of which a particular description may be found in Chardin, 'Voyages,' t. iv. ch. 15. Snow is also preserved, when it can be obtained; for they have an opinion that drinks, and in particular sherbets, cooled with snow, are much more agreeable than those with which ice is taken.

Verse 8. "As he that bindeth a stone in a sling."—Some suppose that by "stone" we should understand a precious stone, which would be thrown away if thus employed. But perhaps it may be well to take the rendering of our version in its more obvious meaning, which by laying a stress upon the "bindeth," would intimate as a stone bound, instead of being loosely set in a sling, cannot be thrown, and is therefore ineffective; so, &c.

14. "Hinges."—Perhaps "pivots" would be more correct. The doors in the East do not turn on hinges, nor did those of the classical ancients. They turned on pivots, sometimes of metal, but generally of the same substance as the door, which worked in sockets, above and below, in the door frame. As the weight of the whole door rests on the lower pivot, it opens with much less ease than one mounted on hinges, particularly when the lower socket becomes worn by the weight and friction. This may perhaps give some point to the allusion. The classical ancients appear to have used hinges only for boxes, and sometimes for windows.

23. "Potsherd covered with silver dross."—The reader will not overlook the evidence which this text offers of the antiquity of the art of silvering earthenware.

Verse 10. "Neither go into thy brother's house in the day of thy calamity."—This, coupled with the direction rather to apply to an acquired friend, or the father's friend, is in accordance with the general practice in the East; where persons more usually think of applying in their distresses to the old friends of the family, the associates of their father, or to their own personal friends, than to their near relatives by birth or marriage.

17. "Iron sharpeneth iron."—This probably alludes to a file, showing the antiquity of that instrument. It is known that files were used by the Roman smiths.

22. "Bray a fool in a mortar."—It seems to have been a form of capital punishment in some nations, as formerly among the Turks, to pound the criminal to death with a heavy pestle in a great mortar. But it is very questionable whether we are to infer from the present text that any such punishment was known to the Jews.

—"among wheat with a pestle."—We do not infer that this implies that the wheat was pounded to meal instead of being ground; but that it was pounded to be separated from the husk. The Jews probably had no rice; but there are several passages from which we may gather that they used wheat in the same way that rice is now used—that is, boiled up in pillaus, variously prepared. In fact, we have partaken of wheat thus employed, in the remote mountains where rice could not be obtained, or only at a price which the villagers could not afford; and it is also so used among the Arabs, forming a very palatable and nutritive food. For this purpose it is necessary that, as with rice, the husk should be previously disengaged from the grain; and if we suppose this object was attained with wheat, by a similar treatment with that to which rice is now subjected, the present text may be very satisfactorily explained. There are men, and even women, who gain their bread by the labour of husking rice, which they generally perform in pairs. Their implements consist of a rude wooden mortar, formed of a block hollowed out; pestles, about five feet long, with a heavy block of wood at the upper end; and a sieve for sifting the pounded grain. They carry these utensils to the house where their services are required; and, if men, strip to the skin (except their drawers), and pursue their labour in a shady part of the court-yard. When two work together, they commonly stand opposite each other, and strike their pestles into the mortar alternately as blacksmiths strike their iron. Sometimes, however, one pestle alone acts, and the labourers relieve each other; the relieved person taking the easier duty of supplying the mortar, and removing and sifting the cleaned grain. From the weight of the pestle, the labour of pounding is very severe, and the results of the process are but slowly produced.

25. "Hay."—This is very inaccurate, as indeed the context shows, for hay, which is simply grass cut down after it is come to maturity, cannot be said to precede or be associated in growth with the "tender grass." In fact, hay is not made in the East: and Boothroyd's translation is here doubtless preferable,—"The grass shooteth, the tender herb appeareth," &c.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

General observations of impiety and religious integrity.

THE 'wicked flee when no man pursueth: but the righteous are bold as a lion.

2 For the transgression of a land many are the princes thereof: but 'by a man of understanding and knowledge the state thereof shall be prolonged.

3 A poor man that oppresseth the poor is like a sweeping rain which leaveth no food.

4 They that forsake the law praise the wicked: but such as keep the law contend with them.

5 Evil men understand not judgment: but they that seek the Lord understand all things.

6 'Better is the poor that walketh in his uprightness, than he that is perverse in his ways, though he be rich.

7 'Whoso keepeth the law is a wise son: but he that 'is a companion of riotous men shameth his father.

8 'He that by usury and 'unjust gain increaseth his substance, he shall gather it for him that will pity the poor.

9 He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination.

10 'Whoso causeth the righteous to go astray in an evil way, he shall fall himself into his own pit: but the upright shall have good things in possession.

11 The rich man is wise 'in his own conceit; but the poor that hath understanding searcheth him out.

12 'When righteous men do rejoice, there is great glory: but when the wicked rise, a man is 'hidden.

13 'He that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy.

14 Happy is the man that feareth alway: 'but he that hardeneth his heart shall fall into mischief.

15 As a roaring lion, and a ranging bear; so is a wicked ruler over the poor people.

16 The prince that wanteth understanding is also a great oppressor: but he that hateth covetousness shall prolong his days.

17 'A man that doeth violence to the blood of any person shall flee to the pit; let no man stay him.

18 'Whoso walketh uprightly shall be saved: but he that is perverse in his ways shall fall at once.

19 'He that tilleth his land shall have plenty of bread: but he that followeth after vain persons shall have poverty enough.

20 A faithful man shall abound with blessings: 'but he that maketh haste to be rich shall not be 'innocent.

21 'To have respect of persons is not good: for for a piece of bread that man will transgress.

22 'He that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye, and considereth not that poverty shall come upon him.

Verse 3. "A sweeping rain which leaveth no food."—This doubtless refers to a strong and calamitous exhibition of those periodical rains which follow the long-continued drought of summer. Although these rains are not usually so vehement in Palestine and the neighbouring countries, as in tropical regions; they are still such as astonish Europeans, and are sometimes attended with the most awful devastations, particularly when the rivers and brooks overflow their bounds, and sweep over the most carefully cultivated and best inhabited districts which are always situated near them. Besides the ruinous consequences to the cultivation, the poor particularly suffer; for their humble dwellings, being usually constructed with mud or sun-dried bricks, are often swept away at the first overflow; but if this does not happen, the foundations are soon soaked through and dissolved in the water, when the whole fabric falls, frequently involving the inhabitants in its destruction.

dition as a slave is gradually forgotten by his master, and is never learnt by himself; and if the master has no son, it not unfrequently happens that this favoured young slave becomes such by formal adoption.

CHAP. XXX.—This and the following chapter are considered to form a fifth division, or a second section of the fourth division, of the book of Proverbs. The present chapter is said to be composed of “the words of Agur;” but this and the other names of the first verse are understood as appellatives in the Septuagint and Vulgate, and as such are rather tortuously explained and commented upon by the early Christian writers, and by some continental interpreters, who follow the Vulgate. This explanation assigns the authorship to Solomon; but does not explain the marked difference of style between this and the preceding chapters, and the inapplicability of some of its sentiments to the condition of that great and wise king (verses 2, 3, 8). But the notion is relinquished by nearly all modern interpreters, who agree with our version in considering “Agur” to be the proper name of some unknown person, distinguished for his wisdom, and whose words were deemed worthy of a place in the same book with those of Solomon. But Dr. J. M. Good (in the ‘Memoirs of his Life,’ by Dr. Gregory), while he allows Agur to have been a person distinct from Solomon, regards him as merely the reporter, to Ithiel and Ucal, of proverbs which that monarch delivered. The two last-named persons he conceives to have been “the men of Hezekiah,” who “copied out” the proverbs of the preceding portion of the book; and yet, by a very singular anachronism in so accurate a writer, conjectures that Agur was a confidential friend of Solomon. If Ithiel and Ucal were “the men of Hezekiah,” Agur of course lived in the same reign. But it is absolutely uncertain who the persons named in this verse were, or when they lived, as the names occur nowhere else in all the Bible, except that of Ithiel (perhaps not the same person) in Neh. xi. 7.

Verse 15. “The horseleach.”—The word is only found here; but this sense is given to it in all the ancient versions, and Bochart has not been successful in an attempt to allegorize it. The use which we find even in the insatiable and disgusting thirst for blood which the leech exhibits is unknown in the East, and it is hence spoken of with unmingled horror and aversion, particularly as it causes the destruction of many valuable animals, by fastening under their tongues when they come to drink; when it often happens that, although the leech be taken away, the wounded beast continues to bleed slowly, till it ultimately dies.

17 “The ravens . . . shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it.”—It is an ascertained fact that ravens, which feed on carrion, commence their repast upon the eyes of the animal the carcase of which they have discovered; and it is equally true that the eagles and falcons, which take living prey, when the game is large and powerful, aim their attacks at the eyes, which they instinctively know to be the readiest way of disabling their victim. This is often observed in Persia, where different kinds of fierce and powerful falcons and hawks are used in taking small game, as well as in rendering powerful assistance to the hunters in the pursuit of large wild animals, the boar excepted. This they do by fixing on the animal, planting their talons in its flesh, and pecking its eyes with the beak or beating them with the wings, till the poor animal, utterly confused, and distracted with pain, is soon overtaken and slain by the hunters. Chardin was informed that, down to the early part of the sixteenth century, fierce falcons, from Mount Caucasus, were trained to fly at men and treat them in the manner just described; and he understood that some such birds were still kept in the king's bird-house. He adds, “I never saw any of them myself, but I heard that Ali Kouli Khan, the governor of Tauris, with whom I had been particularly acquainted, could not refrain from diverting himself with this dangerous and cruel sport, even at the expense of his friends. It happened one day, that one of these birds was let fly at a gentleman, and, not being called off in time, put out his eyes, so that he died from the fright and the pain. The king, being informed of this, was so incensed that he soon after withdrew his favour from him.” (‘Voyages,’ tome iii. p. 396.)

25. “The ants . . . prepare their meat in the summer.”—The common opinions concerning the ants, which are frequently alluded to by ancient writers, are, that they lay up corn against winter, which they deposit in suitable cells or store-houses, which the wet cannot easily reach; that if, through excessive rain, the corn be wetted, they bring it out to dry in the sun; and that, as a further measure of precaution, they destroy the vegetative power of the corn by biting off the ends of each grain. These circumstances have often been alleged in illustration of the present text and that, to a similar purport, in chap. vi.; and the text itself has been considered to give its authoritative sanction to their truth. But these old opinions have been strongly disputed by modern naturalists, who inform us that the ants do not store any food against winter, for they become torpid in that season, and do not require any; that the corn which they are sometimes seen to carry is used for building materials, for which purpose the wood-ants take almost any portable substance in their neighbourhood; and that the grain which they have been supposed to bring out from their cells to dry will prove to be their own eggs. All that we could say with respect to the affirmation supposed to be involved in the present text, and the denial of modern naturalists, has been so ably anticipated by Kirby and Spence, that we have nothing to do but cite the passage. "Till the manners of exotic ants are more accurately explored, it would however be rash to affirm that no ants have stores of provisions; for although, during the cold of our winters in this country, they remain in a state of torpidity, and have no need of food, yet in warmer regions, during the rainy seasons, when they are probably confined to their nest, a store of provisions may be necessary for them. Even in northern climates, against wet seasons, they may provide in this way for their sustenance, and that of the young brood, which, as Mr. Smeatham observes, are very voracious, and cannot bear to be long deprived of their food; else why do ants carry worms, living insects, and many other such things to their nests? Solomon's lesson to the sluggard has generally been adduced as a strong confirmation of the ancient opinion; it can however only relate to the species of a warm climate, the habits of which are probably different from those of a cold one; so that his words, as commonly interpreted, may be perfectly correct and consistent with nature, yet not be at all applicable to the species that are indigenous to Europe. But I think, if Solomon's words are properly considered, it will be found that this interpretation has been fathered upon them, rather than really deduced from them. He does not affirm that the ant, which he proposes to the sluggard as an example, laid up in her magazine stores of grain; but that, with considerable prudence and foresight, she makes use of the proper seasons to collect a quantity of provisions sufficient for her purposes. There is not a word in them implying that she stores up grain or other provision. She prepares her bread and gathers her food, namely, such food as is suited to her, in summer and harvest, this is, when it is most plentiful; and thus shows her wisdom and prudence in using the advantages offered to her. The words thus interpreted, which they may be without any violence, will apply almost as well to the species among us as to those that are not indigenous." We thus see that the text is not committed to any of the opinions which have been disputed, and that, even if it were so in that single point to which it has seemed more particularly to tend, it may be a fact, and not merely an accommodation to current opinion. In fact, the opinion as to the ant's storing food (not corn particularly) seems to have originated in the East, and from thence we have no information that disproves it. There the opinion is still entertained, as in the proverb, "What the ant collects in a year, the monks eat up in a night." We regret that, while in the East, our attention was not so called to the subject as to lead to careful observation; and all we can state is, that in very mild extra-tropical climates of Asia, where frost is seldom known in winter, the ants do not make their appearance in that season; so that they must require stored food, unless the cold even of such mild winters suffices to render them torpid.

26. "Conies."—It is on the sole authority of the Rabbinical writers that the Hebrew שפן shaphan has been identified with the cony, or rabbit. That this conclusion cannot be correct is very evident. The rabbit is not an Asiatic animal, and it is very far from being solicitous of a rocky habitation, which is the distinguishing characteristic by which the shaphan is here mentioned. Some therefore, who reject this explanation, suppose the Jerboa to be intended; and this opinion has the sanction of Bochart, probably from his being unacquainted with the Daman, or Hyrax Syriacus, which corresponds far better than any other animal that has been found to the brief intimations which the Scriptures convey. Daman is the Syrian name of the animal: the Arabs call it Nabr, and the Abyssinians Ashkoko. The same species is found in Lebanon, among the mountains and rocks of Syria and Palestine, in those of Arabia and Abyssinia, and probably extends to Southern Africa. Under its Abyssinian name of Ashkoko, a very full description of the animal has been given by Bruce, and the general accuracy of his account has been attested by more recent observations. He strongly advocates its identity with the shaphan; and shows how inapplicable the Scriptural intimations are to the rabbit. We may leave it to the engraving to show the general appearance of this animal, and the characterising details of its form, only directing particular attention to the roundness of the ears, the length of the hind legs, the form of the feet, and the absence of a tail—of which, however, the rudiments appear in the skeleton. Its size corresponds pretty nearly to that of the hare; and its general colour is grey mixed with a reddish brown, but white under the belly, and blackish about the fore feet. It is so much an animal of the rock, that Bruce says he never saw one upon the ground, or from among the large stones at the mouth of the caves, holes, and clefts of the rock, in which it resides. They are gregarious animals, living in families; they appear to subsist on grain, fruits, and roots; and certainly chew the cud, as the shaphan is said to do in Levit. xi. 5. Bruce says that they do not appear to have any cry; and adds, that they do not stand upright in walking, but seem to steal along, as in fear, with the belly near the ground, advancing a few steps at a time, and then pausing. "They have something very mild, feeble-like, and timid in their deportment; are gentle and easily tamed, though, when roughly handled at first, they will bite." Possibly it is to this that Agur refers in calling them "a feeble folk:" although perhaps this may rather allude to their feet, which are described as being soft and tender, very liable to be hurt and excoriated, and which do not enable the animal to dig its own habitation, as the rabbit does; and in this sense, the text would mean that the shaphan, being disqualified by the feebleness of its feet from scooping out its own habitation in the plain, has the sagacity to seek in the mountain habitations ready formed or completed with ease, notwithstanding that the sharp asperities of the rocks, among which it is thus led to dwell, might be supposed hurtful to its feet. However this be explained, it is certain that they are called "exceeding wise," with reference to their choice of habitations peculiarly suited to their condition: and they might be particularly mentioned in this view from the fact that animals of the class to which they belong are usually inhabitants of the plains. The flesh of the shaphan was forbidden to the Hebrews; and, in like manner, the Mohammedans and Christians of the East equally abstain from the flesh of the daman. Cuvier has some interesting observations, showing the resemblance, on a small scale, of this animal's skeleton to that of the rhinoceros; and says that there is no animal which more than the daman proves the necessity of anatomy for determining the true conformities of animals. We also give an engraving of the Syrian hare. The animal is not indeed here mentioned: but, as we did not give its figure under Lev. xi. 6, we avail ourselves of the present opportunity of supplying the omission.

31. "A greyhound."—This rendering is very questionable. The original זרזיר מתנין zirzir mathenim, means literally, "the girded (or tightly-braced) about the loins," or, more shortly, "the loin-braced:" and different interpreters, according to their respective views as to the most proper application of such a phrase, have referred it to the war-horse, the zebra, the greyhound, &c. The first seems the most probable alternative, and has received the sanction of Bochart, Gesenius, Boothroyd, and others.

1 Lemuel's lesson of chastity and temperance. 6 The afflicted are to be comforted and defended. 10 The praise and properties of a good wife.

THE words of king Lemuel, the prophecy that his mother taught him.

2 What, my son? and what, the son of my womb? and what, the son of my vows?

3 Give not thy strength unto women, nor thy ways to that which destroyeth kings.

4 It is not for kings, O Lemuel, it is not for kings to drink wine; nor for princes strong drink:

5 Lest they drink, and forget the law, and 'pervert the judgment' of any of the afflicted.

6 'Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be 'of heavy hearts.

7 Let him drink, and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more.

8 Open thy mouth for the dumb in the cause of all 'such as are appointed to destruction.

9 Open thy mouth, 'judge righteously, and plead the cause of the poor and needy.

10 ¶ Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.

11 The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil.

12 She will do him good and not evil all the days of her life.

13 She seeketh wool, and flax, and worketh willingly with her hands.

14 She is like the merchants' ships; she bringeth her food from afar.

15 She riseth also while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household, and a portion to her maidens.

16 She considereth a field, and 'buyeth it: with the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard.

17 She girdeth her loins with strength, and strengtheneth her arms.

18 'She perceiveth that her merchandise is good: her candle goeth not out by night.

19 She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff.

20 'She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.

21 She is not afraid of the snow for her household: for all her household are clothed with 'scarlet.

22 She maketh herself coverings of tapestry; her clothing is silk and purple.

23 Her husband is known in the gates, when he sitteth among the elders of the land.

24 She maketh fine linen, and selleth it; and delivereth girdles unto the merchant.

25 Strength and honour are her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come.

26 She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.

27 She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.

28 Her children arise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her.

29 Many daughters 'have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all.

30 Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain: but a woman that feareth the LORD, she shall be praised.

31 Give her of the fruit of her hands; and let her own works praise her in the gates.

Verse 1. "King Lemuel."—Although it has been slightly questioned, there does not appear to be any solid reason for doubting the general opinion which supposes the name of Lemuel to be a substitution—seemingly a familiar one—for that of Solomon: and it does not seem necessary to state evidence in favour of a conclusion so well established. Lemuel being Solomon, the mother was of course Bathsheba, who appears to have composed these admonitory verses for her son when he was in the flower of youth and high expectation.

13. "She seeketh wool, and flax, and worketh willingly with her hands."—The whole picture here given of the character and occupations of a good and industrious housewife among the Hebrews is very instructive and interesting. Some part of the illustration it would require has already been given under different texts, and some other of the domestic usages which it indicates will hereafter come dispersedly under our notice: and this renders it unnecessary that we should here offer that connected mass of illustration which would otherwise be required.

We find in the history of every country, that, where the population is almost exclusively warlike, agricultural, or pastoral—and before trade is established with neighbouring nations and home manufactures become objects of attention—every kind of drapery for the person, the tent, or the house, is manufactured at home by the women, who take a pride in boasting that their husbands and children are solely attired by the labour of their hands. This is still the case among the pastoral tribes of Asia, among the poorer people who can themselves raise the materials of manufacture, and among the peasantry in various parts of the world, wherever the influence of extended traffic and manufactures has not been so diffused as to render it cheaper for even the poorest to purchase than to manufacture the articles they require. In the state of society which we have indicated, ladies of high station take the sole management of this and other branches of domestic economy, and work with their maidens; and in most cases the usage is kept up at least with respect to the finer works, from the influence of habit, long after improved means of supply would render it much more economical to obtain the required product by purchase than by domestic manufacture. The intimations of the present verse, and indeed of much of the whole description, correspond remarkably with the representation made by Homer of the employment of the most distinguished ladies, introduced in his epics. We see Penelope plying the spindle and loom, and tasking her maidens; we find the royal mother of Nausicaa at work beside the hearth, by the morning dawn, spinning soft fleeces dyed with the sea purple; and even the glorious Helenis represented as “weaving a gorgeous web,” representing the battles which nations waged for her sake. The proximity of time renders these indications interesting as illustrations; but others, quite as much to the purpose, might be derived from existing Oriental usages, nor less so indeed from the employments of English females, in even the highest walks of life, during the middle ages, if not at a comparatively recent period. At the present time, we need only cross the Channel, into Normandy, to witness many striking analogies to the domestic usages described in the present chapter.

15. “She riseth also while it is yet night.”—The Orientals retire to rest very early, and rise proportionably early in the morning. To be “up with the sun” is not, in the East, considered early rising. Every one not prevented by infirmity or sickness—from the sovereign to the meanest of his subjects—is usually up and dressed by the morning dawn: and even in the royal courts, the most important public business is transacted at a very early hour—before, in this country, the workman rises to his labour. The women, almost invariably, rise even sooner than the men; and, when not of the luxurious classes of society, often a good while before day: particularly when to their numerous affairs of domestic management is added the manufacture of stuffs for household use or sale—giving them incessant occupation, and leaving the day too short for their labours.

21. “Scarlet.”—The marginal reading, “double garments,” is to be preferred here. The original word radically implies duplication.

24. “Fine linen.”—The original word (רִמְדוֹ sadin) is another of those various words which our version equally renders by “fine linen.” The word is the same which occurs, in the plural, in Judges xiv. 12, 13 (see the note there), where it describes “sheets,” or, more probably, under garments or shirts, perhaps of linen: and it should here doubtless be understood in the same sense.

“Selleth it.”—Manufactures of the kind specified in this chapter being exclusively carried on in domestic establishments, and primarily for the use of the family, it would necessarily arise, that, when the hands in a family were more numerous than its wants required, there would be an inducement, in order to keep them profitably employed, to prepare a surplus, which might be advantageously sold to persons not similarly circumstanced: and when it was found that particular articles, as the shirts (?) and girdles in the present instance, were much in demand, there would be another inducement to apply the surplus labour more particularly to the preparation of such articles. In fact, we learn from this, how those who had no manufactures in their houses, or none sufficient for their wants, were supplied from the surplus of other families. The “merchant,” in the present verse, was probably a dealer or shopkeeper who bought and sold these products of female labour. At the present day we see offered for sale, in Oriental towns, either at first or second hand, the outer garments woven by the Arab females, the admired carpets made by the Eelaut women of Persia, and even the elegant embroideries wrought by the town ladies in their secluded harems.

As a concluding remark we may add, that we rise from this chapter with the impression that the women appear at this time to have filled, among the Hebrews, a more responsible place in society, and to have taken a more active part in its engagements, than we should otherwise have been led to imagine, or than is now often witnessed in the East.

ECCLESIASTES,

OR,

THE PREACHER.

CHAPTER I.

¹ The preacher sheweth that all human courses are vain: 4 because the creatures are restless in their courses, 9 they bring forth nothing new, and all old things are forgotten, 12 and because he hath found it so in the studies of wisdom.

HE words of the Preacher, the son of David, king of Jerusalem.

³ What profit hath a man of all his labour which he taketh under the sun?

⁴ One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh: ⁵but the earth abideth for ever.

⁵ The sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth down, and ⁶hasteth to his place where he arose.

⁶ The wind goeth toward the south, and turneth about unto the north; it whirleth about continually, and the wind returneth again according to his circuits.

⁷ *All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full; unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they ⁸return again.*

⁸ *All things are full of labour; man cannot utter it: the eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing.*

⁹ *The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun.*

¹⁰ *Is there any thing whereof it may be said, See, this is new? it hath been already of old time, which was before us.*

¹¹ *There is no remembrance of former things; neither shall there be any remembrance of things that are to come with those that shall come after.*

¹² ¶ I the Preacher was king over Israel in Jerusalem.

¹³ And I gave my heart to seek and search out by wisdom concerning all things that are done under heaven: this sore travail hath God given to the sons of man ¹⁴to be exercised therewith.

¹⁴ *I have seen all the works that are done under the sun; and, behold, all is vanity and vexation of spirit.*

¹⁵ *That which is crooked cannot be made straight: and ¹⁶that which is wanting cannot be numbered.*

¹⁷ *And I gave my heart to know wisdom, and to know madness and folly: I perceived that this also is vexation of spirit.*

¹⁸ *For in much wisdom is much grief: and he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow.*

ECCLESIASTES.—This title of the present book is taken from the Septuagint, which has ΕΚΚΛΗΣΙΑΣΤΗΣ, which means, one who convenes or addresses an assembly. This seems to be a sufficiently correct interpretation of the Hebrew title, קהלת kohleleth. It is the same word which is rendered "Preacher," in the first verse; and although this word does not exactly convey the full force of the original, it seems to make a nearer approach to it than any other single word in our language. Although the name of Solomon does not occur in the book, the general opinion, which has in all ages ascribed it to him, seems to be founded on such satisfactory internal evidence, that we do not conceive it necessary to detail the arguments by which the conclusion has been supported or disputed. This has been ably done by the Rev. G. Holden, in his 'Attempt to illustrate the Book of Ecclesiastes,' to which very valuable work we may refer those who entertain any doubts on the subject. The tradition of the Jews states that Solomon composed this book in his old age, after he had repented of his former vicious practices, and had become, by sad experience, fully convinced of the vanity of every thing terrestrial, except piety and wisdom. "Many parts of the work itself," says Mr. Holden, "corroborate this opinion. The acknowledgment of numerous follies and delusions implies that it was composed after the author had apostatized from Jehovah, and had subsequently repented of his past misconduct. The frequent assertion of the emptiness of earthly greatness; the declaration that human enjoyments are unsatisfactory; the enumeration of gardens, edifices, and possessions, requiring a long life for their completion; the deep condemnation of former pursuits; the expression of satiety and disgust at past pleasures; and the tone of cool and philosophical reflection which pervades the whole, are strikingly characteristic of an advanced period of life."

Various opinions have been entertained concerning the design and scope of the book of Ecclesiastes. We see no reason to withhold our assent to the general opinion, which regards it as an inquiry into the CHIEF GOOD. The inquiry after the Chief Good, the Summum Bonum, as it was called, was much practised by the old pagan philosophers: but it is ever to be remembered, that they only sought to know in what lay the prime happiness of this present life; whereas, as is well distinguished by Mr. Holden, the sovereign good, as understood by the author of the book before us, is that which is ultimately good;—that which, in all its bearings and relations, is conducive to the best interests of man. This is the object of the Preacher's inquiry; and, after discussing various erroneous opinions, he finally determines that it consists in TRUE WISDOM. The scope of the whole argument therefore is, the praise and recommendation of Wisdom, as the supreme good to creatures responsible for their actions. But in this wisdom there is nothing worldly or carnal; it is the wisdom from above—holy, spiritual, undefiled, and which, in the writings of Solomon, is but another name for Religion. Holden's copious and instructive 'Preliminary Dissertation,' in the above-named work, affords perhaps the best help in our language to the thorough understanding of one of the most difficult, if not the most difficult, book in the Old Testament.

Verse 1. "The Preacher."—This title has been explained, according to the interpretation which we consider the most probable, in the preceding note. The title was probably assumed by Solomon in consequence of his delivering his sage maxims and admonitions, to assemblages of persons who wished to profit by his instructions, and who perhaps resorted, on stated occasions, to his palace for the purpose. This is not mere conjecture. In chap. xii. 9, his custom of teaching the people is distinctly intimated; while, from 1 Kings iv. 34, we learn that kings and people, from surrounding nations, resorted to Jerusalem to hear his wisdom. That all these were instructed in private interviews is far less likely than that they heard him in meetings held occasionally or periodically, for the purpose. Such a custom would be perfectly in conformity with Oriental usage. Perhaps the practice of the Wahabee sultan, Ibn Saoud, may help us to some ideas on this point. "After supper he regularly assembled in the great room all his sons who happened to be at Derayah: and all those who were desirous of paying their court to him joined this family circle. One of the olemas then read a few pages of the Koran, or the Traditions of Mohammed, and explained the text according to the commentaries of the best writers. After him other olemas delivered lectures in the same manner, and Saoud himself always closed the meeting by taking the book and explaining every difficult passage. It is said that he equalled, or perhaps excelled, any of the olemas in the knowledge of religious controversy and of the law in general. His eloquence was universally admired; his voice remarkably sonorous and sweet at the same time, which made the Arabs say that 'his words all reached the heart.'" (Burckhardt's 'Materials for a History of the Wahabees,' p. 290.)

6. "The wind returneth again according to his circuits."—In Palestine and other Eastern countries, the winds are by no means so variable as with us. The same winds are with great confidence expected to return at the same times and seasons in every year; and it is to this apparent rotation, or periodical succession of the winds, that the Preacher appears to allude.

CHAPTER II.

1 The vanity of human courses in the works of pleasure. 12 Though the wise be better than the fool, yet both have one event. 18 The vanity of human labour, in leaving it they know not to whom. 24 Nothing better than joy in our labour; but that is God's gift.

I SAID in mine heart, Go to now, I will prove thee with mirth, therefore enjoy pleasure: and, behold, this also is vanity.

2 I said of laughter, It is mad: and of mirth, What doeth it?

3 I sought in mine heart ²to give myself unto wine, yet acquainting mine heart with wisdom; and to lay hold on folly, till I might see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven ³all the days of their life.

4 I made me great works; I builded me houses; I planted me vineyards:

5 I made me gardens and orchards, and I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits:

6 I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees:

7 I got me servants and maidens, and had ⁴servants born in my house; also I had great possessions of great and small cattle above all that were in Jerusalem before me:

³ Heb. the number of the days of their life.

8 ⁵I gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces: I gat me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as ⁶musical instruments, and that of all sorts.

9 So I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem: also my wisdom remained with me.

10 And whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them, I withheld not my heart from any joy; for my heart rejoiced in all my labour: and this was my portion of all my labour.

11 Then I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do: and, behold, all was ⁷vanity and vexation of spirit, and there was no profit under the sun.

12 ¶ And I turned myself to behold wisdom, ⁸and madness, and folly: for what can the man do that cometh after the king? ⁹*even* that which hath been already done.

13 Then I saw ¹⁰that wisdom excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness.

14 ¹¹The wise man's eyes are in his head; but the fool walketh in darkness: and I myself perceived also that one event happeneth to them all.

15 Then said I in my heart, As it happeneth to the fool, so it ¹²happeneth even to me; and why was I then more wise? Then I said in my heart, that this also is vanity.

16 For there is no remembrance of the wise more than of the fool for ever; seeing that which now is in the days to come shall all be forgotten. And how dieth the wise man? as the fool.

17 Therefore I hated life; because the work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me: for all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

18 ¶ Yea, I hated all my labour which I had ¹³taken under the sun: because ¹⁴I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me.

19 And who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool? yet shall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have shewed myself wise under the sun. This is also vanity.

20 Therefore I went about to cause my heart to despair of all the labour which I took under the sun.

21 For there is a man whose labour is in wisdom, and in knowledge, and in equity; yet to a man that hath not laboured therein shall he ¹⁵leave it for his portion. This also is vanity and a great evil.

22 ¹⁶For what hath man of all his labour, and of the vexation of his heart, wherein he hath laboured under the sun?

23 For all his days are ¹⁷sorrows, and his travail grief; yea, his heart taketh not rest in the night. This is also vanity.

24 ¶ ¹⁸*There is* nothing better for a man, than that he should eat and drink, and that he ¹⁹should make his soul enjoy good in his labour. This also I saw, that it was from the hand of God.

25 For who can eat, or who else can hasten hereunto, more than I?

26 For God giveth to a man that is good ²⁰in his sight wisdom, and knowledge, and joy: but to the sinner he giveth travail, to gather and to heap up, that ²¹he may give to him that is good before God. This also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

Verse 6. "I made me pools of water."—The gardens and pools to which Solomon here refers are locally supposed to have been nearly three miles to the south of Bethlehem, where certain tanks or pools, called "the cisterns of Solomon," still appear. They are seated in a valley, and are three in number, each occupying a different level, and placed in a right line with each other, by which arrangement the surplus of the first flows into the second, which is again discharged into the third; and from thence a supply of living water was carried along the sides of the hills to Bethlehem and Jerusalem. The figure of the cisterns is rectangular: the two first are nearly of the same size, but the third is longer, narrower, and deeper. The measurements (in French feet) are thus stated by Cassas: The upper, or southern reservoir, 366 feet in length, 200 in breadth, and from 30 to 36 in depth; the second, 206 feet in breadth, but the same length and depth as the first; the third, or lowest, 480 feet long, 166 broad, and from 50 to 60 deep. They are lined with masonry, and there is a descent in each, by a narrow flight of steps at one of the corners. They are still in tolerable preservation, and might at a slight expense be perfectly restored. Buckingham found them quite dry in the month of January; but other travellers describe them as containing water at some seasons of the year. The source from which these cisterns were principally supplied is a fountain about a furlong distant. This is imagined by the monks at Bethlehem to be "the spring shut up, the fountains sealed," which supplies a comparison in Solomon's Song, iv. 12; and, in confirmation of this, they report a tradition, that king Solomon was wont to keep these springs shut up, and sealed with his signet, that he might preserve the waters in their natural freshness and purity for his own drinking. Maundrell, whose description of this place is the best we have, and in whose time the works seem to have been in rather a more perfect condition than at present, observes that it is not difficult thus to secure them, as they rise under ground, and there is no entrance to them but by a small hole like the mouth of a narrow well. From this there is a descent of about twelve feet to "a vaulted room, fifteen paces long by eight broad; joining to this is another room of the same fashion, but somewhat less. Both these rooms are covered with handsome stone arches, very ancient, and perhaps the work of Solomon himself. You find here four places at which the water rises; from those separate sources it is conveyed by little rivulets into a kind of basin, and from thence is carried by a large subterranean passage down into the pools. There is an aqueduct of brick pipes which receives part of the stream, and carries it by many turnings and windings about the mountains to Jerusalem." These aqueducts seem now to have fallen into decay from neglect.

To the northward of the cisterns the valley closes so as to form a narrow ravine, at the foot of the two opposite hills: and this is supposed by the local traditionists to be the place meant by the "garden enclosed," mentioned in connection with the "spring shut up and fountain sealed," in the above-cited text of Solomon's Song.

These reports are in themselves of no weight; and the conclusions which they state must be judged solely by their agreement with the Scriptural intimations. There is perhaps nothing now in Palestine that does agree better; but it does not necessarily follow that these must therefore be the works and objects indicated: and, in the present text, Solomon may be understood to refer to his cisterns, gardens, &c., in different parts of the country, rather than in one particular place, but whether those now described are of the number, it is impossible to determine. Maundrell's conclusion is, "As to the pools, it is probable enough that they may be the same with Solomon's, there not being the like store of excellent spring water to be met with any where else throughout all Palestine. But for the gardens, one may safely affirm, that if Solomon made them in the rocky ground which is now assigned for them, he demonstrated greater power and wealth in finishing his design, than he did wisdom in choosing a place for it." ('Journey,' p. 89. See also Buckingham's 'Travels in Palestine,' vol. i. p. 351; and Joliffe's 'Letters from Palestine,' vol. i. p. 97.)

GROUND PLAN OF THE POOLS OF SOLOMON.

CHAPTER III.

¹ By the necessary change of times, vanity is added to human travail. ¹¹ There is an excellency in God's works. ¹⁶ But as for man, God shall judge his works there, and here he shall be like a beast.

To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven:

2 A time ¹to be born, and a time to die; a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted;

3 A time to kill, and a time to heal; a time to break down, and a time to build up;

4 A time to weep, and a time to laugh; a time to mourn, and a time to dance;

5 A time to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones together; a time to embrace, and a time ²to refrain from embracing;

6 A time to ³get, and a time to lose; a time to keep, and a time to cast away;

7 A time to rend, and a time to sew; a time to keep silence, and a time to speak;

8 A time to love, and a time to hate; a time of war, and a time of peace.

9 'What profit hath he that worketh in that wherein he laboureth?

⁴ Chap. 1. 3.

11 He hath made every thing beautiful in his time: also he hath set the world in their heart, so that no man can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end.

12 I know that there is no good in them, but for a man to rejoice, and to do good in his life.

13 And also that every man should eat and drink, and enjoy the good of all his labour, it is the gift of God.

14 I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him.

15 ⁹That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth ⁶that which is past.

16 ¶ And moreover I saw under the sun the place of judgment, that wickedness was there; and the place of righteousness, that iniquity was there.

17 I said in mine heart, God shall judge the righteous and the wicked: for there is ⁷a time there for every purpose and for every work.

18 I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, ⁸that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts.

19 ⁹For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast: for all is vanity.

20 All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again.

21 Who knoweth the spirit ¹⁰of man that ¹¹goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?

22 ¹²Wherefore I perceive that there is nothing better, than that a man should rejoice in his own works; for that is his portion: for who shall bring him to see what shall be after him?

¹⁰ Heb. of the sons of man. ¹¹ Heb. is ascending. ¹² Chap. 2. 24, and 5. 18.

Verse 5. "A time to cast away stones," &c.—This has received various explanations—in fact, every explanation of which such a passage may be conceived to be capable of bearing. Upon the whole we incline, with Holden, to think that it should be taken in a general sense, signifying that there is a proper time for gathering stones, and a proper time to cast them away, for any purpose whatsoever. We think the same of all the other passages in this enumeration, which have been sometimes thought to bear a specific allusion to some particular usage or custom; such as, "A time to rend, and a time to sew," &c.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Vanity is increased unto men by oppression, 4 by envy, 5 by idleness, 7 by covetousness, 9 by solitariness, 13 by wilfulness.

So I returned, and considered all the ¹oppressions that are done under the sun: and behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and on the ²side of their oppressors there was power; but they had no comforter.

2 ³Wherefore I praised the dead which are already dead more than the living which are yet alive.

3 ⁴Yea, better is he than both they, which hath not yet been, who hath not seen the evil work that is done under the sun.

4 ¶ Again, I considered all travail, and ⁵every right work, that ⁶for this a man is envied of his neighbour. This is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

5 ⁷The fool foldeth his hands together, and eateth his own flesh.

6 ⁸Better is an handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travail and vexation of spirit.

7 ¶ Then I returned, and I saw vanity under the sun.

8 There is one alone, and there is not a second; yea, he hath neither child nor brother: yet is there no end of all his labour; neither is his eye satisfied with riches; neither saith he, For whom do I labour, and bereave my soul of good? This is also vanity, yea, it is a sore travail.

9 ¶ Two are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labour.

⁶ Heb. this is the envy of a man from his neighbour. ⁷ Prov. 6. 10, and 24. 33. ⁸ Prov. 15. 16, 17, and 16. 8.

10 For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: but woe to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up.

11 Again, if two lie together, then they have heat: but how can one be warm alone?

12 And if one prevail against him, two shall withstand him; and a threefold cord is not quickly broken.

13 ¶ Better is a poor and a wise child than an old and foolish king, 'who will no more be admonished.

14 For out of prison he cometh to reign; whereas also he that is born in his kingdom becometh poor.

15 I considered all the living which walk under the sun, with the second child that shall stand up in his stead.

16 There is no end of all the people, even of all that have been before them: they also that come after shall not rejoice in him. Surely this also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

* Heb. who knoweth not to be admonished.

Verse 11. "How can one be warm alone?"—Some have wondered at this question, considering the heat of the climate of Palestine, and that it is not usual in the East for two persons to sleep in the same bed, although many may have separate beds in the same room. For this reason Harmer conjectures that there is a reference to the fact that (as in the case of David, 2 Kings i.), in the age of Solomon, the sleeping of two persons together was regarded as a means of recalling the vital warmth when almost extinguished in one of them. But, after all, as, notwithstanding the general warmth of the climate, the winters were cold, and sometimes very severe, it seems quite as well to understand that the Hebrews did not habitually sleep alone during winter, whatever they may have done in summer.

14. "Out of prison he cometh to reign."—Bishop Warburton thinks that this alludes to some historical fact out of Judea, and which is unknown to us. Be this as it may, it may remind us of the policy which has prevailed in some Oriental courts, particularly that of the Turks, of immuring those who have any prospective claims to the throne within the walls of the seraglio, under a strict guard, and in actual imprisonment, to prevent them from carrying into effect any designs they might be led to entertain against the reigning prince. We need not mention how many monarchs of the Ottoman empire have, under this system, been brought forth from their prisons to reign.

CHAPTER V.

1 Vanities in divine service, 8 in murmuring against oppression, 9 and in riches. 18 Joy in riches is the gift of God.

KEEP thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear, 'than to give the sacrifice of fools: for they consider not that they do evil.

2 Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any 'thing before God: for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth: therefore let thy words 'be few.

3 For a dream cometh through the multitude of business; and a fool's voice is known by multitude of words.

4 'When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasure in fools: 'pay that which thou hast vowed.

5 Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay.

6 Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin; neither say thou before the angel, that it was an error: wherefore should God be angry at thy voice, and destroy the work of thine hands?

7 For in the multitude of dreams and many words there are also divers vanities: but fear thou God.

8 ¶ If thou seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province, marvel not 'at the matter: for he that is higher than the highest regardeth; and there be higher than they.

9 ¶ Moreover the profit of the earth is for all: the king himself is served by the field.

10 He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver; nor he that loveth abundance with increase: this is also vanity.

11 When goods increase, they are increased that eat them: and what good is there to the owners thereof, saving the beholding of them with their eyes?

12 The sleep of a labouring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep.

13 There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt.

14 But those riches perish by evil travail: and he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand.

15 'As he came forth of his mother's womb, naked shall he return to go as he came, and shall take nothing of his labour, which he may carry away in his hand.

16 And this also is a sore evil, that in all points as he came, so shall he go: and ⁸what profit hath he that hath laboured for the wind?

17 All his days also he eateth in darkness, and he hath much sorrow and wrath with his sickness.

18 ¶ Behold that which I have seen: ⁹ ¹⁰*it is* good and comely for one to eat and to drink, and to enjoy the good of all his labour that he taketh under the sun ¹¹all the days of his life, which God giveth him: for it is his portion.

19 Every man also to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoice in his labour; this is the gift of God.

20 ¹²For he shall not much remember the days of his life; because God answereth him in the joy of his heart.

Verse 1. "Keep thy foot."—This seems a general inculcation of decorum in the house of God, as indicated by a reference to the practice by which respect and reverence was, and is still, manifested in the East. This is done by throwing off the shoes or sandals, and leaving them outside; and another of the decorums connected with the feet is to conceal them under the dress while sitting, so that no part of them may be seen.

6. "The angel."—This has been variously explained; for the word מַלְאָךְ malach, literally means a messenger, in the simple sense of the word, and hence, an angel, or messenger of God, and by implication a prophet or priest. The Scripture uses the word in all these senses; and as it appears from the preceding verses that the passage refers to vows, concerning which it was the business of the priest to judge and decide, he is probably denoted in the present instance.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The vanity of riches without use. 3 Of children, 6 and old age without riches. 9 The vanity of sight and wandering desires. 11 The conclusion of vanities.

THERE is an evil which I have seen under the sun, and it is common among men:

2 A man to whom God hath given riches, wealth, and honour, so that he wanteth nothing for his soul of all that he desireth, yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof, but a stranger eateth it: this is vanity, and it is an evil disease.

3 ¶ If a man beget an hundred children, and live many years, so that the days of his years be many, and his soul be not filled with good, and also that he have no burial; I say, that an untimely birth is better than he.

4 For he cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkness, and his name shall be covered with darkness.

5 Moreover he hath not seen the sun, nor known any thing: this hath more rest than the other.

6 ¶ Yea, though he live a thousand years twice told, yet hath he seen no good: do not all go to one place?

7 All the labour of man is for his mouth, and yet the 'appetite is not filled.

8 For what hath the wise more than the fool? what hath the poor, that knoweth to walk before the living?

9 ¶ Better is the sight of the eyes 'than the wandering of the desire: this is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

10 That which hath been is named already, and it is known that it is man: neither may he contend with him that is mightier than he.

² Heb. than the walking of the soul.

11 ¶ Seeing there be many things that increase vanity, what is man the better?

12 For who knoweth what is good for man in this life, 'all the days of his vain life which he spendeth as 'a shadow? for who can tell a man what shall be after him under the sun?

Verse 3. "No burial."—The passage relates to the un-honoured end of an avaricious person,—however long his life, which might have naturally increased the number of the friends anxious to do him honour; or however numerous the children, whom ties still stronger might have bound to afford him that distinguished sepulture, about which most Asiatic nations always have been remarkably anxious. We are not, however, to understand "no burial" in the absolute sense as implying that the body should remain unburied; but as expressing the absence of those observances and that attendance which distinguished the funerals of the wealthy, or of those who had possessed the love and respect of their relatives and neighbours. The passage is, however, susceptible of another explanation, arising from the fact that the word employed (קבורה keburah), in other places, and probably here also, means rather a sepulchre than a burial; and thus understood, the text would appear to intimate that having, through his miserly disposition, neglected to provide himself with a large, excavated, family sepulchre, suited to his circumstances, and which people were generally anxious to go even beyond their means in securing before their deaths, he would have "no sepulchre," but be buried in the common grave-yards among the "mixed multitude." This was certainly counted a great degradation to those who had lived in good circumstances; and with respect to the other alternative, we may quote Lightfoot. "They accounted it the highest instance of respect, to lament the dead, to prepare things for the burial, to take care of the funeral, to put themselves under the bier, and to contribute all things needful for that solemnity with all diligence. Hence they appropriated 'the rendering (or bestowing) of mercies' to this duty in a particular sense, above all other demonstrations of charity." He then quotes a Rabbinical anecdote: "One of the disciples of the wise men died, and mercy was not yielded him;" that is, no care was taken of his funeral. "But a publican died, and the whole city left off work to yield him mercy." (Heb. and Talm. Exercitations upon St. Matthew, ix. 23.) This sufficiently shows the importance attached to honourable burial; the ideas connected with which we shall have still further occasions to illustrate.

CHAPTER VII.

¹ Remedies against vanity are, a good name, ² mortification, ⁷ patience, ¹¹ wisdom. ²³ The difficulty of wisdom.

A 'GOOD name is better than precious ointment; and the day of death than the day of one's birth.

2 ¶ It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to go to the house of feasting: for that is the end of all men; and the living will lay it to his heart.

3 'Sorrow is better than laughter: for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better.

4 The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning; but the heart of fools is in the house of mirth.

5 'It is better to hear the rebuke of the wise, than for a man to hear the song of fools.

6 For as the 'crackling of thorns under a pot, so is the laughter of the fool: this also is vanity.

7 ¶ Surely oppression maketh a wise man mad; 'and a gift destroyeth the heart.

8 Better is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof: and the patient in spirit is better than the proud in spirit.

9 'Be not hasty in thy spirit to be angry: for anger resteth in the bosom of fools.

10 Say not thou, What is the cause that the former days were better than these? for thou dost not enquire 'wisely concerning this.

11 ¶ Wisdom 'is good with an inheritance: and by it there is profit to them that see the sun.

12 For wisdom is a 'defence, and money is a defence: but the excellency of knowledge is, that wisdom giveth life to them that have it.

13 Consider the work of God: for 'who can make that straight, which he hath made crooked?

14 In the day of prosperity be joyful, but in the day of adversity consider: God also hath 'set the one over against the other, to the end that man should find nothing after him.

15 All things have I seen in the days of my vanity: there is a just man that perisheth in his righteousness, and there is a wicked man that longeth his life in his wickedness.

16 Be not righteous over much; neither make thyself over wise: why shouldest thou ¹²destroy thyself?

17 Be not over much wicked, neither be thou foolish: why shouldest thou die ¹³before thy time?

18 It is good that thou shouldest take hold of this; yea, also from this withdraw not thine hand: for he that feareth God shall come forth of them all.

19 ¹⁴Wisdom strengtheneth the wise more than ten mighty men which are in the city.

20 ¹⁵For there is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not.

21 Also ¹⁶take no heed unto all words that are spoken; lest thou hear thy servant curse thee:

22 For oftentimes also thine own heart knoweth that thou thyself likewise hast cursed others.

23 ¶ All this have I proved by wisdom:

¹⁷ Heb. I and my heart compassed.

¹⁸ Prov. 22. 14.

¹⁹ Heb. he that is good before God.

²⁰ Or, weighing one thing after another to find out the reason.

²¹ Gen. 1. 27.

Verse 6. "As the crackling of thorns under a pot."—This refers to the short-lived and noisy violence of this kind of fuel; and it is possible that the allusion derived the more point from a latent comparison to the slow and quiet burning of cow dung, which probably then was, as it now is, much used for fuel by the common people.

28. "A woman among all those have I not found."—This must certainly be understood with a qualification, which the history of Solomon's life and reign may enable us to discover. He mentions a thousand women; and as this was the number kept in his own seraglio, it is more than probable that he speaks exclusively of these. And this is confirmed, when we consider that these were the only women with whose character

I said, I will be wise; but it was far from me.

24 That which is far off, and exceeding deep, who can find it out?

25 ¹⁷I applied mine heart to know, and to search, and to seek out wisdom, and the reason of things, and to know the wickedness of folly, even of foolishness and madness:

26 ¹⁸And I find more bitter than death the woman, whose heart is snares and nets, and her hands as bands: ¹⁹whoso pleaseth God shall escape from her: but the sinner shall be taken by her.

27 Behold, this have I found, saith the preacher, ²⁰counting one by one, to find out the account:

28 Which yet my soul seeketh, but I find not: one man among a thousand have I found: but a woman among all those have I not found.

29 Lo, this only have I found, ²¹that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions.

he, from the usages of the East and his condition as a king, was likely to be acquainted. Indeed, it is easy to conceive him counting them over one by one in his mind, and successively considering their characters and dispositions, and arriving ultimately at the sorrowful conclusion, that not one among them was thoroughly virtuous and wise. Nor was this by any means wonderful: for there is not upon earth a system less calculated than that of the monarchical harems in the East, to bring out and preserve that which is true and beautiful in the character of woman, or to direct her mind to the cultivation of that real wisdom which the Preacher decides to be the chief good for all.

CHAPTER VIII.

¹ Kings are greatly to be respected. 6 The divine providence is to be observed. 12 It is better with the godly in adversity, than with the wicked in prosperity. 16 The work of God is unsearchable.

Who is as the wise man? and who knoweth the interpretation of a thing? ¹a man's wisdom maketh his face to shine, and ²the boldness of his face shall be changed.

2 I counsel thee to keep the king's commandment, and that in regard of the oath of God.

3 Be not hasty to go out of his sight: stand not in an evil thing; for he doeth whatsoever pleaseth him.

4 Where the word of a king is, there is power: and who may say unto him, What doest thou?

5 Whoso keepeth the commandment ³shall feel no evil thing: and a wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment.

6 ¶ Because to every purpose there is time and judgment, therefore the misery of man is great upon him.

³ Heb. shall know.

7 For he knoweth not that which shall be: for who can tell him 'when it shall be?

8 There is no man that hath power ⁵over the spirit to retain the spirit; neither hath he power in the day of death: and there is no ⁶'discharge in that war; neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it.

9 All this have I seen, and applied my heart unto every work that is done under the sun: there is a time wherein one man ruleth over another to his own hurt.

10 And so I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the holy, and they were forgotten in the city where they had so done: this is also vanity.

11 Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil.

12 ¶ Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that 'it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him:

13 But it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God.

14 There is a vanity which is done upon the earth; that there be just men, unto whom it ⁸'happeneth according to the work of the wicked; again, there be wicked men, to whom it happeneth according to the work of the righteous: I said that this also is vanity.

15 ⁹Then I commended mirth, because a man hath no better thing under the sun, than to eat, and to drink, and to be merry: for that shall abide with him of his labour the days of his life, which God giveth him under the sun.

16 ¶ When I applied mine heart to know wisdom, and to see the business that is done upon the earth: (for also there is that neither day nor night seeth sleep with his eyes:)

17 Then I beheld all the work of God, that a man cannot find out the work that is done under the sun: because though a man labour to seek it out, yet he shall not find it; yea farther; though a wise man think to know it, yet shall he not be able to find it.

⁴ Or, how it shall be.

⁵ Job 14. 5.

⁶ Or, casting off weapons.

⁷ Psal. 37. 11, 18, 19.

⁸ Psal. 73. 14.

⁹ Chap. 3. 22.

Verse 2. "The oath of God."—The name of God is added here, according to the usage of the Hebrew language, in the way of emphasis merely, to express the solemnity and importance of the oath of allegiance. There are frequent instances of this use of the sacred name in the Scriptures, it being in fact one of the regular forms of expressing emphasis, eminence, or distinction, or, of forming the superlative. Thus we read of "the trees—the mountains—the oath—of God, or, of the Lord,"—meaning very great trees, exceedingly high mountains, a most solemn oath, &c.

CHAPTER IX.

1 Like things happen to good and bad. 4 There is a necessity of death unto men. 7 Comfort is all their portion in this life. 11 God's providence ruleth over all. 13 Wisdom is better than strength.

FOR all this ¹I considered in my heart even to declare all this, that the righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God: no man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them.

2 ²All things come alike to all: there is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked; to the good and to the clean, and to the unclean; to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not: as is the good, so is the sinner; and he that sweareth, as he that feareth an oath.

3 This is an evil among all things that are done under the sun, that there is one event unto all: yea, also the heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart while they live, and after that they go to the dead.

4 ¶ For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope: for a living dog is better than a dead lion.

5 For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten.

¹ Heb. I gave, or, set to my heart.

² Psal. 73. 3, 12, 13. Mal. 3. 15.

6 Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

7 ¶ Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart; for God now accepteth thy works.

8 Let thy garments be always white; and let thy head lack no ointment.

9 ³Live joyfully with the wife whom thou lovest all the days of the life of thy vanity, which he hath given thee under the sun, all the days of thy vanity: 'for that is thy portion in this life, and in thy labour which thou takest under the sun.

10 Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

11 ¶ I returned, and saw under the sun, that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all.

12 For man also knoweth not his time: as the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men ⁵snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them.

13 ¶ This wisdom have I seen also under the sun, and it seemed great unto me:

14 There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it:

15 Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man.

16 ⁶Then said I, Wisdom is better than strength: nevertheless the poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.

17 The words of wise men are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools.

18 Wisdom is better than weapons of war: but one sinner destroyeth much good.

³ Heb. see, or, enjoy life.

⁴ Chap. 2. 24, and 3. 13, and 5. 18.

⁵ Prov. 29. 6.

⁶ Prov. 21. 22. Chap. 7. 19.

Verse 4. "A living dog is better than a dead lion."—The Arabs have exactly the same proverb, perhaps taken from hence. The Orientals generally are partial to such contrasted expressions, to denote that, with respect to this present world, he who enjoys life in its humblest condition is better circumstanced than the great and mighty in the cold oblivion of death.

"The standing thistle is better than the fallen cedar."—"The living sheep is better than the dead camel."—"The living hodman is better than the dead emperor;"—may be cited as parallel expressions.

8. "Garments....always white."—See the note on Ps. lxxviii. 14.

¹DEAD flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour: so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honour.

2 A wise man's heart is at his right hand; but a fool's heart at his left.

3 Yea also, when he that is a fool walketh by the way, ²his wisdom faileth him, and he saith to every one that he is a fool.

4 If the spirit of the ruler rise up against 14 "A fool also ¹¹is full of words: a man cannot tell what shall be; and ¹²what shall be after him, who can tell him?

15 The labour of the foolish wearieth every one of them, because he knoweth not how to go to the city.

Verse 1. "Dead flies," &c.—Similar to this is the Arabic proverb; "A fly is nothing, yet it creates loathsomeness." The disagreeable effects from the presence of dead insects in precious and delicate compounds, are more marked and sooner exhibited in the East than in our colder climates.

16. "Thy princes eat in the morning,"—Perhaps this verse refers to one of the forms of Oriental excess, that of beginning early in the morning a carouse that is designed to last best part of the day. Or, indeed, it may express disapprobation of any considerable meal in the early morning; for, this would certainly be now regarded in the East as great intemperance, no substantial indulgence in either eating or drinking till the day is far advanced, being considered proper. The Orientals, as we have lately mentioned, are up by day-break, and after having performed their devotions, take a cup of coffee and a pipe, and perhaps some time after a few morsels of bread, or some other small matter; which is all that they generally take till dinner, the time for which varies in different parts from ten o'clock till noon. Sometimes a very slight meal is taken in the early morning, particularly by the Turks, and in that case the dinner seldom takes place earlier than noon. The early meal, when taken, is of the most temperate description, consisting of bread, eggs, milk in various forms, cheese, butter, honey, sweetmeats, fruits, and the like. It is remarkable, indeed, in connection with this injunction against early eating, that the principal meal of the Orientals is the latest—the supper; the noonday meal, which we have called the dinner, being frequently made up from the remains of the preceding day's supper.

20. "A bird of the air shall carry the voice," &c.—Unless these expressions be purely metaphorical, it is not impossible that there may be some figurative allusion to the pigeons which were trained to carry written messages between distant places. This usage was certainly very ancient. The ninth ode of Anacreon relates solely to such a bird; and seems to denote that these pigeons were sometimes trained to the special service of particular persons. Bochart adduces some instances of their employment by the Romans. They have always been employed in such services in Western Asia, particularly at the ports, to notify to Aleppo and other towns the arrival of expected ships. The most satisfactory account of these winged messengers is perhaps that furnished by Father Averil (A.D. 1685), in mentioning his arrival in the port of Scanderoon. "The first thing we saw worth our observation here, was one of the flying messengers, sent, immediately after our arrival, to Aleppo, to give notice of it to the merchants at that place; which is done thus: Against the time that the merchants of Aleppo expect any ships to come to Scanderoon, they send by a servant a pigeon, which has young ones, to one of their correspondents there; who, having informed himself of what goods the vessel has brought, and what else is thought necessary to be known, writes letters of advice about it, which being fastened to the pigeon's neck, she is taken to the top of a hill, whence, without fail, she goes to Aleppo. The pigeon we saw let go, soared very high, doubtless to discover which way she was to fly, and within three hours arrived at Aleppo, which is thirty leagues from Scanderoon. But all sorts of pigeons are not alike useful for this purpose, there being a peculiar kind which are trained up for this exercise in most factories of the Levant, where they are frequently made use of for that service." The distance between Scanderoon and Aleppo usually takes three days' ordinary travelling on horseback; and Tavernier gives the pigeons four or five hours for performing the distance. The same birds used to be employed to carry on a similar correspondence across the desert between Aleppo and Bagdad; and they usually arrived at their destination in two days, although a caravan seldom takes less than a month to perform the same journey by the nearest road. The billets were fastened not only to the neck, as Averil states, but sometimes under the wings, and sometimes to the feet. We see no reason why this practice may not have existed in the time of Solomon; but whether he alludes to it here is another question, which we cannot undertake to determine.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Directions for charity. 7 Death in life, 9 and the day of judgment in the days of youth, are to be thought on.

CAST thy bread ¹upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after ²many days.

2 Give a portion to seven, and also to eight; for thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth.

3 If the clouds be full of rain, they empty themselves upon the earth: and if the tree fall toward the south, or toward the north, in the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be.

4 He that observeth the wind shall not sow; and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap.

5 As thou knowest not what is the way of the spirit, nor how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child: even so thou knowest not the works of God who maketh all.

7 ¶ Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun:

8 But if a man live many years, and rejoice in them all; yet let him remember the days of darkness; for they shall be many. All that cometh is vanity.

9 ¶ Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment.

10 Therefore remove ⁶sorrow from thy heart, and put away evil from thy flesh: for childhood and youth are vanity.

Verse 1. "Cast thy bread upon the waters."—Every explanation has been given to this text which ingenuity could possibly draw from maritime trade, or from the various circumstances under which the sowing of corn might relate to, or be associated with, rains or inundations. Understanding by "bread" any kind of bread-corn, the most usual interpretations are, that the allusion was derived from the practice of sowing rice in Egypt upon the mud, when the inundation of the Nile is subsiding, or indeed while a little water still remains upon the ground. This however assumes that the culture of rice was then practised in Egypt; but the date of its introduction into that country is quite unknown, and we have not the least evidence that it had taken place so early. Another conjecture is, that instead of upon the waters, we should read against the waters; that is, against the rainy season: and so Boothroyd. Upon the whole, however, we are disposed to take the explanation which Bishop Lowth gives, after Dr. G. Jubb, in a note to his 10th Lecture. He regards it as enforcing the great and disinterested liberality, of doing good to those from whom no return can be expected, and on whom the benefaction may seem as much thrown away as if a man were to sow his seed in the sea; but with the promise annexed, that it shall not be thrown away, but shall in the end receive its due recompense. This explanation has the advantage and full coincidence with the meaning usually assigned—agrees well with the context—and is supported by the ancient use of a similar figure. Dr. Jubb illustrates it from Theognis and Phocylides, who intimate that to do acts of kindness to the ungrateful and unworthy is the same as sowing the sea, from which no harvest can be expected.

CHAPTER XII.

1 The Creator is to be remembered in due time. 8 The preacher's care to edify. 13 The fear of God is the chief antidote of vanity.

¹REMEMBER now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them;

2 While the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars, be not darkened, nor the clouds return after the rain:

3 In the day when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and the strong men shall bow themselves, and ²the grinders cease because they are few, and those that look out of the windows be darkened,

4 And the doors shall be shut in the streets, when the sound of the grinding is low, and he shall rise up at the voice of the bird, and all the daughters of musick shall be brought low;

7 ¹Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.

8 ¶ ¹Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher; all is vanity.

10 The preacher sought to find out ¹acceptable words: and that which was written was upright, even words of truth.

11 The words of the wise are as goads, and as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies, which are given from one shepherd.

12 And further, by these, my son, be admonished: of making many books there is no end; and much ¹study is a weariness of the flesh.

13 ¶ ¹Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man.

CHAP. XII.—The present chapter contains a very striking and interesting picture of the infirmities of age under a variety of strong, but appropriate figures. It has attracted great attention, and has perhaps received a larger amount of illustration, variously applied, than any portion of Scripture of equal extent. It has often been considered to form an allegorical description of old age, and its final close in death. But an allegory is a representation of one thing, which is intended to excite the representation of another thing—as where the vine is chosen by the Psalmist to depict the condition of the Hebrew people. Whereas, in the present chapter, no ruling and predominant object is selected for the comparison; but a variety of images are mingled together, to form a vivid description of venerable but complaining age. “It is not therefore,” observes Mr. Holden, “strictly speaking, an allegory; and cannot without great caution be subjected to the rules of allegorical interpretation. It is to be considered only as a highly figurative and poetical representation of old age, in which the various infirmities and imbecilities of that period of life are portrayed by a great variety of images, in themselves unconnected, yet mutually tending to identify the prototype.” We are disposed to agree with the same author, that there is no adequate foundation for the very elaborate, scientific, and medical investigation to which the description has been subjected by Scheuchzer, in his ‘Physica Sacra’; Dr. Mead, in his ‘Medica Sacra’; Dr. Smith, in his ‘Solomon’s Portraiture of Old Age’; and other distinguished writers. “It is,” he observes, “more just to consider it as a highly-finished picture of the pains and debilities consequent upon decaying nature; delineated, indeed, by a skilful hand and glowing imagination, but only intended to exhibit such effects of age as naturally suggest themselves to a sagacious and observing mind. It is therefore improper to explain by the aid of [modern] medical science a poetical description which requires a popular illustration, founded on Asiatic customs and the nature of figurative language.”

Verse 2. “While the sun,” &c.—This figure, derived from the observation of the sun, moon, &c., is thought by many to refer to the decay of the powers and faculties of the mind;

but others, among whom is Holden, think that it is intended as a general statement of the pains and miseries of age, serving as an introduction to the more specific details which follow.

—“Nor the clouds return after the rain.”—As clouds and rain do not appear during the summer in Judea, we may well understand this image to be taken from the winter season, denoting the succession of pains and infirmities, which so often attend the winter of life.

3. “The keepers of the house.”—Probably the hands and arms are intended, as being to the body what guards and keepers are to a palace; or rather, perhaps, so called as providing for the sustenance of the house or body. How they “tremble” in old age is well-known. The Targum, followed by many, conceives the ribs to be intended; but they do not tremble, and indeed become more fixed in age than in youth.

—“The strong men.”—As an incurvation of the spine is one of the infirmities of old age, some think that the vertebrae of the back are here meant. But it seems more probable that the lower limbs, which bow and totter beneath the aged, are denoted.

—“The grinders.”—The allusion is apparently derived from the females who daily grind the corn required for the day. It thus denotes the teeth which masticate and grind down the food for the stomach.

—“Those that look out of the windows.”—This undoubtedly denotes the eyes, which in old age become dimmed or “darkened.”

4. “The doors shall be shut in the streets, when the sound of the grinding is low.”—This appears to refer to the act of eating, which, in consequence of the loss of teeth, is usually performed by aged persons with closed lips; and then also the gums, with their smooth surfaces, are obliged to perform the office of the teeth, masticating the food with slow and silent labour, which is probably what is meant by the low sound of the grinding.

“He shall rise up at the voice of the bird.”—Some suppose the cock to be meant, and that the text denotes that the aged sleep so quietly that they wake and rise at the cock-crowing. This has however the defect of not being true, since the aged are not remarkable for early rising. The text does not necessarily denote that they arise from bed at the voice of the bird, but that they are roused by it; and as people of any age may be roused by the crowing of the cock, we are disposed to take the word rendered "a bird" (צִיִּפּוֹר tzippor), in its usual signification, as denoting a sparrow, or any small bird; and we shall then have the sense that the aged sleep so unsoundly that the twittering of the smallest birds will suffice to rouse them.

"The daughters of musick."—Some refer this to the non-enjoyment of the songs of the singing women, which is one of the circumstances by which old Barzillai describes the infirmities of age (2 Sam. xix. 35). But we are much more disposed to agree with those who suppose it to apply to the decay of the organs employed in the production and enjoyment of music.

5. "They shall be afraid of that which is high," &c.—This and the following clause doubtless apply to the difficulty which the aged find in ascending high places, as well as to the timidity which the consciousness of their infirm condition leads them to exhibit when they venture to walk out in the public ways; and which, in the narrow streets of the East, is necessarily more marked than with us.

"The almond-tree shall flourish."—As the almond-tree has white blossoms this is generally supposed to refer to the white hair of aged persons.

"The grasshopper shall be a burden."—By the word rendered "grasshopper," a species of locust is doubtless intended. Locusts are eaten in the East, and probably were so by the Jews; and as then it was probably the smallest creature eaten by them, this may explain why it is selected to denote that the least weight is a burden to a very aged man. Some however think that a comparison of an old person to a locust is implied; and they would translate, "the locust is a burden to itself." This opinion has been advocated by Dr. Smith, whose explanation has been thus summed up by Parkhurst, in חֲרָבָה:—"The dry, shrunk, shrivelled, crumpling, scraggy old man—his backbone sticking out, his knees projecting forward, his arms backward, his head downward, and the apophyses, or bunching parts of the bones, in general enlarged—is very aptly described by that insect. And from this exact likeness, without all doubt, arose the fable of Tithonus, that, living to an extreme old age, he was at last turned into a grasshopper."

Such a comparison is not so fanciful as might appear at first sight; for not only has it often occurred spontaneously to ourselves, when examining the locust, but it is actually a current comparison at this day in the East. The idea appears to have been also familiar to the classical ancients, for we find some engraved gems in which an emaciated old man is evidently represented by a locust walking erect on its hind legs, and in which all the characteristics enumerated above, are brought out with truly singular effect.

"The mourners go about the streets."—The preceding portion of this remarkable description refers to old age; and we now come to another class of circumstances, descriptive of what attends and denotes death itself. The change of subject is clearly announced by the present clause, which refers probably to the attendants of actual or hired mourners. On account of the extent of the notes to this chapter, we shall not here enlarge on this subject. But we have the opportunity of introducing an interesting illustration, copied from an oblong Egyptian tablet in the collection of Sig. Giovanni d'Athanasii, in whose Catalogue we have the following description:—"When this object was at Rome, Rosellini stated it to be his opinion, that the subject on it was intended as a representation of a Jewish funeral procession, and a tablet to one of that sect. This opinion is greatly supported by the total dissimilarity of the figures here represented to those found in the sepulchral tablets of the Egyptians, and also from the peculiar costume in which they are habited. It has likewise been advanced, that it only forms a portion of a procession, which fact does not at all appear conclusive. It probably represents an entire family of Jews, following the ashes or portions of the body of the deceased contained in the case before them: and, from an examination of the stone, it has evidently formed one end of a complete tablet. The entire absence of the usual symbols and Egyptian deities tends strongly to prove the correctness of Rosellini's opinion."

It is quite clear that the tablet does not represent an Egyptian procession; but that we should consider it a Jewish one, is not perhaps equally evident. Whether so or not, its proximity of time and place renders it an interesting relic in the way of illustration, particularly as it does, more than any other ancient remain which we have seen, exhibit some of the funeral customs distinctly mentioned in Scripture—such, for instance, as that of throwing dust upon the head. The mourning action in some of the figures, clearly denotes the funeral character of the procession.

FUNERAL PROCESSION.—FROM AN EGYPTIAN TABLET.

6. "The silver cord."—This is usually interpreted of that resplendent white cord (the spinal marrow) which passes through the entire length of the backbone, and which is very liable to be relaxed and weakened in old age, or a part thereof altogether broken in its functions, producing the various paralytic complaints, the tremors and debilities, to which the aged are so frequently subject.

"The golden bowl."—This is commonly understood of the skull; and some pains have been taken to discover the source of the epithet "golden." There is, however, no occasion to suppose that it refers to colour or any physical circumstance: but we may conclude it to be a term of excellence, denoting the importance of the skull and its invaluable contents.

"The pitcher . . . fountain . . . wheel . . . cistern."—The usual explanation of these terms is, that the pitcher denotes the large canals which issue from the heart, and receive therefrom the blood as from a fountain; that the fountain is the right ventricle of the heart, and the cistern the left ventricle; and that the wheel is the great artery called the aorta. For the reasons stated in the introductory note, we think these definite conclusions very uncertain and probably fallacious. In their literal import the series of images is evidently suggested by some hydraulic process for raising water from wells and cisterns. Of various methods employed for this purpose we recollect none which appears better to meet the allusions, than one which is extensively in use in Egypt and Western Asia. It consists principally of a large vertical wheel, to which is attached a continuous series of earthen pots by cords, so that, by the revolution of the wheel—which brings up the full pots in quick succession, while at the same time the discharged ones descend by the same impulse for a fresh supply—a constant stream is poured into a conduit, by which the water is conveyed to its destination, for the irrigation of gardens and plantations. This certainly has more analogy than any other explanation to that process, observed in the diffusion of blood through the body, to which the present text is supposed to refer. We cannot think that any thing more is intended than to indicate by figures, suggesting a general resemblance to the action of the vital system, the cessation, at death, of the functions involved in that action. To make an elaborate application of the discoveries of modern science, in order to elicit a most recondite and doubtful meaning from the details of a popular and poetical comparison—intended only to suggest a general idea, the accuracy of which, to the extent which it goes, has never been questioned—is little better than ingenious trifling, which, from the forced and unsatisfactory character of its results, is scarcely calculated to be of any real use, but rather of disservice, in the work of Biblical illustration. The explanations to which we refer, necessarily assume that Solomon was acquainted with the circulation of the blood—that great secret which Harvey, at a late day, is supposed to have discovered. This opinion is indeed advocated by Witsius, Hottinger, Scheuchzer, Smith, and others; and Bishop Horsley says the passage cannot be easily explained on any other supposition. But the question is not what Solomon knew, but what was so well known to the people as to be intelligible even through the veil of highly figurative language; and no one contends that this was in ancient times a subject of common knowledge. Mr. Dutens, in his 'Inquiry into the Origin of the Discoveries attributed to the Moderns,' endeavours to prove that the circulation of the blood was known to Hippocrates and some other old physicians and philosophers; but the expressions cited by him seem, at the most, only to show that something of a circulation of the vital fluid was dimly suspected, while the principle and mode of operation was altogether unknown; and we certainly should not be disposed to contend that some such idea as the bare existence of a circulation, might not be known to the Hebrews and alluded to by Solomon.

11. "The words of the wise are as goads," &c.—This is considered a very difficult verse, particularly as it respects the words rendered "masters of assemblies." The explanation of that eminent rabbinical scholar, Dr. Lightfoot, deserves attention. "I am mistaken if the servants that attend about the flock under the shepherd are not called by the owner of them בָּעֵל אֲסֻפֹּת, Eccles. xii. 11: i. e., those that fold the sheep: at least if the sheepfold itself be not so called. And I would render the words, by way of paraphrase, thus: 'The words of the wise are as goads, and as nails fastened by those that gather the flocks into the fold: goads, to drive away the thief or the wild beast; and nails, to preserve the flock whole and in good repair: which nails and goads are furnished by the chief master of the flock for these uses.' " (Heb. and Talm. Exercitations, John x. 3.) The mention of the "chief shepherd" would certainly suggest a pastoral sense for the nails and the goads. But by a careful examination of the original, it will appear that the reference to the nails, to which the words of the wise are compared, as being fastened by the "masters of assemblies," is not strictly correct. The words of the wise are rather compared to goads and to deeply infixed nails; and then it is added as an independent clause, but having reference to the same subject, what Boothroyd renders—"The collectors (of these sayings of the wise) were appointed by one shepherd;" or, as Hales—"the master collections were given by one shepherd;" or, as Holden—"the collectors have published them from one shepherd." We should like to take this last version; but, instead of "collectors," would, with our version, read "masters of assemblies;" whom we may understand, after the rabbinical writers, to have been persons who were members of the assemblies of wise men. This will bring out the very intelligible sense, that these members of the assemblies made known to others the instructions they received from Solomon, who is probably to be understood by the "chief shepherd," the title of "shepherd" being frequently applied to kings, guides, and instructors. But it is possible that the Heavenly Shepherd himself is denoted by this title; and then Solomon is to be understood as one of the wise men who made known the precepts received from Him.

THE SONG OF SOLOMON.—That Solomon was the writer of this poem has been in all ages so generally admitted, that it is unnecessary to state the evidence for that conclusion. It is, with very little exception, agreed that the poem, in its literal acceptation, expresses the circumstances and sentiments attending a marriage between Solomon and a lady, who is generally conceived to have been the daughter of the king of Egypt; but there have been some modern commentators who have adduced arguments, perhaps not easily answered, to show that the bride must have been a daughter of Israel and a native of Palestine. Our limited line of illustration does not require the discussion of this question, for which, as well as for much other curious investigation, we may refer to the various valuable commentaries on this book which have appeared within about the last seventy years, among which we may particularly mention those of Bishop Percy, the Rev. T. Harmer, Mr. Williams, Mr. C. Taylor, and Dr. J. M. Good.

The structure of the poem, and the denomination which should be given to it, has occasioned no small amount of discussion. A drama; an epithalamium, or nuptial song; a pastoral; a series of idyls, are among the denominations which have been given to it. It may possibly be understood that it is neither a drama, nor an epithalamium, nor a pastoral, in the proper sense of these terms, but that it partakes of the characteristics of the two latter kinds of composition in its substance, while its external form is dramatic; that is to say, that it is a pastoral-nuptial song, exhibited in a dramatic form. "The principal characters are Solomon himself and his bride, who are represented speaking both in dialogue, and in soliloquy when accidentally separated. Virgins also, the companions of the bride, are introduced, who seem to be always present, and bear a part in the dialogue: mention is also made of young men, friends of the bridegroom, but they are mute persons." (Lowth's 'Lectures,' No. xxx.) The idea we have stated is not much opposed to that of Dr. J. M. Good, who, supported by the authority of Sir William Jones, regards the poem as a series of unconnected idyls on the same subject which has already been defined. This, under the above view, becomes little more than a question of division into parts, the form remaining dramatic, although the poem be not a drama. It is evident to the most cursory reader that there should be some division to mark the manifest transitions which occur in the progress of the poem; but that these should be considered perfectly to disconnect the poems, is not to make sufficient allowance for the bold and abrupt transitions which the genius of Oriental poetry allows.

The Song of Solomon has been conceived by most interpreters to bear an allegorical or mystical sense, in which it describes the union between the church and its Lord. On this point it is scarcely within our plan to express an opinion; but as such an opinion is usually expected, we shall not refrain from declaring our entire concurrence in the general impression. Unless we received such an opinion, it would be difficult to account for the existence of the book in the Sacred Scriptures; and such an opinion is also in the fullest conformity with other passages of Scripture, in which the Lord permits the relation between Himself and the Church to be described by the most endearing of all relations—that between the husband and the wife, or the bridegroom and the bride; and from which result other figures drawn from the circumstances of the same condition: as, when the heart of the wedded Church becomes alienated, the Lord is described as jealous; and when she long persists in her evil way, he gives her a bill of divorcement. Other corroborations of the mystical meaning of the book may be derived from the existing poetry in the East. Thus the glowing poems of the most eminent Persian poets are most sincerely believed by the Soofees, and by many others, to have a mystical meaning, and are so explained and employed. "The Persians insist," says Major Scott Waring, "that we should give them the merit of understanding their own language, that all the odes of their celebrated poets are mystical, and breathe a fervent spirit of adoration to the Supreme Being. They maintain that the Soofees profess eager desire with no carnal affection, and circulate the cup, but no material goblet, since all things are spiritual in their sect; all is mystery within mystery." And that such interpretation is not unwarranted by the intention of the authors, appears from various explicit avowals which might be cited from their works. We could cite numerous examples of this application, but shall be satisfied with adducing the unexceptionable testimony of Mr. Lane, in his recent work on the 'Modern Egyptians.' After mentioning that the odes sung by the Mohammedans at religious festivals were of a similar nature with the Song of Solomon, generally alluding to the prophet as the object of love and praise, he gives a specimen of one of these hymns, which is too long for us to copy.

He then proceeds: "I must translate a few more lines, to show more strongly the similarity of these songs to that of Solomon; and lest it should be thought that I have varied the expressions, I shall not attempt to render them into verse. In the small collection of poems sung at Zikrs, is one that begins with these lines:

"O gazelle, from among the gazelles of El-Yemen!
I am thy slave without cost:
O thou small of age, and fresh of skin!
O thou who art scarce past the time of drinking milk!"

In the first of these verses we have a comparison exactly agreeing with the concluding verse of Solomon's Song; for the word which, in our Bible, is translated a "roe," is used in Arabic as synonymous with ghazâl, (or a gazelle); and the mountains El-Yemen are 'the mountains of spices.' This poem ends with the following lines:

"The phantom of thy form visited me in my slumber:
I said, 'O phantom of slumber! who sent thee?'
He said, 'He sent me whom thou knowest;
He whose love occupies thee.'
The beloved of my heart visited me in the darkness of night:
I stood, to show him honour, until he sat down.
I said, 'O thou my petition and all my desire!
Hast thou come at midnight, and not feared the watchmen?'
He said to me, 'I feared; but, however, love
Had taken from me my soul and my breath.'"

Compare the above with the second and five following verses of the fifth chapter of Solomon's Song. Finding that songs of this description are exceedingly numerous, and almost the only poems sung at Zikrs; that they are composed for that purpose, and intended only to have a spiritual sense (though certainly not understood in that sense by the generality of the vulgar); I cannot entertain any doubt as to the design of Solomon's Song. The specimens which I have just given of the religious love-songs of the Moolims have not been selected, in preference to others, as most agreeing with that of Solomon; but as being in frequent use." The passage here quoted certainly furnishes the most valuable single testimony to the mystical sense of Solomon's Song which has hitherto been afforded.

Verse 5. "As the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon."—The form of this strongly-marked contrast would lead us to conclude that a magnificent state-tent belonging to Solomon is here intended by the word rendered "curtains;" and opposed to the black goats'-hair tents of the Kedarene Arabs. The Oriental kings usually possess one or more rich tents, to be used when occasion requires. In the Arabian romance of 'Antar' there is a description of one, which the hero received as a present from the king of Persia, and which he caused to be pitched upon the occasion of his marriage with Ibla. "When spread out it occupied half the land of Shurebah, for it was the load of forty camels; and there was an awning at the door of the pavilion, under which four thousand of the Arabian horse could skirmish. It was embroidered with burnished gold, studded with precious stones and diamonds, interspersed with rubies and emeralds, set with rows of pearls; and there was painted thereon a specimen of every created thing—birds, and trees, and towns, and cities, and seas, and continents, and beasts, and reptiles: and whoever looked at it was confounded by the variety of the representations, and by the brilliancy of the silver and gold; and so magnificent was the whole, that when the pavilion was pitched the land of Shurebah and Mount Saadi were illuminated by its splendour." (vol. iv. p. 375.) This is of course an exaggerated poetical description, particularly as to the size of the pavilion; but yet the exaggeration is not so great as might be imagined. Marco Polo describes Kublai Khan's tent as being so large that ten thousand soldiers might be drawn up under it, without incommoding the nobles at the audience: and others are mentioned capable of holding two thousand persons. At the famous marriage-feast held by Timour Beg (Tamerlane) at Canighul, the royal tents were gilt, and adorned with precious stones. Each tent had twelve columns of silver, inlaid with gold; the outside was scarlet and seven other colours, and were lined with satin of all colours. Their curtains were of velvet, and their ropes of silk. At the encampment of the same conqueror, in the plain of Ourtupa, the pavilions were richly ornamented, and hung with curtains of brocade covered with gold flowers. At other times we read of tents "covered with cloth of gold and tartaries full nobly;" and at the grand encampment at Minecgeheul, the tent of Timur was under a canopy supported by forty pillars, and was spacious as a palace; in the middle of it was a throne, so ornamented with precious stones that it resembled the sun (see Rankin's 'Historical Researches,' passim). More recently, Nadir Shah, the conqueror of India, had a superb tent, covered on the outside with scarlet cloth, and lined within with violet-coloured satin, ornamented with various figures of animals, flowers, &c., formed entirely of pearls and precious stones. The contrast between such tents and those of the Arabian shepherds is great indeed.

10. "Thy cheeks are comely with rows of jewels."—Instead of cheeks, it would be better to read "brows," as the original will very well allow. We may here intimate that we shall not in this book notice the various details of female ornaments, as they are more fully enumerated in Isa. iii., where they will receive the requisite attention.

14. "Camphire."—The Hebrew קופר copher, answering to the Greek κυπρος and the Latin cyprus, is now generally agreed to be the henna of the Arabians, being the Lawsonia alba of Linnæus, included under the specific appellation of alba, the inermis and the spinosa, since the shrub is unarmed in youth, but becomes thorny as its age advances. It belongs to the natural family of the Salicariæ, and is hence allied to the Lythrum salicaria of the streams that meander through the parks in this country. It is a smooth-looking shrub: the deep colour of its bark contrasts well with the light green hue of the foliage; and, together with the softened mixture of white yellow, with the red tint of the ramifications which support them, presents a combination as agreeable to the eye as the odour is to the scent. The flowers grow in dense clusters—whence the "cluster of camphire" in the text. The grateful fragrance of these clusters is as much appreciated now as in the time of Solomon. The clusters themselves serve as a popular and customary perfume. The women take great pleasure in them. They hold them in their hand, carry them in their bosom, and keep them in their apartments to perfume the air. An extract from them is used in religious ceremonies, and in visits of compliment and gratulation. The leaves of this plant are still more in request. When dried and powdered they furnish the famous dye with which the Orientals give a deep orange tincture to the nails of their hands and feet, to the soles of their feet and the palms of their hands, and sometimes to their hair. Some think that the use of this dye for the nails is indicated in Deut. xxi. 12: and it is not unlikely that the Hebrews had this custom, though it may be doubtful that there is an allusion to it in that text. (See the note there.)

CHAPTER II.

1 The mutual love of Christ and his church. 8 The hope, 10 and calling of the church. 14 Christ's care of the church. 16 The profession of the church, her faith and hope.

I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys.

2 As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters.

3 As the apple tree among the trees of the wood, so is my beloved among the sons. 'I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my 'taste.

4 He brought me to the 'banqueting house, and his banner over me was love.

5 Stay me with flagons, 'comfort me with apples: for I am sick of love.

6 'His left hand is under my head, and his right hand doth embrace me.

7 'I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes, and by the hinds of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till he please.

8 ¶ The voice of my beloved! behold, he cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills.

9 'My beloved is like a roe or a young hart: behold, he standeth behind our wall, he looketh forth at the windows, 'shewing himself through the lattice.

10 My beloved spake, and said unto me, Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away.

11 For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone;

12 The flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land;

13 The fig tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell. Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away.

14 ¶ O my dove, that art in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs, let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely.

15 Take us the foxes, the little foxes, that spoil the vines: for our vines have tender grapes.

16 ¶ 'My beloved is mine, and I am his: he feedeth among the lilies.

17 'Until the day break, and the shadows flee away, turn, my beloved, and be thou 'like a roe or a young hart upon the mountains 'of Bethel.

"Rose of Sharon" (Rosa berberifolia).

Verse 1. "The rose of Sharon."—The Septuagint and Vulgate render the original חבצלת chabatzleth, by ἀνθος, and flos—a flower; and Sharon they do not give as a proper name, but give its meaning, translating, "a flower of the field." Bishop Percy, whose opinion has been taken by many later commentators, thinks that the bride is not praising herself, by reference to flowers famous for their beauty, but is speaking modestly and detractively of herself; and points this sense by translating, "I am a mere rose of the field, a lily of the valley." He justly understands that this gives a new force to the reply of the bridegroom in the next verse.

We believe there can be little doubt that the rose is really intended by the Hebrew word. Even if in the general sense it should mean but a flower, we should still infer that, when applied in a particular sense, it means a rose; for this would be according to the usage of the East. Thus the Persian word gul describes a flower in general, and the rose par excellence; and the Arabic term ward is employed in the same acceptations. This suffices to show the estimation in which the rose is held in the East. It is the queen of flowers there, as in the West—and there perhaps more eminently. In the Persian language, particularly, there is perhaps no poem in which allusions to it, and comparisons drawn from it, do not occur even to repletion, although diversified by reference to the various species and colours in which that renowned flower appears. The extreme fragrance and great beauty of the rose in some parts of western Asia, have attracted the notice of many travellers. It is also cultivated, not merely as a garden-plant for pleasure, but in extensive fields, from the produce of which is prepared that valued and delicious perfume called rose-water. The size of the rose-trees, and the number of the flowers on each, far exceeds, in the rose districts of Persia, anything we are accustomed to witness. In that country the most common sorts are the usual rose-colour, white, red, or deeper red, yellow, and mixed—that is, red on one side, and yellow or white on the other. Sometimes, also, on a rose-tree may be seen flowers of three colours—red, red and yellow, and red and white. How much the rose was esteemed by the classical ancients is well known. It particularly figured in festal chaplets; and so perhaps it did among the Jews; for, in the apocryphal book of Wisdom, the sensualists are represented as saying, "Let us fill ourselves with costly wine and ointments, and let no flower of the spring pass by us: Let us crown ourselves with rose-buds before they are withered" (chap. ii. 7, 8). In another apocryphal book "the rose-plants of Jericho" (Ecclus. xxiv. 14) are mentioned with praise.

"Lily."—The Hebrew word שושנה shoshanna, seems to indicate that the "lily of the valley" was one of those plants wherein the number slx (שלש) predominates in the distribution of their parts, such as the crocus, asphodel, daffodil, lily, &c. We once felt inclined to think that a species of asphodel was the plant alluded to, since the Asphodelus ramosus covers immense tracts of land in the south, and is said to be good fodder for sheep; "he feedeth among the lilies." But in a matter of so much obscurity we prefer to concur with those who think that the Amaryllis lutea may be here intended. The Amaryllis lutea, or yellow amaryllis, bears some resemblance to our yellow crocus, but with a larger flower and broader leaves. The blossom emerges from an undivided spathe or sheath, and is of a bell-shaped contour, with six divisions, and six stamens which are alternately shorter. The flower seldom rises above three or four inches above the soil, accompanied by a tuft of green leaves, which, after the flowering is passed, continue to wear their freshness through the winter. Many acres are often covered with this pretty flower, which is in its prime in September and October. It is a hardy plant, and was introduced into the English gardens by Gerarde in 1596, where it is seen flowering nearly at the same time as the saffron crocus and the colchicum, with which it harmonizes greatly in its appearance.

"Apple" or Citron Tree (Citrus Medica).

3. "Apple-tree."—Instead of this, we have "citron-tree," and, when the fruit alone is mentioned, "citron" instead of "apple," in most modern versions. We do not hesitate to acquiesce in this conclusion, when we reflect that all the allusions to it in Scripture agree better with the citron than the apple. From the present text we learn that it was thought one of the noblest trees of the wood, and that its fruit was very pleasant: verbe 5 seems to intimate that its fruit was proper for those to smell to who were ready to faint; ch. viii. 5, more explicitly expresses its fragrance; and Prov. xxv. 11, appears to say that it was of a golden colour. All this is true of the citron, but not so of the apple, which does not attain much delicacy or perfection in Western Asia. The present writer nowhere, in that region, tasted an apple which an Englishman would praise, except at one place (Gumitch Khona, widely famed on that account) among the mountains south of the Black Sea, where they are very good and admit of a comparison with some of our best qualities. The name also, תפוח tapuach, signifying "to breathe," may be supposed to express the delightful and powerful fragrance which breathes from every part of the citron-tree. To which we may add that the fruit is much used by the Oriental ladies to smell to, for which purpose they often have it in their hands, or within reach, and, as its fragrance is considered most reviving, it is employed for much the same purposes as a scent-bottle in this country. We consider this a good illustration of verse 5. The tree grows to a fine large size, and affords a pleasant shade, as the text intimates. It is green all the year, and in due season the snow-white blossoms and golden fruit may be observed at the same time upon the same tree. The foliage is studded with minute glands, which are the depositaries of the odorous juices to which the tree owes its fragrance. Many think that the word is to be understood in the large sense, as including the orange, lemon, and other species of the citrus; as, however, there is much uncertainty in this matter, and as the details seem more applicable to the citron than to any other single species, we have preferred to limit our statement, without being opposed to the larger interpretation.

4. "Banqueting-house." — We have been desirous of presenting our readers with a specimen of the style of interior architecture and ornament, exhibited in the more splendid royal halls of Eastern palaces. For this purpose we have been induced to select the very rich and characteristic Hall of Abencerrages, in the famous palace of the Alhambra, built by the Arabian kings of Granada. Its peculiarly Oriental character, its age, and the elaborate finish of all its parts, render it by far the most eligible representation for our purpose that could be obtained. The pillars, the arches, the central fountain diffusing its cooling influence around, the division of the walls with their projections, recesses, and style of ornament,—are all in the most approved Oriental style, which probably existed in ages long anterior to the foundation of the Alhambra. The entrance to this hall is from the Court of the Lions, so called from the fountain which is seen in our engraving.

HALL OF ABENCERRAGES, ALHAMBRA.

ing, and a larger view of which has been given under 1 Kings vii. 23. Murphy, from whose 'Moorish Antiquities of Spain,' the illustration is copied, thus speaks of a similar and corresponding apartment (the Hall of the Two Sisters), entered from the same court. "The eye is lost in contemplating the rich assemblage of ornaments which appear in every part of this noble hall. From the pavement to the beginning of the arches, the walls are decorated with elegant mosaic; the panels between the arches are filled with a very delicate ornament, which, at a little distance, has the appearance of a plain mass; and the ceiling is composed of stalactites in stucco, and is finished in a style of equal elegance. The distribution of the various parts of this noble apartment is truly enchanting. The balconies above were occupied by musicians; below sat the women; while a jet-d'eau in the centre diffused a refreshing coolness through the hall. The windows in the back-ground are finished in a similar manner, and look into a little myrtle-garden." Nothing can be better in the way of general illustration than what the same author in his 'History of the Mohammedan Empire in Spain' says on the general style of interior decoration which this palace exhibits:—"The Arabesque paintings and mosaics, which are finished with great care and accuracy, give a consequence and interest even to the smallest apartments. Instead of being papered and wainscoted, the walls are covered with Arabesques which had been cast in moulds in a peculiar manner, and afterwards joined together, although no separation appears. The receding ornaments are illuminated in just gradations with leaf gold, pink, light blue, and dusky purple: the first colour is the nearest, the last the most distant from the eye, but the general surface is white. A multitude of sculptures of unequal projection creates confusion: an error avoided in this place, where the ornaments are produced by incision, and their boundless number excites an artificial infinity. Externally, where projections are necessary, the line of continuity is uniformly preserved in every distinct series of parts. The domes and arcades are also formed of ornamented casts, which are almost as light as wood and as durable as marble: specimens of the composition of which they are formed may be seen in the early works of the Arabs uninjured after the lapse of ten centuries. The lower parts of the walls, to the height of about four feet, are covered with porcelain mosaics of various figures and colours; and it appears, from a few remaining specimens, that the floors and columns of some of the apartments were also covered with similar mosaics." Nearly all this applies with equal propriety to the modern palaces of Western Asia; the principal alteration being in the now frequent use of looking-glass in the interior decorations, and which seems in some sort to supply the place of the porcelain mosaic mentioned above, and which, like that, is employed sometimes to cover even the shafts of pillars, and with an effect which we should undervalue by comparing it with any use of the mirror known in this country. Upon the whole, however, as well as in the use of painted figures and devices, which sometimes occur instead of the rich panel-work, which is still, however, to a great extent retained, the Oriental taste seems to have considerably degenerated. In the East there is perhaps no palace equal to the Alhambra; and this is one reason for the preference we have given to it for the purpose of illustration. See also the notes on Ps. xlv. 8; and Isa. liv. 12.

CHAPTER III.

1 The church's fight and victory in temptation. 6 The church glorieth in Christ.

By night on my bed I sought him whom my soul loveth: I sought him, but I found him not.

2 I will rise now, and go about the city in the streets, and in the broad ways I will seek him whom my soul loveth: I sought him, but I found him not.

3 The watchmen that go about the city found me: to whom I said, Saw ye him whom my soul loveth?

4 It was but a little that I passed from them, but I found him whom my soul loveth: I held him, and would not let him go, until I had brought him into my mother's house, and into the chamber of her that conceived me.

5 ¹I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes, and by the hinds of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till he please.

6 ¶ ²Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness like pillars of smoke, perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all powders of the merchant?

7 Behold his bed, which is Solomon's; threescore valiant men are about it, of the valiant of Israel.

8 They all hold swords, being expert in war: every man hath his sword upon his thigh because of fear in the night.

9 King Solomon made himself ³a chariot of the wood of Lebanon.

10 He made the pillars thereof of silver, the bottom thereof of gold, the covering of it of purple, the midst thereof being paved with love, for the daughters of Jerusalem.

11 Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion, and behold king Solomon with the crown wherewith his mother crowned him in the day of his espousals, and in the day of the gladness of his heart.

THE J'HALLEDAR, OR STATE PALANQUIN OF HINDUSTAN.

Verse 9. "Chariot."—The original word אֶפֶרֶן aperion, does not occur anywhere else, and is not, therefore, the usual word for a chariot. The description appears to suggest the idea of a portable couch, litter, or palanquin. Such conveyances were in use among the ancient Egyptians, with whose refinements Solomon appears to have been well acquainted. Mr. Wilkinson saw at Beni-Hassan a representation, which is copied in his late work, of a person of distinction carried in an open palanquin by four bearers, closely followed by an attendant with a sort of parasol. Such vehicles are still employed by persons of consideration in different Eastern countries, and are very various in their character and mode of use; but in general terms they may be described as couches, covered with a canopy supported by pillars at the four corners, and hung round with curtains to protect the person from the sun; and carried on men's shoulders by means of two poles on which they are supported. They are usually long enough for the rider to recline at full length in them, and about three feet broad; but the size, height, and richness, depend of course on the rank or wealth of the owner. The number of bearers is proportioned to the weight; and, in travelling, there are two or more sets which relieve each other by turns. When however litters of this description are employed in Western Asia, they are seldom carried by men, but by two animals (usually camels or mules), one of which goes before and the other behind, between the poles. There is another kind of canopied litter, mounted on the back of a single animal (an elephant in India), on which great persons ride in state, and which, from its elevation and richness, is conspicuous from afar; but in the present instance something of the other sort is probably intended. Vehicles of this description, particularly royal ones, are sometimes of astonishing magnificence, the woodwork being covered with silver and enriched with precious stones, while the canopy is of the most costly stuffs, brocades, and satins, also adorned with jewels, and the interior fitting up of corresponding splendour.

11. "The crown wherewith his mother crowned him in the day of his espousals."—The use of nuptial crowns is very ancient and very general. Among the Greeks and Romans these crowns were usually chaplets of leaves and flowers, and the modern Greeks retain the ancient custom, employing such chaplets, decorated with ribbons and lace. The modern Jews do not use crowns in their marriage ceremonies, and they inform us that the custom has been discontinued since the last fatal siege of Jerusalem by the Romans. The information which the Gemara, &c., give on the subject is, that the crown of the bridegroom was of gold or silver, or else a chaplet of roses, myrtle, or olives, and that the bride's crown was of gold or silver: and they seem to state that the crowns were in the form of a tower, similar to those which are represented on the head of the heathen goddess Cybele. There is also some mention of a crown made of salt and sulphur, worn by the bridegroom; the salt being transparent as crystal, and various figures being represented thereon in sulphur.

SYRIAN LEOPARDS, Felis Nimr (Pardus).—EHRENBERG.

Verse 8. "Amana...Shenir...Hermon."—All these were different parts or mountains of the Lebanon chain. They have already been noticed in this work, excepting Amana, of which nothing is known.

"Leopard."—There is no question that the leopard is intended by the word נִמְרָה namer, for the same word denotes this animal in the Chaldee, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic, and in Jer. xiii. 23, there is a distinct allusion to its spotted skin. It would seem that these animals were formerly common in Palestine, as several places bear names which seem to intimate that they were infested by leopards, as "Nimrah" (Num. xxxii. 3); "Beth-Nimrah" (Num. v. 36; Josh. xiii. 27); and "waters of Nimrah" (Isa. xv. 6; Jer. xlviii. 34); and here we read of "the mountains of leopards." The leopard is still known in Syria and Arabia, though no longer common. It is the most beautiful animal of the lion family; which may be one reason why it is more noticed in Scripture than any other creature of that family, except the lion itself. The ranges of black rosettes, with which its yellow hide is marked, give it an appearance which has always been admired, and supply the comparison in Jeremiah, to which we have referred. It has much resemblance to the tiger, except in having black rosettes, instead of black stripes: but it is a much smaller animal, and of inferior powers. It is however very savage and ferocious; and, in the insidious and stealthy fashion of its kind, assaults all sorts of animals; man himself not being altogether exempted from its attacks. There are some striking allusions to its habits and powers in future texts, which we shall explain as the occasions occur.

12. "A spring shut up, a fountain sealed."—See the note on Eccles. ii. 6.

14. "Saffron."—The original is כַּרְכֹּם karkom, which name the same plant also bears in Arabic and Persian. Indeed, the names κροκος and crocus, which it bore among the Greeks and Latins, and now bears with us, is nearly the same, except in the final letter m, which from similarity of form sometimes gets confounded with s, in the Hebrew. The crocus officinalis is well known as an ornament in our own gardens, as it was in those of Solomon; but the peculiar aroma that is found in the stigma or capital of the central pillar or thread in the flower is not always recognised. The smallness of the part causes it to be overlooked, and renders expensive the scented drug called "saffron" (from its Arabic name, zaha-faran) which is obtained from it. The plant is too well known to require particular description in this place.

15. "Streams from Lebanon."—This verse receives a very appropriate illustration from our engraving in p. 214, which represents a part of the course of one of the streams from Lebanon; and which may suitably be accompanied by the following extract from Maundrell. "There is a very deep rupture in the side of Lebanon, running at least seven hours directly up into the mountain. It is on both sides exceedingly steep and high, clothed with fragrant greens from top to bottom, and everywhere refreshed with fountains falling down from the rocks in pleasant cascades—the ingenious work of nature. The streams, all uniting at the bottom, make a full and rapid torrent, whose agreeable murmuring is heard all over the place, and adds no small pleasure to it." ('Journey,' p. 142.)

CHAPTER V.

1 Christ awaketh the church with his calling. 2 The church having a taste of Christ's love is sick of love. 9 A description of Christ by his graces.

I AM come into my garden, my sister, my spouse: I have gathered my myrrh with my spice; I have eaten my honeycomb with my honey; I have drunk my wine with my milk: eat, O friends; drink, 'yea, drink abundantly, O beloved.

2 ¶ I sleep, but my heart waketh: it is the voice of my beloved that knocketh, saying, Open to me, my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled: for my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night.

3 I have put off my coat; how shall I put it on? I have washed my feet; how shall I defile them?

4 My beloved put in his hand by the hole of the door, and my bowels were moved for him.

5 I rose up to open to my beloved; and my hands dropped with myrrh, and my fingers with sweet smelling myrrh, upon the handles of the lock.

6 I opened to my beloved; but my beloved had withdrawn himself, and was gone: my soul failed when he spake: I sought him, but I could not find him; I called him, but he gave me no answer.

7 The watchmen that went about the city found me, they smote me, they wounded me; the keepers of the walls took away my veil from me.

8 I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, if ye find my beloved, 'that ye tell him, that I am sick of love.

9 ¶ What is thy beloved more than another beloved, O thou fairest among women? what is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou dost so charge us?

10 My beloved is white and ruddy, 'the chiefest among ten thousand.

11 His head is as the most fine gold, his locks are bushy, and black as a raven.

12 'His eyes are as the eyes of doves by the rivers of waters, washed with milk, and fitly set.

13 His cheeks are as a bed of spices, as sweet flowers: his lips like lilies, dropping sweet smelling myrrh.

14 His hands are as gold rings set with the beryl: his belly is as bright ivory overlaid with sapphires.

15 His legs are as pillars of marble, set upon sockets of fine gold: his countenance is as Lebanon, excellent as the cedars.

16 ¹⁰His mouth is most sweet: yea, he is altogether lovely. This is my beloved, and this is my friend, O daughters of Jerusalem.

Verse 4. "Put in his hand by the hole of the door."—From the notice of the wooden locks used in the East, which we have given under Neh. iii. 6, the reader will understand that they may be opened with little difficulty, without the key, by means of a bit of stick, a nail, or even, by some management, with the fingers. So it would seem that the bridegroom introduced his fingers through the hole to open the lock; but, failing in the attempt, perhaps because the door was also barred, he withdrew.

7. "The watchmen that went about the city."—This conveys an intimation that the Jewish towns had a regular and vigilant night police. The nature of this establishment was probably similar to those which still exist in the towns of Western Asia, the streets of which are usually patrolled at night by guards, who are much feared on account of their dexterous and ever ready use of the stout cudgels which they carry in their hands. What Mr. Lane says of Cairo is applicable to most other large towns. "None but the blind are allowed to go out at night later than about an hour and a half after sunset, without a lantern or a light of some kind. Few persons are seen in the streets later than two or three hours after sunset. At the fifth or sixth hour one might pass through the whole length of the metropolis and scarcely meet more than a dozen or twenty persons, excepting the watchmen and guards, and the porters at the gates of the bye-streets and quarters." The watchmen also challenge every approaching passenger, and expect an answer. Women are almost never seen in the streets at night. If circumstances were similar among the Hebrews, the treatment which is here described is sufficiently explained; and is what any female might expect in hurrying through the streets at night, without male servants bearing lights, and, in her fright, probably neglecting to reply to the challenge of the watchmen.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The church professeth her faith in Christ. 4 Christ sheweth the graces of the church, 10 and his love towards her.

WHITHER is thy beloved gone, O thou fairest among women? whither is thy beloved turned aside? that we may seek him with thee.

2 My beloved is gone down into his garden, to the beds of spices, to feed in the gardens, and to gather lilies.

13 Return, return, O Shulamite; return, return, that we may look upon thee. What will ye see in the Shulamite? As it were the company 'of two armies.

Verse 10. "Fair as the moon, clear as the sun."—These are standing figures of the East when one would describe perfect beauty, whether in man or woman, without descending to particulars. "Moon-faced," is in Persia the common epithet expressing superlative beauty; and the poetical title usually given to the patriarch Joseph, who is regarded as the most perfect model of manly comeliness that the world ever saw, is, "Moon of Canaan." In the Mischat ul Masabih there is a chapter giving the different descriptions of Mohammed's person reported by his contemporaries. The following are among them. "Abu-Ubadiah said, I said to Rubaiyyah-bint-Muawwiz, 'Describe his majesty to me.' She said, 'O my little son!

had you seen his majesty, you would say that you had seen a sun rising.'—Jabir-bin-Samurah said, 'I saw his majesty in a moonlight night; and sometimes I looked at his beauty, and then at the moon—and he was brighter and more beautiful to me than the moon.'—Abu-Hurairah said, 'I never saw any thing more beautiful than the prophet: you might say that the sun was moving in his face.' " (B. xxiv. ch. iii. pt. 2.) In like manner does the Arabian hero celebrate the prince of Ibla:—"Never did I behold among the human race any thing like Ibla; lovelier and more beautiful than the sun and moon." Antar, vol. iv. p. 400.

1 A further description of the church's graces. 10 The church professeth her faith and desire.

How beautiful are thy feet with shoes, O prince's daughter! the joints of thy thighs are like jewels, the work of the hands of a cunning workman.

2 Thy navel is like a round goblet, which wanteth not 'liquor: thy belly is like an heap of wheat set about with lilies.

3 'Thy two breasts are like two young roes that are twins.

4 Thy neck is as a tower of ivory; thine eyes like the fishpools in Heshbon, by the gate of Bath-rabbim: thy nose is as the tower of Lebanon which looketh toward Damascus.

5 Thine head upon thee is like 'Carmel, and the hair of thine head like purple; the king is 'held in the galleries.

COSTUME OF THE "SPOUSE" AND ATTENDANTS.—COLLECTED FROM THE STATE DRESSES OF ANCIENT EGYPT.

Verse 1. "How beautiful!" &c.—We have already intimated that it is not our intention to discuss all the details of dress and personal description which this and other chapters offer. Feeling it however desirable to exhibit some general idea on the subject, we have chosen to do so pictorially, in the engraving now offered. Taking the idea that the bride was an Egyptian princess, it is but proper to conclude that she was arrayed in the richest style of her own country; and it therefore follows that some idea of that style of dress should be entertained to enable us to comprehend the force and bearing of the numerous allusions to details, to which our own usages and costumes offer no parallel. On this hint, the antiquities of Egypt have been largely examined, and such materials been drawn from them as seemed best to agree with the various indications contained in Solomon's Song, and particularly in the present chapter. The result is exhibited in our engraving.

which, in furnishing a faithful average representation of all that is peculiar in the more costly female dresses of Ancient Egypt, does, we are certainly persuaded, give to the whole subject the most satisfactory illustration which it is, at this time, capable of receiving.

4. "Fishpools in Heshbon."—See the note on Num. xxi. 26. Buckingham says that the large reservoir to the south of the town, and about half a mile from the foot of the hill on which it stands, is constructed with good masonry, and not unlike the cisterns of Solomon, near Jerusalem (see the note on Eccles. ii.), to which it is also nearly equal in size. It may also be observed that Jerusalem is just perceptible, and Bethlehem more distinctly visible from the commanding eminence on which Heshbon stands. See Buckingham's 'Travels among the Arab tribes,' p. 106-108.—Bath rabbim seems to have been the name of one of the gates of Heshbon, nearest to the fishpools, and as the gates of Oriental cities very commonly take their names from towns the road to which opens from them, it is probable enough that this gate took its name from Rabbath Ammon, the capital of the Ammonites, which lay about sixteen miles from Heshbon.

5. "The hair of thine head like purple."—We have often in the East seen hair of a purple hue, the result of an abortive attempt to dye it black. The present text, however, clearly does not describe the hue of the hair, but expresses its superiority in colour and lustre. We make no question that the true sense is conveyed in the following note, by which Francis explains the "Purpureis ales coloribus," of Horace (Ode i. lib. iv.) "The ancients called any strong and vivid colour by the name of purple, because that was their richest colour, purpureum mare, purpurea comæ, purpureo capillo, whence our learned Spenser,—

'The morrow next appear'd with purple hair.'"

"Galleries."—This is intelligible, as the reference is evidently to the head-dress of the bride. The original word (רַחֲטִים rahaimim) will very well afford the required sense of braided locks, tresses, or ringlets; the allusion to which is well explained by our engraving. See also the note on Isaiah iii. 18.

4 'I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, 'that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, until he please.

5 'Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness, leaning upon her beloved? I raised thee up under the apple tree: there thy mother brought thee forth: there she brought thee forth that bare thee.

9 If she be a wall, we will build upon her a palace of silver: and if she be a door, we will inclose her with boards of cedar.

10 I am a wall, and my breasts like towers: then was I in his eyes as one that found 'favour.

11 Solomon had a vineyard at Baal-hamon; he let out the vineyard unto keepers; every one for the fruit thereof was to bring a thousand pieces of silver.

12 My vineyard, which is mine, is before me: thou, O Solomon, must have a thousand, and those that keep the fruit thereof two hundred.

13 Thou that dwellest in the gardens, the companions hearken to thy voice: cause me to hear it.

14 ¶ 'Make haste, my beloved, and be thou like to a roe or to a young hart upon the mountains of spices.

⁴ Chap. 2. 7, and 3. 5.

⁵ Heb. why should ye stir up, or why, &c.

⁶ Heb. peace.

⁹ Heb. flee away.

Verse 2. "The juice of my pomegranate."—The drink was probably made with the juice of this fruit. The Orientals indulge largely in beverages made with the fresh juices of various kinds of fruit. Among these the sherbet made with pomegranate-juice is particularly esteemed; and, from its agreeable and cooling acidity, the present writer was himself accustomed to prefer it to any other drink of this description. The juice of the pomegranate is also much employed to impart a sub-acid flavour to a variety of beverages; and cooked dishes are frequently acidulated by it. The best idea of its various applications may be suggested by a comparison to our own employment of lemon-juice.

11. "Baal-hamon."—Nothing is known concerning this place, but much has been conjectured. Harmer, recollecting that Baalbec is traditionally said to have been the seat of Solomon's establishment of Pharaoh's daughter, supposes that Baal-hamon was situated in the same rich and fertile valley of Bocat, and probably not far from Baalbec; as this part of Syria seems to have been recently added to the Hebrew dominions. The old commentators seem, however, generally to have considered that the place could not have been so distant from Jerusalem.

12. "Solomon must have a thousand; and those that keep the fruit thereof, two hundred."—The "pieces of silver," in which this account is stated, were doubtless shekels. It seems probable that the vineyard consisted of a thousand vines, each required to afford a shekel to the owner; for we see that Solomon received a thousand shekels from his vineyard at Baal-hamon; and we learn, from Isaiah vii. 23, that a thousand "silverlings," or shekels, was the profit of a thousand vines. It would be interesting to know whether the keeper of the vineyard was an officer of Solomon's, or a person to whom the vineyard was let for culture. The former is most probable, since the proportion paid to the king is far higher than has ever been usual in the latter case, but would be very fair as a payment to the intendant or overseer. The estimate probably does not include the expenses of the vineyard, but its resulting profit. We have much more information concerning the terms on which rented arable lands are cultivated in the East, than concerning gardens and vineyards. However, it is usual for the owner to commit his orchard or vineyard to the care of a properly qualified person, who receives for his remuneration one-fourth (or something more or less, according to circumstances) of the produce; the owner providing the labour, manure, water, and bearing all other expenses. From Matt. xxi. 34, we learn that when a vineyard was let, a certain porportion of the produce was paid by the cultivator, as rent to the proprietor. This is the plan still much followed in the East; and, in the notes to Luke xvi. 5, and xx. 9, we shall state the results of such information as we possess on this part of the subject. It may be thought strange that a vineyard, affording but an income of 125*l.* a year, should be so particularly mentioned among the possessions of a great king like Solomon. When, however, we consider that the previous distribution of the soil among the tribes and families of Israel, must have rendered it difficult for the early kings, who had no large family inheritances, to acquire demesnes proportioned to their rank in the state, we shall understand that such a vineyard must have been a possession of considerable importance to him. (See the notes on 1 Kings xxi. 16, and 1 Chron. xxvii. 28.)

ISAIAH.—Regarded in the order of time, the writings of Isaiah would form the fifth of the prophetic books, as the prophets Joel, Jonah, Hosea, and Amos were his predecessors: yet this book is most properly placed first in the collection, on account of the transcendent importance and sublimity of the predictions it contains, as well perhaps on account of its extent, the book of Isaiah being longer than any other prophetic book, and, indeed, exceeding in bulk all the writings of the twelve minor prophets taken together.

The first verse of the first chapter informs us that Isaiah was the son of Amoz. This Amoz must not be confounded with the prophet of that name: we know nothing of him; but the tradition of the Jews is, that he was a son of Joash king of Judah, and consequently brother to king Uzziah. This account makes Isaiah of the royal race of the house of David; but it certainly does not rest on any foundation which the Scripture offers. The same verse states that he discharged the prophetic office in the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, which, according to the lowest computation, embraces a period of forty-eight years, counting from the last year of Uzziah to the fifteenth or sixteenth of Hezekiah, to which date we know, historically, that he survived and prophesied. But the tradition of the Jews, followed by most Christians, extends the time of Isaiah into that of king Manasseh, by whom he is said to have been put to death by being sawn asunder; and to this the apostle has been supposed to allude in Heb. xi. 37. That this favoured prophet long discharged his sacred office, and must have lived to a ripe old age, we know; but that he lived and prophesied so long as this statement assumes, is more than Scripture requires us to believe. It would extend the duration of his prophetic office to upwards of sixty years by the lowest estimate; and a sensible Jewish writer, Aben Ezra, remarks that, had he lived in the time of Manasseh, the enumeration of the kings, in verse 1, would not have ended with Hezekiah, and hence infers that he died before the last-named monarch—an opinion in which Bishop Lowth concurs.

The peculiar sublimity of Isaiah's prophecies, both in their style and objects, has directed the attention, both of Jews and Christians, more strongly to this book than to any other in the prophetic canon of the Old Testament. It is its very important distinction to be more frequently quoted in the New Testament than any other of the sacred books, the Psalms excepted: and the distinct manner in which the divinely-inspired writer speaks of the birth and sufferings of Christ, and the glories of his kingdom, has ever rendered it eminently instrumental in the conviction of the unbelieving, in confirming the doubtful, and in strengthening the faint-hearted.

The force and magnificence of Isaiah's style have in all ages been highly appreciated. Jerome felt and expressed the difficulty of preserving its energy in a translation; and yet it does so happen that, even when weakened by translation, so much of its native strength and effulgence does still remain, as to arrest the attention of the general reader, as to something uncommon. No one has discriminated the peculiar character of Isaiah's prophecies with greater clearness than Bishop Lowth, a portion of whose remarks we subjoin. "Isaiah, the first of the prophets both in order and dignity, abounds in such transcendent excellencies, that he may properly be said to furnish the most perfect model of prophetic poetry. He is at once elegant and sublime, forcible and ornamented; he unites energy with copiousness, and dignity with variety. In his sentiments there is uncommon elevation and majesty; in his imagery the utmost propriety, elegance, dignity, and diversity; and, notwithstanding the obscurity of his subjects, a surprising degree of clearness and simplicity. To these we may add, there is such sweetness in the composition of his sentences, that if the Hebrew language is at present possessed of any remains of its native grace and harmony, we shall chiefly find them in the writings of Isaiah." He also considers the whole book to be poetical, with the exception of a few passages, which, if brought together, would not exceed the bulk of five or six chapters. He elsewhere calls Isaiah "the prince of prophets;" the Jewish writers also call him "the great prophet;" Eusebius distinguishes him as "the greatest of the prophets;" and Jerome is not contented to style him a prophet only, but calls him an evangelist, observing that so distinct are his predictions, that he seems rather to speak of things past than things to come. He calls him also an apostle; and on the same grounds, "the evangelical prophet" is the distinction which is now generally associated with his name.

The readers of the Pictorial Bible are probably sufficiently acquainted with the plan of the work to be prepared to expect that it will not generally undertake to explain the past or investigate the prospective fulfilments of the several prophecies.

There is, however, a very interesting and important class of prophecies, from the consideration of which we do not appear to be precluded either by the continued application of the plan we have hitherto followed, or by that regard to our limits which necessarily requires very careful attention. It will at once be perceived that the prophecies which remain unfulfilled, do not come within any limit which our plan allows us to draw. Then the fulfilled prophecies may be divided into two classes:—1. Those which were fulfilled before the canon of Scripture had closed, and the fulfilment of which the Scripture itself declares. 2. Those concerning the fulfilment of which the Scripture affords no distinct information. With respect to the first, the only course which the plan and still more the limits of this work would allow us generally to take, would be to indicate the circumstances in which the fulfilment is to be sought: but this indication being already conveyed in the marginal references, and in the summaries prefixed to each chapter, we shall rarely have any remarks to offer on this class of subjects. This restriction will leave us the more room to attend to the second class, on which our line of illustration will chiefly fall, and which will be found to refer principally to historical circumstances, and to the past and present condition of nations, countries and towns, which, as being predicted by the sacred writers, furnish the most beautiful and convincing evidence that they could not otherwise have spoken than as divinely authorised by Him from whom nothing is hid, and to whose eyes all things—in all eternity and time—are plain and open. (Heb. iv. 13.)

Verse 8. "Cottage in a vineyard."—See the note on Job xxvii. 18.

"Lodge in a garden of cucumbers."—Cucumbers (see the note on Num. xi. 5), melons, and the like, are seldom protected by enclosures, but cultivated in large open fields, quite exposed to the depredations of men or beasts. To prevent this, a slight artificial mount is raised, if required, and on this is constructed a frail hut or booth, such as are used in the vineyard, just sufficient for one person, who, in this confined solitude, remains constantly watching the ripening crop. Very often has our travelling party paused on arriving at such melon grounds to bargain with the watchman for a supply of his refreshing fruit; and on such occasions—often seeing no object around to a great distance in the plain but this one man and his solitary shed—we have been most forcibly reminded of the peculiar appropriateness of the image of desolation suggested by the prophet.

ISAIAH.—M. ANGELO. FROM THE FRESCOS IN THE SISTINE CHAPEL.

18. "Though your sins be as scarlet."—For a Jewish opinion on this text, see the note on Levit. xvi. 10. It may also be well to understand that the word rendered scarlet (שָׁנִי) means also double dyed, or twice dipped, and hence there may be a reference to the intensity of the colour, and the difficulty with which it was discharged.

22. "Wine mixed with water."—The Orientals are not in the habit of mixing wine and water for drinking; but generally when they wish to weaken the effect of the wine, drink water or sherbet separately. The present text may therefore be understood to refer to the adulteration of wine, not to its preparation for drinking.

29. "Ashamed of the oaks," &c.—This doubtless refers to the sacred groves which were so frequently associated with the idolatries of ancient times, and which are mentioned in several other passages of Scripture.

30. "A garden that hath no water."—To apprehend the force of this, it is necessary to recollect that during the summers of the East the soil is not irrigated by occasional rains and showers; and the heat being at the same time intense, no garden can exist without a full and constant supply of water, derived from rivers, canals, or reservoirs; and, as occasion requires, distributed in small streams and rills through different parts of the ground.

THE word that Isaiah the son of Amoz saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem.

2 And 'it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the LORD's house shall be 'established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it.

3 And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

4 And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into 'pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

Verse 4. "Beat their swords into plowshares," &c. This image is reversed by the prophet Joel (iii. 10) to express the prevalence of war over peace:—"Beat your ploughs into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears." The image is in both applications very striking and natural, and has also been employed by the Roman poets (see Virgil, Georg. i. 506; and Ovid, Fast. i. 697); and is perhaps more literal than is usually imagined. In such states of society as that of the Hebrews, the peasantry when called to the field, are obliged to provide their own weapons; and, such being the case, when the person was poor, and manufactured weapons dear, from the general demand or the scarcity of metal, it would be an obvious thought to turn the ploughshare into a sword, particularly as the ploughshare being, as such, thin and light, while the ancient swords were short and thick, the transformation might be effected with little difficulty; and when the wars were over, it might be restored with equal ease to its former use. That which was originally a sword might of course be changed, with the same facility into a ploughshare.

16. "Ships of Tarshish."—Ships of the first class, which made distant voyages, such as those in which the Tyrians traded to Tarshish. (See the note on 2 Chron. ix. 10.)

"Pleasant pictures."—Lowth's version, "Against every lovely work of art," seems to convey the real meaning. The reference would seem to be to those ingenious and ornamental works which the Phoenicians were in ancient times famous for producing.

MOLE RAT.

20. "Moles."—The original, חֶפְזֵי פֶּרוֹת cheper-peroth (read as one word in some manuscripts), has been variously understood. The Septuagint has ματαιότης, vanities; others, pits or holes; but it is more generally understood of animals which dig pits, particularly moles, rats, mice, &c. Remembering the extent to which we have seen the ruined sites of the East perforated with the holes of various hole or cave-digging animals, both in heaps of ruins and the level ground, we should be inclined to suppose that the word might generally denote any animals of this description. However, in deferring so far to the general opinion, as to suppose that a particular animal is intended, and of the class usually understood, we imagine that the spalar of the Greeks may be taken to offer a fair alternative. These animals are of the rat kind, in the order of the rodentia, or gnawers; and are remarkable for their blindness, since the eye is not visible till after the skin is stripped off, and is not perforated by any chink or opening to admit the ingress of light. The blind-rat, or mole-rat, is larger than the common rat, and has a fine hair of an ash colour, inclining to red.

"Bats."—The original word עטלפים atelephim, appears to denote "fliers in darkness," a particularly suitable denomination for "bats," which sleep by day and only become active and leave their retreats as night comes on. It is well agreed that bats are intended; but nothing is known of the particular species, nor perhaps is any one in particular denoted; it being better to understand the word as a name for bats in general. The equivocal character of the bat, as an animal furnished with wings of a peculiar nature by means of which it flies after the manner of a bird, gave occasion to the remarkable description of it in Deut. xiv. 18, 19: "The bat, and every creeping thing that flieth, shall be unclean unto you." Bats are however accounted delicate eating in some parts of Southern Asia, where there are species of a very large size. In Western Asia, however, in the latitude of Palestine, we are not aware of any particularly large species. The most common does not much exceed in size the species most usual in England; being little larger in the body than a mouse. When examined it proves to be a delicate and beautiful creature covered with a fine fur of very pale yellow, while the fine integuments forming what are called the wings, are when expanded ribbed with the bright red lines of the bony prolongations by which they are managed and supported. These bats, as usual, harbour in caverns and deserted buildings; and not only so, but they swarm in the towns. In those houses where some of the windows are left without glass, and with only lattices for the sake of coolness—or in the public rooms, which are open in front,—they harbour by day in the best and most frequented apartments, several of them clinging together in one mass to the high vaulted or flat ceilings. They do not occasion much inconvenience when their numbers are not considerable in one room. The height of the ceilings and the lightness of their colour prevent them from being very conspicuous, and they remain clustered together from morning to evening, without moving, except that now and then we have observed a head put out and immediately retracted. They are not disturbed without considerable violence, when, if one or two be detached, they remain on the wing and speedily return to their places. In the evening, however, if the shutters should happen to be closed, or their usual means of egress debarred, they occasion much annoyance by flying about the room till they can get out. They however prefer dark, out of the way places, and they harbour by hundreds in the underground cellars, to which the inhabitants of lower Mesopotamia retreat from the heat during the summer season. Such, we imagine, were some of the aspects under which bats were known to the Hebrews.

CHAPTER III.

1 The great confusion which cometh by sin. 9 The impudency of the people. 12 The oppression and covetousness of the rulers. 16 The judgments which shall be for the pride of the women.

FOR, behold, the Lord, the LORD of hosts, doth take away from Jerusalem and from Judah the stay and the staff, the whole stay of bread, and the whole stay of water,

2 The mighty man, and the man of war, the judge, and the prophet, and the prudent, and the ancient,

3 The captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator.

4 And I will give children to be their princes, and babes shall rule over them.

5 And the people shall be oppressed, every one by another, and every one by his neighbour: the child shall behave himself proudly against the ancient, and the base against the honourable.

6 When a man shall take hold of his brother of the house of his father, saying, Thou hast clothing, be thou our ruler, and let this ruin be under thy hand:

7 In that day shall he swear, saying, I will not be an healer; for in my house is neither bread nor clothing: make me not a ruler of the people.

8 For Jerusalem is ruined, and Judah is fallen: because their tongue and their doings are against the LORD, to provoke the eyes of his glory.

9 ¶ The shew of their countenance doth witness against them; and they declare their sin as Sodom, they hide it not. Woe unto their soul! for they have rewarded evil unto themselves.

10 Say ye to the righteous, that it shall be well with him: for they shall eat the fruit of their doings.

11 Woe unto the wicked! it shall be ill with him: for the reward of his hands shall be given him.

12 ¶ As for my people, children are their oppressors, and women rule over them. O my people, they which lead thee cause thee to err, and destroy the way of thy paths.

13 The LORD standeth up to plead, and standeth to judge the people.

14 The LORD will enter into judgment with the ancients of his people, and the princes thereof: for ye have eaten up the vineyard; the spoil of the poor is in your houses.

15 What mean ye that ye beat my people to pieces, and grind the faces of the poor? saith the Lord God of hosts.

16 ¶ Moreover the LORD saith, Because

Verse 18. "Tinkling ornaments about their feet."—We shall give Mr. Lane's illustration of this text. "Anklets of solid gold or silver are worn by some ladies, but are more uncommon than they formerly were. They are of course very heavy, and knocking together as the wearer walks, make a ringing noise; hence it is said in a song, 'the ringing of thy anklets has deprived me of reason.' Isaiah alludes to this, or perhaps to the sound produced by another kind of anklet." This he afterwards describes:—"Anklets of solid silver, already described, are worn by the wives of some of the richer peasants, and of the sheyks of villages. Some anklets of iron are worn by many children. It was also a common custom among the Arabs for girls or young women to wear a string of bells on their feet. I have seen many little girls in Cairo with small round bells attached to their anklets. Perhaps it is to the sound of ornaments of this kind, rather than of the more common anklets, that Isaiah alludes." In Asia we have often found the anklets to be hollow, which of course greatly strengthens and sharpens the ringing sound they afford when struck together, which, from their large diameter, often happens in walking. Sometimes two or three anklets, of the same or different kinds, are worn on the same legs, and which of course jingle against one another in walking. The dancing girls of India have several anklets of different sorts, one of which has a row of bells attached to it. It is important also to add, that not only anklets, but bells attached to the feet, are seen in the ancient paintings of Egypt. Another interpretation might be suggested, namely, that small bells were attached to the hem of the gown; as we know from ancient sculptures that such were worn by the Bacchantes for the sake of the sound which they afforded in dancing.

"Cauls."—The original word (שִׁבְיִסִּים shebisim) is of very uncertain meaning. That it denotes something worn upon the head or hair is tolerably clear. Some follow the marginal reading, "networks;" while Schroeder and others elicit from the Arabic that it denotes little ornaments, bullæ, or studs, worn on the hair. Much of the obscurity which attends such subjects arises from reasonings upon abstract etymologies, without reference, or without sufficient reference, to the past or existing usages and costumes of the East. If we understand the word to refer to the manner in which the women set off the tresses of their hair, as they hang down their backs, we shall see that it will answer better than anything that has been suggested to both the above explanations. The hair is usually divided into a number of braids or tresses, which fall down upon the back, and to each of which is added three silken threads, each charged with small ornaments in gold, and terminating in small coins of the same metal. The whole furnishes the rich appearance of which our engraving will suggest an idea; and, regarded at a little distance, has a sort of mailed, or rather reticulated appearance, which might well enough suggest the idea and the denomination of "network," if the original word is rightly so understood. And indeed, that idea of "interweaving," on which this interpretation is founded, is literally exemplified in this sort of ornament, since the silken threads are, for a third of their length, generally interwoven with the hair. Mr. Lane says of this decoration, "The sufa appears to me the prettiest, as well as the most singular of the ornaments worn by the ladies of Egypt. The glittering of the burck, &c., and their chinking together as the wearer walks, have a peculiarly lively effect." This last circumstance seems to us a strong corroboration of our opinion, for being chinking ornaments of the hair, we might expect them to be mentioned immediately after, and in connection with, the tinkling ornaments of the feet, as is actually the case with the shebisim of the present text.

"Cauls." Lady adorned with the Sufa, showing also the Turban, or "Bonnet" of v. 20.

"Round tires like the moon."—The explanation of this now usually suggested is, that the ornament consisted of small moon-like figures, strung together and worn as a necklace. It is possible, however, that the denomination from the moon only denotes the lustre of the ornament, according to Oriental usage. And what confirms us in this impression is, that the women of Egypt and Western Asia, actually give the name of "moon" (ckumarah) to a splendid ornament, usually of gold, and sometimes set with jewels, which they wear in front of their head-dress, and a figure of which we annex. Another ornament, applied to the same purpose, might, from its roundness, suggest a resemblance of form to the moon; and indeed, jewelled crescents are also among the ornaments worn in front or by the side of the head-dress, so that, on the whole, there seems, from analogy, little reason to doubt the use of the ornament in question, whatever may have been its particular form.

The Ckumarah.

19. "Chains."—Literally "drops" or pendants; and we are probably to understand various kinds of pendant ornaments, including earrings. We therefore illustrate the subject generally by giving specimens of necklaces, pendant ornaments of different sorts, and earrings. We have spoken fully about earrings on former occasions.

Ancient Egyptian Necklace (from Signor d'Athanasii's Collection), composed of shells and pendant ornaments, both of fine gold, and inlaid with red composition.

"Bracelets."—There is a note on bracelets under Gen. xxiv. 22. The forms of those anciently worn may also be seen in the engravings given under Exod. iv. and Sol. Song vii.

"Mufflers."—A sort of veil is doubtless intended. Various kinds are mentioned in the present enumeration of articles of female dress and ornament, and in other passages of Scripture, and most of them may probably be identified with some of the various veils now used in the East. The reaaloth, of the present text, appears to denote veils for the face. Of these various kinds are used in the East. That in Egypt and Syria is commonly a long strip, black or white, plain or ornamented, fastened by bands to the head, and sometimes nearly descending to the feet. This veil does not cover the eyes. The veils of the Turkish women cover the whole face, and are made of horse-hair, through which the women can see clearly, although it seems perfectly opaque when viewed from without. The Persian women also cover the whole of the face, commonly with an untransparent white veil, a strip of lace or network inserted in which, over the eyes, enables them to see without being seen. Transparent veils, for the face, of lace or crape, such as our women use, are not known in the East. It is remarkable that it does not appear from Egyptian paintings that veils were used by the females of ancient Egypt.

20. "Bonnets."—Probably the head-dress or turban in the general sense is intended. This—independently of any ornaments of jewels, gold spangles and coins which it may receive—usually, at the present day, consists of a cap, around which is bound one or more rich handkerchiefs or shawls, folded high and flat, not bulging out like those of the men. This is the general principle of the head-dress, but with great variations of detail.

Forms of Earrings, from Ancient Egyptian Sculptures.

Ancient Egyptian Necklace. From 'Description de l'Egypte.'

"Ornaments of the legs."—These are probably the anklets, simply understood, without the "tinkling ornaments" mentioned in verse 18.

The Kkoossah, or Jewelled Head-band of Modern Egypt.

"Headbands."—This is now usually rendered "zones" or "girdles;" and the explanation which we have given to the "round tires like the moon," of verse 18, seeming to anticipate the "head-bands," we concur in this interpretation. The ancient girdles, like some of those now in use, appear to have been very rich, studded with gold, and enriched with precious stones.

"Tablets."—These appear to have been small ornamented boxes or bottles containing rich perfumes, and which were attached to a necklace that hung down to the waist.

Hhegabs, or Amulets, of Modern Egypt.

"Earrings."—The Arabic version translates the word, boxes of amulets or charms; and that this is the correct interpretation is now generally agreed. So Aben Ezra, who says that they were writings, written in gold and silver, and used as amulets. They probably contained some passages of Scripture, as those of the Mohammedans usually do extracts from the Koran. The faith of the modern Orientals in amulets, to avert some evil or obtain some blessing, is strong, deep, and almost universal. There are few persons who do not wear amulets of some kind or other. Those of the ladies are made to serve as ornaments, by being enclosed in small cases of embossed gold or silver, and commonly suspended at the right side from a silken cord or chain, which is passed over the left shoulder. They are sometimes worn at the neck or bosom, or around the head; and frequently two or more are attached to the same string. That the Hebrews were greatly addicted to this superstition is allowed by their own writers.

The Khizain, or Nose-jewel, of Modern Egypt.

21. "Nose-jewels."—See the note on Gen. xxiv. 47. We give a representation of the kind now most commonly worn.

22. "Changeable suits of apparel."—We gather the sense by a comparison with Zech. iii. 3, 4, where the same word (מחלצות machlatzoth) denotes beautiful or costly garments, as opposed to those that were mean or filthy. If it refer to any single article of dress, it probably means the gown. These are sometimes very costly indeed, and even very commonly they are of richly-figured silks and satins. They were doubtless, in those earlier times, among the wealthy, of the richest stuffs that could be procured. (See the two figures in p. 231.)

"Mantles."—The women of Western Asia and Egypt now wear, in private, over the gown a sort of long mantle or pelisse, made of cloth, silk, or velvet, and which may very probably be some such article as the present text denotes.

"Wimples."—What our translators understood by a "wimple" was a sort of hood, which fitted to the head, and came down behind to near the middle of the back, covering also the shoulders. The descending parts of this hood distinguished it as a wimple. It was also called a veil. Thus Spenser describes Una as shading her beauty

"Under a veil that wimpled was full low."

Such hoods are still worn by some kinds of nuns, and is a common article of out-door dress in the south of Italy and in Malta, where it is generally of black silk. Although we do not think that "wimples" correctly interprets the original word, we believe it does well distinguish its use as an enveloping article which the women wore out of doors. This is, in the East, like a sheet—black, white, striped, or plaided—and of silk or cotton, according to the circumstances of the wearer; and which, being fastened to the head by a ribbon sewed inside, falls to the ground, and, with the face-veil, completely envelopes the whole person from head to foot. The word used here is the same which describes the veil worn by Ruth (iii. 15), and in which she carried away the six measures of barley which Boaz gave to her. Under this external wrapper, ladies usually wear a capacious silk robe (called tob) with long and loose sleeves; and this, but of coarser materials, serves women of the lower orders for an external walking garment.

"Crisping pins."—This is the same word which is translated "bags" in 2 Kings v. 23; and it is hard to understand how it came to be translated "crisping-pins" here. A purse is doubtless intended in both instances, and the word has the same meaning in the Arabic. Here we are to understand a richly-ornamented purse, or small bag, which the women wore attached to their girdles, to serve as a pocket. They are usually made of silk, and wrought with gold and silver. But Jahn says, we know not on what authority, that those of the Hebrew women were of solid metal, sometimes pure gold, and fashioned like a cone, with borders of rich cloth at the top.

23. "Glasses."—Metallic mirrors, which the women carried about with them as articles of ornament and use. But Lowth and others think that transparent garments are intended; and the Septuagint certainly sanctions this interpretation.

"Fine linen."—The same word here, which in Judges xiv. 12, 13, and Prov. xxxi. 24, we have supposed to denote shirts or inner garments.

"Hoods."—Lowth and Boothroyd have "turbans;" but do not say how these are to be distinguished from the "bonnets" in verse 2, which they render "tires," and allow to be head-dresses—and head-dresses are turbans. Jahn thinks the word means a double veil, covering the head, and falling down behind and before: and so far we agree with him; but the rest of his description confounds it with that large wrapper which we have noticed under the word "wimples." We are disposed to think that it rather describes such a head-dress as is still seen among the Arabian females. It consists of a large handkerchief, or shawl, or piece of linen or cotton (usually black, but in some parts white, or of some dark colour) which, after covering the head, falls some way down the back; the corners being brought round in front, to cover the throat and bosom; and generally the lower part of the face to the tip of the nose; being, in fact, the customary veil of the class of women by whom it is used. As shown in our cut, it is not unlike what our translators must have understood to have been intended by the word which they translate "wimples" in the next verse.

"Vails."—We believe this to be the head-veil which the ladies of Western Asia and Egypt usually wear within doors. It is usually a long strip of white muslin, embroidered with threads of coloured silk and gold; or of coloured crape, ornamented with gold thread, lama, and spangles. It rests upon the head, and falls down the back, forming one of the most graceful articles of female attire in the East. A back veil becomes an external article of the walking dress when the tob is worn as the outer robe (as shown in the third cut of the preceding page); and (as in the second cut below) it sometimes assumes the place of a mantle.

A Dancing Woman of Cairo, showing the Shawl Girdle, with a short Veil, and a kind of Wrapper worn as a back Veil.

24. "Stomacher."—The opposition of this to a "girding of sackcloth" would suggest that a sort of girdle is intended; and accordingly, the word (which occurs nowhere else) is now usually rendered by "zone." As it must be distinguished from that mentioned in verse 20, and as the (פֶּתִיגִיל pethigil) implies width, while the Chaldee synonyme indicates that it was of linen, we might suppose it to be such a girdle as is now commonly worn by the Asiatic women. It consists of a shawl or handkerchief, folded wide; and is usually put loosely around the waist, in a simple and tasteful manner, with the corners hanging down behind, but sometimes in front.

In the attempt contained in the notes on this chapter to discriminate the various articles mentioned, and thereby to assist the reader to some idea of the more costly dresses and ornaments of the Hebrew women, our researches and personal recollections have been much assisted by a paper on the dress of the women of Egypt in Mr. Lane's 'Modern Egyptians.'

26. "She, being desolate, shall sit upon the ground."—This is strikingly illustrated by the attitude in which the "captive daughter of Zion" is represented upon the medal struck by Vespasian to commemorate the taking of Jerusalem. The obverse contains the head of the emperor, while the reverse represents a woman sitting, in a mournful posture, under a palm tree. The inscription, JUDEA CAPTA, precludes any misapprehension of its meaning. So striking is the analogy, that some think the idea of the device on the medal was purposely taken from this prophecy, at the suggestion of Josephus, who was then at the court of Vespasian and enjoyed his favour. The same event is also commemorated in a silver denarius of the same emperor, in which the mourning female sits more markedly on the ground, while behind her rises the military trophy which signalises the triumph of the conqueror and her own desolation.

CHAPTER IV.

¹ Under the parable of a vineyard God excuseth his severe judgment. ⁸ His judgments upon covetousness, ¹¹ upon lasciviousness, ¹³ upon impiety, ²⁰ and upon injustice. ²⁶ The executioners of God's judgments.

Now will I sing to my wellbeloved a song of my beloved touching his vineyard. My wellbeloved hath 'a vineyard in 'a very fruitful hill:

2 And he 'fenced it, and gathered out the stones thereof, and planted it with the choicest vine, and built a tower in the midst of it, and also 'made a winepress therein: and he looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes.

3 And now, O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah, judge, I pray you, betwixt me and my vineyard.

4 What could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it? wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes?

5 And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be 'trodden down:

6 And I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned, nor digged; but there shall come up briers and thorns: I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.

7 For the vineyard of the LORD of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah 'his pleasant plant: and he looked for judgment, but behold 'oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry.

8 ¶ Woe unto them that join 'house to house, that lay field to field, till there be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth!

9 'In mine ears said the LORD of hosts, 'Of a truth many houses shall be desolate, even great and fair, without inhabitant.

10 Yea, ten acres of vineyard shall yield one bath, and the seed of an homer shall yield an ephah.

11 ¶ 'Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, till wine 'inflammeth them!

12 And the harp, and the viol, the tabret, and pipe, and wine, are in their feasts: but they regard not the work of the LORD, neither consider the operation of his hands.

13 ¶ Therefore my people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge: and 'their honourable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst.

14 Therefore hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure: and their glory, and their multitude, and their pomp, and he that rejoiceth, shall descend into it.

15 And 'the mean man shall be brought down, and the mighty man shall be humbled, and the eyes of the lofty shall be humbled:

16 But the LORD of hosts shall be exalted in judgment, and 'God that is holy shall be sanctified in righteousness.

17 Then shall the lambs feed after their manner, and the waste places of the fat ones shall strangers eat.

18 Woe unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were with a cart rope:

Verse 1. "A vineyard in a very fruitful hill."—The declivities of hills having a southern exposure are still favourite situations for vineyards in the East, and where practicable are always chosen in preference, as we have often had occasion to notice. The reader will not fail to observe the information which this beautiful allegory incidentally conveys concerning the manner in which vineyards were arranged and treated by the Hebrews.

26. "Hiss unto them."—Cyril, cited by Lowth, says: "The metaphor is taken from the practice of those that keep bees, who draw them out of their hives into the fields, and lead them back again, συσπασσι, by a hiss or whistle." Under this explanation the allusion is very expressive. Compare chap. vii. 18.

28. "Their horses' hoofs...like flint, and their wheels like a whirlwind."—As this prophecy appears to refer to the invasion of Judea by the Babylonians, it may be proper to observe that this people were noted for their power in horses and chariots. Xenophon, in the second book of the Cyropædia, represents Cyaxares as stating to Cyrus the force which the allies opposed to him might bring into the field. The Babylonians are set down for twenty thousand horse and two hundred chariots, being double the number of both horses and chariots which is allowed to any other of the great powers of Western Asia. The allusion to the hardness of the horses' hoofs probably arises from the fact, that the ancients did not shoe their horses by nailing iron plates to the bottom of the hoof. There were indeed shoes of leather, gold, and silver, but these enclosed the whole hoof, and were bound or tied on, being only used on particular occasions, and very rarely. Hence the hardness of the hoofs was a very important consideration; and Xenophon lays much stress on this point, observing that the good hoof is hard, hollow, and when struck on the ground sounds like a cymbal. He also suggests means by which the hoofs may be hardened. The necessity for such hard hoofs in war-horses did not escape Homer, who continually applies to them the epithet "brazen-hoofed."

CHAPTER VI.

¹ Isaiah, in a vision of the Lord in his glory, 5 being terrified, is confirmed for his message. 9 He sheweth the obstinacy of the people unto their desolation. 13 A remnant shall be saved.

In the year that king Uzziah died I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and ²his train filled the temple.

his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly.

"Seraphim." A supposed analogous figure, from a Persian Sculpture at Mourg Aub.—See note.

3 And ³one cried unto another, and said, 'Holy, holy, holy, is the LORD of hosts: ⁴the whole earth is full of his glory.

4 And the posts of the ⁵'door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke.

⁶undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts.

6 Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, ⁷having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar:

7 And he ⁸'laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged.

11 Then said I, Lord, how long? And he answered, Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be ¹³utterly desolate, 12 And the LORD have removed men far away, and there be a great forsaking in the midst of the land.

13 ¶ But yet in it shall be a tenth, ¹⁴and it shall return, and shall be eaten: as a teil tree, and as an oak, whose ¹⁵substance is in them, when they cast their leaves: so the holy seed shall be the substance thereof.

Verse 2. "Seraphims."—The word שֵׁרָפִים seraphim comes from שָׂרַף saraph, "to burn," from which, and from the description, we may gather that the seraphim presented human figures, of a brilliant fiery appearance, and covered with wings. Wings are common to them and the cherubim, and the only certain distinction discoverable is that conveyed in their name, "burning ones." The cherubim also are nowhere described as having six wings. The seraphim are mentioned here only; and there appears such conformity between them and the cherubim that it is difficult to trace the distinctions of appearance which they may have exhibited. As there has been much speculation concerning the forms which these distinguished beings bore, we take the opportunity of introducing an engraving after the only sculptured image which appears to suggest any approximation to the idea which the Scriptural descriptions seem to express. This singular remains belongs to Ancient Persia, and is found upon one side of a square column at Mourg Aub. It will be seen that one pair of the wings falls nearly to the feet, while the other rises high above the head. The head itself also exemplifies a frequent symbol of Scripture—being surmounted by horns, which support a curious symbolical mitre. The figure is conjectured by Porter, from various circumstances, to represent a superior spirit, and perhaps the tutelary genius of the country. He faces the temple with his hands uplifted and open, as if in the act of benediction. Porter says, "With the exception of the mitre, there is nothing I have ever seen or read of which bears so strong a resemblance to the whole of the figure on the pillar as the ministering or guardian angels, described under the name of Seraphim or Cherubim by the different writers in the Bible; and, if we are to ascribe these erections to Cyrus, how readily may we have found the model of his genii, either in the spoils of the temple of Jerusalem, which he saw among the treasures of Babylon, or from the Jewish descriptions, in the very word of prophecy which mentions him by name; and which doubtless would be in the possession of Daniel and open to the eye of the monarch to whom it so immediately referred." There is more probability than might at the first view appear in the notion that the works at Mourg Aub were by Cyrus; and, should the other parts of the conclusion be considered tenable, there is nothing very absurd in the idea that this figure may furnish the only existing clue to that of the seraphim or cherubim of Scripture.

6. "The altar."—This was doubtless the altar of burnt offering, in the court before the sanctuary, on which was kept ever-burning the fire originally kindled from heaven.

13. "Tell tree, and...oak."—The original words are essentially the same, and seem to denote one and the same tree which we, with others, take to be the terebinth-tree, described under Gen. xviii. 1. The tree is represented as an evergreen by the ancient naturalists, never shedding its leaves; but this is not confirmed by modern witnesses, who find that the terebinth is, under certain circumstances, stripped of its foliage in the winter. This coincides with the allusion in the present text, which portrays the tree as casting its leaves under inclement contingencies, but yet retaining the vital principle in the unexpanded bud.

CHAPTER VII.

¹ Ahaz, being troubled with fear of Rezin and Pekah, is comforted by Isaiah. ¹⁰ Ahaz, having liberty to choose a sign, and refusing it, hath for a sign, Christ promised. ¹⁷ His judgment is prophesied to come by Assyria.

AND it came to pass in the days of ¹Ahaz the son of Jotham, the son of Uzziah, king of Judah, that Rezin the king of Syria, and Pekah the son of Remaliah, king of Israel, went up toward Jerusalem to war against it, but could not prevail against it.

2 And it was told the house of David, saying, Syria ²is confederate with Ephraim. And his heart was moved, and the heart of his people, as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind.

3 Then said the LORD unto Isaiah, Go forth now to meet Ahaz, thou, and ³Shear-jashub thy son, at the end of the 'conduit of the upper pool in the 'highway of the fuller's field;

4 And say unto him, Take heed, and be quiet; fear not, ⁴neither be fainthearted for the two tails of these smoking firebrands, for the fierce anger of Rezin with Syria, and of the son of Remaliah.

5 Because Syria, Ephraim, and the son of Remaliah, have taken evil counsel against thee, saying,

6 Let us go up against Judah, and ⁶vex it, and let us make a breach therein for us, and set a king in the midst of it, even the son of Tabeal:

7 Thus saith the Lord God, It shall not stand, neither shall it come to pass.

8 For the head of Syria is Damascus, and the head of Damascus is Rezin; and within threescore and five years shall Ephraim be broken, ⁸that it be not a people.

9 And the head of Ephraim is Samaria, and the head of Samaria is Remaliah's son. ⁹If ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established.

10 ¶ ¹⁰Moreover the LORD spake again unto Ahaz, saying,

11 Ask thee a sign of the LORD thy God; ¹¹ask it either in the depth, or in the height above.

12 But Ahaz said, I will not ask, neither will I tempt the LORD.

13 And he said, Hear ye now, O house of David; Is it a small thing for you to weary men, but will ye weary my God also?

14 Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; ¹⁴Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and ¹⁵shall call his name Immanuel.

15 Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil, and choose the good.

16 For before the child shall know to refuse the evil, and choose the good, the land that thou abhorrest shall be forsaken of both her kings.

17 ¶ The LORD shall bring upon thee, and upon thy people, and upon thy father's house, days that have not come, from the day that Ephraim departed from Judah; even the king of Assyria.

19 And they shall come, and shall rest all of them in the desolate valleys, and in the holes of the rocks, and upon all thorns, and upon all ¹⁴bushes.

20 In the same day shall the Lord shave with a ¹⁵razor that is hired, namely, by them beyond the river, by the king of Assyria, the head, and the hair of the feet: and it shall also consume the beard.

21 And it shall come to pass in that day, that a man shall nourish a young cow, and two sheep;

22 And it shall come to pass, for the abundance of milk that they shall give that he shall eat butter: for butter and honey shall every one eat that is left ¹⁶in the land.

23 And it shall come to pass in that day, that every place shall be, where there were a thousand vines at a thousand silverlings, it shall even be for briers and thorns.

24 With arrows and with bows shall men come thither; because all the land shall become briers and thorns.

25 And on all hills that shall be digged with the mattock, there shall not come thither the fear of briers and thorns: but it shall be for the sending forth of oxen, and for the treading of lesser cattle.

¹⁴ Or, commendable trees.

¹⁶ Heb. in the midst of the land.

Verse 8. "Within threescore and five years."—The desolation of the ten tribes by the Assyrians under Shalmaneser took place about twenty years after the date of this prophecy. It is clear therefore that it is not referred to, but rather when Esarhaddon not only carried away the remnant of Israel, but settled new inhabitants in the country, thus completing the subversion of the ten tribes. This was exactly sixty-five years from the time of this remarkable prophecy.

15. "Butter and honey."—The word rendered "butter" must be understood to denote not that only, but other preparations of milk short of butter, as cream, buttermilk, and sour curdled milk—all of which are much used in Western Asia. Perhaps in the present instance, and some others, milk in its simple state may be understood. Milk, and such preparations of it as we have mentioned, are consumed in great quantities, and, together with honey, when it can be procured, form the substantial diet of young children. It is of course here mentioned as forming the best and most suitable food. Feeding a child with milk and honey is also mentioned by heathen writers to express its prosperous bringing up. In verse 22 the same articles are equally mentioned as the food of grown people, from which we also learn that the Hebrews used the milk of their sheep, as well as that of cows (and, elsewhere, goats), as do the Bedouins at this day.

18. "The fly that is in the uttermost part of the rivers of Egypt."—See note on Josh. xxiv. 12.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 In Maher-shalal-hash-baz, he prophesieth that Syria and Israel shall be subdued by Assyria. 5 Judah likewise for their infidelity. 9 God's judgments shall be irresistible. 11 Comfort shall be to them that fear God. 19 Great afflictions to idolaters.

MOREOVER the LORD said unto me, Take thee a great roll, and write in it with a man's pen concerning ¹Maher-shalal-hash-baz.

2 And I took unto me faithful witnesses to record, Uriah the priest, and Zechariah the son of Jeberechiah.

3 And I ²went unto the prophetess; and she conceived, and bare a son. Then said the LORD to me, Call his name Maher-shalal-hash-baz.

4 For before the child shall have knowledge to cry, My father, and my mother, ³the riches of Damascus and the spoil of Samaria shall be taken away before the king of Assyria.

5 ¶ The LORD spake also unto me again, saying,

6 Forasmuch as this people refuseth the waters of Shiloah that go softly, and rejoice in Rezin and Remaliah's son;

7 Now therefore, behold, the Lord bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria, and all his glory: and he shall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks:

8 And he shall pass through Judah; he shall overflow and go over, he shall reach even to the neck; and ⁴the stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land, O Immanuel.

10 Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought; speak the word, and it shall not stand: for God is with us.

11 ¶ For the LORD spake thus to me 'with a strong hand, and instructed me that I should not walk in the way of this people, saying, 12 Say ye not, A confederacy, to all them to whom this people shall say, A confederacy; neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid.

15 And many among them shall 'stumble, and fall, and be broken, and be snared, and be taken.

16 Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples.

17 And I will wait upon the LORD, that hideth his face from the house of Jacob, and I will look for him.

18 'Behold, I and the children whom the LORD hath given me are for signs and for wonders in Israel from the LORD of hosts, which dwelleth in mount Zion.

19 ¶ And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead?

20 ¹⁰To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is ¹¹no light in them.

21 And they shall pass through it, hardly bestead and hungry: and it shall come to pass, that when they shall be hungry, they shall fret themselves, and curse their king and their God, and look upward.

VILLAGE OF SILOAH.—See note to verse 6.

Verse 6. "Shiloah."—Some notice of the pool or fountain of Siloam may be found under 2 Chron. xxxii. 30; and the village of Siloah has been mentioned under 2 Kings xxiii. 13. The surplus water of the pool is conveyed out by a narrow subterranean passage, and forms a small stream which serves to water the garden-plots on the lower part of Mount Zion, and in the valley below which it crosses to reach the bed of the Kedron. This little brook has a very poor supply of water, and is exhausted in the service we have mentioned. The preceding engraving shows the village of Siloah, with part of the valley of the same name in the foreground. This valley is merely the southern entrance to the valley of Jehoshaphat, and derives its name from having the village and fountain on its opposite sides, and from its receiving the waters of the latter. See further under John xi. 7.

7. "The waters of the river."—That is, of the Euphrates. The figure expresses the invasion of the land by the Assyrians, by a comparison derived from the overflowing of the Euphrates, which river was crossed by the Assyrians in advancing upon Palestine, and which had previously formed the westward limit of their power. The comparison is the more appropriate when it is recollected that, the Euphrates flowing, in the lower portion of its course, through a vast plain between low banks, the periodical increase of its waters caused it, like the Nile, to overflow its banks, sometimes inundating the country to a very great extent, and leaving extensive lakes and marshes in its neighbourhood after the river has retired to its channel.

CHAPTER IX.

1 What joy shall be in the midst of afflictions, by the kingdom and birth of Christ. 8 The judgments upon Israel for their pride, 13 for their hypocrisy, 18 and for their impenitency.

NEVERTHELESS the dimness shall not be such as was in her vexation, when at the first he lightly afflicted the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali, and afterward did more grievously afflict her by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, in Galilee 'of the nations.

2 "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined.

3 Thou hast multiplied the nation, and 'not increased the joy: they joy before thee according to the joy in harvest, and as men rejoice when they divide the spoil.

4 'For thou hast broken the yoke of his burden, and the staff of his shoulder, the rod of his oppressor, as in the day of 'Midian.

5 'For every battle of the warrior is with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood; 'but this shall be with burning and 'fuel of fire.

6 For unto us a child is born, unto us a 'son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.

7 Of the increase of his government and peace 'there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The 'zeal of the LORD of hosts will perform this.

8 ¶ The LORD sent a word into Jacob, and it hath lighted upon Israel.

9 And all the people shall know, even Ephraim and the inhabitant of Samaria, that say in the pride and stoutness of heart,

10 The bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn stones: the sycomores are cut down, but we will change them into cedars.

11 Therefore the LORD shall set up the adversaries of Rezin against him, and 'join his enemies together;

12 The Syrians before, and the Philistines behind; and they shall devour Israel 'with open mouth. 'For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

13 ¶ For the people turneth not unto him that smiteth them, neither do they seek the LORD of hosts.

14 Therefore the LORD will cut off from Israel head and tail, branch and rush, in one day.

15 The ancient and honourable, he is the head; and the prophet that teacheth lies, he is the tail.

16 For 'the leaders of this people cause them to err; and 'they that are led of them are 'destroyed.

17 Therefore the LORD shall have no joy in their young men, neither shall have mercy on their fatherless and widows: for every one is an hypocrite and an evildoer, and every mouth speaketh 'folly. For all

18 ¶ For wickedness burneth as the fire: it shall devour the briers and thorns, and shall kindle in the thickets of the forest, and they shall mount up like the lifting up of smoke.

19 Through the wrath of the Lord of hosts is the land darkened, and the people shall be as the "fuel of the fire: no man shall spare his brother.

¹⁹ Heb. meat.

20 And he shall ²⁰snatch on the right hand, and be hungry; and he shall eat on the left hand, and they shall not be satisfied: they shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm:

21 Manasseh, Ephraim; and Ephraim, Manasseh: and they together shall be against Judah. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

²⁰ Heb. cut.

Verse 5. "Every battle."—This verse probably refers to the custom of burning the spoils and armour of the enemy after a battle—a custom that seems to have been common among the Jews and other nations. Under this view Lowth translates, "For the greaves of the armed warrior in the conflict, and the garment rolled in much blood, shall be for a burning, even fuel for the fire."

10. "Bricks...hewn stones...sycamores...cedars."—The weakest and least worthy materials for building are here opposed to the best and strongest. Sun-dried bricks are doubtless those here opposed to hewn stones. Concerning the sycamore (Ficus sycomorus), we may refer to the note on 1 Kings x. 27. The wood has had some reputation for durability in consequence of the many ages in which the coffins of the Egyptian mummies have remained in perfect preservation. But this may probably be owing to some circumstance in the preparation or coating of the coffins, or, still more, perhaps, to the dryness of the climate, and sandy soil. When buried in Bruce's garden, the wood became rotten in the course of four years.

CHAPTER X.

¹ The woe of tyrants. 5 Assyria, the rod of hypocrites, for his pride shall be broken. 20 A remnant of Israel shall be saved. 24 Israel is comforted with promise of deliverance from Assyria.

WOE unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and 'that write grievousness which they have prescribed;

2 To turn aside the needy from judgment, and to take away the right from the poor of my people, that widows may be their prey, and that they may rob the fatherless!

3 And what will ye do in the day of visitation, and in the desolation which shall come from far? to whom will ye flee for help? and where will ye leave your glory?

4 Without me they shall bow down under the prisoners, and they shall fall under the slain. ²For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

5 ¶ 'O 'Assyrian, the rod of mine anger, 'and the staff in their hand is mine indignation.

6 I will send him against an hypocritical nation, and against the people of my wrath will I give him a charge, to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and 'to tread them down like the mire of the streets.

7 Howbeit he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so; but it is in his heart to 'destroy and cut off nations not a few.

8 'For he saith, Are not my princes altogether kings?

9 Is not Calno as Carchemish? is not Hamath as Arpad? is not Samaria as Damascus?

10 As my hand hath found the kingdoms of the idols, and whose graven images did excel them of Jerusalem and of Samaria;

11 Shall I not, as I have done unto Samaria and her idols, so do to Jerusalem and her idols?

12 Wherefore it shall come to pass, that when the Lord hath performed his whole work ⁶upon mount Zion and on Jerusalem, I will ⁷punish the fruit ¹⁰of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks.

13 For he saith, By the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom; for I am prudent: and I have removed the bounds of the people, and have robbed their treasures, and I have put down the inhabitants ¹¹like a valiant man:

14 And my hand hath found as a nest the riches of the people: and as one gathereth eggs that are left, have I gathered all the earth; and there was none that moved the wing, or opened the mouth, or peeped.

15 Shall the ax boast itself against him that heweth therewith? or shall the saw magnify itself against him that shaketh it? ¹²as if the rod should shake itself against them that lift it up, or as if the staff should lift up ¹³*itself*, as if it were no wood.

16 Therefore shall the Lord, the Lord of hosts, send among his fat ones leanness; and under his glory he shall kindle a burning like the burning of a fire.

17 And the light of Israel shall be for a fire, and his Holy One for a flame: and it shall burn and devour his thorns and his briers in one day;

18 And shall consume the glory of his forest, and of his fruitful field, ¹⁴both soul and body: and they shall be as when a standardbearer fainteth.

19 And the rest of the trees of his forest shall be ¹⁵few, that a child may write them.

20 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the remnant of Israel, and such as are escaped of the house of Jacob, shall no more again stay upon him that smote them; but shall stay upon the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, in truth.

21 The remnant shall return, even the remnant of Jacob, unto the mighty God.

22 ¹⁶For though thy people Israel be as the sand of the sea, yet a remnant ¹⁷of them shall return: ¹⁸the consumption decreed shall overflow ¹⁹with righteousness.

23 For the Lord God of hosts shall make a consumption, even determined, in the midst of all the land.

24 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord God of hosts, O my people that dwellest in Zion, be not afraid of the Assyrian: he shall smite thee with a rod, ²⁰and shall lift up his staff against thee, after the manner of ²¹Egypt.

25 For yet a very little while, and the indignation shall cease, and mine anger in their destruction.

26 And the Lord of hosts shall stir up a scourge for him according to the slaughter of ²²Midian at the rock of Oreb: and as his rod was upon the sea, so shall he lift it up after the manner of Egypt.

27 And it shall come to pass in that day, that his burden ²³shall be taken away from off thy shoulder, and his yoke from off thy neck, and the yoke shall be destroyed because of the anointing.

Verse 9. "Calno."—Perhaps the same as Calneh, one of the cities built by Nimrod in the land of Shinar (Gen. x. 10). So the Seventy seem to have thought, by their adding, "where the tower was built."—"Carchemish," see the note on 1 Kings iv. 24.—"Hamath," see Num. xiii. 1.—"Arpad," otherwise Arphad and Arvad, is supposed to be the same as the Aradus of the ancients. This was the northernmost of the Phœnician cities on the Mediterranean coast, and was, equally with Tyre, a colony of Sidon. Thus, in Ezek. xxvii., it is mentioned with the two last-named cities, that is, as supplying Tyre with mariners in conjunction with Sidon; and it appears to have participated in the commerce carried on by both cities.

It arrived at so flourishing a condition that the small rocky isle (about a mile in circumference and two miles from the shore) on which it was situated is described by Strabo as covered with buildings more lofty than those of Rome; but of which no trace now remains. The island, now called Ruad, is situated near the mouth of the river Eleutherus, about eight leagues to the north of Tripolis. Opposite to it, on the continent, was another town called Antaradus, which is perhaps more likely than the insular town to have been that taken by the Assyrians.

28. "He is come to Aiath," &c.—This and the following verses are descriptive of the march of Sennacherib's army approaching towards Jerusalem, and of the terror and confusion spreading and increasing through the several places as he advanced; expressed with great brevity but finely diversified (Lowth). "Aiath," that is, Ai or Hai, near Jericho. See Gen. xii.; Josh. vii.—"Migron," 1 Sam. xiv. 2—"Michmash," see 1 Sam. xiii. 5.

30. "Gallim."—Eusebius and Jerome place this in the neighbourhood of the Philistine town of Ekron.—"Laish." We know no other town of this name than that, towards the sources of the Jordan, taken by the people of Dan, and called by them after the name of their tribe. See Gen. xiv.—"Anathoth," see 1 Kings ii. 26.

31. "Madmenah."—One of the towns mentioned, in Josh. xv. 31, among "the uttermost cities of the tribe of Judah toward Edom southward."

"Gebim."—Not mentioned anywhere else, and the situation unknown.

32. "Nob."—See 1 Sam. xxi. It would seem that the army was destroyed here; and the context appears to intimate that Jerusalem was visible from hence.

CHAPTER XI.

¹ The peaceable kingdom of the Branch out of the root of Jesse. 10 The victorious restoration of Israel, and vocation of the Gentiles.

And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of ¹Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots:

2 And the spirit of the LORD shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might,

the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the LORD;

3 And shall make him of ¹quick understanding in the fear of the LORD: and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears:

earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.

5 And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins.

6 The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them.

7 And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

8 And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice den.

9 They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea.

10 ¶ And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious.

11 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea.

12 And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.

13 The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim.

14 But they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines toward the west; they shall spoil them of the east together: they shall lay their hand upon Edom and Moab; and the children of Ammon shall obey them.

15 And the LORD shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dryshod.

16 And there shall be an highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.

15. "Utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea... in the seven streams."—Bishop Lowth and others interpret this of the Red Sea, and the passage of the Hebrew host through it. But some suppose that the prophet alludes to the Nile; and we have little hesitation to agree in this conclusion, as we cannot possibly see how else the "seven streams" are to be explained. Large rivers, and the Nile in particular, are sometimes called "seas" in Scripture; and, if so understood here, "the tongue of the Egyptian sea" would of course be the Delta, for which indeed it would be a very striking and appropriate designation. This Delta is contained between the two extreme branches by which the Nile enters the sea. Now the number of the arms or branches of the river which bounded and traversed this Delta, were anciently seven, each of which the reader will find described in Sect. xix. ('Branches of the Nile') of Rennel's 'Geography of Herodotus.' And these "seven streams" have been so "smitten," particularly on the side towards Palestine, that only two remain: that which was once the middle stream has now become the most eastern, towards Palestine; and the places which deep streams once occupied may now be passed dryshod. In consequence of this, "the tongue of the Egyptian sea" has been so far "destroyed," that the Delta, always the most fertile part of Egypt, has been abridged of half its extent, which has become a sandy and uninhabited desert. See the details in Rennel, as above. That this is the subject of the prophecy in this verse cannot be positively affirmed; but the coincidence has appeared to us too remarkable to be overlooked, particularly as it has not been hitherto noticed.

CHAPTER XII.

A joyful thanksgiving of the faithful for the mercies of God.

AND in that day thou shalt say, O LORD, I will praise thee: though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortedst me.

2 Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid: for the LORD JEHOVAH is my 'strength and my song; he also is become my salvation.

3 Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation.

6 ¶ Howl ye; for the day of the LORD is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty.

7 Therefore shall all hands 'be faint, and every man's heart shall melt:

8 And they shall be afraid: pangs and sorrows shall take hold of them; they shall be in pain as a woman that travaileth: they shall 'be amazed 'one at another; their faces shall be as 'flames.

9 Behold, the day of the LORD cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate: and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it.

DESOLATION OF BABYLON.

Verse 19. "Babylon... the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency."—As the prophecies concerning the same places are much dispersed—occurring in different prophets and in different parts of the same books of prophecy—we shall perhaps best consult the reader's advantage and our own convenience by noticing the several details as they occur, rather than by offering any large and connected statements, which would leave it to the reader to trace out the particular points of illustration. The line of illustration which we propose to take has already been well trodden by Bishop Newton, and more lately by Dr. Keith, who, between them, have very nearly exhausted the existing stores of information on the subjects of which they treat. We shall therefore, necessarily, be often found to adduce the same facts and authorities which they have already employed: but we trust that our own researches, together with a personal acquaintance with some of the sites to which prophecy refers, will enable us in our progress to point out some circumstances which they have overlooked, and to cite some authorities which have escaped their notice.

With respect to the very remarkable passage now before us, we reserve some notice of the prosperous and splendid condition of ancient Babylon for Dan. iv. 30; and under Jer. li. we shall take some general notice of its present desolations, of which, for introductory purposes, our present engraving will serve to give such a notion as may be at present necessary. From this it will appear that there is no standing ruin of this famous city, but that the whole is a collection of heaps, which appear like natural hills (except that no green thing grows on them) until the excavations show that these heaps cover all that remains of "the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency."

20. "It shall never be inhabited," &c.—The site of Babylon has now for many ages been forsaken by man, and left entirely to the "doleful creatures" mentioned by the prophet in the next verse. The time when it became wholly deserted has not been well determined. But Strabo says that in his time great part of it was a mere desert; that the Persians had partially destroyed it; and that time, and the neglect of the Macedonians while they were masters of it, had nearly completed its destruction; and Pliny, who wrote in the reigns of the emperors Vespasian and Titus, the conquerors of Jerusalem, describes its site as a desert, and the city as "dead." ('Nat. Hist.' lib. vi. c. 26.) Not many years after, Pausanias said, "Of Babylon, a greater city than which the sun did not formerly behold, all that now remains is the temple of Belus and the walls of the city." ('Arcad.' l. viii. c. 33.) About 250 years later, Jerome informs us that Babylon was then (in the fourth century) quite in ruins, and that the walls served only for the enclosure of a park or forest for the king's hunting. The first great blow to its prosperity was the conquest of the Babylonian empire by the Medes and Persians. It then ceased to be the sole capital of an empire, as the conquerors divided their time between it, Susa, Ecbatana, and Persepolis. When the Persian empire fell, in its turn, before Alexander, it had a prospect of a restoration to greater glory than ever, as that monarch entertained the grand project of making it the capital of all Asia, and the centre of his new monarchy. But the doom of Babylon was sealed. Alexander died, and his plan died with him. His successors in that part of his divided empire founded a new capital (Seleucia) on the Tigris, which drew away the population of the old city. Seleucia, in its turn, was eclipsed by Ctesiphon, the capital of the Parthians, on the opposite bank of the Tigris; and, after this had been taken and sacked by the Arabs, Bagdad arose as the representative of the ancient Babylon. After having been the splendid capital of the first great Mohammedan empire, this city has long been no more than a provincial town, and as such has suffered great decline, and now offers little evidence of its former importance; and when it falls, there seems no room to expect that any succeeding town of note will arise in this now thinly-peopled and desolate region, the ancient fertility of which is only indicated by the remains of numerous canals, by which the now bare and dry soil was once abundantly watered; and the once teeming population of which is only evinced by the heaps of ruin which occur in all directions; and over which we have often looked with a wondering and reverential recollection of the prophecies of Isaiah and Jeremiah.

"Neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there."—The Arabian pitches his tent and feeds his flocks where pasture may be found; and at Babylon there is no pasture. The whole site is a perfect desolation, on which nothing useful to man, or to the beasts for which he cares, can be discovered. The soil, for miles around, consists of the grit and clay formed by the decomposition of the buildings by which the site was once covered, and which contains no principle friendly to vegetation. Hence the site of Babylon, and of all the other towns of this region, both in their mounds and level grounds, are marked—even in a region generally desolate—by an appearance of utter barrenness and blast, as if from the curse of God; which does give a most intense and mournful corroboration to the denunciations of Scripture prophecy.

21. "Satyrs."—It is rather difficult to define the precise meaning which should be here given to the original word (שְׂעִירִים sheirim). In its primary sense something hairy and rough is intended, as in Gen. xxvii. 11. 23: in Lev. iv. [24; xvi. 9, it is applied to the goat; and in Lev. xvii. 7; 2 Chron. xi. 15, it is applied to objects of idolatrous worship (perhaps in the form of goats), and translated "devils." Some kind of wild goat is perhaps intended here and in xxxiv. 14. Most of the rabbins and the ancient versions understand dæmons to be denoted; and if so, it must be supposed to mean that dæmons should be reputed to dance there; which is literally true; for the Arabs so firmly believe the ruins of Babylon to be the haunt of evil spirits, that they dread to remain in the neighbourhood of the principal mounds at night. This alone would prevent the Arabian from pitching his tent there, even if he could there find rich pasture for his flock.

22. "Wild beasts... shall cry in their desolate houses, and dragons in their pleasant palaces."—All that Benjamin of Tudela says of Babylon is this:—"One day's journey from hence (Gehiaga) standeth that ancient Babel, containing thirty miles of compass, but now utterly destroyed, where the ruins of Nebuchadonosor's palace are yet seen, inaccessible to men by reason of the divers and noisome kinds of serpents and dragons living there." (Purchas, lib. ix. p. 1452.) The jeweller Balbi (A.D. 1579) also describes the place as "perilous for robbers and lions." About the same time, Rauwolff, the German, describes the great mound, which he took for the tower of Babel, to be so ruinous and low, and so full of venomous creatures, that no one durst approach to it within half a league, except during two months in the winter, when these animals remain within their holes. The closer inspection of more recent travellers has confirmed these remarks. We suspect that much of what is said in the Scriptures, of Babylon in particular, is to be understood to extend to all the ancient cities of Babylonia. Most of the sites that we examined were pierced with holes and caverns, the retreats of "wild beasts of the desert" and "doleful creatures." In these sites we have seen the footsteps of lions, have observed jackals, and have been apprized of the presence of hyenas, porcupines, lizards, bats, owls, and other fierce or gloomy animals, in the caves and cavities of these desolations. About the mouths of the caves may be seen the bones and portions of the skins of sheep, goats, buffaloes, and even camels; while the intolerable stench from some of the dens confirmed the evidence which these indications offered.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 God's merciful restoration of Israel. 4 Their triumphant insultation over Babel. 24 God's purpose against Assyria. 29 Palestina is threatened.

FOR the LORD will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and set them in their own land: and the strangers shall be joined with them, and they shall cleave to the house of Jacob.

2 And the people shall take them, and bring them to their place: and the house of Israel shall possess them in the land of the LORD for servants and handmaids: and they shall take them captives, whose captives they were; and they shall rule over their oppressors.

3 And it shall come to pass in the day that the LORD shall give thee rest from thy sorrow, and from thy fear, and from the hard bondage wherein thou wast made to serve,

4 ¶ That thou shalt take up this ²proverb against the king of Babylon, and say, How hath the oppressor ceased! the ³golden city ceased!

5 The LORD hath broken the staff of the wicked, and the sceptre of the rulers.

6 He who smote the people in wrath with ⁴a continual stroke, he that ruled the nations in anger, is persecuted, and none hindereth.

7 The whole earth is at rest, and is quiet: they break forth into singing.

8 Yea, the fir trees rejoice at thee, and the cedars of Lebanon, saying, Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us.

9 ⁵Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming: it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the ⁶'chief ones of the earth; it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations.

10 All they shall speak and say unto thee, Art thou also become weak as we? art thou become like unto us?

11 Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, and the noise of thy viols: the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee.

12 How art thou fallen from heaven, ⁷O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations!

13 For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north:

14 I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the most High.

15 Yet thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit.

16 They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee, and consider thee, saying, Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did shake kingdoms;

17 That made the world as a wilderness, and destroyed the cities thereof; that ⁸opened not the house of his prisoners?

18 All the kings of the nations, even all of them, lie in glory, every one in his own house.

19 But thou art cast out of thy grave like an abominable branch, and as the raiment of those that are slain, thrust through with a sword, that go down to the stones of the pit; as a carcase trodden under feet.

20 Thou shalt not be joined with them in burial, because thou hast destroyed thy land, and slain thy people: ⁹the seed of evildoers shall never be renowned.

21 Prepare slaughter for his children ¹⁰for the iniquity of their fathers; that they do not rise, nor possess the land, nor fill the face of the world with cities.

22 For I will rise up against them, saith the LORD of hosts, and cut off from Babylon the name, and remnant, and son, and nephew, saith the LORD.

23 I will also make it a possession for the bittern, and pools of water: and I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the LORD of hosts.

24 ¶ The LORD of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand:

29 ¶ Rejoice not thou, whole Palestina, because the rod of him that smote thee is broken: for out of the serpent's root shall come forth a ¹³cockatrice, and his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent.

30 And the firstborn of the poor shall feed, and the needy shall lie down in safety: and I will kill thy root with famine, and he shall slay thy remnant.

Verse 8. "Fir-trees."—One of the firs here alluded to was perhaps the Pinus laricio, which resembles our Scotch fir in many particulars. There is another species, Orientalis, found upon mount Caucasus, which produces a very elegant cone. The Halepensis or Aleppo pine is found in the neighbourhood of Palestine. The Pinaster was in all probability known to the Jews; the leaves are longer than those of the Scotch fir, and the cones grow in clusters.

23. "Pools of water."—See the note on chap. viii. 7. Where a level country is liable to inundations from a river, the hollows remain filled with water when the overflow has ceased; and, if these are of any depth or extent, the water will remain unexhausted till the next year, when they receive a fresh supply, so that permanent lakes and marshes are formed. This was, and is, the case in Babylonia. At different parts, near the Euphrates, lakes, pools, and marshes, some of very great extent, are numerous, and some also occur near the Tigris. Even Babylon itself, in its most flourishing state, was enclosed on the west by a great lake, or chain of lakes, which served on that side for a natural barrier. Hence, when Alexander, in order to avoid an evil presage, wished to enter his destined capital from the west, he found that no means of access existed in that direction, and was obliged, against his will, to follow the common route (Arrian, vii. 17). But with an enterprising and industrious people, the exuberant fertility of whose soil depended upon effective irrigation, such lakes and pools became, under proper management, by means of canals, sluices, and embankments, a most important advantage, which, as we learn from the ancient historians, the Babylonians turned to the best account. But now, since Babylon has fallen, and Chaldea has become a desolation, the inundation, left to its own course, has formed, at Babylon and elsewhere—on the Euphrates and Tigris—pools and marshes on spots once populated. We have ourselves seen mounds and hills of ruin rising like islets above the waters, and forming the chosen resort of pelicans and numerous water-fowl “of every wing.”

CHAPTER XV.

The lamentable state of Moab.

THE burden of Moab. Because in the night Ar of Moab is laid waste, and brought to silence; because in the night Kir of Moab is laid waste, and brought to silence;

2 He is gone to Bajith, and to Dibon, the high places, to weep: Moab shall howl over Nebo, and over Medeba: on all their heads shall be baldness, and every beard cut off.

3 In their streets they shall gird themselves with sackcloth: on the tops of their houses, and in their streets, every one shall howl, weeping abundantly.

4 And Heshbon shall cry, and Elealeh: their voice shall be heard even unto Jahaz: therefore the armed soldiers of Moab shall cry out; his life shall be grievous unto him.

5 My heart shall cry out for Moab; his fugitives shall flee unto Zoar, an heifer of three years old: for by the mounting up of Luhith with weeping shall they go it up; for in the way of Horonaim they shall raise up a cry of destruction.

6 For the waters of Nimrim shall be desolate: for the hay is withered away, the grass faileth, there is no green thing.

7 Therefore the abundance they have gotten, and that which they have laid up, shall they carry away to the brook of the willows.

8 For the cry is gone round about the borders of Moab; the howling thereof unto Eglaim, and the howling thereof unto Beer-elim.

9 For the waters of Dimon shall be full of blood: for I will bring more upon Dimon, lions upon him that escapeth of Moab, and upon the remnant of the land.

Verse 1. “The burden of Moab.”—In speaking of the present condition of this country, and in describing the ruined condition of the towns mentioned in this chapter, the sites of which have been ascertained, we have already by anticipation shown how literally the present prophecy has been accomplished. See the notes on Moab, Num. xxxvi. 13, Deut. ii. 9; and on its towns as follows:—“Ar,” Deut. ii. 9; “Dibon,” Num. xxi. 30; “Medeba,” Num. xxi. 30; “Nebo,” Num. xxxii. 3, Deut. xxxiv. 1; “Heshbon,” Num. xxi. 26; “Elealeh” and “Nimrim,” Num. xxxii. 3. Notices of other places in Moab, not mentioned in this and the following chapter, will be found principally in Num. xxi. and xxxii.

4. “Jahaz.”—At this place the Amorites, under their king Sihon, were defeated by the Hebrews (Num. xxi. 23). Jerome, who, with the Septuagint, calls it Jazza, says, that in his time it was still shown between Medeba and Deblathai.

Verse 5—“Luhith.” we are informed by Jerome that this was in his time a village, between Areopolis (Ar) and Zoara (Zoar). It is perhaps the same that Josephus calls Lyssa (‘Antiq.’ l. xiv. c. 1). “Horonaim.”—This seems to be the same that Josephus mentions as Oronæ, among twelve principal places in Moab, mentioned by him, as above. The dual form of the name would seem to suggest that there were two Horons, even as there were two Beth-horons, the upper and lower, in the country west of the Jordan. The situation of Horonaim is not known. Verse 8—“Eglaim” appears to have been a place on the borders of Moab; and “Beer-elim” would seem to be the Beer mentioned in Num. xxi. 16. Verse 9—“Dimon.” the Vulgate reads “Dibon,” and if not understood of that place, to the note concerning which we have already referred, we have no information about Dimon.

CHAPTER XVI.

⁶ Moab is threatened for her pride. ⁹ The prophet bewaileth her. ¹² The judgment of Moab.

SEND ye the lamb to the ruler of the land from ¹ Sela to the wilderness, unto the mount of the daughter of Zion.

2 For it shall be, that, as a wandering bird ³ cast out of the nest, so the daughters of Moab shall be at the fords of Arnon.

3 ⁴ Take counsel, execute judgment; make thy shadow as the night in the midst of the noonday; hide the outcasts; bewray not him that wandereth.

4 Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab; be thou a covert to them from the face of the spoiler: for the ⁵ extortioner is at an end, the spoiler ceaseth, ⁶ the oppressors are consumed out of the land.

5 And in mercy ⁷ shall the throne be established: and he shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle of David, judging, and seeking judgment, and hasting righteousness.

6 ¶ We have heard of the ⁸ pride of Moab; he is very proud: even of his haughtiness, and his pride, and his wrath: but his lies shall not be so.

7 Therefore shall Moab ⁹ howl for Moab, every one shall howl: for the foundations of Kir-hareseth shall ye ¹⁰ mourn; surely they are stricken.

CHAP. XVI.—The observations and references in the preceding chapter apply also to the present. Among the names which do not occur there, we find "Sela." No place of this name is elsewhere mentioned as belonging to Moab; and the Selah of Edom has been noticed under 2 Kings xiv. As it has been said that Kerek in Moab bore the name of Petra, as well as the Petra in Edom—and as Selah has the same meaning "a rock," as Petra—it may be conjectured that the present name denotes Kerek. We have spoken of Kerek in the note referred to; and now that we have before us the prophecies of Moab's desolation, it cannot but strike us that this small and the vine of Sibmah: the lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants thereof, they are come even unto Jazer, they wandered through the wilderness: her branches are ¹² stretched out, they are gone over the sea.

9 ¶ Therefore I will bewail with the weeping of Jazer the vine of Sibmah: I will water thee with my tears, O Heshbon, and Elealeh: for ¹³ the shouting for thy summer fruits and for thy harvest is fallen.

10 And ¹⁴ gladness is taken away, and joy out of the plentiful field; and in the vineyards there shall be no singing, neither shall there be shouting: the treaders shall tread out no wine in their presses; I have made their vintage shouting to cease.

11 Wherefore my bowels shall sound like an harp for Moab, and mine inward parts for Kir-haresh.

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when it is seen that Moab is weary on the high place, that he shall come to his sanctuary to pray; but he shall not prevail.

13 This is the word that the LORD hath spoken concerning Moab since that time.

14 But now the LORD hath spoken, saying, Within three years, as the years of an hireling, and the glory of Moab shall be contemned, with all that great multitude; and the remnant shall be very small and ¹⁵ feeble.

and mean town, or rather village, upon the outer border of Moab, should be the only one that remains in a country once thickly strewed with towns and cities, richly cultivated, and abounding with people. At least fifty ruined sites have been observed by travellers, and many more doubtless exist as evidences of the former prosperous condition of a country now abandoned to the Arabian rovers and beasts of prey. All the other proper names which occur in this chapter have been noticed in Num. xxi. and xxxii. We shall probably find occasion to take some further notice of Moab under Jer. xlviii.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE burden of Damascus. Behold, Damascus is taken away from being a city, and it shall be a ruinous heap.

2 The cities of Aroer are forsaken: they shall be for flocks, which shall lie down, and none shall make them afraid.

3 The fortress also shall cease from Ephraim, and the kingdom from Damascus, and the remnant of Syria: they shall be as the glory of the children of Israel, saith the LORD of hosts.

4 And in that day it shall come to pass, that the glory of Jacob shall be made thin, and the fatness of his flesh shall wax lean.

5 And it shall be as when the harvestman gathereth the corn, and reapeth the ears with his arm; and it shall be as he that gathereth ears in the valley of Rephaim.

6 ¶ Yet gleanings shall be left in it, as the shaking of an olive tree, two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough, four or five in the outmost fruitful branches thereof, saith the LORD God of Israel.

7 At that day shall a man look to his Maker, and his eyes shall have respect to the Holy One of Israel.

8 And he shall not look to the altars, the work of his hands, neither shall respect that which his fingers have made, either the groves, or the ¹images.

9 ¶ In that day shall his strong cities be as a forsaken bough, and an uppermost branch, which they left because of the children of Israel: and there shall be desolation.

10 Because thou hast forgotten the God of thy salvation, and hast not been mindful of the rock of thy strength, therefore shalt thou plant pleasant plants, and shalt set it with strange slips:

11 In the day shalt thou make thy plant to grow, and in the morning shalt thou make thy seed to flourish: but the harvest shall be ²a heap in the day of grief and of desperate sorrow.

12 ¶ Woe to the ³multitude of many people, which make a noise like the noise of the seas; and to the rushing of nations, that make a rushing like the rushing of ⁴'mighty waters!

13 The nations shall rush like the rushing of many waters: but God shall rebuke them, and they shall flee far off, and shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like ⁵a rolling thing before the whirlwind.

14 And behold at eveningtide trouble; and before the morning he is not. This is the portion of them that spoil us, and the lot of them that rob us.

² Or, removed in the day of inheritance and there shall be deadly sorrow.

³ Or, noise.

⁴ Or, many.

⁵ Or, thistle-down.

Verse 2. "The cities of Aroer are forsaken; they shall be for flocks," &c.—Concerning Aroer, see a note under Num. xxxii. This verse of course refers to Moab, to which it applies most exactly, as the country may be said to be abandoned, except by the Bedouins, who pasture their flocks on the wild herbage of the once-cultivated plains, where the traces of ancient cultivation may still be discovered. The excellence of the pasture in some parts has already been noticed (Num. xxxii.—"Jazer"), and sufficiently evinces the ancient richness of the soil. The right of pasturage on particular spots has formed a subject of fruitful contest to different Arab tribes. As fine pastures, and peculiar advantages with regard to water, are often found in the neighbourhood of the ruined towns, these ancient seats of a busy population have literally become places where flocks lie down. (See Burckhardt's 'Syria,' p. 364, et seq.) The reader will not fail to notice the marked distinction that the desolation of Moab is denoted by the circumstance that flocks should lie down in its once-cultivated and populated sites; while that of Babylon is expressed by "neither shall the shepherds make their folds there." The cause of this we have explained, the desolation of Babylon having extended to its soil, which affords no pasture. At a time when Babylon and Moab were both in a flourishing condition, who but God himself could thus nicely have discriminated the character of their future desolation? Here are no vague generalities. Scripture does not say merely that this or that place shall at a future time be desolate; but it says how it shall be desolate, and how its desolation shall be distinguished from the desolations of other places. This is evidence strong and beautiful; and we cannot understand the condition of that man's mind who can rise from it doubtful or unsatisfied.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 God in care of his people will destroy the Ethiopians.
7 An access thereby shall grow unto the church.

WOE to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia:

2 That sendeth ambassadors by the sea, even in vessels of bulrushes upon the waters, saying, Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation ¹scattered and peeled, to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; ²a nation meted out and trodden down, 'whose land the rivers have spoiled!

3 All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye.

4 For so the LORD said unto me, I will take my rest, and I will 'consider in my dwelling place like a clear heat 'upon herbs, and like a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest.

5 For afore the harvest, when the bud is perfect, and the sour grape is ripening in the flower, he shall both cut off the sprigs with pruning hooks, and take away and cut down the branches.

6 They shall be left together unto the fowls of the mountains, and to the beasts of the earth: and the fowls shall summer upon them, and all the beasts of the earth shall winter upon them.

7 ¶ In that time shall the present be brought unto the LORD of hosts of a people 'scattered and peeled, and from a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden under foot, whose land the rivers have spoiled, to the place of the name of the LORD of hosts, the mount Zion.

⁴ Or, whose land the rivers despise.

⁵ Or, regard my set dwelling.

⁶ Or, after rain.

⁷ Or, outspread and polished.

Verse 2. "Vessels of bulrushes."—Concerning such light vessels, made of reeds or rushes, coated over with slime or bitumen, we have spoken fully in a note to 1 Sam. xix. 18, to which we refer the reader. It is there shown that such vessels were employed on the Nile.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 The confusion of Egypt. 11 The foolishness of their princes. 18 The calling of Egypt to the church. 23 The covenant of Egypt, Assyria, and Israel.

THE burden of Egypt. Behold, the LORD rideth upon a swift cloud, and shall come into Egypt: and the idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence, and the heart of Egypt shall melt in the midst of it.

2 And I will 'set the Egyptians against the Egyptians: and they shall fight every one against his brother, and every one against his neighbour; city against city, and kingdom against kingdom.

3 And the spirit of Egypt 'shall fail in the midst thereof; and I will 'destroy the counsel thereof: and they shall seek to the idols, and to the charmers, and to them that have familiar spirits, and to the wizards.

4 And the Egyptians will I 'give over into the hand of a cruel lord; and a fierce king shall rule over them, saith the Lord, the LORD of hosts.

5 And the waters shall fail from the sea, and the river shall be wasted and dried up.

6 And they shall turn the rivers far away; and the brooks of defence shall be emptied and dried up: the reeds and flags shall wither.

7 The paper reeds by the brooks, by the mouth of the brooks, and every thing sown by the brooks, shall wither, be driven away, 'and be no more.

8 The fishers also shall mourn, and all they that cast angle into the brooks shall lament, and they that spread nets upon the waters shall languish.

9 Moreover they that work in fine flax, and they that weave 'networks, shall be confounded.

10 And they shall be broken in the 'purposes thereof, all that make sluices and ponds 'for fish.

11 ¶ Surely the princes of Zoan are fools, the counsel of the wise counsellors of Pharaoh is become brutish: how say ye unto Pharaoh, I am the son of the wise, the son of ancient kings?

12 Where are they? where are thy wise men? and let them tell thee now, and let them know what the LORD of hosts hath purposed upon Egypt.

the princes of Noph are deceived; they have also seduced Egypt, even ⁹ ¹⁰ they that are the stay of the tribes thereof.

14 The LORD hath mingled ¹¹ a perverse spirit in the midst thereof: and they have caused Egypt to err in every work thereof, as a drunken man staggereth in his vomit.

15 Neither shall there be any work for Egypt, which the head or tail, branch or rush, may do.

16 In that day shall Egypt be like unto women: and it shall be afraid and fear because of the shaking of the hand of the LORD of hosts, which he shaketh over it.

17 And the land of Judah shall be a terror unto Egypt, every one that maketh mention thereof shall be afraid in himself, because of the counsel of the LORD of hosts, which he hath determined against it.

18 ¶ In that day shall five cities in the land of Egypt speak ¹² the language of Canaan, and swear to the LORD of hosts; one shall be called, The city ¹³ of destruction.

19 In that day shall there be an altar to the LORD in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the LORD.

20 And it shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the LORD of hosts in the land of Egypt: for they shall cry unto the LORD because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a saviour, and a great one, and he shall deliver them.

21 And the LORD shall be known to Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know the LORD in that day, and shall do sacrifice and oblation; yea, they shall vow a vow unto the LORD, and perform it.

22 And the LORD shall smite Egypt: he shall smite and heal it: and they shall return even to the LORD, and he shall be intreated of them, and shall heal them.

23 ¶ In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians.

24 In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land:

25 Whom the LORD of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance.

Verse 2. "City against city, and kingdom against kingdom."—The Seventy, who were well acquainted with the condition of Egypt, render, in the latter clause, νομος επι νομον, "nome against nome." An Egyptian father, Cyril, upon this text, says, "A nome is a city, with a circumjacent territory and the places contained in it;" that is to say, it was a province. This division existed in the earliest times, and subsisted under the Ptolemies and the Romans. The number of nomes is not well determined, and seems to have varied at different times, as there are scarcely two writers who agree on the subject. These nomes were so distinctly marked by different local usages, and forms and objects of worship, which afforded ample sources of contention between them, that there is good ground for Heeren's conjecture—that each nome was originally an independent settlement and government, having some interests in common with others, but also interests that were conflicting, and which would produce quarrels among them. When these were united into one kingdom by powerful princes, the standing difference of habits, customs, and religion, must necessarily have prevented that perfect consolidation which might otherwise have taken place; so that when the general government became weak or disordered, they would be disposed to fall out with each other, and seek to promote their own separate interests and to place them in a commanding position. This actually took place on the occasion which Isaiah foretold, when, after the death of Sethon, the contemporary of Hezekiah and Sennacherib, and an interregnum of two years which followed, the united monarchy was divided into twelve kingdoms, each nome having its own king. To the reign of this oligarchy, and to the anarchy and civil wars which attended its extinction, by Psammetichus, one of the twelve, who ultimately became sole monarch, the prophet is usually supposed to refer.

4. "A fierce king shall rule over them."—This is supposed to foretell the second great calamity of the Egyptians—their subjection by the Persians; and which they themselves ever mentioned with horror, on account of the atrocities committed by the conqueror Cambyses, the son of the great Cyrus, who may well be supposed to be the "cruel lord" and "fierce king" of our text. To no man who ever lived could these epithets be with greater propriety applied than to Cambyses, who, after an easy conquest of Egypt, fell into such extravagant cruelties and excesses of every kind, as can only be accounted for on the supposition of Herodotus, that he was "outrageously mad."

6. "Reeds" (קנה kane; Sept. καλαμος).—The genus Arundo is distinguished by producing a cluster of small flowers, each of which is encircled at its base by a collar of fine wool, which at once gives a characteristic to the reed, and contributes towards the general beauty of the plant. There are several species of Arundo, among the rest the Arundo donax, which was well known among the Greeks. The roots contain a portion of sugar or saccharine matter when young, and thence are eaten. The stem is manufactured into mats and other articles of a similar nature.

7. "Paper reeds" (ערוה aroth)—which the Septuagint renders by το αχι το χλωρον, the green river-plants—included most of those reed and rush-like plants which fringe the banks of streams and swamps.

"Reeds," Arundo donax.

10. "Fish."—See the notes on Exod. vii. 21, and Num. xi. 5.

13. "Noph."—See the note on Jer. xli. 19.

15. "Rush."—(רִמְמֹן agmon)—which was perhaps identical with Gome or Cyperus papyrus, or paper-reed; of which a figure and description will be found under Exod. xi.

18. "Five cities."—Bishop Lowth says: "I take the whole passage, from the eighteenth verse to the end of the chapter, to contain a general intimation of the future propagation of the knowledge of the true God in Egypt and Syria, under the successors of Alexander; and, in consequence of this propagation, of the early reception of the gospel in the same countries, when it should be published to the world." It is very certain that Alexander settled a colony of Jews at Alexandria, with privileges equal to those enjoyed by the Macedonians; and that his successors in Egypt generally pursued the policy of encouraging the emigration of the Hebrews to that country, so that, under various circumstances of inducement and obligation, a large Jewish population was ultimately formed there. Philo estimates the number of men at not less than one million. The "five cities" were probably those in which they chiefly resided. Some think a definite number is used for an indefinite one, while others conceive that four of the cities are those named in Jer. xli. 1, the fifth being that particularly mentioned as "the city of destruction." Through the presence of so many Jews in Egypt, together with the translation of the Old Testament into Greek, at the instance of Ptolemy Philadelphus, the Lord must in some degree "have been known to Egypt, and the Egyptians have known the Lord." There were probably many proselytes to the Hebrew faith; and indeed we read, in Acts ii. 10, of dwellers in Egypt, "Jews and proselytes," among those who went to Jerusalem to keep the feast of Pentecost. See more fully in Newton's 'Dissertation,' vol. i. p. 191, &c.

"One shall be called, The city of destruction."—There has been much discussion about this verse, resting upon the word rendered "destruction." This word, חֲרָס heres, by the change of a single letter, easily mistaken by a transcriber, becomes חֶרֶס cheres, the sun, and gives us, "the city of the sun," instead of the reading of our version. Lowth, Boothroyd, and others follow the Vulgate in adopting the latter reading. That the true reading was uncertain, even in the time of the Targumist Jonathan Ben Uzziel, appears from his incorporation of both in his paraphrase, "The city of the temple of the sun, which is to be destroyed."

After the rise of the Maccabees, Onias, being disappointed of the high-priesthood, withdrew into Egypt, and so ingratiated himself with the king (Ptolemy Philometer), that he obtained his permission to build a temple for the use of the Jews in Egypt, after the model of that at Jerusalem; and, among other inducements, showed him the present prophecy, reading "the city of the sun," and understanding that it intimated that this temple should be in the district or nome of Heliopolis (the city of the sun), where it was accordingly built, on the site of a ruined temple of Bubastis. Onias obtained the grant of the high-priesthood in perpetuity for himself and his descendants, and called the city which contained the temple, after his own name, Onion. It was situated about twenty-four miles from Memphis, and remained till the time of Vespasian, who ordered it to be destroyed. The Jews in Palestine regarded the erection of this temple as a most unlawful measure. And from this arises the question, whether Onias purposely misquoted the text, by changing the letter ח to ה, or whether the Jews of Palestine, to mark their detestation of his establishment, and to destroy the point of the prophecy, altered the letter ח to ה. The question is difficult, and perhaps cannot now be satisfactorily determined. Our translators express their hesitation by placing one interpretation in the text and the other in the margin. See Prideaux's 'Connection,' under B.C. 149; and Newton, as above.

23. "The Assyrians."—The latter part of this chapter is generally thought to refer to the condition of the Jews under the Seleucidæ, who reigned over that portion of Alexander's conquests comprehended in Syria and Babylonia, and who pursued the same policy towards them as the kings of Egypt, alluring them by high civil privileges to settle in the cities which they founded. The numerous Jews also who remained in Babylonia and the eastern provinces were well treated, and allowed the free exercise of their religion and peculiar customs, by Alexander's successors. In connection with what is said in verse 21, concerning performing vows, it may be remarked, that the fidelity of the Jews to their oaths is said to have been a principal cause of the favour with which they were regarded. See Jahn's 'Hebrew Commonwealth,' B. ix. sect. 83, and Basnage's 'Histoire des Juifs,' l. ix.

CHAPTER XX.

A type prefiguring the shameful captivity of Egypt and Ethiopia.

In the year that Tartan came unto Ashdod, (when Sargon the king of Assyria sent him,) and fought against Ashdod, and took it;

2 At the same time spake the Lord 'by Isaiah the son of Amoz, saying, Go and loose the sackcloth from off thy loins, and put off thy shoe from thy foot. And he did so, walking naked and barefoot.

3 And the Lord said, Like as my servant Isaiah hath walked naked and barefoot three years for a sign and wonder upon Egypt and upon Ethiopia;

4 So shall the king of Assyria lead away the Egyptians prisoners, and the Ethiopians captives, young and old, naked and barefoot, even with their buttocks uncovered, to the shame of Egypt.

5 And they shall be afraid and ashamed of Ethiopia their expectation, and of Egypt their glory.

6 And the inhabitant of this isle shall say in that day, Behold, such is our expectation, whither we flee for help to be delivered from the king of Assyria: and how shall we escape?

² Heb. the captivity of Egypt.

³ Heb. nakedness.

⁴ Or, country.

Verse 1. "Sargon the king of Assyria."—Sargon appears to be another name for Esarkaddon, the account of whom, given in the note to 2 Kings xix. 37, will show the fulfilment of the prophecy contained in this chapter.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 The prophet, bewailing the captivity of his people, seeth in a vision the fall of Babylon by the Medes and Persians.

11 Edom, scorning the prophet, is moved to repentance.

13 The set time of Arabia's calamity.

THE burden of the desert of the sea. As whirlwinds in the south pass through; so it cometh from the desert, from a terrible land.

2 A grievous vision is declared unto me; the treacherous dealer dealeth treacherously, and the spoiler spoileth. Go up, O Elam: besiege, O Media; all the sighing thereof have I made to cease.

3 Therefore are my loins filled with pain: pangs have taken hold upon me, as the pangs of a woman that travaileth: I was bowed down at the hearing of it; I was dismayed at the seeing of it.

4 My heart panted, fearfulness affrighted me: the night of my pleasure hath he turned into fear unto me.

5 Prepare the table, watch in the watchtower, eat, drink: arise, ye princes, and anoint the shield.

6 For thus hath the Lord said unto me, Go, set a watchman, let him declare what he seeth.

7 And he saw a chariot with a couple of horsemen, a chariot of asses, and a chariot of camels; and he hearkened diligently with much heed:

8 And he cried, A lion: My lord, I stand continually upon the watchtower in the daytime, and I am set in my ward whole nights:

9 And, behold, here cometh a chariot of men, with a couple of horsemen. And he answered and said, Babylon is fallen, is fallen; and all the graven images of her gods he hath broken unto the ground.

10 O my threshing, and the corn of my floor: that which I have heard of the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, have I declared unto you.

11 ¶ The burden of Dumah. He calleth to me out of Seir, Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night?

12 The watchman said, The morning cometh, and also the night: if ye will enquire, enquire ye: return, come.

13 ¶ The burden upon Arabia. In the forest in Arabia shall ye lodge, O ye travelling companies of Dedanim.

14 The inhabitants of the land of Tema brought water to him that was thirsty, they prevented with their bread him that fled.

15 For they fled from the swords, from the drawn sword, and from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war.

16 For thus hath the Lord said unto me, Within a year, according to the years of an hireling, and all the glory of Kedar shall fail:

17 And the residue of the number of archers, the mighty men of the children of Kedar, shall be diminished: for the Lord God of Israel hath spoken it.

Verse 8. "He cried, A lion: My lord."—This may be interpreted to refer to the lion-like approach and appearance of the combined army of Medes and Persians; but with the present text, the marginal reading, "he cried as a lion," is doubtless preferable, and has the support of Aben Ezra. Calmet however, and after him Lowth and Boothroyd, think that instead of לִיֹן, "a lion," we should read לִיֹן־לֵךְ, and then the meaning will be, "He that looked out on the watch, cried, my lord," &c. This has the support of the Syriac version.

"I stand continually upon the watchtower in the daytime, and... whole nights."—This strikingly reminds us of the opening of the 'Agamemnon' of Æschylus; being the speech of the watchman, who had been very long watching upon his tower for the signal which should make known that Troy had fallen. It thus commences:

'For ever thus! O keep me not, ye gods,
For ever thus, fixed in the lonely tower
Of Atreus' palace, from whose height I gaze
O'erwatch'd and weary, like a night-dog, still Fix'd to my post: meanwhile the rolling year Moves on, and I my wakeful vigils keep
By the cold star-light sheen of spangled skies."—SYMMONS.

9. "All the graven images of her gods he hath broken."—This is a remarkably definite prophecy, when we consider that it was by no means a general custom among the ancient idolaters to destroy or injure the images of the gods found in the cities which were taken in time of war. But the Persians, who took Babylon, furnished an exception: for they, confining their worship to the heavenly bodies and elemental fire, detested image-worship, as well as the worship of living creatures. The conqueror of Egypt, Cambyses, gave to the great Egyptian idol, the ox Apis, the wound of which it died: and Xerxes may seem to have accomplished the present prophecy, when, partly from religious zeal, as much perhaps for the profit, he spoiled the temples and destroyed the idols of Babylon, after his return from his unfortunate expedition into Greece. It is not however unlikely, although history does not record the circumstance, that the Babylonian idols suffered from the zeal of the Persian soldiers when the city was first taken by Cyrus. It has sometimes struck us that possibly the scarcity of Babylonian images may be owing to this destruction of them which the prophet foretold. Whether so or not, it is certain that specimens of their graven images are rarely found unless as exhibited on sculptured cylinders, and other small antiquities of a similar nature. As these contain figures of the Babylonian gods, and at the same time furnish specimens of the style of art and taste, which was doubtless also extended to their larger monuments, we have caused some of the more remarkable examples of these engraved figures to be copied, as furnishing the only satisfactory illustration that can now be obtained.

11. "Dumah."—Instead of Dumah (דּוּמָה) the Seventy seem to have read Edom (אֶדוֹם). As Mount Seir is mentioned, there can be little doubt that Edom is intended; but whether as representing the general name, or that of a principal place in Edom, is not very clear. Jerome says that Dumah was the name of a town and district of Idumea, which began twenty miles from Eleutheropolis, and beyond which were the mountains of Seir.

14. "Water to him that was thirsty," &c.—This prophecy seems to refer to the Arabians of Arabia Petræa, and their defeat by the king of Assyria, probably Esarhaddon. They are described as flying into the desert, which was and is the custom of the Arabians when attacked by a superior power. The circumstances of their flight are strikingly intimated in the mention of the people of Tema, their allies, as bringing them bread and, above all, water, on which their very existence depended in those desert and dry regions. The service which was thus rendered was the same which the Edomites refused to render to the Hebrew host; and the importance of this act of hospitality is forcibly implied in the reason given for the exclusion of the Ammonites and Moabites from the congregation of the Lord to the tenth generation, "Because they met them not with bread and water in the way, when they came forth out of Egypt." (Deut. xxiii. 4.) In fact, hostility or favour are intimated by the neglect or performance of this humane office.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE burden of the valley of vision. What aileth thee now, that thou art wholly gone up to the housetops?

2 Thou that art full of stirs, a tumultuous city, a joyous city: thy slain men are not slain with the sword, nor dead in battle.

3 All thy rulers are fled together, they are bound ¹by the archers: all that are found in thee are bound together, which have fled from far.

4 Therefore said I, ²Look away from me; ³I will weep bitterly, labour not to comfort me, because of the spoiling of the daughter of my people.

5 For it is a day of trouble, and of treading down, and of perplexity by the Lord God of hosts in the valley of vision, breaking down the walls, and of crying to the mountains.

6 And Elam bare the quiver with chariots of men and horsemen, and Kir ⁴uncovered the shield.

7 And it shall come to pass, that ⁵thy choicest valleys shall be full of chariots, and the horsemen shall set themselves in array ⁶at the gate.

8 ¶ And he discovered the covering of Judah, and thou didst look in that day to the armour of the house of the forest.

9 Ye have seen also the breaches of the city of David, that they are many: and ye gathered together the waters of the lower pool.

10 And ye have numbered the houses of Jerusalem, and the houses have ye broken down to fortify the wall.

11 Ye made also a ditch between the two walls for the water of the old pool: but ye have not looked unto the maker thereof, neither had respect unto him that fashioned it long ago.

12 And in that day did the Lord God of hosts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth:

13 And behold joy and gladness, slaying oxen, and killing sheep, eating flesh, and drinking wine: ⁷let us eat and drink; for to morrow we shall die.

14 And it was revealed in mine ears by the Lord of hosts, Surely this iniquity shall not be purged from you till ye die, saith the Lord God of hosts.

15 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God of hosts, Go, get thee unto this treasurer, even unto Shebna, which is over the house, and say, 16 What hast thou here? and whom hast thou here, that thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, ⁸as he that heweth him out a sepulchre on high, and that graveth an habitation for himself in a rock?

17 Behold, ⁹the Lord will carry thee away with ¹⁰a mighty captivity, and will surely cover thee.

18 He will surely violently turn and toss thee like a ball into a ¹¹large country: there shalt thou die, and there the chariots of thy glory shall be the shame of thy lord's house.

19 And I will drive thee from thy station, and from thy state shall he pull thee down.

20 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will call my servant Eliakim the son of Hilkiah:

21 And I will clothe him with thy robe, and strengthen him with thy girdle, and I will commit thy government into his hand: and he shall be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah.

22 And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; so he shall ¹²open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open.

23 And I will fasten him as a nail in a sure place; and he shall be for a glorious throne to his father's house.

24 And they shall hang upon him all the glory of his father's house, the offspring and the issue, all vessels of small quantity, from the vessels of cups, even to all the ¹³vessels of flagons.

Verse 1. "The valley of vision."—There is no doubt that it is Jerusalem which is thus distinguished, and probably because it was, eminently, the place of prophetic vision. The summary prefixed to this chapter, describing it as referring to "the invasion of Jewry by the Persians," is calculated to mislead, since the Persians never invaded Judea as principals, though it appears, from verse 6, that the archers of that country served in the army of the Assyrians, who were the real invaders. Whether it refers to the invasion of Sennacherib, or that of Esarhaddon, has been disputed; but, under all the circumstances, the latter is most probably to be understood.

"Wholly gone up to the housetops."—The housetop is resorted to on various public occasions, as to witness what may be passing in the streets or in the surrounding country; to mourn and lament in times of public calamity; to hold consultations, and make signals or declarations; or to avoid the first fury of an enemy expected to break into the lower part of the house. Which of these senses is here to be understood, it may be difficult to determine.

6. "Kir."—"Assyria (that is, Assyria Proper, the country situated beyond the Tigris, and south of Taurus; and of which Nineveh was the capital) is often designed in the Scriptures by the name of KIR or KERR. Besides the place just mentioned (2 Kings xvi. 9), it is found in Amos, ch. i. 5, and ix. 7. In Isaiah xxii. 6, it is mentioned with Elam, intended for Susa, (and perhaps Persia also)—'Kir uncovereth the shield.' The name Kir is traceable at present in that country. The loftiest ridge of the Kurdistan mountains (Carduchian) is named Kiarê, according to M. Otter. The province adjacent is named Hakiari (Niebuhr): the Kiouran tribe of Kourds inhabit the eastern part of Assyria (Otter): Kerkook, a large town, and other places of less consequence, have the prefixure Ker or Kir to them (Niebuhr). It is possible that the name of the Carduchian people may have had the same root." (Rennel's 'Geog. of Herodotus,' p. 391.) This observation of course applies also to the modern name of the country Kourdistan, and of the people, Kourds.

16. "A sepulchre on high."—We have on several occasions mentioned sepulchres excavated in the rocks. Those of a superior are sometimes placed so high up the perpendicular cliffs as to be inaccessible without such exertion, hazard, and contrivance, as few are able or willing to exercise. Such tombs have the double advantage of being safe from desecration and of exhibiting more conspicuously their sculptured fronts. Sepulchres of this kind are remarkably exemplified in the very ancient tombs excavated in the cliffs of the Mountain of Sepulchres, at Naksh-i-Roustam, a full description of which may be found in Sir R. K. Porter's 'Travels.' These are excavated in an almost perpendicular cliff of about three hundred feet high. There are two rows, of which the uppermost is the most ancient and interesting, presenting highly-sculptured fronts about fifty-three feet broad, crowned by the representation of an act of Sabæan worship, which, for another purpose, we have caused to be copied under Job xxxi. To the lowest of them, which, however, he describes as not less than sixty feet above the ground, Sir Robert could only obtain access by being drawn up, by means of a rope fastened round his waist, by some active natives, who had contrived to clamber up to the ledge in front of the tomb. These appear to be royal sepulchres, and probably not later than the time of the kings of Persia mentioned in Scripture. There is indeed some evidence that one of them was made for Darius Hystaspes in his lifetime and under his direction. From the present text we learn that the Jews had a similar taste for the distinction of a high sepulchre, graven in the rock.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 The miserable overthrow of Tyre. 17 Their unhappy return.

THE burden of Tyre. Howl, ye ships of Tarshish; for it is laid waste, so that there is no house, no entering in: from the land of Chittim it is revealed to them.

2 Be 'still, ye inhabitants of the isle; thou whom the merchants of Zidon, that pass over the sea, have replenished.

3 And by great waters the seed of Sihor, the harvest of the river, is her revenue; and she is a mart of nations.

4 Be thou ashamed, O Zidon: for the sea hath spoken, even the strength of the sea, saying, I travail not, nor bring forth children, neither do I nourish up young men, nor bring up virgins.

5 As the report concerning Egypt, so shall they be sorely pained at the report of Tyre.

6 Pass ye over to Tarshish; howl, ye inhabitants of the isle.

7 Is this your joyous city, whose antiquity is of ancient days? her own feet shall carry her 'afar off to sojourn.

8 Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth?

9 The LORD of hosts hath purposed it, 'to stain the pride of all glory, and to bring into contempt all the honourable of the earth.

10 Pass through thy land as a river, O daughter of Tarshish: there is no more 'strength.

sea, he shook the kingdoms: the LORD hath given a commandment ⁵against ⁶the merchant city, to destroy the ⁷strong holds thereof.

12 And he said, Thou shalt no more rejoice, O thou oppressed virgin, daughter of Zidon: arise, pass over to Chittim; there also shalt thou have no rest.

13 Behold the land of the Chaldeans; this people was not, till the Assyrian founded it for them that dwell in the wilderness: they set up the towers thereof, they raised up the palaces thereof; and he brought it to ruin.

14 Howl, ye ships of Tarshish: for your strength is laid waste.

15 And it shall come to pass in that day, that Tyre shall be forgotten seventy years, according to the days of one king:

after the end of seventy years ⁸shall Tyre sing as an harlot.

16 Take an harp, go about the city, thou harlot that hast been forgotten; make sweet melody, sing many songs, that thou mayest be remembered.

17 ¶ And it shall come to pass after the end of seventy years, that the LORD will visit Tyre, and she shall turn to her hire, and shall commit fornication with all the kingdoms of the world upon the face of the earth.

18 And her merchandise and her hire shall be holiness to the LORD: it shall not be treasured nor laid up; for her merchandise shall be for them that dwell before the LORD, to eat sufficiently, and for ⁹durable clothing.

Verse 1. "Tyre."—We shall reserve what observations we have to make on the subject of this famous city to illustrate the more extended and definite prophecies concerning it, which may be found in Ezekiel. It is therefore only necessary to observe generally that the present prophecy relates to the capture of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, and its restoration to prosperity after the fall of the Babylonian empire.

13. "The land of the Chaldeans," &c.—This verse contains a most important piece of history, which should not be overlooked. It is a very difficult verse, and accordingly the translations vary not a little. The substantial information it contains seems to be, that, although cities, including Babylon, were founded in the country afterwards called Chaldea, by Nimrod, the Chaldean nation did not acquire a settled character, or their towns rise to (or at least recover) their importance, till the time of the Assyrians, who improved and embellished the towns, doubtless also founding new ones, and reclaiming the Chaldeans from their former mode of life, as wanderers in the desert. Thus reclaimed, they appear to have employed themselves, at first at the instance of the Assyrians, and then of their own accord, in giving to their towns and country that magnificent and improved character which attracted the admiration of the ancient world. This explanation is well confirmed. The Chaldeans seem to appear in Scripture as "wanderers of the desert," of the Bedouin class, till after the Assyrian history becomes distinct; and till then also, even Babylon, notwithstanding its foundation in the earliest ages, is not mentioned as a place of any importance, either by sacred or profane writers. In fact, it would seem that all the glories of Babylon and Chaldea, so far as they are distinctly known, were commenced by the governors, or vice-kings, appointed by the Assyrian monarchs, and completed by Nebuchadnezzar and his successors. Indeed, what the last-named prince said in his pride seems very distinct on the subject of the great alterations and improvements made about this time:—"Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom?" &c.—Dan. iv. 30. See the note there.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 The doleful judgments of God upon the land. 13 A remnant shall joyfully praise him. 16 God in his judgments shall advance his kingdom.

BEHOLD, the LORD maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and ¹turneth it upside down, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof.

2 And it shall be, as with the people, so with the ²³priest; as with the servant, so with his master; as with the maid, so with her mistress; as with the buyer, so with the seller; as with the lender, so with the borrower; as with the taker of usury, so with the giver of usury to him.

3 The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled: for the LORD hath spoken this word.

4 The earth mourneth and fadeth away, the world languisheth and fadeth away, ⁴the haughty people of the earth do languish.

5 The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant.

6 Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate: therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left.

7 The new wine mourneth, the vine languisheth, all the merryhearted do sigh.

8 The mirth of tabrets ceaseth, the noise of them that rejoice endeth, the joy of the harp ceaseth.

9 They shall not drink wine with a song; strong drink shall be bitter to them that drink it.

10 The city of confusion is broken down: every house is shut up, that no man may come in.

11 There is a crying for wine in the streets; all joy is darkened, the mirth of the land is gone.

12 In the city is left desolation, and the gate is smitten with destruction.

13 ¶ When thus it shall be in the midst of the land among the people, there shall be as the shaking of an olive tree, and as the gleaning grapes when the vintage is done.

14 They shall lift up their voice, they shall sing for the majesty of the Lord, they shall cry aloud from the sea.

15 Wherefore glorify ye the Lord in the fires, even the name of the Lord God of Israel in the isles of the sea.

16 ¶ From the uttermost part of the earth have we heard songs, even glory to the righteous. But I said, My leanness, my leanness, woe unto me! the treacherous dealers have dealt treacherously; yea, the treacherous dealers have dealt very treacherously.

17 Fear, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth.

18 And it shall come to pass, that he who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for the windows from on high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake.

19 The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly.

20 The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall, and not rise again.

21 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall ¹⁰punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth.

22 And they shall be gathered together, ¹¹as prisoners are gathered in the ¹²pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be ¹³visited.

23 Then the ¹⁴moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and ¹⁵before his ancients gloriously.

Verse 13. "The shaking of an olive tree."—Compare this with Deut. xxiv. 20, "When thou beatest thine olive-tree, thou shalt not go over the boughs again; it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow."—By this comparison, and by the association of the shaking the olive-tree with the gleaning of grapes, and still more from the context in chap. xvii. 6—"Two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough, four or five in the outmost fruitful branches thereof"—it is evident that it was customary for the proprietor to beat down the olives with a long pole, as is still the custom in some parts of Italy, and even in Palestine. This process was calculated to bring down a greater number, ripe and unripe, than shaking merely, and therefore was the more likely to be resorted to among a people who were prohibited from going over the boughs a second time. We may suppose that some unripe olives only escaped this process; and, as the poor, whose property they became, would desire to obtain them in a perfect condition, they allowed them to remain till they became so ripe that they would fall when the tree was shaken. It is also alleged that the boughs often sustain much damage by being beaten, on which account we may suppose that the proprietors would be unwilling to allow the process to be repeated by the gleaners, but expected them to confine themselves to shaking the tree. This explanation is founded on Harmer's 'Observations,' vol. iii. p. 260; but we have endeavoured to make it a little clearer. If it were not that the shaking the olive-tree is connected with grape-gleaning, it might be supposed that beating the tree had been the usual method in the time of Moses; but, being found injurious to the tree and its fruit, the shaking was an improved process afterwards adopted.

VIEW IN AN OLIVE FOREST.

CHAPTER XXV.

¹ The prophet praiseth God, for his judgments, 6 for his saving benefits, 9 and for his victorious salvation.

O LORD, thou art my God; I will exalt thee, I will praise thy name; for thou hast done wonderful things; thy counsels of old are faithfulness and truth.

2 For thou hast made of a city an heap; of a defenced city a ruin: a palace of strangers to be no city; it shall never be built.

3 Therefore shall the strong people glorify thee, the city of the terrible nations shall fear thee.

4 For thou hast been a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall.

5 Thou shalt bring down the noise of strangers, as the heat in a dry place; even the heat with the shadow of a cloud: the branch of the terrible ones shall be brought low.

6 ¶ And in this mountain shall the LORD of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined.

7 And he will ¹destroy in this mountain the face of the covering ²cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations.

8 He will ³swallow up death in victory; and the LORD God will ⁴wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the LORD hath spoken it.

9 ¶ And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the LORD; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.

10 For in this mountain shall the hand of the LORD rest, and Moab shall be ⁵trodden down under him, even as straw is ⁶trodden down for the dunghill.

in the midst of them, as he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his hands to swim: and he shall bring down their pride together with the spoils of their hands.

12 And the fortress of the high fort of thy walls shall he bring down, lay low, and bring to the ground, even to the dust.

Verse 2. "Thou hast made of a city an heap."—This verse is generally understood to refer to Babylon.

6. "Wines on the lees."—This perhaps alludes to such a custom as still prevails in some parts of Western Asia, where new wine is poured into vessels that have been kept for several generations, upon the lees of old wines of former years. When finally drawn off for use, the strength and quality of the wine is considered to have been greatly improved by this process; and it is often mentioned as a reason for recommending a particular wine to one who purchases or drinks. See further under Jer. xlviii. 11.

10. "Trodden down under him, even as straw is trodden down for the dunghill."—Bishop Lowth's translation of this is, "Moab shall be threshed in his place, as the straw is threshed under the wheels of the car." So also Calmet understood it; and, we think, correctly. The force of this allusion will be understood by the accounts we have given of the process of threshing, to which reference is made.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 A song inciting to confidence in God, 5 for his judgments, 12 and for his favour to his people. 20 An exhortation to wait on God.

IN that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah; We have a strong city; salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks.

2 Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the 'truth may enter in.

3 Thou wilt keep him in 'perfect peace, whose 'mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee.

4 Trust ye in the LORD for ever: for in the LORD JEHOVAH is 'everlasting strength:

5 ¶ For he bringeth down them that dwell on high; the lofty city, he layeth it low; he layeth it low, even to the ground; he bringeth it even to the dust.

6 The foot shall tread it down, even the feet of the poor, and the steps of the needy.

7 The way of the just is uprightness: thou, most upright, dost weigh the path of the just.

8 Yea, in the way of thy judgments, O LORD, have we waited for thee; the desire of our soul is to thy name, and to the remembrance of thee.

9 With my soul have I desired thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me will I seek thee early: for when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness.

10 Let favour be shewed to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness: in the land of uprightness will he deal unjustly, and will not behold the majesty of the LORD.

11 LORD, when thy hand is lifted up, they will not see: but they shall see, and be ashamed for their envy at the people; yea, the fire of thine enemies shall devour them.

12 ¶ LORD, thou wilt ordain peace for us: for thou also hast wrought all our works 'in us.

13 O LORD our God, other lords beside thee have had dominion over us: but by thee only will we make mention of thy name.

14 They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise: therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish.

15 Thou hast increased the nation, O LORD, thou hast increased the nation: thou art glorified: thou hadst removed it far unto all the ends of the earth.

16 LORD, in trouble have they visited thee, they poured out a 'prayer when thy chastening was upon them.

17 Like as a woman with child, that draweth near the time of her delivery, is in pain, and crieth out in her pangs; so have we been in thy sight, O LORD.

Verse 19. "Dew of herbs."—Lowth, with the Vulgate, Syriac, and Chaldee, reads "dew of dawn:" or it might be more generally rendered "dew of rays," or "of light." The meaning will then be clear and expressive; the comparison being to dew that lives the longest—that is, dried up the latest by the morning sun. Boothroyd, who translates "dew of mallows," elicits the same substantial meaning, observing, "The mallow attracts a great quantity of dew, and hence was green and flourishing."

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 The care of God over his vineyard. 7 His chastisements differ from judgments. 12 The church of Jews and Gentiles.

4 Fury is not in me: who would set the briers and thorns against me in battle? I would ^ago through them, I would burn them together.

5 Or let him take hold of my strength, that he may make peace with me; and he shall make peace with me.

6 He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root: Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit.

7 ¶ Hath he smitten him, ^aas he smote those that smote him? or is he slain according to the slaughter of them that are slain by him?

8 In measure, ^awhen it shooteth forth, thou wilt debate with it: ^ahe stayeth his rough wind in the day of the east wind.

9 By this therefore shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged; and this is all the fruit to take away his sin; when he maketh all the stones of the altar as chalkstones that are beaten in sunder, the groves and ^aimages shall not stand up.

10 Yet the defenced city shall be desolate, and the habitation forsaken, and left like a wilderness: there shall the calf feed, and there shall he lie down, and consume the branches thereof.

11 When the boughs thereof are withered, they shall be broken off: the women come, and set them on fire: for it is a people of no understanding: therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will shew them no favour.

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall beat off from the channel of the river unto the stream of Egypt, and ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel.

13 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the great trumpet shall be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt, and shall worship the LORD in the holy mount at Jerusalem.

Verse 1. "Leviathan the piercing serpent...that crooked serpent."—The Septuagint translates the word rendered "piercing" by φειρόντα, "fleeing;" which seems a more obvious interpretation of the word בָּרַח barach than either our text or margin (which agrees with the Vulgate) conveys. The epithet "fleeing," if correctly so understood, may be supposed to apply to the haste with which the crocodile retreats to the water when it has secured any prey on land. The epithet "crooked" does not necessarily apply to any crookedness in the form or attitude of the animal intended, but may equally, if required, be translated "winding," and applied to the devious course of the animal in running or swimming.

11. "The women come, and set them on fire."—Compare John xv. 6. Where vines are abundant, the twigs, rejected when the vines are dressed and pruned, supply a very important article of fuel, and are collected and stored up for that purpose by the women and children. Decayed or ruined vines form an important addition to the store; and the desolation of the vine of Israel is therefore very strikingly implied in this figure.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 The prophet threateneth Ephraim for their pride and drunkenness. 5 The residue shall be advanced in the kingdom of Christ. 7 He rebuketh their error. 9 Their unlearnedness to learn, 14 and their security. 16 Christ the sure foundation is promised. 18 Their security shall be tried. 23 They are incited to the consideration of God's discreet providence.

Woe to the crown of pride, to the drunkards of Ephraim, whose glorious beauty is a fading flower, which are on the head of the fat valleys of them that are overcome with wine!

2 Behold, the Lord hath a mighty and strong one, which as a tempest of hail and a destroying storm, as a flood of mighty waters overflowing, shall cast down to the earth with the hand.

3 The crown of pride, the drunkards of Ephraim, shall be trodden under feet:

4 And the glorious beauty, which is on the head of the fat valley, shall be a fading flower, and as the hasty fruit before the summer; which when he that looketh upon it seeth, while it is yet in his hand he eateth it up.

5 ¶ In that day shall the Lord of hosts be for a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty, unto the residue of his people.

6 And for a spirit of judgment to him that sitteth in judgment, and for strength to them that turn the battle to the gate.

7 ¶ But they also have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way; the priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink, they are swallowed up of wine, they are out of the way through strong drink; they err in vision, they stumble in judgment.

8 For all tables are full of vomit and filthiness, so that there is no place clean.

9 ¶ Whom shall he teach knowledge? and whom shall he make to understand doctrine? them that are weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts.

10 For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little:

11 For with ⁶stammering lips and another tongue ⁷will he speak to this people.

12 To whom he said, This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing: yet they would not hear.

13 But the word of the Lord was unto them precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little; that they might go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken.

14 ¶ Wherefore hear the word of the Lord, ye scornful men, that rule this people which is in Jerusalem.

15 Because ye have said, We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us: for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves:

16 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation ^aa stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste.

17 Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet: and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place.

19 From the time that it goeth forth it shall take you: for morning by morning shall it pass over, by day and by night: and it shall be a vexation only ¹¹to understand the report.

20 For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it: and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it.

21 For the LORD shall rise up as in mount ¹²Perazim, he shall be wroth as in the valley of ¹³Gibeon, that he may do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act.

22 Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong: for I have heard from the Lord God of hosts a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth.

23 ¶ Give ye ear, and hear my voice; hearken, and hear my speech.

24 Doth the plowman plow all day to sow? doth he open and break the clods of his ground?

Verse 1. "The crown of pride," &c.—Maunder describes Sebaste, the ancient Samaria, as situated upon a long mount of an oval figure, having first a fruitful valley, and then a ring of hills round about it. Hence, as Bishop Lowth observes, "The city, beautifully situated on the top of a round hill, and surrounded immediately with a rich valley, and a circle of other hills beyond it, suggested the idea of a chaplet or wreath of flowers, worn upon their heads on occasions of festivity; and expressed by the proud crown and the fading flower of the drunkard." (See the note on Solomon's Song, iii. 11.)

21. "Mount Perazim...valley of Gibeon."—The circumstances alluded to here are probably those which we find recorded in 2 Sam. v. 20, and Josh. x. 10.

25. "Fitches"—(קצח Ketzach)—which some suppose to have been the Nigella, one of the ranunculaceous plants. The Nigella sativa, the μελανθιον of the Greeks, is a native of the East, and is cultivated in Egypt, Persia, and India, for the sake of its seeds, which, from time immemorial, have been used as a condiment, in the same way as we use coriander and caraway seeds. The seeds are black, and thence called in Arabic habe sode, or black grains; as μελανθιον and Nigella are from μελας, and niger, "black," in allusion to the same circumstance. The Nigella forms a singular exception among the family to which it belongs; inasmuch as they are terrible poisons, while the Nigella produces seeds that are not only wholesome and aromatic, but are in great reputation for their medicinal qualities. The seeds were beaten out with a rod, the slightest application of force being sufficient for that purpose.

"Cummin"—(כמון cammon; whence κυμινον and cuminum).—The Cummin is an umbelliferous plant, closely allied in structure and properties to the coriander and the caraway.

As the seeds, when ripe, are suspended by very delicate threads, they may be removed with little trouble, as in the case of the Nigella. For a figure and further description, see Matt. xxiii.

"Fitches," Nigella sativa.

27. "A threshing instrument," &c.—This passage is very interesting, as noticing five different methods of threshing employed among the Hebrews. Most of these have already been noticed. The "threshing instrument" (חֲרָטָה chorutz), rendered "corn-drag" by Lowth, and which appears to have consisted of a frame of strong planks, made rough at the bottom with iron or hard stones, was dragged over the corn by oxen or horses, the driver sitting upon it. The "cart" appears to have been a similar machine, furnished with an axle and wheels, like that figured under Num. xviii., and described under Prov. xx. 26. From chap. xli. 15, a machine of this sort appears to have been sometimes furnished with iron teeth, or perhaps serrated wheels. These wheeled engines not only forced out the grain, but cut up the straw as fodder for the cattle. Then the rods and stails appear to have been used for separating the more delicate and easily-detached kinds of grain. It appears also—from verse 28, "bruise it with his horsemen"—that corn was sometimes threshed by the simple treading of cattle, as is still the case in many parts of the world. It is a very ancient practice, and is probably that alluded to by Moses, in his injunction against muzzling the ox that trod out the corn (Deut. xxv. 4). The practice is mentioned by Homer, as the customary process employed in his time. In the present instance, it is uncertain and perhaps unlikely, that "horsemen" are intended, although horses are certainly now sometimes employed in this service. Instead of פָּרָשִׁים "horsemen," the Syriac, Symmachus, Theodotion, and the Vulgate, read פָּרָסִים, "hoofs;" which seems the best reading, as applicable to any animals employed in treading out the corn.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1 God's heavy judgment upon Jerusalem. 7 The unsatiableness of her enemies. 9 The senselessness, 13 and deep hypocrisy of the Jews. 18 A promise of sanctification to the godly.

'Woe to Ariel, to Ariel, 'the city where David dwelt! add ye year to year; let them kill sacrifices.

2 Yet I will distress Ariel, and there shall be heaviness and sorrow: and it shall be unto me as Ariel.

3 And I will camp against thee round about, and will lay siege against thee with a mount, and I will raise forts against thee.

4 And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be, as of one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground, and thy speech shall 'whisper out of the dust.

5 Moreover the multitude of thy strangers shall be like small dust, and the multitude of the terrible ones shall be as chaff that passeth away: yea, it shall be at an instant suddenly.

6 Thou shalt be visited of the Lord of hosts with thunder, and with earthquake, and great noise, with storm and tempest, and the flame of devouring fire.

7 ¶ And the multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel, even all that fight against her and her munition, and that distress her, shall be as a dream of a night vision.

8 It shall even be as when an hungry man dreameth, and, behold, he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and, behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and, behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite: so shall the multitude of all the nations be, that fight against mount Zion.

9 ¶ Stay yourselves, and wonder; 'cry ye out, and cry: they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink.

10 For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your 'rulers, the seers hath he covered.

11 And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a 'book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed:

12 And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned.

13 ¶ Wherefore the Lord said, 'Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men:

14 Therefore, behold, 'I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder: 'for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.

17 Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest?

18 ¶ And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity, and out of darkness.

19 The meek also ¹³shall increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel.

20 For the terrible one is brought to nought, and the scorner is consumed, and all that watch for iniquity are cut off:

21 That make a man an offender for a word, and lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate, and turn aside the just for a thing of nought.

22 Therefore thus saith the Lord, who redeemed Abraham, concerning the house of Jacob, Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale.

23 But when he seeth his children, the work of mine hands, in the midst of him, they shall sanctify my name, and sanctify the Holy One of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel.

Verse 1. "Ariel."—This name has been differently explained and applied. The word is אֲרִי־אֵל, which, divided without alteration, means, as the margin states, "the lion of God;" and this, according to the use, in the Hebrew language, of the name of God to strengthen the sense and form the superlative, would signify "the strong lion." Thus understood, it may be supposed to signify the strength of the place, by which it was enabled to resist and overcome its enemies; or, still more probably, because it was the chief city of the tribe of Judah, whose standard appears to have been a lion, on account of the comparison of Judah to that animal, in the prophecy of the dying Jacob. This name would not be unexampled, "the lion" being the meaning of the name borne by the city of Shiraz, the once metropolis of Persia. However thus interpreted, some think that the name is given to David rather than to Jerusalem in this verse. We do not concur in this opinion. But it appears that the Hebrews did give this title to celebrated warriors. In chap. xxxiii. 7, the same word is rendered "valiant ones," and in 2 Sam. xxiii. 20, certain warriors are compared to lions. It is still the same in Arabia and other eastern countries; thus "lion of God" is the well known title by which the renowned and valorous caliph Ali is commonly known.—But others, among whom are Lowth and Gesenius, derive the first part of the word from אֵלֶּיךָ, when it will of course signify, not "the lion of God," but "the fire," or "firehearth of God," meaning the sacred fire upon the altar of burnt offering, or the altar itself, and to Jerusalem, as containing that altar. This interpretation certainly receives some support from the fact that Ezekiel (xliii. 15, 16, see margin) does apply this title of Ariel, and doubtless in the sense here explained, to the altar.

4. "Speak out of the ground."—This and the analogous terms contained in the present verse appear to refer to the tricks of the ancient ventriloquists, chiefly priests and necro-mancers, who thus delivered the pretended oracles of their gods, or the responses of ghosts, as if from under ground, or from caverns, or from the air. That which now serves as an amusement, was thus formerly appropriated to a higher destination. "Ventriloquism thus affords a ready and plausible solution of oracular stones and oaks, of the reply which the river Nessus addressed to Pythagoras (Jamblichus, Vit. Pyth. xxviii.), and of the tree which, at the command of the chief of the Gymnosophists of Upper Egypt, spoke to Apollonius. 'The voice,' says Philostratus (Vit. Ap. vi. 5), 'was distinct, but weak, and similar to the voice of a woman.'" ('Foreign Quarterly Review,' vol. vi. p. 429.) This very well explains the "low voice," the "whisper," of the present verse. To this we are tempted to add Lowth's note. "That the souls of the dead uttered a feeble, stridulous, very different from the natural human, voice, was a popular notion among the heathens, as well as among the Jews. This appears from several passages of their poets, Homer, Virgil, Horace. The pretenders to the art of necromancy, who were chiefly women, had an art of speaking with a feigned voice, so as to deceive those who applied to them. They had a way of uttering sounds, as if they were formed, not by the organs of speech, but deep in the chest, or in the belly; and were thence called εγγαστριμυθοί, ventriloqui: they could make the voice seem to come from beneath the ground, from a distant part, in another direction, and not from themselves; the better to impose upon those who consulted them. 'These people studiously acquire, and affect on purpose, this sort of obscure sound; that by the uncertainty of the voice, they may the better escape being detected in the cheat.' (Psellus, de Dæmonibus, apud Bochart, i. p. 731.) From these arts of the necromancers the popular notion seems to have arisen, that the ghost's voice was a weak, stridulous, almost inarticulate sort of sound, very different from the speech of the living."

CHAPTER XXX.

¹ The prophet threateneth the people for their confidence in Egypt, 8 and contempt of God's word. 18 God's mercies towards his church. 27 God's wrath, and the people's joy, in the destruction of Assyria.

WOE to the rebellious children, saith the LORD, that take counsel, but not of me; and that cover with a covering, but not of my spirit, that they may add sin to sin:

2 That walk to go down into Egypt, and have not asked at my mouth; to strengthen themselves in the strength of Pharaoh, and to trust in the shadow of Egypt!

3 Therefore shall the strength of Pharaoh be your shame, and the trust in the shadow of Egypt your confusion.

4 For his princes were at Zoan, and his ambassadors came to Hanes.

5 They were all ashamed of a people that could not profit them, nor be an help nor profit, but a shame, and also a reproach.

6 The burden of the beasts of the south: into the land of trouble and anguish, from whence come the young and old lion, the viper and fiery flying serpent, they will carry their riches upon the shoulders of young asses, and their treasures upon the bunches of camels, to a people that shall not profit them.

7 For the Egyptians shall help in vain, and to no purpose: therefore have I cried 'concerning this, Their strength is to sit still.

8 ¶ Now go, write it before them in a table, and note it in a book, that it may be for ²the time to come for ever and ever:

9 That this is a rebellious people, lying children, children that will not hear the law of the LORD:

10 Which say to the seers, See not; and to the prophets, Prophecy not unto us right things, speak unto us smooth things, prophecy deceits:

11 Get you out of the way, turn aside out of the path, cause the Holy One of Israel to cease from before us.

12 Wherefore thus saith the Holy One of Israel, Because ye despise this word, and trust in ³oppression and perverseness, and stay thereon:

13 Therefore this iniquity shall be to you as a breach ready to fall, swelling out in a high wall, whose breaking cometh suddenly at an instant.

14 And he shall break it as the breaking of 'the potters' vessel that is broken in pieces; he shall not spare: so that there shall not be found in the bursting of it a sherd to take fire from the hearth, or to take water withal out of the pit.

15 For thus saith the Lord God, the Holy One of Israel; In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength: and ye would not.

16 But ye said, No; for we will flee upon horses; therefore shall ye flee: and, We will ride upon the swift; therefore shall they that pursue you be swift.

17 One thousand shall flee at the rebuke of one; at the rebuke of five shall ye flee: till ye be left as ⁴a beacon upon the top of a mountain, and as an ensign on an hill.

18 ¶ And therefore will the LORD wait, that he may be gracious unto you, and therefore will he be exalted, that he may have mercy upon you: for the LORD is a God of judgment: 'blessed are all they that wait for him.

19 For the people shall dwell in Zion at Jerusalem: thou shalt weep no more: he will be very gracious unto thee at the voice of thy cry; when he shall hear it, he will answer thee.

20 And though the LORD give you the bread of adversity, and the water of ⁵'affliction, yet shall not thy teachers be removed into a corner any more, but thine eyes shall see thy teachers:

21 And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left.

Verse 13. "Swelling out in a high wall;"—or, "a swelling in a very high wall."—High walls in the East are so made that they often decline from the perpendicular, and bulge out in different parts. This is particularly the case with the mud walls, unless of enormous thickness; and the same fact may be observed in the similar walls with which cottages are so commonly constructed in Devonshire, and the use of which, in that part of the country, appears to have been derived from the East, as shown in an interesting article on 'Cob Walls' in a late Number of the Quarterly Review. Walls of this sort are most liable to such disturbance when they have been acted upon by long rains or inundations. Even walls of kiln-burnt bricks are much exposed to derangement from the same causes. This arises from their construction. Walls five or six feet thick, and seemingly of the strongest and most durable nature, are only faced with brick, the substance being dust and rubbish, so that when the wet happens to penetrate to the internal mass, it settles down, rendering the pressure upon the brick facing heavy and unequal, causing it to swell out and break in particular parts, and often bringing the whole to ruin.

24. "Winnowed with the shovel and with the fan."—See the note on Ps. i. 4. The two instruments are probably the sieve and winnowing shovel mentioned there. The fan or winnowing shovel in the East is usually a light wooden frame, about a yard in diameter, wrought with hair or palm leaves. Its shape is commonly semi-oval, and it is held at the rounded end by the person who tosses up with it the grain in a current of air which wafts away the chaff.

CHAPTER XXXI.

1 The prophet sheweth the cursed folly in trusting to Egypt, and forsaking of God. 6 He exhorteth to conversion. 8 He sheweth the fall of Assyria.

WOE to them that go down to Egypt for help; and stay on horses, and trust in chariots, because they are many; and in horse-and against the help of them that work iniquity.

3 Now the Egyptians are men, and not God; and their horses flesh, and not spirit. When the LORD shall stretch out his hand, both he that helpeth shall fall, and he that is holpen shall fall down, and they all shall fail together.

4 For thus hath the LORD spoken unto me, Like as the lion and the young lion roaring on his prey, when a multitude of shepherds is called forth against him, he will not be afraid of their voice, nor abase himself for the 'noise of them: so shall the LORD of hosts come down to fight for mount Zion, and for the hill thereof.

5 As birds flying, so will the LORD of hosts defend Jerusalem; defending also he will deliver it; and passing over he will preserve it.

6 ¶ Turn ye unto him from whom the children of Israel have deeply revolted.

7 For in that day every man shall 'cast away his idols of silver, and 'his idols of gold, which your own hands have made unto you for a sin.

8 ¶ Then shall the Assyrian fall with the sword, not of a mighty man; and the sword, not of a mean man, shall devour him: but he shall flee 'from the sword, and his young men shall be 'discomfited.

9 And 'he shall pass over to 'his strong hold for fear, and his princes shall be afraid of the ensign, saith the LORD, whose fire is in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem.

Verse 4. "Like as the lion," &c.—Homer has a comparison exceedingly similar to this (Il. xii. 299):—

"As the lion mountain-bred,
After long fast, and by the impulse urged
Of his undaunted heart, invades the flock
Ev'n in the shelter of their guarded home;
He finds, perchance, the shepherds arm'd with spears,
And all their dogs awake, yet not for them
Resigns his hope, but either leaps the fence,

And entering tears the prey, or in th' attempt,
Pierced by some dextrous peasant, bleeds himself."—
COWPER.

5. "As birds flying."—The following is Lowth's beautiful translation of this verse: "As the mother-birds hovering over their young; so shall Jehovah God of Hosts protect Jerusalem; protecting and delivering; leaping forward, and rescuing her."

CHAPTER XXXII.

1 The blessings of Christ's kingdom. 9 Desolation is fore-shewn. 15 Restoration is promised to succeed.

BEHOLD, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment.

2 And a man shall be as an hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a 'great rock in a weary land.

3 And the eyes of them that see shall not be dim, and the ears of them that hear shall hearken.

4 The heart also of the 'rash shall understand knowledge, and the tongue of the stammerers shall be ready to speak 'plainly.

5 The vile person shall be no more called liberal, nor the churl said to be bountiful.

6 For the vile person will speak villany, and his heart will work iniquity, to practise hypocrisy, and to utter error against the LORD, to make empty the soul of the hungry, and he will cause the drink of the thirsty to fail.

7 The instruments also of the churl are evil: he deviseth wicked devices to destroy the poor with lying words, even 'when the needy speaketh right.

8 But the liberal deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he 'stand.

9 ¶ Rise up, ye women that are at ease; hear my voice, ye careless daughters; give ear unto my speech.

10 'Many days and years shall ye be troubled, ye careless women: for the vintage shall fail, the gathering shall not come.

11 Tremble, ye women that are at ease; be troubled, ye careless ones: strip you, and make you bare, and gird sackcloth upon your loins.

12 They shall lament for the teats, for 'the pleasant fields, for the fruitful vine.

13 Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns and briers; ⁸yea, upon all the houses of joy in the joyous city:

14 Because the palaces shall be forsaken; the multitude of the city shall be left; the 'forts and towers shall be for dens for ever, a joy of wild asses, a pasture of flocks;

15 Until the spirit be poured upon us from on high, and ¹⁰the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest.

16 Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field.

17 And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance for ever.

18 And my people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places;

19 When it shall hail, coming down on the forest; ¹¹and the city shall be low in a low place.

20 Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters, that send forth thither the feet of the ox and the ass.

Verse 13. "Thorns," קִלְז kolz, Ononis spinosa, or rest-harrow. See Jerem. xii. 13.

"Briers," שִׁמִּיר shamir. We feel little hesitation in referring the shamir of the sacred writers to a species of Fagonia, which belongs to a family distinguished, among other points of difference, by thorny cells or carpella of its fruit. The word implies a weed that was shunned, from the offensive nature of its armature, both with reference to the seed-vessels and the thorny pair of stipules seated below each leaf. These seed-vessels turn brown as they ripen, and, falling upon the ground, are with difficulty to be seen even by the most cautious, and thus in warm countries, where the natives go barefoot, they inflict a painful wound in that organ of progression, and are not easily extracted.

20. "Ye that sow beside all waters," &c.—In this, and some other passages of similar force, it would be hard to prove that rice can be intended; but references certainly do occur to some kinds of grain which required a treatment precisely similar to rice. So in the present instance, Sir John Chardin conceives that this text cannot be better illustrated than by the culture of that important grain, which furnishes the principal article of food to a very large proportion of the human race. He says, "This exactly answers the manner of planting rice; for they sow it upon the water: and before sowing, while the earth is covered with water they cause the ground to be trodden by oxen, horses, and asses, who go mid-leg deep; and this is the way of preparing the ground for sowing. As they sow the rice in the water, they transplant it in the water."

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1 God's judgments against the enemies of the church. 13 The privileges of the godly.

WOE 'to thee that spoilest, and thou wast not spoiled; and dealest treacherously, and they dealt not treacherously with thee! when thou shalt cease to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled; and when thou shalt make an end to deal treacherously, they shall deal treacherously with thee.

2 O LORD, be gracious unto us; we have waited for thee: be thou their arm every morning, our salvation also in the time of trouble.

3 At the noise of the tumult the people fled; at the lifting up of thyself the nations were scattered.

4 And your spoil shall be gathered like the gathering of the caterpillar: as the running to and fro of locusts shall he run upon them.

5 The LORD is exalted; for he dwelleth on high: he hath filled Zion with judgment and righteousness.

6 And wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times, and strength of 'salvation: the fear of the LORD is his treasure.

7 Behold, their ²valiant ones shall cry without: the ambassadors of peace shall weep bitterly.

8 The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth: he hath broken the covenant, he hath despised the cities, he regardeth no man.

9 The earth mourneth and languisheth:

10 Now will I rise, saith the LORD ; now will I be exalted ; now will I lift up myself.

11 Ye shall conceive chaff, ye shall bring forth stubble : your breath, as fire, shall devour you.

12 And the people shall be as the burnings of lime : as thorns cut up shall they be burned in the fire.

13 ¶ Hear, ye that are far off, what I have done ; and, ye that are near, acknowledge my might.

14 The sinners in Zion are afraid ; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites. Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire ? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings ?

15 He that ⁴walketh ⁵righteously, and speaketh ⁶uprightly ; he that despiseth the gain of ⁷oppressions, that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of ⁸blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil ;

16 He shall dwell on ⁹high : his place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks : bread shall be given him ; his waters shall be sure.

17 Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty : they shall behold ¹⁰the land that is very far off.

18 Thine heart shall meditate terror. ¹¹Where is the scribe ? where is the ¹²receiver ? where is he that counted the towers ?

19 Thou shalt not see a fierce people, a people of deeper speech than thou canst perceive ; of a ¹³stammering tongue, that thou canst not understand.

20 Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities : thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down ; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken.

21 But there the glorious LORD will be unto us a place ¹⁴of broad rivers and streams ; wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby.

22 For the LORD is our judge, the LORD is our lawgiver, the LORD is our king ; he will save us.

23 ¹⁵Thy tacklings are loosed ; they could not well strengthen their mast, they could not spread the sail : then is the prey of a great spoil divided ; the lame take the prey.

to make the assault with the greatest advantage : as Capaneus before Thebes is represented in a passage of the Phœnissæ of Euripides, which Grotius has applied to the illustration of this text.

¹ The judgments wherewith God revengeth his church. 11 The desolation of her enemies. 16 The certainty of the prophecy.

COME near, ye nations, to hear ; and hearken, ye people : let the earth hear, and ¹all that is therein ; the world, and all things that come forth of it.

5 For my sword shall be bathed in heaven: behold, it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment.

6 The sword of the LORD is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams: for the LORD hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea.

7 And the 'unicorns shall come down with them, and the bullocks with the bulls; and their land shall be 'soaked with blood, and their dust made fat with fatness.

8 For it is the day of the LORD's 'vengeance, and the year of recompences for the controversy of Zion.

12 They shall call the nobles thereof to the kingdom, but none shall be there, and all her princes shall be nothing.

13 And thorns shall come up in her palaces, nettles and brambles in the fortresses thereof: and it shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court ¹⁰ ¹¹for owls.

14 ¹²The wild beasts of the desert shall also meet with ¹³the wild beasts of the island, and the satyr shall cry to his fellow; the ¹⁴screech owl also shall rest there, and find for herself a place of rest.

15 There shall the great owl make her nest, and lay, and hatch, and gather under her shadow: there shall the vultures also be gathered, every one with her mate.

ROCK GOAT.

Verse 6. "Bozrah."—This town of Edom is mentioned several times in Scripture, in such a manner as to show that it was a city of great importance. In ch. lxiii. it seems to be celebrated for its dyed garments, as some understand, and for its wine, as others. In Mic. ii. 12, "the sheep of Bozrah" are mentioned; but this last Bozrah is not said to belong to Edom, but rather seems to have been in possession of the Hebrews. Jeremiah also mentions a Bozrah in Moab (ch. xlviii. 24). We are at present acquainted with the ruins but of one town with this name: this is situated in the southern part of the district called the Haouran; the proximity of which to Moab might seem to show that this was the Bozrah mentioned as belonging to the Moabites. We shall therefore describe it under the text referred to in Jeremiah, although we do not feel assured that the same town may not be intended wherever the name occurs, notwithstanding its appropriation to Moab in that one text of Scripture, and to Edom in others.

13. "Thorns," סִרְיִם sirim. In all probability a species of buckthorn, and none more likely than the Zizyphus spina Christi, or Christ's thorn. It is found in Palestine and Northern Africa; beneath each leaf is a pair of thorns, one of which is crooked and the other straight. The clusters of small flowers are followed by round berries or drupes. This thorn derives its common name from a tradition that it furnished the crown of mockery which was set on the head of our Saviour.

"Nettles," קִמְשׁ kimmosh, very probably denotes the common nettle.

"Brambles," חֹזֶה choach. As this term is sometimes used to denote a fish-hook, it becomes a very fit appellation for the species of Rubus, or bramble, where the thorns, as in the rose, are remarkable for being uncinat, or hooked. The word has different renderings in our version. In four places it is rendered "thistle;" in four, "thorn;" in one, "thicket;" in one, "hook," and here "bramble." Celsius thinks that it means the black-thorn, which is described by the same word in the Arabic.

14. "Screech owl."—The original word לִילִית lilith, which occurs here only, is imagined by the rabbins to denote a female spectre, in a human figure, with wings, that lay in wait for children by night, and destroyed them. The word evidently denotes some creature of the night (literally, nocturna), and so far as authority goes, our translation is well supported in referring it to a species of owl. We might well suppose it to be the eagle-owl, or bubo maximus, which is found in many parts of the world, and haunts, preferably, old ruins and other places, where it is liable to little disturbance from the intrusion of mankind. Like others of its tribe, it remains silent in its solitude during the day, but comes forth at night from its retreat, adding by its strange appearance and dismal tones to the gloom of the scenes which it delights to frequent. The ground colour of this bird's plumage is brown mingled with yellow, diversified with wavy curves, bars, and dashes of black. Its length is about two feet: the legs are feathered to the toes: and the iris of the eye exhibits a bright orange colour. Three eggs, of a clear white colour, are found in the nests, which the eagle-owl constructs among the ruins of ancient temples, palaces, and tombs.—The other creatures mentioned in this chapter have already been noticed.

Dr. Keith has collected some interesting evidence from the incidental notices of recent travellers, to show that the several wild creatures here described as inhabiting, frequenting, possessing, the desolations of Edom, now are actually found among these desolations, in proportion corresponding to the discriminating terms employed in this prophecy. The evidence is indeed incomplete, no traveller having given particular attention to the subject, and some obscurity attending the determination of the species which the Hebrew text denotes; but still it goes so far as to furnish very convincing conclusions in establishing and illustrating the minute precisions of inspired prophecy. We will touch shortly on the subject, availing ourselves of Dr. Keith's references, to which we are unable to make any addition.—Verse 11. "The cormorant and the bittern shall possess it." In our note on Ps. cii. 6, we have supposed the word (אֲנָפִי kaath) to denote the pelican, as there translated, although here it is rendered "cormorant." Dr. Keith, however, thinks it means the partridge, which the Arabs call katta; and shows, from Burckhardt, that these birds frequent the mountains east of the Jordan, and of its ancient channel south of the Dead Sea, including, of course, the mountains of Seir, and are so abundant that the Arab boys often kill two or three at a time, merely by throwing a stick amongst them. We must confess, however, that we are not convinced that this bird is intended by the prophet; and we observe that Burckhardt himself suspects the bird of which he speaks to have been the "quail," so well known to the Hebrews in the desert.—"Bittern." For this we have already referred to a note on Zeph. ii. 14.—13. "Thorns...in her palaces, nettles and brambles in the fortresses."—Laborde, in describing the existing state of Petra, says that brambles, &c., sometimes rise to the same height with the columns, and that creeping and prickly plants often hide the monuments of human labour which this wonderful city offers. Brambles and parasitical plants sometimes reach the tops of the monuments, grow on their cornices, and conceal the base of the columns.—"Raven." The original term includes crows also. Burckhardt, speaking of one part of Edom, observes that the fields are frequented by immense numbers of crows. ('Travels,' p. 403.)—14. "The satyr." We have shown under ch. xiii. 22, that a kind of wild goat is probably intended by this word. Now, according to Burckhardt ('Travels in Syria,' p. 405), "In all the Wadys south of the Modjeb, and particularly in those of Modjeb and El Ahsa, large herds of mountain goats, called by the Arabs Beden, are met with. They pasture in flocks of forty or fifty together; great numbers are killed by the people of Kerek and Tayfie, who hold their flesh in high estimation. As it is difficult to get a shot at them, the hunters hide themselves among the reeds on the banks of streams, where the animals resort in the evening to drink." This statement places them in the mountains of Moab and Edom; and we learn also from Ehrenberg (from whom our engraving is copied) that they abound in the peninsula of Sinai.—13. "Dragons." This is to be understood as a general term for reptiles, serpents, &c. infesting ruined sites. Volney ('Travels,' vol. ii. p. 289), speaking from the information of the Arabs, of thirty ruined towns south-east of the Dead Sea—that is, in the land of Edom—says, "The Arabs sometimes use them to fold their cattle in; but in general avoid them, on account of the enormous scorpions with which they swarm." Shaw also represents the land of Edom, and the desert of which it now forms part, as abounding with various lizards and vipers which are dangerous and troublesome.—13. "Owls...vultures," &c. In the unpublished travels of Captains Irby and Mangles, the following observation occurs in their account of Petra. "The screaming of eagles, hawks, and owls, who were soaring above our heads, in considerable numbers, seemingly annoyed at any one approaching their lonely habitation, added much to the singularity of the scene." Laborde, who remained longer on the spot than any previous traveller, also takes notice of the hootings of the screech-owl at night.

SCREECH OWL (Bubo maximus).

Verse 7. "The parched ground shall become a pool."—The original of the word rendered "parched ground" is שָׂרָב serab, which is the very word used in Arabic to express what we, after the French, usually know by the name of the mirage. This phenomenon, which is most common in sandy, desert countries, is an illusive appearance of pools and lakes of water, in places where water is most needed and least likely to occur. This phenomenon, which is produced by the reflection of salient objects on the oblique rays of the sun, refracted by the heat of the burning soil, offers so perfect a delusion in all its circumstances, that the most forewarned and experienced travellers are deceived by it, as are even the natives of the deserts, when not sufficiently acquainted with the locality in which it appears, to be aware that no water actually exists. No one can imagine, without actual experience, the delight and eager expectation, followed by the most intense and bitter disappointment, which the appearance of the serab often occasions to travelling parties, particularly when the supply of water which they are obliged to carry with them upon their camels is nearly or quite exhausted.

"Still the same burning sun! no cloud in heaven!

The hot air quivers, and the sultry mist

Floats o'er the desert, with a show

Of distant waters mocking their distress."—SOUTHEY.

The following reference to this delusion occurs in the Koran:—"But as to the unbelievers, their works are like a vapour in a plain, which the thirsty traveller thinketh to be water, until, when he cometh thereto, he findeth it to be nothing." Major Skinner, in his recently published 'Journey Overland to India,' describes the appearance of the serab in that very desert, between Palestine and the Euphrates, which probably supplied the images which the prophet employs: "About noon the most perfect deception that can be conceived exhilarated our spirits and promised an early resting place. We had observed a slight mirage two or three times before, but this day it surpassed all I have ever fancied. Although aware that these appearances have often led people astray, I could not bring myself to believe that this was unreal. The Arabs were doubtful, and said that, as we had found water yesterday, it was not improbable that we should find some to-day. The seeming lake was broken in several parts by little islands of sand that gave strength to the delusion. The dromedaries of the sheikhs at length reached its borders, and appeared to us to have commenced to ford, as they advanced and became more surrounded by the vapour. I thought they had got into deep water, and moved with greater caution. In passing over the sand banks their figures were reflected in the water. So convinced was Mr. Calmun of its reality that he dismounted and walked towards the deepest part of it, which was on the right hand. He followed the deceitful lake for a long time, and to our sight was strolling on its bank, his shadow stretching to a great length beyond. There was not a breath of wind; it was a sultry day, and such a one as would have added dreadfully to the disappointment if we had been at any time without water."

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1 Sennacherib invadeth Judah. 4 Rabshakeh, sent by Sennacherib, by blasphemous persuasions soliciteth the people to revolt. 22 His words are told to Hezekiah.

Now 'it came to pass in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah, that Sennacherib king of Assyria came up against all the defenced cities of Judah, and took them.

2 And the king of Assyria sent Rabshakeh from Lachish to Jerusalem unto king Hezekiah with a great army. And he stood by the conduit of the upper pool in the highway of the fuller's field.

3 Then came forth unto him Eliakim, Hilkiab's son, which was over the house, and Shebna the 'scribe, and Joah, Asaph's son, the recorder.

4 ¶ And Rabshakeh said unto them, Say ye now to Hezekiah, Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, What confidence is this wherein thou trustest?

5 I say, sayest thou, (but they are but 'vain words,) 'I have counsel and strength for war: now on whom dost thou trust, that thou rebellest against me?

6 Lo, thou trustest in the 'staff of this broken reed, on Egypt; whereon if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh king of Egypt to all that trust in him.

7 But if thou say to me, We trust in the LORD our God: is it not he, whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and said to Judah and to Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar?

8 Now therefore give 'pledges, I pray thee, to my master the king of Assyria, and I will give thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.

9 How then wilt thou turn away the face of one captain of the least of my master's servants, and put thy trust on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

10 And am I now come up without the LORD against this land to destroy it? the LORD said unto me, Go up against this land, and destroy it.

11 ¶ Then said Eliakim and Shebna and Joah unto Rabshakeh, Speak, I pray thee, unto thy servants in the Syrian language; for we understand it: and speak not to us in the Jews' language, in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

12 ¶ But Rabshakeh said, Hath my master sent me to thy master and to thee to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men that sit upon the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piss with you?

13 Then Rabshakeh stood, and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and said, Hear ye the words of the great king, the king of Assyria.

14 Thus saith the king, Let not Hezekiah deceive you: for he shall not be able to deliver you.

15 Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the LORD, saying, The LORD will surely deliver us: this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

16 Hearken not to Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria, 'Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me: and eat ye every one of his vine, and every one of his fig tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his own cistern;

17 Until I come and take you away to a land like your own land, a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards.

18 Beware lest Hezekiah persuade you, saying, The LORD will deliver us. Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

19 Where are the gods of Hamath and Arphad? where are the gods of Sepharvaim? and have they delivered Samaria out of my hand?

20 Who are they among all the gods of these lands, that have delivered their land out of my hand, that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?

21 But they held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

22 ¶ Then came Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah, that was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah, the son of Asaph, the recorder, to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rabshakeh.

CHAP. XXXVI.—This chapter corresponds to 2 Kings xviii., where notes on its contents have been given. The leading circumstances are also related in 2 Chron. xxxii.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

1 Hezekiah mourning sendeth to Isaiah to pray for them. 6 Isaiah comforteth them. 8 Sennacherib, going to encounter Tirhakah, sendeth a blasphemous letter to Hezekiah. 14 Hezekiah's prayer. 21 Isaiah's prophecy of the pride and destruction of Sennacherib, and the good of Zion. 36 An angel slayeth the Assyrians. 37 Sennacherib is slain at Nineveh by his own sons.

AND 'it came to pass, when king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the house of the LORD.

2 And he sent Eliakim, who was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and the elders of the priests covered with sackcloth, unto Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz.

3 And they said unto him, Thus saith Hezekiah, This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and of 'blasphemy: for the children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth.

4 It may be the LORD thy God will hear the words of Rabshakeh, whom the king of Assyria his master hath sent to reproach the living God, and will reprove the words which the LORD thy God hath heard: wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that is 'left.

5 So the servants of king Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

6 ¶ And Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say unto your master, Thus saith the LORD, Be not afraid of the words that thou hast heard, wherewith the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

7 Behold, I will 'send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 ¶ So Rabshakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish.

9 And he heard say concerning Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, He is come forth to make war with thee. And when he heard it, he sent messengers to Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, Let not thy God, in whom thou trustest, deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be given into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 Behold, thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands by destroying them utterly; and shalt thou be delivered?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed, as Gozan, and Haran, and Rezeph, and the children of Eden which were in Telassar?

13 Where is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arphad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivah?

14 ¶ And Hezekiah received the letter from the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah went up unto the house of the LORD, and spread it before the LORD.

15 And Hezekiah prayed unto the LORD, saying,

16 O LORD of hosts, God of Israel, that dwellest between the cherubims, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth: thou hast made heaven and earth.

17 Incline thine ear, O LORD, and hear; open thine eyes, O LORD, and see: and hear all the words of Sennacherib, which hath sent to reproach the living God.

18 Of a truth, LORD, the kings of Assyria have laid waste all the 'nations, and their countries, 19 And have 'cast their gods into the fire: for they were no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone: therefore they have destroyed them.

20 Now therefore, O LORD our God, save us from his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the LORD, even thou only.

21 ¶ Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent unto Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Whereas thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria:

22 This is the word which the LORD hath spoken concerning him; The virgin, the daughter of Zion, hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee.

23 Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed? and against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against the Holy One of Israel.

24 'By thy servants hast thou reproached the Lord, and hast said, By the multitude of my chariots am I come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon; and I will cut down ⁸the tall cedars thereof, and the choice fir trees thereof: and I will enter into the height of his border, and ⁹the forest of his Carmel.

25 I have digged, and drunk water; and with the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of the ¹⁰besieged places.

26 ¹¹Hast thou not heard long ago, how I have done it; and of ancient times, that I have formed it? now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldest be to lay waste defenced cities into ruinous heaps.

27 Therefore their inhabitants were ¹²of small power, they were dismayed and confounded: they were as the grass of the field, and as the green herb, as the grass on the housetops, and as corn blasted before it be grown up.

28 But I know thy ¹³abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage against me.

29 Because thy rage against me, and thy tumult, is come up into mine ears, therefore will I put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest.

30 And this shall be a sign unto thee, Ye shall eat this year such as groweth of itself; and the second year that which springeth of the same: and in the third year sow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruit thereof.

31 And ¹⁴the remnant that is escaped of the house of Judah shall again take root downward, and bear fruit upward:

32 For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and ¹⁵they that escape out of mount Zion: the ¹⁶zeal of the LORD of hosts shall do this.

33 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the king of Assyria, He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shields, nor cast a bank against it.

34 By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city, saith the LORD.

35 For I will ¹⁷defend this city to save it for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.

36 Then the ¹⁸angel of the LORD went forth, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians a hundred and fourscore and five thousand: and when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.

37 ¶ So Sennacherib king of Assyria departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.

38 And it came to pass, as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch his god, that Adrammelech and Sharezer his sons smote him with the sword; and they escaped into the land of ¹⁹Armenia: and Esar-haddon his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP. XXXVII.—This chapter, being a continuation of the same narrative, corresponds to 2 Kings xix., where some illustrative notes will be found. The same narrative is also more briefly given in 2 Chron. xxxii.

Verse 29. "Put my hook in thy nose."—It has been questioned whether this is to be understood to allude to the complete power which a man has over a fish which he has hooked, or to the Oriental custom of managing some kinds of cattle, as camels, oxen, &c., by means of a bridle attached to a ring run through their noses. The latter alternative is perhaps the most probable.

"Bridle in thy lips."—Men first guided the animals whose services they required, by the voice, and afterwards by means of sticks, employed in the same manner as they still frequently are in directing unbridled asses. The more effective control which the bridle gives was however discovered very early, so that a bridle is mentioned even in the times of the patriarchs (Job xxx. 11). The bridle shown in our woodcut, being copied from Egyptian antiquities, exhibits the most ancient form of which any representation remains, and supersedes the need of particular description. In connection with the present text, it is remarkable to find, from Theodoret, that it was customary to fix a sort of bridle or muzzle of leather on refractory slaves. Ancient history records the similar treatment of freemen when they became prisoners of war. Thus when Cambyes conquered Egypt, the son of the Egyptian monarch, with two thousand other youths of the highest rank, were condemned to death, and were conducted to execution, in procession, with ropes around their necks and bridles in their mouths. (Herodotus, 'Thalia,' xiv.)

36. "The angel of the Lord went forth," &c.—In the note on 2 Kings xix. 35, we promised that we would, in this place, inquire into the agency employed in effecting this stupendous destruction. Boswell, in his 'Life of Dr. Johnson,' states that the manner in which this miracle of avengement was executed, became a subject of conversation between them. The doctor, in his usual forcible manner, said; "We are not to suppose that the angel went about with a sword in his hand stabbing them one by one; but that some powerful natural agent was employed for the purpose, most probably the samiel or simoom." This is the opinion now generally entertained; and it is abundantly sanctioned by the terms in which this destruction had been predicted by the prophet in verse 7: "Behold, I will send a blast upon him." As we have ourselves only felt the mitigated effects of this wind on the skirts of deserts and in the shelter of towns, we cannot from experience speak of the more disastrous effects which it exhibits in the open deserts; but judging from what we observed under the circumstances indicated, and from such information as we collect, we have no doubt that the numerous accomplished travellers of the last century and the one before, as Chardin, Shaw, Niebuhr, Volney, Bruce, Ives, and others, are correct in their united testimony, supported as it is by the consenting evidence of natives accustomed to traverse the deserts. It is necessary to mention this, because some more recent travellers, who, on account of the season or direction of their journeys, had no occasion to experience any other than the milder effects of this wind, have seemed to doubt the destructive power which has been attributed to it. The most complete account of the simoom and its effects is that given by Volney ('Travels,' vol. i. c. 4). That part which describes its effects in the towns we can confirm from our own experience, and the rest is amply corroborated by the testimony of other travellers.

"Travellers have mentioned these winds under the name of poisonous winds; or, more correctly, hot winds of the desert. Such in fact is their quality; and their heat is sometimes so excessive that it is difficult to form an idea of their violence without having experienced it; but it may be compared to the heat of a large oven at the moment of drawing out the bread. When these winds begin to blow, the atmosphere assumes an alarming aspect. The sky, at other times so clear in this climate, becomes dark and heavy; the sun loses its splendour and appears of a violet colour. The air is not cloudy, but grey and thick; and is in fact filled with an extremely subtle dust, that penetrates everywhere. This wind, always light and rapid, is not at first remarkably hot, but increases in heat in proportion as it continues. All animated bodies soon discover it by the change it produces in them. The lungs, which a too rarefied air no longer expands, are contracted and become painful. Respiration is short and difficult, the skin parched and dry, and the body consumed by an internal heat. In vain is recourse had to large draughts of water; nothing can restore perspiration. In vain is coolness sought for; all bodies in which it is usual to find it deceive the hand that touches them. Marble, iron, water—notwithstanding the sun no longer appears—are hot. The streets are deserted, and the dead silence of night reigns everywhere. The inhabitants of towns and villages shut themselves up in their houses—and those of the desert in their tents, or in pits they dig in the earth—where they wait the termination of this destructive heat. It usually lasts three days, but if it exceeds that time it becomes insupportable. Woe to the traveller whom this wind surprises remote from shelter! he must suffer all its dreadful consequences, which sometimes are mortal.—The danger is most imminent when it blows in squalls, for then the rapidity of the wind increases the heat to such a degree as to cause sudden death. This death is a real suffocation; the lungs being empty are convulsed, the circulation disordered, and the whole mass of blood driven by the heat towards the head and breast; whence that hæmorrhage at the nose and mouth which happens after death. This wind is especially fatal to persons of a plethoric habit, and those in whom fatigue has destroyed the tone of the muscles and vessels. The corpse remains a long time warm, swells, turns blue, and is easily separated; all of which are signs of that putrid fermentation which takes place when the humours become stagnant. These accidents are to be avoided by stopping the nose and mouth with handkerchiefs; an efficacious method is also that practised by the camels, who bury their noses in the sand, and keep them there till the squall is over. Another quality of this wind is its extreme aridity, which is such, that water sprinkled upon the floor evaporates in a few minutes. By this extreme dryness it withers and strips all the plants; and by exhaling too suddenly the emanations from animal bodies, crisps the skin, closes the pores, and causes that feverish heat which is the invariable effect of suppressed perspiration."

To this we may add, that the time and duration of the wind vary in different places. It seldom lasts long, but often returns at frequent intervals during two or three days; which is, we suppose, what Volney means by saying that it usually lasts three days. It is also to be observed that the currents often move in streams of no great breadth; so that some persons, at a small distance from each other, may escape, and others, at a few miles distant from each other, may be exposed to different simooms. It was therefore peculiarly suited as an instrument in the Lord's hands for destroying the Assyrians without affecting the Jews in the neighbourhood. After this explanation it will seem reasonable to conclude that the "blast" which the Lord sent, according to the prediction of his prophet, was the simoom, which his almighty power directed over the Assyrian host; although that host seems to have lain in a district where the simoom has seldom much power, and by night, when it seldom blows.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

¹ Hezekiah, having received a message of death, by prayer hath his life lengthened. ⁸ The sun goeth ten degrees backward, for a sign of that promise. ⁹ His song of thanksgiving.

IN those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz came unto him, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, 'Set thine house in order: for thou shalt die, and not live.

² Then Hezekiah turned his face toward the wall, and prayed unto the LORD, ³ And said, Remember now, O LORD, I beseech thee, how I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah wept 'sore.

⁴ ¶ Then came the word of the LORD to Isaiah, saying,

⁵ Go, and say to Hezekiah, Thus saith the LORD, the God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears: behold, I will add unto thy days fifteen years.

⁶ And I will deliver thee and this city out of the hand of the king of Assyria: and I will defend this city.

⁷ And this shall be a sign unto thee from the LORD, that the LORD will do this thing that he hath spoken;

⁸ Behold, I will bring again the shadow of the degrees, which is gone down in the 'sun dial of Ahaz, ten degrees backward. So the sun returned ten degrees, by which degrees it was gone down.

⁹ ¶ The writing of Hezekiah king of Judah, when he had been sick, and was recovered of his sickness:

¹⁰ I said in the cutting off of my days, I shall go to the gates of the grave: I am deprived of the residue of my years.

¹¹ I said, I shall not see the LORD, even the LORD, in the land of the living: I shall behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world.

¹² Mine age is departed, and is removed from me as a shepherd's tent: I have cut off like a weaver my life: he will cut me off 'with pining sickness: from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me.

¹³ I reckoned till morning, that, as a lion, so will he break all my bones; from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me.

¹⁴ Like a crane or a swallow, so did I chatter: I did mourn as a dove: mine eyes fail with looking upward: O LORD, I am oppressed; 'undertake for me.

¹⁵ What shall I say? he hath both spoken unto me, and himself hath done it: I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul.

¹⁶ O Lord, by these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit: so wilt thou recover me, and make me to live.

¹⁷ Behold, 'for peace I had great bitterness: but 'thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption: for thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back.

¹⁸ For the grave cannot praise thee, death can not celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth.

¹⁹ The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day: the father to the children shall make known thy truth.

²⁰ The LORD was ready to save me: therefore we will sing my songs to the stringed instruments all the days of our life in the house of the LORD.

²¹ For Isaiah had said, Let them take a lump of figs, and lay it for a plaister upon the boil, and he shall recover.

²² Hezekiah also had said, What is the sign that I shall go up to the house of the LORD?

CHAP. XXXVIII.—The circumstances related in this chapter are also recorded in the eleven first verses of 2 Kings xx.; but in the present account we have Hezekiah's song of thanksgiving, which is wanting there.

Verse 1. "Hezekiah sick."—In verse 21, it is mentioned that he had a boil. "The disease with which Hezekiah was afflicted has been variously supposed to be a pleurisy, the plague, the elephantiasis, and the quinsy. But Dr. Mead says ('Medica Sacra,' pp. 20-33) that the malady was a fever, which terminated in an abscess; and for promoting its supuration a cataplasm of figs was admirably adapted. The case of Hezekiah, however, indicates not only the limited knowledge of the Jewish physicians at that time, but also that though God can cure by a miracle, yet he also gives sagacity to discover and apply the most natural remedies." (Horne's 'Introduction,' vol. iii. p. 508.)

The application of figs to various kinds of boils and wounds is at this day very usual in the East. Mr. Madden, in his account of the medical practice in Turkey ('Travels,' vol. i. p. 64), says, "A common application to wounds is a roasted fig. I believe old women prescribe it for gum-boils in England; and the practice is as old as Isaiah, who ordered a mass of figs to Hezekiah's boil." While however it may seem that the prophet was directed to make that application which was in itself the most proper, and which experience of its good effects has since brought into general use, it is clear that the king would have died if the Lord had not interposed and given his blessing to the means which He directed to be employed. The transaction is thus far removed from a common matter of medical treatment; and still more so when we recollect that his recovery was positively affirmed, and the future duration of his life fixed and declared at the same moment.

12. "Removed... as a shepherd's tent."—This is a figurative way of expressing what the Scripture also expresses by another figure—that "we have here no abiding city" (Heb. xi. 10). There the transitory nature of human life is expressed by the contrast between a shepherd's tent—which is frequently taken up and carried quite away—leaving in its former place no trace of habitation, and a built and established city—"a city that hath foundations."

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1 Merodach-baladan, sending to visit Hezekiah because of the wonder, hath notice of his treasures. 3 Isaiah, understanding thereof, foretelleth the Babylonian captivity.

At that time Merodach-baladan, the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a present to Hezekiah: for he had heard that he had been sick, and was recovered.

2 And Hezekiah was glad of them, and shewed them the house of his ²precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his ³'armour, and all that was found in his treasures: there was nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah shewed them not.

3 ¶ Then came Isaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him, What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, They are come from a far country unto me, even from Babylon.

4 Then said he, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, All that is in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not shewed them.

5 Then said Isaiah to Hezekiah, Hear the word of the LORD of hosts:

6 Behold, the days come, that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store until this day; shall be carried to Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the LORD.

7 And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

8 Then said Hezekiah to Isaiah, Good is the word of the LORD which thou hast spoken. He said moreover, For there shall be peace and truth in my days.

4 Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made 'straight, and the rough places 'plain:

5 And the glory of the LORD shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it.

6 The voice said, Cry. And he said, What shall I cry? 'All flesh is grass, and all the goodness thereof is as the flower of the field:

7 The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: because the spirit of the LORD bloweth upon it: surely the people is grass.

8 The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: but the 'word of our God shall stand for ever.

9 ¶ 'O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; 'O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God!

10 Behold, the Lord God will come 'with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him: behold, 'his reward is with him, and 'his work before him.

11 He shall 'feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those 'that are with young.

12 ¶ Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with the span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in 'a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance?

13 'Who hath directed the Spirit of the LORD, or being 'his counsellor hath taught him?

14 With whom took he counsel, and who 'instructed him, and taught him in the path of judgment, and taught him knowledge, and shewed to him the way of 'understanding?

15 Behold, the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance: behold, he taketh up the isles as a very little thing.

16 And Lebanon is not sufficient to burn, nor the beasts thereof sufficient for a burnt offering.

17 All nations before him are as 'nothing; and they are counted to him less than nothing, and vanity.

18 ¶ To whom then will ye 'liken God? or what likeness will ye compare unto him?

19 The workman melteth a graven image, and the goldsmith spreadeth it over with gold, and casteth silver chains.

20 He that 'is so impoverished that he hath no oblation chooseth a tree that will not rot; he seeketh unto him a cunning workman to prepare a graven image, that shall not be moved.

21 Have ye not known? have ye not heard? hath it not been told you from the beginning? have ye not understood from the foundations of the earth?

22 'It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers; that 'stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in:

23 That bringeth the 'princes to nothing; he maketh the judges of the earth as vanity.

24 Yea, they shall not be planted; yea, they shall not be sown: yea, their stock shall not take root in the earth: and he shall also blow upon them, and they shall wither, and the whirlwind shall take them away as stubble.

25 To whom then will ye liken me, or shall I be equal? saith the Holy One.

Verse 3. "Prepare ye the way," &c.—Lowth is probably correct in understanding that the idea is taken from the practice of Eastern monarchs, who, whenever they entered upon an expedition or took a journey, especially through desert and unpractised countries, sent harbingers before them to prepare all things for their passage, and pioneers to open the passes, to level the ways, and to remove all impediments. Such things were done in military marches, as appears from the account which Diodorus gives of the march of Semiramis; and, in like manner, when the Great Mogul made his royal progresses, a very large body of men was sent on before, to prepare for the imperial cavalcade a way through the wilderness, by removing every obstruction and creating every facility which their numbers rendered possible.

11. "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd."—An illustration of this beautiful verse will be found in the note to Gen. xxxi. 17, 18.

15. "Counted as the small dust of the balance."—That is, of as small account as the minute particles of unconsidered dust, which rest upon the balance without any sensible effect upon its equilibrium.

"A very little thing."—The word (דָּק dak) is elsewhere applied as an epithet to denote something exceedingly small and fine, sometimes to express the finest and smallest dust, such as the wind drives before it. Jerome thinks that the prophet had in view that exceedingly fine and almost imperceptible dust which in the East penetrates to every thing, however well compacted, and the extremely minute and subtle character of which can now only be comprehended by those who have travelled in the hot and dry regions of the East. He compares what he thus supposes to be intended, to the atoms of Epicurus and Democritus; and, following his general idea, some modern translators render the original word by "an atom" in the present text.

22. "That stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in."—In the first clause, the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic must have read differently, for they have "as a vault;" but, following our present copies, the word seems to express a very fine cloth; or, as some think, a delicate skin. Lowth has "as a thin veil." The ancients generally believed that the sky was solid, and extended like a vault over the earth. That this was also the opinion of the Hebrews is clear from many passages of Scripture. Those other passages which describe it as extended like a veil, spread out like a tent, or rolled up like a volume, do not affect this view, since they are obviously designed to illustrate by comparison the facility with which the highest demonstrations of Almighty power are afforded, whether in creating or destroying, rather than to state the condition or structure of the firmament, regarded in itself. See more fully, on every part of this subject, in Calmet's excellent 'Dissertation sur le Système du Monde, selon les Anciens Hébreux.'"

CHAPTER XLI.

1 God expostulateth with his people, about his mercies to the church, 10 about his promises, 21 and about the vanity of idols.

KEEP silence before me, O islands; and let the people renew their strength: let them come near; then let them speak: let us come near together to judgment.

2 Who raised up ¹the righteous man from the east, called him to his foot, gave the nations before him, and made him rule over kings? he gave them as the dust to his sword, and as driven stubble to his bow.

3 He pursued them, and passed ²safely;

5 The isles saw it, and feared; the ends of the earth were afraid, drew near, and came.

6 They helped every one his neighbour; and every one said to his brother, 'Be of good courage.

8 But thou, Israel, art my servant, Jacob whom I have ⁸chosen, the seed of Abraham my ⁹friend.

9 Thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the chief men thereof, and said unto thee, Thou art my servant; I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away.

10 ¶ Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness.

11 Behold, all they that were incensed against thee shall be ¹⁰ashamed and confounded: they shall be as nothing; and ¹¹they that strive with thee shall perish.

12 Thou shalt seek them, and shalt not find them, even ¹²them that contended with thee: ¹³they that war against thee shall be as nothing, and as a thing of nought.

13 For I the LORD thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee.

14 Fear not, thou worm Jacob, and ye ¹⁴men of Israel; I will help thee, saith the LORD, and thy redeemer, the Holy One of Israel.

15 Behold, I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument having ¹⁵teeth: thou shalt thresh the mountains, and beat them small, and shalt make the hills as chaff.

16 Thou shalt fan them, and the wind shall carry them away, and the whirlwind shall scatter them: and thou shalt rejoice in the LORD, and shalt glory in the Holy One of Israel.

17 When the poor and needy seek water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, I the LORD will hear them, I the God of Israel will not forsake them.

18 I will open ¹⁶rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys: I will make the ¹⁷wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water.

19 I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, the shittah tree, and the myrtle, and the oil tree; I will set in the desert the fir tree, and the pine, and the box tree together:

20 That they may see, and know, and consider, and understand together, that the hand of the LORD hath done this, and the Holy One of Israel hath created it.

21 ¹⁸Produce your cause, saith the LORD; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob.

22 Let them bring them forth, and shew us what shall happen: let them shew the former things, what they be, that we may ¹⁹consider them, and know the latter end of them; or declare us things for to come.

23 Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods: yea, do good, or do evil, that we may be dismayed, and behold it together.

24 Behold, ye are ²⁰of nothing, and your work ²¹of nought: an abomination is he that chooseth you.

25 I have raised up one from the north, and he shall come: from the rising of the sun shall he call upon my name: and he shall come upon princes as upon mortar, and as the potter treadeth clay.

26 Who hath declared from the beginning, that we may know? and beforetime, that we may say, He is righteous? yea, there is none that sheweth, yea, there is none that declareth, yea, there is none that heareth your words.

27 The first shall say to Zion, Behold, behold them: and I will give to Jerusalem one that bringeth good tidings.

28 For I beheld, and there was no man; even among them, and there was no counsellor, that, when I asked of them, could ²²answer a word.

Verse 19. "Shittah-tree."—This was the tree that furnished the shittim-wood, so frequently mentioned in the books of Moses as that which was employed in the works of the tabernacle. (See the note on Exod. xxv. 5.)

"Myrtle."—(see Zech. i. 8)—"Oil-tree." The olive-tree is probably intended, as understood elsewhere by our translators. Thus they have "olive-tree" in the text of 1 Kings vi. 23, and "trees of oil" in the margin.

"Fir-tree."—In common language we generally understand the Pinus abies as meant when the term "fir-tree" is used; but perhaps the Pinus laricio may be here intended, since it is a noble tree rising to the elevation of 150 feet, which renders its wood peculiarly adapted for masts, where length and straightness are required. The green of its majestic foliage would form a delightful contrast to the uncomfortable waste around it.

"The pine."—The word תִּדְהָר tidhar, only occurs here and in ch. lx. 13. Its meaning is very uncertain, and the translations fluctuate between the plane, beech, pine, cypress, larch, and elm. The last has the support of Aquila, Symmachus, and Jerome; and, with such authority, is perhaps the most probable alternative, where all is uncertain. However, if we will have a pine-tree, we might conjecture that allusion is here made to the silver fir (Pinus picea), the presence of which is by the Tartars considered as a sure indication of good springs of water. The leaves are solitary and flat, after the manner of the common fir. The tree is remarkable for its even and upright stature, silvery bark, and horizontal branches. The coloured bractæ or flower-leaves with which the cone is garnished form a beautiful characteristic of the species.

"Box-tree."—This word also (תַּאֲשֻׁר teashshur) occurs only here and in ch. lx. 1; and it is not very clear what tree is intended. Translations are divided between cedar, fir, poplar, box-tree, &c. The last, which our translation has chosen, is perhaps the best supported alternative. The box (Buxus sempervirens) is favourably known in our gardens and pleasure-grounds; and when it attains considerable magnitude, and flourishes in a congenial soil, the beauty and freshness of this evergreen claim great admiration. The wood is much esteemed for the even and compact nature of its texture, which render it of singular value in the arts, it being thus most fitted for wood engraving. The box belongs to the euphorbaceous tribe, which is characterized by a fruit composed of three lesser ones combined together, as one may observe in the spurge, or any other species of euphorbium.

CHAPTER XLII.

1 The office of Christ, graced with meekness and constancy.
5 God's promise unto him. 10 An exhortation to praise God for his Gospel. 17 He reproveth the people of incredulity.

BEHOLD 'my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul 'delighteth; I have put my spirit upon him: he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.

2 He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street.

3 A bruised reed shall he not break, and the 'smoking flax shall he not 'quench: he shall bring forth judgment unto truth.

4 He shall not fail nor be 'discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law.

5 ¶ Thus saith God the LORD, he that created the heavens, and stretched them out; he that spread forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it; he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein:

6 I the LORD have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for 'a light of the Gentiles;

7 To open the blind eyes, to 'bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in 'darkness out of the prison house.

8 I am the LORD: that is my name: and my 'glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images.

9 Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them.

10 Sing unto the LORD a new song, and his praise from the end of the earth, ye that go down to the sea, and ¹⁰all that is therein; the isles, and the inhabitants thereof.

11 Let the wilderness and the cities thereof lift up their voice, the villages that Kedar doth inhabit: let the inhabitants of the rock sing, let them shout from the top of the mountains.

12 Let them give glory unto the LORD, and declare his praise in the islands.

13 The LORD shall go forth as a mighty man, he shall stir up jealousy like a man of war: he shall cry, yea, roar; he shall ¹¹prevail against his enemies.

14 I have long time holden my peace; I have been still, and refrained myself: now will I cry like a travailing woman; I will destroy and ¹²devour at once.

15 I will make waste mountains and hills, and dry up all their herbs; and I will make the rivers islands, and I will dry up the pools.

16 And I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known: I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things ¹³straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them.

17 ¶ They shall be ¹⁴turned back, they shall be greatly ashamed, that trust in graven images, that say to the molten images, Ye are our gods.

18 Hear, ye deaf; and look, ye blind, that ye may see.

19 Who is blind, but my servant? or deaf, as my messenger that I sent? who is blind as he that is perfect, and blind as the LORD's servant?

20 Seeing many things, ¹⁵but thou observest not; opening the ears, but he heareth not.

21 The LORD is well pleased for his righteousness' sake; he will magnify the law, and make ¹⁶*it* honourable.

22 But this is a people robbed and spoiled; ¹⁷*they are* all of them snared in holes, and they are hid in prison houses: they are for a prey, and none delivereth; for ¹⁸a spoil, and none saith, Restore.

23 Who among you will give ear to this? who will hearken and hear ¹⁹for the time to come?

24 Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? did not the LORD, he against whom we have sinned? for they would not walk in his ways, neither were they obedient unto his law.

25 Therefore he hath poured upon him the fury of his anger, and the strength of battle: and it hath set him on fire round about, yet he knew not; and it burned him, yet he laid it not to heart.

Verse 11. "The villages that Kedar doth inhabit."—The Kedarenes were a tribe of Arabs; and as some tribes of Arabian and Tartar nomades live in tents, and wander from one place to another during one part of the year, and remain fixed in villages during the other,—perhaps, as Lowth supposes, the people which the prophet had in view were of this class, and the "villages," those collections of huts or cottages in which they at times resided. It does not however appear very clear to us that such an explanation is quite necessary; for it is very possible that the term rendered "village" may apply as well to a collection of tents as to one of huts or cottages, by the same analogy which occasions a tent to be sometimes called a house, both by the ancient Hebrews and the modern Arabians.

CHAPTER XLIII.

1 The Lord comforteth the church with his promises. 8 He appealeth to the people for witness of his omnipotency. 14 He foretelleth them the destruction of Babylon, 18 and his wonderful deliverance of his people. 22 He reproveth the people as inexcusable.

BUT now thus saith the LORD that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Israel, Fear not: for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine.

2 When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee.

3 For I am the LORD thy God, the Holy One of Israel, thy Saviour: I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee.

4 Since thou wast precious in my sight, thou hast been honourable, and I have loved thee: therefore will I give men for thee, and people for thy ¹life.

5 ²Fear not: for I am with thee: I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west;

6 I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth;

7 Even every one that is called by my name: for I have created him for my glory, I have formed him; yea, I have made him.

8 ¶ Bring forth the blind people that have eyes, and the deaf that have ears.

9 Let all the nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled: ³who among them can declare this, and shew us former things? let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be justified: or let them hear, and say, It is truth.

10 Ye are my witnesses, saith the LORD, and my servant whom I have chosen: that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I am he: ⁴'before me there was ⁵no God formed, neither shall there be after me.

11 I, even I, ⁶*am* the LORD; and beside me there is no saviour.

12 I have declared, and have saved, and I have shewed, when there was no strange god among you: therefore ye are my witnesses, saith the LORD, that I am God.

13 Yea, before the day was I am he; and there is none that can deliver out of my hand: I will work, and who shall ⁷let it?

14 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, your redeemer, the Holy One of Israel; For your sake I have sent to Babylon, and have brought down all their ⁸nobles, and the Chaldeans, whose cry is in the ships.

15 I am the LORD, your Holy One, the creator of Israel, your King.

16 Thus saith the LORD, which ¹⁰maketh

a way in the sea, and a ¹¹path in the mighty waters;

17 Which bringeth forth the chariot and horse, the army and the power; they shall lie down together, they shall not rise: they are extinct, they are quenched as tow.

18 ¶ Remember ye not the former things, neither consider the things of old.

19 Behold, I will do a ¹²new thing; now it shall spring forth; shall ye not know it? I will even make a way in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert.

20 The beast of the field shall honour me, the dragons and the ¹³¹⁴owls: because I give waters in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert, to give drink to my people, my chosen.

21 ¹⁵This people have I formed for myself; they shall shew forth my praise.

22 ¶ But thou hast not called upon me, O Jacob; but thou hast been weary of me, O Israel.

23 Thou hast not brought me the ¹⁶small cattle of thy burnt offerings; neither hast thou honoured me with thy sacrifices. I have not caused thee to serve with an offering, nor wearied thee with incense.

24 Thou hast bought me no sweet cane with money, neither hast thou ¹⁷filled me with the fat of thy sacrifices: but thou hast made me to serve with thy sins, thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities.

25 I, even I, am he that ¹⁸blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins.

26 Put me in remembrance: let us plead together: declare thou, that thou mayest be justified.

27 Thy first father hath sinned, and thy ¹⁹teachers have transgressed against me.

28 Therefore I have profaned the ²⁰princes of the sanctuary, and have given Jacob to the curse, and Israel to reproaches.

Verse 2. "When thou walkest through the fire," &c.—This allusion, as well as that in verse 25 of the preceding chapter, is probably derived from the dangers attending the Eastern custom of setting the dry herbage on fire in the ground. Any one who has had occasion to observe an extensive conflagration of this nature, extending, as it were, in a flood of flame, will feel a great propriety and beauty in the association of dangers arising from it with those from passing through water. Some imagine that there is a reference to the punishment of burning alive; but this appears to us less probable than the other explanation.

24. "Bought me no sweet cane."—From this it would appear to have been used in the temple service, and that doubtless as incense. It was probably the Calamus aromaticus; concerning which, see the note on Jer. vi. 20.

CHAPTER XLIV.

¹ God comforteth the church with his promises. ⁷ The vanity of idols, 9 and folly of idol makers. ²¹ He exhorteth to praise God for his redemption and omnipotency.

YET now hear, 'O Jacob my servant; and Israel, whom I have chosen:

2 Thus saith the LORD that made thee, and formed thee from the womb, which will help thee; Fear not, O Jacob, my servant; and thou, Jesurun, whom I have chosen.

3 For I will ²pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring:

4 And they shall spring up as among the grass, as willows by the water courses.

5 One shall say, I am the LORD's; and another shall call himself by the name of Jacob; and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the LORD, and surname himself by the name of Israel.

6 Thus saith the LORD the King of Israel, and his redeemer the LORD of hosts; ³I am the first, and I am the last; and beside me there is no God.

7 And who, as I, shall call, and shall declare it, and set it in order for me, since I appointed the ancient people? and the things that are coming, and shall come, let them shew unto them.

8 Fear ye not, neither be afraid: have not I told thee from that time, and have declared it? ye are even my witnesses. Is there a God beside me? yea, 'there is no ⁵God; I know not any.

9 ¶ They that make a graven image are all of them vanity; and their ⁶delectable things shall not profit; and they are their own witnesses; ⁷they see not, nor know; that they may be ashamed.

10 Who hath formed a god, or molten a graven image that is profitable for nothing?

11 Behold, all his fellows shall be ⁸ashamed: and the workmen, they are of men: let them all be gathered together, let them stand up; yet they shall fear, and they shall be ashamed together.

12 ⁹The smith ¹⁰with the tongs both worketh in the coals, and fashioneth it with hammers, and worketh it with the strength of his arms: yea, he is hungry, and his strength faileth: he drinketh no water, and is faint.

13 The carpenter stretcheth out his rule; he marketh it out with a line; he fitteth it with planes, and he marketh it out with the compass, and maketh it after the figure of a man, according to the beauty of a man; that it may remain in the house.

14 He heweth him down cedars, and taketh the cypress and the oak, which he ¹¹strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest: he planteth an ash, and the rain doth nourish it.

15 Then shall it be for a man to burn: for he will take thereof, and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it, and baketh bread; yea, he maketh a god, and worshippeth it; he maketh it a graven image, and falleth down thereto.

16 He burneth part thereof in the fire; with part thereof he eateth flesh; he roasteth roast, and is satisfied: yea, he warmeth himself, and saith, Aha, I am warm, I have seen the fire:

17 And the residue thereof he maketh a god, even his graven image: he falleth down unto it, and worshippeth it, and prayeth unto it, and saith, Deliver me; for thou art my god.

19 And none ¹⁹considereth in his heart, neither is there knowledge nor understanding to say, I have burned part of it in the fire; yea, also I have baked bread upon the coals thereof; I have roasted flesh, and eaten it: and shall I make the residue thereof an abomination? shall I fall down to ¹⁹the stock of a tree?

20 He feedeth on ashes: a deceived heart hath turned him aside, that he cannot deliver his soul, nor say, Is there not a lie in my right hand?

21 ¶ Remember these, O Jacob and Israel; for thou art my servant: I have formed thee; thou art my servant: O Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten of me.

22 I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins: return unto me; for I have redeemed thee.

23 Sing, O ye heavens; for the LORD hath done it: shout, ye lower parts of the earth: break forth into singing, ye mountains, O forest, and every tree therein: for the LORD hath redeemed Jacob, and glorified himself in Israel.

24 Thus saith the LORD, thy redeemer, and he that formed thee from the womb, I am the LORD that maketh all things; that stretcheth forth the heavens alone; that spreadeth abroad the earth by myself;

25 That frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish;

26 That confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers; that saith to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be inhabited; and to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built, and I will raise up the ¹⁵decayed places thereof:

27 That saith to the deep, Be dry, and I will dry up thy rivers:

Verse 5. "Another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord."—The Septuagint has, "shall write upon his hand, I belong to God." That an inscription upon the hand, not with the hand, is intended, is sufficiently clear. Lowth, and Boothroyd after him, render, "Shall inscribe his hand to Jehovah." From the translation of the Seventy, it appears that they understood it as Lowth does, as an allusion to the marks rendered indelible by fire, or by staining, upon the hand or some other part of the body, signifying the state or character of the person, and to whom he belonged: the slave was marked with the name of his master; the soldier with that of his commander; the idolater with the name or ensign of his god. It seems that the early Christians imitated this practice; for Procopius in his note on this text says, that "Many marked their wrists or their arms with the sign of the cross, or with the name of Christ." See the notes on Levit. xix. 28, and ch. xlix. 15.

12. "He is hungry...he drinketh no water."—The Rev. J. Williams states that when the South Sea Islanders made an idol, they strictly abstained from food: and although they might be, and were sometimes, three days about the work, no water, and, he believes, no other food, passed their lips all the time. This fact would convey a satisfactory elucidation of an allusion not easily otherwise explained.

ANCIENT EGYPTIAN SCULPTORS, BLOCKING OUT STONE FOR THE FORMATION OF AN IDOL.

13. "The carpenter stretcheth out his rule."—The particulars in this description of idol-making are more minute than we elsewhere find in the Bible. In many respects it seems so strikingly to agree with the process followed by the Egyptian idol-makers, that we have given three of the numerous representations in Rosellini, copied from Egyptian paintings, and add the following particulars, for which we are indebted principally to Mr. Wilkinson's 'Materia Hieroglyphica,' printed at Malta, 1828, 1830.

When the Egyptians intended to sculpture, they began by smoothing the surface, and drawing a number of parallel lines at equal distances; at right angles to which were traced other lines forming a series of squares. The size of these squares depended upon the size of the figures to be formed; but whatever was their size, nineteen parts or spaces were always allowed for the height of the human figure. If smaller figures were to be introduced, intermediate lines were then ruled which formed smaller squares, and consequently, a figure of smaller proportion. May not this explain the marking out with a line and with a compass, mentioned in our text?

After the first outlines of the figure had been traced, it was inspected by a master, who wrote in various parts of it, in hieratic, such observations and instructions as he wished to be attended to by the artists in the progress of the work, and which of course were obliterated as the sculptures were formed. These were the work of other artists, distinct from the draughtsmen; and the remainder was completed by others, who added the colour, gilding, or polish, and who introduced the minute parts of dress and ornament. To this it may not be amiss to add that the sculptors were not only guided by certain artistical rules, but in the representations of their gods, were bound to observe certain forms prescribed by the priests, and which it was accounted sacrilege to transgress. The more effectually to accomplish this object, and preclude the intervention of anything forbidden by the laws in subjects accounted sacred, the profession of an artist was not allowed to be exercised by any common or illiterate person. Indeed, Mr. Wilkinson has shown the probability that they were, in some sort, attached to, and formed a branch of the priesthood.

CARVING AN IDOL.

These observations apply primarily to working in stone; whereas the text appears to speak of wooden images, overlaid, it would seem, with metal. But the same essential rules appear to have been observed, in the main, whatever were the materials with which the idols were formed. The paintings of Egypt afford very ample illustration of working in wood and the operations of carpenters, from the felling of the tree, and the sawing up of the wood, to the fabrication of various articles of domestic and warlike use. The cuts we have selected, for the purpose of suggesting some ideas as to the instruments and mode of operation among ancient carpenters, appear to exhibit various stages in the fabrication of spears or pikes. Of these the first cut seems the most interesting. As compared with others, it shows that when a beam was to be cut into planks or poles, it was set on end and sawed down perpendicularly, not horizontally over a sawpit as by our sawyers.

EGYPTIANS CUTTING PLANKS OR POLES.

The preceding cut shows the beam as bound with ropes to keep the parts together in the progress of the operation. This is sawed nearly down to the uppermost rope, and the workman is applying another below before he takes that one off. This is shown by a saw which remains in the wood nearly down to the first rope. The other man, who, from a common neglect of perspective in Egyptian paintings, seems to be near and chopping at this same beam, is really, as Rosellini observes, engaged in a distinct and independent operation—that of cleaving the piece of wood on which he has planted one of his feet. This figure is chiefly interesting as showing that a hatchet, very similar to our own, was in common use at this very early date. The other two cuts, in page 291, derive any interest they possess from their displaying the manner in which the artisans worked, and some of the tools which they employed. It does not appear that a workbench was ever used; but that, as at present in the East, the workmen either pursued their labours squatted upon the ground, or else, when necessary, stood up and rested the article on which they were employed, upon a block or any other convenience that offered.

14. "Cypress."—The word תרזה thirzah, occurs here only; and it seems very uncertain what particular tree is intended: but the Arabic root, as well as the purpose to which it was applied, would suggest that it furnished a strong and durable wood. Besides the cypress, the holly, pine, thuja orientalis, and others, have been suggested as alternatives. As we see no certainty in this matter, it may suffice to say that the cypress tree seems to have as strong a claim as any other that has been named.

“Ash.”—The word אֲשׁ oren, which our translators have rendered “ash,” is by the Seventy translated κίρκος, or larch, which seems to be the tree intended. It is a fast growing tree, and its wood is scented like the cedar of our black lead pencils. The rapidity of its growth would naturally recommend itself to one who wished to have a god hewn out of the tree, which he had himself planted; while the freedom with which any kind of deal burns when kindled rendered it very proper for fuel. The larch, or Pinus larix, has its delicate leaves in bundles, after the manner of the cedar of Lebanon, the cones are of an elegant form, while every feature has something light about it, though the trees attain a large size. It is a native of warm climates; and produces a kind of Venice turpentine, and the inner portion of the wood gives forth a gum which so nearly resembles gum Arabic, that the experienced can scarcely tell the difference.

24. “Thus saith the Lord,” &c.—Here may be considered to begin that magnificent and most definite prophecy which foretells the future existence, the very name, and the principal acts of Cyrus—particularly his victories; the taking of Babylon by him, with various details, fulfilled to the very letter, of the circumstances attending that grand historical event; and the restoration of the captive Hebrews to their own land, under the decree of that renowned conqueror. On that part which relates to the fall of Babylon we shall touch but slightly at present, reserving our remarks for the parallel prophecies in Jeremiah.

28. “Cyrus, He is my shepherd.”—It is rather remarkable that Xenophon reports Cyrus as comparing kings, and himself in particular, to shepherds; observing that there was great resemblance between the offices of a shepherd and a king; for as the good shepherd was bound to provide for the welfare and comfort of his flock, so was a king bound to make men and cities happy. The comparison of a king to a shepherd was however anciently very common, both in and out of Scripture.

The peculiarly distinguished manner in which Cyrus is mentioned in Scripture—named and addressed so long before his birth—called by the Lord his shepherd and his anointed—and promised His high protection and assistance—are circumstances which have led to much investigation concerning the character of this great king. Some think that all these terms apply to his character as an appointed agent in fulfilling the Lord’s will, altogether distinct from any considerations connected with his personal or religious character. Others, however, are of opinion that there was that in Cyrus, which, in connection with his appointment to perform the Divine will among the nations, gives a peculiar propriety and force to the terms which are applied to him. Dr. Hales, after reviewing his character and history, concludes, strongly, that “He lived the life and died the death of the righteous;” and thinks that he was a believer in one God—that is, God as known to the patriarchs, and who had been worshipped by his venerable ancestors, the Pischdadians. Our own opinion may be briefly stated. It is repeatedly said, in the next chapter, to Cyrus, “Thou hast not known me;” and then, coupled with that convincing evidence which the precise predictions offer, we see the unity of God strongly and impressively asserted, together with some distinct allusion to those very errors which were entertained by the people to whom Cyrus belonged. Now in that remarkable passage, Ezra i. 1, 2, Cyrus says—“Jehovah, the God of Heaven, hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth, and he hath charged me to build him a house at Jerusalem.” Here he intimates his acquaintance with this very prophecy; for where else is he charged to build the Lord a house at Jerusalem? and he distinctly acknowledges that the God who so charged him was the God of Heaven, and that He it was who, as He also had here promised, had given him "all the kingdoms of the earth." It would therefore seem, that in arriving at the conviction that in his great and successful undertakings he had been but performing the duty to which he was by name appointed and ordained, he was enabled also to perceive and acknowledge the truth of that sublime declaration which immediately follows, and is equally addressed to himself: "I am the LORD, and there is none else, there is no God beside me: I girded thee, though thou hast not known me." (Chap. xlv. 5.) In estimating the effect which this prophecy, regarded as a whole, was calculated to produce upon a mind which appears to have been eminently candid and open to conviction, we must recollect that Daniel, who probably directed his attention to this grand prediction, would not fail to enforce and explain those declarations concerning God which it contains.

CHAPTER XLV.

1 God calleth Cyrus for his church's sake. 5 By his omnipotency he challengeth obedience. 20 He convinceth the idols of vanity by his saving power.

THUS saith the LORD to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I 'have holden, to subdue nations before him; and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut;

2 I will go before thee, and make the crooked places straight: I will break in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron:

3 And I will give thee the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places, that thou mayest know that I, the LORD, which call thee by thy name, am the God of Israel.

4 For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name: I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known me.

5 ¶ I 'am the LORD, and there is none else, there is no God beside me: I girded thee, though thou hast not known me:

6 That they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the west, that there is none beside me. I am the LORD, and there is none else.

7 I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the LORD do all these things.

8 Drop down, ye heavens, from above, and let the skies pour down righteousness: let the earth open, and let them bring forth salvation, and let righteousness spring up together; I the LORD have created it.

9 Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker! Let the potsherd strive with the potsherds of the earth. 'Shall the clay say to him that fashioneth it, What makest thou? or thy work, He hath no hands?

10 Woe unto him that saith unto his father, What begettest thou? or to the woman, What hast thou brought forth?

11 Thus saith the LORD, the Holy One of Israel, and his Maker, Ask me of things to come concerning my sons, and concerning the work of my hands command ye me.

12 I have made the earth, and created man upon it: I, even my hands, have stretched out the heavens, and all their host have I commanded.

13 I have raised him up in righteousness, and I will 'direct all his ways: he shall 'build my city, and he shall let go my captives, not for price nor reward, saith the LORD of hosts.

14 Thus saith the LORD, The labour of Egypt, and merchandise of Ethiopia and of the Sabeans, men of stature, shall come over unto thee, and they shall be thine: they shall come after thee; in chains they shall come over, and they shall fall down unto thee, they shall make supplication unto thee, saying, Surely God is in thee; and there is none else, there is no God.

15 Verily thou art a God that hidest thyself, O God of Israel, the Saviour.

16 They shall be ashamed, and also confounded, all of them: they shall go to confusion together that are 'makers of idols.

17 'But Israel shall be saved in the LORD with an everlasting salvation: ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded world without end.

18 For thus saith the LORD that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited: I am the LORD; and there is none else.

19 I have not spoken in 'secret, in a dark place of the earth: I said not unto the seed of Jacob, Seek ye me in vain: I the LORD speak righteousness, I declare things that are right.

20 ¶ Assemble yourselves and come; draw near together, ye that are escaped of the nations: they have no knowledge that set up the wood of their graven image, and pray unto a god that cannot save.

21 Tell ye, and bring them near; yea, let them take counsel together: who hath declared this from ancient time? who hath told it from that time? have not I the LORD? and there is no God else beside me; a just God and a Saviour; there is none beside me.

22 Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else.

23 I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, That unto me every 'knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear.

24 'Surely, shall one say, in the LORD have I 'righteousness and strength: even to him shall men come; and all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed.

Verse 1. "To subdue nations before him."—We have, in the last note to the preceding chapter, seen the fulfilment of this prediction acknowledged by Cyrus himself. Besides his native subjects, the nations which Cyrus subdued, and over which he reigned, were the Cilicians, Syrians, Paphlagonians, Cappadocians, Phrygians, Lydians, Carians, Phœnicians, Arabians (Egyptians?), Babylonians, Assyrians, Bactrians, Sæcæ, and Maryandines. Xenophon describes his empire as extending from the Mediterranean and Egypt to the Indian Ocean, and from Ethiopia to the Euxine Sea, and conveys a physical idea of its extent by observing that the extremities were difficult to inhabit from opposite causes—some from excess of heat, and others from excess of cold; some from a scarcity of water, and others from too great abundance. (Cyrop. l. viii.)

2. "The gates of brass."—The gates of Babylon are probably meant. Of these, as Herodotus informs us, there were one hundred in the walls, all of brass, with posts and upper lintels of the same. The smaller gates also, within the city, opening from the several streets to the river, were of the same metal. (Clio, 180, 181.)

3. "I will give thee the treasures of darkness."—What is meant by "treasures of darkness" is explained in the varied phrase in the next clause, that is, treasures hid in dark and secret places, according to the custom of the East. The wealth obtained by Cyrus in his different conquests was immense, according to the accounts of ancient authors. There was Cræsus, king of Lydia, the wealthiest monarch of that age, and whose riches supplied a proverb which remains to this day: all his vast treasures was transferred to Cyrus. (Cyrop. l. vii. 2.) The wealth obtained by the Persian king, by his victories in Asia, is noticed by Pliny, who estimates it at 34,000 pounds weight of gold, exclusive of vessels and other manufactures of that metal; with 500,000 talents of silver, and the cup of Semiramis, which weighed fifteen talents. Brerewood estimates the value of the gold and silver in this account at 126,224,000*l.* sterling. Cyrus, however, did not hoard up what he obtained, but distributed it freely among his friends and followers.

7. "I form the light and create darkness." &c.—This is a very remarkable verse; and probably, as Kimchi and other Rabbins, and after them our Prideaux, Warburton, and others conclude, it is aimed against the grand and radical doctrinal error of the religion in which Cyrus was brought up, and which he must himself have relinquished before he could acknowledge that Jehovah was the God of Heaven. This was the ancient Magian doctrine which endeavoured to account for the existence of evil in the world by the notion of two first causes, or gods, the first Light, or the good god, who was the author of all good; and the other Darkness, the evil god, the author of all evil; and that the continual conflict of these two principles accounted for the mixture of good and evil which was everywhere to be seen. To those who entertained this belief it must have been a new and striking thing to be told that there was but one God, who created both light and darkness, and to whose supreme control good and evil were equally subject. Prideaux thinks that this text may have given to Zoroaster, who was evidently acquainted with the Hebrew Scriptures, the first idea of the alteration which he afterwards made in this matter. He reduced the two beings in question to the rank of subordinate angels, respectively directors of good and evil; and acknowledging that over them there was ONE Supreme Being, independent and self-existing from all eternity.

CHAPTER XLVI.

1 The idols of Babylon could not save themselves. 3 God saveth his people to the end. 5 Idols are not comparable to God for power, 12 or present salvation.

4 And even to your old age I am he ; and even to hoar hairs will I carry you : I have made, and I will bear ; even I will carry, and will deliver you.

5 ¶ ²To whom will ye liken me, and make me equal, and compare me, that we may be like ?

6 They lavish gold out of the bag, and weigh silver in the balance, and hire a goldsmith ; and he maketh it a god : they fall down, yea, they worship.

7 They bear him upon the shoulder, they carry him, and set him in his place, and he standeth ; from his place shall he not remove : yea, one shall cry unto him, yet can he not answer, nor save him out of his trouble.

8 Remember this, and shew yourselves

12 ¶ Hearken unto me, ye stouthearted, that are far from righteousness :

13 I bring near my righteousness ; it shall not be far off, and my salvation shall not tarry : and I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory.

² Chap. 40. 18, 25.

³ Psal. 33. 11. Prov. 19. 21, and 21. 30. Heb. 6. 17.

⁴ Heb. the man of my counsel.

Verse 1. "Bel."—Bel (בֵּל) seems to be a contraction of Baal (בַּעַל), which we have described as the common title of the principal idol in different countries of Western Asia. It is well known to have been the name of the principal idol of the Babylonians.

"Nebo."—This often occurs as the name of a town ; but nowhere else as that of an idol. Nothing is known concerning it ; but if Baal was a personification of the sun, it is possible that Nebo may have been the moon. The word seems to come from נָבָא nibba, "to deliver an oracle," or "to prophesy ;" and hence would mean "an oracle ;" and may thus, as Calmet suggests ('Commentaire Littéral,' in loc.), be no more than another name for Bel himself, or a characterising epithet applied to him ; it being not unusual to repeat the same thing, in the same verse, in equivalent terms. The word Nebo, or rather Nabo, often occurs in forming the names of different Babylonian princes—as Nabo-nassar, Nabo-polassar, Nebuchadonosor, Nabo-nidas, and others.

2. "They stoop, they bow down together."—Some think that this refers to the idols of Babylon being carried in procession, as captives, by the Persians ; while others apply it to the demolition of the same idols, and to the carrying away as spoil the precious metal of which they were composed. We feel indisposed to acquiesce in either explanation. Compare verse 7, where the idols are described quite clearly as being carried about upon the shoulders of the worshippers themselves. See also the apocryphal book of Baruch, vi. 4, 26. We rather think the same thing to be intended here, namely, the carrying of the images in procession, on stated occasions, with great pomp and ceremony, as is and always has been usual among idolaters. This explanation gives great force and clearness to what follows. After describing the Babylonian idols as borne about with labour and difficulty by their worshippers, the beautiful contrast in verse 4 comes in with a force which is not allowed to it by any other interpretation :—"Even to hoar hairs will I carry you," &c.

With regard to the "stooping," and "bowing down," we may observe that it was the fashion in such processions for those who carried the idol to affect to appear faint, weary, bowed down, to convey the idea that they were crushed, humbled, oppressed, beneath the weight of the majesty which they bore upon their shoulders.

11. "Calling a ravenous bird from the east."—This doubtless refers to Cyrus, whose military activity and promptitude it probably describes. In connection with this text, it is a remarkable fact, of which we are informed by Xenophon (Cyrop. vii.), that the royal ensign of Cyrus was a golden eagle upon the top of a long lance ; and which the subsequent kings of Persia retained as their standard, to the time of the historian. Its appearance denoted the presence of the king in the army. The original of our text rather describes a swift than a rapacious bird. It might be rendered "eagle," and is so rendered by Lowth. Cyrus was celebrated for the celerity of his movements. Plutarch says that Cyrus had an aquiline nose ; which has given Grotius occasion to conjecture that he is here called an eagle on that account !

CHAPTER XLVII.

1 God's judgment upon Babylon and Chaldea, 6 for their unmercifulness, 7 pride, 10 and overboldness, 11 shall be irresistible.

COME down, and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon, sit on the ground : there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans : for thou shalt no more be called tender and delicate.

2 Take the millstones, and grind meal: uncover thy locks, make bare the leg, uncover the thigh, pass over the rivers.

3 Thy nakedness shall be uncovered, yea, thy shame shall be seen: I will take vengeance, and I will not meet thee as a man.

4 As for our redeemer, the LORD of hosts is his name, the Holy One of Israel.

5 Sit thou silent, and get thee into darkness, O daughter of the Chaldeans: for thou shalt no more be called, The lady of kingdoms.

6 ¶ I was wroth with my people, I have polluted mine inheritance, and given them into thine hand: thou didst shew them no mercy; upon the ancient hast thou very heavily laid thy yoke.

7 ¶ And thou saidst, I shall be 'a lady for ever: so that thou didst not lay these things to thy heart, neither didst remember the latter end of it.

8 Therefore hear now this, thou that art given to pleasures, that dwellest carelessly, that sayest in thine heart, I am, and none else beside me; I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the loss of children:

9 But these two things shall come to thee in a moment in one day, the loss of children, and widowhood: they shall come upon thee in their perfection for the multitude of thy sorceries, and for the great abundance of thine enchantments.

10 ¶ For thou hast trusted in thy wickedness: thou hast said, None seeth me. Thy wisdom and thy knowledge, it hath perverted thee; and thou hast said in thine heart, I am, and none else beside me.

11 ¶ Therefore shall evil come upon thee; thou shalt not know 'from whence it riseth: and mischief shall fall upon thee; thou shalt not be able to 'put it off: and desolation shall come upon thee suddenly, which thou shalt not know.

12 Stand now with thine enchantments, and with the multitude of thy sorceries, wherein thou hast laboured from thy youth; if so be thou shalt be able to profit, if so be thou mayest prevail.

13 Thou art wearied in the multitude of thy counsels. Let now the 'astrologers, the stargazers, 'the monthly prognosticators, stand up, and save thee from these things that shall come upon thee.

14 Behold, they shall be as stubble; the fire shall burn them: they shall not deliver 'themselves from the power of the flame: there shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it.

15 Thus shall they be unto thee with whom thou hast laboured, even thy merchants, from thy youth: they shall wander every one to his quarter; none shall save thee.

Verse 1. "Come down, and sit in the dust."—See the note on chap. iii. 26.

2. "Take the millstones, and grind meal."—This strikingly describes a degraded and enslaved condition. The daily labour of grinding corn with the hand-mill invariably devolves upon females in the East, and forms perhaps the most laborious and harassing of their many heavy duties. The work is done by female slaves, when the family has any. The condition involved in this denunciation may be estimated by the following extract from Homer:

"A woman next, then lab'ring at the mill
Hard by, where all his num'rous mills he kept,
Gave him the sign propitious from within.
Twelve damsels toil'd to turn them, day by day,
Meal grinding, some of barley, some of wheat,
Marrow of man. The rest (their portion ground)
All slept; one only from her task as yet
Ceased not, for she was feeblest of them all;
She rested on her mill, and thus pronounced. . .
Jove, Father, Governor of Heaven and Earth! . . .
O grant the prayer

Of a poor bondswoman! Appoint their feast
This day the last, that in Ulysses' house
The suitors shall enjoy, for whom I drudge,
Grinding, to weariness of heart and limb,
Meal for their use."—COWPER.

"Uncover thy locks."—This is a still deeper degradation. The head is the seat of female modesty in the East; and no woman allows her head to be seen bare. Great as is their care to conceal their faces, it is really far more important in their estimation to keep the head concealed. It is of more consequence with them to hide the head than the face, and the face more than any other part of the person. In our travelling experience we saw the faces of very many women; but never the bare head of any, except one—a female servant, whose face we were in the constant habit of seeing, and whom we accidentally surprised while dressing her hair. The perfect consternation, and deep sense of humiliation, which she expressed on that occasion, could not be easily forgotten, and furnished a most striking illustration of the present text.

13. "The astrologers," &c.—The ancient Chaldeans were famous for their addiction to that delusive science which professed to read the destiny of man by observing the situation of the stars at a particular moment, and their then relative bearings to and distances from each other. Indeed it was usually said that this art originated in Chaldea, whence it was popularly known as the Chaldaic science. Cicero says that the Chaldeans, inhabiting vast plains, whence they had a full view of the heavens on every side, were the first who observed the course of the stars, and the first who taught mankind the effects which were thought to be owing to them. Of their observations they made a science, whereby they pretended to be able to foretel to every one what was to befall him, and what fate was ordained him from his birth. (De Divin. l. i.) Some assign the invention to the Egyptians; but the evidence seems to preponderate on the side of the Chaldeans. It is however quite certain that the astrological arts were practised in both countries from the most ancient times. In this respect the existing Orientals do not yield to their ancestors, there being scarcely any contingency or circumstances of life concerning which astrologers or astrological tables are not consulted.

"Monthly prognosticators."—Those probably who for every year marked out the events which, as they pretended, were to occur in each month of that year, like our own almanack-makers until lately, and some of them even now. Such things were ancient and Oriental.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

1 God, to convince the people of their foreknown obstinacy, revealed his prophecies. 9 He saveth them for his own sake. 12 He exhorteth them to obedience, because of his power and providence. 16 He lamenteth their backwardness. 20 He powerfully delivereth his out of Babylon.

HEAR ye this, O house of Jacob, which are called by the name of Israel, and are come forth out of the waters of Judah, which swear by the name of the LORD, and make mention of the God of Israel, but not in truth, nor in righteousness.

2 For they call themselves of the holy city, and stay themselves upon the God of Israel; The LORD of hosts is his name.

3 I have declared the former things from the beginning; and they went forth out of my mouth, and I shewed them; I did them suddenly, and they came to pass.

4 Because I knew that thou art 'obstinate, and thy neck is an iron sinew, and thy brow brass;

5 I have even from the beginning declared it to thee; before it came to pass I shewed it thee: lest thou shouldest say, Mine idol hath done them, and my graven image, and my molten image, hath commanded them.

6 Thou hast heard, see all this; and will not ye declare it? I have shewed thee new things from this time, even hidden things, and thou didst not know them.

7 They are created now, and not from the beginning; even before the day when thou heardest them not; lest thou shouldest say, Behold, I knew them.

8 Yea, thou heardest not; yea, thou knewest not; yea, from that time that thine ear was not opened: for I knew that thou wouldest deal very treacherously, and wast called a transgressor from the womb.

9 ¶ For my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and for my praise will I refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off.

10 Behold, I have refined thee, but not 'with silver; I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction.

11 For mine own sake, even for mine own sake, will I do it: for how should my name be polluted? and 'I will not give my glory unto another.

12 ¶ Hearken unto me, O Jacob and Israel, my called; I am he; I am the 'first, I also am the last.

13 Mine hand also hath laid the foundation of the earth, and 'my right hand hath spanned the heavens: when I call unto them, they stand up together.

14 All ye, assemble yourselves, and hear; which among them hath declared these things? The LORD hath loved him: he will do his pleasure on Babylon, and his arm shall be on the Chaldeans.

15 I, even I, have spoken; yea, I have called him: I have brought him, and he shall make his way prosperous.

16 ¶ Come ye near unto me, hear ye this; I have not spoken in secret from the beginning; from the time that it was, there am I: and now the Lord God, and his Spirit, hath sent me.

17 Thus saith the LORD, thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel; I am the LORD thy God which teacheth thee to profit, which leadeth thee by the way that thou shouldest go.

as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea :

19 Thy seed also had been as the sand, and the offspring of thy bowels like the gravel thereof; his name should not have been cut off nor destroyed from before me.

20 ¶ Go ye forth of Babylon, flee ye from the Chaldeans, with a voice of singing declare ye, tell this, utter it even to the end of the earth; say ye, The LORD hath 'redeemed his servant Jacob.

21 And they thirsted not when he led them through the deserts: he 'caused the waters to flow out of the rock for them: he clave the rock also, and the waters gushed out.

Verse 14. "The Lord hath loved him."—Lowth translates more clearly, "He, whom JEHOVAH hath loved, will execute his will on Babylon." This is a very remarkable expression as applied to Cyrus: that the Lord not only promised and gave him success in his warlike undertakings, and calls him his shepherd, and his anointed, but declares that he loved him, seems to establish beyond question that this great king did in the end arrive at the knowledge of that true God who had holden his right hand to subdue nations before him. And indeed, although it is declared in chap. xlv. 4, 5, that Cyrus had not known the God who surnamed him and girded him, is it not, in verse 3 of the same chapter, predicted that he should at last come to that knowledge? "That thou mayest know, that I the LORD, which call thee by thy name, am the God of Israel."

CHAPTER XLIX.

1 Christ, being sent to the Jews, complaineth of them. 5 He is sent to the Gentiles with gracious promises. 13 God's love is perpetual to his church. 18 The ample restoration of the church. 24 The powerful deliverance out of captivity.

LISTEN, O isles, unto me; and hearken, ye people, from far; The LORD hath called me from the womb; from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name.

2 And he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword; in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me, and made me a polished shaft; in his quiver hath he hid me;

3 And said unto me, Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified.

4 Then I said, I have laboured in vain, I have spent my strength for nought, and in vain: yet surely my judgment is with the LORD, and 'my work with my God.

5 ¶ And now, saith the LORD that formed me from the womb to be his servant, to bring Jacob again to him, "Though Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious in the eyes of the LORD, and my God shall be my strength.

6 And he said, 'It is a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the 'pre-served of Israel: I will also give thee for a 'light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth.

7 Thus saith the LORD, the Redeemer of Israel, and his Holy One, 'to him whom man despiseth, to him whom the nation abhorreth, to a servant of rulers, Kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship, because of the LORD that is faithful, and the Holy One of Israel, and he shall choose thee.

8 Thus saith the LORD, 'In an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee: and I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to 'establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages;

9 That thou mayest say 'to the prisoners, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, Shew yourselves. They shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all high places.

10 They shall not 'hunger nor thirst; neither shall the heat nor sun smite them: for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them.

¹⁰ Rev. 7. 16.

11 And I will make all my mountains a way, and my highways shall be exalted.

12 Behold, these shall come from far: and, lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim.

13 ¶ Sing, O heavens; and be joyful, O earth; and break forth into singing, O mountains: for the LORD hath comforted his people, and will have mercy upon his afflicted.

14 But Zion said, The LORD hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me.

15 Can a woman forget her sucking child, ¹¹that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee.

16 Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me.

17 Thy children shall make haste; thy destroyers and they that made thee waste shall go forth of thee.

18 ¶ ¹²Lift up thine eyes round about, and behold: all these gather themselves together, and come to thee. As I live, saith the LORD, thou shalt surely clothe thee with them all, as with an ornament, and bind them on thee, as a bride doeth.

19 For thy waste and thy desolate places, and the land of thy destruction, shall even now be too narrow by reason of the inhabitants, and they that swallowed thee up shall be far away.

20 The children which thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the other, shall say again in thine ears, The place is too strait for me: give place to me that I may dwell.

21 Then shalt thou say in thine heart, Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate, a captive, and removing to and fro? and who hath brought up these? Behold, I was left alone; these, where had they been?

22 Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their ¹³arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders.

23 And kings shall be thy ¹⁴nursing fathers, and their ¹⁵queens thy nursing mothers: they shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and ¹⁶lick up the dust of thy feet; and thou shalt know that I am the LORD: for they shall not be ashamed that wait for me.

24 ¶ Shall the prey be taken from the mighty, or ¹⁷the lawful captive delivered?

25 But thus saith the LORD, Even the ¹⁸captives of the mighty shall be taken away, and the prey of the terrible shall be delivered: for I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, and I will save thy children.

26 And I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; and they shall be drunken with their own ¹⁹blood, as with ²⁰sweet wine: and all flesh shall know that I the LORD am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the mighty One of Jacob.

Verse 9. "Their pastures shall be in all high places."—A fine yelak, which comprehends good pasturage and plenty of water, is held in great estimation by the Eelauts [of Persia]; and they carry their flocks to the highest part of the mountains, where these blessings may be found in abundance. This perhaps gives fresh force to the promises made by the prophet Isaiah to the Gentiles." (Morier, vol. ii. p. 120.)

12. "The land of Sinim."—It is perhaps impossible to determine what land this is. Commentators, ancient and modern, are much perplexed on the subject, as is indicated by their proposing almost every ancient district or town which began with the syllable Sin, or Syn. The Septuagint and Arabic understand it to mean Persia. The Targum and Vulgate have, "The land of the south," in which dwelt the Sinites, and where lay the desert of Sin, and the mountains of Sinai. Others think Egypt is meant, and that the name is from a principal place or district therein, as the town of Sin, or Pelusium, called by Ezekiel (xxx. 15) "the strength of Egypt;" or else the district of Syene, on the southern border of that country. Not to multiply alternatives, we only add, that even the opinion of Manasseh-ben-Israel, that China is denoted, has found some advocates.

16. "I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands."—This seems to allude to a custom, illustrated in former notes, of impressing indelible figures of memorial or ornament upon the hands and arms. In the present instance it is important to observe that it was and is customary to impress some memorial mark of a place accounted holy, that the marked person may ever have that place in remembrance before him, and that others may know with certainty that he has been there. The marks of Jerusalem are impressed at this day upon the pilgrims who visit it; and form to them, in distant places, tokens of honour and distinction. Maundrell has described the process with his usual accuracy. After having mentioned the ceremonies of Good Friday at Jerusalem, he says, "The next morning nothing extraordinary passed, which gave the pilgrims leisure to have their arms marked with the usual ensigns of Jerusalem. The artists who undertake the operation do it in this manner. They have stamps, in wood, of any figure that you desire; which they first print off upon your arm with powder of charcoal; then taking two very fine needles, tied close together, and dipping them often, like a pen, in certain ink, compounded, as I was informed, of gunpowder and ox-gall, they make with them small punctures all along the lines of the figure which they have printed, and then washing the part in wine, conclude the work. These punctures they make with great quickness and dexterity, and with scarce any smart, seldom piercing so deep as to draw blood." ('Journey,' p. 75. Edit. 1707.) It was very possibly a custom among the Jews who resided at a distance from Jerusalem to have some mark of it impressed upon their hands or arms, in token of their attachment to it. The Septuagint seems to understand that a plan or figure of the city is to be understood; but it suffices to suppose that it was a monogram, or some other emblem or conventional symbol.

22. "Carried upon their shoulders."—In Western Asia and Egypt, young children of both sexes are not carried in the arms, but sit astride upon the left shoulder of the parent, whose head they grasp to maintain their position. It would fill an English mother with alarm to see them carried along in this elevated station, and without any care to prevent them from falling; but the little creatures scarcely ever do fall, and appear perfectly at ease in their place; or, when any occasion for alarm arises, they only testify it by clinging the more sturdily to the head of their bearer. Sometimes, for a short distance, they are carried on the hip; and, for a longer distance, at the back. Young infants, unable to sit, are of course carried in the arms. We may observe here, that children in the East seem generally to be much sooner able to take care of themselves than in England, and their physical faculties and powers to be earlier developed. This may be partly the effect of climate, together with the great difference in the early treatment of children.

* CHAPTER L.

1 Christ sheweth that the dereliction of the Jews is not to be imputed to him, by his ability to save, 5 by his obedience in that work, 7 and by his confidence in that assistance. 10 An exhortation to trust in God, and not in ourselves.

9 Behold, the Lord God will help me; who is he that shall condemn me? lo, they all shall wax old as a garment; the moth shall eat them up.

Verse 1. "Which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you?"—This alludes to the custom, explained on former occasions, under which children or slaves were transferred or sold to creditors, in payment of the debts of the parent or master.

CHAPTER LI.

¹ An exhortation, after the pattern of Abraham, to trust in Christ, 3 by reason of his comfortable promises, 4 of his righteous salvation, 7 and man's mortality. 9 Christ by his sanctified arm defendeth his from the fear of man. 17 He bewaileth the afflictions of Jerusalem, 21 and promiseth deliverance.

HEARKEN to me, ye that follow after righteousness, ye that seek the LORD: look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged.

2 Look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bare you: for I called him alone, and blessed him, and increased him.

3 For the LORD shall comfort Zion: he will comfort all her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the LORD; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody.

4 ¶ Hearken unto me, my people; and give ear unto me, O my nation: for a law shall proceed from me, and I will make my judgment to rest for a light of the people.

5 My righteousness is near; my salvation is gone forth, and mine arms shall judge the people; the isles shall wait upon me, and on mine arm shall they trust.

6 Lift up your eyes to the heavens, and look upon the earth beneath: for ¹the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner: but my salvation shall be for ever, and my righteousness shall not be abolished.

7 ¶ Hearken unto me, ye that know righteousness, the people ²in whose heart is my law; ³fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings.

8 For the moth shall eat them up like a garment, and the worm shall eat them like wool: but my righteousness shall be for ever, and my salvation from generation to generation.

9 ¶ Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the LORD; awake, as in the ancient days, in the generations of old. Art thou not it that hath cut Rahab, and wounded the ⁴dragon?

10 Art thou not it which hath ⁵dried the sea, the waters of the great deep; that hath made the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over?

11 Therefore ⁶the redeemed of the LORD shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their head: they shall obtain gladness and joy; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away.

12 I, even I, am he that comforteth you: who art thou, that thou shouldest be afraid ⁷of a man that shall die, and of the son of man which shall be made ⁸as grass;

13 And forgettest the LORD thy maker, that hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth; and hast feared continually every day because of the fury of the oppressor, as if he ⁹were ready to destroy? and where is the fury of the oppressor?

14 The captive exile hasteneth that he may be loosed, and that he should not die in the pit, nor that his bread should fail.

15 But I am the LORD thy God, that ¹⁰divided the sea, whose waves roared: The LORD of hosts is his name.

16 And I have put my words ¹¹in thy mouth, and I have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art my people.

17 ¶ ¹²Awake, awake, stand up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the LORD the cup of his fury; thou hast drunken the dregs of the cup of trembling, and wrung them out.

18 There is none to guide her among all the sons whom she hath brought forth; neither is there any that taketh her by the hand of all the sons that she hath brought up.

19 ¹³These two things ¹⁴are come unto thee; who shall be sorry for thee? desolation, and ¹⁵destruction, and the famine, and the sword: by whom shall I comfort thee?

20 Thy sons have fainted, they lie at the head of all the streets, as a wild bull in a net: they are full of the fury of the LORD, the rebuke of thy God.

21 ¶ Therefore hear now this, thou afflicted, and drunken, but not with wine :

22 Thus saith thy Lord the Lord, and thy God that pleadeth the cause of his people, Behold, I have taken out of thine hand the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of my fury ; thou shalt no more drink it again :

23 But I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee ; which have said to thy soul, Bow down, that we may go over : and thou hast laid thy body as the ground, and as the street, to them that went over.

Verse 8. "The moth...the worm."—Two species of Tinea or moth, in their larva or maggot state, appear to be here mentioned under the names of WY ash, and DD sas—the one as eating garments, Tinea pellionella, and the other as corroding wool, Tinea sarcitella ; unless we suppose that, after a custom of Hebrew poetry, one and the same are intended by both words. The ravages which these latent marauders commit among the most costly stuffs and the choicest furs, can scarcely be imagined by those who have had no opportunities of observing the effects. Moths so abound in the East as to occasion far greater damage than we are accustomed to witness ; and as the Orientals are in the habit of forming extensive wardrobes, often containing articles of great price and richness, the loss thus produced is the more sensibly felt, and accounts for the frequent allusions in Scripture to the devastations of the moth.

9. "Rahab."—Jerome and the Greek interpreters translate this Pride, or the Proud, instead of giving it as a proper name. It is agreed however that, either way, it is a poetical name for Egypt ; or rather, as some think, for that part of it called the Delta. It is uncertain whether the word is of Egyptian origin, or should be understood with reference to its Hebrew meaning, as above. Bochart thinks the word Rahab or Raab is the same as Rib or Riph, the Egyptian name of the Delta, which was so called from its resemblance to a pear—"Rib" being the name of that fruit. Hence there was, in the middle of the Delta, a nome or district called Athribis—"the heart of the pear."

14. "Die in the pit."—This is clearly an allusion to the custom of detaining prisoners in deep pits or dry cisterns.

20. "Lie at the head of all the streets, as a wild bull in a net."—This seems to us best understood by supposing that the streets of the Hebrew towns, like those of ancient Babylon and of most modern Oriental cities, had gates which were closed at night, and on some occasions of broil and danger. A person then wishing to escape from a street would at the end of it be prevented by the closed gate ; and, supposing him pursued, would be there arrested and hampered, like a wild bull in a net.

23. "As the street to them that went over."—The custom of setting the feet upon the necks of captives, and of trampling them under feet, has already been noticed as the act by which a conqueror expressed his superiority and triumph. A striking modification of this usage, furnishing almost a literal illustration of this text, and that in Ps. lx. 12, "Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads," is furnished by Mr. Lane, in his 'Modern Egyptians,' vol. i. p. 199, in describing an annual ceremony, in which the chief of an order of durweeshes rides over the backs of his disciples, who prostrate themselves on the ground for the purpose. "A considerable number of durweeshes and others (I am sure there were not less than sixty, but I could not count their number) laid themselves down upon the ground, side by side, as close as possible to each other, having their backs upwards, their legs extended, and their arms placed together beneath their foreheads... When the sheykh approached, his horse hesitated for several minutes to step upon the back of the first of the prostrate men ; but, being pulled and urged on behind, he at length stepped upon them ; and then without apparent fear, ambled with a high pace over them all, led by two persons, who ran over the prostrate men, one sometimes treading on the feet, and the other on the heads. Not one of the men thus trampled upon by the horse seemed to be hurt ; but each, the moment that the animal had passed over him, jumped up and followed the sheykh. Each of them received two treads from the horse, one from one of his fore-legs, and a second from a hind leg." It seems probable that this is the relic of an ancient usage, alluded to in Scripture, under which captives were made to lay themselves in this manner upon the ground, while their insulting conquerors rode over them and trampled them under feet, making their bodies "as the street to them that went over."

CHAPTER LII.

¹ Christ persuadeth the church to believe his free redemption, ⁷ to receive the ministers thereof, ⁹ to joy in the power thereof, ¹¹ and to free themselves from bondage. ¹³ Christ's kingdom shall be exalted.

AWAKE, 'awake ; put on thy strength, O Zion ; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city : for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean.

2 Shake thyself from the dust ; arise, and sit down, O Jerusalem : loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion.

3 For thus saith the Lord, Ye have sold yourselves for nought ; and ye shall be redeemed without money.

4 For thus saith the Lord God, My people went down aforetime into 'Egypt to sojourn there ; and the Assyrian oppressed them without cause.

8 Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the LORD shall bring again Zion.

9 ¶ Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the LORD hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem.

10 The LORD hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and ⁵all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God.

11 ¶ 'Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence, touch no unclean thing; go ye out of the midst of her; be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the LORD.

12 For ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight: for the LORD will go before you; and the God of Israel will be your rereward.

13 ¶ Behold, my servant shall ⁶deal prudently, he shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high.

14 As many were astonished at thee; his ⁷visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men:

15 So shall he sprinkle many nations; the kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that ¹⁰which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard shall they consider.

Verse 1. "Put on thy beautiful garments."—The Jews, in common with most other nations, put on their best and richest dresses on occasions of festivity and rejoicing.

7. "How beautiful...are the feet," &c.—It is still usual in the East to describe as beautiful or glorious the feet of him whose presence is attended with, or whose arrival denotes, circumstances of felicity or splendour. When the person is very eminent for rank or holiness, the mention of the feet, rather than any other part of the person, denotes the respect or reverence of the speaker; and then also an epithet of praise or distinction is given to the feet; of which, as the most popular instance, may be mentioned the "golden feet" of the Burmese monarch, forming the title by which he is usually named by his subjects.

15. "Sprinkle many nations."—In the East, when a prince or great man gives a grand entertainment, there are servants who sprinkle with perfumed liquids (as rose-water, &c.) the several guests as they enter. This sprinkling is understood to fit them for the presence of their entertainer, to declare them his guests, and as such to place them under his favour and protection. This supplies a striking illustration, and is probably what the prophet had in view.

CHAPTER LIII.

1 The prophet, complaining of incredulity, excuseth the scandal of the cross, 4 by the benefit of his passion, 10 and the good success thereof.

1 Who hath believed our ²report? and to whom is the arm of the LORD revealed?

2 For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him.

3 'He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief:

and ⁵'we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not.

4 ¶ Surely ⁷he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.

5 But he was ⁸'wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his ¹⁰¹¹stripes we are healed.

CHAP. LIII.—The important prophecy contained in the present chapter refers, without dispute, to the sufferings of Christ. In theological expositions and commentaries it therefore engages a large share of attention. This neither our general plan, nor that special one, with respect to the Prophets, which we stated in the introductory note to this book, requires from us. Indeed, were our plan different, we do not know that we should consider much observation to be required; as it has always appeared to us the grand and beautiful distinction of this invaluable portion of prophetic Scripture, that less than almost any other does it require explanation or remark. It is so clear in all its parts, that “he who runs may read.” All the elucidation it demands may be obtained in the most satisfactory form by comparing the details of the prophecy with those of its fulfilment in the New Testament, as indicated by the marginal references. By this process, the present prophecy has, under God, been eminently instrumental in giving to the wavering all the benefits of established conviction, and in compelling the most prejudiced and sceptical to declare, with Wilmot, Earl of Rochester, that, “In all history, no one but Jesus Christ could be found with whose character the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah could agree.”

Verse 2. “He hath no form nor comeliness...no beauty that we should desire him.”—Compare this with verse 14 of the preceding chapter. A question of some delicacy and interest has been raised, chiefly on this text; being—Whether a disadvantageous personal appearance is to be numbered among the circumstances of humiliation under which Jesus Christ appeared to the world. It may perhaps be proper to notice this subject briefly here, without at present entering into any examination of the traditions which have descended to us on this subject, or inquiring into the claims of the medallions and other representations which have furnished that idea of his venerable and sacred person which painters and sculptors have long been accustomed to convey.

Speaking prophetically of Christ, the Psalmist (xliv. 2) says: “Thou art fairer than the children of men.” As it is clear that this passage does not agree with the present text, it is evident that one of the two must be taken figuratively, or that they refer to different circumstances. Those who think that the description of the Psalmist is to be literally understood, and that, literally taken, it refers to the appearance of Christ in the days of his humiliation, suppose the present text to relate not to his personal aspect, but to the humble circumstances in which his presence was manifested. This conclusion they fortify by observing that the most notorious ancient enemies to the name and religion of Christ, while they invented the most malignant falsehoods concerning his history and character, never say any thing against the dignity of his personal appearance; nor does any such circumstance appear in the Evangelical narratives, or in any of the sometimes minute points of detail concerning him which the New Testament writers furnish. And besides, if such had been the case, it would probably have appeared in the spiteful speeches of the scribes and Pharisees; and would perhaps have been mentioned by the evangelists and apostles, if only to indicate the fulfilment of Isaiah’s prophecy. It is true, on the other hand, that they do not intimate that his person offered any extraordinary beauty; but if an air of majesty and authority, if power and persuasion of speech, be among the perfections of man’s nature, it cannot be doubted that he did possess these, at least, in a supreme degree. The dignity and authority of his presence and words struck awe into the hucksters and money-changers; and although a single person, without arms or civil authority, they forsook the Temple court at his command. See also the incidents recorded in John vii. 44—46, and xviii. 6.

On the other side of the question, it is contended that the whole description of the Psalmist is essentially figurative; and, what is more, does not apply to the humiliation of Christ, but to his after glory; whereas the prophecy of Isaiah is remarkably literal, and does most certainly relate to the days of his affliction; and that therefore this part of it should not be figuratively interpreted, but literally understood. It is allowed that the New Testament has no express intimation of that external grace and beauty which would at once attract the love and regard of men: but it is recollected that Mary Magdalen took him for a gardener after his resurrection; and that the evangelists record the circumstances of his transfiguration in such a manner as to show that his ordinary appearance to them was very different indeed; and that it was then only that he was seen on earth by the privileged few as “the fairest of the children of men.” Moreover, it is unquestionably true that the early Christian fathers, whose testimony is of considerable weight, since the traditions which must have existed on the subject were then most pure and recent, agree in understanding that the humiliation of Christ extended to his personal appearance. Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, Cyril, Tertullian, Augustine, and others, agree in this testimony. At a very early period also we find Celsus stating this circumstance as an argument against the divinity of Christ. But from the time of Jerome and Chrysostom, this older tradition was gradually relinquished, and the opinion came to be almost universally entertained that Christ was distinguished from all mankind by superiority of external appearance. This gave occasion to Abarbanel to argue that Christ could not be the true Messiah, since the Christians believed him to be thus eminent in beauty, whereas Isaiah had prophesied the contrary of the Messiah in the present text, and in verse 14 of the preceding chapter.

The discussion of this question has often involved no small portion of irreverence and indiscretion, calculated to give pain to the sincere and humble-minded Christian. This we have endeavoured carefully to exclude in the view of the leading arguments and reasons which we have now taken. In the question itself, when discreetly and reverently considered, there can be nothing improper or unbecoming, since it is based upon a description given in Scripture, and is essentially an inquiry into the sense in which that description is to be understood. The reader will find a very ample and temperate account of the discussion in Calmet's 'Dissertation sur la Beauté de Jésus Christ,' by which we have been much assisted in the preparation of the statement we have now given.

CHAPTER LIV.

1 The prophet, for the comfort of the Gentiles, prophesieth the amplitude of their church, 4 their safety, 6 their certain deliverance out of affliction, 11 their fair edification, 15 and their sure preservation.

'SING, O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child: for more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife, saith the LORD.

2 Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations: spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes;

3 For thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited.

4 Fear not; for thou shalt not be ashamed: neither be thou confounded; for thou shalt not be put to shame: for thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth, and shalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more.

5 For thy Maker is thine husband; the 'LORD of hosts is his name; and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Israel; The God of the whole earth shall he be called.

6 For the LORD hath called thee as a woman forsaken and grieved in spirit, and a wife of youth, when thou wast refused, saith thy God.

7 For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee.

8 In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the LORD thy Redeemer.

9 For this is as the waters of 'Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth; so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee.

10 For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the LORD that hath mercy on thee.

11 ¶ O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with 'fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires.

12 And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones.

13 And all thy children shall be 'taught of the LORD; and great shall be the peace of thy children.

14 In righteousness shalt thou be established: thou shalt be far from oppression; for thou shalt not fear: and from terror; for it shall not come near thee.

15 Behold, they shall surely gather together, but not by me: whosoever shall gather together against thee shall fall for thy sake.

16 Behold, I have created the smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work; and I have created the waster to destroy.

17 ¶ No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the LORD, and their righteousness is of me, saith the LORD.

Verse 11. "Behold, I will lay thy stones," &c.—As this passage is conformable to the figurative style in which the Orientals express their ideas of the extreme magnificence and splendour of that which they describe, without intending to be literally understood, it is probable that the present passage is to be similarly taken—as affording general images to express that which was or should be surpassingly glorious. However, figures and images are derived from that which actually exists, and which such figures amplify and aggrandize; and in the present, and other such passages, we can with a little attention discover that most of the figures now employed allude, in this manner, to that style in magnificent building and decoration which has always been favoured in the East. In corroboration we may refer generally to what has already been said in the notes on Ps. xlv. 8, and Sol. Song ii. 4.

"With fair colours."—The same word (תֵּבַח tebach), is elsewhere employed to denote the paint with which women coloured their eyes, or colour, or paint in the general sense. Our translation very properly renders the prefixed ל by "with," instead of "in;" and thus it furnishes the intelligible sense that the stones composing the walls, that is, the walls themselves, were painted with fair colours; whereas the "in," as used by Lowth, Gesenius, and others, conveys the rather strange meaning, that the paint was used as a cement for the stones. Lowth has, "I lay thy stones in cement of vermilion;" and Gesenius, "I will lay thy stones in stibium." Understood as in the common version, the passage receives an interesting illustration from the vivid colours, exhibited in various and tasteful patterns, with which the ceilings and panels of some of the tombs of ancient Egypt are painted. If the Hebrews painted the walls and ceilings of their apartments with various colours, it was most probably in the same style; and we have therefore caused to be copied a few specimens, which, although wanting in the rich and beautiful effect produced by the splendid colours of the originals, will show the style and manner in which painting was, under this form, applied to interior decoration, and will so far furnish materials by which the general effect may be appreciated.

12. "Windows of agates... gates of carbuncles... borders of pleasant stones."—We may again refer, as above, to the notes in which we have already spoken of interior decorations; particularly as to what we have said of mosaic ornaments. Stones of price are sometimes employed in this work, particularly when the pattern is a flowered work, to represent the more brilliant parts of the flowers, fruits also being sometimes represented by precious stones. Similar decorations of rich stones appear in borders and cornices, particularly when wreathed and flowered-work is exhibited, when nothing can exceed the rich effect of

"—The gold branches, hung with emerald leaves Blossomed with pearls, and rich with ruby fruit."

SOUTHEY.

The Arabian idea of a palace of unexampled magnificence—founded on the known style of ornament, but so aggrandized that supernatural power was required to give effect to the intention—is strikingly conveyed in the well-known Oriental tale of Aladdin, who thus gives his instructions. "I leave the choice of materials to you, that is to say, porphyry, jasper, agate, lapis lazuli, and the finest marble of the most varied colours. But I expect that, in the highest story of the palace, you shall build me a large hall with a dome, and four equal fronts; and that, instead of layers of bricks, the walls be made of massy gold and silver, laid alternately; and that each front shall contain six windows, the lattices of all of which, except one which must be left unfinished and imperfect, shall be so enriched, with art and symmetry, with diamonds, rubies, and emeralds, that they shall exceed every thing of the kind ever seen in the world."

CHAPTER LV.

1 The prophet, with the promises of Christ, calleth to faith, 6 and to repentance. 8 The happy success of them that believe.

Ho, 'every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price.

2 Wherefore do ye 'spend money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness.

3 Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the 'sure mercies of David.

4 Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people.

5 Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee because of the LORD thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee.

6 ¶ Seek ye the LORD while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near:

7 Let the wicked forsake his way, and 'the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the LORD, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for 'he will abundantly pardon.

8 ¶ For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the LORD.

9 For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.

10 For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater:

11 So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.

12 For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall 'break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands.

13 Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to the LORD for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off.

Verse 13. "Thorn...brier."—These are two of the many different words (fifteen in all) which our translators, finding it impossible to identify the varieties thus distinguished in the original by appropriate words, were, very properly, satisfied to render by "thorn, brier, or thistle"—the common names of plants or shrubs armed with prickles or spines. It is not even now, with our improved knowledge of the East, easy to identify the two plants here intended. The word rendered "thorn"

(נֶאֱצַץ naatzutz), occurs only here and in ch. vii. 19. Celsius thinks it maybe a wild thorny species of the lotus, the Arabic name of which is similar to the present Hebrew word. The other term (סִרְפָּד sirpad), rendered "brier," occurs here only, and is equally uncertain, if not more so; but it seems to denote a prickly plant of some kind or other; or, as Parkhurst conjectures, some kind of wide-spreading thorn.

CHAPTER LVI.

1 The prophet exhorteth to sanctification. 3 He promiseth it shall be general without respect of persons. 9 He inveigheth against blind watchmen.

THUS saith the LORD, Keep ye ¹judgment, and do justice: for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed.

2 Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and keepeth his hand from doing any evil.

3 ¶ Neither let the son of the stranger, that hath joined himself to the LORD, speak, saying, The LORD hath utterly separated me from his people: neither let the eunuch say, Behold, I am a dry tree.

4 For thus saith the LORD unto the eunuchs that keep my sabbaths, and choose the things that please me, and take hold of my covenant;

5 Even unto them will I give in mine house and within my walls a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters: I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off.

6 Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the LORD, to serve him, and to love the name of the LORD, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant;

7 Even them will I ²bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer: their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for ³mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people.

8 The LORD God which gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, Yet will I gather others to him, ⁴'beside those that are gathered unto him.

9 ¶ All ye beasts of the field, come to devour, yea, all ye beasts in the forest.

10 His watchmen are blind: they are all ignorant, they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; ⁵'sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber.

11 Yea, they are ⁶'greedy dogs which ⁷'can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand: they all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter.

12 Come ye, say they, I will fetch wine, and we will fill ourselves with strong drink; and to morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant.

Verse 10. "His watchmen. . . are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark."—From this, as well as from ch. lxii. 6, it was customary for the Hebrew watchmen to utter cries from time to time, so that silence in a watchman is described as a disqualification and reproach. It is still customary in the Levant for the watchmen in the towns frequently to utter loud cries to make their presence known, and to manifest their vigilance. Their exclamations, like nearly all others used by the Moslems, are of a religious character. Mr. Lane says, "The cry of the nightly watchmen in the quarter in which I lived in Cairo, during my first visit, struck me as remarkable for its sublimity—"I proclaim the absolute glory of the living King, who sleepeth not nor dieth." The present watchman, in the same quarter, exclaims, "O Lord! O Everlasting!" It is known that there are some species of dogs which cannot bark, and some such the prophet probably had in view in this comparison. In the Levant we have seen one species—a short unsightly dog, with something of the lurcher or terrier in him—which never does bark.

CHAPTER LVII.

¹ The blessed death of the righteous. ³ God reproveth the Jews for their whorish idolatry. ¹³ He giveth evangelical promises to the penitent.

THE righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart: and ¹²merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken away ³from the evil to come.

² He shall 'enter into peace: they shall rest in their beds, each one walking ³in his uprightness.

³ ¶ But draw near hither, ye sons of the sorceress, the seed of the adulterer and the whore.

⁵ Enflaming yourselves 'with idols 'under every green tree, slaying the children in the valleys under the cliffs of the rocks?

⁶ Among the smooth stones of the stream is thy portion; they, they are thy lot: even to them hast thou poured a drink offering, thou hast offered a meat offering. Should I receive comfort in these?

⁷ Upon a lofty and high mountain hast thou set thy bed: even thither wentest thou up to offer sacrifice.

⁹ And ¹⁰thou wentest to the king with ointment, and didst increase thy perfumes, and didst send thy messengers far off, and didst debase thyself even unto hell.

¹⁰ Thou art wearied in the greatness of thy way; yet saidst thou not, 'There is no hope: thou hast found the ¹¹life of thine hand; therefore thou wast not grieved.

¹¹ And of whom hast thou been afraid or feared, that thou hast lied, and hast not remembered me, nor laid it to thy heart? have not I held my peace even of old, and thou fearest me not?

¹² I will declare thy righteousness, and thy works; for they shall not profit thee.

¹³ ¶ When thou criest, let thy companies deliver thee; but the wind shall carry them all away; vanity shall take them: but he that putteth his trust in me shall possess the land, and shall inherit my holy mountain;

¹⁴ And shall say, ¹⁵Cast ye up, cast ye up, prepare the way, take up the stumbling block out of the way of my people.

¹⁵ For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones.

¹⁶ For I will not contend for ever, neither will I be always wroth: for the spirit should fail before me, and the souls which I have made.

¹⁷ For the iniquity of his covetousness was I wroth, and smote him: I hid me, and was wroth, and he went on ¹⁸frowardly in the way of his heart.

¹⁸ I have seen his ways, and will heal him: I will lead him also, and restore comforts unto him and to his mourners.

¹⁹ I create the fruit of the lips; Peace, peace to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the LORD; and I will heal him.

²⁰ But the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt.

²¹ ¹⁴There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked.

¹ Heb. men of kindness, or, godliness. ² Psal. 12. 1. Mic. 7. 2. ³ Or, from that which is evil. ⁴ Or, go in peace. ⁵ Or, before him.

¹⁰ Or, thou respectedst the king. ¹¹ Or, living. ¹² Chap. 40. 3, and 62. 10. ¹³ Heb. turning away. ¹⁴ Chap. 48. 22.

Verse 6. "Among the smooth stones of the stream is thy portion."—The text is generally supposed to refer to those unworked stones, which were set up, anointed, and worshipped. Such stones were preferably taken from torrents, on account of their being worn smooth by the action of the stream upon their surface. Of this worship there are many testimonies in ancient writers. "They were," says Lowth, "called Βαυυλοι and Βαυυλαια; probably from the stone which Jacob erected at

Bethel, pouring oil upon the top of it. The practice was very common in different ages and places. . . Clemens Alex. Strom. Lib. vii., speaks of a worshipper of very smooth stones in a proverbial way, to denote one given up to superstition. And, accordingly, Theophrastus has marked this as one strong feature in the character of the superstitious man. 'Passing by the anointed stones in the streets, he takes out his phial of oil, and pours it on them; and, having fallen on his knees, and made his adorations, he departs!'

8. "Behind the doors also and the posts," &c.—This is supposed to refer to the lares and penates, the tutelary or household gods, which the heathen placed in different parts of their houses, sometimes in private, and sometimes exposed, so that they might be publicly seen. Before their small images, lamps were usually kept burning, and at the times of eating, something that was first brought to table was burnt in their honour as firstfruits. (See more largely, Rosinus, Antiquitates Romanæ, lib. ii. cap. 14.) It will be recollected that such idolatrous practices as this were in most marked opposition to that law by which the Hebrews were commanded to write the words of God upon their gates, and door-posts of their house. (Deut. vi. 9; xi. 20.)

CHAPTER LVIII.

1 The prophet, being sent to reprove hypocrisy, 3 expresseth a counterfeit fast and a true. 8 He declareth what promises are due unto godliness, 13 and to the keeping of the sabbath.

CRY 'aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and shew my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins.

2 Yet they seek me daily, and delight to know my ways, as a nation that did righteousness, and forsook not the ordinance of their God: they ask of me the ordinances of justice; they take delight in approaching to God.

3 ¶ Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not? wherefore have we afflicted our soul, and thou takest no knowledge? Behold, in the day of your fast ye find pleasure, and exact all your 'labours.

4 Behold, ye fast for strife and debate, and to smite with the fist of wickedness: 'ye shall not fast as ye do this day, to make your voice to be heard on high.

5 Is it 'such a fast that I have chosen? 'a day for a man to afflict his soul? is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the LORD?

6 Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo 'the heavy burdens, and to let the 'oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke?

7 Is it not ¹⁰to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are ¹¹cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?

8 ¶ Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily: and thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the LORD ¹²shall be thy rereward.

9 Then shalt thou call, and the LORD shall answer; thou shalt cry, and he shall say, Here I am. If thou take away from the midst of thee the yoke, the putting forth of the finger, and speaking vanity;

10 And if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul; then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noon day:

11 And the LORD shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in ¹³drought, and make fat thy bones: and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters ¹⁴fail not.

12 And they that shall be of thee ¹⁵shall build the old waste places: thou shalt raise up the foundations of many generations; and thou shalt be called, The repairer of the breach, The restorer of paths to dwell in.

13 ¶ If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the LORD, honourable; and shalt honour him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words:

14 Then shalt thou delight thyself in the LORD; and I will cause thee to ¹⁶ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it.

 20 The covenant of the Redeemer.

BEHOLD, the LORD's hand is not 'shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear:

2 But your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins² have hid his face from you, that he will not hear.

3 For ³your hands are defiled with blood, and your fingers with iniquity; your lips have spoken lies, your tongue hath muttered perverseness.

4 None calleth for justice, nor any pleadeth for truth: they trust in vanity, and speak lies: 'they conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity.

5 They hatch 'cockatrice' eggs, and weave the spider's web: he that eateth of their eggs dieth, and 'that which is crushed breaketh out into a viper.

6 'Their webs shall not become garments, neither shall they cover themselves with their works: their works are works of iniquity, and the act of violence is in their hands.

7 'Their feet run to evil, and they make haste to shed innocent blood: their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; wasting and 'destruction are in their paths.

8 The way of peace they know not; and there is no 'judgment in their goings: they have made them crooked paths: whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace.

9 ¶ Therefore is judgment far from us, neither doth justice overtake us: we wait for light, but behold obscurity; for brightness, but we walk in darkness.

10 We grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes: we stumble at noon day as in the night; we are in desolate places as dead men.

11 We roar all like bears, and mourn sore like doves: we look for judgment, but there is none; for salvation, but it is far off from us.

12 For our transgressions are multiplied before thee, and our sins testify against us: for our transgressions are with us; and as for our iniquities, we know them;

13 In transgressing and lying against the LORD, and departing away from our God, speaking oppression and revolt, conceiving and uttering from the heart words of falsehood.

14 And judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter.

15 Yea, truth faileth; and he that departeth from evil 'maketh himself a prey: and the LORD saw it, and 'it displeased him that there was no judgment.

16 ¶ And he saw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor. 'therefore his arm brought salvation unto him; and his righteousness, it sustained him.

17 'For he put on righteousness as a breastplate, and an helmet of salvation upon his head; and he put on the garments of vengeance for clothing, and was clad with zeal as a cloke.

18 'According to their 'deeds, accordingly he will repay, fury to his adversaries, recompence to his enemies; to the islands he will repay recompence.

19 So shall they fear the name of the LORD from the west, and his glory from the rising of the sun. When the enemy shall come in 'like a flood, the Spirit of the LORD shall 'lift up a standard against him.

20 ¶ And 'the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the LORD.

21 As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the LORD; My spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the LORD, from henceforth and for ever.

against whom his anger has been moved,—he makes his appearance in a red dress. This is his garment of vengeance; and his entrance in it is a certain sign that some great lord will receive his doom. Compare ch. lx. 2, &c.

CHAPTER LX.

¹ The glory of the church in the abundant access of the Gentiles, 15 and the great blessings after a short affliction.

ARISE, 'shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the LORD is risen upon thee.

2 For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the LORD shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee.

3 And the 'Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising.

4 'Lift up thine eyes round about, and see: all they gather themselves together, they come to thee: thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side.

5 Then thou shalt see, and flow together, and thine heart shall fear, and be enlarged; because the 'abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee, the 'forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee.

6 The multitude of camels shall cover thee, the dromedaries of Midian and Ephah; all they from Sheba shall come: they shall bring 'gold and incense; and they shall shew forth the praises of the LORD.

7 All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered together unto thee, the rams of Nebaioth shall minister unto thee: they shall come up with acceptance on mine altar, and I will glorify the house of my glory.

8 Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?

9 Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, 'to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold with them, unto the name of the LORD thy God, and to the Holy One of Israel, because he hath glorified thee.

10 And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee: for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favour have I had mercy on thee.

11 Therefore thy gates 'shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee the 'forces of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought.

12 For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted.

13 The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the place of my feet glorious.

14 The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall 'bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee, The city of the LORD, The Zion of the Holy One of Israel.

15 Whereas thou hast been forsaken and hated, so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations.

16 Thou shalt also suck the milk of the Gentiles, and shalt suck the breast of kings: and thou shalt know that I the LORD am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the mighty One of Jacob.

17 For brass I will bring gold, and for iron I will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron: I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness.

18 Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise.

19 'The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the LORD shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory.

20 Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the LORD shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended.

21 Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land for ever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified.

22 A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the LORD will hasten it in his time.

Verse 4. "Thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side."—The Septuagint and Chaldee, instead of "shall be nursed" (תִּנְחַנְחַן), read "shall be carried" (תִּנְשָׂאנָה): and this reading is adopted by Lowth and Boothroyd as more conformable to the customs of the East, where, as we had occasion to observe under ch. xlix. 22, a child is sometimes carried astride upon the hip, with the arm of the bearer around its body. It is, however, perhaps as well to understand the expression to be figurative, describing the condition of being brought up carefully at home under paternal inspection and influence—not wandering, not torn away, nor in any manner alienated from home nurture in truth and virtue.

6. "Ephah."—The people of Ephah probably formed a section of the Midianites; for Midian, Abraham's son by Keturah, had a son called Ephah. (Gen. xxv. 4.)

8. "As doves to their windows."—This text has been well illustrated by Morier in his 'Second Journey,' p. 140. "In the environs of the city (Ispahan), to the westward, near Zainderood, are many pigeon houses, erected at a distance from habitations, for the purpose of collecting pigeons' dung for manure. They are large, round towers, rather broader at the bottom than the top, and crowned by conical spiracles, through which the pigeons descend. Their interior resembles a honeycomb, pierced with a thousand holes, each of which forms a snug retreat for a nest. More care appears to have been bestowed upon their outside than upon that of the generality of dwelling houses, for they are painted and ornamented. The extraordinary flights of pigeons which I have seen upon one of these buildings afford perhaps a good illustration of the passage in Isaiah lx. 8, 'Who are they that fly as a cloud,' &c. Their great numbers, and the compactness of their mass, literally looked like a cloud at a distance, and obscured the sun in their passage." What gives an additional value to this illustration is the probability that similar dove-houses were in use among the Hebrews; for they certainly were so among their Egyptian neighbours, as we see by the ancient paintings and in the Mosaic pavement at Præneste, where the dove-cotes are such large round towers as Morier describes, decreasing in diameter upwards; but they are without the conical spiracles which we find in those of Persia.

13. "The glory of Lebanon:" that is, the cedar.—Most of our readers will recollect the beautiful verses in which Pope and Cowper have, respectively, paraphrased or imitated the glowing language and varied imagery in which the final glory of the church is foretold, in this chapter, by the prophet

CHAPTER LXI.

1 The office of Christ. 4 The forwardness, 7 and blessings of the faithful.

THE 'Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the LORD hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound;

2 To proclaim the acceptable year of the LORD, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn;

3 To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the LORD, that he might be glorified.

4 ¶ And they shall ¹build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations.

5 And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your plowmen and your vinedressers.

6 But ye shall be named the Priests of the LORD: men shall call you the Ministers of our God: ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves.

7 ¶ For your shame ye shall have double; and for confusion they shall rejoice in their portion: therefore in their land they shall possess the double: everlasting joy shall be unto them.

8 For I the LORD love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt offering; and I will direct their work in truth, and I will make an everlasting covenant with them.

9 And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people: all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the LORD hath blessed.

10 I will greatly rejoice in the LORD, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom 'decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.

11 For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth; so the Lord God will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all the nations.

⁹ Heb. decketh as a priest.

Verse 10. "As a bride adorneth herself with her jewels."—This is a custom universally observed; and it therefore needs no other illustration than may be derived from the fact that in many parts of the East it is considered so essential that the bride should be richly adorned with precious ornaments and jewels, that if she has none of her own, or not enough for the occasion, she borrows largely from her friends and neighbours till she is enabled to offer such an appearance of wealth and splendour as she never made before, and can never hope to make again. Jewels and other ornaments of price are in general readily lent on such occasions, and are always faithfully returned.

CHAPTER LXII.

¹ The fervent desire of the prophet to confirm the church in God's promises. ⁵ The office of the ministers (unto which they are incited) in preaching the Gospel, 10 and preparing the people thereto.

For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth.

2 And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory: and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the LORD shall name.

3 Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the LORD, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God.

4 'Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate: but thou shalt be called 'Hephzi-bah, and thy land 'Beulah: for the LORD delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married.

5 ¶ For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee: and 'as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee.

6 I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night: 'ye that make mention of the LORD, keep not silence,

7 And give him no 'rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth.

8 The LORD hath sworn by his right hand, and by the arm of his strength, 'Surely I will no more give thy corn to be meat for thine enemies; and the sons of the stranger shall not drink thy wine, for the which thou hast laboured:

9 But they that have gathered it shall eat it, and praise the LORD; and they that have brought it together shall drink it in the courts of my holiness.

10 ¶ Go through, go through the gates; 'prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people.

11 Behold, the LORD hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, 'Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, his ¹⁰reward is with him, and his ¹¹work before him.

12 And they shall call them, The holy people, The redeemed of the LORD: and thou shalt be called, Sought out, A city not forsaken.

¹¹ Or, recompense.

Verse 4. "The land shall be married."—In the East it is still customary to describe a king as having married that land which he has recently acquired, by conquest or otherwise, and united to his former dominions.

5. "A young man marrieth a virgin."—There is perhaps no particular point intended here: but it may allude to such a custom as that which very much prevails in the East, particularly among Mahomedans—which is, that a young man not previously married always marries a virgin; never a widow or divorced woman, who can only hope to contract a new alliance with a man who has been or is already married.

CHAPTER LXIII.

1 Christ sheweth who he is, 2 what his victory over his enemies, 7 and what his mercy toward his church. 10 In his just wrath he remembereth his free mercy. 15 The church in their prayer, 17 and complaint, profess their faith.

Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? this that is 'glorious in his apparel, travelling in the greatness of his strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save.

2 Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the winefat?

3 I have trodden the winepress alone; and of the people there was none with me: for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment.

4 For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come.

5 And I looked, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore mine own 'arm brought salvation unto me; and my fury, it upheld me.

6 And I will tread down the people in mine anger, and make them drunk in my fury, and I will bring down their strength to the earth.

7 ¶ I will mention the lovingkindnesses of the LORD, and the praises of the LORD, according to all that the LORD hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness toward the house of Israel, which he hath bestowed on them according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his lovingkindnesses.

8 For he said, Surely they are my people, children that will not lie: so he was their Saviour.

9 In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them: 'in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old.

10 ¶ But they 'rebelled, and vexed his holy Spirit: therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought against them.

11 Then he remembered the days of old, Moses, and his people, saying, Where is he that 'brought them up out of the sea with the 'shepherd of his flock? where is he that put his holy Spirit within him?

12 That led them by the right hand of Moses with his glorious arm, 'dividing the water before them, to make himself an everlasting name?

13 That led them through the deep, as an horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble?

14 As a beast goeth down into the valley, the Spirit of the LORD caused him to rest: so didst thou lead thy people, to make thyself a glorious name.

15 ¶ ¹⁰Look down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of thy holiness and of thy glory: where is thy zeal and thy strength, ¹¹the sounding of thy bowels and of thy mercies toward me? are they restrained?

16 Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not: thou, O LORD, art our father, ¹²our redeemer; thy name is from everlasting.

17 ¶ O LORD, why hast thou made us to err from thy ways, and hardened our heart from thy fear? Return for thy servants' sake, the tribes of thine inheritance.

Heb. decked. ² Rev. 19. 13. ³ Chap. 34. 8. ⁴ Chap. 59. 16. ⁵ Deut. 7. 7, 8. ⁶ Exod. 15. 24. Num. 14. 11. Psal. 78. 56, and 95. 9.

¹² Or, our redeemer from everlasting is thy name.

18 The people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while: our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary.

19 We are thine: thou never barest rule over them; ¹³they were not called by thy name.

¹³ Or, thy name was not called upon them.

Verse 1. "Who is this," &c.—Bishop Lowth, in the seventh of his 'Prælections on the Sacred Poetry of the Hebrews,' in which he treats of "Poetic Imagery from Common Life," thus speaks of the present example. "I ought not in this place to omit that supremely magnificent delineation of the divine vengeance expressed by imagery taken from the wine-press; an image which frequently occurs in the sacred poets, but which no other poetry has presumed to introduce. But where shall we find expressions of equal dignity with the original in any modern language? By what art of the pencil can we exhibit a shadow or an outline of that description in which Isaiah depicts the Messiah as coming to vengeance?"

3. "Trodden the winepress alone."—It was usual for several persons together to tread in the wine-press; hence the distinction conveyed by the word "alone."

13. "As an horse in the wilderness."—By "wilderness" we are here, as in most other instances, to understand "a plain," and preferably "a desert plain;" and probably the allusion may be derived from the speed and facility with which the Arabians withdraw, upon their famous horses, from the presence of powerful enemies into the deserts, where those who attempt to pursue them often miserably perish. With like ease did the Hebrews pass through the Red Sea; and in like manner did the Egyptian host, which had the temerity to pursue them, perish.

CHAPTER LXIV.

⁵ Celebrating God's mercy, it maketh confession of their natural corruptions. ⁹ It complaineth of their affliction.

7 And there is none that calleth upon thy name, that stirreth up himself to take from us, and hast ⁴consumed us, because of our iniquities.

is a wilderness, Jerusalem a desolation.

11 Our holy and our beautiful house,

1 The calling of the Gentiles. 2 The Jews, for their incredulity, idolatry, and hypocrisy, are rejected. 8 A remnant shall be saved. 11 Judgments on the wicked, and blessings on the godly. 17 The blessed state of the new Jerusalem.

I ¹AM sought of them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not: I said, Behold me, behold me, unto a nation that was not called by my name.

2 I have spread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people, which walketh in a way that was not good, after their own thoughts;

3 A people that provoketh me to anger continually to my face; that sacrificeth in gardens, and burneth incense ²upon altars of brick;

4 Which remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments, which eat swine's flesh, and ³broth of abominable things is in their vessels;

5 Which say, Stand by thyself, come not near to me; for I am holier than thou. These are a smoke in my ⁴'nose, a fire that burneth all the day.

6 Behold, it is written before me: I will not keep silence, but will recompense, even recompense into their bosom,

7 Your iniquities, and the iniquities of your fathers together, saith the LORD, which have burned incense upon the mountains, and blasphemed me upon the hills: therefore will I measure their former work into their bosom.

8 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, As the new wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not; for a blessing is in it: so will I do for my servants' sakes, that I may not destroy them all.

9 And I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains: and mine elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there.

10 And Sharon shall be a fold of flocks, and the valley of Achor a place for the herds to lie down in, for my people that have sought me.

11 ¶ But ye are they that forsake the LORD, that forget my holy mountain, that prepare a table for that ⁵'troop, and that furnish the drink offering unto that ⁶'number.

12 Therefore will I number you to the sword, and ye shall all bow down to the slaughter: ⁷'because when I called, ye did not answer; when I spake, ye did not hear; but did evil before mine eyes, and did choose that wherein I delighted not.

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry: behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty: behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed:

14 Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for ⁸'vexation of spirit.

15 And ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen: for the Lord God shall slay thee, and call his servants by another name:

16 That he who blesseth himself in the earth shall bless himself in the God of truth; and he that sweareth in the earth shall swear by the God of truth; because the former troubles are forgotten, and because they are hid from mine eyes.

17 ¶ For, behold, I create ⁹'new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor ¹⁰'come into mind.

18 But be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy.

19 And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the ¹¹'voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying.

20 There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed.

21 And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them.

22 They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another

Verse 3. "Sacrificeth in gardens."—This and what follows alludes to idolatrous and superstitious practices, involving idolatry, which were forbidden to the Hebrews, but to which they were, nevertheless, as we frequently observe in the historical and prophetic books, excessively addicted previously to the Babylonish captivity. Gardens in the East are rather orchards or plantations than what we call gardens. Worshipping in gardens is therefore equivalent to worshipping in groves—a practice from which the Jews were so strongly interdicted, that they were commanded (Deut. xii. 2.) to burn the groves in which their idolatrous predecessors in the possession of Palestine, had been wont to worship.

"Altars of brick."—This was against the law which forbade the Hebrews to have any altars but of earth or unhewn stone (Exod. xx. 24, 25.)

4. "Remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments."—It was an idolatrous superstition in most ancient nations, for certain persons to resort to the sepulchres, &c., for the purpose of magic or necromancy. There they expected, or pretended, to hold intercourse with spirits and dæmons, or to receive instructions or oracles in dreams and visions. There are frequent allusions to this practice in heathen writers; and it appears that the Hebrews were also addicted to them. There are (we cannot quite say were) superstitions in our own country connected with graves and sepulchres, which might but too well be cited in illustration. And if, with Bishop Lowth, we read the last word as "caverns" instead of "monuments," the observation would be equally applicable, as there is perhaps not a noted cavern in England with which some superstitious dread is not associated, in consequence of a tradition concerning some wizard or necromancer who once abode within its gloom.

11. "A table for that troop...the drink offering unto the number."—The words rendered "troop," and "number" are more usually, as in the margin, given as the proper names of idols גַּד Gad, and מְנִי Meni. As the former word means fortune in the Syriac dialect, some suppose the imaginary goddess of fortune to be intended; and so the Septuagint, Τύχη, and the Vulgate Fortuna: and some of the Rabbins are of the same opinion. R. Moses, however, says it was the planet Jupiter, which was distinguished as the fortunate star. Meni is supposed by some, from the etymology of the name, to be Fate or Destiny; others imagine the seven planets to be intended, and some conclude it to be the planet Mercury in particular. Perhaps the most probable opinion is that which makes it to be the idol Manah (מָנָה) which was in ancient times worshipped by the Arabians. Some mythologists incline to the opinion that Gad was the sun and Meni the moon.¹

20. "An infant of days."—One who lived but a short time—an infant of few days; "few" being understood. This seems to say that none shall die in infancy, during the blessed time of which the prophet speaks.

"The child shall die an hundred years old."—This seems to intimate that one who dies at a hundred years old shall be considered to have died in childhood—so long then shall be the years of man's life. The Hebrew writers imagine that life will then attain its antediluvian duration.

22. "As the days of a tree," &c.—This is a figurative repetition of the same idea of longevity, as many kinds of timber trees remain in life for ages—oaks and cedars, for example.

7 Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man child.

8 Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children.

9 Shall I bring to the birth and not 'cause to bring forth? saith the LORD: shall I cause to bring forth, and shut the womb? saith thy God.

10 Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that love her: rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her:

11 That ye may suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations; that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the 'abundance of her glory.

12 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream: then shall ye suck, ye shall be 'borne upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees.

13 As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem.

14 And when ye see this, your heart shall rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like an herb: and the hand of the LORD shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies.

15 For, behold, the LORD will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire.

16 For by fire and by his sword will the LORD plead with all flesh: and the slain of the LORD shall be many.

17 They that sanctify themselves, and purify themselves in the gardens ¹⁰behind one tree in the midst, eating swine's flesh, and the abomination, and the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the LORD.

18 For I know their works and their thoughts: it shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and see my glory.

19 And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal, and Javan, to the isles afar off, that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles.

20 And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the LORD out of all nations upon horses, and in chariots, and in ¹¹litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the LORD, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the LORD.

21 And I will also take of them for ¹²priests and for Levites, saith the LORD.

22 For as ¹³the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the LORD, so shall your seed and your name remain.

23 And it shall come to pass, that ¹⁴from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the LORD.

24 And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me: for their ¹⁵worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

their personification of the sun. Lowth renders, "After the rites of Achad."

OF THE PROPHET

J E R E M I A H.

CHAPTER I.

¹ The time, 3 and the calling of Jeremiah. 11 His prophetic visions of an almond rod and a seething pot. 15 His heavy message against Judah. 17 God encourageth him with his promise of assistance.

HE words of Jeremiah the son of Hilkiyah, of the priests that were in Anathoth in the land of Benjamin:

2 To whom the word of the LORD came in the days of Josiah the son of Amon king of Judah, in the thirteenth year of his reign.

3 It came also in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, unto the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah the son of Josiah king of Judah, unto the carrying away of Jerusalem captive in the fifth month.

4 Then the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

5 Before I ¹formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I ²sanctified thee, and I ³ordained thee a prophet unto the nations.

6 Then said I, Ah, ⁴Lord God! behold, I cannot speak: for I am a child.

7 ¶ But the LORD said unto me, Say not I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.

8 ⁵Be not afraid of their faces: for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the LORD.

9 Then the LORD put forth his hand, and ⁶touch'd my mouth. And the LORD said unto me, Behold, I have ⁷put my words in thy mouth.

10 See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to ⁸root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant.

11 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, Jeremiah, what seest thou? And I said, I see a rod of an almond tree.

12 Then said the LORD unto me, Thou hast well seen: for I will hasten my word to perform it.

13 And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying, What seest thou? And I said, I see a seething pot; and the face thereof is ⁹toward the north.

14 Then the LORD said unto me, Out of the ¹⁰north an evil ¹¹shall break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land.

15 For, lo, I will ¹²call all the families of the kingdoms of the north, saith the LORD; and they shall come, and they shall set every one his throne at the entering of the gates of Jerusalem, and against all the walls thereof round about, and against all the cities of Judah.

JEREMIAH.—FROM THE FRESCOS, BY MICHAEL ANGELO, IN THE SISTINE CHAPEL.

JEREMIAH.—There is no prophet of whose personal history and character we have more information than concerning Jeremiah. His book of prophecy includes many details which show the difficulties which attended his ministry, and the opposition which he met with from all classes of his countrymen. We learn from the first verse that he was of the sacerdotal tribe, and resided at Anathoth, a city of the tribe of Benjamin, not far from Jerusalem, and appropriated to the use of the priests (Josh. xxi. 18). As the priest his father was called Hilkiyah, some have supposed that he was the same as the high-priest of that name, who found the book of the Law in the Temple in the time of Josiah. But there seems no foundation for this conjecture. Had the father of Jeremiah been high-priest, the fact would surely have been mentioned: the name of Hilkiyah was also a common one among the Jews; to which we may add, that Josephus says that the high-priests were obliged to reside at Jerusalem, which would alone show that the Hilkiyah of Anathoth could not have been the high-priest. Jeremiah appears to have been very young when he was called to the exercise of the prophetic office; from which he modestly endeavoured to excuse himself by pleading his youth and incapacity; but being overruled by Divine authority, he set himself to discharge the duties of his function with unremitted diligence and fidelity, during a period of at least forty-two years, reckoning from the thirteenth year of Josiah's reign. The prophet lived to see that ruin to his country which he had predicted. The Jews who then, against his remonstrances and advice, withdrew into Egypt, took him with them. He there continued to prophesy, protesting against the idolatrous practices which they there adopted, and foretelling the awful consequences. There is a very old and general tradition that his freedom and zeal cost him his life; the Jews at Tahpanhes taking such offence at his rebukes and predictions, that they stoned him to death. It is added that he was buried there: and another tradition states that the attention of Alexander the Great having been drawn to his tomb, occasion was taken to acquaint him with the prophet's predictions, which induced him to order the removal of his remains to Alexandria, where he erected over them a magnificent monument. All this rests on very precarious authority: but, as Blayney observes, "the account of the manner of his exit, though not absolutely certain, is at least very likely to be true, considering the temper and disposition of the parties concerned."

Much has been said of the style of Jeremiah, as distinguished from that of other prophets, particularly Isaiah. Jerome considers his style distinguished by its rusticity, as compared with that of Isaiah, Hosea, and some others. This he attributes to his having been born and bred at Anathoth, where he probably had no opportunity of acquiring that elevation, elegance, and purity of style which is seldom found except in capitals and the courts of princes. But the proximity of Anathoth to Jerusalem renders this rather an unsatisfactory explanation, even were the premises admitted. Bishop Lowth does not subscribe to Jerome's opinion as to the style of this prophet; and is unable to discover the rusticity which he regards as its characteristic. Although deficient neither in elegance nor sublimity, Jeremiah must, indeed, give place in both to Isaiah: and while his sentiments are not always elevated, nor his periods uniformly neat and compact; yet his style is in a high degree tender and beautiful, when he has occasion to excite the emotions of sympathy and grief. This observation is strongly exemplified in the Lamentations, where these are the prevailing passions, and in the earlier portion of the book of prophecy. These parts are chiefly poetical. The middle of the book is almost entirely historical, and is written in a prosaic style, suitable to historical narrative. The latter part, again, consisting of the six last chapters, is altogether poetical, and contains several distinct predictions, in which the prophet makes a near approach to the sublimity of Isaiah. Upon the whole, about one-half of the book may be regarded as poetical. See Lowth's 'Lectures,' xxi; the introductory note in Blayney's Translation; Calmet's 'Préface sur Jérémie,' &c.

Verses 11, 12. "A rod of an almond-tree... for I will hasten."—The almond-tree seems to have derived its name—expressing haste or vigilance—from its being one of the first, if not the very first of trees, to put forth its blossoms and bear its fruit. From this circumstance it seems to have become a symbol of that which its name expresses; and, in the present instance, the symbol denotes the speed with which the judgments announced by Jeremiah should be accomplished: and, accordingly, this prophet lived to see most of his own prophecies fulfilled.

CHAPTER II.

1 God, having shewed his former kindness, expostulateth with the Jews their causeless revolt, 9 beyond any example. 14 They are the causes of their own calamities. 20 The sins of Judah. 31 Her confidence is rejected.

MOREOVER the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

2 Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the LORD; I remember ¹thee, the kindness of thy ²youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wentest after me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown.

3 Israel was holiness unto the LORD, and the firstfruits of his increase: ³all that devour him shall offend; evil shall come upon them, saith the LORD.

4 Hear ye the word of the LORD, O house of Jacob, and all the families of the house of Israel:

5 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, What iniquity have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity, and are become vain?

6 Neither said they, Where is the LORD that 'brought us up out of the land of Egypt, that led us through the wilderness, through a land of deserts and of pits, through a land of drought, and of the shadow of death, through a land that no man passed through, and where no man dwelt?

7 And I brought you into a plentiful country, to eat the fruit thereof and the goodness thereof; but when ye entered, ye ⁴defiled my land, and made mine heritage an abomination.

8 The priests said not, Where is the LORD? and they that handle the ⁵law knew me not: the pastors also transgressed against me, and the prophets prophesied by Baal, and walked after things that do not profit.

9 ¶ Wherefore I will yet plead with you, saith the LORD, and with your children's children will I plead.

10 For pass ⁶over the isles of Chittim, and see; and send unto Kedar, and consider diligently, and see if there be such a thing.

11 Hath a nation changed their gods, which are ⁷yet no gods? but my people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit.

12 Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be horribly afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the LORD.

13 For my people have committed two evils; they have forsaken me the ⁸fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water.

36 Why gaddest thou about so much to change thy way? thou also shalt be ashamed of Egypt, as thou wast ashamed of Assyria.

37 Yea, thou shalt go forth from him, and thine hands upon thine head: for the LORD hath rejected thy confidences, and thou shalt not prosper in them.

Verse 16. "Noph."—This is generally, and with good reason, believed to have been the same as Memphis, the renowned capital of Lower Egypt. The site has been much disputed. Dr. Shaw and others contended strongly that it must be sought at Ghizeh, nearly opposite to Old Cairo; but a great number of the most eminent travellers and geographers have rather been disposed, from a comparison of the statements in ancient authors with existing appearances and traditions, to fix its position considerably more to the south, near the village of Metrahenny, on the western bank of the Nile, where there are manifest indications of extensive ruin in the form of mounds, channels, and blocks of granite, many of which are covered with sculptures and hieroglyphics, and which are locally considered to form the remains of Memf (Memphis), the royal seat of the Pharaohs. So complete is the desolation foretold by the prophets, that nothing remains to form an object in a pictorial illustration; and we therefore are only able to offer a representation of the village of Matrahenny, to mark the site of the ancient Memphis. Concerning this great city and the present remains, some further information will be found under ch. xvi. 19.

22. "Nitre."—This well-known word comes from the Hebrew נֵטֶר neter; being the same as the νιτρον or λιτρον of the Greeks. This nitre, or nitron, must not be confounded with the nitrate of potash, or saltpetre, to which the term is now most usually applied. The word occurs nowhere else in Hebrew, except in Prov. xxv. 20; and in his note on that place, Jerome identifies it with the famous natron of Egypt, observing that the word comes from Nitria, the name of the province in Egypt where that product was most abundantly afforded. Whether the province took its name from the product or the product from the province, is not very clear. The natron, or carbonate of soda, is derived from a chain of lakes to the south-west of the Delta. Their bed is a sort of natural trench three or four leagues long by a quarter wide, the bottom of which is hard and stony. It is dry for nine months in the year; but in winter there oozes from the earth a water of a reddish violet colour, which fills the lakes to the height of five or six feet: the return of the great heats causing this to evaporate, there remains a bed of this salt, two-feet thick and very hard, which is broken with bars of iron. (See Volney,

i. 15.) These lakes also furnish common salt. The natron obtained from this and other sources, was applied to various uses by the nations of the Levant; and among them, one of the most important was its use as one of the substitutes for soap in washing; for the ancients had no soap like ours. It was employed thus, not only for cleansing clothes, but in purifying the person, particularly in baths; and it continues to be used for the same purpose in the East.

"Sope."—For an explanation of this see the note Mal. iii. 3. Is not the employment of the articles here mentioned so as to convey the idea that the use of them implied an extraordinary, and perhaps luxurious, attempt at purification; and thus showing that the Hebrews did not at this period commonly employ any thing but water for the purpose? Burckhardt gives a translation of a Bedouin poem, in which the liberal entertainments of a certain sheikh are warmly praised. In describing the after-dinner washing, the original has, "clean washed with soap;" in compliment to the sheikh, who did not grudge such a rare article as soap is in the Desert, that he might do honour to his guests.

23. "A swift dromedary."—This word בִּכְרָה bikrah, is understood by the rabbins to mean a young camel, or as others, a swift camel—that is, a dromedary; for a dromedary is properly a camel, distinguished from the common one only by its breed and training, as a saddle-horse is distinguished from a cart-horse. This breed is called swift with respect to other camels, not with respect to other animals; for the camel is not eminently a swift animal, and those most renowned for their fleetness are not in any way comparable to the horse. The best trained riding camels cannot sustain a gallop above half an hour, in which at a forced speed they may make about eight or nine miles. This is their highest exertion. A forced trot is not so contrary to the camel's nature; and it will support it for several hours without evincing any symptoms of fatigue; but even here the utmost degree of celerity of the very best bred dromedary does not exceed about twelve miles an hour; and it is therefore in this pace also less expeditious than a moderately good horse. "It is not therefore," says Burckhardt, to whom we owe this statement, "by extreme celerity that the hedjeins and delouls are distinguished, however surprising may be the stories related on this subject both in Europe and the East. But they are perhaps unequalled by any quadrupeds for the ease with which they carry their rider through an uninterrupted journey of several days and nights, when they are allowed to persevere in their own favourite pace, which is a kind of easy amble, at the rate of about five miles or five miles and a half in the hour." ('Notes on the Bedouins,' p. 262.)

¹ God's great mercy in Judah's vile whoredom. ⁶ Judah is worse than Israel. ¹² The promises of the Gospel to the penitent. ²⁰ Israel reprov'd, and called by God, maketh a solemn confession of their sins.

'THEY say, If a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and become another man's, 'shall he return unto her again? shall not that land be greatly polluted? but thou hast played the harlot with many lovers; yet return again to me, saith the LORD.

² Lift up thine eyes unto the high places, and see where thou hast not been lien with. In the ways hast thou sat for them, as the Arabian in the wilderness; and thou hast polluted the land with thy whoredoms and with thy wickedness.

³ Therefore the 'showers have been withholden, and there hath been no latter rain; and thou hadst a 'whore's forehead, thou refusedst to be ashamed.

⁴ Wilt thou not from this time cry unto me, My father, thou art the guide of my youth?

⁵ Will he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Behold, thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou couldest.

⁶ ¶ The LORD said also unto me in the days of Josiah the king, Hast thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? she is 'gone up upon every high mountain and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot.

⁷ And I said after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me. But she returned not. And her treacherous sister Judah saw it.

⁹ And it came to pass through the 'lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks.

¹⁰ And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but 'feignedly, saith the LORD.

¹¹ And the LORD said unto me, The backsliding Israel hath justified herself more than treacherous Judah.

¹² ¶ Go and proclaim these words toward the north, and say, Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the LORD; and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you: for I am 'merciful, saith the LORD, and I will not keep anger for ever.

¹³ Only acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the LORD thy God, and hast scattered thy ways to the strangers under every green tree, and ye have not obeyed my voice, saith the LORD.

¹⁴ Turn, O backsliding children, saith the LORD; for I am married unto you: and I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion:

¹⁵ And I will give you 'pastors according to mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding.

Verse 2. "As the Arabian in the wilderness."—The strongest possible idea of vigilant and eager watching is conveyed by this figure, derived from the practice of the desert Arabians, when in wait for their prey on caravans and travellers. Their avidity, acuteness, and perseverance, on such occasions, are equally surprising. They never relinquish their object from delay in its attainment, nor until they feel assured that ultimate success is hopeless. While out on this pursuit, they are continually turning their regards to every quarter, raising themselves occasionally upon their horses to extend their view, and scouring about in all directions—thus endeavouring to discover some indication whether people have passed over the ground, or are within their reach. For this purpose the slightest and most distant indication of smoke or dust, and the faintest track on the ground, is instantly perceived, and conveys to them the information they desire. With like eagerness and zeal did Israel watch in her corruptions.

24. "Shame;" better definitely, "the shame," or "the confusion." The Hebrews, when repentant or abhorring idolatry, avoided pronouncing even the name of Baal, but substituted for it, when an allusion was necessary, בֹּשֶׁת bosheth, "shame," or "confusion." Guided by this understanding, Blayney translates "That thing of shame;" and Boothroyd, "That shameful idol." The word occurs in the same sense in ch. xi. 13, and Hos. ix. 16.

CHAPTER IV.

1 God calleth Israel by his promise. 3 He exhorteth Judah to repentance by fearful judgments. 19 A grievous lamentation for the miseries of Judah.

If thou wilt return, O Israel, saith the LORD, ¹return unto me: and if thou wilt put away thine abominations out of my sight, then shalt thou not remove.

2 And thou shalt swear, The LORD liveth, in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness; and the nations shall bless themselves in him, and in him shall they ²glory.

3 ¶ For thus saith the LORD to the men of Judah and Jerusalem, Break up your fallow ground, and sow not among thorns.

4 Circumcise yourselves to the LORD, and take away the foreskins of your heart, ye men of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem: lest my fury come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

5 Declare ye in Judah, and publish in Jerusalem; and say, Blow ye the trumpet in the land: cry, gather together, and say, Assemble yourselves, and let us go into the defenced cities.

6 Set up the standard toward Zion: ³retire, stay not: for I will bring evil from the ⁴north, and a great ⁵destruction.

and the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way; he is gone forth from his place to make thy land desolate; and thy cities shall be laid waste, without an inhabitant.

8 For this 'gird you with sackcloth, lament and howl: for the fierce anger of the LORD is not turned back from us.

9 And it shall come to pass at that day, saith the LORD, that the heart of the king shall perish, and the heart of the princes; and the priests shall be astonished, and the prophets shall wonder.

10 Then said I, Ah, Lord God! surely thou hast greatly deceived this people and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall have peace; whereas the sword reacheth unto the soul.

11 At that time shall it be said to this people and to Jerusalem, A dry wind of the high places in the wilderness toward the daughter of my people, not to fan, nor to cleanse, 12 Even 'a full wind from those places shall come unto me: now also will I 'give sentence against them.

13 Behold, he shall come up as clouds, and his chariots shall be as a whirlwind: his horses are swifter than eagles. Woe unto us! for we are spoiled.

14 O Jerusalem, 'wash thine heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved. How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee?

15 For a voice declareth ¹⁰from Dan, and publisheth affliction from mount Ephraim.

16 Make ye mention to the nations; behold, publish against Jerusalem, that watchers come from a far country, and give out their voice against the cities of Judah.

17 As keepers of a field, are they against her round about; because she hath been rebellious against me, saith the LORD.

18 ¹¹Thy way and thy doings have procured these things unto thee: this is thy wickedness, because it is bitter, because it reacheth unto thine heart.

19 ¶ My ¹²bowels, my bowels! I am pained at ¹³my very heart; my heart maketh a noise in me; I cannot hold my peace, because thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war.

20 Destruction upon destruction is cried; for the whole land is spoiled: suddenly are my tents spoiled, and my curtains in a moment.

21 How long shall I see the standard, and hear the sound of the trumpet?

22 For my people is foolish, they have not known me; they are sottish children, and they have none understanding: they are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge.

23 I beheld the earth, and, lo, it was without form and void; and the heavens, and they had no light.

24 I beheld the mountains, and, lo, they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly.

25 I beheld, and, lo, there was no man, and all the birds of the heavens were fled.

26 I beheld, and, lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down at the presence of the LORD, and by his fierce anger.

27 For thus hath the LORD said, The whole land shall be desolate; ¹⁴yet will I not make a full end.

28 For this shall the earth mourn, and the heavens above be black: because I have spoken it, I have purposed it, and will not repent, neither will I turn back from it.

29 ¹⁵The whole city shall flee for the noise of the horsemen and bowmen; they shall go into thickets, and climb up upon the rocks: every city shall be forsaken, and not a man dwell therein.

30 And when thou art spoiled, what wilt thou do? Though thou clothest thyself with crimson, though thou deckest thee with ornaments of gold, though thou rentest thy ¹⁶face with painting, in vain shalt thou make thyself fair; thy lovers will despise thee, they will seek thy life.

31 For I have heard a voice as of a woman in travail, and the anguish as of her that bringeth forth her first child, the voice of the daughter of Zion, that bewaileth herself, that spreadeth her hands, saying, Woe is me now! for my soul is wearied because of murderers.

Verse 11. "A dry wind of the high places in the wilderness."—Blayney's translation, "A wind that scorseth the plains in the wilderness," is doubtless preferable, both as regards the interpretation of the original, and the nature of the phenomenon to which it refers. This will appear from the account of the simoom which we have given in the note on Isa. xxxvii.

17. "As keepers of a field," &c.—We have on former occasions mentioned the single keeper and his lodge. When a field or plantation is extensive, several men are employed, as the season of fruition approaches, to prevent the encroachment of cattle and other marauders. These guards are most numerous near frequented roads, and fewer in remote districts. They keep an easy watch on the borders of the ground, and sometimes tend a few sheep, or amuse the time with some other light employment. They sleep together at night in some such frail lodge or shed as we have formerly described.

30. "Rentest thy face with painting."—For "face," read "eyes," as in the margin. The word קָרַע kara, "to rend," or "tear," is probably here to be understood in the sense of tearing open, or distending, and perhaps refers to the effect of the operation of painting the eyes. Large eyes are much affected in the East; and the black border, by its contrast to the white of the eye, does certainly give a much enlarged appearance to that organ. The process of painting the eyes has already been noticed in this work; and we take the present opportunity of introducing an engraving which will illustrate the observations we have made on this subject. The figure also shows one form in which the women of the Levant are fond of exhibiting blue marks, formed by puncture, upon their hands, arms, faces, and bosoms.

CHAPTER V.

1 The judgments of God upon the Jews, for their perverseness, 7 for their adultery, 10 for their impiety, 19 for their contempt of God, 25 and for their great corruption in the civil state, 30 and ecclesiastical.

RUN ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that seeketh the truth; and I will pardon it.

2 And though they say, The LORD liveth; surely they swear falsely.

3 O LORD, are not thine eyes upon the truth? thou hast 'stricken them, but they have not grieved; thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction: they have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refused to return.

4 Therefore I said, Surely these are poor; they are foolish: for they know not the way of the LORD, nor the judgment of their God.

5 I will get me unto the great men, and will speak unto them; for they have known the way of the LORD, and the judgment of their God: but these have altogether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds.

6 Wherefore a lion out of the forest shall slay them, and a wolf of the 'evenings shall spoil them, a leopard shall watch over their cities: every one that goeth out thence shall be torn in pieces: because their transgressions are many, and their backslidings 'are increased.

7 ¶ How shall I pardon thee for this? thy children have forsaken me, and sworn by them that are no gods: when I had fed them to the full, they then committed adultery, and assembled themselves by troops in the harlots' houses.

8 'They were as fed horses in the morning: every one neighed after his neighbour's wife.

9 Shall I not visit for these things? saith the LORD: and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

⁴ Ezek. 22. 11.

11 For the house of Israel and the house of Judah have dealt very treacherously against me, saith the LORD.

12 They have belied the LORD, and said, 'It is not he; neither shall evil come upon us; neither shall we see sword nor famine:

13 And the prophets shall become wind, and the word is not in them: thus shall it be done unto them.

14 Wherefore thus saith the LORD God of hosts, Because ye speak this word, 'behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them.

15 Lo, I will bring a 'nation upon you from far, O house of Israel, saith the LORD: it is a mighty nation, it is an ancient nation, a nation whose language thou knowest not, neither understandest what they say.

16 Their quiver is as an open sepulchre, they are all mighty men.

17 And they shall eat up thine 'harvest, and thy bread, which thy sons and thy daughters should eat: they shall eat up thy flocks and thine herds: they shall eat up thy vines and thy fig trees: they shall impoverish thy fenced cities, wherein thou trustedst, with the sword.

18 Nevertheless in those days, saith the LORD, I 'will not make a full end with you.

19 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when ye shall say, 'Wherefore doeth the LORD our God all these things unto us? then shalt thou answer them, Like as ye have forsaken me, and served strange gods in your land, so shall ye serve strangers in a land that is not your's.

20 Declare this in the house of Jacob, and publish it in Judah, saying,

21 Hear now this, O 'foolish people, and without 'understanding; which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not:

22 Fear ye not me? saith the LORD: will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the sand for the 'bound of the sea by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it: and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it?

23 But this people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart; they are revolted and gone.

24 Neither say they in their heart, Let us now fear the LORD our God, that giveth rain, both the 'former and the latter, in his season: he reserveth unto us the appointed weeks of the harvest.

25 ¶ Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have withholden good things from you.

26 For among my people are found wicked men: 'they lay wait, as he that setteth snares; they set a trap, they catch men.

27 As a 'cage is full of birds, so are their houses full of deceit: therefore they are become great, and waxen rich.

28 They are waxen 'fat, they shine: yea, they overpass the deeds of the wicked: they judge not 'the cause, the cause of the fatherless, yet they prosper; and the right of the needy do they not judge.

29 Shall I not visit for these things? saith the LORD: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

Verse 1. "Broad places."—This, no doubt, means the market-places, and other spacious areas in the city, where citizens used to meet for doing business with each other.—Blayney.

10. "Take away her battlements," &c.—Instead of "battlements," the Vulgate, followed by Blayney and others, read "branches," that is, particularly vine branches, which is certainly the usual meaning given to the word. But as the sense is better sustained by a reference to the walls of Jerusalem, Houbigant and others conclude in favour of that reading which the Seventy must have found in their copies when they translated, "Leave her foundations, for they are the Lord's;" so also the Syriac and Arabic. This perhaps produces a clear sense: and it is a fact that the Babylonians did leave the foundations. The same sense may indeed be elicited from our version; for a command to destroy the battlements, because they were not the Lord's, may be understood as equivalent to an order to leave the foundations, because they were the Lord's.

27. "A cage is full of birds."—There is no intimation in Scripture that the Hebrews kept singing birds in cages; although it might be hazardous, from the mere silence of Scripture, to affirm that they did not. That nothing of the kind is here intended, is evident from the fact that the cage is described as full, which would not be the case were the birds kept to amuse by their singing. From this it is possible that the cage was one in which birds intended for food were kept to be fattened, or what we call a penn; and it was thus understood by the Targum, which renders, "a house or place of fattening." It may however signify a cage in which birds taken by snares or hawking were put till it was full; and the Seventy, by rendering it a snare, seem to understand that it was a kind of decoy in which birds were put to ensnare others, until, with those already in it and those thus taken, it became full. One of these two last senses seems favoured by the context, and by the manner in which the illustration is applied. The word rendered "cage" is the same as the "basket" of Amos, viii. 1, 2; and, in fact, the cages used in the East are a sort of baskets, usually made from the mid-rib of the palm-leaf.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The enemies sent against Judah 4 encourage themselves. 6 God setteth them on work because of their sins. 9 The prophet lamenteth the judgments of God because of their sins. 18 He proclaimeth God's wrath. 26 He calleth the people to mourn for the judgment on their sins.

O YE children of Benjamin, gather yourselves to flee out of the midst of Jerusalem, and blow the trumpet in Tekoa, and set up a sign of fire in Beth-haccerem: for evil appeareth out of the north, and great destruction.

2 I have likened the daughter of Zion to a 'comely and delicate woman.

3 The shepherds with their flocks shall come unto her; they shall pitch their tents against her round about; they shall feed every one in his place.

4 Prepare ye war against her; arise, and let us go up at noon. Woe unto us! for the day goeth away, for the shadows of the evening are stretched out.

5 Arise, and let us go by night, and let us destroy her palaces.

6 ¶ For thus hath the LORD of hosts said, Hew ye down trees, and 'cast a mount against Jerusalem: this is the city to be visited: she is wholly oppression in the midst of her.

7 'As a fountain casteth out her waters, so she casteth out her wickedness: violence and spoil is heard in her; before me continually is grief and wounds.

8 Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul 'depart from thee; lest I make thee desolate, a land not inhabited.

9 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, They shall thoroughly glean the remnant of Israel as a vine: turn back thine hand as a grape-gatherer into the baskets.

10 To whom shall I speak, and give warning, that they may hear? behold, their ear is uncircumcised, and they cannot hearken: behold, the word of the LORD is unto them a reproach; they have no delight in it.

11 Therefore I am full of the fury of the LORD; I am weary with holding in: I will pour it out upon the children abroad, and upon the assembly of young men together: for even the husband with the wife shall be taken, the aged with him that is full of days.

12 And their houses shall be turned unto others, with their fields and wives together: for I will stretch out my hand upon the inhabitants of the land, saith the LORD.

13 For from the least of them even unto the greatest of them every one is given to 'covetousness; and from the prophet even unto the priest every one dealeth falsely.

14 They have 'healed also the 'hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace.

15 Were they 'ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush: therefore they shall fall among them that fall: at the time that I visit them they shall be cast down, saith the LORD.

16 Thus saith the LORD, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the 'old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find 'rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein.

17 Also I set watchmen over you, saying, Harken to the sound of the trumpet. But they said, We will not hearken.

Verse 1. "Beth-haccerem."—This name means, literally, "house of the vineyard." Jerome says that the place was between Jerusalem and Tekoa. The Targum gives the signification, "the house of the valley of vineyards." This valley perhaps took its name from the town, which may have been on a summit of its confining hills. The valley of Beth-haccerem is also mentioned in the Mishnah, which says that its dust was red, and that it became hard when water was poured upon it. R. Kimchi understands the word Beth-haccerem to denote a high tower, such as those in which the keepers of vineyards watched. It was evidently some elevated station, a "sign of fire" kindled on which could be seen afar. The passage clearly shows that it was customary among the Jews, as with other nations, in this manner to telegraph good or evil tidings from tower to tower and mountain to mountain. In the Agamemnon of Æschylus there is a fine passage describing such fire-signals, and the process of transmission, with reference to that series which made known in Greece that Troy was taken. The passage is rather long, but does not admit of abridgment.

"'Twas Vulcan, sending forth the blazing light
From Ida's grove, and thence along the way
Hither the estafette of fire ran quick:
Fire kindled fire, and beacon spoke to beacon,
Ida to Lemnos, and the Hermæan ridge:
Next Athos, craggy mountain, Jove's own steep,
Took the great torch held out by Vulcan's isle.
Standing sublime, the seas to overcast,
Shone the great strength of the transmitted lamp;
And the bright heraldry of burning pines

2 U 2

Shone with a light all golden like the sun
Rising at midnight on Macistus' watch-tower:
Nor did Macistus not bestir him soon,
Oppress'd with sleep, regardless of his watch;
But kindled fires, and sent the beacon blaze
To distance far beyond Euripus' flood,
To watchmen mounted on Messapian hills;
They answer'd blazing, and pass'd on the news,
The grey heath burning on the mountain top.
And now the fiery unobscured lamp,
At distance far shot o'er Asopus' plain;
And up the steep, soft rising like the moon,
Stood spangling bright upon Cithæron's hill.
There rose, to give it conduct on the road,
Another meeting fire; nor did the watch
Sleep at the coming of the stranger light,
But burnt a greater blaze than those before;
Thence o'er the lake Gorgopis stoop'd the light,
And to the mount of Ægiplancton came,
And bad the watch shine forth, nor scant the blaze.
They, burning high with might unquenchable,
Send up the waving beard of fire aloft,
Mighty and huge, so as to cast its blaze
Beyond the glaring promontory steep
Athwart the gulf Saronic all on fire;
Thence stoop'd the light, and reach'd our neighbour
watch-tow'r,
Arachne's summit; and from thence, derived
Here to the Atridæ's palace, comes this light
From the long lineage of the Idæan fire."—SYMMONS.

9. "As a grape gatherer into the baskets."—Harmer doubts that a basket can be intended by the word סל sal, since it would not retain the liquor draining from the bruised grapes. But he is mistaken, since close-wrought baskets are still much used by grape-gatherers in even the vine countries of Europe, although sometimes a wooden dosser is employed. (See Redding on Wines, p. 25.) They are very careful that the grapes shall not be bruised. The form of the baskets in which the Egyptian grape-gatherers put the grapes may be seen in the cuts at the end of Nehemiah.

"Sweet Cane," Andropogon Iwarancusa.

20. "The sweet cane from a far country."—This sweet cane (סֵמֶךְ קֶנֶה kaneh bosem) is the same as our version, following the Septuagint, gives as "sweet calamus" in Exodus xxx. 23, where it is mentioned as one of the ingredients of the holy anointing oil. In the note on that text we have expressed some doubt of its being the acorus calamus of botanists, as is usually considered; and this doubt is not lessened when we consider that sweet cane is said to come from a far country, whereas this plant is common in Western Asia and various parts of continental Europe, and is even found wild in many parts of England. Besides, the acorus calamus is separately described, under the name of akorus, by both Theophrastus and Dioscorides; and it does not by any means exhibit the qualities of the "sweet calamus," in the strength and perfection which the ancient accounts require. Pliny says that the best calamus aromaticus came from Syria; but since the sacred writers, who were natives, tell us that it came thither from "a far country," and since nothing is known as a product of Syria which bears any comparison with the sweet calamus of Scripture, there can be no reasonable doubt that it was one of the precious products of India which reached Syria by the Euphrates or the Red Sea. Much hesitation has however been felt in determining to what Indian plant the character of the "sweet cane" should be assigned. In introducing the above engraving, we have been guided by the opinion of Dr. Royle, who thinks that the valuable perfume of ancient commerce was probably afforded by it, and also by another closely-allied species, named by him Andropogon calamus aromaticus. ('Essay on the Antiquity of Hindoo Medicine,' pp. 33, 82.) Of this last plant we have been unable to find any representation. Dr. Royle is of opinion that there is no plant which more exactly coincides with all which the accounts of the sacred writers and of Theophrastus and Dioscorides require. It covers the extensive arid plains of Central India, a country interspersed with large and numerous lakes, and therefore resembling that described by Theophrastus as the country in which the sweet calamus grows. The present plant was first figured in the Philosophical Transactions for 1790, from a dried specimen sent to Sir Gilbert Blane, by his brother at Lucknow. It is there accompanied by such information as Sir Gilbert had obtained from his brother, who, in his letter, states the occasion on which it was brought under his notice. In December, 1786, when on a hunting excursion with the Nabob Vizier, towards the Northern mountains, he was one day surprised by perceiving the air perfumed with an aromatic odour, and upon asking the cause, he was told it proceeded from the grass trodden and bruised by the feet of the elephants and horses of the Nabob's retinue. This induced Mr. Blane to collect some of the roots and plant them in his garden at Lucknow, where they thrived, and, in the rainy season, shot up spikes six feet in height, one of which was the specimen sent by him to his brother.

Mr. Hatchett, F.R.S., has lately issued a paper ('On the Spikenard of the Ancients') describing the precious oil, obtained, as he considered, from this plant (Andropogon Iwarancusa), but more probably from its neighbour, the A. calamus aromaticus of Royle, and which he follows Sir Gilbert Blane in referring to the spikenard, rather than the sweet calamus of the ancients. This account is interesting for its notice of the products for which "the sweet cane of a far country" was so famed in ancient times. The information he supplies was obtained from Mr. Swinton, who, when at Malwah, was attacked by severe rheumatism, and, after much suffering, found relief by employing, at the suggestion of some of the principal natives, as an embrocation, a precious oil, called by them Rhonsee ke Teel ('oil of grass'). This proved to be the product of the plant in question. Mr. Swinton made this valuable oil known at Calcutta; previously to which the knowledge of it appears to have been confined to the district in which it is prepared. The oil is regarded by the natives as a valuable external remedy; and an infusion of the plant is esteemed a powerful medicine in all kinds of fever. The oil is so highly fragrant that insects will not approach it; and the odour of the plant itself is so powerful, that although camels will eat almost any vegetable, yet they will not browse on this.

The oil is obtained from the spikes, which, when ripe, are cut, with a portion of the stem, about one foot in length, and are then subjected to distillation. Mr. Swinton was informed that the oil has been prepared by the natives, in and about Malwah, from time immemorial, at first, probably, by the Parsees, although, at present, it is entirely in the hands of the Borahs, a very commercial sect, whose chief resides at Surat. Only a small quantity of this precious oil is consumed by the natives, the greater part being now, as was the case in very remote times (according to tradition), sent as an article of commerce to Arabia.

It is further stated by Mr. Hatchett, from Mr. Swinton's information, that although the plants are found in other parts of India, as well as in Malwah, yet those which grow about the Jaum Ghaut are preferred, and are gathered in the month of October, when the seeds forming the ears or spikes are become fully ripe. At that season, however, the jungle fever is so prevalent in the places where this plant is produced, that the peasantry who collect it will not expose their health and lives to very imminent danger, unless tempted by very high remuneration: this, and not the scarcity of the plant, appears to be the cause of the high price which the oil bears, and which, consequently, precludes it from being used by any excepting the superior class of natives.

29. "The bellows."—Bellows are scarcely at all used in the East, except by workers of metal. The mouth is there much employed for common purposes, where bellows would be used in England. When a stronger blast was required than could be given by blowing naturally with the mouth, a hollow reed, and afterwards a metal tube, seems to have been at first employed, through which the blast from the mouth was impelled. In the figures of Rosellini, from Egyptian paintings, we sometimes observe such tubes in action, some of them terminating in a sort of funnel. The most complicated and apparently effective implement of this class is shown in our cut, from Rosellini. The manner of the operation in these bellows is best seen in the cut. The men are heating a vessel over a charcoal fire, to each side of which is applied a pair of bellows. These are worked by the feet, the operator standing upon and pressing them alternately, while he pulls up each exhausted skin by a string he holds in his hand. In one instance the man has left the bellows, which are raised as if full of air; which would imply a knowledge of the valve. (See Wilkinson's 'Topography of Thebes,' p. 155.) Our common bellows, consisting of two boards joined together by a piece of leather, were known very early to the Greeks; and it also appears, from a representation on an ancient Roman lamp, engraved in Montfaucon, that even the wooden bellows were not anciently unknown; although Beckmann affirms that they were invented in the seventeenth (or perhaps the sixteenth) century, by the Germans.

"The lead is consumed of the fire, &c."—The description here given by the prophet seems to be very well explained by the process called "cupellation;" in which the precious metal, known to be combined with metals of a baser kind, is put, together with a due proportion of lead, into a shallow crucible, made of burnt bones, called a cupel; after which the fusion or melting of the two metals is effected by exposing them to a considerable degree of heat in a muffle, or a small earthen oven, fixed in the midst of a furnace. The lead, during this exposure, vitrifies or becomes converted into a glassy calx, which dissolves and attracts all the imperfect metals, and leaves the precious metal free from alloys. In the instance alluded to by the prophet, all the lead had been consumed, and the bellows burnt up in urging the fire of the furnace, but no scorix were seen running down the sides of the cupel, to inform the operator that all was going on well. Every method of chastisement had been tried, every species of instruction exhausted, but no reformation, no amendment, no repentance succeeded.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Jeremiah is sent to call for true repentance, to prevent the Jews' captivity. 8 He rejecteth their vain confidence, 12 by the example of Shiloh. 17 He threateneth them for their idolatry. 21 He rejecteth the sacrifices of the disobedient. 29 He exhorteth to mourn for their abominations in Tophet, 32 and the judgments for the same.

THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Stand in the gate of the LORD's house, and proclaim there this word, and say, Hear the word of the LORD, all ye of Judah, that enter in at these gates to worship the LORD.

3 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, 'Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place.

4 Trust ye not in lying words, saying, The temple of the LORD, The temple of the LORD, The temple of the LORD, are these.

5 For if ye thoroughly amend your ways and your doings; if ye thoroughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbour;

6 If ye oppress not the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, and shed not innocent blood in this place, neither walk after other gods to your hurt:

7 Then will I cause you to dwell in this place, in the land that I gave to your fathers, for ever and ever.

8 ¶ Behold, ye trust in lying words, that cannot profit.

9 Will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, and walk after other gods whom ye know not ;

10 And come and stand before me in this house, ²which is called by my name, and say, We are delivered to do all these abominations ?

11 Is ³this house, which is called by my name, become a 'den of robbers in your eyes ? Behold, even I have seen it, saith the LORD.

12 But go ye now unto my place which was in Shiloh, where I set my name at the first, and see ⁴what I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel.

13 And now, because ye have done all these works, saith the LORD, and I spake unto you, rising up early and speaking, but ye heard not ; and I ⁵called you, but ye answered not ;

14 Therefore will I do unto this house, which is called by my name, wherein ye trust, and unto the place which I gave to you and to your fathers, as I have done to ⁶Shiloh.

15 And I will cast you out of my sight, as I have cast out all your brethren, even the whole seed of Ephraim.

16 Therefore ⁷pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me : for I will not hear thee.

17 ¶ Seest thou not what they do in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem ?

18 ⁸The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough, to make cakes to the ⁹queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings unto other gods, that they may provoke me to anger.

19 Do they provoke me to anger ? saith the LORD : do they not provoke themselves to the confusion of their own faces ?

20 Therefore thus saith the Lord God ; Behold, mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man, and upon beast, and upon the trees of the field, and upon the fruit of the ground ; and it shall burn, and shall not be quenched.

21 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel ; ¹⁰Put your burnt offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh.

22 For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, ¹¹concerning burnt offerings or sacrifices :

23 But this thing commanded I them, saying, ¹²Obey my voice, and ¹³I will be your God, and ye shall be my people : and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you.

24 But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but walked in the counsels and in the ¹⁴imagination of their evil heart, and ¹⁵went backward, and not forward.

25 Since the day that your fathers came forth out of the land of Egypt unto this day I have even ¹⁶sent unto you all my servants the prophets, daily rising up early and sending them :

26 Yet they hearkened not unto me, nor inclined their ear, but ¹⁷hardened their neck : they did worse than their fathers.

27 Therefore thou shalt speak all these words unto them ; but they will not hearken to thee : thou shalt also call unto them ; but they will not answer thee.

28 But thou shalt say unto them, This is a nation that obeyeth not the voice of the LORD their God, nor receiveth ¹⁸correction : truth is perished, and is cut off from their mouth.

29 ¶ Cut off thine hair, O Jerusalem, and cast it away, and take up a lamentation on high places ; for the LORD hath rejected and forsaken the generation of his wrath.

30 For the children of Judah have done evil in my sight, saith the LORD : they have set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to pollute it.

31 And they have built the ¹⁹high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire ; which I commanded them not, neither ²⁰came it into my heart.

Verse 18. "Make cakes to the queen of heaven."—The heathen writers consider that the first offerings to their gods consisted of the simple products of the field; then, as a further progress, of cakes baked with salt, and honey, oil, and wine; to which, in due course, followed animal sacrifices. Some of the idols, however, always continued to be honoured with cakes only; and others, to whom animal victims were offered, received also offerings of cakes. Horace finely alludes to the practice:

"A graceful cake, when on the hallow'd shrine
Offer'd by hands that know no guilty stain,
Shall reconcile th' offended powers divine,
When bleeds the pompous hecatomb in vain."

The act of these apostate Israelites was thus notoriously idolatrous; but it may be hard to say whether this cake offering was intended as a substitute for an animal sacrifice, or as a presentation offering, to be laid before the idol, like the shew-bread in the Temple, of which it was perhaps a most profane imitation. Our present cut, from specimens in Mr. Salt's collection, will be considered interesting, as showing the forms which the Egyptians gave to their cakes, and which probably offer a resemblance to the present and other cakes mentioned in Scripture.

There has been some discussion as to the idol intended by the title of "the queen of heaven;" but that it was the moon, is the most common and seems the most probable opinion.

1 The calamity of the Jews, both dead and alive. 4 He upbraideth their foolish and shameless impenitency. 13 He sheweth their grievous judgment, 18 and bewaileth their desperate estate.

At that time, saith the LORD, they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the bones of his princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets, and the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves:

2 And they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the host of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped: they shall not be gathered, nor be buried; they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth.

3 And death shall be chosen rather than life by all the residue of them that remain of this evil family, which remain in all the places whither I have driven them, saith the LORD of hosts.

4 ¶ Moreover thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD; Shall they fall, and not arise? shall he turn away, and not return?

5 Why then is this people of Jerusalem slidden back by a perpetual backsliding? they hold fast deceit, they refuse to return.

6 I hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright: no man repented him of his wickedness, saying, What have I done? every one turned to his course, as the horse rusheth into the battle.

"Turtle" (טוֹר tur).—The Columba turtur is found in all the warmer climates, from whence it follows the sun in his progress towards the tropic, and visits higher latitudes, to adorn and usher in the spring. The turtle is remarkable for the elegance and delicacy of its form, and is from ancient usage associated in our minds with everything that is tender, chaste, and attractive. It is a bird of passage, hence its appearance in certain places is among the indications of spring—a circumstance interwoven in that charming description of that season which occurs in Canticles ii. 11—13. The turtle visits this country, and after having reared her young in the seclusion of our woods, retires, in September, to pass the winter under softer skies.

"Crane" (עֲנָן agur).—The Grus cinerea of Linnæus has long been celebrated for the wisdom and foresight displayed in its migrations. It is spread over all the regions of the old continent, taking shelter in the warmer parts in the winter, from whence it proceeds in the spring to its well-known haunts and breeding-place. The crane belongs to the long-legged order of birds, called Grallatores, that find their prey by wading in the water. It is a noble bird, with a fine sweeping tail, and plumage of a dark grey colour, except on the crown of the head, which is bare, and tinted with red. It constructs its nest among the reeds, flags, and river herbage, which fringe the banks of watery places. The eggs are two in number, and are of a pale dull greenish colour, blotched with brown. There is a peculiar turn, and as it were a doubling, in the trachæa or windpipe, intended, as it would seem, to give an extraordinary force to the vocal efforts of the bird, insomuch that its voice can be often heard while the individual is soaring far beyond the ken of the gazer's eye.

"Swallow" (שׁוֹרֵס sis; Sept. χελιδων agrou).—The Hirundo rustica of Linnæus, which is too well known, in form and habits, to render a particular notice necessary on this occasion.

CRANE (Grus cinerea).

This bird, which remains with us till October, is said to winter in Africa, so that its object is evidently a warmer climate. It is remarkable that the birds of this tribe, when they revisit us in spring, return to their old haunts. Dr. Jenner ascertained this by cutting off two claws from the foot of a certain number, several of which were found in the following year, and one was met with after the expiration of seven years. (See Kirby's 'Bridgewater Treatise.') This is true also of the storks, as we observed the same pair return, in successive years, to the nest they had constructed upon the wind-chimney of a house we inhabited at Bagdad.

The subject of the migration of birds, which is several times referred to in the Scripture, is one of great interest; and has been employed by writers on natural theology, as furnishing striking evidence of design and wisdom in the creation and organization of living things. The devout reader of the Bible needs no such evidence; yet even to him there is much in it that may be made valuable, and which he will feel to be beautiful. As Mr. Kirby, in his 'Bridgewater Treatise,' has taken up the subject with this view, we have judged it proper to derive from him the substance of the few observations for which we can find room.

Although the instances of migration here mentioned by the prophet, are those most popularly known, the practice operates to a far greater extent than is usually supposed; and if Dr. Richardson's scale for North America be taken as a rule of more extended application, it may be estimated that the number of the birds which migrate, as compared with those which reside the whole year in a country, is about five-sixths; a very large proportion, but which is doubtless less in some latitudes than in others. As the summer residents are replaced by winter ones, the desertion is less apparent and annoying than it would be otherwise. It has usually been conceived that the cause of such extensive migration was to be sought no further than in the changes of temperature, gradually produced by the progress of the seasons, and the growing scarcity of food resulting from it. But this cannot be the sole or universal cause, since there are birds which leave us early in the year, when no cold can be felt, and even when the food of the particular species is most abundant. From such and other observations, the celebrated Dr. Jenner arrived at the conclusion (stated in a posthumous paper, published in the 'Philosophical Transactions,' 1824) that the periodical migrations of birds are the result, not of the approach of the cold or hot seasons, but of the absence or presence of a stimulus connected with the original law, "Increase and multiply:"—and that when they feel this stimulus, they seek the summer, and when it ceases its action, their winter quarters. In one case, the bird winging its way to a climate and country best suited to the great purpose impressed upon it by the Creator, of producing and rearing a progeny; and, in the other, returning to a home most congenial to its nature and best supplying its wants. It will be difficult to withhold assent from this comprehensive principle, after a perusal of the various arguments and corroborations adduced by Dr. Jenner, and which we are necessarily constrained to omit.

We cannot omit the observations with which Mr. Kirby concludes his general view of this instructive and interesting subject:—

"If we give the subject of the migration of animals due consideration, and reflect what would be the consequence if no animals ever changed their quarters, we shall find abundant reason for thankfulness to the Almighty Father of the Universe, for the care he has taken of his whole family, and of his creature man in particular, consulting not only his sustentation and the gratification of his palate, by multiplying and varying his food, but also that of his other senses, by the beauty, motions, and music of the animals that are his summer or winter visitors: did the nightingale forsake our groves; the swallow, our houses and gardens; the cod-fish, mackerel, salmon, and herring, our seas; and all the other animals that occasionally visit their several haunts, how vast would be the abstraction from the pleasure and comfort of our lives!

"By means of these migrations, the profits and enjoyments derivable from the animal creation are also more equally divided—at one season visiting the south, and enlivening their winter; and at another adding to the vernal and summer delights of the inhabitants of the less genial regions of the north, and making up to them for the privations of winter. Had the Creator so willed, all these animals might have been organized so as not to require a warmer or a colder climate for the breeding or rearing of their young: but his will was, that some of his best gifts should thus oscillate, as it were, between two points, that the benefits they conferred might be the more widely distributed, and not become the sole property of the inhabitants of one climate: thus the swallow gladdens the sight both of the Briton and African; and the herring visits the coasts, and the salmon the rivers of every region of the globe. What can more strongly mark design, and the intention of an all-powerful, all-wise, and beneficent Being, than that such a variety of animals should be so organized and circumstanced as to be directed annually, by some pressing want, to seek distant climates; and, after a certain period, to return again to their former quarters; and that this instinct should be productive of so much good to mankind, and at the same time be necessary, under its present circumstances, for the preservation or propagation of the species of these several animals."

¹ Oh ² that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!

² Oh that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of wayfaring men; that I might leave my people, and go from them! for they be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men.

³ And they bend their tongues like their bow for lies: but they are not valiant for the truth upon the earth; for they proceed from evil to evil, and they know not me, saith the LORD.

⁴ Take ye heed every one of his neighbour, and trust ye not in any brother: for every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbour will walk with slanders.

⁵ And they will ⁶ deceive every one his neighbour, and will not speak the truth: they have taught their tongue to speak lies, and weary themselves to commit iniquity.

⁶ Thine habitation is in the midst of deceit; through deceit they refuse to know me, saith the LORD.

⁷ Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, I will melt them, and try them; for how shall I do for the daughter of my people?

⁸ Their tongue is as an arrow shot out; it speaketh ⁹ deceit: one speaketh ¹⁰ peaceably to his neighbour with his mouth, but ¹¹ in heart he layeth ¹² his wait.

⁹ ¶ ¹⁰ Shall I not visit them for these things? saith the LORD: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

¹⁰ For the mountains will I take up a weeping and wailing, and for the ¹¹ habitations of the wilderness a lamentation, because they are ¹² burned up, so that none can pass through them; neither can men hear the voice of the cattle; ¹³ both the fowl of the heavens and the beast are fled; they are gone.

¹¹ And I will make Jerusalem heaps, and ¹⁴ a den of dragons; and I will make the cities of Judah ¹⁵ desolate, without an inhabitant.

¹² ¶ Who is the wise man, that may understand this? and who is he to whom the mouth of the LORD hath spoken, that he may declare it, for what the land perisheth and is burned up like a wilderness, that none passeth through?

¹³ And the LORD saith, Because they have forsaken my law which I set before them, and have not obeyed my voice, neither walked therein;

¹⁴ But have walked after the ¹⁶ imagination of their own heart, and after Baalim, which their fathers taught them:

¹⁵ Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will feed them, even this people, ¹⁷ with wormwood, and give them water of gall to drink.

¹⁶ I will ¹⁸ scatter them also among the heathen, whom neither they nor their fathers have known: and I will send a sword after them, till I have consumed them.

¹⁷ ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Consider ye, and call for the mourning women, that they may come; and send for cunning women, that they may come:

Verse 17. "Call for the mourning women."—This, with several other passages of Scripture, evidently refers to the very ancient and still subsisting custom of hiring professed mourners to lament over the dead. The Jewish doctors acknowledge the custom, and inform us that it was so common, that the poorest man in Israel, when his wife died, never had less than two pipes and one mourning woman. The root of this rather singular though very prevalent custom seems to be, that the eastern nations require manifestations of strong feeling to be marked, palpable, and exaggerated. Hence their emotions, particularly those of grief, have a most violent and loud expression; and still unsatisfied, and apprehensive that their own spontaneous manifestations of sorrow, when a death occurred, were inadequate to the occasion, and rendered insufficient honour to the dead, they thought of employing practised women to add their effective and manifest tributes of apparent grief. Thus mourning became an art, which devolved on women of shrill voices, copious of tears, and skilful in lamenting and praising the dead in mournful songs and eulogies. When a person in a family died, it was customary for the female relatives to seat themselves upon the ground in a separate apartment, in a circle, in the centre of which sat the wife, daughter, or other nearest relative, and thus, assisted by the mourning women, conducted their loud and piercing lamentations. At intervals, the mourning women took the leading part, on a signal from the chief mourner; and then the real mourners remained comparatively silent, but attested their grief by sobs, by beating their faces, tearing their hair, and sometimes wounding their persons with their nails, joining also aloud in the lamenting chorus of the hired mourners. Mr. Lane's account of the existing practice in Egypt is very illustrative. "The family of the deceased generally send for two or more neddábehs (or public wailing women); but some persons disapprove of this custom; and many, to avoid unnecessary expense, do not conform with it. Each neddábeh brings with her a tár (or tambourine), which is without the tinkling plates of metal that are attached to the hoops of the common tár. The neddábehs, beating their társ, exclaim several times, 'Alas for him!' and praise his turban, his handsome person, &c.; and the female relations, domestics, and friends of the deceased (with their tresses dishevelled, and sometimes with rent clothes), beating their own faces, cry in like manner, 'Alas for him!' This wailing is generally continued at least an hour." It is of course resumed at intervals. The details vary in different parts of the East, and in some places the musicians form a separate body, as they did among the Hebrews.

The custom of employing hired mourners was also in use among the Greeks and Romans, who probably borrowed it from the East. Some of the Roman usages may contribute to illustrate those of Scripture. When a person expired whom his relatives or friends wished to honour by every external testimony of grief, some mourners were called, who were stationed at the door, and who, being instructed in the leading circumstances of the life of the deceased, composed and chanted eulogies having some reference to these circumstances, but in which flattery was by no means spared. Then, when the time arrived for the body to be carried to the funeral pile, a choir of hired mourners attended, who by their bare breasts, which they often smote, their dishevelled hair, and their mournful chants, and profuse tears, moved, or sought to move, the minds of the spectators in favour of the deceased, and to compassion for his bereaved friends, whose respect for his memory their own presence indeed indicated. These women were under the direction of one who bore the title of præfica, who regulated the time and tone of their lamentations. They were attired in the black robe of mourning and affliction called by the Romans pulla. It will be observed that, as intimated by the prophet in the next verse, a principal object of the displays of the hired mourners was to rouse the sorrow of the bereaved relatives, maintaining the excitement of affliction by enumerating the virtues and qualities of the deceased, as well as, by the same means, to excite the sympathising lamentations of those not immediately interested in the event. It needs actual observation of the levity or indifference which these hired mourners resume, when their service has ended, to be convinced that there was nothing sincere in the real tears which they shed, and in the "lamentation, mourning, and woe" which they pour forth in the chamber of grief, or when following the dead one to the grave.

CHAPTER X.

¹ The unequal comparison of God and idols. ¹⁷ The prophet exhorteth to flee from the calamity to come. ¹⁹ He lamenteth the spoil of the tabernacle by foolish pastors. ²³ He maketh an humble supplication.

HEAR ye the word which the LORD speaketh unto you, O house of Israel :

2 Thus saith the LORD, Learn not the way of the heathen, and be not dismayed at the signs of heaven ; for the heathen are dismayed at them.

3 For the ¹customs of the people are vain : for one cutteth a tree out of the forest, the work of the hands of the workman, with the ax.

4 They deck it with silver and with gold ; they fasten it with nails and with hammers, that it move not.

5 They are upright as the palm tree, ²but speak not : they must needs be ³borne, because they cannot go. Be not afraid of them ; for ⁴they cannot do evil, neither also is it in them to do good.

6 Forasmuch as there is none ⁵like unto thee, O LORD ; thou art great, and thy name is great in might.

7 ⁶Who would not fear thee, O King of nations ? for ⁷to thee doth it appertain : forasmuch as among all the wise men of the nations, and in all their kingdoms, there is none like unto thee.

8 But they are ⁸altogether ⁹brutish and foolish : the stock is a doctrine of vanities.

9 Silver spread into plates is brought from Tarshish, and gold from Uphaz, the work of the workman, and of the hands of the founder : blue and purple is their clothing : they are all the work of cunning men.

10 But the LORD is the ¹⁰true God, he is the living God, and an ¹¹everlasting king : at his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation.

11 Thus shall ye say unto them, The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth, even they shall perish from the earth, and from under these heavens.

12 He ¹²hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heavens by his discretion.

13 When he uttereth his voice, there is a ¹³multitude of waters in the heavens, and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth ; he maketh lightnings ¹⁴with rain, and bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures.

14 Every man ¹⁵is ¹⁶brutish in his knowledge : every founder is confounded by the graven image : for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them.

15 They are vanity, and the work of errors : in the time of their visitation they shall perish.

16 ¹⁷The portion of Jacob is not like them : for he is the former of all things ; and Israel is the rod of his inheritance : The LORD of hosts is his name.

17 ¶ Gather up thy wares out of the land, O ¹⁸inhabitant of the fortress.

18 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will sling out the inhabitants of the land at this once, and will distress them, that they may find it so.

19 ¶ Woe is me for my hurt ! my wound is grievous : but I said, Truly this is a grief, and I must bear it.

20 My tabernacle is spoiled, and all my cords are broken : my children are gone forth of me, and they are not : there is none to stretch forth my tent any more, and to set up my curtains.

21 For the pastors are become brutish, and have not sought the LORD : therefore they shall not prosper, and all their flocks shall be scattered.

Verse 2. "Be not dismayed at the signs of heaven."—This is generally applied to astrology; but we should rather think it to refer to those unusual natural phenomena, such as eclipses, which in the ancient superstitions certainly did "dismay the heathen," being regarded by them as the harbingers and tokens of great public calamities. Many instances of the dismay which eclipses inspired might be cited. We may quote two of them. Nicias, the Athenian general, had determined to quit Sicily with his army; but an eclipse of the moon happening at that juncture, filled him with such alarm that he lost the favourable moment. This was the occasion of his own death and the ruin of his army; and this was so unhappy a loss to the Athenians, that the decline of their state may perhaps be dated from that event. Even the army of Alexander, before the battle of Arbela, was so frightened at an eclipse of the moon, that the soldiers, deeming it a sign that the gods were displeased at the enterprise of their leader, refused to proceed on their march from the Tigris, till assured by the Egyptian soothsayers that an eclipse of the moon was an omen of peculiar evil to their enemies the Persians. R. Jarchi expressly refers the present text to the terror which eclipses occasioned.

9. "Uphaz."—This is probably the same as Ophir.

"Blue and purple is their clothing."—This of course alludes to the idol-statues, and to the custom of clothing them with real dresses of rich stuffs. This was a very ancient and general practice, which still subsists in Pagan Asia, where may be seen pagodas full of coloured images, clothed in costly manufactured stuffs and ornaments. This practice arose in the early state of the imitative art, or rather it exemplifies imitation without art; and scarcely perhaps even imitation—being rather the repetition of a reality. Although this practice was peculiarly in Asiatic taste, and was in its origin a substitute for skilful imitation by art, we have ample evidence of its existence in Europe; and, as consecrated by antiquity and appropriated to particular idols, of its being retained and extensively displayed in Greece and Rome, even when the art of sculpture had attained its most perfect condition. Pausanias mentions numerous statues thus attired in the various cities of Greece which he visited; and there is much other testimony to the same effect. Tertullian says, that the gods and goddesses, like opulent females, had ministers particularly entrusted with the duty of arraying their images. The practice ment; not in thine anger, lest thou ²³bring me to nothing.

25 ²⁴"Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy name: for they have eaten up Jacob, and devoured him, and consumed him, and have made his habitation desolate.

was far more general than is commonly supposed; for not only were imperfect statues, made to be dressed, thus attired, but perfect and highly-finished ones of bronze and marble. Vopiscus has an anecdote, which furnishes a very striking illustration of the present text. Sextus Julius Saturninus, a general under Probus, having been saluted as Augustus at Alexandria, and wishing to avoid this dangerous honour, retired into Palestine. But he was there also assailed by the soldiers, who extorted from him a reluctant acquiescence; when, in their haste to invest him with the ensigns of his imperial rank, they divested a statue of Venus of its purple robe, and covered with it the new emperor.

However strange this practice of clothing statues with real draperies may appear to us; there can be no doubt that it told effectively upon the minds of the undiscerning multitude, to whom the less there was of art, the more perfect was the illusion. Images so arrayed were thus adapted to impress upon their credulous minds the sense of a material existence, effective and local, in the god which was thus placed before them in a palpable form, invested with the attributes of reality and life. Thus the superstitious spirit of all idolatry concurred with the attachment to ancient customs to keep up this usage. And a still more operative reason was found in the interest of the priests, who derived no small profits from the robes and ornaments which were lavishly offered by the devotees, and which, when they had been a little worn by the idols, became their due. It seems that, at least in some instances, the illusion was carried on so far, that the dresses of the idols were changed according to the season. Thus Pausanias mentions a brazen statue of Neptune at Elis, which was about the size of a large man, and was clad sometimes in woollen raiment, and at others in linen and byssus. There is much information in this and other matters concerning the ancient idols in the sixth chapter of the Apocryphal book of Baruch. Of the Babylonian idols it is said, "Whose gold, and silver, and garments wherewith they are clothed, they that are strong do take, neither are they able to help themselves." . . . "The priests also take off their garments to clothe their wives and children." . . . "And ye shall know them to be no gods by the bright purple that rotteth upon them" (verses 32, 58, 72). See 'Le Jupiter Olympien,' par M. Quatremère de Quincy, par. 2; where this subject is fully and very ably investigated.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Jeremiah proclaimeth God's covenant, 8 rebuketh the Jews' disobeying thereof, 11 prophesieth evils to come upon them, 18 and upon the men of Anathoth, for conspiring to kill Jeremiah.

THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Hear ye the words of this covenant, and speak unto the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem;

3 And say thou unto them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel; 'Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this covenant,

4 Which I commanded your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, from the iron furnace, saying, ²Obey my voice, and do them, according to all which I command you: so shall ye be my people, and I will be your God:

5 That I may perform the ³oath which I have sworn unto your fathers, to give them a land flowing with milk and honey, as it is this day. Then answered I, and said, 'So be it, O LORD.

6 Then the LORD said unto me, Proclaim all these words in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, saying, Hear ye the words of this covenant, and do them.

7 For I earnestly protested unto your fathers in the day that I brought them up out of the land of Egypt, even unto this day, rising early and protesting, saying, Obey my voice.

8 Yet they obeyed not, nor inclined their ear, but walked every one in the ⁴imagination of their evil heart: therefore I will bring upon them all the words of this covenant, which I commanded them to do; but they did them not.

9 And the LORD said unto me, A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah, and among the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

10 They are turned back to the iniquities of their forefathers, which refused to hear my words; and they went after other gods to serve them: the house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken my covenant which I made with their fathers.

11 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able ⁵to escape; and ⁶though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them.

12 Then shall the cities of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem go, and cry unto the gods unto whom they offer incense: but they shall not save them at all in the time of their ⁷trouble.

13 For according to the number of thy ⁸cities were thy gods, O Judah; and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up altars to that ⁹shameful thing, even altars to burn incense unto Baal.

14 Therefore ¹⁰pray not thou for this people, neither lift up a cry or prayer for them: for I will not hear them in the time that they cry unto me for their ¹¹trouble.

15 ¹²¹³¹⁴What hath my beloved to do in mine house, seeing she hath wrought lewdness with many, and the holy flesh is passed from thee? ¹⁵when thou doest evil, then thou rejoicest.

16 The LORD called thy name, A green olive tree, fair, and of goodly fruit: with the noise of a great tumult he hath kindled fire upon it, and the branches of it are broken.

17 For the LORD of hosts, that planted thee, hath pronounced evil against thee, for the evil of the house of Israel and of the house of Judah, which they have done against themselves to provoke me to anger in offering incense unto Baal.

18 ¶ And the LORD hath given me knowledge of it, and I know it: then thou shewedst me their doings.

19 But I was like a lamb or an ox that is brought to the slaughter; and I knew not that they had devised devices against me, saying, Let us destroy ¹⁶the tree with the fruit thereof, and let us cut him off from the land of the living, that his name may be no more remembered.

20 But, O LORD of hosts, that judgest righteously, that ¹⁷triest the reins and the heart, let me see thy vengeance on them: for unto thee have I revealed my cause.

21 Therefore thus saith the LORD of the men of Anathoth, that seek thy life, saying, Prophecy not in the name of the LORD, that thou die not by our hand:

22 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, I will ¹⁸punish them: the young men shall die by the sword; their sons and their daughters shall die by famine:

23 And there shall be no remnant of them: for I will bring evil upon the men of Anathoth, even the year of their visitation.

Verse 13. "According to the number of thy cities were thy gods."—This seems to indicate about the lowest depth of idolatry. This deplorable manifestation of the corruption of the Hebrews was evidently borrowed from their heathen neighbours, among whom there were not only certain great gods worshipped everywhere in common, but others who were honoured as the tutelary divinities of particular towns; and there was scarcely any town without one. Some of these idols were little known beyond the town or district in which they were specially honoured. The gods particularly selected as tutelary divinities were such as, from some cause or other, were supposed to regard the place with peculiar favour; and many were believed to have been born in the towns they protected. This practice certainly existed among all the nations bordering on Palestine; but it is best known to us as existing among the Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans. There are instances in Scripture of the disposition of the heathen to regard JEHOVAH as such a god as this, without allowing that he alone was entitled to the general and exclusive worship of mankind. See 2 Kings xvii., and the note there.

CHAPTER XII.

1 Jeremiah, complaining of the wicked's prosperity, by faith seeth their ruin. 5 God admonisheth him of his brethren's treachery against him, 7 and lameneth his heritage. 14 He promiseth to the penitent return from captivity.

RIGHTEOUS art thou, O LORD, when I plead with thee: yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments: Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper? wherefore are all they happy that deal very treacherously?

2 Thou hast planted them, yea, they have taken root: they grow, yea, they bring forth fruit: thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins.

3 But thou, O LORD, knowest me: thou hast seen me, and tried mine heart toward thee: pull them out like sheep for the slaughter, and prepare them for the day of slaughter.

4 How long shall the land mourn, and the herbs of every field wither, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein? the beasts are consumed, and the birds; because they said, He shall not see our last end.

5 ¶ If thou hast run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, then how canst thou contend with horses? and if in the land of peace, wherein thou trustedst, they wearied thee, then how wilt thou do in the swelling of Jordan?

6 For even thy brethren, and the house of thy father, even they have dealt treacherously with thee; yea, they have called a multitude after thee: believe them not, though they speak fair words unto thee.

7 ¶ I have forsaken mine house, I have left mine heritage; I have given the dearly beloved of my soul into the hand of her enemies.

8 Mine heritage is unto me as a lion in the forest; it crieth out against me: therefore have I hated it.

9 Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird, the birds round about are against her; come ye, assemble all the beasts of the field, come to devour.

10 Many pastors have destroyed my vineyard, they have trodden my portion under foot, they have made my pleasant portion a desolate wilderness.

11 They have made it desolate, and being desolate it mourneth unto me; the whole land is made desolate, because no man layeth it to heart.

12 The spoilers are come upon all high places through the wilderness: for the sword of the LORD shall devour from the one end of the land even to the other end of the land: no flesh shall have peace.

13 They have sown wheat, but shall reap thorns: they have put themselves to pain, but shall not profit: and they shall be ashamed of your revenues because of the fierce anger of the LORD.

14 ¶ Thus saith the LORD against all mine evil neighbours, that touch the inheritance which I have caused my people Israel to inherit; Behold, I will pluck them out of their land, and pluck out the house of Judah from among them.

15 And it shall come to pass, after that I have plucked them out I will return, and have compassion on them, and will bring them again, every man to his heritage, and every man to his land.

16 And it shall come to pass, if they will diligently learn the ways of my people, to

Verse 5. "Run with the footmen," &c.—There is perhaps an allusion here to the running footmen, concerning whom an explanation has been given under 1 Sam. viii. 11, which we are now enabled to illustrate by a suitable engraving.

9. "A speckled bird."—The words (הַעֵיט צִבּוֹא) ha-ait tzeboa) have occasioned considerable perplexity to the interpreters of Scripture. The Seventy render it "hyena" (ὑαίνη), which is sanctioned by the use of the word tzeboa in the Arabic, and is followed by Bochart, Gesenius, Boothroyd, and many others. In the language of the Talmud it means a she leopard or panther. But then some difficulty arises from the fact that עֵיט usually denotes birds of prey, and the above explanations render it necessary that it should be a beast in the present instance. This consideration operated so strongly with Dr. Blayney, that he translates "the bird tzeboa," not professing to understand what bird the tzeboa was. Jerome supposes it was the peacock, and various doubtful alternatives of speckled or spotted birds have been suggested by others.

A PERSIAN DIGNITARY ATTENDED BY RUNNING FOOTMEN.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 In the type of a linen girdle, hidden at Euphrates, God prefigureth the destruction of his people. 12 Under the parable of the bottles filled with wine he foretelleth their drunkenness in misery. 15 He exhorteth to prevent their future judgments. 22 He sheweth their abominations are the cause thereof.

THUS saith the LORD unto me, Go and get thee a linen girdle, and put it upon thy loins, and put it not in water.

2 So I got a girdle according to the word of the LORD, and put it on my loins.

3 And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying,

4 Take the girdle that thou hast got, which is upon thy loins, and arise, go to Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock.

5 So I went, and hid it by Euphrates, as the LORD commanded me.

6 And it came to pass after many days, that the LORD said unto me, Arise, go to Euphrates, and take the girdle from thence, which I commanded thee to hide there.

7 Then I went to Euphrates, and digged, and took the girdle from the place where I had hid it: and, behold, the girdle was marred, it was profitable for nothing.

8 Then the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

9 Thus saith the LORD, After this manner will I mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem.

10 This evil people, which refuse to hear my words, which walk in the 'imagination of their heart, and walk after other gods, to serve them, and to worship them, shall even be as this girdle, which is good for nothing.

11 For as the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, so have I caused to cleave unto me the whole house of Israel and the whole house of Judah, saith the LORD; that they might be unto me for a people, and for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory: but they would not hear.

12 ¶ Therefore thou shalt speak unto them this word; Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Every bottle shall be filled with wine: and they shall say unto thee, Do we not certainly know that every bottle shall be filled with wine?

13 Then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will fill all the inhabitants of this land, even the kings that sit upon David's throne, and the priests, and the prophets, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, with drunkenness.

14 And I will dash them ²one against another, even the fathers and the sons together, saith the LORD: I will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, ³but destroy them.

15 ¶ Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud: for the LORD hath spoken.

16 Give glory to the LORD your God, before he cause ⁴'darkness, and before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and, while ye look for light, he turn it into the shadow of death, and make it gross darkness.

17 But if ye will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret places for your pride; and ⁵'mine eye shall weep sore, and run down with tears, because the LORD's flock is carried away captive.

18 Say unto the king and to the queen, Humble yourselves, sit down: for your ⁶'principalities shall come down, even the crown of your glory.

19 The cities of the south shall be shut up, and none shall open them: Judah shall be carried away captive all of it, it shall be wholly carried away captive.

20 Lift up your eyes, and behold them that come from the north: where is the flock that was given thee, thy beautiful flock?

21 What wilt thou say when he shall ⁷'punish thee? for thou hast taught them to be captains, and as chief over thee: shall not sorrows take thee, as a woman in travail?

22 ¶ And if thou say in thine heart, ⁸'Wherefore come these things upon me? For the greatness of thine iniquity are thy skirts discovered, and thy heels ⁹'made bare.

23 Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are ¹⁰'accustomed to do evil.

24 Therefore will I scatter them as the stubble that passeth away by the wind of the wilderness.

25 This is thy lot, the portion of thy measures from me, saith the LORD; because thou hast forgotten me, and trusted in falsehood.

26 Therefore will I discover thy skirts upon thy face, that thy shame may appear.

27 I have seen thine adulteries, and thy neighings, the lewdness of thy whoredom, and thine abominations on the hills in the fields. Woe unto thee, O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean? ¹¹'when shall it once be?

Verse 1. "Get thee a linen girdle."—The prophet had probably been accustomed to wear a girdle of leather; and hence the particular direction as to the quality of the girdle he was now to procure. The girdles now most usually worn in the East consist of long pieces of linen, cotton, or silk, wound in numerous folds around the waist. The girdles of linen or cotton are usually plain, but sometimes figured with silk. Girdles of silk are in some countries confined to the upper classes, but in others they form a part of national costume, as among the Koords, whose girdles are wholly, or in great part, of silk, and usually exhibit a plaided pattern. But muslin is the most general material of girdles. These are commonly white; but those who cannot afford the expense or trouble of keeping them clean often wear them coloured. The girdles of white muslin are sometimes flowered or embroidered with gold, silver, coloured silk, or ingrain cotton. Rich shawls, or shawl stuffs, are also used by persons of station for the same purpose. Great importance is attached to the girdle; the size, richness, and fineness of which marks the dignity of the wearer. From this seems to arise the meaning of the present figurative action, in which marring the girdle is understood as equivalent to marring the pride, the dignity, and importance of Judah. The fashion of wearing the girdle varies in different parts; in some countries we find it folded wide upon the waist, as among the Turks and Arabians; whilst in Persia it is folded in as narrow and thick a mass as possible over the tight body vest, and has thus a very singular appearance. When a loose robe is worn over it, it adds greatly to the apparent bulk of the figure: and bulk is dignity in the East. Girdles of other classes have already been noticed in the course of this work.

4. "Hide it there in a hole of the rock."—This seems to have been in accordance, for typical purposes, with a practice some traces of which may be found in most nations. Mr. Roberts says:—"The Hindoos have a custom of burying certain articles by the side of a tank or river, in order to inflict or prefigure evil in reference to certain obnoxious individuals. Thus eggs, human hair, thread, a ball of saffron, or a little of the earth on which the devoted person has had his feet, are buried in the situations alluded to."

CHAPTER XIV.

1 The grievous famine ⁷ causeth Jeremiah to pray. 10 The Lord will not be entreated for the people. 13 Lying prophets are no excuse for them. 17 Jeremiah is moved to complain for them.

THE word of the LORD that came to Jeremiah concerning 'the dearth.

2 Judah mourneth, and the gates thereof languish; they are black unto the ground; and the cry of Jerusalem is gone up.

3 And their nobles have sent their little ones to the waters: they came to the pits, and found no water; they returned with their vessels empty; they were ashamed and confounded, and covered their heads.

4 Because the ground is chapt, for there was no rain in the earth, the plowmen were ashamed, they covered their heads.

5 Yea, the hind also calved in the field, and forsook it, because there was no grass.

6 And the wild asses did stand in the high places, they snuffed up the wind like dragons; their eyes ⁷ did fail, because there was no grass.

7 ¶ O LORD, though our iniquities testify against us, do thou it for thy name's sake: for our backslidings are many; we have sinned against thee.

8 O the hope of Israel, the saviour thereof in time of trouble, why shouldest thou be as a stranger in the land, and as a way-faring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night?

9 Why shouldest thou be as a man astonished, as a mighty man that cannot save? yet thou, O LORD, art in the midst of us, and ² we are called by thy name; leave us not.

10 ¶ Thus saith the LORD unto this people, Thus have they loved to wander, they have not refrained their feet, therefore the LORD doth not accept them; he will now remember their iniquity, and visit their sins.

11 Then said the LORD unto me, ³ Pray not for this people for their good.

12 'When they fast, I will not hear their cry; and when they offer burnt offering and an oblation, I will not accept them: but I will consume them by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence.

13 ¶ Then said I, Ah, Lord God! behold, the prophets say unto them, Ye shall not see the sword, neither shall ye have famine; but I will give you ⁴ assured peace in this place.

14 Then the LORD said unto me, The prophets prophesy lies in my name: ⁵ I sent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither spake unto them: they prophesy unto you a false vision and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart.

15 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the prophets that prophesy in my name, and I sent them not, yet they say, Sword and famine shall not be in this land; By sword and famine shall those prophets be consumed.

16 And the people to whom they prophesy shall be cast out in the streets of Jerusalem because of the famine and the sword; and they shall have none to bury them, them, their wives, nor their sons, nor their daughters: for I will pour their wickedness upon them.

17 ¶ Therefore thou shalt say this word unto them; 'Let mine eyes run down with tears night and day, and let them not cease: for the virgin daughter of my people is broken with a great breach, with a very grievous blow.

18 If I go forth into the field, then behold the slain with the sword! and if I enter into the city, then behold them that are sick with famine! yea, both the prophet and the priest 'go about into a land that they know not.

19 Hast thou utterly rejected Judah? hath thy soul lothed Zion? why hast thou smitten us, and there is no healing for us? 'we looked for peace, and there is no good; and for the time of healing, and behold trouble!

20 We acknowledge, O LORD, our wickedness, and the iniquity of our fathers: for ¹⁰we have sinned against thee.

21 Do not abhor us, for thy name's sake, do not disgrace the throne of thy glory: remember, break not thy covenant with us.

22 Are there any among the vanities of the Gentiles that can cause rain? or can the heavens give showers? art not thou he, O LORD our God? therefore we will wait upon thee: for thou hast made all these things.

Verse 4. "The ground is chapt, for there was no rain in the earth."—The whole of this remarkable description of the effects of continued drought upon the earth, and upon men and animals, is very beautifully illustrated by the description which Tasso gives of the sufferings of the Christian army under the walls of Jerusalem. We may quote from it, rather largely, with the less hesitation, as it is perfectly clear, from the minute accuracy of the details, that the poet, in this and many of his other descriptions, spoke from authentic records traditional information. We must omit some parts of the description, though its effect will be much impaired by abridgment.

"The leaves grew wan upon the wither'd sprays,
The grass and growing herb all parched were;
Earth cleft in rifts, in floods each stream decays;
And barren clouds with lightning bright appear.

Still was the air, the rack nor came nor went,
But o'er the land, with lukewarm breathing, flies
The southern wind, from sunburnt Afric sent,
Which, thick and warm, his interrupted blast
Upon their bosoms, throats, and faces cast.

Nor yet more comfort brought the gloomy night;
In her thick shades was burning heat uproll'd,
Her sable mantle was embroider'd bright

With blazing stars and gliding fires for gold;
Nor to refresh (sad Earth!) thy thirsty sprite
The niggard moon let fall her May-dews cold;
And dried up the vital moisture was
In trees, in plants, in herbs, in flowers, in grass.

And little Siloe, that his store bestows
Of purest crystal on the Christian hands,
The pebbles naked in his channel shows,
And scantily glides above the scorched sands.

He that the gliding rivers erst had seen,
Adown their verdant channels gently roll'd,
Or falling streams that to the valleys green,
Distill'd from tops of Alpine mountains cold,

These he desired in vain, new torments been Augmented thus with wish of comforts old;
Those waters cool he drank in vain conceit,
Which more increased his thirst, increased his heat.

The sturdy bodies of the warriors strong,
Whom neither marching far, nor tedious way,
Nor weighty arms which on their shoulders hong,
Could weary make, nor death itself dismay,
Now weak and feeble cast their limbs along,
Unwieldy burdens, on the burned clay;
And in each vein a smould'ring fire there dwelt,
Which dried their flesh, and solid bones did melt.

Languish'd the steed, late fierce, and proffer'd grass,
His fodder erst, despised, and from him keast;
Each step he stumbled, and, which lofty was
And high advanced before, now fell his crest;
His conquests gotten, all forgotten pass,
Nor with desire of glory swell'd his breast;
The spoils won from his foe, his late rewards
He now neglects, despises, nought regards.
Languish'd the faithful dog, and wonted care
Of his dear lord and cabin both forgot;
Panting he laid, and gather'd fresher air,
To cool the burning, in his entrails hot;
But breathing (which wise Nature did prepare To 'suage the stomach's heat) now bootied not,
For little ease (alas!) small help they win,
That breathe forth air, and scalding fire suck in."

FAIRFAX. Edit. Windsor; 1817.

A more true description than this, of an Oriental drought, in its leading circumstances and effects, we have never yet seen. After long drought in the East, particularly where the soil is rich and hard, the ground splits into wide and deep fissures, which, when exhibited to any considerable extent, render cultivation impracticable, and travelling troublesome, if not dangerous. This did not escape Tasso, and is noticed in our present text.

CHAPTER XV.

1 The utter rejection and manifold judgments of the Jews.
 10 Jeremiah, complaining of their spile, receiveth a promise for himself, 12 and a threatening for them. 15 He prayeth, 19 and receiveth a gracious promise.

THEN said the LORD unto me, 'Though 'Moses and 'Samuel stood before me, yet my mind could not be toward this people: cast them out of my sight, and let them go forth.

2 And it shall come to pass, if they say unto thee, Whither shall we go forth? then thou shalt tell them, Thus saith the LORD; 'Such as are for death, to death; and such as are for the sword, to the sword; and such as are for the famine, to the famine; and such as are for the captivity, to the captivity.

3 And I will 'appoint over them four 'kinds, saith the LORD: the sword to slay, and the dogs to tear, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the earth, to devour and destroy.

4 And 'I will cause them to be 'removed into all kingdoms of the earth, because of 'Manasseh the son of Hezekiah king of Judah, for that which he did in Jerusalem.

5 For who shall have pity upon thee, O Jerusalem? or who shall bemoan thee? or who shall go aside 'to ask how thou doest?

6 Thou hast forsaken me, saith the LORD, thou art gone backward: therefore will I stretch out my hand against thee, and destroy thee; I am weary with repenting.

7 And I will fan them with a fan in the gates of the land; I will bereave them of 'children, I will destroy my people, since they return not from their ways.

8 Their widows are increased to me above the sand of the seas: I have brought upon them 'against the mother of the young men a spoiler at noonday: I have caused him to fall upon it suddenly, and terrors upon the city.

9 She that hath borne seven languisheth: she hath given up the ghost; 'her sun is gone down while it was yet day: she hath been ashamed and confounded: and the residue of them will I deliver to the sword before their enemies, saith the LORD.

10 ¶ 'Woe is me, my mother, that thou hast borne me a man of strife and a man of contention to the whole earth! I have neither lent on usury, nor men have lent to me on usury; yet every one of them doth curse me.

11 The LORD said, Verily it shall be well with thy remnant; verily 'I will cause the enemy to entreat thee well in the time of evil and in the time of affliction.

12 Shall iron break the northern iron and the steel?

13 Thy substance and thy treasures will I give to the 'spoil without price, and that for all thy sins, even in all thy borders.

14 And I will make thee to pass with thine enemies into a land which thou knowest not: for a 'fire is kindled in mine anger, which shall burn upon you.

15 ¶ O LORD, thou knowest: remember me, and visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors; take me not away in thy long-suffering: know that for thy sake I have suffered rebuke.

16 Thy words were found, and I did 'eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart: for 'I am called by thy name, O LORD God of hosts.

17 I sat not in the assembly of the mockers, nor rejoiced; I sat alone because of thy hand: for thou hast filled me with indignation.

18 Why is my 'pain perpetual, and my wound incurable, which refuseth to be healed? wilt thou be altogether unto me as a liar, and as waters that 'fail?

19 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD, If thou return, then will I bring thee again, and thou shalt stand before me: and if thou take forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as my mouth: let them return unto thee; but return not thou unto them.

20 And I will make thee unto this people a fenced brasen 'wall: and they shall fight

²³ Chap. 20. 11, 12.

Verse 12. "The northern iron."—This text of course intimates that this northern iron was superior to all other then known. Grotius, with whom some later commentators concur, supposes that it denotes, in the primary sense, that kind of hardened iron or steel, called in Greek χαλυσί, from the Chalybes, a people bordering on the Euxine Sea, and consequently to the north of Judea, by whom the art of tempering steel is said to have been discovered. In this verse the "iron" of course represents the Jews, and the "northern iron" the Chaldeans, as some explain, or, as others, Jeremiah himself.

18. "As a liar, and as waters that fail."—Blayney translates, "As the lying of waters that are not sure." However translated, the allusion is probably to the serab—the delusive appearance of water in the desert.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 The prophet, under the types of abstaining from marriage, from houses of mourning and feasting, foresheweth the utter ruin of the Jews, 10 because they were worse than their fathers. 14 Their return from captivity shall be stranger than their deliverance out of Egypt. 16 God will doubly recompense their idolatry.

THE word of the LORD came also unto me, saying,

2 Thou shalt not take thee a wife, neither shalt thou have sons or daughters in this place.

3 For thus saith the LORD concerning the sons and concerning the daughters that are born in this place, and concerning their mothers that bare them, and concerning their fathers that begat them in this land;

4 They shall die of 'grievous deaths; they shall not 'be lamented; neither shall they be buried; but they shall be as dung upon the face of the earth: and they shall be consumed by the sword, and by famine; and their 'carcasses shall be meat for the fowls of heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.

5 For thus saith the LORD, Enter not into the house of 'mourning, neither go to lament nor bemoan them: for I have taken away my peace from this people, saith the LORD, even lovingkindness and mercies.

6 Both the great and the small shall die in this land: they shall not be buried, neither shall men lament for them, nor 'cut themselves, nor make themselves bald for them:

7 Neither shall men 'tear themselves for them in mourning, to comfort them for the dead; neither shall men give them the cup of consolation to drink for their father or for their mother.

8 Thou shalt not also go into the house of feasting, to sit with them to eat and to drink.

9 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, 'I will cause to cease out of this place in your eyes, and in your days, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride.

10 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when thou shalt shew this people all these words, and they shall say unto thee, 'Wherefore hath the LORD pronounced all this great evil against us? or what is our iniquity? or what is our sin that we have committed against the LORD our God?

11 Then shalt thou say unto them, Because your fathers have forsaken me, saith the LORD, and have walked after other gods, and have served them, and have worshipped them, and have forsaken me, and have not kept my law;

12 And ye have done 'worse than your fathers; for, behold, ye walk every one after the ¹⁰imagination of his evil heart, that they may not hearken unto me:

LAYING OUT AND MOURNING OVER THE DEAD.—FROM CAMPARINI'S ETRUSCAN TOMBS.

CUP OF CONSOLATION.—FROM CAMPARINI'S ETRUSCAN TOMBS.

Verse 6. "They shall not be buried," &c.—In what follows there is a distinct allusion to the prominent funeral observances which appear to have prevailed among the Hebrews. In the following notes we shall offer a few observations on such of those practices as have not already been noticed, or which may not more conveniently be reserved for future illustration.

"Cut themselves."—The law forbade this manifestation of grief (Lev. xix. 28; Deut. xiv. 1): but from the present and other intimations we learn that it still continued to be exhibited, at least at times. The prohibition shows the custom. In like manner Mohammed endeavoured to put a stop to this and other forms of the ancient "mournings of ignorance," as he called them; but the custom still maintains its ground in Moslem countries, particularly among the women, who, in this and many other instances, appear to have considered themselves exempted from the operation of the general precepts of their lawgiver, which they seem to regard as only intended for men. Even men, however, sometimes wound themselves in excess of grief; but, when they do so, they usually employ lancets or other instruments, whereas the women are content to lacerate themselves with their nails. In the annual mourning in Persia for Hossein, the son of the caliph Ali, men, wrought to a high pitch of excitement, run about as if frantic, uttering doleful cries, and occasionally wounding themselves with lancets, till their persons were covered with blood. Similar customs prevailed to some extent among the Greeks. The women more particularly beat their breasts and thighs, and tore their flesh with their nails; but this practice was forbidden by Solon. Even the Spartans, although they bore the loss of their relations with great moderation, yet bewailed the death of their great men by tearing their flesh with pins and needles. (See the authorities cited in Harwood's 'Grecian Antiquities,' p. 364.) But examples of this custom might be obtained from all parts of the world in different stages of civilisation. Among others, the ancient Huns, and the modern islanders of the South Sea, might be cited: the latter testified their grief by wounding themselves with a sharp shell or a shark's tooth.

"Make themselves bald."—This is another custom of mourning, as ancient and as prevalent as the preceding. Its patriarchal antiquity is shown in the case of Job, who, when he heard of the desolation of his house, "arose, and rent his mantle, and shaved his head." It is not clear whether more than a particular form of this practice was forbidden by the law of Moses (Deut. xiv. 1); but to the priests it was certainly altogether interdicted (Lev. xxi. 5). It seems to have been the custom of the Jews to cut, shave, or rend the hair, both of the head and beard (see Ezra ix. 3), but more particularly the former. Mohammed forbade the practice, as well as the other. The women, however, do not attend to the prohibition: but the men, having their heads habitually shaven, cannot exhibit this sign of sorrow. In some parts of the East, however, where the men let their hair grow, they cut or shave it off on mourning occasions. It appears from the curious narrative of Peter Covillan (in Purchas) that the practice is retained in Abyssinia, where so many customs analogous to those of the Hebrews are still in operation. The party received information of the death of their king, Emmanuel of Portugal: "And because it is the fashion of this country, when their friends die, to shave their heads, and not their beards, and to cloath themselves with blacke apparell, wee beganne to shave one another's head, and while wee were doing this, in came they which brought us our dinner; who, when they saw this, they set down the meate upon the ground, and ranne to tell it unto the Prete, who suddenly sent two friers unto us, to understand what had fallen out. The ambassadour could not answer him for the great lamentation which he made, and I told them, as well as I could, that the sunne which gave us light was darkened, that is to say, that the king Don Emmanuel was departed this life; and suddenly all of us began to make our moane, and the friers went their way." It was also the well-known custom of the ancient Greeks to tear, cut off, or shave the hair. Among them, the hair thus separated was sometimes laid upon the dead body as a mark of affection and regret; sometimes it was cast upon the funeral pile to be consumed with the body; and on other occasions it was laid upon the grave. Upon the death of men of eminence and valour, it was not unusual for whole cities and countries to be shaved. "This ceremony," says Harwood, "was observed, because, as long hair was considered as very becoming, they might appear careless and negligent of their beauty, and to render the ghost of the dead person propitious by throwing the hair together with the body into the fire. In times of public mourning they extended this ceremony even to the beasts." (Grec. Antiq. p. 363, where the authorities are given.) There was also a custom, any analogy to which among the Hebrews we do not remember, of hanging the hair of the dead person himself upon the door, to signify that the inmates were in a state of mourning.

SHAVING THE HEAD.

7. "The cup of consolation."—This is doubtless the refreshment which after the funeral is supplied to the mourners, and by which they break, or are supposed to break, the fast they have maintained since the death took place. This is prepared and sent by the neighbours; the mourners being supposed to be too much absorbed in grief to think of their necessary food. The refreshment was of a very slight description, usually bread, wine, and fruits. At present it consists of eggs boiled hard, with a little salt, and a small loaf. (Allen's 'Modern Judaism,' p. 439.) This is sometimes called the "bread of bitterness;" and is alluded to also in 2 Sam. iii. 35; Hos. ix. 4; Ezek. xxiv. 16, 17.

8. "The house of feasting."—This appears to refer to such a funeral feast with which it was customary among different nations to conclude all the ceremonies of death except those of the continued mourning by the relatives. It is not very clear when this took place; but it could not be till after the three first days, called "the days of weeping," were passed, as during that time the mourner could have no food prepared in his house, nor eat anything of his own. (Lightfoot, 'Exercit. upon John xi. 19.') During this time he was supplied with food by his neighbours; and, as after this he might return to his customary fare, it is probable that the feast then took place. This entertainment was given by the chief mourner at his own house, if distinct from that in which the deceased had lived. Those invited were usually the friends and acquaintance of the family, including those neighbours who had sent food to the mourners during "the days of weeping." The custom of the funeral feast was well known to the classical ancients, was kept up in this and other European countries till a comparatively recent period, and still prevails in many parts of the world. In these cases, however, the feast usually took place after the funeral. In this country, during the plague of 1569, one of the precautions taken to prevent the spread of the contagion was to prohibit the funeral dinners. (Maitland's 'London,' vol. i. p. 260.) As our engravings are derived from classical sources, we may just mention the custom of the Greeks, which, with one or two exceptions, seem to have been similar to those of the Hebrews. When the funeral was over, it was a very ancient and long-continued custom to proceed to the house of the nearest relations of the dead, where an entertainment was provided. This ceremony was however omitted at the funeral of slaves. It seems that sometimes the entertainment preceded the funeral. The fragments that fell from the tables were considered sacred to the departed souls, and which it was therefore not lawful to eat. These were carried to the tomb and left there for the ghost. This piece of superstition we find very common among different nations, in which it is customary for a time to lay food near or upon the graves. These entertainments consisted of flesh, with all sorts of pulse, beans, peas, lettuces, parsley, eggs, &c.; and the persons present usually conversed upon the merits and qualities of the dead person. (Harwood, pp. 372, 373.) The Roman customs were very little different. Concerning the funeral banquet of the Jews, one remarkable fact is furnished by Lightfoot:—"They drank ten cups in the house of mourning; two before meat, five while they were eating, and three after meat. When Rabban Simeon Ben-Gamaliel died, they added three more. But, when the Sanhedrim saw that hence they became drunk, they made a decree against this." (Exercit. upon Matt. ix. 23.) It is hence clear that no indecent excess in drinking was considered proper at such entertainments.

CHAPTER XVII.

¹ The captivity of Judah for her sin. ⁵ Trust in man is cursed, ⁷ in God is blessed. ⁹ The deceitful heart cannot deceive God. ¹² The salvation of God. ¹⁵ The prophet complaineth of the mockers of his prophecy. ¹⁹ He is sent to renew the covenant in hallowing the sabbath.

THE sin of Judah is written with a 'pen of iron, and with the 'point of a diamond: it is graven upon the table of their heart, and upon the horns of your altars;

² Whilst their children remember their altars and their 'groves by the green trees upon the high hills.

³ O my mountain in the field, 'I will give thy substance and all thy treasures to the spoil, and thy high places for sin, throughout all thy borders.

⁴ And thou, even 'thyself, shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee; and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies in the land which thou knowest not: for ye have kindled a fire in mine anger, which shall burn for ever.

⁵ ¶ Thus saith the LORD; Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the LORD.

⁶ For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited.

⁷ 'Blessed is the man that trusteth in the LORD, and whose hope the LORD is.

⁹ ¶ The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?

¹⁰ I the LORD 'search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings.

¹¹ As the partridge ¹⁰sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not; so he that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool.

¹² ¶ A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary.

¹³ O LORD, the hope of Israel, 'all that forsake thee shall be ashamed, and they that depart from me shall be written in the earth, because they have forsaken the LORD, the 'fountain of living waters.

¹⁴ Heal me, O LORD, and I shall be healed; save me, and I shall be saved: for thou art my praise.

¹⁵ ¶ Behold, they say unto me, 'Where is the word of the LORD? let it come now.

27 But if ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the sabbath day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched.

Verse 6. "Heath" (עֵרָר arar). The "heath" here mentioned was probably a species of tamarisk, and none so likely as the Tamarix articulata, since this plant was found by Forskal in the deserts of Arabia; and, from its spare and neglected form peering above the sand of the desert, might well be taken as an emblem of desertion and solitude. It is known to others by the name of Tamarix Orientalis, and is used by the Egyptians for fuel. Galls rise upon this tree, which are of superb red, and originate from the puncture of an insect. The tamarisk attains to a very flourishing condition on the banks of rivers. The banks of the Tigris are to a considerable extent lined with its shrubs, which often grow to the height of ten or twelve feet, and furnish the principal supply of fuel to the different towns, to which it is conveyed in boats by the persons who cut it down.

11. "Partridge."—(See the note on 1 Sam. xxvi. 20.) Belon observes of the bartavella, or Greek partridge, that it keeps ordinarily among the rocks, but has the instinct to descend into the plain to make its nest, in order that the young may find at their birth a ready subsistence. It lays from eight to sixteen eggs. This partridge is capable of connection with the common hen, and has also another analogy with that bird, in that it sits upon the eggs of strangers for want of its own. This seems to explain the present text; for if, as Dr. Shaw observes, "the bartavella partridge sits on the eggs of a stranger, when that stranger returns to nest, and drives away the intruder before she can hatch them, the partridge so expelled resembles a man in low circumstances, who had possessed himself for a time of the property of another, but is found to relinquish his acquisition before he can render it profitable; which is the simile of the prophet." It will be remembered that the other text, 1 Sam. xxvi., speaks of the partridge as a bird of the mountain.

CHAPTER XVIII.

¹ Under the type of a potter is shewed God's absolute power in disposing of nations. 11 Judgments threatened to Judah for her strange revolt. 18 Jeremiah prayeth against his conspirators.

THE word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

² Arise, and go down to the potter's house, and there I will cause thee to hear my words.

³ Then I went down to the potter's house, and, behold, he wrought a work on the wheels.

⁴ And the vessel that he made of clay was marred in the hand of the potter: so he made it again another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it.

⁵ Then the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

⁶ O house of Israel, 'cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the LORD. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand, O house of Israel.

⁷ At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it;

⁸ If that nation, against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, 'I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them.

10 If it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then I will repent of the good, wherewith I said I would benefit them.

11 ¶ Now therefore go to, speak to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you: ⁷return ye now every one from his evil way, and make your ways and your doings good.

12 And they said, ⁸There is no hope: but we will walk after our own devices, and we will every one do the imagination of his evil heart.

13 Therefore thus saith the LORD; ⁹Ask ye now among the heathen, who hath heard such things: the virgin of Israel hath done a very horrible thing.

14 Will a man leave ¹⁰the snow of Lebanon which cometh from the rock of the field? or shall the cold flowing waters that come from another place be forsaken?

15 Because my people hath forgotten ¹¹me, they have burned incense to vanity, and they have caused them to stumble in their ways from the ¹²ancient paths, to walk in paths, in a way not cast up;

16 To make their land ¹³desolate, and a perpetual hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished, and wag his head.

17 I will scatter them as with an east

18 ¶ Then said they, Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah; ¹⁴for the law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel from the wise, nor the word from the prophet. Come, and let us smite him ¹⁵with the tongue, and let us not give heed to any of his words.

19 Give heed to me, O LORD, and hearken to the voice of them that contend with me.

20 Shall evil be recompensed for good? for they have digged a pit for my soul. Remember that I stood before thee to speak good for them, and to turn away thy wrath from them.

21 Therefore ¹⁶deliver up their children to the famine, and ¹⁷pour out their blood by the force of the sword; and let their wives be bereaved of their children, and be widows; and let their men be put to death; let their young men be slain by the sword in battle.

22 Let a cry be heard from their houses, when thou shalt bring a troop suddenly upon them: for they have digged a pit to take me, and hid snares for my feet.

Verse 3. "He wrought a work on the wheels."—The original word (אֲבֵנִים abēnīm), rendered "wheels," is literally "stones;" and so the Seventy have it in the present text. In Exod. i. 16. the same is rendered "stools;" and so, or rather "seats," the Arabic and some other versions have here. But the Chaldee, Syriac, and Vulgate have "wheels," as in our version. There is no question that "stones" is the literal meaning; and we incline to think that the potter's wheel is really intended, and that it is called a stone either because it was made of stone, or because its horizontal rotatory action resembled that of the upper mill-stone. Some interpreters have been induced to reject the "wheel" interpretation, because Jeremiah lived before Anacharsis, who is said to have invented the potter's wheel. Such a reason has now little weight, particularly as the paintings of the ancient Egyptians, who were famous for their potteries, show the same wheel in operation, the use of which is still retained in the country, and the form of which is so clearly shown in our engraving as to render any particular description unnecessary. It will be seen that, as in common, it consists of an horizontal wheel fixed on the top of a stake, the lower part of which falls into a pit, in which stands the potter, who gives the necessary motion to the wheel with his feet, while he works the clay with his hands. This mode of working is very general among the Oriental potters; and seems to agree very well with the description in Ecclesiasticus, which is of considerable interest: "So doth the potter, sitting at his work and turning the wheel about with his feet, who is always carefully set at his work, and maketh all his work by number: he fashioneth the clay with his arm, and boweth down his strength before his feet; he applieth himself to lead it over; and is diligent to make clean the furnace." (ch. xxxix. 29, 30.) It is observable that the clause rendered "boweth down his strength before his feet," is read in the margin "tempereth with his feet;" and it is a fact that the Oriental potters temper their clay by treading it with their feet; and this is depicted among the operations of the potter in the paintings of ancient Egypt, as may be seen in the great work of Rosellini.

17. "An east wind."—From the frequency with which the "east wind" is mentioned in Scripture, it becomes desirable to mention that every wind that blows from any point of the compass between the east and north, and between the east and south, was called an east wind by the Hebrews, as is still the case among the Orientals, who attend but little to the subdivisions of the compass.

"I will shew them the back, and not the face."—This was doubtless a remark of rejection and contempt. In the East scarcely any deeper insult can be conveyed than for one person to rise and turn his back upon another, especially upon a visiter. There are among ourselves traces of the ideas which the Orientals, more markedly, associate with this action: thus, persons retire from the presence of individuals or assemblies, to which it is necessary that high respect should be shown, without turning their backs upon them.

POTTER'S WHEEL OF MODERN EGYPT.

CHAPTER XIX.

Under the type of breaking a potter's vessel is foreshewed the desolation of the Jews for their sins.

THUS saith the LORD, Go and get a potter's earthen bottle, and take of the ancients of the people, and of the ancients of the priests;

2 And go forth unto the valley of the son of Hinnom, which is by the entry of ¹the east gate, and proclaim there the words that I shall tell thee,

3 And say, Hear ye the word of the LORD, O kings of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem; Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, the which whosoever heareth, his ears shall ²tingle.

4 Because they have forsaken me, and have estranged this place, and have burned incense in it unto other gods, whom neither they nor their fathers have known, nor the kings of Judah, and have filled this place with the blood of innocents;

5 They have built also the high places of Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burnt offerings unto Baal, ³which I commanded not, nor spake it, neither came it into my mind:

6 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that this place shall no more be called Tophet, nor The valley of the son of Hinnom, but The valley of slaughter.

7 And I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem in this place; and I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies, and by the hands of them that seek their lives: and their 'carcases will I give to be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.

8 And I will make this city 'desolate, and an hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss because of all the plagues thereof.

9 And I will cause them to eat the 'flesh of their sons and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat every one the flesh of his friend in the siege and straitness, wherewith their enemies, and they that seek their lives, shall straiten them.

10 Then shalt thou break the bottle in the sight of the men that go with thee,

11 And shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Even so will I break this people and this city, as one breaketh a potter's vessel, that cannot 'be made whole again: and they shall 'bury them in Tophet, till there be no place to bury.

12 Thus will I do unto this place, saith the LORD, and to the inhabitants thereof, and even make this city as Tophet:

13 And the houses of Jerusalem, and the houses of the kings of Judah, shall be defiled as the place of Tophet, because of all the houses upon whose 'roofs they have burned incense unto all the host of heaven, and have poured out drink offerings unto other gods.

14 Then came Jeremiah from Tophet, whither the LORD had sent him to prophesy; and he stood in the court of the LORD's house; and said to all the people, 15 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring upon this city and upon all her towns all the evil that I have pronounced against it, because they have hardened their necks, that they might not hear my words.

Verse 2. "The east gate."—As the valley of Ben-Hinnom lay to the south of the city, it has seemed perplexing that the entrance to it should be from the east; and hence very various translations, explanations, and emendations have been suggested. But it seems sufficient to observe, that the south side of Mount Zion is so steep and precipitous that we should hardly expect to find there the gate which furnished the usual communication between the town and the valley, but should rather look for it on the east, although the valley itself was to the south.

5. "To burn their sons with fire for burnt offerings."—As this text is very explicit, we take the opportunity which it offers of making a few remarks on the subject of human sacrifice. The reader of the Bible is aware that the horrid custom is most frequently described as making the children "pass through the fire." This form of expression has led some to contend that the poor victims were not really destroyed in the fire, but that they were made to pass through it, and were thereby consecrated to the idol in whose honour the rite was performed. Mr. C. Taylor, in one of his 'Fragments to Calmet,' supports this view by adducing, from Maurice's 'History of Hindostan,' an account of the ceremonies observed at the annual festival held in India in honour of Darma Rajah, when the devotees walk barefoot over a glowing fire extending forty feet; in doing which, some carry their children in their arms, that they may participate in the benefits attributed to this act. A similar explanation has been sometimes given to the alleged human sacrifices of the Carthaginians; but that they were real sacrifices has been abundantly proved by Selden and others, and indeed appears from the uniform tenor of history. From an attentive consideration of the subject, we regret to be unable to acquiesce in the more humane view suggested by the above explanation. That the sacrifices were real seems to give a force to the peculiar horror with which the act is mentioned in Scripture; as, for instance, in the present verse, where the Lord declares, in every variety of expression, how repugnant such doings were to Him. Besides, as the Hebrews, from time to time, fell into the grossest idolatries of the surrounding nations, and they were all addicted to this dreadful custom, this furnishes the strongest collateral evidence that real human sacrifice is intended. And also, whatever seeming doubt may be involved in such expressions as "to cause to pass through the fire," or even in "to burn," seems completely removed by such definite expressions as in the present text, in which it is said that the victims were offered as burnt offerings, than which term, in its Scriptural acceptation, none can be stronger or clearer in showing that the victims were really destroyed—consumed by fire. The existence of the practice among the Jews might be proved from these more definite passages alone, even if we allowed that simple consecration by fire is intended by all the other less definite expressions.

An opinion has been entertained by many commentators and others, that human sacrifices arose originally from a distorted tradition, and consequent misapplication, of Abraham's intended sacrifice of his son Isaac. So remarkable a circumstance could scarcely fail to have been noticed by the Canaanites, Amorites, Phœnicians, and others, in or near whose territories it took place. The fact that the injunction was intended as a trial of the patriarch's faith, and nothing more, may have been less clearly understood, or, if at first understood, the impression may gradually have worn off, while it remained well known that the patriarch obtained the Divine approbation and blessing for his conduct on that occasion. If this be admitted, it is not difficult to suppose that they might conclude, that, if his bare intention to sacrifice his son had been so well received, what marks of the Divine favour might not they expect who should actually sacrifice their children? And when once they had taken up the notion that the main merit of this cruel rite consisted in the stifling all sense of humanity and natural affection, it was easy for them to infer, that the more they did so, by the deaths to which they put their children, the more would the value of the sacrifices be enhanced.

There seems to us, however, something revolting in the idea that a Divine command, for the trial of Abraham's faith, however misunderstood, could be attended with such lamentable consequences. And when we consider the extent to which the custom of human sacrifice prevailed among ancient nations, the most remote from each other, and between which no communication of customs and ideas can be traced later than the original dispersion of the human race; and also when we reflect upon its prevalence among the people of unknown continents and islands discovered within the last 350 years, it seems very difficult to trace its origin to this circumstance, and more easy to seek for it in some common and obvious principle, founded upon a notion which all men entertained. This, we venture to think, may be discovered in the idea, that whatever was most costly and precious was most acceptable and proper as an offering to the gods. Hence, when animal sacrifice became common, care was taken that the animal should be fair and unblemished, the flower of the flock or of the herd; and when these ideas were established, it was an easy transition to infer, that human life—the most precious of earthly things—being a more valuable, must be a still more acceptable offering than even the blood of sheep and oxen. In fact, we do find the idea of relative value carried into this awful practice: for not only was human life the most acceptable offering in the abstract, but every circumstance which rendered the individual life most valuable or most cherished, rendered it most acceptable as an offering to the gods. Hence the lives of the most pure, the most beautiful, the most high-born—children, virgins, and noble youths—were considered the most splendid sacrifices; although, in default of such, the lives of slaves, prisoners of war, and criminals, were deemed of far more importance than those of victims from the herd or the flock. We incline to think that this way of viewing the question more satisfactorily accounts for this widely-extended practice than does the obscure knowledge or tradition of Abraham's intended sacrifice; although it is not unlikely that the Jews themselves, when they adopted the horrid custom from their heathen neighbours, may so have misconceived that circumstance as to imagine that it afforded some sanction to this most horrible rite. It is very possible that the verse before us, "Which I commanded not, nor spake it, neither entered it into my heart," may have been intended by the Father of all Mercy as a protest against this delusive impression, so dishonouring to Him.

We are content in this place to have introduced the subject in a general way, but may perhaps, under future texts, adduce some illustrative details. Meanwhile, the engravings we now offer, from the Etruscan tombs of Camparini, require a few words of explanation. They appear to represent sacrifices, unwilling on the part of the victims. In the first, we observe, on one side of the altar, victims in the act of being stripped for sacrifice; while, on the other side, we see one already stripped and conducted to the altar. In the second piece, a friend or relation (apparently) attempts to pull back, by the mantle, a victim who is dragged to the altar. In the third, we observe a seemingly aged person, perhaps a father, weeping, or endeavouring to suppress his emotions, at the act of sacrifice which is about to take place.

CHAPTER XX.

¹ Pashur, smiling Jeremiah, receiveth a new name, and a fearful doom. ⁷ Jeremiah complaineth of contempt, ¹⁰ of treachery, ¹⁴ and of his birth.

Now Pashur the son of ¹Immer the priest, who was also chief governor in the house of the LORD, heard that Jeremiah prophesied these things.

² Then Pashur smote Jeremiah the prophet, and put him in the stocks that were in the high gate of Benjamin, which was by the house of the LORD.

will make thee a terror to thyself, and to all thy friends: and they shall fall by the sword of their enemies, and thine eyes shall behold it: and I will give all Judah into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall carry them captive into Babylon, and shall slay them with the sword.

5 Moreover I ³will deliver all the strength of this city, and all the labours thereof, and all the precious things thereof, and all the treasures of the kings of Judah will I give into the hand of their enemies, which shall spoil them, and take them, and carry them to Babylon.

6 And thou, Pashur, and all that dwell in thine house shall go into captivity: and thou shalt come to Babylon, and there thou shalt die, and shalt be buried there, thou, and all thy friends, to whom thou hast prophesied lies.

7 ¶ O LORD, thou hast deceived me, and I was ⁴deceived: thou art stronger than I, and hast prevailed: I am in derision daily, every one mocketh me.

8 For since I spake, I cried out, I cried violence and spoil; because the word of the LORD was made a reproach unto me, and a derision, daily.

9 Then I said, I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name. But his word was in mine heart as a ⁵burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and ⁶I could not stay.

10 ¶ For I heard the defaming of many, fear on every side. Report, say they, and we will report it. ⁷All my familiars watched for my halting, saying, Peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him, and we shall take our revenge on him.

11 But the LORD is with me as a mighty terrible one: therefore my persecutors shall stumble, and they shall not ⁸prevail: they shall be greatly ashamed; for they shall not prosper: their ⁹everlasting confusion shall never be forgotten.

12 But, O LORD of hosts, that ¹⁰triest the righteous, and seest the reins and the heart, let me see thy vengeance on them: for unto thee have I opened my cause.

13 Sing unto the LORD, praise ye the LORD: for he hath delivered the soul of the poor from the hand of evildoers.

14 ¶ ¹¹Cursed be the day wherein I was born: let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed.

15 Cursed be the man who brought tidings to my father, saying, A man child is born unto thee; making him very glad.

16 And let that man be as the cities which the LORD ¹²overthrew, and repented not: and let him hear the cry in the morning, and the shouting at noontide;

17 Because he slew me not from the womb; or that my mother might have been my grave, and her womb to be always great with me.

18 ¹³Wherefore came I forth out of the womb to see labour and sorrow, that my days should be consumed with shame?

Verse 15. "The man who brought tidings to my father," &c.—We have had frequent occasion to mention the great anxiety of the Orientals to obtain male offspring. This is particularly exhibited by the father when the wife is confined. He is generally in attendance in the house or garden to receive the earliest intelligence of the event. A confidential servant about the harem is usually the first to obtain the information from the mother's chamber. If he learns that the child is a boy, he runs with all speed and announces to the father with high exultation that a male child is born unto him, for which glad tidings he never fails to receive a valuable present. In India, this news is conveyed to the father by the midwife herself. If the child should prove a girl, this, not being considered likely to "make him very glad," is not communicated to him, and he learns the result only through the non-appearance of the man with his tidings.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Zedekiah sendeth to Jeremiah to enquire the event of Nebuchadrezzar's war. 3 Jeremiah foretelleth a hard siege and miserable captivity. 8 He counselleth the people to fall to the Chaldeans, 11 and upbraideth the king's house.

THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, when king Zedekiah sent unto him Pashur the son of Melchiah, and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, saying,

2 Enquire, I pray thee, of the LORD for us; for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon maketh war against us; if so be that the LORD will deal with us according to all his wondrous works, that he may go up from us.

3 ¶ Then said Jeremiah unto them, Thus shall ye say to Zedekiah:

4 Thus saith the LORD God of Israel; Behold, I will turn back the weapons of war that are in your hands, wherewith ye fight against the king of Babylon, and against the Chaldeans, which besiege you without the walls, and I will assemble them into the midst of this city.

5 And I myself will fight against you with an 'outstretched hand and with a strong arm, even in anger, and in fury, and in great wrath.

6 And I will smite the inhabitants of this city, both man and beast: they shall die of a great pestilence.

7 And afterward, saith the LORD, I will deliver Zedekiah king of Judah, and his servants, and the people, and such as are left in this city from the pestilence, from the sword, and from the famine, into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of those that seek their life: and he shall smite them with the edge of the sword; he shall not spare them, neither have pity, nor have mercy.

8 ¶ And unto this people thou shalt say,

Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I set before you the way of life, and the way of death.

9 He that 'abideth in this city shall die by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth out, and falleth to the Chaldeans that besiege you, he shall live, and 'his life shall be unto him for a prey.

10 For I have set my face against this city for evil, and not for good, saith the LORD: it shall be given into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire.

11 ¶ And touching the house of the king of Judah, say, Hear ye the word of the LORD;

12 O house of David, thus saith the LORD; 'Execute judgment in the morning, and deliver him that is spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor, lest my fury go out like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

13 Behold, I am against thee, O 'inhabitant of the valley, and rock of the plain, saith the LORD; which say, Who shall come down against us? or who shall enter into our habitations?

14 But I will 'punish you according to the 'fruit of your doings, saith the LORD: and I will kindle a fire in the forest thereof, and it shall devour all things round about it.

CHAP. XXI.—There appears to be considerable disorder in the present arrangement of Jeremiah's prophecies; but in many instances the means of rectification are offered through the historical indications in the misplaced chapters. The disorder seems to begin with this chapter. From the two first verses we learn that it was delivered in answer to a message sent by King Zedekiah, when Nebuchadnezzar was coming to make war against him, that is, in the ninth year of his reign. All the intermediate prophecies of Jehoiakim's and of the first eight years of Zedekiah's reign, should therefore, if the chronological order be regarded, precede this. For this reason, Dr. Blaney places this chapter after chap. xxviii. As some of our readers would like to see the manner in which this translator has arranged the chapters from xx. to xlv., we transcribe his distribution.

It may, however, be right to add, that arrangements considerably different from this have been suggested by Calmet, Professor Dahler of Strasburg, and others.

CHAPTER XXII.

¹⁰ The judgment of Shallum, 13 of Jehoiakim, 20 and of Coniah.

THUS saith the LORD; Go down to the house of the king of Judah, and speak there this word,

2 And say, Hear the word of the LORD, O king of Judah, that sittest upon the throne of David, thou, and thy servants, and thy people that enter in by these gates:

3 Thus saith the LORD; 'Execute ye judgment and righteousness, and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor: and do no wrong, do no violence to the stranger, the fatherless, nor the widow, neither shed innocent blood in this place.

4 For if ye do this thing indeed, ²then shall there enter in by the gates of this house kings sitting ³upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, he, and his servants, and his people.

5 But if ye will not hear these words, I swear by myself, saith the LORD, that this house shall become a desolation.

6 For thus saith the LORD unto the king's house of Judah; Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon: yet surely I will make thee a wilderness, and cities which are not inhabited.

7 And I will prepare destroyers against thee, every one with his weapons: and they shall cut down thy choice cedars, and cast them into the fire.

8 And many nations shall pass by this city, and they shall say every man to his neighbour, 'Wherefore hath the LORD done thus unto this great city?

9 Then they shall answer, Because they have forsaken the covenant of the LORD their God, and worshipped other gods, and served them.

10 ¶ Weep ye not for the dead, neither bemoan him: but weep sore for him that goeth away: for he shall return no more, nor see his native country.

11 For thus saith the LORD touching Shallum the son of Josiah king of Judah, which reigned instead of Josiah his father, which went forth out of this place; He shall not return thither any more:

12 But he shall die in the place whither they have led him captive, and shall see this land no more.

13 ¶ Woe unto ¹him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by wrong; that useth his neighbour's service without wages, and giveth him not for his work;

14 That saith, I will build me a wide house and ²large chambers, and cutteth him out ³windows; and it is ceiled with cedar, and painted with vermilion.

15 Shalt thou reign, because thou closest thyself in cedar? did not thy father eat and drink, and do judgment and justice, and then it was well with him?

16 He judged the cause of the poor and needy; then it was well with him: was not this to know me? saith the LORD.

17 But thine eyes and thine heart are not but for thy covetousness, and for to shed innocent blood, and for oppression, and for ⁴violence, to do it.

18 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king Judah; They shall not lament for him, saying, Ah my brother! or, Ah sister! they shall not lament for him, saying, Ah lord! or, Ah his glory!

19 He shall be buried with the burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem.

20 ¶ Go up to Lebanon, and cry; and lift up thy voice in Bashan, and cry from the passages: for all thy lovers are destroyed.

21 I spake unto thee in thy ⁵prosperity; but thou saidst, I will not hear. This hath been thy manner from thy youth, that thou obeyedst not my voice.

22 The wind shall eat up all thy pastors, and thy lovers shall go into captivity: surely then shalt thou be ashamed and confounded for all thy wickedness.

23 O ¹⁰inhabitant of Lebanon, that makest thy nest in the cedars, how gracious shalt thou be when pangs come upon thee, the pain as of a woman in travail!

24 As I live, saith the LORD, though Coniah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah were the signet upon my right hand, yet would I pluck thee thence ;

25 And I will give thee into the hand of them that seek thy life, and into the hand of them whose face thou fearest, even into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of the Chaldeans.

26 And I will cast thee out, and thy mother that bare thee, into another country, where ye were not born ; and there shall ye die.

27 But to the land whereunto they desire to return, thither shall they not return.

28 Is this man Coniah a despised broken idol ? is he a vessel wherein is no pleasure ? wherefore are they cast out, he and his seed, and are cast into a land which they know not ?

29 O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the LORD.

30 Thus saith the LORD, Write ye this man childless, a man that shall not prosper in his days : for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah.

¹¹ Heb. lift up their mind.

Verse 18. "They shall not lament for him, saying, Ah my brother ! or, Ah sister !... Ah lord ! or, Ah his glory !" —This doubtless describes some of the more customary cries of the women and children when a person died, or of the people on the demise of some chief person, especially a king. Of the professional mourners we have already spoken under chap. ix. 17 ; but the present case seems more especially to refer to the lamentations of actual mourners. When a death takes place in a family, particularly of one of its chief members, the sudden cry which is raised in the house, and continued at intervals, is most appalling ; and it is interspersed with such exclamations as the present, praising the dead and lamenting his loss. Mohammed endeavoured to put down this practice, considering the outrageous lamentation which usually took place as an act of rebellion against the Divine will, although he allowed tears and silent sorrow to be becoming ; but he failed in this and many other of his attempts against ancient usages, which still continue in as full operation as ever. The following, from the Mishat-ul-Musabih, will show the ancient Arabian usages in this matter. "Omm Salmah said, When Abū Salmah, who was my first husband before the prophet, died, I said he was a stranger, and died in a strange land. Verily I will cry a cry for him, which shall be related among men, saying, 'She cried as no person ever did.' Then I was ready to cry for Abū Salmah ; when unexpectedly a woman came to me, and wished to assist and accompany me in crying. Then the prophet came and said, 'Do you wish, O woman ! to bring the devil into the house, from which God has brought him forth twice ?'... When his highness said this, I desisted from crying, and did not cry afterwards." From this it seems that Mohammed had heard in the street the cry by which she expected to gain renown. — "Abdullah-bin-Rawahah was senseless when he was ill and near dying ; and his sister, whose name was Amrah, stood crying, and said, 'O mountain ! O that ! and O the other !' when she was enumerating his accomplishments, and praised him, wailing. And Abdullah said to Amrah, when he recovered, 'There is not one of those qualities, which you have ascribed to me, but will be spoken of to me in a troublesome way.' " Again, "Abu-Musa-al-Ashari said, I heard the prophet say, 'There is no dead person, the people of whose tribe stood crying and saying, O mountain ! O chief ! (and such like, which is said in wailing) ; but God appoints two angels for him, to shake him, and to say in a taunting manner, Were you as they said ?' " It is very remarkable that Mohammed, in mentioning his dislike to the custom, lets us know that it was in his time exhibited in a most exaggerated form by the Jews in Arabia. Compare this with what Mr. Lane says of the modern Egyptian practice. Before the spirit has departed, or the moment after, "the women of the family raise the cries of lamentation, called wel'wel'eh, or wilwal' ; uttering the most piercing shrieks, and calling upon the name of the deceased. The most common cries that are heard upon the death of the master of the family, from the lips of his wife, or wives, and children, are, 'O my master !' 'O my camel !' (that is, 'O thou that broughtest my provisions, and hast carried my burdens !') 'O my lion !' 'O camel of the house !' 'O my dear one !' 'O my only one !' 'O my father !' 'O my misfortune !' "

CHAPTER XXIII.

¹ Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture ! saith the LORD.

2 Therefore thus saith the LORD God of Israel against the pastors that feed my people ; Ye have scattered my flock, and driven them away, and have not visited them : behold, I will visit upon you the evil of your doings, saith the LORD.

3 And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds ; and they shall be fruitful and increase.

4 And I will set up ²shepherds over them which shall feed them : and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the LORD.

5 ¶ Behold, ³the days come, saith the LORD, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth.

6 'In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is his name whereby he shall be called, ⁵THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

7 Therefore, behold, ⁶the days come, saith the LORD, that they shall no more say, The LORD liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt;

8 But, The LORD liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land.

9 ¶ Mine heart within me is broken because of the prophets; all my bones shake; I am like a drunken man, and like a man whom wine hath overcome, because of the LORD, and because of the words of his holiness.

10 For the land is full of adulterers; for because of ⁷swearing the land mourneth; the pleasant places of the wilderness are dried up, and their ⁸course is evil, and their force is not right.

11 For both prophet and priest are profane; yea, in my house have I found their wickedness, saith the LORD.

12 Wherefore their ways shall be unto them as slippery ways in the darkness: they shall be driven on, and fall therein: for I will bring evil upon them, even the year of their visitation, saith the LORD.

13 And I have seen ⁹¹⁰folly in the prophets of Samaria; they prophesied in Baal, and caused my people Israel to err.

14 I have seen also in the prophets of Jerusalem ¹¹an horrible thing: they commit adultery, and walk in lies: they strengthen also the hands of evildoers, that none doth return from his wickedness: they are all of them unto me as ¹²Sodom, and the inhabitants thereof as Gomorrah.

15 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts concerning the prophets; Behold, I will feed them with ¹³wormwood, and make them drink the water of gall: for from the prophets of Jerusalem is ¹⁴profaneness gone forth into all the land.

16 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Hearken not unto the words of the prophets that prophesy unto you: they make you vain: they speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the LORD.

17 They say still unto them that despise me, The LORD hath said, ¹⁵Ye shall have peace; and they say unto every one that walketh after the ¹⁶imagination of his own heart, No evil shall come upon you.

18 For who hath stood in the ¹⁷counsel of the LORD, and hath perceived and heard his word? who hath marked his word, and heard it?

19 Behold, a ¹⁸whirlwind of the LORD is gone forth in fury, even a grievous whirlwind: it shall fall grievously upon the head of the wicked.

20 The ¹⁹anger of the LORD shall not return, until he have executed, and till he have performed the thoughts of his heart: in the latter days ye shall consider it perfectly.

21 ²⁰I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran: I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied.

22 But if they had stood in my counsel, and had caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings.

23 Am I a God at hand, saith the LORD, and not a God afar off?

24 Can any ²¹hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the LORD. Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the LORD.

25 I have heard what the prophets said, that prophesy lies in my name, saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed.

27 Which think to cause my people to forget my name by their dreams which they tell every man to his neighbour, "as their fathers have forgotten my name for Baal.

28 The prophet "that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the LORD.

29 Is not my word like as a fire? saith the LORD; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?

30 Therefore, behold, "I am against the prophets, saith the LORD, that steal my words every one from his neighbour.

31 Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the LORD, "that use their tongues, and say, He saith.

32 Behold, I am against them that prophesy false dreams, saith the LORD, and do tell them, and cause my people to err by their lies, and by their lightness; yet I sent them not, nor commanded them: therefore they shall not profit this people at all, saith the LORD.

33 ¶ And when this people, or the prophet, or a priest, shall ask thee, saying, What is the burden of the LORD? thou shalt then say unto them, What burden? I will even forsake you, saith the LORD.

34 And as for the prophet, and the priest, and the people, that shall say, The burden of the LORD, I will even "punish that man and his house.

35 Thus shall ye say every one to his neighbour, and every one to his brother, What hath the LORD answered? and, What hath the LORD spoken?

36 And the burden of the LORD shall ye mention no more: for every man's word shall be his burden; for ye have perverted the words of the living God, of the LORD of hosts our God.

37 Thus shalt thou say to the prophet, What hath the LORD answered thee? and, What hath the LORD spoken?

38 But since ye say, The burden of the LORD; therefore thus saith the LORD; Because ye say this word, The burden of the LORD, and I have sent unto you, saying, Ye shall not say, The burden of the LORD;

39 Therefore, behold, I, even I, will utterly forget you, and I will forsake you, and the city that I gave you and your fathers, and cast you out of my presence:

The Artemisia absinthium, or common wormwood, is a plant well known among ancient and modern writers for its intense bitterness; though the wholesome nature of the herb, when used as a stomachic, might almost lead us to doubt whether that be the plant intended by the sacred writers, did we not find the ἀψιθιον, or "wormwood," treated as the emblem of the bitter potion of misery in the Revelations. Dioscorides speaks of it as a well-known herb, and very bitter; βαθυ πικρον. γυναιμιος ἡ ποα.

25. "That prophesy lies in my name, saying, I have dreamed."—They professed to have received dreams from God; or, having had dreams, pretended that they were oracles and intimations from God. The facility of this kind of imposition, and the impossibility of immediate detection, rendered this a common method by which the old Pagan priests and prophets deluded the people. Besides extraordinary and professedly unsought dreams there were some of the heathen gods which were considered to deliver their oracles principally, if not exclusively, through their instrumentality, such as Osiris, Isis, and Serapis, in Egypt; Hercules (so called by Tacitus, but perhaps Baal), in Mesopotamia; Amphiarus, in Attica; Pasiphae, in Sparta, and many others. When a responsive dream was sought, some observances were practised; after which the dream was supposed to give the required answer. Often the dream-seeker slept in the temple of the idol, and sometimes upon the skins of the victims which had been offered in sacrifice. Those who sought a prophetic dream sometimes fasted the previous day, and abstained three days from wine; those who did not fast, were careful to eat nothing difficult of digestion, such as beans and raw fruit. It was sometimes considered necessary that the dreamer should wear a white garment; and the dreams of the morning were those to which most attention was paid. Such were some of the practices of the Heathen dreamers, and which were very probably adopted by the false prophets of the Hebrews. See Banier ('Mythology,' i. 345, 353); Rosinus ('Antiq. Romanarum,' lib. ii. cap. 2); and Harwood ('Grec. Antiq.' p. 192). Similar practices, for similar purposes, still prevail in different parts of Pagan Asia.

CHAPTER XXIV.

¹ Under the type of good and bad figs, ⁴ he foresheweth the restoration of them that were in captivity, ⁸ and the desolation of Zedekiah and the rest.

THE LORD shewed me, and, behold, two baskets of figs were set before the temple of the LORD, after that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon had carried away captive Jechoniah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, and the princes of Judah, with the carpenters and smiths, from Jerusalem, and had brought them to Babylon.

² One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe: and the other basket had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten, they were so bad.

³ Then said the LORD unto me, What seest thou, Jeremiah? And I said, Figs; the good figs, very good; and the evil, very evil, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

⁴ ¶ Again the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

⁵ Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel; Like these good figs, so will I acknowledge them that are carried away captive of Judah, whom I have sent out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans for their good.

⁶ For I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and I will bring them again to this land: and I will build them, and not pull them down; and I will plant them, and not pluck them up.

⁷ And I will give them an heart to know me, that I am the LORD: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto me with their whole heart.

⁸ ¶ And as the evil figs, which cannot be eaten, they are so evil; surely thus saith the LORD, So will I give Zedekiah the king of Judah, and his princes, and the residue of Jerusalem, that remain in this land, and them that dwell in the land of Egypt:

⁹ And I will deliver them to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth for their hurt, to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse, in all places whither I shall drive them.

¹⁰ And I will send the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, among them, till they be consumed from off the land that I gave unto them and to their fathers.

Verse 2. "The figs that are first ripe."—The figs here called בכורה becorah, or first-ripe figs, still bear the same name in the Levant. There are three sorts of figs: the first, that here mentioned, makes its appearance about the vernal equinox, and comes to maturity about the middle or latter end of June. Before it is ripe it is called, in Scripture, the green fig, but when ripe, the untimely (i. e., precocious) fig. It is generally considered to have a flavour superior to any other, and is deemed a great delicacy—partly perhaps from its earliness, which renders it the more prized, as all early fruits are. Then there is, second, the summer or dry fig (called kermes), which appears about the middle of June, and is ripe in August. This is the sort which is dried in the sun and preserved in masses, called "cakes" in our version; and which is to be considered as the proper and regular fig. Lastly, there is the winter fig, which appears in August, and is not ripe till towards the end of November. This is usually of a longer figure and darker colour than the others. When the weather is favourable, some of these figs will hang ripening upon the tree after the leaves are shed, and through the winter, being gathered as delicious morsels early in the spring. All figs fall when they are ripe, and especially the early figs. This circumstance is alluded to in Nahum iii. 12.

CHAPTER XXV.

¹ Jeremiah reproving the Jews' disobedience to the prophets, ⁸ foretelleth the seventy years' captivity, ¹² and after that, the destruction of Babylon. ¹⁵ Under the type of a cup of wine he foresheweth the destruction of all nations. ³⁴ The howling of the shepherds.

THE word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the people of Judah in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, that was the first year of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon;

² The which Jeremiah the prophet spake unto all the people of Judah, and to all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying,

³ From the thirteenth year of Josiah the son of Amon king of Judah, even unto this day, that is the three and twentieth year, the word of the LORD hath come unto me, and I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; but ye have not hearkened.

4 And the LORD hath sent unto you all his servants the prophets, rising early and sending them; but ye have not hearkened, nor inclined your ear to hear.

5 They said, 'Turn ye again now every one from his evil way, and from the evil of your doings, and dwell in the land that the LORD hath given unto you and to your fathers for ever and ever:

6 And go not after other gods to serve them, and to worship them, and provoke me not to anger with the works of your hands; and I will do you no hurt.

7 Yet ye have not hearkened unto me, saith the LORD; that ye might provoke me to anger with the works of your hands to your own hurt.

8 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts; Because ye have not heard my words, 9 Behold, I will send and take all the families of the north, saith the LORD, and Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, my servant, and will bring them against this land, and against the inhabitants thereof, and against all these nations round about, and will utterly destroy them, and make them an astonishment, and an hissing, and perpetual desolations.

10 Moreover I will take from them the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the sound of the millstones, and the light of the candle.

11 And this whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment; and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years.

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when seventy years are accomplished, that I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the LORD, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations.

13 And I will bring upon that land all my words which I have pronounced against it, even all that is written in this book, which Jeremiah hath prophesied against all the nations.

14 For many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of them also: and I will recompense them according to their deeds, and according to the works of their own hands.

15 ¶ For thus saith the LORD God of Israel unto me; Take the wine cup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the nations, to whom I send thee, to drink it.

16 And they shall drink, and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them.

17 Then took I the cup at the LORD's hand, and made all the nations to drink, unto whom the LORD had sent me:

18 To wit, Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, and the kings thereof, and the princes thereof, to make them a desolation, an astonishment, an hissing, and a curse; as it is this day;

19 Pharaoh king of Egypt, and his servants, and his princes, and all his people;

20 And all the mingled people, and all the kings of the land of Uz, and all the kings of the land of the Philistines, and Ashkelon, and Azzah, and Ekron, and the remnant of Ashdod,

21 Edom, and Moab, and the children of Ammon,

22 And all the kings of Tyrus, and all the kings of Zidon, and the kings of the isles which are beyond the sea,

23 Dedan, and Tema, and Buz, and all that are in the utmost corners,

24 And all the kings of Arabia, and all the kings of the mingled people that dwell in the desert,

Verse 10. "The sound of the millstones."—Major Skinner, when resting at night on the journey from Bagdad to Babylon, in a poor Arab encampment, says, "the women in the neighbouring tents were grinding corn, and the dull sound of the stones was neither disagreeable nor unsuited to the scene. They accompanied the labour with the most plaintive song I ever heard: it was almost a moan; and it seemed as if they sung in concert, they kept so admirably together."—'Journey Overland,' vol. ii. p. 153. As the women usually grind corn every day, and sing at their labour, the sounds of the stones and of their voices are among the characteristic noises of an Eastern city, and the absence of which does therefore mark in the strongest manner its desolate condition.

12. "Seventy years."—This is a very remarkable prophecy, fixing, as it does, a date for the restoration of the Hebrews to their own land, and for the overthrow of the Babylonian monarchy. It is to be regretted that there has been no small portion of dispute as to the time when this period of seventy years should begin, and when it should terminate. The conclusion has, however, been less disputed than the commencement, since Ezra i. 1, seems sufficiently clear in fixing it to the first year of Cyrus, when the decree was issued for the restoration of the Jews. The circumstance which has occasioned so much inquiry with respect to the commencement of the period is, chiefly, that the subjection of the Hebrew nation to the Babylonians is marked by three distinct dates. The first occurred in the same year with the delivery of the present prophecy, when Jerusalem, then under the superiority of the Egyptian king, surrendered to Nebuchadnezzar after a short siege; and when the Babylonian confirmed Jehoiakim in his throne as a vassal sovereign, but took away a part of the ornaments of the Temple, and also the sons of some of the principal nobles to answer as hostages, and to be employed in the service of his court. Among these was Daniel and his three friends. Compare Dan. i. 1. That this was in the fourth year of Jehoiakim appears from verse 1 of the present prophecy, and also from ch. xlvi. 2. Daniel calls it the third year: but the apparent discrepancy only arises from a different mode of computation: thus, Jehoiakim ascended the throne at the end of the year which Jeremiah reckons as the first—a mode of reckoning by no means unusual in Scripture—whereas Daniel, neglecting the incomplete year, numbers one less. The second was soon after Jeconiah ascended the throne—when the Babylonians again besieged the revolted city, and the king, having surrendered, was kept as a prisoner, and his crown given to his uncle Zedekiah. On this occasion the royal treasures and the rich utensils of the Temple were seized, and the king, with the chief families and most useful members of the nation, was carried captive to Chaldea. Among these captives was the prophet Ezekiel. This was seven years after the first subjection of the land to the Babylonians (2 Kings xxiv. 8—18; 2 Chron. xxvi. 9, 10; Jer. lii. 28; and compare Isaiah xxxix. 3—6). In the ninth year of his reign, the ill-advised Zedekiah renounced his allegiance to the Babylonians. This brought on another siege of Jerusalem by the Chaldean army; and in the eleventh year of Zedekiah's reign the city was taken, and, together with the Temple, destroyed by fire (2 Kings xxiv. 18—20; xxv. 1—21; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 11—21; Jer. xxxvii. 3—10; lii. 12, &c.). This was eighteen years after the first date of the Babylonian dominion over the Hebrews. Here, then, the question is, from which of these transactions the period of seventy years takes its date. We must not only consider which is the most probable commencement, but must count off seventy years, and find a marked historical event for the conclusion. In the first place we must take a few dates on which to base any calculations that may be formed. The following will suffice:—

a 1. The first subjection of the Jews to the Babylonians	B.C. 605
a 2. The second, when Jehoiachin was king	597
a 3. The destruction of the city and Temple	586
b 1. The Edict of Cyrus, in the first year of his reign at Babylon	536
b 2. The completion of the Temple, after long interruption	516

One of the three first dates must be taken for the beginning of the seventy years, and one of the two last for its conclusion; and, from the difference of current and complete years, we need not mind the defect or surplus of a year in proceeding upon these dates. Now, to apply,—if we take the dates a 1 and b 1, we find the difference between them to be 69 years, which, allowing for the difference just stated, we may call seventy years. Here we have then the required number of years; and if any one were to judge concerning the period of seventy years, without any reference to the dates, he would most probably regard, as the commencing and concluding events, those to which these dates refer. This therefore is the period which the seventy years are supposed to embrace by Prideaux, Newton, Blayney, Hales, Jahn, and many other distinguished writers, with whom, after so distinct a corroboration, we cannot hesitate to concur.

The second date (a 2) has been chosen for the commencement by some writers, chiefly, as it seems, because Ezekiel (ch. xl. 1) makes the twenty-fifth year of the captivity correspond to the fourteenth year from the destruction of the city. This of course dates the first year of the captivity eleven years anterior to the ruin of Jerusalem, and which corresponds exactly to the date a 2; when the flower of the nation were carried captive, and the prophet himself along with them. But, if we count seventy years from this date, we are carried ten years beyond the first year of Cyrus, on the one hand, while on the other we are ten years short of the date (b 2) of the Temple's completion. It therefore appears that the commencement of the period would be fixed here without a due regard to its conclusion; and that Ezekiel speaks without any allusion to the seventy years, but with a sole reference to the time when he and the people with whom he came, and among whom he resided, were carried into captivity.

It only remains to consider the third hypothesis, which dates the seventy years from (a 3) the desolation of the city and Temple. If we take this for the commencement, we cannot have the edict of Cyrus for the conclusion, the interval being but fifty years; but we obtain just seventy years if we carry on the account to the time when Darius issued his edict for the completion of the Temple, and after which that structure was soon completed; and which might well, considering the importance which was attached to the Temple, be regarded as completing the restoration of the Hebrews from their captive condition. It is clear indeed that Zechariah (ch. i. 12) thus computes seventy years, whether with or without a reference to the prophecy of Jeremiah; and it is equally certain that Daniel takes the earliest date, when he was himself carried into captivity, for the commencement of Jeremiah's seventy years. The result is, that under different hypotheses we certainly arrive at one (all that is required), and may arrive at two completions of the divine prediction; for from the entrance of the Hebrews into a captive condition, under Jehoiakim, to their entrance into a condition of freedom, under Cyrus, was seventy years; and from the completion of their captivity, by the destruction of the city and Temple, to the completion of their restoration, by the rebuilding of the Temple, was also seventy years. Thus, by various evidence, and under different hypotheses, we equally arrive at a satisfactory conclusion.

17. "Then took I the cup . . . and made all the nations to drink."—We may give the usual explanation in the words of Dr. Blayney:—"It is not to be imagined that Jeremiah went round in person to all the nations and kings here enumerated; but either that he did so in a vision, or else that he actually did what is figuratively designed—that is, he publicly announced the judgments of God severally against them." Archbishop Secker also points to the corresponding circumstance that, in ch. i. 10, Jeremiah is said to be set over nations, to root out, &c.; when the meaning was only to foretell that they should be rooted out.

26. "Sheshach."—That Babylon is intended appears very clearly from ch. li. 41; but why this name is given to it remains very uncertain, after all the ingenious conjectures which have been offered.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 Jeremiah by promises and threatenings exhorteth to repentance. 8 He is therefore apprehended, 10 and arraigned. 11 His apology. 16 He is quit in judgment, by the example of Micah, 20 and of Urijah, 24 and by the care of Ahikam.

IN the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah came this word from the LORD, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD; Stand in the court of the LORD's house, and speak unto all the cities of Judah, which come to worship in the LORD's house, all the words that I command thee to speak unto them; 'diminish not a word:

3 If so be they will hearken, and turn every man from his evil way, that I may ²repent me of the evil, which I purpose to do unto them because of the evil of their doings.

4 And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD; If ye will not hearken to me, to walk in my law, which I have set before you,

5 To hearken to the words of my servants the prophets, whom I sent unto you, both rising up early, and sending them, but ye have not hearkened;

6 Then will I make this house like ³Shi-loh, and will make this city a curse to all the nations of the earth.

7 So the priests and the prophets and all the people heard Jeremiah speaking these words in the house of the LORD.

8 ¶ Now it came to pass, when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking all that the LORD had commanded him to speak unto all the people, that the priests and the prophets and all the people took him, saying, Thou shalt surely die.

9 Why hast thou prophesied in the name of the LORD, saying, This house shall be like Shiloh, and this city shall be desolate without an inhabitant? And all the people were gathered against Jeremiah in the house of the LORD.

10 ¶ When the princes of Judah heard these things, then they came up from the king's house unto the house of the LORD, and sat down 'in the entry of the new gate of the LORD's house.

11 Then spake the priests and the prophets unto the princes and to all the people, saying, 'This man is worthy to die; for he hath prophesied against this city, as ye have heard with your ears.

12 ¶ Then spake Jeremiah unto all the princes and to all the people, saying, The LORD sent me to prophesy against this house and against this city all the words that ye have heard.

13 Therefore now 'amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of the LORD your God; and the LORD will 'repent him of the evil that he hath pronounced against you.

14 As for me, behold, I am in your hand: do with me 'as seemeth good and meet unto you.

15 But know ye for certain, that if ye put me to death, ye shall surely bring innocent blood upon yourselves, and upon this city, and upon the inhabitants thereof: for of a truth the LORD hath sent me unto you to speak all these words in your ears.

16 ¶ Then said the princes and all the people unto the priests and to the prophets; This man is not worthy to die: for he hath spoken to us in the name of the LORD our God.

17 Then rose up certain of the elders of the land, and spake to all the assembly of the people, saying,

18 'Micah the Morasthite prophesied in the days of Hezekiah king of Judah, and spake to all the people of Judah, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts; ¹⁰Zion shall be plowed like a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of a forest.

19 Did Hezekiah king of Judah and all Judah put him at all to death? did he not fear the LORD, and besought ¹¹the LORD, and the LORD repented him of the evil which he had pronounced against them? Thus might we procure great evil against our souls.

20 And there was also a man that prophesied in the name of the LORD, Urijah the son of Shemaiah of Kirjath-jearim, who prophesied against this city and against this land according to all the words of Jeremiah:

21 And when Jehoiakim the king, with all his mighty men, and all the princes, heard his words, the king sought to put him to death: but when Urijah heard it, he was afraid, and fled, and went into Egypt;

22 And Jehoiakim the king sent men into Egypt, namely, Elnathan the son of Achbor, and certain men with him into Egypt.

23 And they fetched forth Urijah out of Egypt, and brought him unto Jehoiakim the king; who slew him with the sword, and cast his dead body into the graves of the ¹²common people.

24 Nevertheless the hand of Ahikam the son of Shaphan was with Jeremiah, that they should not give him into the hand of the people to put him to death.

Verse 18. "Micah the Morasthite."—So called, it would seem, and as the Targum understands, from being a native of Maresah, a town of the tribe of Judah (Josh. xv. 44). From this description, as well as from the quoted prophecy, the prophet here referred to is doubtless the same whose writings are preserved among those of the twelve minor prophets. Compare the passages indicated by the marginal references, and see the note on Mic. iii. 12.

20. "Urijah."—Of this prophet, and the interesting circumstance here recorded, we have no other information than that which thus incidentally transpires.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 Under the type of bonds and yokes he prophesieth the subduing of the neighbour kings unto Nebuchadnezzar. 8 He exhorteth them to yield, and not to believe the false prophets. 12 The like he doeth to Zedekiah. 19 He foretelleth, the remnant of the vessels shall be carried to Babylon, and there continue until the day of visitation.

IN the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah came this word unto Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD to me; Make thee bonds and yokes, and put them upon thy neck,

3 And send them to the king of Edom, and to the king of Moab, and to the king of the Ammonites, and to the king of Tyrus, and to the king of Zidon, by the hand of the messengers which come to Jerusalem unto Zedekiah king of Judah;

4 And command them to say unto their masters, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Thus shall ye say unto your masters;

5 I have made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by my great power and by my outstretched arm, and have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me.

6 And now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, my servant; and the beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him.

7 And all nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the very time of his land come: and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him.

8 And it shall come to pass, that the nation and kingdom which will not serve the same Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, and that will not put their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, that nation will I punish, saith the LORD, with the sword, and with the famine, and with the pestilence, until I have consumed them by his hand.

9 Therefore hearken not ye to your prophets, nor to your diviners, nor to your dreamers, nor to your enchanters, nor to your sorcerers, which speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon:

10 For they prophesy a lie unto you, to remove you far from your land; and that I should drive you out, and ye should perish.

11 But the nations that bring their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him, those will I let remain still in their own land, saith the LORD; and they shall till it, and dwell therein.

12 ¶ I spake also to Zedekiah king of Judah according to all these words, saying, Bring your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him and his people, and live.

13 Why will ye die, thou and thy people, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, as the LORD hath spoken against the nation that will not serve the king of Babylon?

14 Therefore hearken not unto the words of the prophets that speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon: for they prophesy a lie unto you.

15 For I have not sent them, saith the LORD, yet they prophesy a lie in my name; that I might drive you out, and that ye might perish, ye, and the prophets that prophesy unto you.

16 Also I spake to the priests and to all this people, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Hearken not to the words of your prophets that prophesy unto you, saying, Behold, the vessels of the LORD's house shall now shortly

19 ¶ For thus saith the LORD of hosts concerning the pillars, and concerning the sea, and concerning the bases, and concerning the residue of the vessels that remain in this city,

20 Which Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took not, when he carried away captive Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah from Jerusalem to Babylon, and all the nobles of Judah and Jerusalem;

Verse 2. "Make thee bonds and yokes."—The yokes seem to have taken their name from those borne by labouring oxen. But they were probably not the same, but rather such as slaves employed in carrying their burdens, and which therefore formed the badge of an enslaved condition. They consisted of a pole, which rested horizontally upon the neck and shoulders, and from the ends of which the burdens were suspended—precisely on the same principle as the beam by which the milkmen carry their pails through our streets, and which, remarkably enough, are also called "yokes." How these were used by the ancient Egyptians may be seen by the cuts under Neh. ix., which show men carrying bricks in this manner, and an inspection of which will suggest that the "bonds" were the cords or thongs by which the burdens were suspended from the yoke.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 Hananiah prophesieth falsely the return of the vessels, and of Jeconiah. 5 Jeremiah, wishing it to be true, sheweth that the event will declare who are true prophets. 10 Hananiah breaketh Jeremiah's yoke. 12 Jeremiah telleth of an iron yoke, 15 and foretelleth Hananiah's death.

AND it came to pass the same year, in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the fourth year, and in the fifth month, that Hananiah the son of Azur the prophet, which was of Gibeon, spake unto me in the house of the LORD, in the presence of the priests and of all the people, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, I have broken the yoke of the king of Babylon.

3 Within two full years will I bring again into this place all the vessels of the LORD's house, that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took away from this place, and carried them to Babylon:

4 And I will bring again to this place

Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, with all the ^acaptives of Judah, that went into Babylon, saith the LORD: for I will break the yoke of the king of Babylon.

5 ¶ Then the prophet Jeremiah said unto the prophet Hananiah in the presence of the priests, and in the presence of all the people that stood in the house of the LORD,

6 Even the prophet Jeremiah said, Amen: the LORD do so: the LORD perform thy words which thou hast prophesied, to bring again the vessels of the LORD's house, and all that is carried away captive, from Babylon into this place.

7 Nevertheless hear thou now this word that I speak in thine ears, and in the ears of all the people;

8 The prophets that have been before me and before thee of old prophesied both against many countries, and against great kingdoms, of war, and of evil, and of pestilence.

9 The prophet which prophesieth of peace, when the word of the prophet shall come to pass, then shall the prophet be known, that the LORD hath truly sent him.

10 ¶ Then Hananiah the prophet took the yoke from off the prophet Jeremiah's neck, and brake it.

11 And Hananiah spake in the presence of all the people, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Even so will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon from the neck of all nations within the space of two full years. And the prophet Jeremiah went his way.

12 ¶ Then the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah the prophet, after that Hananiah the prophet had broken the yoke from off the neck of the prophet Jeremiah, saying, 13 Go and tell Hananiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Thou hast broken the yokes of wood; but thou shalt make for them yokes of iron.

14 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; I have put a yoke of iron upon the neck of all these nations, that they may serve Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; and they shall serve him: and I have given him the beasts of the field also.

15 ¶ Then said the prophet Jeremiah unto Hananiah the prophet, Hear now, Hananiah; The LORD hath not sent thee; but thou makest this people to trust in a lie.

16 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Behold, I will cast thee from off the face of the earth: this year thou shalt die, because thou hast taught rebellion against the LORD.

17 So Hananiah the prophet died the same year in the seventh month.

CHAPTER XXIX.

¹ Jeremiah sendeth a letter to the captives in Babylon, to be quiet there, ⁸ and not to believe the dreams of their prophets, ¹⁰ and that they shall return with grace after seventy years. ¹⁵ He foretelleth the destruction of the rest for their disobedience. ²⁰ He sheweth the fearful end of Ahab and Zedekiah, two lying prophets. ²⁴ Shemaiah writeth a letter against Jeremiah. ³⁰ Jeremiah readeth his doom.

Now these are the words of the letter that Jeremiah the prophet sent from Jerusalem unto the residue of the elders which were carried away captives, and to the priests, and to the prophets, and to all the people whom Nebuchadnezzar had carried away captive from Jerusalem to Babylon;

2 (After that Jeconiah the king, and the queen, and the eunuchs, the princes of Judah and Jerusalem, and the carpenters, and the smiths, were departed from Jerusalem;)

3 By the hand of Elasah the son of Shaphan, and Gemariah the son of Hilkiyah, (whom Zedekiah king of Judah sent unto Babylon to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon) saying,

4 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, unto all that are carried away captives, whom I have caused to be carried away from Jerusalem unto Babylon;

5 Build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them;

6 Take ye wives, and beget sons and daughters; and take wives for your sons, and give your daughters to husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters; that ye may be increased there, and not diminished.

7 And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the LORD for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace.

8 ¶ For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Let not your prophets and your diviners, that be in the midst of you, deceive you, neither hearken to your dreams which ye cause to be dreamed.

9 For they prophesy falsely unto you in my name: I have not sent them, saith the LORD.

10 ¶ For thus saith the LORD, That after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon

I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place.

11 For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the LORD, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you ^{an} expected end.

12 Then shall ye ^{call} upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken unto you.

13 And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart.

14 And I will be found of you, saith the LORD: and I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith the LORD; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive.

15 ¶ Because ye have said, The LORD hath raised us up prophets in Babylon;

16 Know that thus saith the LORD of the king that sitteth upon the throne of David, and of all the people that dwelleth in this city, and of your brethren that are not gone forth with you into captivity;

17 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Behold, I will send upon them the ^{sword}, the famine, and the pestilence, and will make them like ^{vile} figs, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

18 And I will persecute them with the sword, with the famine, and with the pestilence, and will deliver them to be removed to all the kingdoms of the earth, ^{to} be a curse, and an astonishment, and an hissing, and a reproach, among all the nations whither I have driven them:

19 Because they have not hearkened to my words, saith the LORD, which ^I sent unto them by my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them; but ye would not hear, saith the LORD.

20 ¶ Hear ye therefore the word of the LORD, all ye ^{of} the captivity, whom I have sent from Jerusalem to Babylon:

21 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, of Ahab the son of Kolaiah, and of Zedekiah the son of Maaseiah, which prophesy a lie unto you in my name; Behold, I will deliver them into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; and he shall slay them before your eyes;

22 And of them shall be taken up a curse by all the captivity of Judah which are in Babylon, saying, The LORD make thee like Zedekiah and like Ahab, whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire;

23 Because they have committed villany in Israel, and have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives, and have spoken lying words in my name, which I have not commanded them; even I know, and am a witness, saith the LORD.

24 ¶ Thus shalt thou also speak to She-maiah the ^{Nehelamite}, saying,

25 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, Because thou hast sent letters in thy name unto all the people that are at Jerusalem, and to Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, and to all the priests, saying,

26 The LORD hath made thee priest in the stead of Jehoiada the priest, that ye should be officers in the house of the LORD, for every man that is ^{mad}, and maketh himself a prophet, that thou shouldest put him in prison, and in the stocks.

27 Now therefore why hast thou not re-proved Jeremiah of Anathoth, which maketh himself a prophet to you?

28 For therefore he sent unto us in Babylon, saying, This captivity is long: build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them.

29 And Zephaniah the priest read this letter in the ears of Jeremiah the prophet.

30 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying,

31 Send to all them of the captivity, saying, Thus saith the LORD concerning She-maiah the Nehelamite; Because that She-maiah hath prophesied unto you, and I sent him not, and he caused you to trust in a lie:

32 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Behold, I will punish Shemaiah the Nehe-

Verse 21. "Ahab... Zedekiah."—These two false prophets, who prophesied a lie in the Lord's name, and committed adultery with their neighbours' wives, are supposed by some of the old Jewish writers to be the same with the two elders who attempted the chastity of Susannah, as recorded in the narrative in the apocryphal book bearing her name, and which the Jews believe to be true in substance, although not exactly as there related. This is probably nothing more than a conjecture.

22. "Roasted in the fire."—It may be doubted whether these men were burnt by the Babylonians as an ordinary capital punishment, or offered in sacrifice to the idols. We had lately occasion to observe that criminals were, in different nations, sometimes offered as victims to the gods. See also the note to Gen. xxxviii. 24. The particular crime or crimes which brought upon them this punishment from the king of Babylon does not clearly appear, although not a few conjectures have been offered by the Rabbinical and other writers.

CHAPTER XXX.

1 God sheweth Jeremiah the return of the Jews. 4 After their trouble they shall have deliverance. 10 He comforteth Jacob. 18 Their return shall be gracious. 20 Wrath shall fall on the wicked.

THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the LORD God of Israel, saying, Write thee all the words that I have spoken unto thee in a book.

3 For, lo, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the LORD: and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it.

4 ¶ And these are the words that the LORD spake concerning Israel and concerning Judah.

5 For thus saith the LORD; We have heard a voice of trembling, ¹of fear, and not of peace.

6 Ask ye now, and see whether ²a man doth travail with child? wherefore do I see every man with his hands on his loins, as a woman in travail, and all faces are turned into paleness?

7 ³Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it.

8 For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the LORD of hosts, that I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him:

9 But they shall serve the LORD their

God, and 'David their king, whom I will raise up unto them.

10 ¶ Therefore ⁴fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the LORD; neither be dismayed, O Israel; for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid.

11 For I am with thee, saith the LORD, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee: but I will correct thee ⁵in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished.

12 For thus saith the LORD, Thy bruise is incurable, and thy wound is grievous.

13 There is none to plead thy cause, ⁶that thou mayest be bound up: thou hast no healing medicines.

14 All thy lovers have forgotten thee; they seek thee not; for I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, with the chastisement of a cruel one, for the multitude of thine iniquity; because thy sins were increased.

15 Why ⁷criest thou for thine affliction? thy sorrow is incurable for the multitude of thine iniquity: because thy sins were increased, I have done these things unto thee.

16 Therefore all they that devour thee ⁸shall be devoured; and all thine adversaries, every one of them, shall go into captivity; and they that spoil thee shall be a 19 And out of them shall proceed thanksgiving and the voice of them that make merry: and I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small.

At the same time, saith the LORD, will I be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be my people.

2 Thus saith the LORD, The people which were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness; even Israel, when I went to cause him to rest.

3 The LORD hath appeared 'of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore 'with loving-kindness have I drawn thee.

4 Again I will build thee, and thou shalt be built, O virgin of Israel: thou shalt again be adorned with thy 'tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry.

5 Thou shalt yet plant vines upon the mountains of Samaria: the planters shall plant, and shall 'eat them as common things.

6 For there shall be a day, that the watchmen upon the mount Ephraim shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the LORD our God.

7 For thus saith the LORD; Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations: publish ye, praise ye, and say, O LORD, save thy people, the remnant of Israel.

8 Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together: a great company shall return thither.

9 They shall come with weeping, and with 'supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble: for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my 'firstborn.

10 ¶ Hear the word of the LORD, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock.

11 For the LORD hath redeemed Jacob, and ransomed him from the hand of him that was stronger than he.

12 Therefore they shall come and sing in the height of Zion, and shall flow together to the goodness of the LORD, for wheat, and for wine, and for oil, and for the young of the flock and of the herd: and their soul shall be as a 'watered garden; and they shall not sorrow any more at all.

13 Then shall the virgin rejoice in the dance, both young men and old together: for I will turn their mourning into joy, and will comfort them, and make them rejoice from their sorrow.

14 And I will satiate the soul of the priests with fatness, and my people shall be satisfied with my goodness, saith the LORD.

15 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; 'A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation, and bitter weeping; Rahel weeping for her children refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not.

16 Thus saith the LORD; Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the LORD; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy.

17 And there is hope in thine end, saith the LORD, that thy children shall come again to their own border.

18 ¶ I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself thus; Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke: turn thou me, and I shall be turned; for thou art the LORD my God.

19 Surely ¹⁰after that I was turned, I repented; and after that I was instructed, I smote upon my thigh: I was ashamed, yea, even confounded, because I did bear the reproach of my youth.

22 ¶ How long wilt thou go about, O thou backsliding daughter? for the LORD hath created a new thing in the earth, A woman shall compass a man.

23 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; As yet they shall use this speech in the land of Judah and in the cities thereof, when I shall bring again their captivity; The LORD bless thee, O habitation of justice, and mountain of holiness.

24 And there shall dwell in Judah itself, and in all the cities thereof together, husbandmen, and they that go forth with flocks.

25 For I have satiated the weary soul, and I have replenished every sorrowful soul.

26 Upon this I awaked, and beheld; and my sleep was sweet unto me.

27 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will sow the house of Israel and the house of Judah with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast.

28 And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the LORD.

29 ¹²In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge.

30 But every one shall die for his own iniquity: every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge.

31 ¶ Behold, the ¹³days come, saith the LORD, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah:

32 Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, ¹⁴although I was an husband unto them, saith the LORD:

33 But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the LORD, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; ¹⁵and will be their God, and they shall be my people.

34 And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the LORD: for ¹⁶they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the LORD: for ¹⁷I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

35 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, ¹⁸which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth ¹⁹the sea when the waves thereof roar; The LORD of hosts is his name:

36 ²⁰If those ordinances depart from before me, saith the LORD, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me for ever.

37 Thus saith the LORD; If ²¹heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the LORD.

38 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that the city shall be built to the LORD from the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner.

39 And the measuring line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about to Goath.

40 And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields unto the brook of Kidron, unto the corner of the horse gate toward the east, shall be holy unto the LORD; it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down any more for ever.

Verse 4. "Thou shalt be built, O virgin of Israel."—"The people of the East metaphorically ascribe the character of females to cities. They represent them as the mothers of the inhabitants; they speak of them as wives of the kings; when they revolt against the sovereign they are adulterous," &c. (Jahn's 'Archæologia Biblica,' sect. 41.) Compare 2 Sam. xx. 19; 2 Kings xix. 21; Ps. cxxxvii. 8; Isa. xxiii. 12; xlvii. 1—8; lxii. 4; Jer. iii. 8—14; xiii. 26; Lam. i. 1—8, 17; Ezek. xvi. 14; xxiii. 29; Nah. iii. 5, 6.

15. "A voice was heard in Ramah," &c.—It appears from chap. xl. 1, that Nebuzar-adan had the captives collected at Ramah, in chains, before he marched them off for Babylon. There must needs have been a great lamentation among them; and as this occurred at a place in the tribe of Benjamin, the prophet, by a fine and bold figure, introduces Rachel as weeping for her children slain and captives. Rachel, being both the mother of Benjamin, in one of the two kingdoms, and (through Joseph) of Ephraim, the leading tribe in the other, is with great propriety made to represent the general mother of the nation; and the weeping for her children is assigned with striking fitness to one by whom children were so passionately desired. Rachel's sepulchre was not, as some commentators explain, near Ramah, so as to be an object before the eyes of the miserable people there assembled; but it was near Bethlehem—at least twelve miles from this Ramah, and in the tribe of Judah: and as this was nearly at the same distance to the south of Jerusalem as Ramah was to the north, perhaps the text, incidentally, by this figure, indicates the extent of the lamentation and sorrow around Jerusalem, by expressing that the voice of Rachel weeping near Bethlehem "was heard in Ramah" by the captives.

19. "I smote upon my thigh."—Sorrow is still expressed by the same action in the East; the right thigh being usually smitten. This, as an act of grief, was in use among the classical ancients. Thus, in Homer, when the flames arose from the Grecian fleet, which had been set on fire by the Trojans,

"Achilles saw it, smote his thigh, and said—"

Il. xvi. 124.

So also Xenophon describes Cyrus as smiting his thigh when he received intelligence of the death of his generous friend Abradatus. And Cicero mentions it as a common rhetorical action of which he did not approve.

21. "Set thee up waymarks, make thee high heaps."—This refers to the foretold return of the captives, when they must necessarily cross the desert between Babylonia and Palestine; and it shows that it was customary, as it still is in some cases, to set up waymarks to direct the course of travellers across these desolate regions where man leaves no trace of his footsteps. The first word, צִנִּיִּם tzinim, rendered "waymarks," denotes stones set or heaped up for any commemorative or indicative purpose. The other, תַּמְרוּרִים tamrurim, coming from תָּמָר tamar, a palm-tree, would suggest tall round pillars or poles, having some resemblance to the trunk of the palm. Where such waymarks exist, they are usually set very far asunder, as in the level and bare plains they are visible from a great distance. Their construction varies, being formed of that material which can be most easily obtained; but they are seldom other than heaps of stones, except in those desolate districts over which a settled people have authority, and through which they frequently pass, and then they sometimes erect pillars of brick or stone, and we have occasionally observed cones or pillars of wicker-work filled up with clay or earth.

38. "The tower of Hananeel."—This tower, which probably derived its name from the builder, is one of the three towers mentioned in Nehemiah (xii. 38, 39). Its situation is there intimated with relation to the sheep-gate, but here and in Zech. xiv. 10, with respect to the "corner-gate;" and the tower was therefore most probably between the two. In the statement which we have copied from Horne, under Neh. iii.

1, the sheep-gate and this tower are placed to the south*, as they are also by Lightfoot, who however is very often inaccurate in his own deductions from the topographical indications of the Rabbins. It is more generally conceived that the "sheep-gate" was in the eastern wall, a little to the north of the north-east corner of the Temple wall, in the same situation as is now occupied by the gate of St. Stephen, so called from a tradition that the proto-martyr was there slain. The subject is involved in much uncertainty; but we rather prefer this conclusion, which of course places it in the north-eastern part of the city, facing the east; although some place it in the same part of the city, but facing the north. The probable situation of the sheep-gate determines that of the tower of Hananeel, which was obviously near it; and from the direction in which the boundary line is described, we may infer it to have been to the north of that gate, and consequently was near the north-east corner of the city, and probably faced the east.

"The gate of the corner."—This gate is not mentioned in Nehemiah; but it occurs so early as the reign of Amaziah, when Jehoash, king of Israel, "brake down the wall from the gate of Ephraim to the corner gate." This would alone intimate that it was in the north wall, as that quarter was, by nature, the most defenceless, and therefore the north wall was that against which besiegers usually directed their principal operations. The gate of Ephraim, which helps to determine the "corner gate," is allowed to have been in the north wall, and regarding the supposed situation of the tower of Hananeel, which seems sufficiently to mark the north-east angle, we may consider the "corner gate" to have been at or near the north-west angle, so that from the tower of Hananeel to the corner gate describes the north-eastern and the whole of the northern part of the city walls. As this gate is not mentioned after the Captivity, it was perhaps not rebuilt, unless it occurs under another name.

39. "Over against it upon the hill Gareb."—Our impression concerning the whole description is, that it describes no boundary of stone, but a boundary of holiness—that is, that not only the city itself, but those parts without the city, which were accounted common or unclean ground, should be considered holy—as holy as the temple. It therefore does not include the temple, which was already holy; and this is a circumstance which, notwithstanding its interest, and the point which it gives to the passage, has escaped notice. The line begins at some distance opposite the north-east angle of the temple precincts, and ends at the horse-gate, which was at nearly an equal distance from the south-east angle, leaving the temple itself, therefore, unenclosed. So also, although this boundary of holiness coincides with the city wall from the tower of Hananeel to the corner gate, it there ceases to do so; for that gate being at the north-west corner, the boundary does not turn southward, to follow the course of the western wall of the city; but continues westward, across the entrance of the western valley, to the hill Gareb, and then turns westward, and runs round the remainder of the city, parallel to the wall, so as to enclose the western and southern valleys, with part of the valley of the Kidron on the east. This is the clearest idea we can form of the passage and its object. This definition of course infers that the hill Gareb was that opposite the north-west angle of the city, and at the entrance of the western valley. Some writers, observing that the name denotes a species of leprosy, infer that the hill was occupied by the lepers, who were obliged to live outside the city, and that it hence derived its name. This does not seem improbable; and if true, the explanation we have given will suggest that it is mentioned as one of the unclean places which should become holy unto the Lord.

"Goath."—This was of course in the further progress west-

* In that extract, three gates are placed on the south side of the city; but we are persuaded that Mr. Horne must have intended to say "on the north," though we do not know that all the gates mentioned by him were there.

ward. As the word wants but the common prefix gal or gol, "a heap," to become Golgoath or Golgotha, some writers have suggested that it is the same place bearing that name in the New Testament, and where our Lord was crucified. This is however a matter which belongs to an inquiry concerning the site of Calvary, for which see the note on Heb. xiii.

40. "The valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes."—This was undoubtedly the valley of Ben-Hinnom, which, after it had been defiled by Josiah, to mark his detestation of the horrid rites which had there been celebrated, became the common receptacle for all the filth of the town. But as the bodies of dead animals, &c., thrown there, might prove very offensive to the city, and tend to produce a pestilence, we are informed by the Rabbins that fires were constantly kept burning in the valley, to consume these and other substances likely to prove injurious to the inhabitants. Hence the "ashes;" although some understand this of the ashes from the temple altar. It seems from ch. vii. 32, that there was also in this valley a burying-place of some kind—perhaps for foreigners or criminals.

"The horse-gate."—The situation of this gate has been indicated in a note on verse 39. It is supposed to have derived its name from being that through which the king's horses usually passed, when taken out to be watered or exercised; others suppose that it was so called because the market for horses was held there.

CHAPTER XXXII.

1 Jeremiah, being imprisoned by Zedekiah for his prophecy, 6 buyeth Hanameel's field. 13 Baruch must preserve the evidences, as tokens of the people's return. 16 Jeremiah in his prayer complaineth to God. 26 God confirmeth the captivity for their sins, 36 and promiseth a gracious return.

THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD in the tenth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, which was the eighteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar.

2 For then the king of Babylon's army besieged Jerusalem: and Jeremiah the prophet was shut up in the court of the prison, which was in the king of Judah's house.

3 For Zedekiah king of Judah had shut him up, saying, Wherefore dost thou prophecy, and say, Thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall take it;

4 And Zedekiah king of Judah shall not escape out of the hand of the Chaldeans, but shall surely be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, and shall speak with him mouth to mouth, and his eyes shall behold his eyes;

5 And he shall lead Zedekiah to Babylon, and there shall he be until I visit him, saith the LORD: though ye fight with the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper.

6 ¶ And Jeremiah said, The word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

7 Behold, Hanameel the son of Shallum thine uncle shall come unto thee, saying, Buy thee my field that is in Anathoth: for the right of redemption is thine to buy it.

8 So Hanameel mine uncle's son came to me in the court of the prison according to the word of the LORD, and said unto me, Buy my field, I pray thee, that is in Anathoth, which is in the country of Benjamin: for the right of inheritance is thine, and the redemption is thine; buy it for thyself. Then I knew that this was the word of the LORD.

9 And I bought the field of Hanameel my uncle's son, that was in Anathoth, and weighed him the money, even seventeen shekels of silver.

10 And I subscribed the evidence, and sealed it, and took witnesses, and weighed him the money in the balances.

11 So I took the evidence of the purchase, both that which was sealed according to the law and custom, and that which was open:

12 And I gave the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, in the sight of Hanameel mine uncle's son, and in the presence of the witnesses that subscribed the book of the purchase, before all the Jews that sat in the court of the prison.

13 ¶ And I charged Baruch before them, saying,

14 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Take these evidences, this evidence of the purchase, both which is sealed, and this evidence which is open; and put them in an earthen vessel, that they may continue many days.

15 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Houses and fields and vineyards shall be possessed again in this land.

16 ¶ Now when I had delivered the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, I prayed unto the LORD, saying,

17 Ah Lord God! behold, thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched out arm, and there is nothing 'too hard for thee:

18 Thou shewest 'lovingkindness unto thousands, and recompensest the iniquity of the fathers into the bosom of their children after them: the Great, the Mighty God, the LORD of hosts, is his name,

19 Great in counsel, and mighty in 'work: for thine 'eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men: to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings:

20 Which hast set signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, even unto this day, and in Israel, and among other men; and hast made thee a name, as at this day;

21 And hast brought forth thy people Israel ¹⁰out of the land of Egypt with signs, and with wonders, and with a strong hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with great terror;

22 And hast given them this land, which thou didst swear to their fathers to give them, a land flowing with milk and honey;

23 And they came in, and possessed it; but they obeyed not thy voice, neither walked in thy law; they have done nothing of all that thou commandedst them to do: therefore thou hast caused all this evil to come upon them:

24 Behold the ¹¹mounts, they are come unto the city to take it; and the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans, that fight against it, because of the sword, and of the famine, and of the pestilence: and what thou hast spoken is come to pass; and, behold, thou seest it.

25 And thou hast said unto me, O Lord God, Buy thee the field for money, and take witnesses; for the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

26 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying,

27 Behold, I am the LORD, the ¹²God of all flesh: is there any thing too hard for me?

28 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the Chaldeans, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and he shall take it:

29 And the Chaldeans, that fight against this city, shall come and set fire on this city, and burn it with the houses, ¹³upon whose roofs they have offered incense unto Baal, and poured out drink offerings unto other gods, to provoke me to anger.

30 For the children of Israel and the children of Judah have only done evil before me from their youth: for the children of Israel have only provoked me to anger with the work of their hands, saith the LORD.

31 For this city hath been to me as ¹⁴a provocation of mine anger and of my fury from the day that they built it even unto this day; that I should remove it from before my face,

32 Because of all the evil of the children of Israel and of the children of Judah, which they have done to provoke me to anger, they, their kings, their princes, their priests, and their prophets, and the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

33 And they have turned unto me the ¹⁵¹⁶back, and not the face: though I taught them, rising up early and teaching them, yet they have not hearkened to receive instruction.

34 But they ¹⁷set their abominations in the house, which is called by my name, to defile it.

35 And they built the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to ¹⁸cause their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire unto ¹⁹Molech; which I commanded them not, neither came it into my mind, that they should do this abomination, to cause Judah to sin.

Verse 9. "I bought the field."—This passage has much interest, as enabling us to perceive very clearly the manner in which, in this later period, the Hebrews conducted their transactions of important purchase and sale; and in this view it may be well to compare it with the account in Gen. xxiii. of Abraham's purchase of a field from Ephron the Hittite. In both, the presence of witnesses is secured, and in both the money is weighed in balances: but there are no other circumstances of resemblance. There is also no appearance of the "shoe," which occurs in the transaction recorded in Ruth iv.; which, however, being a transfer of right rather than a sale, does not supply so definite a comparison as the other. In fact, the present is the first instance in which we find written instruments employed in such transactions; and here they are introduced with much of the completeness and care which we find in modern ratifications. It seems that the terms of the agreement were written out in duplicate, and subscribed by the contracting parties and witnesses. The original was sealed and carefully preserved, probably for production at a future period, if judicial evidence of the transaction should be required; while the copy, characterized as "open," we may suppose to have been kept for occasional reference and inspection. The deed seems to have contained the formula of assignment, and a description of the premises, which more clearly appears in Blayney's translation of verse 11: "And I took the purchase-deed, that which was sealed, containing the assignment and limitations, and that which was open," &c.

This learned translator conceives, we see not on what grounds, that there was but one deed, in two parts—that which contained the assignment being sealed, and the specification being open. But the explanation we have given seems the simpler of the two.

"Seventeen shekels of silver."—This would not make more than about forty shillings of our money, which seems a very small sum to give for the inheritance of a field, particularly when we see the transaction of purchase conducted with so much legal form and care. But perhaps, when we consider that we are unacquainted with the extent of the land purchased—that the same nominal sum probably at that time and place represented a far greater real value than at this time and in this place—and above all, that the circumstances of the times must have tended greatly to lessen the value of land, the country being then actually under the dominion of the Chaldeans, and the purchaser well knowing that the property would not become beneficial to himself or his heirs till after the seventy years had expired—it becomes unnecessary to suppose that error in the text which has been imagined to exist, and which some have corrected so as to raise the amount to fourteen pounds sterling, by reading "seven shekels of gold, and ten of silver," while others raise it to fifty-three pounds fifteen shillings, by reading, or rather understanding, "seven manehs (each equal to sixty shekels), and ten shekels of silver."

5 They come to fight with the Chaldeans, but it is to fill them with the dead bodies of men, whom I have slain in mine anger and in my fury, and for all whose wickedness I have hid my face from this city.

6 Behold, I will bring it health and cure, and I will cure them, and will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth.

7 And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them, as at the first.

Verse 13. "The flocks pass again under the hands of him that telleth them."—Chardin thinks that this telling of the flocks was for the purposes of tribute, it being customary in the east to count the flocks, in order to take the third of the increase and young ones for the king. This is true as to the custom, and it is possible that the telling of the flocks is sometimes in Scripture to be understood to bear this allusion. But as, in the present instance, it is not clear how an enumeration for the purpose of taxation should be promised as a blessing; it more probably refers to the counting of the flocks by the owner or his steward, when they were sent out to the pastures, or when they returned.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

⁸ The princes and the people having dismissed their bond-servants, contrary to the covenant of God, reassume them.

¹² Jeremiah, for their disobedience, giveth them and Zedekiah into the hands of their enemies.

THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, 'when Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and all his army, and all the kingdoms of the earth ²of his dominion, and all the people, fought against Jerusalem, and against all the cities thereof, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel; Go and speak to Zedekiah king of Judah, and tell him, Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire:

3 And thou shalt not escape out of his hand, but shalt surely be ³taken, and delivered into his hand; and thine eyes shall behold the eyes of the king of Babylon, and ⁴he shall speak with thee mouth to mouth, and thou shalt go to Babylon.

4 Yet hear the word of the LORD, O Zedekiah king of Judah; Thus saith the LORD of thee, Thou shalt not die by the sword:

5 But thou shalt die in peace: and with the burnings of thy fathers, the former kings which were before thee, so shall they burn odours for thee; and they will lament thee, saying, Ah lord! for I have pronounced the word, saith the LORD.

6 Then Jeremiah the prophet spake all these words unto Zedekiah king of Judah in Jerusalem,

7 When the king of Babylon's army fought against Jerusalem, and against all the cities of Judah that were left, against Lachish, and against Azekah: for these defenced cities remained of the cities of Judah.

8 ¶ This is the word that came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, after that the king Zedekiah had made a covenant with all the people which were at Jerusalem, to proclaim ⁵liberty unto them;

9 That every man should let his manservant, and every man his maidservant, being an Hebrew or an Hebrewess, go free; that none should serve himself of them, to wit, of a Jew his brother.

10 Now when all the princes, and all the people, which had entered into the covenant, heard that every one should let his manservant, and every one his maidservant, go free, that none should serve themselves of them any more, then they obeyed, and let them go.

11 But afterward they turned, and caused the servants and the handmaids, whom they had let go free, to return, and brought them into subjection for servants and for handmaids.

12 ¶ Therefore the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying, thers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen, saying, 14 At the end of 'seven years' let ye go every man his brother an Hebrew, which 'hath been sold unto thee; and when he hath served thee six years, thou shalt let him go free from thee: but your fathers hearkened not unto me, neither inclined their ear.

15 And ye were 'now turned, and had done right in my sight, in proclaiming liberty every man to his neighbour; and ye had made a covenant before me in the house 'which is called by my name:

16 But ye turned and polluted my name, and caused every man his servant, and every man his handmaid, whom he had set at liberty at their pleasure, to return, and brought them into subjection, to be unto you for servants and for handmaids.

17 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Ye have not hearkened unto me, in proclaiming liberty, every one to his brother, and every man to his neighbour: behold, I proclaim a liberty for you, saith the LORD, to the sword, to the pestilence, and to the famine; and I will make you ¹⁰to be ¹¹removed into all the kingdoms of the earth.

18 And I will give the men that have transgressed my covenant, which have not performed the words of the covenant which they had made before me, when they cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof,

19 The princes of Judah, and the princes of Jerusalem, the eunuchs, and the priests, and all the people of the land, which passed between the parts of the calf;

20 I will even give them into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life: and their ¹²dead bodies shall be for meat unto the fowls of the heaven, and to the beasts of the earth.

21 And Zedekiah king of Judah and his princes will I give into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life, and into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which are gone up from you.

22 Behold, I will command, saith the LORD, and cause them to return to this city; and they shall fight against it, and take it, and burn it with fire: and I will make the cities of Judah a desolation without an inhabitant.

Verse 5. "With the burnings of thy fathers."—See the note on 1 Sam. xxxi. 12, where the reader will find that a question has been raised on the present and other texts of Scripture (as 2 Chron. xvi. 14; xxi. 19; Amos vi. 10), whether the body itself was burnt or only the odours. The Talmudists are strongly for the latter alternative, apparently regarding the other as a heathen practice, which they were not willing to have supposed had ever prevailed in their nation. It however remains difficult to explain Amos vi. 10, so as to mean anything but the burning of the body; and this, as the most distinct text, may be taken to explain the others. The body of Saul certainly was burnt; but there are circumstances in that case which might be said to except it from the support of a general conclusion, if it stood alone. In the present verse, it is not said that any "odours" were burnt, that word being supplied in our version. The only one of Zedekiah's royal ancestors in connection with whose funeral the burning is mentioned is Asa; but that it was customary among the later kings of Judah appears from the present text, which intimates that the omission would have been a dishonour to the royal remains; and, in like manner, Jehoram having been a wicked king, we are told that "his people made no burning for him like the burning of his fathers." As the text which refers to Asa is that which may be quoted to decide the less distinct passages to the alternative for the burning of odours only, in about the same degree that the text in Amos might determine such passages to mean the burning of the body, it becomes necessary to see whether it admits of an explanation compatible with the more obvious meaning of the latter passage. The verse is, "They buried him in his own sepulchres, which he had made for himself in the city of David, and laid him in the bed which was filled with sweet odours, and divers kind (of spices) prepared by the apothecaries' art: and they made a very great burning for him." Here it is not said what the burning was: no odours are mentioned as being burned, but only that he was laid upon a bed of odours and aromatics, and besides these no others are noticed. If therefore the burning refers to anything in the text itself, it would intimate that the body was burned together with the odours on which it was laid, which was in fact an ancient custom, and is a still subsisting custom in India. Then the only remaining difficulty is in the first clause, which says that he was buried. But this does not imply anything of itself, further than to state where his remains were deposited: and burying is compatible with burning; for it was and is usual to collect the bones and ashes, and dispose of or preserve them after various fashions, of which burying was one. Therefore, although we should not like to be very positive on the point, the resulting conclusion seems to be, that since the burning of odours alone on such occasions is nowhere mentioned in Scripture, whereas the burning of bodies is distinctly mentioned in 1 Sam. xxxi. 12 and Amos vi. 10, it is easier to explain 2 Chron. xvi. 14 to refer to the burning of the body, than to conclude that all the passages of Scripture in which funeral burning is noticed, refer to the burning of odours only. See further under Amos vi. 10.

It appears from the present prophecy, that although after Zedekiah had seen Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah, he was blinded and sent as a captive to Babylon, he there received an honourable funeral at his death, whenever that happened. Josephus says that Nebuchadnezzar kept him in prison till he died, and then bestowed a magnificent funeral on his remains. ('Antiq.' 1. 10, c. 8.) He probably bore the expenses and supplied the means of rendering the honours of royalty to the remains of the captive king; but the Jews were probably allowed to make his funeral conformable to their own rites and customs, as the present text seems to intimate.

8. "This is the word." &c.—The prophecy which occupies the preceding portion of this chapter is obviously dated when Nebuchadnezzar was engaged in carrying on the siege of Jerusalem and of the cities Lachish and Azekah, that is, most probably, towards the end of the ninth year of Zedekiah, the siege having been commenced in the tenth month of that year. The time of the second prophecy, which begins here and occupies the remainder of the chapter, is not so clearly indicated in the text; but it appears to have been soon after the above, when the Chaldeans had broken off the siege, and marched against the Egyptian army, which made a show of coming to the relief of Jerusalem. The prospect of this relief led the persons of substance to rescind that wise and just measure, of liberating their bond-servants, which they had taken and confirmed by oath, under the immediate pressure of danger and alarm. Whether this liberating measure had been taken out of professed regard to the law of Moses, by which it was imperatively commanded, or merely from prudential considerations, is not very clear; but, viewing the result, the latter seems the most probable supposition.

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 By the obedience of the Rechabites, 12 Jeremiah condemneth the disobedience of the Jews. 18 God blesseth the Rechabites for their obedience.

THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying,

2 Go unto the house of the Rechabites, and speak unto them, and bring them into the house of the LORD, into one of the chambers, and give them wine to drink.

3 Then I took Jaazaniah the son of Jeremiah, the son of Habaziniyah, and his brethren, and all his sons, and the whole house of the Rechabites;

4 And I brought them into the house of the LORD, into the chamber of the sons of Hanan, the son of Igdaiah, a man of God, which was by the chamber of the princes, which was above the chamber of Maaseiah the son of Shallum, the keeper of the 'door:

5 And I set before the sons of the house of the Rechabites pots full of wine, and cups, and I said unto them, Drink ye wine.

6 But they said, We will drink no wine: for Jonadab the son of Rechab our father commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye, nor your sons for ever:

7 Neither shall ye build house, nor sow seed, nor plant vineyard, nor have any: but all your days ye shall dwell in tents; that ye may live many days in the land where ye be strangers.

8 Thus have we obeyed the voice of Jonadab the son of Rechab our father in all that he hath charged us, to drink no wine all our days, we, our wives, our sons, nor our daughters;

9 Nor to build houses for us to dwell in: neither have we vineyard, nor field, nor seed:

10 But we have dwelt in tents, and have obeyed, and done according to all that Jonadab our father commanded us.

11 But it came to pass, when Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up into the land, that we said, Come, and let us go to Jerusalem for fear of the army of the Chaldeans, and for fear of the army of the Syrians: so we dwell at Jerusalem.

12 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying,

13 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Go and tell the men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, Will ye not receive instruction to hearken to my words? saith the LORD.

14 The words of Jonadab the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons not to drink wine, are performed; for unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment: notwithstanding I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; but ye hearkened not unto me.

15 I have sent also unto you all my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them, saying, 'Return ye now every man from his evil way, and amend your doings, and go not after other gods to serve them, and ye shall dwell in the land which I have given to you and to your fathers: but ye have not inclined your ear, nor hearkened unto me.

16 Because the sons of Jonadab the son of Rechab have performed the commandment of their father, which he commanded them; but this people hath not hearkened unto me:

17 Therefore thus saith the LORD God of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring upon Judah and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem all the evil that I have pronounced against them: because I have spoken unto them, but they have not heard; and I have called unto them, but they have not answered.

18 ¶ And Jeremiah said unto the house of the Rechabites, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Because ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, and kept all his precepts, and done according unto all that he hath commanded you:

19 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; 'Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before me for ever.

^a Chap. 18. 11, and 25. 5.

Verse 2. "Go unto the house of the Rechabites," &c.—The rules of the Rechabites, as afterwards stated, obliged them to live in tents, and necessarily, from the circumstances connected with their mode of life, in the open country: but at this time they had come into Jerusalem for safety, on the approach of the Chaldean army (verse 12). There they may have been obliged to live in houses, though this is by no means certain, as the word so rendered is of very large signification, equivalent to "habitation" or "abode;" and it is possible that they may have lived in their tents, in some open place in the city.

From 1 Chron. ii. 55, we learn that the house of Rechab was identical with, or a section of, the family of the Kenites, who were of the family of Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, and came with the Hebrews into Palestine, and there continued to lead their former mode of life, as appears from the instance of Heber the Kenite (Judges iv. 11), living in tents and following pastoral occupations. As Jonadab lived at a much later date—if we suppose him to be, as is generally conceived, the same person to whom Jehu was anxious to show his zeal for the Lord (2 Kings x.)—it follows that he did not found a mode of life entirely new; but took measures to preserve and confirm in the family of Rechab the ancient usages—adding some new regulations calculated to give perpetuity to old practices. It is possible that the Kenites, about that time, were becoming disposed to exchange their mode of life for the more settled, and, as it might seem to them, more comfortable, one of the Hebrews; and that Jonadab opposed this change, by his patriarchal authority, in the Rechabite branch of the family. In these regulations it is not necessary to suppose that he had any religious objects in view, as a merely prudential one is assigned for them in verse 7,—“that you may live many days in the land where you are strangers:” and for this purpose these rules were well calculated, since, from the manner in which the land was lotted out among the Hebrews, it does not appear how they could have acquired land, or applied themselves to cultivation, without giving umbrage to the Jews; who also might have disliked their engaging and succeeding in the principal business in which they were themselves employed; and by the circumstances of unpleasant collision thence arising, be at last incited to expel them from the country, by which they would have been deprived of the religious advantages they then enjoyed. Under this view, the prohibition of wine may possibly have been intended to take away from them one inducement to plant and cultivate vineyards.

It seems that the Rechabites, being taken in Jerusalem, were sent into captivity with the Hebrews, with whom it is generally supposed that at least a portion of them returned to Palestine when the seventy years had expired. But on this subject the Scripture affords no certain information; as they are not mentioned subsequently to the captivity, unless in the difficult verse 1 Chron. ii. 55, which is thought by some to refer to their condition after their return. Some, however, suppose they were the same as the sect known in later times by the name of Essenes, Ebionites, Assideans, &c.; but, although this sect was distinguished by many peculiarities from those of the mass of the Jews, it seems difficult to identify their usages with those of the Rechabites, as stated in the present chapter.

“Bring them into the house of the LORD, into one of the chambers.”—This was probably to the place where the wine for the drink offerings was preserved. It will be recollected that Jeremiah was a priest, and in that character had doubtless free access to the Temple and its offices. The mention of wine-drinking and wine-vessels in the context affords us an opportunity of introducing a figure of the ladle which was anciently employed in taking wine from the jar; and another of the strainer, by which it was cleared for immediate use.—(See the notes under Psalm lxxv.)

STRAINER AND LADLE FOR WINE.

19. "Jonadab . . . shall not want a man to stand before me for ever."—This has been very variously explained. Some suppose that Jonadab's descendants were actually introduced, in some subordinate capacity, into the service of the Temple; but it seems better to understand, by "standing before God," that they, or at least some of them, should ever be found among those who feared and worshipped God. Then, the "for ever" is explained by some to mean only a long time—for ages to come; while others extend it to the end of time. The promise is of course involved, that the posterity of Jonadab should not fail "for ever." But it does not necessarily follow that they should for ever keep the rules of their ancestor, or that they should for ever be recognised as his descendants: and yet, if his posterity should now be found existing, and acting on his rules, this would form an interesting example of the literal fulfilment of prophecy, while it would furnish a living commentary on the whole chapter.

The Jew Benjamin of Tudela professed to have discovered the descendants of the Rechabites in Arabia, where they formed a powerful and independent state, governed by a prince of the race of David, and occupying a large and fine territory, called Theima, of which they were the sole masters. Benjamin's account is curious; and although, like most of his other statements, it is highly exaggerated and embellished, it does appear to have been at least founded on facts. Rabbi Gerson, also, in the account of his wonderful journey in search of the river Sabbatjon, says, "The children of Rechab dwell in the Happy Arabia, in cities and villages." This indeed appears to have been the standing belief of the Jews. Niebuhr obtained information concerning a tribe of Jews inhabiting the mountains to the north-east of Medina, known by the name of Beni Kheiber, who had independent sheikhs of their own, were divided into three tribes, and maintained no intercourse with the other Jews dispersed over Asia. This notice in Niebuhr having attracted the notice of Joseph Wolff, the well-known Jewish missionary, he was led to make inquiries on the subject at Jerusalem. On asking a well informed Jew, Rabbi Mose Secot, whether he knew any thing of the Jews near Medina, the Rabbi said, Yes, they were the Beni Kheiber. Delighted at having taken the right clue, Wolff further asked whether they ever came to Jerusalem. The Rabbi replied, No; but they came there in the time of Jeremiah the prophet. On being asked how he knew this, he referred to the present chapter, the eleven first verses of which they read together. Mr. Wolff then proceeds:—"You see by this that Rabbi Mose Secot is quite certain that the Beni-Kheiber are the descendants of the Rechabites. To this present moment they drink no wine, and have neither vineyard, nor field, nor seed, but dwell like Arabs in tents and are wandering nomades. They believe and observe the law of Moses by tradition, for they are not in possession of the written law." He further ascertained that the Rabbi considered the name Kheiber, to be the same as that of Heber, denoting their descent from that Kenite. Afterwards the Rabbi showed him a passage in the Talmud which describes the Beni-Kheiber as descended from Jethro, the remoter ancestor. 'Missionary Journal,' 1824, p. 257, 261.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

¹ Jeremiah causeth Baruch to write his prophecy, 5 and publicly to read it. 11 The princes, having intelligence thereof by Michaiah, send Jehudi to fetch the roll, and read it. 19 They will Baruch to hide himself and Jeremiah. 20 The king Jehoiakim, being certified thereof, heareth part of it, and burneth the roll. 27 Jeremiah denounceth his judgment. 32 Baruch writeth a new copy.

AND it came to pass in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, that this word came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Take thee a roll of a book, and write therein all the words that I have spoken unto thee against Israel, and against Judah, and against all the nations, from the day I spake unto thee, from the days of ¹Josiah, even unto this day.

3 It may be that the house of Judah will hear all the evil which I purpose to do unto them; that they may return every man from his evil way; that I may forgive their iniquity and their sin.

4 Then Jeremiah called Baruch the son of Neriah: and Baruch wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the LORD, which he had spoken unto him, upon a roll of a book.

5 And Jeremiah commanded Baruch, saying, I am shut up; I cannot go into the house of the LORD:

6 Therefore go thou, and read in the roll, which thou hast written from my mouth, the words of the LORD in the ears of the people in the LORD's house upon the fasting day: and also thou shalt read them in the ears of all Judah that come out of their cities.

7 It may be ¹they will present their supplication before the LORD, and will return every one from his evil way: for great is the anger and the fury that the LORD hath pronounced against this people.

8 And Baruch the son of Neriah did according to all that Jeremiah the prophet commanded him, reading in the book the words of the LORD in the LORD's house.

9 And it came to pass in the fifth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, in the ninth month, that they proclaimed a fast before the LORD to all the people in Jerusalem, and to all the people that came from the cities of Judah unto Jerusalem.

10 Then read Baruch in the book the words of Jeremiah in the house of the LORD, in the chamber of Gemariah the son of Shaphan the scribe, in the higher court, at the ³entry of the new gate of the LORD's house, in the ears of all the people.

11 ¶ When Michaiah the son of Gemariah, the son of Shaphan, had heard out of the book all the words of the LORD, 12 Then he went down into the king's house, into the scribe's chamber: and, lo, all the princes sat there, even Elishama the scribe, and Delaiah the son of Shemaiah, and Elnathan the son of Achbor, and Gemariah the son of Shaphan, and Zedekiah the son of Hananiah, and all the princes.

13 Then Michaiah declared unto them all the words that he had heard, when Baruch read the book in the ears of the people.

14 Therefore all the princes sent Jehudi the son of Nethaniah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Cushi, unto Baruch, saying, Take in thine hand the roll wherein thou hast read in the ears of the people, and come. So Baruch the son of Neriah took the roll in his hand, and came unto them.

15 And they said unto him, Sit down now, and read it in our ears. So Baruch read it in their ears.

16 Now it came to pass, when they had heard all the words, they were afraid both one and other, and said unto Baruch, We will surely tell the king of all these words.

17 And they asked Baruch, saying, Tell us now, How didst thou write all these words at his mouth?

18 Then Baruch answered them, He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth, and I wrote them with ink in the book.

19 Then said the princes unto Baruch, Go, hide thee, thou and Jeremiah; and let no man know where ye be.

20 ¶ And they went in to the king into the court, but they laid up the roll in the chamber of Elishama the scribe, and told all the words in the ears of the king.

21 So the king sent Jehudi to fetch the roll: and he took it out of Elishama the scribe's chamber. And Jehudi read it in the ears of the king, and in the ears of all the princes which stood beside the king.

22 Now the king sat in the winterhouse in the ninth month: and there was a fire on the hearth burning before him.

23 And it came to pass, that when Jehudi had read three or four leaves, he cut it with the penknife, and cast it into the fire that was on the hearth, until all the roll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth.

24 Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, neither the king, nor any of his servants that heard all these words.

25 Nevertheless Elnathan and Delaiah and Gemariah had made intercession to the king that he would not burn the roll: but he would not hear them.

26 But the king commanded Jerahmeel the son of Hammelech, and Seraiah the son of Azriel, and Shelemiah the son of Abdeel, to take Baruch the scribe and Jeremiah the prophet: but the LORD hid them.

27 ¶ Then the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah, after that the king had burned the roll, and the words which Baruch wrote at the mouth of Jeremiah, saying, 28 Take thee again another roll, and write in it all the former words that were in the first roll, which Jehoiakim the king of Judah hath burned.

29 And thou shalt say to Jehoiakim king of Judah, Thus saith the LORD; Thou hast burned this roll, saying, Why hast thou written therein, saying, The king of Babylon shall certainly come and destroy this land, and shall cause to cease from thence man and beast?

30 Therefore thus saith the LORD of Jehoiakim king of Judah; He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David: and his dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost.

31 And I will punish him and his seed and his servants for their iniquity; and I will bring upon them, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and upon the men of Judah, all the evil that I have pronounced against them; but they hearkened not.

32 ¶ Then took Jeremiah another roll, and gave it to Baruch the scribe, the son of Neriah; who wrote therein from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the book which Jehoiakim king of Judah had burned in the fire: and there were added besides unto them many ^{like} words.

^a Heb. as they.

Verse 7. "They will present their supplication," &c.—Literally, "Peradventure their supplication may fall down before the face of JEHOVAH." In this and some other passages of the poetical Scriptures it seems as if a figure is drawn from the demeanour of the petitioner, and prayer is represented as coming, like a thing of life, and taking the posture of a suppliant, poor and humble, in the Lord's presence. Something of the same personification occurs in the old heathen writers, particularly in Homer's famous allegory, which, as Cowper observes, considering when and where it was composed, forms a very striking passage:—

"Prayers are Jove's daughters, wrinkled, lame, slant-eyed,
Which, though far distant, yet with constant pace Follow Offence," &c.—Il. ix. COWPER.

10. "In the higher court, at the entry of the new gate."—The higher court is generally believed, on what seems very good grounds, not to have been the court of the priests, but the court of Israel, which was open to the male population in general. The new gate is stated by the Rabbins to have been on the east side. It is possible that the chamber from which Baruch read the prophecies was over the gateway leading to this court, or elevated near it; and that he read it from a window or balcony, looking into the court, so that he could be heard by the people assembled there, and by those who passed in and out at the gate.

18. "Ink."—Some writers have doubted whether ink can be intended by the word here employed (יָדֵי דֵּיּוֹ); and Blayney, instead of "I wrote them with ink in a book," has "I wrote in a book after him." The Chaldee, Syriac, and Vulgate, however, agree with our version, which is also supported by the use of a similar word in Arabic and Persian. One objection supposes that ink was not at this time known to the Jews, and that they exclusively engraved their writing upon tablets. But a kind of ink is clearly mentioned even in the time of Moses (see Num. v. 23, and the note there); and Ezekiel (ix. 2, 3, 11) repeatedly speaks of the "inkhorn" which writers employed. From the word (μέλαν), by which "ink" is expressed in the New Testament, it appears that the ink was usually black, as in other nations; but it appears also that they had coloured inks; and Josephus ('Antiq.' xii. 2.) states that the seventy elders who made the Greek translation, brought from Jerusalem parchments on which the law was written in letters of gold. From the particulars collected by Winckelmann and others concerning the ink of the ancients it would seem that it differed very little from that which the Orientals still employ; and which is really better adapted than our own thin vitriolic inks to the formation of their written characters; and this is also true of the Hebrew, the letters of which are more easily and properly formed with this ink than with our own, and with reeds than with quill pens. The ink is usually composed of lamp black, or powdered charcoal, prepared with gum and water, and sold in small particles or grains, like gunpowder. The writer who wants to replenish his ink-horn puts some of this into it, and adds a little water, but not enough to render the ink much thinner than that of our printers. Those who use much of it, work up the ink-grains with water—in nearly the same way that artists prepare their colours, and then put it into their ink-stand. In the manuscripts written with this ink, the characters appear of a most intense and glossy black, which never changes its hue, never eats into the paper, nor never becomes indistinct or obliterated, except from the action of water, by which it is even more easily spoiled than our own manuscripts. The eastern scribes also write in gold, and with inks of various brilliant colours—particularly red and blue—their diversified applications of which often give a very rich and beautiful appearance to the page in the higher class of manuscripts. These details respecting modern Oriental ink will be found to agree remarkably with what has been said concerning the ink of the ancients; and this concurrence may be taken to furnish a very satisfactory conclusion with regard to the ink or inks used by the ancient Hebrews.

22. "There was a fire on the hearth burning before him."—Dr. Blayney's translation is, "There was set before him a hearth with burning coals." The word (מִנְחָה), rendered hearth, may mean anything on which a fire was placed, without determining that it was the hearth of a chimney; and that it was not such, but a moveable brazier or fire-pan, will appear from the turn of the original, lost in the common translation, which says not that the king was sitting before the fire on the "hearth," but that the "hearth" containing the fire was brought or set before the king. This is corroborated by the existing usages, as well as by those which anciently prevailed. Chimneys are indeed found in some parts, as in the north of Persia; but in Asia generally, apartments are warmed in cold weather by means of pans or braziers of various kinds, and either of metal or earthenware, which are set in the middle of the room after the fire of wood which it contains has been allowed to burn for some time in the open air, till the flame and smoke have passed away. Wood previously charred, is also employed for this purpose. The fire is commonly left open in the apartment, as was clearly the case in the present instance; but in Western Asia, when the inmates wish to sit comfortably warm in their rooms, they often cover the brazier with a low table, over which is laid a carpet or thickly padded counterpane, of such ample dimensions, that the parts which overlap the table can be drawn over their persons, as they sit or recline upon their sofas or cushions, which are arranged properly around this centre of warmth. They usually sit covered to the waist by the counterpane, which they sometimes draw up to their shoulders, and then present an appearance which would suggest the idea of a family sitting up in a large bed with their feet turned towards a common centre. The quilt, with the surrounding cushions, of course detains much warmth around their persons; but the plan appears unwholesome, and could only exist among an indolent people who have no in-door occupations. In cottages a fire of wood or animal dung is frequently burnt upon the floor, either in the middle of the room or against one of the side walls, with an opening above for the escape of the smoke. It is also common to have a fire in a pit sunk in the floor: and, when travelling in winter, we have, on entering some rooms, been sensible of a grateful and equable warmth, without being able to discover its source, until apprized that it proceeded from one of these pits covered over with a mat or carpet so as not to be distinguished from any other portion of the floor. These are the common methods by which apartments are warmed in the East, under different circumstances and in dwellings of different pretensions; and most of which were probably in use among the ancient Hebrews. Most of them furnish a comfortable warmth at but a very small expense of fuel; and the greater quantity required, as well as other considerations arising from the manner in which the Orientals like to sit in their rooms, probably operate to prevent them from regarding the use of chimneys with much favour. Grates are not known even where chimneys are found; but the fuel is burnt on the hearth, on which, if wood is employed, the pieces are set on end, leaning against the back of the chimney.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

1 The Egyptians having raised the siege of the Chaldeans, king Zedekiah sendeth to Jeremiah to pray for the people. 6 Jeremiah prophesieth the Chaldeans' certain return and victory. 11 He is taken for a fugitive, beaten, and put in prison. 16 He assureth Zedekiah of the captivity. 18 Intreating for his liberty, he obtaineth some favour.

AND king 'Zedekiah the son of Josiah reigned instead of Coniah the son of Jehoiakim, whom Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon made king in the land of Judah.

2 But neither he, nor his servants, nor the people of the land, did hearken unto the words of the LORD, which he spake ²by the prophet Jeremiah.

3 And Zedekiah the king sent Jehucal the son of Shelemiah and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest to the prophet Jeremiah, saying, Pray now unto the LORD our God for us.

4 Now Jeremiah came in and went out among the people: for they had not put him into prison.

5 Then Pharaoh's army was come forth out of Egypt: and when the Chaldeans that besieged Jerusalem heard tidings of them, they departed from Jerusalem.

6 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto the prophet Jeremiah, saying,

7 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel; Thus shall ye say to the king of Judah, that sent you unto me to enquire of me; Behold, Pharaoh's army, which is come forth to help you, shall return to Egypt into their own land.

8 And the Chaldeans shall come again, and fight against this city, and take it, and burn it with fire.

9 Thus saith the LORD; Deceive not ³yourselves, saying, The Chaldeans shall surely depart from us: for they shall not depart.

10 For though ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained but 'wounded men among them, yet should they rise up every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, that when the army of the Chaldeans was 'broken up from Jerusalem for fear of Pharaoh's army, 12 Then Jeremiah went forth out of Jerusalem to go into the land of Benjamin, 'to separate himself thence in the midst of the people.

13 And when he was in the gate of Benjamin, a captain of the ward was there, whose name was Irijah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Hananiah; and he took Jeremiah the prophet, saying, Thou fallest away to the Chaldeans.

14 Then said Jeremiah, It is 'false; I fall not away to the Chaldeans. But he hearkened not to him: so Irijah took Jeremiah, and brought him to the princes.

15 Wherefore the princes were wroth with Jeremiah, and smote him, and put him in prison in the house of Jonathan the scribe: for they had made that the prison.

16 ¶ When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the 'cabins, and Jeremiah had remained there many days;

17 Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took him out: and the king asked him secretly in his house, and said, Is there any word from the LORD? And Jeremiah said, There is: for, said he, thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon.

18 Moreover Jeremiah said unto king Zedekiah, What have I offended against thee, or against thy servants, or against this people, that ye have put me in prison?

19 Where are now your prophets which prophesied unto you, saying, The king of Babylon shall not come against you, nor against this land?

20 Therefore hear now, I pray thee, O my lord the king: 'let my supplication, I pray thee, be accepted before thee; that thou cause me not to return to the house of Jonathan the scribe, lest I die there.

21 Then Zedekiah the king commanded that they should commit Jeremiah into the court of the prison, and that they should give him daily a piece of bread out of the bakers' street, until all the bread in the city were spent. Thus Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

* Heb. let my supplication fall.

Verse 15. "For they had made that the prison."—It is not an unusual circumstance in the East for some part of the house of a public functionary to be employed as a prison. In Persia, where there are no large public prisons, the magistrates appropriate three or four chambers in their ample dwellings to the officers or domestics whose duty it is to keep safely those accused or suspected persons whom it is considered necessary to detain in custody. Imprisonment is by no means generally recognised in the East as a judicial punishment—but rather as a measure for the detention of accused or convicted persons:—it is an incident rather than a system; and hence the condition of prisoners is not defined by any specific regulations. It often happens that any place which seems to be sufficiently secure, is temporarily employed as a prison; and in general the situation of the prisoner is determined by the caprice, pleasure, or interest of the person to whose custody he is consigned, and who has no other charge than to keep the culprit in safe custody, and produce him when required. To this it may be added, that royal persons, governors of towns, and public functionaries, claim the right to imprison offenders in their own extensive establishments, and households, and hence some place in their residences is usually appropriated or employed for the purpose. In some towns of the East even the European consuls have such prisons in their houses, where they confine such of their own nation or household as have been guilty of offences; and this by allowance from the governing powers of the town or country, who proceed upon the idea that a functionary should possess magisterial authority over those whose affairs he generally superintends. This may partly explain the existence of prisons in palaces and houses, in those countries where imprisonment being not at all, or only partially, regarded as a means of punishment and correction, no public prisons have been provided. It will be recollected that our old nobles had prisons in their own castles.

21. "The bakers' street."—We have had former occasions to observe that, in the East, every family generally grinds its own corn and bakes its own bread. There is, however, in eastern towns, ample room for the craft of the baker. Many persons with small families, and consuming but little bread, find it cheaper to buy of the baker than to have daily grinding and baking at home. The bakers also get the custom of those loose members of society who have no households, and who buy food as they want or can afford it; under which denomination may be included strangers sojourning temporarily in the towns. They also sell much bread to the shopkeepers, artisans, and others who spend the day at a distance from their homes. Thus, upon the whole, the bakers are, in large towns, an active and flourishing body of tradesmen. But their situation is one of peculiar danger, the people being very apt to suspect them, in hard times, of conspiring to raise the price of bread. Hence popular outcries and tumults, which seldom end till one or more bakers have been sacrificed either by the people themselves, or by their rulers, who thus endeavour to appease them, or to divert their attention from the more real causes of public distress.

The present verse is interesting in another respect, as showing that it was, in those early times, customary, as it is at present in the East, for persons of the same trades to carry on their business in the same streets, so that the purchaser sees at one view all the shops which offer the article he requires. This custom has also prevailed, with respect to some trades, even in Western Europe, and some very marked traces of it may still be found in London.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

¹ Jeremiah, by a false suggestion, is put into the dungeon of Malchiah. 7 Ebed-melech, by suit, getteth him some enlargement. 14 Upon secret conference he counselleth the king by yielding to save his life. 24 By the king's instructions he concealeth the conference from the princes.

THEN Shephatiah the son of Mattan, and Gedaliah the son of Pashur, and Jucal the son of Shelemiah, and Pashur the son of Malchiah, heard the words that Jeremiah had spoken unto all the people, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD, 'He that remaineth in this city shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth forth to the Chaldeans shall live; for he shall have his life for a prey, and shall live.

3 Thus saith the LORD, This city shall surely be given into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which shall take it.

4 Therefore the princes said unto the king, We beseech thee, let this man be put to death: for thus he weakeneth the hands of the men of war that remain in this city, and the hands of all the people, in speaking such words unto them: for this man seeketh not the 'welfare of this people, but the hurt.

5 Then Zedekiah the king said, Behold, he is in your hand: for the king is not he that can do any thing against you.

6 Then took they Jeremiah, and cast him into the dungeon of Malchiah the son ³ of Hammelech, that was in the court of the prison: and they let down Jeremiah with cords. And in the dungeon there was no water, but mire: so Jeremiah sunk in the mire.

7 ¶ Now when Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, one of the eunuchs which was in the king's house, heard that they had put Jeremiah in the dungeon; the king then sitting in the gate of Benjamin;

8 Ebed-melech went forth out of the king's house, and spake to the king, saying,

9 My lord the king, these men have done evil in all that they have done to Jeremiah the prophet, whom they have cast into the dungeon; and 'he is like to die for hunger in the place where he is: for there is no more bread in the city.

10 Then the king commanded Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Take from hence thirty men 'with thee, and take up Jeremiah the prophet out of the dungeon, before he die.

11 So Ebed-melech took the men with him, and went into the house of the king under the treasury, and took thence old cast clouts and old rotten rags, and let them down by cords into the dungeon to Jeremiah.

12 And Ebed-melech the Ethiopian said unto Jeremiah, Put now these old cast clouts and rotten rags under thine armholes under the cords. And Jeremiah did so.

13 So they drew up Jeremiah with cords, and took him up out of the dungeon: and Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

14 ¶ Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took Jeremiah the prophet unto him into the 'third entry that is in the house of the LORD: and the king said unto Jeremiah, I will ask thee a thing; hide nothing from me.

15 Then Jeremiah said unto Zedekiah, If I declare it unto thee, wilt thou not surely put me to death? and if I give thee counsel, wilt thou not hearken unto me?

16 So Zedekiah the king swore secretly unto Jeremiah, saying, As the LORD liveth, that made us this soul, I will not put thee to death, neither will I give thee into the hand of these men that seek thy life.

17 Then said Jeremiah unto Zedekiah, Thus saith the LORD, the God of hosts, the God of Israel; If thou wilt assuredly go forth unto the king of Babylon's princes, then thy soul shall live, and this city shall not be burned with fire; and thou shalt live, and thine house:

18 But if thou wilt not go forth to the king of Babylon's princes, then shall this city be given into the hand of the Chaldeans, and they shall burn it with fire, and thou shalt not escape out of their hand.

19 And Zedekiah the king said unto Jeremiah, I am afraid of the Jews that are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand, and they mock me.

20 But Jeremiah said, They shall not deliver thee. Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the LORD, which I speak unto thee: so it shall be well unto thee, and thy soul shall live.

21 But if thou refuse to go forth, this is the word that the LORD hath shewed me:

22 And, behold, all the women that are left in the king of Judah's house shall be brought forth to the king of Babylon's princes, and those women shall say, 'Thy friends have set thee on, and have prevailed against thee: thy feet are sunk in the mire, and they are turned away back.

23 So they shall bring out all thy wives and thy children to the Chaldeans: and thou shalt not escape out of their hand, but shalt be taken by the hand of the king of Babylon: and 'thou shalt cause this city to be burned with fire.

24 ¶ Then said Zedekiah unto Jeremiah, Let no man know of these words, and thou shalt not die.

25 But if the princes hear that I have talked with thee, and they come unto thee, and say unto thee, Declare unto us now what thou hast said unto the king, hide it not from us, and we will not put thee to death; also what the king said unto thee:

26 Then thou shalt say unto them, I presented my supplication before the king, that he would not cause me to return to Jonathan's house, to die there.

27 Then came all the princes unto Jeremiah, and asked him: and he told them according to all these words that the king had commanded. So ⁹they left off speak-

Verse 6. "The dungeon of Malchiah... that was in the court of the prison."—There is no book of Scripture in which so much is said of prisons and imprisonment as in this of Jeremiah. As we have not hitherto said much on the subject, and as the sentence with which the note to Lev. xxiv. 11, concludes, appears to have been misunderstood by at least one of our readers, we may take the opportunity now offered of explaining what appears to us to have been the practice of the ancient Hebrews in this important matter.

1. In the law of Moses there is no one crime to which imprisonment is attached as a punishment. 2. There is no instance of imprisonment mentioned in Scripture which appears to have been the result of a regular trial and judicial sentence. 3. There is no instance of imprisonment inflicted by Hebrews, in which merely the custody of the prisoner, for a specific purpose, does not appear to be the sole or primary object. 4. Imprisonment, as a punishment and correction, can only be traced when inflicted by foreigners, and even in such instances it is by no means clear that detention was not the primary object, and the punishment merely an incident.—It is easy for the reader to test these conclusions; in explanation or support of which we shall therefore only subjoin a few remarks, which may assist the investigation.

In the patriarchal times only two instances of imprisonment occur, both of which happened in Egypt, and are therefore foreign. The imprisonment of Joseph and of the two servants of Pharaoh has already been noticed in the proper place: the other was when Joseph, acting as an Egyptian, detained Simeon in custody, probably not in a prison, as a security for the return of his brethren. Under the direction of Moses himself, only one instance of confinement occurs, and that was in a peculiar case, when the sabbath-breaker was detained in custody until the Lord's pleasure concerning him should be ascertained. (Num. xv. 34.) From that time till so late as the reign of Ahab, in Israel, no instance of imprisonment occurs among the Hebrews; but the imprisonment of Samson by the Philistines is a remarkable foreign example. He was blinded, and afterwards kept in confinement and obliged to labour at the mill, furnishing the earliest instance on record of imprisonment and hard labour. As we are not speaking of heathen practices, it is of little importance what deduction may be derived from this case: but it appears to us not to bear on any general custom; for Samson was a distinguished captive belonging to an adverse nation, and the treatment of such persons affords no evidence of the domestic usages of a people. Such transactions are extra-judicial. The imprisonment is considered necessary for the safe keeping of captive chiefs and kings; and, in the case of Samson, the labour was a superadded indignity, suggested probably by an insulting reference to the former employment of his great strength, if not with a view to the profitable employment of that portion of it which remained to him. At a later day, we see the last kings of Judah treated in the same manner by the Egyptian and Babylonian kings, and in all these cases we may find that the conquerors had an interest in detaining them securely. The case of Zedekiah, who was blinded and kept in prison by the king of Babylon, is very similar to that of Samson, except as to the labour at the mill. Among the Hebrews, the first case of imprisonment after the time of Moses was ing with him; for the matter was not perceived.

28 So Jeremiah abode in the court of the prison until the day that Jerusalem was taken: and he was there when Jerusalem was taken.

when Micaiah, having foretold the disastrous result of an expedition on which Ahab was bent, and in which he perished, the king ordered, "Put this fellow in the prison, and feed him with bread of affliction and with water of affliction, until I come in peace." (1 Kings xxii. 27.) This was arbitrary and extra-judicial; but although the idea of punishment is incidentally included, it is evident that the primary intention was to detain the prophet for final punishment, when his prediction should, as the king hoped, be falsified by the event; as well, probably, as to deprive him of the means of promulgating his adverse and condemnatory prophecies to the people. The case of Jeremiah himself, which is the next that occurs, in point of time, seems to be precisely similar to this. He was at first put under personal restraint "in the court of the prison," a place open to the public, and where his friends had free access to him; but as his prophecies were thus made public, he was ultimately removed under a general permission from the king, to the disagreeable and dangerous dungeon mentioned in the text, by which his personal enemies added punishment to confinement; but when the king heard this, he caused him to be released, and restored to the simple confinement of the prison-court, till his sad prophecies were accomplished. The last mention of imprisonment occurs after the Captivity (Ezra vii. 26); and as read in our own and many other versions, this, more precisely than any other passage of Scripture, would describe confinement in a prison as a regular punishment. If so understood, it is, however, a foreign instance, and occurs in a Persian edict. But we find the word thus translated to be one (אסור asur) which denotes a bond or fetter, and which never means a prison unless when the word בית "house," is prefixed. In this text that word is not prefixed, and moreover the word is in the plural (אסורים asurin), clearly showing bonds or fetters, not imprisonment in the usual sense, to be intended.

We have thus alluded to all the cases of imprisonment mentioned in the Old Testament. In the New, the Gospels offer the instance of John the Baptist, whose case was similar to that of Jeremiah, the object being evidently to prevent his communications to the people. His death in prison, although ordered by Herod, was a circumstance which that king had neither contemplated nor desired. The Gospels also mention imprisonment for debt, of which we shall have due occasion to speak, only at present observing that it was not a punishment for having contracted debt, but a measure to compel payment, as is expressly declared in the passages where it is mentioned. The other cases of imprisonment which occur in the Acts of the Apostles, are nearly all foreign instances—being cases in which the Romans imprisoned the Apostles. It is therefore the more remarkable that not one of these instances offers any new principle:—the Apostles were detained in prison till their respective cases could be inquired into and finally determined. In the single case of the imprisonment of Peter by Herod, we see also a case of confinement not as itself a punishment, but as a detention for ulterior punishment, Herod "intending after Easter to bring him forth unto the people." (Acts xii. 4).—We therefore think that the conclusions stated at the head of this note are correctly drawn from the facts recorded in Scripture: and we have dwelt on the subject in order to show the light in which imprisonment was regarded by the Hebrews without at present inquiring into the causes which rendered them, in common with other Oriental nations, indisposed to use confinement as a final punishment for any crime; and, still less, without wishing to intimate any opinion as to the very different system under which imprisonment is in Modern Europe made the penalty of numerous offences.

7. "The Ethiopian, one of the eunuchs which was in the king's house."—From this it seems that black eunuchs were employed in the courts of the Hebrew kings, as they still are in those of the eastern sovereigns. They are brought young, as slaves, from Africa, and, having been made eunuchs, are brought up in the religion of those to whom they are sold, and of which they are in general very zealous professors. As they come from a great distance, and many of them die from the effects of that cruelty which gives them their peculiar character, black eunuchs are regarded as costly luxuries, which appear only in the establishments of princes and great personages. Their employment is about the king's female establishment, which they guard, serve, and superintend; and, except the monarch himself, they are the only individuals, not of the female sex, who ever have access to the presence of the women. They are usually in considerable numbers in the royal harems, and their situations are various. Some of them enjoy household offices of much trust and responsibility, and possess great influence from the peculiar advantages which they enjoy of access to the sovereign's presence in his more private and unbent hours. Their chief is a very important personage; and the reader of those old Arabian stories which relate to the caliphs of Bagdad is aware that, after the monarch himself and his grand vizier, no person is so frequently or so conspicuously mentioned as the chief of the black eunuchs. Ebed-melech was probably one of the superior eunuchs; and the influence he possessed with the king appears very clearly from the present narration.

14. "The third entry."—The word rendered "third" may, as in the margin, be rendered "principal" or "chief." And the other word (מִבֹּרַי mabo) is a general word, denoting not merely a gate but an avenue, entrance, or any kind of approach to a place. Here it is generally supposed to point out the communication between Mount Zion and Mount Moriah, which was formed by Solomon, and which the queen of Sheba regarded with great admiration. It was by this way that the kings went from the palace to the temple. Probably Zedekiah called Jeremiah to a private apartment over one of the gates in this line of approach.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1 Jerusalem is taken. 4 Zedekiah is made blind, and sent to Babylon. 8 The city ruined, 9 the people captivated. 11 Nebuchadrezzar's charge for the good usage of Jeremiah. 15 God's promise to Ebed-melech.

In the 'ninth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the tenth month, came Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon and all his army against Jerusalem, and they besieged it.

2 And in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, in the fourth month, the ninth day of the month, the city was broken up.

3 And all the princes of the king of Babylon came in, and sat in the middle gate, even Nergal-sharezer, Samgar-nebo, Sar-sechim, Rab-saris, Nergal-sharezer, Rabmag, with all the residue of the princes of the king of Babylon.

4 ¶ And it came to pass, that when Zedekiah the king of Judah saw them, and all the men of war, then they fled, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the king's garden, by the gate betwixt the two walls: and he went out the way of the plain.

5 But the Chaldeans' army pursued after them, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho: and when they had taken him, they brought him up to Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon to Riblah in the land of Hamath, where he gave judgment upon him.

6 Then the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah in Riblah before his eyes: also the king of Babylon slew all the nobles of Judah.

7 Moreover he put out Zedekiah's eyes, and bound him with chains, to carry him to Babylon.

8 ¶ And the Chaldeans burned the king's house, and the houses of the people, with fire, and brake down the walls of Jerusalem.

9 Then Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive into Babylon the remnant of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to him, with the rest of the people that remained.

10 But Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard left of the poor of the people, which had nothing, in the land of Judah, and gave them vineyards and fields at the same time.

11 ¶ Now Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon gave charge concerning Jeremiah to Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard, saying, 12 Take him, and look well to him, and do him no harm; but do unto him even as he shall say unto thee.

13 So Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard sent, and Nebushasban, Rab-saris, and Nergal-sharezer, Rab-mag, and all the king of Babylon's princes;

14 Even they sent, and took Jeremiah out of the court of the prison, and committed him unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, that he should carry him home: so he dwelt among the people.

15 ¶ Now the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah, while he was shut up in the court of the prison, saying,

16 Go and speak to Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring my words upon this city for evil, and not for good; and they shall be accomplished in that day before thee.

17 But I will deliver thee in that day, saith the LORD: and thou shalt not be given into the hand of the men of whom thou art afraid.

18 For I will surely deliver thee, and thou shalt not fall by the sword, but thy life shall be for a prey unto thee: because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the LORD.

Verse 3. "The middle gate."—This might be more definitely rendered the "centre gate," which would better express its supposed situation, which was probably in the heart of the city leading from the lower to the upper town. It would seem that the Babylonians, having taken the town by the north wall, hastened on to gain possession of this gate, the importance of which is indicated by the fact that Zedekiah fled from Mount Zion as soon as it had been won by the Babylonians. Some of the Rabbins make it to have been one of the Temple gates; but this does not appear very likely under all the circumstances and indications.

4. "Went forth out of the city by night."—Josephus says the city was taken in the middle of the night. Favoured by the darkness, the king escaped by the way here indicated, and which cannot be clearly understood, from the want of more distinct information than we possess concerning the plan of the ancient Jerusalem. The best idea we can ourselves form is this:—It is reasonable to suppose that the king and his family were staying in the citadel of Zion, in the south-west part of the mount of that name, and in the valley below which the king's gardens are usually placed. "Between the two walls," probably means between the wall of the citadel and the parallel portion of the city wall, which together formed, on two sides, a double wall around the citadel. We may therefore infer that the king went out of the citadel, between the two walls, and passed from the exterior wall by the way which led to the gardens, and which was perhaps a private subterranean passage. The Jews, indeed, have a fable, that there was a subterranean way extending from the king's abode to Jericho, and that by this Zedekiah endeavoured to escape; in which, say they, he would doubtless have succeeded, had not God prepared a hind, which, being pressed by pursuers from the Chaldean army, fled for refuge in the cave in which this passage terminated. The king and his party were coming out at that moment, and were seized by the exulting Chaldeans who had entered in pursuit of the hind.

CHAPTER XL.

1 Jeremiah, being set free by Nebuzar-adan, goeth to Gedaliah. 7 The dispersed Jews repair unto him. 13 Johanan revealing Ishmael's conspiracy is not believed.

THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, after that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had let him go from Ramah, when he had taken him being bound in 'chains among all that were carried away captive of Jerusalem and Judah, which were carried away captive unto Babylon.

2 And the captain of the guard took Jeremiah, and said unto him, The LORD thy God hath pronounced this evil upon this place.

3 Now the LORD hath brought it, and done according as he hath said: because ye have sinned against the LORD, and have not obeyed his voice, therefore this thing is come upon you.

4 And now, behold, I loose thee this day from the chains which were upon thine hand. If it seem good unto thee to come with me into Babylon, come; and 'I will look well unto thee: but if it seem ill unto thee to come with me into Babylon, forbear: behold, all the land is before thee: whither it seemeth good and convenient for thee to go, thither go.

5 Now while he was not yet gone back, he said, Go back also to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, whom the king of Babylon hath made governor over the cities of Judah, and dwell with him among the people: or go wheresoever it seemeth convenient unto thee to go. So the captain of the guard gave him victuals and a reward, and let him go.

6 Then went Jeremiah unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam to Mizpah; and dwelt with him among the people that were left in the land.

7 ¶ Now when all the captains of the forces which were in the fields, even they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam governor in the land, and had committed unto him men, and women, and children, and of the poor of the land, of them that were not carried away captive to Babylon;

8 Then they came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan and Jonathan the sons of Kareah, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth, and the sons of Ephai the Netophathite, and Jezaniah the son of a Maachathite, they and their men.

9 And Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan sware unto them and to their men, saying, Fear not to serve the Chaldeans: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you.

10 As for me, behold, I will dwell at Mizpah, 'to serve the Chaldeans, which will come unto us: but ye, gather ye wine, and summer fruits, and oil, and put them in your vessels, and dwell in your cities that ye have taken.

* Heb. to stand before.

11 Likewise when all the Jews that were in Moab, and among the Ammonites, and in Edom, and that were in all the countries, heard that the king of Babylon had left a remnant of Judah, and that he had set over them Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan;

12 Even all the Jews returned out of all places whither they were driven, and came to the land of Judah, to Gedaliah, unto Mizpah, and gathered wine and summer fruits very much.

13 ¶ Moreover Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were in the fields, came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, 14 And said unto him, Dost thou certainly know that Baalis the king of the Ammonites hath sent Ishmael the son of Nethaniah 'to slay thee? But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam believed them not.

15 Then Johanan the son of Kareah spake to Gedaliah in Mizpah secretly, saying, Let me go, I pray thee, and I will slay Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and no man shall know it: wherefore should he slay thee, that all the Jews which are gathered unto thee should be scattered, and the remnant in Judah perish?

16 But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam said unto Johanan the son of Kareah, Thou shalt not do this thing: for thou speakest falsely of Ishmael.

* Heb. to strike thee in soul.

CHAP. XL.—The brief and sad history in this and the following chapter is too clearly told to require elucidation or remark. The only difficulty is to assign an adequate motive for the odious conduct of Ishmael. But as we learn, from ch. xli. 1, that he was of the royal family, it is probable that his first movement arose from jealousy at the promotion of a person not of that family to be the governor of the land. He probably thought that he had himself a better claim to that distinction than Gedaliah; and perhaps calculated that, were that person put out of the way, he might find means to establish himself in his place. That nothing of the kind followed, may be owing to having been led by circumstances to go further than he intended. The slaughter of the Chaldeans perhaps arose from their attempt to defend or avenge Gedaliah; but this additional atrocity was one which it could not be expected that the king of Babylon would overlook or fail to avenge; and hence he seems to have had no remaining object but to do all the mischief in his power. After all, it appears likely that Ishmael was no other than the tool of the king of Ammon. He may have encouraged Ishmael in such expectations and feelings as we have stated, while his own object may well have been to prevent, by the murder of Gedaliah, that restoration of the remnant of the Hebrews to a condition of comparative prosperity and comfort, which the wise and prudent conduct of this generous and unsuspecting man seemed calculated to ensure. The ancient enmity of the Ammonites to the Hebrews, as well as the jealousy of adjoining states, may sufficiently account for any aversion with which they may have regarded the prospect of restored comfort to their ruined neighbours. We learn also, from verse 11, that many Jews, who had during the troubles retired to dwell among the Ammonites, returned home when they heard of the prospect of peace and safety under Gedaliah; and it is very possible that the loss of these refugees proved a very disagreeable circumstance to king Baalis and his people. We offer the above only as conjectures, which may be taken for what they seem worth; but it will be observed that they are in part supported by the untiring opposition which, at a later day, the Ammonites offered to the restoration of the city and Temple of Jerusalem.

CHAPTER XLI.

¹ Ishmael, treacherously killing Gedaliah and others, purposeth with the residue to flee unto the Ammonites. ¹¹ Johanan recovereth the captives, and mindeth to flee into Egypt.

Now it came to pass in the seventh month, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah the son of Elishama, of the seed royal, and the princes of the king, even ten men with him, came unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam to Mizpah; and there they did eat bread together in Mizpah.

² Then arose Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and the ten men that were with him, and smote Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan with the sword, and slew him, whom the king of Babylon had made governor over the land.

³ Ishmael also slew all the Jews that were with him, even with Gedaliah, at Mizpah, and the Chaldeans that were found there, and the men of war.

⁴ And it came to pass the second day after he had slain Gedaliah, and no man knew it,

⁵ That there came certain from Shechem, from Shiloh, and from Samaria, even fourscore men, having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, and having cut themselves, with offerings and incense in their hand, to bring them to the house of the LORD.

⁶ And Ishmael the son of Nethaniah went forth from Mizpah to meet them, 'weeping all along as he went: and it came to pass, as he met them, he said unto them, Come to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam.

⁷ And it was so, when they came into the midst of the city, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah slew them, and cast them into the midst of the pit, he, and the men that were with him.

⁸ But ten men were found among them that said unto Ishmael, Slay us not: for we have treasures in the field, of wheat, and of barley, and of oil, and of honey. So he forbore, and slew them not among their brethren.

⁹ Now the pit wherein Ishmael had cast all the dead bodies of the men, whom he had slain ² 'because of Gedaliah, was it which Asa the king had made for fear of Baasha king of Israel: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah filled it with them that were slain.

¹⁰ Then Ishmael carried away captive all the residue of the people that were in Mizpah, even the king's daughters, and all the people that remained in Mizpah, whom Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had committed to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah carried them away captive, and departed to go over to the Ammonites.

¹¹ ¶ But when Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, heard of all the evil that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had done, ¹² Then they took all the men, and went to fight with Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and found him by the great waters that are in Gibeon.

¹³ Now it came to pass, that when all the people which were with Ishmael saw Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, then they were glad.

¹⁴ So all the people that Ishmael had carried away captive from Mizpah cast about and returned, and went unto Johanan the son of Kareah.

¹⁵ But Ishmael the son of Nethaniah escaped from Johanan with eight men, and went to the Ammonites.

¹⁶ Then took Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, all the remnant of the people whom he had recovered from Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, from Mizpah, after that he had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, even mighty men of war, and the women, and the children, and the eunuchs, whom he had brought again from Gibeon:

¹⁷ And they departed, and dwelt in the habitation of Chimham, which is by Bethlehem, to go to enter into Egypt, ¹⁸ Because of the Chaldeans: for they were afraid of them, because Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, whom the king of Babylon made governor in the land.

¹ Heb. in going and weeping.

³ Heb. by the hand, or by the side of Gedaliah.

Verse 5. "Having their beards shaven," &c.—It will be recollected that the transactions recorded in this and the preceding chapter took place not more than two months after the destruction of Jerusalem and its temple. As the marks here enumerated were tokens of the most intense mourning, and as all the men were thus mourners, it is highly probable that they had put themselves into this condition on account of the ruin of their nation, and the desolation of their city with its "holy and beautiful house."

"To the house of the Lord."—As we do not read that any altar or sanctuary had been erected at Mizpah, and as we do read in Ezra (ch. iii. 2, 3, &c.) that the return captives did offer their sacrifices and oblations upon the site of the temple before the temple itself was rebuilt, it seems highly probable that these mourners were, for the same purpose, on their way to the spot where the temple had stood, to mourn and worship God among its ruins. This is corroborated by the fact that, coming as they did from towns to the north of Jerusalem, they might easily take Mizpah in their way to that city; and that this was then the seat of government, might be an inducement for them to do so. Concerning Mizpah, see the note on Josh. xviii. 21.

8. "Treasures in the field, of wheat...barley...oil...honey."—Calmet remarks on this text, "Treasures (according to the common phrase of Scripture) signify anything that is hid and kept in reserve, whether it be gold, silver, corn, wine, oil, or any other thing. And it was a customary practice in the East for the people to bury their corn and other provisions in deep pits or caverns, which they dug and covered over so very dexterously that none but those who made them could find them out, or even discover that the earth had been moved." ('Commentaire Littéral.') This correctly describes a still-existing practice in the East; and it still often happens, in time of war, that people are spared, and receive favourable treatment from the soldiers, on making known their "treasures hid in the field."

17. "The habitation of Chimham."—The aged Barzillai had a son called Chimham, for whom David undertook to provide (see 2 Sam. xix. 37; 1 Kings ii. 7); and the Targum, followed by most commentators, concludes that the king made him a grant of this spot, to which he gave his own name. As it was near Bethlehem, it might perhaps have been part of David's private patrimony.

CHAPTER XLII.

1 Johanan desireth Jeremiah to enquire of God, promising obedience to his will. 7 Jeremiah assureth him of safety in Judea, 13 and destruction in Egypt. 19 He reproveth their hypocrisy, in requiring of the Lord that which they meant not.

THEN all the captains of the forces, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and Jezaniah the son of Hoshaiah, and all the people from the least even unto the greatest, came near,

2 And said unto Jeremiah the prophet, 'Let, we beseech thee, our supplication be accepted before thee, and pray for us unto the LORD thy God, even for all this remnant; (for we are left but a few of many, as thine eyes do behold us:)

3 That the LORD thy God may shew us the way wherein we may walk, and the thing that we may do.

4 Then Jeremiah the prophet said unto them, I have heard you; behold, I will pray unto the LORD your God according to your words; and it shall come to pass, that whatsoever thing the LORD shall answer you, I will declare it unto you; I will keep nothing back from you.

5 Then they said to Jeremiah, The LORD be a true and faithful witness between us, if we do not even according to all things for the which the LORD thy God shall send thee to us.

6 Whether it be good, or whether it be evil, we will obey the voice of the LORD our God, to whom we send thee; that it may be well with us, when we obey the voice of the LORD our God.

7 ¶ And it came to pass after ten days, that the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah.

8 Then called he Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces which were with him, and all the people from the least even to the greatest,

9 And said unto them, Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, unto whom ye sent me to present your supplication before him;

10 If ye will still abide in this land, then will I build you, and not pull you down, and I will plant you, and not pluck you up: for I repent me of the evil that I have done unto you.

11 Be not afraid of the king of Babylon, of whom ye are afraid; be not afraid of him, saith the LORD: for I am with you to save you, and to deliver you from his hand.

12 And I will shew mercies unto you, that he may have mercy upon you, and cause you to return to your own land.

13 ¶ But if ye say, We will not dwell in this land, neither obey the voice of the LORD your God,

14 Saying, No ; but we will go into the land of Egypt, where we shall see no war, nor hear the sound of the trumpet, nor have hunger of bread ; and there will we dwell :

15 And now therefore hear the word of the LORD, ye remnant of Judah ; Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel ; If ye wholly set your faces to enter into Egypt, and go to sojourn there ;

16 Then it shall come to pass, that the sword, which ye feared, shall overtake you there in the land of Egypt, and the famine, whereof ye were afraid, shall follow close after you there in Egypt ; and there ye shall die.

17 ³So shall it be with all the men that set their faces to go into Egypt to sojourn there ; they shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence : and none of them shall remain or escape from the evil that I will bring upon them.

18 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel ; As mine anger and my fury hath been poured forth upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem ; so shall my fury be poured forth upon you, when ye shall enter into Egypt : and ye shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach ; and ye shall see this place no more.

19 ¶ The LORD hath said concerning you, O ye remnant of Judah ; Go ye not into Egypt : know certainly that I have admonished you this day.

20 For ye dissembled in your hearts, when ye sent me unto the LORD your God, saying, Pray for us unto the LORD our God ; and according unto all that the LORD our God shall say, so declare unto us, and we will do it.

21 And now I have this day declared it to you ; but ye have not obeyed the voice of the LORD your God, nor any thing for the which he hath sent me unto you.

22 Now therefore know certainly that ye shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, in the place whither ye desire to go and to sojourn.

Verse 16. "The sword... shall overtake you there in the land of Egypt."—This and the other denunciations were fulfilled when Egypt was invaded and ravaged, not long after, by the Babylonians. We shall see this more clearly presently.

CHAPTER XLIII.

¹ Johanan, discrediting Jeremiah's prophecy, carrieth Jeremiah and others into Egypt. ⁸ Jeremiah prophesieth by a type the conquest of Egypt by the Babylonians.

AND it came to pass, that when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking unto all the people all the words of the LORD their God for which the LORD their God had sent him to them, even all these words,

2 Then spake Azariah the son of Hoshaiah, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the proud men, saying unto Jeremiah, Thou speakest falsely : the LORD our God hath not sent thee to say, Go not into Egypt to sojourn there :

3 But Baruch the son of Neriah setteth thee on against us, for to deliver us into the hand of the Chaldeans, that they might put us to death, and carry us away captives into Babylon.

4 So Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, and all the people, obeyed not the voice of the LORD, to dwell in the land of Judah.

5 But Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, took all the remnant of Judah, that were returned from all nations, whither they had been driven, to dwell in the land of Judah ;

6 Even men, and women, and children, and the king's daughters, and every person that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had left with Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and Jeremiah the prophet, and Baruch the son of Neriah.

7 So they came into the land of Egypt : for they obeyed not the voice of the LORD : thus came they even to Tahpanhes.

8 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah in Tahpanhes, saying,

9 Take great stones in thine hand, and hide them in the clay in the brickkiln, which is at the entry of Pharaoh's house in Tahpanhes, in the sight of the men of Judah;

10 And say unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will send and take Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, my servant, and will set his throne upon these stones that I have hid; and he shall spread his royal pavilion over them.

11 And when he cometh, he shall smite the land of Egypt, and deliver such as are for death to death; and such as are for captivity to captivity; and such as are for the sword to the sword.

12 And I will kindle a fire in the houses of the gods of Egypt; and he shall burn them, and carry them away captives: and he shall array himself with the land of Egypt, as a shepherd putteth on his garment; and he shall go forth from thence in peace.

13 He shall break also the images of Beth-shemesh, that is in the land of Egypt; and the houses of the gods of the Egyptians shall he burn with fire.

Verse 6. "Captain of the guard."—This officer was the commander of the royal life-guard, which forms, or did form, the only standing force in Oriental nations. It is to be observed that, whenever the officer of this rank among the Egyptians or Babylonians is mentioned, he is called שר רב הטבח or שר—sar, or rab hattubbachim, literally, "chief of the slaughtermen;" the same word being applied to the slaughter or the slaughterer of animals; and hence it is equivalent to "chief of the executioners," the body-guard, under the direction of their chief, being, in the East, charged with the execution of the capital punishments awarded by the king, and the commander himself often putting the more distinguished offenders to death with his own hand. The officer of similar rank among the Hebrews themselves, did not bear the same title; but the same duties devolved upon him.

10. "I will send . . . Nebuchadrezzar."—The historical event to which the present and several other prophecies refer may thus be stated: Soon after Nebuchadnezzar had completed the ruin of the Hebrew nation, he turned his attention towards Tyre. That rich and powerful city held out against him for thirteen years, and, when at last taken by assault, he found no reward for what Ezekiel calls his "service against Tyre," as the inhabitants, foreseeing the result, had previously removed all their valuable property to the neighbouring island, on which they afterwards founded that new Tyre which ultimately rose to an eminence of power and wealth not inferior to that of the old city which had been destroyed. But as the Lord had, by his prophets, promised to give the spoils of Egypt to Nebuchadnezzar for his service against Tyre, so, when that service had terminated in this unprofitable result, he marched his army into Egypt, which was then in a state of such deplorable disorder as promised him an easy conquest, and an ample indemnity for his recent disappointment. What opposition he met with, or what arrangement he made on withdrawing finally from the country, is not certainly known. But it is certain that he ravaged the country from one end to the other, committing much devastation, and slaying great numbers of the people, and that he finally returned with an immense booty, which probably formed no small part of the treasure he expended in his magnificent improvements and great undertakings at Babylon. (See 'L'Art de Vérifier les Dates,' &c. tome ii. p. 359; 'Universal History,' vol. ii. p. 88; and Hales's 'Analysis,' vol. ii. p. 454.)

CHAPTER XLIV.

1 Jeremiah expresseth the desolation of Judah for their idolatry. 11 He prophesieth their destruction, who commit idolatry in Egypt. 15 The obstinacy of the Jews. 20 Jeremiah threateneth them for the same, 29 and for a sign prophesieth the destruction of Egypt.

THE word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the Jews which dwell in the land of Egypt, which dwell at Migdol, and at Tahpanhes, and at Noph, and in the country of Pathros, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Ye have seen all the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, and upon all the cities of Judah; and, behold, this day they are a desolation, and no man dwelleth therein.

3 Because of their wickedness which they have committed to provoke me to anger, in that they went to burn incense, and to serve other gods, whom they knew not, neither they, ye, nor your fathers.

4 Howbeit I sent unto you all my servants the prophets, rising early and sending them, saying, Oh, do not this abominable thing that I hate.

5 But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear to turn from their wickedness, to burn no incense unto other gods.

6 Wherefore my fury and mine anger was poured forth, and was kindled in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem; and they are wasted and desolate, as at this day.

7 Therefore now thus saith the LORD, the God of hosts, the God of Israel; Wherefore commit ye this great evil against your souls, to cut off from you man and woman, child and suckling, 'out of Judah, to leave you none to remain;

8 In that ye provoke me unto wrath with the works of your hands, burning incense unto other gods in the land of Egypt, whither ye be gone to dwell, that ye might cut yourselves off, and that ye might be a curse and a reproach among all the nations of the earth?

9 Have ye forgotten the 'wickedness of your fathers, and the wickedness of the kings of Judah, and the wickedness of their wives, and your own wickedness, and the wickedness of your wives, which they have committed in the land of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem?

10 They are not 'humbled even unto this day, neither have they feared, nor walked in my law, nor in my statutes, that I set before you and before your fathers.

11 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, 'I will set my face against you for evil, and to cut off all Judah.

12 And I will take the remnant of Judah, that have set their faces to go into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, and they shall all be consumed, and fall in the land of Egypt; they shall even be consumed by the sword and by the famine: they shall die, from the least even unto the greatest, by the sword and by the famine: and they shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach.

13 For I will punish them that dwell in the land of Egypt, as I have punished Jerusalem, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence:

14 So that none of the remnant of Judah, which are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall escape or remain, that they should return into the land of Judah, to the which they 'have a desire to return to dwell there: for none shall return but such as shall escape.

15 ¶ Then all the men which knew that their wives had burned incense unto other gods, and all the women that stood by, a great multitude, even all the people that dwelt in the land of Egypt, in Pathros, answered Jeremiah, saying,

16 As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the LORD, we will not hearken unto thee.

17 But we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth, to burn incense unto the 'queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings unto her, as we have done, we, and our fathers, our kings, and our princes, in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem: for then had we plenty of 'victuals, and were well, and saw no evil.

18 But since we left off to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings unto her, we have wanted all things, and have been consumed by the sword and by the famine.

19 'And when we burned incense to the queen of heaven, and poured out drink offerings unto her, did we make her cakes to worship her, and pour out drink offerings unto her, without our 'men?

20 ¶ Then Jeremiah said unto all the people, to the men, and to the women, and to all the people which had given him that answer, saying,

21 The incense that ye burned in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, ye, and your fathers, your kings, and your princes, and the people of the land, did not the LORD remember them, and came it not into his mind?

22 So that the LORD could no longer bear, because of the evil of your doings, and because of the abominations which ye have committed; therefore is your land a desolation, and an astonishment, and a curse, without an inhabitant, as at this day.

23 Because ye have burned incense, and because ye have sinned against the LORD, and have not obeyed the voice of the LORD, nor walked in his law, nor in his statutes, nor in his testimonies; therefore this evil is happened unto you, as at this day.

24 Moreover Jeremiah said unto all the people, and to all the women, Hear the word of the LORD, all Judah that are in the land of Egypt:

25 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying; Ye and your wives have both spoken with your mouths, and fulfilled with your hand, saying, We will surely perform our vows that we have vowed, to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings unto her: ye will surely accomplish your vows, and surely perform your vows.

26 Therefore hear ye the word of the LORD, all Judah that dwell in the land of Egypt; Behold, I have sworn by my great name, saith the LORD, that my name shall no more be named in the mouth of any man of Judah in all the land of Egypt, saying, The Lord God liveth.

27 Behold, I will watch over them for evil, and not for good: and all the men of Judah that are in the land of Egypt shall be consumed by the sword and by the famine, until there be an end of them.

28 Yet a small number that escape the sword shall return out of the land of Egypt into the land of Judah, and all the remnant of Judah, that are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall know whose words shall stand, ¹¹mine, or their's.

29 ¶ And this shall be a sign unto you, saith the LORD, that I will punish you in this place, that ye may know that my words shall surely stand against you for evil:

30 Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I will give Pharaoh-hophra king of Egypt into the hand of his enemies, and into the hand of them that seek his life; as I gave Zedekiah king of Judah into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, his enemy, and that sought his life.

¹¹ Heb. from me or from them.

Verse 1. "Migdol."—A place of this name is mentioned in Exod. xiv. 2, as situate near the Red Sea; but this does not appear to be the place here intended. The name "Migdol" signifies a tower, and may have been common to several places distinguished by a conspicuous object of that kind. We may very fairly presume the present town to have been the Magdolus mentioned by Herodotus, Hecataeus, and others, and which Antoninus fixes at the entrance of Egypt from Palestine, about twelve miles from Pelusium. This was too far distant from the Red Sea to be in the route of the Israelites when departing from Egypt; but its situation in the neighbourhood of Tahpanhes, or Daphnæ, and its distance from Judea, favour the supposition of its being the present Migdol. Bochart, who adopts this opinion, observes that, under the determination suggested, we find the places to be named exactly in the order of their distance from Judea: first, Migdol, or Magdolus; secondly, Tahpanhes, or Daphnæ; thirdly, Noph, or Memphis; and, lastly, the district of Pathros, or Thebais. See Blayney's note on this verse.

"The country of Pathros."—It will be observed that this "country of Pathros" is in this verse distinguished from the "land of Egypt," properly so called. The latter term appears to denote generally, in Scripture, the whole of Lower Egypt, which was the part of the country best known to the Hebrews, but of which the Delta, separately taken, is sometimes called Rahab. Then "the country of Pathros" appears to answer to Upper Egypt, or that southern part of the country which the Greeks called Thebais, from Thebes its ancient capital. The name appears to be derived from that of Pathrus, the son of Mizraim, by whom it was probably first peopled. That Pathros was Upper Egypt appears to be confirmed by Ptolemy's mention of a city called Pathyris not far from Thebes, as well as from the Nomus Phaturites of Pliny, which, from its position in his list, must have been one of the nomes of the Thebais. (Nat. Hist. lib. v. c. 9.)

17. "To burn incense unto the queen of heaven."—See the note on chap. vii. 18.

19. "Without our men."—This clearly shows that it is the women who here speak, and who, being more particularly addicted to the reprobated worship, take upon themselves to answer. That at least this latter part of the answer is theirs, is clear from the context, which states that the women as well as the men answered Jeremiah, and that he rejoined to both. Indeed, that the men had been participators in their crime had been stated by Jeremiah himself, in ch. vii. If therefore we give the first part of this answer to the men, we see that they justified the idolatrous act by their alleged experience of its benefits; while the women adduce the concurrence of their men, who alone had a legal right to control them, as an adequate justification of their conduct. This appeal to the concurrence of the men obtains the more force when we consider that, by the law of Moses (Num. xxx.), the men had an independent power of binding themselves by any religious vow or obligation; whereas the vows of women were of no force without the consenting knowledge of the father or husband, and whose consent was presumed if he did not at the time make known his disapproval.

30. "I will give Pharaoh-hophra . . . into the hands of his enemies," &c.—This Pharaoh-hophra was unquestionably the Apries of the Greek historians. He was the grandson of Necho, and began his reign about the same time as Zedekiah in Judea, and reigned twenty-five years. His tyrannical disposition raised discontents among the people, which broke out into an open revolt of the army, which imagined that a disastrous expedition against Cyrene, in which many perished, had been purposely planned for their destruction—that, freed from them, he might tyrannize without control over the rest of his subjects. This impression produced a general defection. The king sent Amasis to pacify the revolt; but they saluted this popular person as king, and persuaded him to put himself at the head of their cause. He did so; and, in the neighbourhood of Memphis, with an army of native Egyptians, defeated a body of 30,000 foreign mercenaries in the pay of Apries. The king himself being taken by the conquerors, Amasis wished to spare his life; but the people were implacable in their vengeance, and he was obliged to give him up "into the hands of those who sought his life," by whom he was strangled. That Nebuchadnezzar appeared in Egypt during these troubles is very evident; but the precise state of the contest when he came, and the part which Apries and Amasis took, with respect to this foreign enemy, or the manner in which Nebuchadnezzar acted towards them, are points involved in uncertainty. However, from the fact that Amasis was left on the throne, as compared with dates and small circumstances, it seems probable that the Babylonians advanced towards Egypt soon after the outbreak of the revolt; and that Apries, not being able, in the state of his affairs, to make a stand against him, withdrew into Upper Egypt. It would also appear that Nebuchadnezzar, when he withdrew after having ravaged the country, left Amasis in possession of the kingdom—according to the plan which he had repeatedly followed in Judea; and that Apries then returned to Lower Egypt, to make one grand effort for the recovery of his crown, with the result which we have already stated.

CHAPTER XLV.

1 Baruch being dismayed, 4 Jeremiah instructeth and comforteth him.

THE word that Jeremiah the prophet spake unto Baruch the son of Neriah, when he had written these words in a book at the mouth of Jeremiah, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, unto thee, O Baruch;

3 Thou didst say, Woe is me now! for the LORD hath added grief to my sorrow;

I fainted in my sighing, and I find no rest.

4 ¶ Thus shalt thou say unto him, The LORD saith thus; Behold, that which I have built will I break down, and that which I have planted I will pluck up, even this whole land.

5 And seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not: for, behold, I will bring evil upon all flesh, saith the LORD: but thy life will I give unto thee ¹for a prey in all places whither thou goest.

CHAPTER XLVI.

1 Jeremiah prophesieth the overthrow of Pharaoh's army at Euphrates, 13 and the conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar. 27 He comforteth Jacob in their chastisement.

THE word of the LORD which came to Jeremiah the prophet against the Gentiles;

2 Against Egypt, against the army of Pharaoh-necho king of Egypt, which was by the river Euphrates in Carchemish, which Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon smote in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah.

3 Order ye the buckler and shield, and draw near to battle.

4 Harness the horses; and get up, ye horsemen, and stand forth with your helmets; furbish the spears, and put on the brigandines.

5 Wherefore have I seen them dismayed and turned away back? and their mighty ones are ¹beaten down, and are ²fled apace, and look not back: for fear was round about, saith the LORD.

6 Let not the swift flee away, nor the mighty man escape; they shall stumble, and fall toward the north by the river Euphrates.

7 Who is this that cometh up as a flood, whose waters are moved as the rivers?

8 Egypt riseth up like a flood, and his waters are moved like the rivers; and he saith, I will go up, and will cover the earth; I will destroy the city and the inhabitants thereof.

9 Come up, ye horses; and rage, ye chariots; and let the mighty men come forth; ³the Ethiopians and ⁴the Libyans, that handle the shield; and the Lydians, that handle and bend the bow.

10 For this is the day of the Lord God of hosts, a day of vengeance, that he may avenge him of his adversaries: and the sword shall devour, and it shall be satiate and made drunk with their blood: for the Lord God of hosts hath a sacrifice in the north country by the river Euphrates.

11 Go up into Gilead, and take balm, O virgin, the daughter of Egypt: in vain shalt thou use many medicines; for ¹thou shalt not be cured.

12 The nations have heard of thy shame, and thy cry hath filled the land: for the mighty man hath stumbled against the mighty, and they are fallen both together.

13 ¶ The word that the LORD spake to Jeremiah the prophet, how Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon should come and smite the land of Egypt.

14 Declare ye in Egypt, and publish in Migdol, and publish in Noph and in Tahpanhes: say ye, Stand fast, and prepare thee; for the sword shall devour round about thee.

15 Why are thy valiant men swept away? they stood not, because the LORD did drive them.

16 He ²made many to fall, yea, one fell upon another: and they said, Arise, and let us go again to our own people, and to the land of our nativity, from the oppressing sword.

17 They did cry there, Pharaoh king of Egypt is but a noise; he hath passed the time appointed.

18 As I live, saith the king, whose name is the LORD of hosts, Surely as Tabor is among the mountains, and as Carmel by the sea, so shall he come.

19 O thou daughter dwelling in Egypt, ³furnish thyself to go into captivity: for Noph shall be waste and desolate without an inhabitant.

20 Egypt is like a very fair heifer, but destruction cometh; it cometh out of the north.

21 Also her hired men are in the midst of her like ⁴fatted bullocks; for they also are turned back, and are fled away together: they did not stand, because the day of their calamity was come upon them, and the time of their visitation.

22 The voice thereof shall go like a serpent; for they shall march with an army, and come against her with axes, as hewers of wood.

23 They shall cut down her forest, saith the LORD, though it cannot be searched; because they are more than the grasshoppers, and are innumerable.

24 The daughter of Egypt shall be confounded; she shall be delivered into the land of the people of the north.

25 The LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saith; Behold, I will punish the ⁵ ¹⁰multitude of No, and Pharaoh, and Egypt, with their gods, and their kings; even Pharaoh, and all them that trust in him:

26 And I will deliver them into the hand of those that seek their lives, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of his servants: and afterward it shall be inhabited, as in the days of old, saith the LORD.

27 ¶ ¹¹But fear not thou, O my servant Jacob, and be not dismayed, O Israel: for, behold, I will save thee from afar off, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and be in rest and at ease, and none shall make him afraid.

28 Fear thou not, O Jacob my servant, saith the LORD: for I am with thee; for I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee: but I will not make ¹²a full end of thee, but correct thee in measure; yet will I ¹³not leave thee wholly unpunished.

Verse 1. "The word of the Lord... against the Gentiles."—This is a general title appropriate to the five following chapters, which describe the Lord's judgments against various foreign nations mentioned in the history of the Jews. As here put together, towards the end of the book, these prophecies are evidently out of their proper chronological order; but those who collected and arranged the prophecies of Jeremiah appear to have considered it expedient thus to bring together those predictions which had no immediate connection with the affairs of the Jews.

2. "Against the army of Pharaoh-necho."—This chapter contains two prophecies against Egypt, referring to different transactions. That which begins here relates to that defeat of Necho's army, by Nebuchadnezzar, which we have already noticed under 2 Chron. xxxv. 20: The passage which Josephus quotes from the third book of the Chaldaic history of Berosus appears to refer to this and the other victories and conquests of Nebuchadnezzar in early life, as he places them at the beginning of his reign, or rather at the end of his father's reign. The other prophecy, beginning with verse 13, obviously relates to that invasion of Egypt, in the latter days of Pharaoh-hophra, which has just engaged our attention.

9. "Come up, ye horses; and rage, ye chariots."—Egypt and its principal allies are here strikingly alluded to by their military characteristics. The present allusion to the furious rapidity of the horses, and the raging force with which the chariots were whirled along in the Egyptian armies, will appear remarkably characteristic to those who have had opportunities of observing the overpowering fury of the horses and chariots, as exhibited in ancient paintings, copied in the various splendid works on Egyptian antiquities which have been published since the commencement of the present century.

"The Ethiopians and the Libyans, that handle the shield."—That the African Ethiopians are intended, as distinguished from those of Arabia, is rendered probable by the consideration stated under 2 Chron. xiv. 9, where we find them associated in like manner with the Libyans, in the army of Shishak, king of Egypt. Compare also the second note under 2 Chron. xii. 3; where we find "shields" mentioned prominently among the warlike instruments of a nation of African Ethiopia. Although the word here rendered "Libyans" is not the same (Lubims) as that which, under the text just referred to, we have considered to denote the Libyans, but "Phut" (from the third son of Ham), there is every probability that the same people—or at least neighbouring peoples of similar habits—are intended by both words. In this view it is a remarkable fact that the Libyans were celebrated for their shields, even by heathen writers. Herodotus says (Melpomene, 189) that the Greeks borrowed from the Libyans the form of the famous shield (Ægis) which they gave to Minerva; excepting only that the bordering fringe was, in the Libyan shield, of leathern thongs, and not of serpents as in the Ægis.

"Lydians."—The original is Ludim, and the people denoted must certainly not be confounded with the Lydians of Asia Minor, with whom the Egyptians, and the other African nations usually associated with them, could have no conceivable connection. There were two Luda, one the son of Shem, from whom these Lydians are supposed to have descended; the other, the son of Misraim, the settler of Egypt, and whose descendants we should, from this very circumstance, expect to be here denoted. From their inclusion among African nations, they were probably settled in Africa, and doubtless near Egypt. But it is impossible to point out the particular part of that continent which they occupied; although, from their being always mentioned with the Libyans (Phut), and from the fact that they served with them as mercenary soldiers of Tyre (Ezek. xxx. 5), which perhaps implies that there was a maritime communication between them and the Tyrians, we may obtain the conclusion that they were settled in the neighbourhood of the African coast, near or among the Libyans.

19. "Noph shall be waste."—Under ch. ii. 16, we have mentioned Noph as identical with Memphis, and stated that its site is to be sought at Metrahenny; a representation of the village of that name being also there given. Thebes and Memphis were the two most famous and magnificent cities of ancient Egypt. The latter was, like the former, the residence of mighty kings, and the capital of a great empire. From the confusion of dynasties and kingdoms, it is difficult to determine the commencement and duration of the metropolitan character in different cities, without entering into larger chronological and historical details than would be interesting or profitable to the Bible reader. We shall therefore only premise, that, although Memphis was a most ancient city, yet its foundation, and still more its metropolitan rank, was posterior to that of Thebes, which it ultimately superseded as the capital of Egypt. To explain this a little, it should be observed that the Egyptian traditions, as preserved by the Greek historians, and confirmed by modern investigation, state that Upper Egypt was the first settled and brought under cultivation. From thence colonies proceeded into Middle and Lower Egypt, and these became the parents of other colonies, till the whole country was settled and cultivated. It appears that the principal colonies either immediately assumed or soon acquired the character of independent states or kingdoms, each with its own metropolis. But although Egypt thus contained several contemporary kingdoms, and Thebes ceased to be the sole capital of the settled country, it is evident, from the nature of things as well as from history, that it must long have remained the great metropolitan city of Egypt. Memphis seems to have been the earliest, or one of the earliest, of those settlements below the Thebais which became the seat of an independent kingdom. It is said to have been founded by Menes, the first Egyptian king; and the tradition, that he gained its site by changing the course of the Nile, which previously ran under the Libyan mountains, opening for it a new channel about half-way between the Arabian and Libyan chain, is, in the opinion of Mr. Wilkinson and others, strongly corroborated by the actual appearance of the river at the spot where, according to Herodotus, the stream was "dyked off," which he fixes at one hundred stades above Memphis. This city gradually grew into importance as the metropolis of a distinct state, and, by the consolidation of the several states into a single monarchy, ultimately became the sole metropolis of Egypt. When it became the paramount metropolis, it may be difficult to determine precisely; but we feel quite safe in saying, that as the capital of Middle Egypt, as the paramount metropolis of the country, and as still an important metropolitan city after the residence of the court had been removed to Sais, it appears that Noph or Memphis was that great city of the Pharaohs with which the Old Testament Hebrews were best acquainted, and to which there are the most frequent references in Scripture, by name or allusion, from the time that the Hebrew family went down into Egypt to that of Jeremiah. At the former date it was probably the capital of that part of Egypt with which the Hebrews were the most familiar; and at the latter, it remained in effect the metropolis of Egypt; for although, since the reign of Psammetichus, the kings had usually resided at Sais, the city of Memphis continued to be regarded as the capital of Egypt down to the conquest of the country by the Persians, and indeed, still later, till it was superseded by Alexandria; and even this was not at once, for it seems from inscriptions that, under the earlier Ptolemies, Memphis was still considered the proper metropolis, although Alexandria had become, instead of Sais, the royal residence.

Most of the ancient writers speak in general terms of the wealth and glory of Memphis, but enter little into details, and Noph is so utterly waste, that we are not able to supply the deficiency from the evidence of existing remains as at Thebes. They speak much however of its magnificent temples, particularly those of Apis and Vulcan; and, in connection with the former, it will be recollected that Memphis was the principal seat of the worship of the ox of that name. Diodorus describes the city as about 150 stades in circumference, or between seventeen and eighteen miles, which may give some idea of its extent and importance, even after allowance is made for the loose manner in which the Oriental towns were and are usually built. And although there are no such existing monuments on the site of Memphis as Thebes still offers, it would be perhaps right to name those remains of a different and not less striking kind—the pyramids—as the monuments of its desolation. For the situation of Memphis (regarded as near Metrahenny) is central with respect to the pyramids, being as it were in the midst of them, and the ancient historians usually considered the pyramids as pertaining to Memphis. Other monuments, more properly marking the city itself, there are scarcely any, so literally has the prophetic denunciation been accomplished. Besides the mounds, or as Scripture describes them, "heaps," which mark desolate sites in Egypt and Western Asia, there are only a few fragments of granite, some substructions, and a colossal statue of Rameses II. This complete desolation, extending even to the absence of ruins, as compared with the grand remains of temples, palaces, and tombs at the more ancient Thebes, is the more observable, when we know that the glory of Memphis was only impaired, not destroyed, by the devastations and burnings of the Persians; and that, when eclipsed by Alexandria, it continued to be the second city of Egypt, as described by Strabo, so late as about the time of our Saviour. And even so lately as the fourteenth century, the Arabian geographer, Abulfeda, notices the extensive remains of Menf, as still evincing the ancient importance of the renowned city of the Pharaohs. The more entire desolation of Memphis than of the cities of Upper Egypt may however be accounted for by the fact, that in the latter region no great cities comparatively modern arose, as in Lower Egypt, to tempt their founders to render desolation more desolate by employing, according to general practice, the materials which the old sites offered for their new constructions; while also, the remains in Middle and Lower Egypt are more exposed than in the Upper to be gradually covered by the encroaching sands of the desert, or the alluvions of the Nile. In conclusion, it claims to be noticed that the Oriental writers furnish a corroboration of Scripture, by stating that the first great blow to the prosperity of Memphis was given by Nebuchadnezzar, in that great expedition which Scripture foretold, but which the Greek historians omit to notice. (See Heeren's 'Egyptians,' passim; Rennel's 'Geog. of Herodotus,' sect. xviii.; 'Descript. de l'Egypte,' tome v.; Wilkinson's 'Topography of Thebes,' &c.)

"No"—THEBES. FROM MEDINET ABOU.

25. "No."—This name occurs several times in the prophets as that of a great and populous Egyptian city; and is sometimes distinguished by the addition of "Ammon" (No-Ammon). This addition would naturally suggest that the city denoted was the chief seat of the worship of Jupiter Ammon; and this was Thebes. The Septuagint renders it by "Diospolis," which was a name of Thebes, on account of its devotion to the worship of Jupiter. It is true that there were two other cities in Egypt which bore the same name; but as Thebes was the principal, and other circumstances concur in its favour, we have little hesitation in acquiescing in the general conclusion that this famous city is intended by the No of Scripture.

In the preceding note we have incidentally introduced Thebes to our readers as the most ancient capital and renowned city of Egypt, the origin of which is lost in the remote infancy of human settlements and institutions. Long the metropolis of the country; and continuing, as the independent capital of Upper Egypt, to eclipse the metropolitan cities which arose in Middle and Lower Egypt—enriched by commerce, devotion, and the spoils of conquered kings—and always looked to with veneration as the parent city, and the prime seat of the sacred mysteries, and of learning and the arts,—Thebes survived in splendour and magnificence long after Memphis had become the political metropolis of the united kingdom, and, from its more advantageous situation for trade, had diverted from it the wealth it derived from commerce. This, however, doubtless gave the first impulse to its decline; but, from the reports of ancient writers, it may well be questioned whether, at any point of time which the Old Testament history embraces, the subtraction which the rivalry of Memphis made from the wealth and population of Thebes enabled her to eclipse, or even equal, the remaining glory of that most renowned city. And even at this day, while Noph, and Zoan and On, have scarcely left a trace of their existence, the desolate temples of Thebes, which remain fresh, fair, and strong, promise to carry down to remote future ages, the record of her glory and desolation.

Thebes has the distinction of being mentioned by Homer, who speaks of its great wealth, and mentions its hundred gates, from each of which issued two hundred men, with horses and chariots. This passage has occasioned more discussion than a poetical allusion appears to require. Diodorus seems to intimate that this force was not raised in the immediate vicinity of Thebes; and as to the hundred gates, he states the conjecture of some persons, that the city derived its title of Hecatompylos from the numerous propyla, or gateways of temples and public buildings. Some understand it to denote so many palaces of princes, each of whom, on pressing occasions, furnished the stated number of men, horses, and chariots. A strong objection to the notion that city gates can be intended arises from the fact, as noticed by Pococke, Wilkinson, and others, that not the least indication can be discovered that Thebes was ever enclosed by a wall. We have no detailed descriptions of the city from ancient sources, but only of the conspicuous public monuments; and it is very possible that, in this and other ancient cities of Egypt, while the temples seem adapted, from their massive character and durable materials, to resist the utmost power of time, the mass of the private dwellings were of a very humble character—probably of mud or brick; some suppose they were of wood, but this would be hardly possible in Egypt, where timber is and ever has been scarce and costly. But it is now well apprehended that, in speaking of the splendour of ancient cities, we understand exclusively its public buildings and monuments, and nothing of handsome streets and comfortable abodes, in which our modern cities as far exceed the ancient as the ancient probably exceeded ours in temples, theatres, palaces, and tombs. However, the very complete information obtained from the painted walls and tombs at Thebes, concerning the usages in peace and war, the arts, the costumes, and the manner of life and action of the ancient inhabitants, furnishes a very satisfactory and most authentic corroboration of the ancient accounts of their luxury and wealth.

In Nahum iii. 8, 10, there is a striking passage in which there is an implied comparison between No and Nineveh (which was then in its glory), with an apparent preference to the former, and which could be true of no other city then known to exist except Thebes. Nineveh is asked, "Art thou better than populous No?" of which we are afterwards told, "Ethiopia and Egypt were her strength, and it was infinite." How strong and great No was, history and existing monuments of stone testify; and its population may be inferred from its being called "populous" even in comparison with Nineveh—"that great city," as it is called in Jonah—as well as from the accounts of its extent. These accounts indeed differ considerably, but, from a comparison and analysis of the varying statements, D'Anville deduces that its circuit was equal to twenty-seven Roman miles, or about nine French leagues—being an extent which few modern capitals approach, and which even London does not much exceed. Of its wealth, some idea may be formed from the accounts of the spoil obtained by the Persians, under Cambyses, and the quantity of precious metal collected after the burning of the city, which last, according to Diodorus, amounted to upwards of 300 talents (about 26,020 pounds troy) of gold; and 2300 talents (or 199,518 pounds) of silver—the former worth 1,248,960 pounds sterling, and the latter 598,544*l*. This great destruction is said not only to have destroyed the private houses, but the greater part of the numerous temples by which Thebes was adorned. This is however not the first time that Thebes had suffered from the desolations of war. Nahum, in the text already referred to, mentions a devastation of No, prior to the ruin of Nineveh, and which appears to correspond to the first direct blow which the splendour of Thebes received on the invasion of Egypt by the Ethiopians, B.C. 769. Between this and the invasion of Cambyses, it probably again suffered in the incursion of Nebuchadnezzar; and after it was burnt by the Persian king we cease to hear of its great importance as a city, though it still survived and was held in high consideration, and something seems to have been done towards its restoration; and, B.C. 86, it was still of such strength and consequence as to dare to rebel against Ptolemy Lathyrus, and stood a three years' siege before it was taken and plundered. Perhaps this fact may be set in opposition to the opinions already stated, that Thebes was never walled; for if it was not, it is difficult to understand how it could have held out so long. Under the Romans, some small buildings seem to have been erected for the convenience of their local establishments; but it was again punished for rebellion by Gallus, in the reign of Augustus; and from that time we hear no more of it as a living town. Strabo describes it in his time as ruined, the only inhabitants being collected (as at present) in a few hamlets constructed on its site. The zeal of the early Christians against the forms of outrageous idolatry there displayed led them to do their best to deface and destroy its remaining monuments. Thus was Thebes at last reduced to a desolation—but perhaps the grandest desolation in the world—by a succession of destructions and spoiliations which were foretold by the inspired prophets, whose predictions were, in their day, derided and laughed to scorn. And here we may pause. The temples, obelisks, statues, and tombs of Thebes, offer a wide field for description. But as these do not directly tend to Scriptural illustration, and could not be satisfactorily examined within the limits of a note, it seems best to avoid the subject altogether. There is, however, one point in which we feel too much interest not to allude to it. Thebes has again in our own day risen to an importance peculiarly its own, and which has drawn towards it the strong attention of all Europe. This arises not only from the peculiar character of its monuments, and the facility of access to them, but from the fact that the paintings and sculptures which decorate the walls of its temples and the interior of its long-hidden tombs, furnish a vast mine of information, of the most authentic and intelligible kind concerning the manners, usages, and habits of remotely, ancient times, which might elsewhere be sought in vain, and which had long been vainly desired. On commencing the present undertaking, we were not slow to perceive that, from the many allusions in Scripture to Egyptian customs, as well as from the proximity of Palestine to Egypt, and the connection which subsisted between the Hebrew and Egyptian nations—this source might furnish, for our purposes, much valuable illustration which had not previously been sought or obtained. We have therefore to some extent acted on this impression, and, as we have reason to hope, with a satisfactory result. To ourselves it has been an interesting employment to assist in drawing forth from the desolations of Thebes elucidations of that divine Book which foretold its ruin.

CHAPTER XLVII.

The destruction of the Philistines.

THE word of the LORD that came to Jeremiah the prophet against the Philistines, before that Pharaoh smote ¹Gaza.

2 Thus saith the LORD; Behold, ²waters rise up out of the north, and shall be an overflowing flood, and shall overflow the land, and ³all that is therein; the city, and them that dwell therein: then the men shall cry, and all the inhabitants of the land shall howl.

3 At the noise of the stamping of the hoofs of his strong horses, at the rushing of his chariots, and at the rumbling of his wheels, the fathers shall not look back to their children for feebleness of hands;

4 Because of the day that cometh to spoil all the Philistines, and to cut off from Tyrus and Zidon every helper that remaineth: for the LORD will spoil the Philistines, the remnant of 'the country of Capthor.

5 Baldness is come upon Gaza; Ashkelon is cut off with the remnant of their valley: how long wilt thou cut thyself?

6 O thou sword of the LORD, how long will it be ere thou be quiet? 'put up thyself into thy scabbard, rest, and be still.

7 'How can it be quiet, seeing the LORD hath given it a charge against Ashkelon, and against the sea shore? there hath he appointed it.

Verse 1. "Before that Pharaoh smote Gaza."—When this was is uncertain. We have scarcely any information concerning the Philistines but that which we obtain from the sacred books, and they do not notice the smiting of Gaza by Pharaoh. The most probable conjecture seems to be that the destruction of Gaza followed the victories of Pharaoh-necho at Megiddo and Carchemish, when Judea became subject to him. The Jews, however, followed by many Christian interpreters, suppose that this prophecy was fulfilled by Pharaoh-hophra, who, having marched to Egypt with the intention, or affectation of an intention, to release Jerusalem, then besieged by the Chaldeans, retired again when the latter raised the siege and marched against him. It is supposed that, to prevent his expedition from appearing altogether fruitless, he smote Gaza on his return, to do which, if he could, he had a strong inducement, as this strong city, from its proximity to the Egyptian frontier, must, in the hands of an enemy, have proved a great annoyance to the Egyptians.

5. "Their valley."—The country occupied by the Philistines was part of the valley which extends from the Mediterranean coast to the base of the central hills of Judea. That part of this valley to which the prophet refers is doubtless what extends from Gaza to Ascalon, and the following description of this very tract, as given by Sandys, will therefore be interesting:—"Wee past this day through the most pregnant and pleasant valley that ever eye beheld. On the right hand a ridge of high mountaines (whereon stands Hebron): on the left hand the Mediterranean Sea, bordered with continued hills, beset with varietie of fruits: as they are for the most part of this dayes iourney. The champaine, betweene about twentie miles over, full of flowry hils ascending leasurely, and not much surmounting their ranker valleys, with groves of olives and other fruits dispersedly adorned. Yet is this wealthy bottome (as are all the rest) for the most part uninhabited, but only for a few small and contemptible villages, possessed by barbarous Moores (Arabs); who till no more than will serve to feed them:—the grasse waste-high, unmowed, uneaten, and uselessly withering."

CHAPTER XLVIII.

1 The judgment of Moab, 7 for their pride, 11 for their security, 14 for their carnal confidence, 26 and for their contempt of God and his people. 47 The restoration of Moab.

AGAINST Moab thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Woe unto Nebo! for it is spoiled: Kiriathaim is confounded and taken: 'Misgab is confounded and dismayed.

2 There shall be no more praise of Moab: in Heshbon they have devised evil against it; come, and let us cut it off from being a nation. Also thou shalt 'be cut down, O Madmen; the sword shall 'pursue thee.

3 A voice of crying shall be from Horonaim, spoiling and great destruction.

4 Moab is destroyed; her little ones have caused a cry to be heard.

5 For in the going up of Luhith 'continual weeping shall go up; for in the going down of Horonaim the enemies have heard a cry of destruction.

6 Flee, save your lives, and be like 'the heath in the wilderness.

7 ¶ For because thou hast trusted in thy works and in thy treasures, thou shalt also be taken: and Chemosh shall go forth into captivity with his 'priests and his princes together.

8 And the spoiler shall come upon every city, and no city shall escape: the valley also shall perish, and the plain shall be destroyed, as the LORD hath spoken.

9 Give wings unto Moab, that it may flee and get away: for the cities thereof shall be desolate, without any to dwell therein.

10 Cursed be he that doeth the work of the LORD 'deceitfully, and cursed be he that keepeth back his sword from blood.

11 ¶ Moab hath been at ease from his youth, and he hath settled on his lees, and hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, neither hath he gone into captivity: therefore his taste¹⁰ remained in him, and his scent is not changed.

12 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will send unto him wanderers, that shall cause him to wander, and shall empty his vessels, and break their bottles.

13 And Moab shall be ashamed of Chemosh, as the house of Israel was ashamed of¹¹ Beth-el their confidence.

14 ¶ How say ye, We are mighty and strong men for the war?

15 Moab is spoiled, and gone up out of her cities, and¹² his chosen young men are gone down to the slaughter, saith the king, whose name is the LORD of hosts.

16 The calamity of Moab is near to come, and his affliction hasteth fast.

17 All ye that are about him, bemoan him; and all ye that know his name, say, How is the strong staff broken, and the beautiful rod!

18 Thou daughter that dost inhabit Dibon, come down from thy glory, and sit in thirst; for the spoiler of Moab shall come upon thee, and he shall destroy thy strong holds.

19 O¹³ inhabitant of Aroer, stand by the way, and espy; ask him that fleeth, and her that escapeth, and say, What is done?

20 Moab is confounded; for it is broken down: ¹⁴howl and cry; tell ye it in Arnon, that Moab is spoiled,

21 And judgment is come upon the plain country; upon Holon, and upon Jahazah, and upon Mephaath,

22 And upon Dibon, and upon Nebo, and upon Beth-diblathaim,

23 And upon Kiriathaim, and upon Beth-gamul, and upon Beth-meon,

24 And upon Kerioth, and upon Bozrah, and upon all the cities of the land of Moab, far or near.

25 The horn of Moab is cut off, and his arm is broken, saith the LORD.

26 ¶ Make ye him drunken: for he magnified himself against the LORD: Moab also shall wallow in his vomit, and he also shall be in derision.

27 For was not Israel a derision unto thee? was he found among thieves? for since thou spakest of him, thou¹⁵ skippedst for joy.

28 O ye that dwell in Moab, leave the cities, and dwell in the rock, and be like the dove that maketh her nest in the sides of the hole's mouth.

29 We have heard the ¹⁶pride of Moab, (he is exceeding proud) his loftiness, and his arrogancy, and his pride, and the haughtiness of his heart.

30 I know his wrath, saith the LORD; but it shall not be so; ¹⁷his lies shall not so effect it.

31 Therefore will I howl for Moab, and I will cry out for all Moab; mine heart shall mourn for the men of Kir-heres.

32 O vine of Sibmah, I will weep for thee with the weeping of Jazer: thy plants are gone over the sea, they reach even to the sea of Jazer: the spoiler is fallen upon thy summer fruits and upon thy vintage.

33 And ¹⁸joy and gladness is taken from the plentiful field, and from the land of Moab; and I have caused wine to fail from the winepresses: none shall tread with shouting; their shouting shall be no shouting.

34 From the cry of Heshbon even unto Elealeh, and even unto Jahaz, have they uttered their voice, ¹⁹from Zoar even unto Horonaim, as an heifer of three years old: for the waters also of Nimrim shall be ²⁰desolate.

35 Moreover I will cause to cease in Moab, saith the LORD, him that offereth in the high places, and him that burneth incense to his gods.

36 Therefore mine heart shall sound for Moab like pipes, and mine heart shall sound like pipes for the men of Kir-heres: because the riches that he hath gotten are perished.

37 For ²¹every head shall be bald, and every beard ²²clipped: upon all the hands shall be cuttings, and upon the loins sackcloth.

38 There shall be lamentation generally upon all the housetops of Moab, and in the streets thereof: for I have broken Moab like a vessel wherein is no pleasure, saith the LORD.

39 They shall howl, saying, How is it broken down! how hath Moab turned the ²³back with shame! so shall Moab be a derision and a dismaying to all them about him.

40 For thus saith the LORD; Behold, he shall fly as an eagle, and shall spread his wings over Moab.

41 "Kerioth is taken, and the strong holds are surprised, and the mighty men's hearts in Moab at that day shall be as the heart of a woman in her pangs.

42 And Moab shall be destroyed from being a people, because he hath magnified himself against the LORD.

43 ²⁵Fear, and the pit, and the snare, shall be upon thee, O inhabitant of Moab, saith the LORD.

44 He that fleeth from the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that getteth up out of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for I will bring upon it, even upon Moab, the year of their visitation, saith the LORD.

45 They that fled stood under the shadow of Heshbon because of the force: but ²⁶a fire shall come forth out of Heshbon, and a flame from the midst of Sihon, and shall devour the corner of Moab, and the crown of the head of the ²⁷tumultuous ones.

46 Woe be unto thee, O Moab! the people of Chemosh perisheth: for thy sons are taken ²⁸captives, and thy daughters captives.

Verse 1. "Against Moab."—The references to former notes collected under Isa. xv. 1, together with the other notes on chaps. xv., xvi., and xvii., of the same prophet, will be found to contain much information illustrative of the extended prediction concerning Moab which the present chapter contains.

"Misgab."—This word occurs nowhere else as a proper name, and probably should be regarded as an appellative, and translated according to its signification. It means a height, a hill or rock, as a place of security, and hence a refuge. It therefore probably denotes here a place on an elevated site, strong by nature and art. Blayney renders it, "the high fortress;" but whether it denotes a distinct and celebrated fortress, or is a phrase of variation, applied to Kiriathaim itself, must remain uncertain.

2. "Madmen."—This name of a town in Moab occurs nowhere else, and we have no information concerning it.

8. "The valley also shall perish, and the plain shall be destroyed."—Compare the notes on Num. xxxii. 1; Deut. ii. 8 (last paragraph); and Isa. xvii. 2.

9. "The cities thereof shall be desolate, without any to dwell therein."—How remarkably the existing state of the country verifies this and the other prophecies concerning Moab, may be seen in the notes referred to under verse 1. We may however here add Keith's interesting comment on this verse. "The most populous and fertile province in Europe (especially any situated in the interior of a country like Moab) is not covered so thickly with towns as Moab is plentiful in ruins, deserted and desolate though now it be. Burckhardt enumerates about fifty ruined sites within its boundaries, many of them extensive. In general they are a broken down (see verse 39) and undistinguishable mass of ruins; and many of them have not been closely inspected. But in some instances, there are the remains of temples, sepulchral monuments, the ruins of edifices constructed of very large stones, tracks of hanging gardens; entire columns lying on the ground, three feet in diameter, and fragments of smaller columns; and many cisterns cut out of the rock. . . But not one of the ancient cities of Moab exists as tenanted by man." 'Evidence of Prophecy,' p. 159. 15th edit.

12. "Wanderers, that shall cause him to wander."—The wanderers may be supposed the Bedouin Arabs, to whom, of all people, that designation is peculiarly applicable. They, as we have stated on former occasions, are almost the sole occupants of, or rather wanderers in, the land of Moab; and in that, and other countries similarly circumstanced, they "cause to wander," by their exactions and spoliations, those who are tempted by, a fertile soil and every natural advantage, to sit down and cultivate an abandoned country. What Burckhardt says of the neighbouring district of the Haouran, is more widely true, and is only less true of the land of Moab, because the operation of the system has there rendered the presence of the cultivator still more rare than in the Haouran:—"The oppressions of the government on the one side, and those of the Bedouins on the other, have reduced the Fellah of the Haouran to a state little better than that of the wandering Arab. Few individuals, either among the Druses or Christians, die in the same village where they were born. Families are continually moving from one place to another." 'Travels in Syria,' 299.

21. "Holon," &c.—In the list of names of towns in Moab contained in this chapter, there are several which do not elsewhere occur as such. These are Holon, Mephaath, Bethgamul, Kerioth, of which nothing whatever is known. The two first and the last are the same as the names of towns of Judah, with which they have, through great absence of mind, been identified by some commentators, who forgot that Jordan and the Dead Sea were interposed between the lands of Moab and Judea. All the other places have been duly noticed elsewhere.

CHAPTER XLIX.

¹ CONCERNING the Ammonites, thus saith the LORD; Hath Israel no sons? hath he no heir? why then doth ²their king inherit ³Gad, and his people dwell in his cities?

2 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will cause an alarm of war to be heard in ⁴Rabbah of the Ammonites; and it shall be a desolate heap, and her daughters shall be burned with fire: then shall Israel be heir unto them that were his heirs, saith the LORD.

3 Howl, O Heshbon, for Ai is spoiled: cry, ye daughters of Rabbah, gird you with sackcloth; lament, and run to and fro by the hedges; for ⁵their king shall go into captivity, and his ⁶priests and his princes together.

4 Wherefore gloriest thou in the valleys, ⁷thy flowing valley, O backsliding daughter? that trusted in her treasures, saying, Who shall come unto me?

5 Behold, I will bring a fear upon thee, saith the Lord God of hosts, from all those that be about thee; and ye shall be driven out every man right forth; and none shall gather up him that wandereth.

6 And afterward I will bring again the captivity of the children of Ammon, saith the LORD.

7 ¶ Concerning Edom, thus saith the LORD of hosts; ⁸Is wisdom no more in Teman? is counsel perished from the prudent? is their wisdom vanished?

8 Flee ye, ⁹turn back, dwell deep, O inhabitants of Dedan; for I will bring the calamity of Esau upon him, the time that I will visit him.

9 If ¹⁰grapegatherers come to thee, would they not leave some gleaning grapes? if thieves by night, they will destroy ¹¹till they have enough.

10 But I have made Esau bare, I have uncovered his secret places, and he shall not be able to hide himself: his seed is spoiled, and his brethren, and his neighbours, and he is not.

11 Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive; and let thy widows trust in me.

12 For thus saith the LORD; Behold, they whose judgment was not to drink of the cup have assuredly drunken; and art thou he that shall altogether go unpunished? thou shalt not go unpunished, but thou shalt surely drink of it.

13 For I have sworn by myself, saith the LORD, that Bozrah shall become a desolation, a reproach, a waste, and a curse; and all the cities thereof shall be perpetual wastes.

14 I have heard a ¹²rumour from the LORD, and an ambassador is sent unto the heathen, saying, Gather ye together, and come against her, and rise up to the battle.

15 For, lo, I will make thee small among the heathen, and despised among men.

16 Thy terribleness hath deceived thee, and the pride of thine heart, O thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock, that holdest the height of the hill: though thou shouldest make thy ¹³nest as high as the eagle, I will bring thee down from thence, saith the LORD.

17 Also Edom shall be a desolation: ¹⁴every one that goeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss at all the plagues thereof.

²⁶ Chap. 48. 47. Verse 6.

Verse 2. "Rabbah of the Ammonites. . . shall be a desolate heap."—A general notice of the Ammonites has been given under Deut. ii.; and the details there offered may be advantageously compared with the contents of the present prophecy. We have now to notice Rabbah, which was the metropolis of the Ammonites; and as it was such even when the Hebrews conquered much territory to the east of the Jordan, before they entered the land of Canaan, it must have been very ancient. The city was besieged by Joab and taken by David, who appears to have given it with the conquered territory to the tribe of Gad. But it seems from this chapter, that when the tribes beyond Jordan were carried into captivity, the Ammonites got possession of the cities then taken from them, and also, apparently, of their more ancient possessions which the Hebrews conquered from Sihon, and which formed the subject of the memorable controversy between them and Jephthah (see Judges xi. and the note there). But for their cruelties and indecent triumph over the fallen Israelites, on this and other occasions, the Ammonites incurred the judgments denounced against them in this and other prophecies. Although Rabbah appears to have been several times wholly or partially destroyed in war, by the kings of Babylon and the Greek monarchs of Syria and Egypt, the successive conquerors down to the Romans appear to have rebuilt, and improved the city, being sensible of the advantages of its situation, so that it very long maintained its rank as the local metropolis. It ultimately received the name of Philadelphia, from Ptolemy Philadelphus, by whom it was restored and fortified; but some of the ancient writers continued to call it by its Oriental name. Thus Polybius calls it Rabbatamana (Rabbath-ammon), and gives such an account of its siege by Antiochus as shows its great strength. He came and encamped near the hills on which the city was built. An attentive survey of the town on every side, showed him that there were only two places by which it could possibly be approached, and he there planted his warlike engines and made the necessary dispositions for an attack. This was made with such vigour that the wall fell down at these two places; but although the assaults against the town were renewed day and night with great force and fury, all the efforts of the besiegers were ineffectual, in consequence of the great number and valour of the defenders. At last one of the prisoners acquainted the besiegers of a subterraneous passage by which the town was supplied with water; and this being filled up with stone, wood, and rubbish, the city was soon obliged to surrender for want of water.—We have the rather cited this account as it seems to throw some light on the account (in 2 Sam. xii.) of the taking of the same place by David. The Roman character of some of the existing remains show that the place was improved and embellished, while possessed by the Romans; but after their time, it seems to have lost its consequence, although the date of its final desolation cannot be ascertained: but in the time of Jerome it still subsisted under the name of Philadelphia. The Orientals however preserve old names with remarkable tenacity; and the ruined city of the Ammonites is still called Amman by the natives of the country. The researches of Seetzen, Burckhardt, and Buckingham, have made us fully acquainted with this site, concerning which Europe previously possessed no information. The site is in a valley, but is still very elevated. The road towards it from the north-west is an ascending one, and ultimately conducts the traveller to an elevated plain—so high, that in the extensive view which is then commanded, the snow-invested summits of Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon appear rather below than above the spectator, though they must certainly be higher; while, in another direction, the plains of the Haouran seem in a profound abyss. This elevated plain, like other parts in this region, presents an extent of fertile soil, equal to the best portions of Galilee and Samaria, and capable of producing sustenance for a large population—but lying entirely waste. The plain is interspersed with low hills of irregular form, and for the most part crowned with ruins. Traversing this plain, the traveller enters a broad valley, leading southward, which in half an hour brings him into another narrower valley, running east and west, and in which the ruins of Rabbah lie. They chiefly occupy an area formed by the openings of the two valleys, but extend some way eastward down the entered valley, which narrows as it extends. At the point where the valleys meet, and commanding the entrance, there is a high hill, the summit of which is occupied by a strong and most extensive fortress—almost a town in itself—and the walls of which appear to be of very remote antiquity. It is an oblong square, filled with buildings, of which as much remains as of the private houses in the lower town. It appears clear to us that this was the strong part which Joab wished David to have the honour of taking, after he had himself taken the lower town, which he calls “the city of waters.” This lower town stood chiefly in the valley, between this and the other northern hills and the river, which flows much nearer to the south than the north side of the valley. The river itself is a fine clear stream full of small fish. It is called Moiet Amman, and has its source in a pond a few hundred paces from the south-west end of the town. Burckhardt was informed that it disappears underground three times before it reaches the river Zerka, to which it contributes its waters. On each side of this stream there are remains of some of the noblest edifices in all Syria; but being mostly of Roman origin, as indicated by their style of architecture, they are not of such Scriptural interest as to require any detailed notice. The most important is a magnificent theatre, on the south side of the stream, the largest of which any trace has been found in Syria; but which the natives regard as having been the royal palace. It is still in very good condition, forming indeed an unusually perfect monument of Roman luxury. There are also remains of several temples in various stages of decay, and of other public buildings, the precise character of which has not yet been determined. They appear to be mostly of the Corinthian order, and in some instances the shafts are at least five feet in diameter. Thus, as a whole, is Rabbah, with its marked standing ruins, interspersed with prostrate shafts and capitals, and with only the foundations and stone door-posts of its dwellings remaining, “a desolate heap;” yet not so wholly extinct but that the Bedouin, who alone frequents its desolations, can stable his cattle in its temples and palaces, fulfilling the Divine prediction, that the proud Rabbah [should be “a stable for camels.” (Ezek. xxv. 5.)

13. “Bozrah shall become a desolation, a reproach, a waste, and a curse.”—See the note on Isaiah xxxiv. 6. Since writing that, we have had the satisfaction of finding the conjecture with which it concludes confirmed by Calmet in his note on the present text. He says that we do not know the situation of the Bozrah of Edom, unless it be the same which is sometimes mentioned as belonging to Moab. He observes that the dominion of the Edomites extended to the place where the Bostres of Arabia (that is, in the Haouran) is usually fixed; and conjectures that it was probably occupied by both Moabites and Edomites, and is therefore said sometimes to belong to the one and sometimes to the other. The Bozrah in view was certainly near the frontier which separated the children of Lot and Esau, and hence arises the probability of joint occupation. Perhaps it was a neutral town, or the authority over it fluctuated; and other circumstances may be conceived, but not ascertained, which explain the difficulty better than the supposition of a second town of note, bearing the same name and mentioned with similar circumstances. We shall therefore take the Bozrah of the Haouran to be that of the present text; and if we should be in error, it does not much matter, for if there were two places of the name, this was doubtless one of the two, and the desolation of both is, in that case, equally foretold in Jeremiah. We do however feel more assured that this Bozrah was the city of Edom, than that there was not another in the land of Moab, and concerning which we possess no information. There is an instructive passage in the apocryphal book of Maccabees, bearing on the subject. In chap. v. we are told that it was determined that Judas, then in Galilee, should go at the head of 8000 men into Gilead. Accordingly he and his brother Jonathan crossed the Jordan and travelled three days’ journey in the wilderness, where they met with the “Nabathites,” who came to them in a peaceable manner, and told them of all that had previously happened in Gilead, and how that some Jews were kept confined in “Bosora” and five other “cities strong and great,” which were then in possession of the Greek kings of Syria. He immediately marched to Bosora, and having taken it, destroyed it with fire. All these circumstances no doubt refer to the Bozrah of Edom; and the indications clearly point to the town in the Haouran—such as its distance from the Jordan, and the passage through Gilead to arrive at it. We see also, that after the three days, he came among the Nabathites, a people incorporated with the Edomites; and the particular notice that they came in a friendly manner, seems to prove this; as the same chapter begins with a statement that Judas had avenged the ill-treatment the Jews received from the Edomites. But those inhabiting this quarter, behaved well; probably because they felt there the bitterness of the Syrian yoke, and regretted to see Bozrah and their other towns in the possession of Antiochus.

Bozrah (or, as it is now spelled by different travellers, Boszra, Bosra, Bostra, Botzra) is situated in the open plain in the southern part of the district called the Haouran. Under the Romans, it was the capital of Arabia Provincia, and is now, including its ruins, the largest town of the Haouran. It is of an oval shape (Burckhardt: Buckingham says an irregular square), and the circumference around the walls is about three miles. Many parts of the thick wall, which, in olden times, gave it the reputation of great strength, still remain entire. It is certain that nothing among the ruins is of Scriptural antiquity; as indeed we have just seen that the place was destroyed by Judas Maccabæus. All the remains appear to be Roman and Mohammedan, and therefore require to be only briefly noticed. They consist of a temple situated on the side of a long street which intersected the whole town—two triumphal arches—some fine detached columns, standing, and many others scattered on the ground—a rotunda, which is supposed to have been a Greek church—an old mosque of the earliest age of Mohammedanism. In the Roman remains, the Corinthian order prevails, as usual. There is also a large castle of Saracenic origin, supposed to be of the time of the Crusades, and which still occasionally receives a garrison from Damascus to protect the harvest of the Haouran against the incursions of the Bedouins. In the eastern quarters of the town, there is a very extensive reservoir, the work of the Saracens, for watering the pilgrim caravan to Mecca. The south and south-east quarters of the site are covered with ruins of private buildings, the walls of many of which are still standing, but most of the roofs have fallen in. Burckhardt says: "Of the vineyards, for which Boszra was celebrated even in the days of Moses,* and which are commemorated by the Greek medals of ΚΟΛΩΝΙΑ ΒΟΣΤΡΗΣ, not a vestige remains. There is scarcely a tree in the neighbourhood of the town; and the twelve or fifteen families who now inhabit it cultivate nothing but wheat, barley, horse-beans, and a little dhourra. A number of fine rose-trees grow wild among the ruins of the town." The small population here mentioned had increased when Buckingham was there; but, as he says of this and other places similarly circumstanced, the population continually changes, and the sites are often wholly forsaken. A few settlers, driven from other places, come and occupy the habitable houses, which have no owners; they increase for the time in which a little quiet is allowed them; but ere long, the incursions of the Bedouins and the exactions of the governors drive them away to seek other homes. In time others come and occupy their vacated seats, and are at last obliged to withdraw in their turn. Such knots of insecure settlers on the ruined site of Bozrah, do not certainly redeem its desolate character, but serve all the more to render it "a desolation, a reproach, and a waste."

16. "Thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock."—The chief seat of the Edomites is doubtless here referred to, and in that they are described as dwelling in the clefts of the rock. How remarkably this applies to Petra will be seen from the various engravings which, in the course of this work, we have given from the magnificent volume of Laborde, as well as from the note to 2 Kings xiv. 7. The object of that note was however rather to identify the site than to furnish the descriptive information which it seemed best to reserve to illustrate the present text, in which the chief place of Edom is so remarkably indicated and characterised. The authorities are Burckhardt, Macmichael, Irby and Mangles, and Laborde—chiefly the two latter, who furnish the most instructive and copious details, to which we may refer those who desire further information, as our own notice must necessarily be brief.

Irby and Mangles, and the English editor of Laborde, have between them collected the notices of Petra contained in ancient writers, and which remarkably correspond not only with the situation and appearance of Petra, but with the few intimations on the subject which the Scriptures contain, and which describe it as a rock, and that rock as containing habitations, and "sepulchres on high."

Pliny (Hist. Nat. vi. 28) says that the Nabatæi inhabited a city called Petra, which was situated in a valley somewhat less than two miles in extent*, surrounded by inaccessible mountains, and intersected by a river. Strabo also says that the capital of the Nabatæi, which is called Petra, lay in a spot in itself plain and level, but was enclosed on all sides by a barrier of rocks and precipices. Within it was furnished with springs of excellent quality, for the supply of water and the irrigation of gardens; but beyond the confining hills, the precincts were in a great measure desert, particularly in the direction towards Judea. It was three or four days' journey from Jericho. Strabo considered the Nabatæi the same people with the Idumeans. Captain Mangles, in his remarks on these accounts, furnishes a good general idea of the site. "It will be seen that these two geographers, in characterising the position of the city, not only agree with one another, but will be found sufficiently conformable to the reality, though, strictly speaking, the situation can neither be called a valley, with Pliny, nor a plain, with Strabo; yet it is certainly both low in position and level in surface, when compared with the crags and precipices that surround it. It is an area in the bosom of a mountain, swelling into mounds and intersected with gullies; but the whole ground is of such a nature as may be conveniently built upon, and has neither ascent nor descent inconveniently steep." It is not difficult to comprehend how such a situation should, in that region, have been considered highly advantageous for the foundation of a city. Laborde says: "In the remote ages, when men were engaged in perpetual wars, and plunder was the order of the day, it was no small advantage to a community to find a position which presented a considerable surface, enriched by abundant streams, and hemmed in by a girdle of rocks, to which there was no ingress except from a ravine so narrow that a few men stationed on the top of the mountain might prevent an enemy, however numerous, from effecting an entrance into the town. When the Nabatheans grew to be a powerful people, the importance of this position became more obvious, as they had to guard themselves not only against the jealousy of the neighbouring tribes, but also against the desire of conquest which animated more distant nations." It is doubtless to the advantages of its position that we must attribute the very singular character which this city offers. To realise these advantages, it was necessary that the inhabitants should confine their town within this hollow; but as its base was of very limited extent for a metropolitan city, they were almost driven to the resource which they adopted, of excavating the sides of the enclosing rocks, and forming there temples, tombs, and habitations; and as ages passed and population increased, these became so multiplied as to give to the site that peculiar character which it now exhibits, and which for countless ages yet to come it is likely to maintain. Probably there were many natural caves which were first occupied, and which suggested the idea of forming others by art, when no more of them remained unappropriated. There is no reason to suppose that these excavations received at once the highly-enriched character which a great number of them now bear. The inhabitants, in the first instance, probably formed simple excavations, to which the more refined and luxurious people of a later age added the ornamental and magnificent façades, sculptured out of the surface of the rock, of which

* This is a mistake; he must mean Isaiah (lxiii. 1—3); and this shows that he (a very good authority) considered this the Bozrah of Edom.

* He uses the general term, "paulo minus II MP. amplitudinis;" but he must mean the circumference, and so Mangles and Laborde's editor understand.

many examples have been given in our different engravings, and which impress so distinct a character upon the desolated city of Edom. No doubt, however, many of the caverns were formed in these comparatively late times, and in which the ornamental frontispieces formed part of the original design. Thus it is that while constructed towns of much later date, are now reduced to heaps and scattered fragments, or are even covered by mould over which the plough passes and the harvest grows—the tombs, temples, and dwellings of Petra, carved in the living rock, remain for the most part entire and beautiful, unbroken, and even unstained, by the ages which have passed since the town was the seat of that luxury and wealth which the commerce of many nations brought into its hollow valley.

PETRA.

Ruins of a Temple built in the "clefts of the rock."—Verses 16.

A detailed description of any of these excavations and the noble fronts which many of them offer, could not be suitably introduced in this place; and the impression on the subject which it might be desirable the reader should realize, will be better given by the engravings we have formerly introduced, and by those which we now add, than by any quantity of written description. That which we now add, as well as what we have already stated, has rather in view the general aspect of the scene than the particular objects which it includes. Our first cut shows a pass, beyond which appears the theatre, the whole of which, with the ascending rows of seats, is cut in the solid rock. Speaking of this, Mangles says, "This pass conducts to the theatre, and here the ruins of the city burst on the view in full grandeur, shut in on the opposite side by craggy precipices, from which numerous ravines and valleys branch out in all directions; the sides of the valleys covered with an endless variety of excavated tombs and private dwellings (Isa. xlix. 16) presented the most singular scene we ever beheld; and we must despair to give the reader an idea of the singular effect of rocks, tinted with the most extraordinary hues, whose summits present us with nature in her most savage and romantic aspects, while their bases were worked out with all the symmetry and regularity of art, with colonnades and pediments, and ranges of corridors adhering to their perpendicular surface." To this the reflections of Laborde, marking, as they do, the fulfilment of the doom denounced by the prophets, form a marked sequel:—"What a people must they have not been who first opened the mountain to stamp upon it the seal of their energy and genius! What a climate, too, which gilds with its light the graceful forms of a great variety of sculptures, without suffering its winters to crumble their sharp edges, or to reduce in the least their high reliefs! Silence reigns all around, save where the solitary owl now and then utters his plaintive cry. The Arab passes through the scene with perfect indifference, scarcely deigning to look at works executed with so much ability, or to meditate, except with contempt, on an object which he in vain seeks to comprehend." The writer of this passage has, without intending it, made every word it contains replete with meaning for the illustration of prophecy.

As sepulchres are more frequently than dwellings excavated in the sides of mountains, we suspect that too large a proportion of those in Petra have been regarded as tombs. That a great number of them were destined for sepulchres is perfectly clear: but that many were used for habitations is allowed by Mangles and Laborde. The former, after quoting the Nubian geographer, who states that the houses of Petra were cut in the rock, says:—"That this was not universally true is evident from the great quantity of stones employed in the lesser kinds of edifices which are scattered over the whole site; but it is also true that there are grottoes in great numbers which are certainly not sepulchres." Of these he particularly mentions one which presents a front of four windows with a large and lofty doorway in the centre, but the front of which is without ornamental sculptures. The door and three of the windows open into a large apartment, sixty feet in length and of proportionate breadth; while the fourth window belongs to a smaller apartment, apparently for sleeping, which is not brought down to the level of the floor of the great chamber, but has below it another small apartment which receives light only from the door. Of the constructed edifices in the open area itself, very little of a definite shape now remains, and the ruin into which these houses have fallen, furnishes a marked and instructive contrast to the comparatively perfect condition of the surrounding works in the rock. There is however one interesting mass, which, though greatly ruined, towers above the general wreck, and affords us information as to the form and style of the constructed edifices, and we have therefore made it the subject of our second engraving. In the foreground are the remains of an archway of very florid architecture, with pilasters having panels, enriched with foliage, &c., in the manner of Palmyra. The arch was the introduction to the great pile of building standing nearly at right angles to it. This building has a door on one side, on the three others it was decorated with a frieze of triglyphs and large flowers in the metopes. Beams of wood are let in at intervals between the courses of the masonry, and continue to this day—a strong proof of the dryness of the climate. The front had a portico of four columns. This part is much ruined. The interior of the edifice was divided into three parallel chambers, and there seem to have been several stories. Laborde calls it a temple; but Mangles, whose description we have followed, thinks from the interior construction that it was rather a palace or some private edifice. The Græco-Roman character exhibited in this and in broken portions of other ruins, indicating a later date than the time of the prophets, is a corroboration of prophecy; for it was foretold that God would destroy and make desolate not only that which Edom had already built, but that which it should build in future times:—"Though thou make thy nest as high as the eagle, I will bring thee down."—"They shall build, but I will throw down."

CHAPTER L.

1, 9, 21, 35 The judgment of Babylon. 4, 17, 33 The redemption of Israel.

THE word that the LORD spake against Babylon and against the land of the Chaldeans ¹by Jeremiah the prophet.

2 Declare ye among the nations, and publish, and ²set up a standard; publish, and conceal not: say, Babylon is taken, Bel is confounded, Merodach is broken in pieces; her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces.

3 For out of the north there cometh up a nation against her, which shall make her land desolate, and none shall dwell therein:

they shall remove, they shall depart, both man and beast.

4 ¶ In those days, and in that time, saith the LORD, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping: they shall go, and seek the LORD their God.

5 They shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward, saying, Come, and let us join ourselves to the LORD in a perpetual covenant that shall not be forgotten.

6 My people hath been lost sheep: their shepherds have caused them to go astray, they have turned them away on the mountains: they have gone from mountain to hill, they have forgotten their ³resting-place.

7 All that found them have devoured them: and their adversaries said, We offend not, because they have sinned against the LORD, the habitation of justice, even the LORD, the hope of their fathers.

8 'Remove out of the midst of Babylon, and go forth out of the land of the Chaldeans, and be as the he goats before the flocks.

9 ¶ For, lo, I will raise and cause to come up against Babylon an assembly of great nations from the north country: and they shall set themselves in array against her; from thence she shall be taken: their arrows shall be as of a mighty ⁵expert man; none shall return in vain.

10 And Chaldea shall be a spoil: all that spoil her shall be satisfied, saith the LORD.

11 Because ye were glad, because ye rejoiced, O ye destroyers of mine heritage, because ye are grown ⁶'fat as the heifer at grass, and bellow as bulls;

12 Your mother shall be sore confounded; she that bare you shall be ashamed: behold, the hindermost of the nations shall be a wilderness, a dry land, and a desert.

13 Because of the wrath of the LORD it shall not be inhabited, but it shall be wholly desolate: ⁷'every one that goeth by Babylon shall be astonished, and hiss at all her plagues.

14 Put yourselves in array against Babylon round about: all ye that bend the bow, shoot at her, spare no arrows: for she hath sinned against the LORD.

15 Shout against her round about: she hath given her hand: her foundations are fallen, her walls are thrown down: for it is the vengeance of the LORD: take vengeance upon her; as she hath done, do unto her.

16 Cut off the sower from Babylon, and him that handleth the ⁸'sickle in the time of harvest: for fear of the oppressing sword they shall turn every one to his people, and they shall flee every one to his own land.

17 ¶ Israel is a scattered sheep; the lions have driven him away: first the king of Assyria hath devoured him; and last this Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath broken his bones.

18 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will punish the king of Babylon and his land, as I have punished the king of Assyria.

19 And I will bring Israel again to his habitation, and he shall feed on Carmel and Bashan, and his soul shall be satisfied upon mount Ephraim and Gilead.

20 In those days, and in that time, saith the LORD, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found: for I will pardon them whom I reserve.

21 ¶ Go up against the land ⁹'of Meraithaim, even against it, and against the inhabitants of ¹⁰'Pekod: waste and utterly destroy after them, saith the LORD, and do according to all that I have commanded thee.

22 A sound of battle is in the land, and of great destruction.

23 How is the hammer of the whole earth cut asunder and broken! how is Babylon become a desolation among the nations!

24 I have laid a snare for thee, and thou art also taken, O Babylon, and thou wast not aware: thou art found, and also caught, because thou hast striven against the LORD.

25 The LORD hath opened his armoury, and hath brought forth the weapons of his indignation: for this is the work of the Lord God of hosts in the land of the Chaldeans.

26 Come against her ¹¹'from the utmost border, open her storehouses: ¹²'cast her up as heaps, and destroy her utterly: let nothing of her be left.

27 Slay all her bullocks; let them go down to the slaughter: woe unto them! for their day is come, the time of their visitation.

28 The voice of them that flee and escape out of the land of Babylon, to declare in Zion the vengeance of the LORD our God, the vengeance of his temple.

¹¹ Heb. from the end.

¹² Or, tread her.

29 Call together the archers against Babylon: all ye that bend the bow, camp against it round about; let none thereof escape: recompense her according to her work; according to all that she hath done, do unto her: for she hath been proud against the LORD, against the Holy One of Israel.

30 Therefore shall her young men fall in the streets, and all her men of war shall be cut off in that day, saith the LORD.

31 Behold, I am against thee, O thou ¹³most proud, saith the Lord God of hosts: for thy day is come, the time that I will visit thee.

32 And ¹⁴the most¹⁵ proud shall stumble and fall, and none shall raise him up: and I will kindle a fire in his cities, and it shall devour all round about him.

33 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts; The children of Israel and the children of Judah were oppressed together: and all that took them captives held them fast: they refused to let them go.

34 Their Redeemer is strong; the LORD of hosts is his name: he shall thoroughly plead their cause, that he may give rest to the land, and disquiet the inhabitants of Babylon.

35 ¶ A sword is upon the Chaldeans, saith the LORD, and upon the inhabitants of Babylon, and upon her princes, and upon her wise men.

36 A sword is upon the ¹⁵liars; and they shall dote: a sword is upon her mighty men; and they shall be dismayed.

37 A sword is upon their horses, and upon their chariots, and upon all the mingled people that are in the midst of her; and they shall become as women: a sword is upon her treasures; and they shall be robbed.

38 A drought is upon her waters; and they shall be dried up: for it is the land of graven images, and they are mad upon their idols.

39 Therefore the wild beasts of the desert with the wild beasts of the islands shall dwell there, and the owls shall dwell therein: and it shall be no more inhabited for ever; neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation.

40 ¹⁷As God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah and the neighbour cities thereof, saith the LORD; so shall no man abide there, neither shall any son of man dwell therein.

41 Behold, a people shall come from the north, and a great nation, and many kings shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth.

42 They shall hold the bow and the lance: they are cruel, and will not shew mercy: their voice shall roar like the sea, and they shall ride upon horses, every one put in array, like a man to the battle, against thee, O daughter of Babylon.

43 The king of Babylon hath heard the report of them, and his hands waxed feeble: anguish took hold of him, and pangs as of a woman in travail.

44 Behold, he shall come up ¹⁸like a lion from the swelling of Jordan unto the habitation of the strong: but I will make them suddenly run away from her: and who is a chosen man, that I may appoint over her? for who is like me? and ¹⁹who will ²⁰appoint me the time? and who is that shepherd that will stand before me?

45 Therefore hear ye the counsel of the LORD, that he hath taken against Babylon; and his purposes, that he hath purposed against the land of the Chaldeans: Surely the least of the flock shall draw them out: surely he shall make their habitation desolate with them.

46 At the noise of the taking of Babylon the earth is moved, and the cry is heard among the nations.

CHAPS. L. and LI.—These two chapters contain most important and instructive predictions concerning Babylon, every one of which has been fulfilled, as historians and travellers have concurred to demonstrate. The prophecies relate by anticipation the circumstances which should attend, and which did attend, the conquest of Babylon by the Medes and Persians; and they also describe that condition of the city and country which should be the immediate or final effect of that great overthrow, and which has been and is its condition. We had some intention of taking up the subject rather fully, in a general notice, under these two chapters; but, considering how much we have already said concerning Babylon, in separately illustrating different passages of historical and prophetic Scripture, it seems best to continue the same plan by separately noticing the more prominent circumstances which these chapters offer, omitting further notice of those to which our attention has on former occasions been directed, and reserving some points for future illustration. The reader is aware that the more conspicuous remains of this renowned city consist of two vast heaps of ruin, the Birs Nemroud and the Mujelibe, which have been fully described in a note on Gen. xi. Of the former a representation has there been given; and the engraving at Isa. xiii. exhibits the latter, as it appeared in the time of Pietro della Valle. We have now great satisfaction in being enabled, through the kindness of Mr. James Baillie Fraser, to furnish an additional representation of the Mujelibe, from a drawing made by him on a recent visit to the desolated site. They will show the present state and appearance of these remarkable masses, with other circumstances characterizing the Babylonian desolations; and may thus be considered to furnish a very interesting practical commentary on the present chapters.

Verse 16. "Cut off the sower from Babylon."—If we understand this of Babylonia or Chaldea, in the large sense, it has long been accomplished. Herodotus declares that, of all the countries he had seen, none was so suitable as Babylonia for the culture of corn; and says that the returns were generally two hundred, and sometimes three hundred fold. But all is now an utter desert, offering only some patches of cultivation near the few settlements which it contains. But perhaps the prophecy has a more definite application to the city of Babylon itself; for it appears from the ancient historians that it was very loosely built, with detached buildings and large open places; and that much of this spare ground was cultivated and ploughed for corn; so that, in case of a siege, the inhabitants were enabled to support themselves by their internal resources: and the common plan among ancient besiegers, of starving a populous city into a surrender, was impracticable with respect to Babylon. We have already shown that now "the sower is cut off from Babylon," and that no cultivation does or can take place upon its site.

29. "The archers."—The conquerors of Babylon are repeatedly described as "archers." The Persians, who are intended, were in ancient times famous for their general and very skilful use of the bow, which was in fact the characterizing arm of that people. Even at present the bow still continues to be a favourite weapon, although in effective use it has been nearly superseded by the gun.

38. "A drought is upon her waters; and they shall be dried up."—This may possibly refer to a circumstance attending the capture of the city by the Persians, which we shall have occasion to notice; but it more probably alludes to the physical condition of the country. The plain in which Babylon stands is exposed to long drought and intense heat in summer, so that the dry soil must have been at all times perfectly barren without artificial irrigation; but with such irrigation the ground is, even at this day, of unexampled fertility, except upon the wide-spread grit and debris of desolated cities. Therefore it was that the land exhibited one of the most extensive and complicated systems of irrigation that the world ever saw. It was overrun with innumerable canals, in all directions—the largest of them navigable, and feeding others, diminishing in importance with their distance from the trunk. These, as well as the parent river, were bordered with innumerable hydraulic machines, by which the water was raised and distributed into the fields and gardens. The same plan is still pursued, to a limited extent, at some spots in the immediate vicinity of the rivers. But it is now literally true of Babylon, that "a drought is upon her waters; and they are dried up." Yet still the lines and ridges of innumerable canals remain, which enable the spectator to trace the general system, and to verify the ancient historians as well as the prophecies of Scripture; the whole being strongly calculated to show the extent to which human skill and industry were once employed in giving to this now desolate region that fertility for which it was in old times celebrated. This explanation seems to us to give much force to the present prediction, since there can be no country the subsistence of which more entirely depended upon a complicated system of irrigation. Wherever water is applied in this region (with the exception already made), the productive powers of the soil and climate cannot be exceeded; but where that is wanting it becomes a naked desert.

CHAPTER LI.

¹ The severe judgment of God against Babylon in revenge of Israel. 59 Jeremiah delivereth the book of this prophecy to Seraiah, to be cast into Euphrates, in token of the perpetual sinking of Babylon.

THUS saith the LORD; Behold, I will raise up against Babylon, and against them that dwell in the midst of them that rise up against me, a destroying wind;

2 And will send unto Babylon fanners, that shall fan her, and shall empty her land: for in the day of trouble they shall be against her round about.

3 Against him that bendeth let the archer bend his bow, and against him that lifteth himself up in his brigandine: and spare ye not her young men; destroy ye utterly all her host.

4 Thus the slain shall fall in the land of the Chaldeans, and they that are thrust through in her streets.

5 For Israel hath not been forsaken, nor Judah of his God, of the LORD of hosts; though their land was filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel.

6 'Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver every man his soul: be not cut off in her iniquity; for this is the time of the LORD's vengeance; he will render unto her a recompence.

7 Babylon hath been a golden cup in the LORD's hand, that made all the earth drunken: the nations have drunken of her wine; therefore the nations are mad.

8 Babylon is suddenly ³fallen and destroyed: howl for her; take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed.

9 We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed: forsake her, and let us go every one into his own country: for her judgment reacheth unto heaven, and is lifted up even to the skies.

10 The LORD hath brought forth our righteousness: come, and let us declare in Zion the work of the LORD our God.

11 Make 'bright the arrows; gather the shields: the LORD hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes: for his device is against Babylon, to destroy it; because it is the vengeance of the LORD, the vengeance of his temple.

12 Set up the standard upon the walls of Babylon, make the watch strong, set up the watchmen, prepare the 'ambushes: for the LORD hath both devised and done that which he spake against the inhabitants of Babylon.

13 O thou that dwellest upon many waters, abundant in treasures, thine end is come, and the measure of thy covetousness.

14 'The LORD of hosts hath sworn 'by himself, saying, Surely I will fill thee with men, as with caterpillers; and they shall 'lift up a shout against thee.

15 'He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heaven by his understanding.

16 When he uttereth his voice, there is a ¹⁰multitude of waters in the heavens; and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth: he maketh lightnings with rain, and bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures.

17 'Every man ¹¹is brutish by his knowledge; every founder is confounded by the graven image: for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them.

18 They are vanity, the work of errors: in the time of their visitation they shall perish.

19 ¹²The portion of Jacob is not like them; for he is the former of all things: and Israel is the rod of his inheritance: the LORD of hosts is his name.

23 I will also break in pieces with thee the shepherd and his flock ; and with thee will I break in pieces the husbandman and his yoke of oxen ; and with thee will I break in pieces captains and rulers.

24 And I will render unto Babylon and to all the inhabitants of Chaldea all their evil that they have done in Zion in your sight, saith the LORD.

25 Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the LORD, which destroyest all the earth : and I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain.

26 And they shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations ; but thou shalt be ¹⁵desolate for ever, saith the LORD.

27 Set ye up a standard in the land, blow the trumpet among the nations, prepare the nations against her, call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni, and Ashchenaz ; appoint a captain against her ; cause the horses to come up as the rough caterpillars.

28 Prepare against her the nations with the kings of the Medes, the captains thereof, and all the rulers thereof, and all the land of his dominion.

29 And the land shall tremble and sorrow : for every purpose of the LORD shall be performed against Babylon, to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant.

30 The mighty men of Babylon have forborn to fight, they have remained in their holds : their might hath failed ; they became as women : they have burned her dwelling places ; her bars are broken.

31 One post shall run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, to shew the king of Babylon that his city is taken at one end, 32 And that the passages are stopped, and the reeds they have burned with fire, and the men of war are affrighted.

33 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel ; The daughter of Babylon is like a threshingfloor, ¹⁶*it is* time to thresh her : yet a little while, and the time of her harvest shall come.

34 Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon hath devoured me, he hath crushed me, he hath made me an empty vessel, he hath swallowed me up like a dragon, he hath filled his belly with my delicates, he hath cast me out.

35 ¹⁷The violence done to me and to my ¹⁸flesh be upon Babylon, shall the ¹⁹inhabitant of Zion say ; and my blood upon the inhabitants of Chaldea, shall Jerusalem say.

36 Therefore thus saith the LORD ; Behold, I will plead thy cause, and take vengeance for thee ; and I will dry up her sea, and make her springs dry.

37 And Babylon shall become heaps, a dwellingplace for dragons, an astonishment, and an hissing, without an inhabitant.

38 They shall roar together like lions : they shall ²⁰yell as lions' whelps.

39 In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the LORD.

40 I will bring them down like lambs to the slaughter, like rams with he goats.

41 How is Sheshach taken ! and how is the praise of the whole earth surprised ! how is Babylon become an astonishment among the nations !

42 The sea is come up upon Babylon : she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof.

43 Her cities are a desolation, a dry land, and a wilderness, a land wherein no man dwelleth, neither doth any son of man pass thereby.

and I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up: and the nations shall not flow together any more unto him: yea, the wall of Babylon shall fall.

45 My people, go ye out of the midst of her, and deliver ye every man his soul from the fierce anger of the LORD.

46 And lest your heart faint, and ye fear for the rumour that shall be heard in the land; a rumour shall both come one year, and after that in another year shall come a rumour, and violence in the land, ruler against ruler.

47 Therefore, behold, the days come, that I will ²¹do judgment upon the graven images of Babylon: and her whole land shall be confounded, and all her slain shall fall in the midst of her.

48 Then the heaven and the earth, and all that is therein, shall sing for Babylon: for the spoilers shall come unto her from the north, saith the LORD.

49 ¹²As Babylon hath caused the slain of Israel to fall, so at Babylon shall fall the slain of all ²³the earth.

50 Ye that have escaped the sword, go away, stand not still: remember the LORD afar off, and let Jerusalem come into your mind.

51 We are confounded, because we have heard reproach: shame hath covered our faces: for strangers are come into the sanctuaries of the LORD's house.

52 Wherefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will do judgment upon her graven images: and through all her land the wounded shall groan.

53 Though Babylon should mount up to heaven, and though she should fortify the height of her strength, yet from me shall spoilers come unto her, saith the LORD.

54 A sound of a cry cometh from Babylon, and great destruction from the land of the Chaldeans:

55 Because the LORD hath spoiled Babylon, and destroyed out of her the great voice; when her waves do roar like great waters, a noise of their voice is uttered:

56 Because the spoiler is come upon her, even upon Babylon, and her mighty men are taken, every one of their bows is broken: for the LORD God of recompences shall surely requite.

57 And I will make drunk her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men: and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the king, whose name is the LORD of hosts.

58 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; ²⁴The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly ²⁵broken, and her high gates shall be burned with fire; and the people shall labour in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary.

60 So Jeremiah wrote in a book all the evil that should come upon Babylon, even all these words that are written against Babylon.

61 And Jeremiah said to Seraiah, When thou comest to Babylon, and shalt see, and shalt read all these words;

62 Then shalt thou say, O LORD, thou hast spoken against this place, to cut it off, that none shall remain in it, neither man nor beast, but that it shall be ²⁸desolate for ever.

63 And it shall be, when thou hast made an end of reading this book, that thou shalt bind a stone to it, and cast it into the midst of Euphrates:

64 And thou shalt say, Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not rise from the evil that I will bring upon her: and they shall be weary. Thus far are the words of Jeremiah.

BABYLON—BIRS NEMROUD, WITH THE EUPHRATES IN THE DISTANCE, OVERFLOWING ITS BANKS.

From a Drawing made on the spot, by J. B. Fraser, Esq.

Verse 13. "Thou that dwellest upon many waters."—The great river Euphrates, the neighbouring lakes and marshes, with the numerous canals of communication and irrigation, give a striking propriety to this allusion to its "many waters."

25. "Make thee a burnt mountain."—See the conclusion of the statement concerning the Mujelibe, under Gen. xi.

30. "The mighty men of Babylon have forborn to fight," &c. —When the king of Babylon heard of the approach of the army of Cyrus, he marched out to meet and give him battle; but was defeated with little difficulty, and retreated to Babylon. From that time the Babylonians "forbore to fight," and remained in their strong city during the two years in which it was besieged by the Persians. Relying upon the high and thick walls, and having stored up provisions for many years, besides what might be produced within the walls of the town itself, they seem to have waited the result with little apprehension.

"They have burned her dwelling places."—In the short speech which Cyrus is reported by Xenophon to have addressed to his troops before they entered the bed of the Euphrates, he alludes to their principal danger, which appears to have been regarded with apprehension, of being assaulted by missiles from the house-tops as they passed through the streets. He said that, if the inhabitants retired to the house-tops, the best course would be to assail their doors by setting them on fire. He observed that the porches were very combustible, being made of palm-wood and coated with bitumen; and, as the army was supplied with torches and tow in abundance, it would be easy to set the houses in flames; so that the inhabitants must either run from them or be consumed in them. This plan was probably carried into effect, and to this the prophet may seem to refer.

31. "One post shall run to meet another...to shew the king of Babylon that his city is taken at one end."—"From end to end," is Blayney's translation. The prediction clearly means that couriers should run from different parts, and so fall in with one another, all of them bringing intelligence to the king, that the city was taken at the point from which they started. This is to be explained by a reference to the vast extent of the city, which Herodotus (who was a great traveller) says exceeded that of any city he had ever seen (Clio 180). In another place (191) he states that he was informed by some of the inhabitants, that, owing to the great extent of Babylon, those who dwelt in the outskirts were taken prisoners by the Persians, before the people in the centre of the town knew that the place was taken.

36. "I will dry up her sea."—The Euphrates must be meant by "the sea," that title being frequently applied in Scripture to large rivers, such as the Nile and Euphrates. We are doubtless to understand this as one of several allusions to the remarkable stratagem by which the city was at last taken by the Persians, after they had vainly wasted two years in the siege. To understand this, however, it should be premised that the Euphrates ran through the middle of the city, and that not only was the city walled all round towards the open country, but also along each side of the river. Cyrus was informed that a great annual festival was to be kept in the town, when the inhabitants were accustomed to spend the night in all manner of debauchery and drunkenness (see verses 39, 57, and ch. i. 24), and he thought this a favourable opportunity to surprise them. He therefore made a distribution of the whole army, placing one part above the city where the river entered, and another below, where it came forth; giving directions that, as soon as the river should appear fordable, they were to enter its bed at both ends. Towards evening he opened the great dam of the trenches communicating with the lake, by which means the stream was diverted from its proper course, and the channel soon became fordable. The Persians then entered by the bed of the river, the water being little more than knee-deep, and took the city by surprise. This is the account of Herodotus (Clio 191): that of Xenophon (Cyrop. vii. 5) is somewhat different, but agrees in every essential point. Herodotus adds that, if the Babylonians had been before apprised of the intention of Cyrus, or if they had learned at the moment what he was doing, they might not only have saved themselves, but might have made the stratagem of the Persians recoil upon their own heads; for, had they closed the gates towards the river, and ascended the walls which ran along it, the besiegers would have been taken as in a net.

But the Persians came upon them quite unexpectedly, and from a quarter whence no danger was apprehended. All this was as the prophets had foretold long before Cyrus was born. They had said that the city should be taken unexpectedly, on a night of festivity; that the inhabitants should be then drunk or asleep (verse 57); that the gates should not be shut (Isa. xlv. 1); and that at the same time the stream of the great river should be exhausted. How convincing is all this! Many other most exact agreements might be pointed out; but, as our limits do not permit this, we may recommend it to our readers, as a most interesting study, to compare the details of the prophecies concerning the taking of Babylon with the narratives of the event which are given by Xenophon and Herodotus.

39. "Drunken," &c.—We have just explained that there was a festival on the night when the city was taken. The speech of Cyrus shows that his anticipations corresponded with the prophetic predictions. He reminded his soldiers that the people against whom they now acted were the same whom they had formerly defeated, when they were sober, armed, and in battle array; and how much more easy a victory might now be expected, at a time when many of them were asleep, many drunk, and all in confusion.

42. "The sea is come," &c.—We are again to understand the Euphrates. This is true now, as we have shown in the note on Isa. xiv. 23. In connection with this subject, our present representation of the Birs Nemroud will be considered of peculiar interest, as it shows how the river comes up on Babylon, and overflows it so extensively as to form large "pools of water" even around that distant heap of ruin.

CHAPTER LII.

1 Zedekiah rebelleth. 4 Jerusalem is besieged and taken. 8 Zedekiah's sons killed, and his own eyes put out. 12 Nebuzar-adan burneth and spoileth the city. 24 Hecarrieth away the captives. 32 Evil-merodach advance the Jhoiachin.

ZEDEKIAH was 'one and twenty years old when 'he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hamutal the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

2 And he did that which was evil in the eyes of the Lord, according to all that Jehoiakim had done.

3 For through the anger of the Lord it came to pass in Jerusalem and Judah, till he had cast them out from his presence, that Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon.

4 ¶ And it came to pass in the 'ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came, he and all his army, against Jerusalem, and pitched against it, and built forts against it round about.

5 So the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah.

6 And in the fourth month, in the ninth day of the month, the famine was sore in the city, so that there was no bread for the people of the land.

7 Then the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled, and went forth out of the city by night by the way of the gate between the two walls, which was by the king's garden; (now the Chaldeans were by the city round about :) and they went by the way of the plain.

8 ¶ But the army of the Chaldeans pursued after the king, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho; and all his army was scattered from him.

9 Then they took the king, and carried him up unto the king of Babylon to Riblah in the land of Hamath; where he gave judgment upon him.

10 And the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes: he slew also all the princes of Judah in Riblah.

11 Then he 'put out the eyes of Zedekiah; and the king of Babylon bound him in 'chains, and carried him to Babylon, and put him in 'prison till the day of his death.

12 ¶ Now in the fifth month, in the tenth day of the month, which was the nineteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzar-adan, 'captain of the guard, which 'served the king of Babylon, into Jerusalem,

13 And burned the house of the Lord, and the king's house; and all the houses of Jerusalem, and all the houses of the great men, burned he with fire:

14 And all the army of the Chaldeans, that were with the captain of the guard, brake down all the walls of Jerusalem round about.

15 Then Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive certain of the poor of the people, and the residue of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to the king of Babylon, and the rest of the multitude.

16 But Nebuzar-adan the captain of the 17 Also the ¹⁰pillars of brass that were in the house of the LORD, and the bases, and the brasen sea that was in the house of the LORD, the Chaldeans brake, and carried all the brass of them to Babylon.

18 The caldrons also, and the ¹¹shovels, and the snuffers, and the ¹²bowls, and the spoons, and all the vessels of brass wherewith they ministered, took they away.

19 And the basons, and the ¹³firepans, and the bowls, and the caldrons, and the candlesticks, and the spoons, and the cups; that which was of gold in gold, and that which was of silver in silver, took the captain of the guard away.

20 The two pillars, one sea, and twelve brasen bulls that were under the bases, which king Solomon had made in the house of the LORD: ¹⁴the brass of all these vessels was without weight.

21 And concerning the ¹⁵pillars, the height of one pillar was eighteen cubits; and a ¹⁶fillet of twelve cubits did compass it; and the thickness thereof was four fingers: it was hollow.

22 And a chapter of brass was upon it; and the height of one chapter was five cubits, with network and pomegranates upon the chapters round about, all of brass. The second pillar also and the pomegranates were like unto these.

23 And there were ninety and six pomegranates on a side; and all the pomegranates upon the network were an hundred round about.

24 ¶ And the captain of the guard took Seraiah the chief priest, and Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the ¹⁷door;

25 He took also out of the city an eunuch, which had the charge of the men of war; and seven men of them that ¹⁸were near the king's person, which were found in the city; and the ¹⁹principal scribe of the host, who mustered the people of the land; and three-score men of the people of the land, that were found in the midst of the city.

26 So Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard took them, and brought them to the king of Babylon to Riblah.

27 And the king of Babylon smote them, and put them to death in Riblah in the land of Hamath. Thus Judah was carried away captive out of his own land.

28 This is the people whom Nebuchadrezzar carried away captive: in the seventh year three thousand Jews and three and twenty:

29 In the eighteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar he carried away captive from Jerusalem eight hundred thirty and two ²⁰persons:

30 In the three and twentieth year of Nebuchadrezzar Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive of the Jews seven hundred forty and five persons: all the persons were four thousand and six hundred.

31 ¶ And it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, in the five and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach king of Babylon in the first year of his reign lifted up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah, and brought him forth out of prison,

32 And spake ²¹kindly unto him, and set his throne above the throne of the kings that were with him in Babylon, 33 And changed his prison garments: and he did continually eat bread before him all the days of his life.

34 And for his diet, there was a continual diet given him of the king of Babylon, ²²every day a portion until the day of his death, all the days of his life.

THE LAMENTATIONS OF JEREMIAH.

CHAPTER I.

¹² She complaineth of her grief, 18 and confesseth God's judgment to be righteous.

OW doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people! how is she become as a widow!
 she that was great among the nations, and princess among the provinces, how is she become tributary!

² She ¹weepeth sore in the ²night, and her tears are on her cheeks: among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her: all her friends have dealt treacherously with her, they are become her enemies.

³ Judah is gone into captivity because of affliction, and ³because of great servitude: she dwelleth among the heathen, she findeth no rest: all her persecutors overtook her between the straits.

⁴ The ways of Zion do mourn, because none come to the solemn feasts: all her gates are desolate: her priests sigh, her virgins are afflicted, and she is in bitterness.

⁵ Her adversaries ⁴are the chief, her enemies prosper; for the LORD hath afflicted her for the multitude of her transgressions: her ⁵children are gone into captivity before the enemy.

⁶ And from the daughter of Zion all her beauty is departed: her princes are become like harts that find no pasture, and they are gone without strength before the pursuer.

⁷ Jerusalem remembered in the days of her affliction and of her miseries all her ⁶pleasant things that she had in the days of old, when her people fell into the hand of the enemy, and none did help her: the adversaries saw her, and did mock at her sabbaths.

⁸ Jerusalem hath grievously sinned;
 therefore she ⁷is removed: all that honoured her despise her, because they have seen her nakedness: yea, she sigheth, and turneth backward.

⁹ Her filthiness is in her skirts; she remembereth not her last end; therefore she came down wonderfully: she had no comforter. O LORD, behold my affliction: for the enemy hath magnified himself.

¹⁰ The adversary hath spread out his hand upon all her ⁸pleasant things: for she hath seen that the heathen entered into her sanctuary, whom thou didst command that ⁹they should not enter into thy congregation.

¹¹ All her people sigh, they seek bread;
 they have given their pleasant things for meat ¹⁰to relieve the soul: see, O LORD, and consider; for I am become vile.

13 From above hath he sent fire into my bones, and it prevaileth against them: he hath spread a net for my feet, he hath turned me back: he hath made me desolate and faint all the day.

14 The yoke of my transgressions is bound by his hand: they are wreathed, and come up upon my neck: he hath made my strength to fall, the LORD hath delivered me into their hands, from whom I am not able to rise up.

15 The LORD hath trodden under foot all my mighty men in the midst of me: he hath called an assembly against me to crush my young men: the LORD hath trodden ¹³the virgin, the daughter of Judah, as in a winepress.

16 For these things I weep; ¹⁴mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water, because the comforter that should ¹⁵relieve my soul is far from me: my children are desolate, because the enemy prevailed.

17 Zion spreadeth forth her hands, and there is none to comfort her: the LORD hath commanded concerning Jacob, that his adversaries should be round about him: Jerusalem is as a menstruous woman among them.

18 ¶ The LORD is ¹⁶righteous; for I have rebelled against his ¹⁷commandment: hear, I pray you, all people, and behold my sorrow: my virgins and my young men are gone into captivity.

19 I called for my lovers, but they deceived me: my priests and mine elders gave up the ghost in the city, while they sought their meat to relieve their souls.

20 Behold, O LORD; for I am in distress: my ¹⁸bowels are troubled; mine heart is turned within me; for I have grievously rebelled: abroad the sword bereaveth, at home there is as death.

21 They have heard that I sigh: there is none to comfort me: all mine enemies have heard of my trouble; they are glad that thou hast done it: thou wilt bring the day that thou hast ¹⁹called, and they shall be like unto me.

22 Let all their wickedness come before thee; and do unto them, as thou hast done unto me for all my transgressions: for my sighs are many, and my heart is faint.

LAMENTATIONS.—An opinion has been entertained that these Lamentations are the same which are mentioned, in 2 Chron. xxxv. 25, as having been composed upon occasion of the death of king Josiah. But these compositions appear most clearly not to refer to the death of any one person, but to lament the ruin of a city and a people. The more general and probable impression on the subject is that which is conveyed in the title which we find prefixed to the Lamentations in the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Arabic versions:—"And it came to pass, after that Israel had been carried away captive, and Jerusalem laid waste, that Jeremiah sat weeping, and lamented with this lamentation over Jerusalem, and said," &c. That this is also the impression retained in the East appears from the fact that, at Jerusalem, Jews, Christians, and Moslems concur in regarding with veneration a certain grotto, at the foot of a large quarry, a little to the north of the present town, beyond the Damascus gate, with which they associate the name of Jeremiah, believing that it was some time the residence of the prophet. The grot is large, and on one side of it, about eight feet from the ground, is a rocky shelf, which is alleged to have been his bed. Near this is also pointed out the spot where he is supposed to have composed his Lamentations over the holy city. At present it is in the exclusive possession of the Turks, and is usually shut up.

Bishop Lowth speaks largely of the Lamentations in his 22nd Lecture. They are evidently written in metre, and consist of a number of plaintive effusions which, in his opinion, are composed upon the plan of the funeral dirges—all upon the same subject, and uttered without connection, as they arose in the mind in a long course of separate stanzas; and which were afterwards put together and formed into a collection or correspondent whole. The nature and design of the poem neither required nor admitted a methodical and artificial arrangement and sequence of ideas. "In the character of a mourner," says Lowth, "the prophet celebrates in plaintive strains the obsequies of his ruined country. Whatever presented itself to his mind in the midst of desolation and misery, whatever struck him as particularly wretched and calamitous, whatever the instant sentiment of sorrow dictated, he pours forth in a kind of spontaneous effusion. He frequently pauses, and, as it were, ruminates upon the same object; frequently varies and illustrates the same thought with different imagery, and a different choice of language; so that the whole assumes the appearance rather of an accumulation of corresponding sentiments than an accurate and connected series of different ideas, arranged in the form of a regular treatise." He afterwards adds:—"In my opinion there is not extant any poem which displays such a happy and splendid selection of imagery in so concentrated a state." Blayney says, "We cannot too much admire the full and the graceful flow of that pathetic eloquence in which the prophet pours forth the effusions of a patriotic heart, and piously weeps over the ruins of his venerable country." Dr. South also, in his own peculiar manner, says of this book:—"One would think that every letter was wrote with a tear, every word the sound of a breaking heart; that the author was a man compacted of sorrows, and disciplined to grief from his infancy; one who never breathed but in sighs, nor spoke but in a groan."

The Lamentations are very properly divided into five chapters. The original marks this as the proper division; the four first chapters being acrostical, so that the termination of the alphabet completes the poem, while the distinction of initials naturally divides each into twenty-two distinct periods, according to the number of letters contained in the Hebrew alphabet. In the two first chapters each period begins with its proper initial, and consists of a triplet (as appears even in our translation), except in the seventh period of the first chapter, and the nineteenth of the second, which have each a super-numerary line. In the third chapter every period contains three verses, which have all the same initial letter, so that the acrostical series comprehends sixty-six verses. The fourth chapter resembles the three former in metre, but the periods are only couplets. The fifth chapter, which is not acrostical, also consists of couplets, but the measure is considerably shorter.

11. "They have given their pleasant things for meat."—A striking illustration of this is given by Mr. Roberts:—"The people of the East retain their little valuables, such as jewels and rich robes, to the last extremity. To part with that which has perhaps been a kind of heir-loom in the family is like parting with life. Have they sold the last wreck of their other property; are they on the verge of death?—the emaciated members of the family are called together, and some one undertakes the heart-rending task of proposing such a bracelet, or armlet, or ear-ring, or pendant of the forehead, to be sold. For a moment all are silent, till the mother or daughters burst into tears, and then the contending feelings of hunger, and love for their 'pleasant things,' alternately prevail. In general the conclusion is to pledge, and not to sell, their much-loved ornaments; but such is the rapacity of those who have money, and such the extreme penury of those who have once fallen, that they seldom regain them." ('Oriental Illustrations,' p. 483.) Under such circumstances, and particularly in times of public calamity, it often happens that jewels, and other property of the most valuable description, are disposed of for the merest trifle, that a little bread may be obtained "to relieve the soul."

JEREMIAH AMONG THE RUINS OF JERUSALEM.—BENDEMANN.

CHAPTER II.

1 Jeremiah lamenteth the misery of Jerusalem. 20 He complaineth thereof to God.

How hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger, and cast down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger!

2 The Lord hath swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob, and hath not pitied:

he hath thrown down in his wrath the strong holds of the daughter of Judah; he hath 'brought them down to the ground: he hath polluted the kingdom and the princes thereof.

3 He hath cut off in his fierce anger all the horn of Israel: he hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemy, and he burned against Jacob like a flaming fire, which devoureth round about.

4 He hath bent his bow like an enemy: he stood with his right hand as an adversary, and slew ⁶all that were pleasant to the eye in the tabernacle of the daughter of Zion: he poured out his fury like fire.

5 The Lord was as an enemy: he hath swallowed up Israel, he hath swallowed up all her palaces: he hath destroyed his strong holds, and hath increased in the daughter of Judah mourning and lamentation.

6 And he hath violently ⁷taken away his ⁸tabernacle, as if it were of a garden: he hath destroyed his places of the assembly: the Lord hath caused the solemn feasts and sabbaths to be forgotten in Zion, and hath despised in the indignation of his anger the king and the priest.

7 The Lord hath cast off his altar, he hath abhorred his sanctuary, he hath ⁹given up into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces; they have made a noise in the house of the Lord, as in the day of a solemn feast.

8 The Lord hath purposed to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion: he hath stretched out a line, he hath not withdrawn his hand from ¹⁰destroying: therefore he made the rampart and the wall to lament; they languished together.

9 Her gates are sunk into the ground; he hath destroyed and broken her bars: her king and her princes are among the Gentiles: the law is no more; her ¹¹prophets also find no vision from the Lord.

10 The elders of the daughter of Zion sit upon the ground, and keep silence: they have cast up dust upon their heads; they have girded themselves with sackcloth: the virgins of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground.

11 Mine eyes do fail with tears, my bowels are troubled, my liver is poured upon the earth, for the destruction of the daughter of my people; because the children and the sucklings ¹²swoon in the streets of the city.

12 They say to their mothers, Where is corn and wine? when they swooned as the wounded in the streets of the city, when their soul was poured out into their mothers' bosom.

13 What thing shall I take to witness for thee? what thing shall I liken to thee, O daughter of Jerusalem? what shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? for thy breach is great like the sea: who can heal thee?

14 Thy ¹³prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee: and they have not discovered thine iniquity, to turn away thy captivity; but have seen for thee false burdens and causes of banishment.

15 All that pass ¹⁴by clap their hands at thee; they hiss and wag their head at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, Is this the city that men call ¹⁵The perfection of beauty, The joy of the whole earth?

16 All thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee: they hiss and gnash the teeth: they say, We have swallowed her up: certainly this is the day that we looked for; we have found, we have seen it.

17 The Lord hath done that which he had ¹⁶devised; he hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old: he hath thrown down, and hath not pitied: and he hath caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee, he hath set up the horn of thine adversaries.

18 Their heart cried unto the Lord, O wall of the daughter of Zion, ¹⁷let tears run down like a river day and night: give thyself no rest; let not the apple of thine eye cease.

19 Arise, cry out in the night: in the beginning of the watches pour out thine heart like water before the face of the Lord: lift up thy hands toward him for the life of thy young children, that faint for hunger in the top of every street.

20 ¶ Behold, O Lord, and consider to whom thou hast done this. Shall the women eat their fruit, and children ¹⁸of a span long? shall the priest and the prophet be slain in the sanctuary of the Lord?

21 The young and the old lie on the ground in the streets: my virgins and my Verse 11. "My liver is poured upon the earth."—Among the Hebrews the liver not less than the heart was regarded as the seat of the passions and affections. This shows the sense in which such passages as the present are to be understood. Here, as with regard to many other of the bodily organs as mentioned in Scripture, there is not only a literal sense capable of univocal interpretation, but a metaphorical import that cannot be communicated by any literal version, unless when the same metaphorical signification happens to exist also in the language into which the translation is made. Dr. J. M. Good touches on this subject in the preface to his translation of the Song of Songs, and is disposed to contend that such allusions, in order to convey their real signification, should be rendered not literally but equivalently; and we so far agree with him as to think that the force and delicacy of many passages must be necessarily impaired, and their true meaning lost, when the name merely is given, in a language where that name does not involve the same metaphorical idea. Pursuing the subject, Dr. Good says: "In Psalm xvi. 9, 'My heart is glad and my glory rejoiceth,' as it occurs in our common version, is literally, 'My heart is glad, and my liver rejoiceth.' Yet who could behold such an interpretation without a smile? or who, if he were to behold it, would admit that the original was fairly translated?" Among ourselves, in like manner, the spleen is supposed to be the region of disappointment and melancholy. But were a Jew to be told, in his own tongue, that the inimitable Cowper had long laboured under the spleen, he would be ignorant of the meaning of his interpreter; and, when at last informed of it, might justly tell him that, although he had literally rendered the words, he had by no means conveyed the idea.

18. "The apple of thine eye."—There is a distinct word to denote the pupil, or "apple," of the eye; and that is not here used. The original is, literally, "the daughter of thine eye," which it is certainly better to understand of a tear than of the pupil of the eye. It is quite in unison with Oriental usage to call the "daughter of the eye" the tear which issues from it; and so taken in this place, the expression not only seems more poetical, but conveys a clearer meaning, equivalent to "Let not thy tears cease."

CHAPTER III.

1 The faithful bewail their calamities. 22 By the mercies of God they nourish their hope. 37 They acknowledge God's justice. 55 They pray for deliverance, 64 and vengeance on their enemies.

I AM the man that hath seen affliction by the rod of his wrath.

2 He hath led me, and brought me into darkness, but not into light.

3 Surely against me is he turned; he turneth his hand against me all the day.

4 My flesh and my skin hath he made old; he hath broken my bones.

5 He hath builded against me, and compassed me with gall and travel.

6 He hath set me in dark places, as they that be dead of old.

7 He hath hedged me about, that I cannot get out: he hath made my chain heavy.

pulled me in pieces: he hath made me desolate.

12 He hath bent his bow, and set me as a mark for the arrow.

16 He hath also broken my teeth with gravel stones, he hath 'covered me with ashes.

17 And thou hast removed my soul far off from peace: I forgot 'prosperity.

18 And I said, My strength and my hope is perished from the Lord:

19 'Remembering mine affliction and my misery, the wormwood and the gall.

20 My soul hath them still in remembrance, and is 'humbled in me.

25 The LORD is good unto them that wait for him, to the soul that seeketh him.

26 It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the LORD.

27 It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth.

28 He sitteth alone and keepeth silence, because he hath borne it upon him.

29 He putteth his mouth in the dust; if so be there may be hope.

30 He giveth his cheek to him that smiteth him: he is filled full with reproach.

31 For the LORD will not cast off for ever:

32 But though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies.

33 For he doth not afflict ¹⁰willingly nor grieve the children of men.

34 To crush under his feet all the prisoners of the earth,

35 To turn aside the right of a man before the face of ¹¹the most High, 36 To subvert a man in his cause, the LORD ¹²approveth not.

37 ¶ Who is he ¹³*that* saith, and it cometh to pass, when the LORD commandeth it not?

38 Out of the mouth of the most High proceedeth not ¹⁴evil and good?

39 Wherefore doth a living man ¹⁵complain, a man for the punishment of his sins?

40 Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the LORD.

41 Let us lift up our heart with our hands unto God in the heavens.

42 We have transgressed and have rebelled: thou hast not pardoned.

43 Thou hast covered with anger, and persecuted us: thou hast slain, thou hast not pitied.

44 Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud, that our prayer should not pass through.

45 Thou hast made us as the ¹⁶'offscouring and refuse in the midst of the people.

46 All our enemies have opened their mouths against us.

47 ¹⁷Fear and a snare is come upon us, desolation and destruction.

52 Mine enemies chased me sore, like a bird, without cause.

53 They have cut off my life in the dungeon, and cast a stone upon me.

54 Waters flowed over mine head; then I said, I am cut off.

55 ¶ I called upon thy name, O LORD, out of the low dungeon.

56 Thou hast heard my voice: hide not thine ear at my breathing, at my cry.

57 Thou drewest near in the day that I called upon thee: thou saidst, Fear not.

58 O LORD, thou hast pleaded the causes of my soul; thou hast redeemed my life.

59 O LORD, thou hast seen my wrong: judge thou my cause.

60 Thou hast seen all their vengeance and all their imaginations against me.

61 Thou hast heard their reproach, O LORD, and all their imaginations against me;

62 The lips of those that rose up against me, and their device against me all the day.

63 Behold their sitting down, and their rising up; I am their musick.

64 ¶ Render unto them a recompence, O LORD, according to the work of their hands.

Verse 10. "A bear lying in wait."—As the bear does not, like the lion and other animals of the feline race, spring forth from its secret covert upon its prey, the fact of its lying in wait has not been so much noticed. It is true however that the bear remains in ambush in some suitable place, as under a thicket, or on the skirts of a wood, and there waits patiently till an unwary passenger, or some other victim, not only appears, but seems to be off his guard, and then steals in silence upon him. If the intended human victim discovers the bear's approach, the animal will seldom persevere in its design, but withdraws sulkily to its covert, frequently looking back as if expecting to be pursued. That the bear comes suddenly upon the unwary, without its approach having been noticed, has been frequently mentioned, but it has not so often been stated, which, however, is obvious, that it had previously been on the watch for the favourable moment. Compare Lewis and Clarke's 'Travels,' vol. i. p. 362, with various anecdotes in the 'Third voyage of William Barents,' in Harris's Collection, p. 552, &c.

13. "The arrows of his quiver."—Literally, "the sons of his quiver." It is thus frequent in Hebrew, and indeed in most Oriental languages, to call the subject, adjunct, accident, effect, &c., the son or daughter of the object, place, circumstance, or feeling. (See chap. ii. 18.) Perhaps, in the present instance, there is, as Aben Ezra conjectures, a more definite comparison of the quiver to a pregnant woman—the arrows being then properly the "sons" of its womb. This comparison is very natural, and is not unknown in classical poetry. Thus Horace (lib. i. Ode 22):

"The man, who knows not guilty fear,
Nor wants the bow, nor pointed spear;
Nor needs, while innocent of heart,
The quiver, teeming with the poison'd dart."—FRANCIS.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Zion bewaileth her pitiful estate. 13 She confesseth her sins. 21 Edom is threatened. 22 Zion is comforted.

How is the gold become dim! how is the most fine gold changed! the stones of the sanctuary are poured out in the top of every street.

2 The precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, how are they esteemed as earthen pitchers, the work of the hands of the potter!

3 Even the 'sea monsters draw out the breast, they give suck to their young ones: the daughter of my people is become cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness.

4 The tongue of the sucking child cleaveth to the roof of his mouth for thirst: the young children ask bread, and no man breaketh it unto them.

5 They that did feed delicately are desolate in the streets: they that were brought up in scarlet embrace dunghills.

6 For the 'punishment of the iniquity of the daughter of my people is greater than the punishment of the sin of Sodom, that was 'overthrown as in a moment, and no hands stayed on her.

7 Her Nazarites were purer than snow, they were whiter than milk, they were more ruddy in body than rubies, their polishing was of sapphire:

8 Their visage is 'blacker than a coal; they are not known in the streets: their skin cleaveth to their bones; it is withered, it is become like a stick.

9 They that be slain with the sword are better than they that be slain with hunger for these 'pine away, stricken through for want of the fruits of the field.

10 The hands of the pitiful women have sodden their own children: they were their 'meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people.

11 The LORD hath accomplished his fury; he hath poured out his fierce anger, and hath kindled a fire in Zion, and it hath devoured the foundations thereof.

12 The kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of the world, would not have believed that the adversary and the enemy should have entered into the gates of Jerusalem.

22 ¶ ¹²The punishment of thine iniquity is accomplished, O daughter of Zion; he will no more carry thee away into captivity: he will visit thine iniquity, O daughter of Edom; he will ¹³discover thy sins.

Verse 3. "Even the sea monsters...give suck to their young ones."—The word here rendered "sea-monsters" (תנין tannin) is the same that is translated "great whales" in Gen. i. We there observed that it seemed to include all the mamiferous animals of the deep; and the truth of that observation is established by the present text. All the creatures of this class suckle their young ones, and exhibit the greatest attachment to them, encountering any danger in their defence. The cerebral hemispheres in cetaceous animals are large and well developed; and, whether from this or other causes, they far exceed the other inhabitants of the sea in sagacity, as well as in maternal tenderness.

7. "Her Nazarites," &c.—The word נזיר nazar means to separate, set apart, distinguish, from the common. Hence it gave a title to the Nazarites, who were separated and distinguished by a religious vow; but it also applies to nobles, chiefs and others, distinguished from the mass of the people by their dignity or rank. The context commonly distinguishes the sense in which the term is to be understood. In the present instance it does not so very clearly; but it seems more properly to refer to the nobles and persons delicately brought up, than to the religious Nazarites.

"Their polishing was of sapphire."—This is not very easily understood, nor is it clear how the sense of "to polish" should be assigned to the word גזר gazar. Its usual meaning is to divide or intersect; and as the veins thus intersect the body, and moreover present a blue appearance, which is considered beautiful, and may be compared in colour to the sapphire, Braunius, and, after him, Blayney, Boothroyd, and others, think the veins must be intended, translating—"Their veining was that of sapphires."

20. "The breath of our nostrils," &c.—This doubtless refers to the king Zedekiah, whose flight was intercepted by the Chaldeans.

"Under his shadow we shall live among the heathen."—The word rendered "heathen" (גוים goim) means nations and peoples in the widest sense; and also in the more restricted, of foreign nations, as distinguished from the Jews. It is probably here to be understood of "nations" indefinitely; and would then suggest that the Hebrews, in expecting to live under their king's shadow among the nations, had hoped, to the last, that their distinct political existence, as one among the nations, under their own king, would be preserved, as it had been on former occasions, whatever else might happen to them.

A pitiful complaint of Zion in prayer unto God.

¹⁰ Or, For wilt thou utterly reject us ?

⁹ Jer. 31. 18.

Verse 4. "We have drunken our water for money."—In the East all water, except at a private well or fountain, is free ; but it is so far bought, that householders, who have no supply of water close at hand, are necessarily obliged to pay persons for the labour of bringing it, as often as wanted, to their houses, unless this is done by members or servants of the family. Such payment can scarcely be supposed the present subject of complaint, since it is voluntary, and may be avoided by those who choose rather to labour than pay the price of labour. If the prophet speaks of Jerusalem, or places in its neighbourhood, we know that there were no streams or rivers which furnished a constant and full supply of water, the most considerable being dry for a great part of the year. It appears that the supply was, in summer at least, derived from wells, fountains, and pools, which were free to the people, as appears from many passages of Scripture. The most obvious explanation of this passage is therefore to suppose that the Chaldeans took possession of those sources of supply, and required payment from the persons who applied for water. This may have been a measure either of gain or precaution, or both : but it does appear, from the frequent mention of suffering from thirst, here and in the prophecy, that a drought at this time prevailed : and this fact will perhaps, better than anything else, supply the required explanation ; for the Chaldeans, or any other ruling power, would naturally under such circumstances take possession of the existing public supply of water, and sell it to the mass of the people, to ensure a diminished consumption.

"Our wood is sold unto us."—This is less remarkable than that, as the complaint implies, their wood should not previously have been sold to them. It appears, however, that the woods in Israel were anciently common to the inhabitants ; so that those persons who lived in towns or villages, the vicinity of which did not supply them with sufficient wood for fuel or other purposes, might obtain what they required from the common forests and wooded places. The Jews allege a regulation of Joshua to this effect. Thus they had nothing to pay for wood, unless they saw fit to employ others to perform for them the service of cutting the wood and bringing it to their homes. It may therefore be conjectured that the Chaldeans, coming from a country where wood was scarce and costly, did not understand this state of things, but appropriated the forests as royal property, and obliged the remaining inhabitants to pay for the wood they required. Some conjecture that this verse, if not the whole chapter, applies to the condition of the Jews in captivity at Babylon. If so, they most certainly had to pay, for the wood they needed there, a price which must have seemed to them enormous. The condition of that country with respect to wood seems, from the ancient historians, to have been then much the same as at present. The fuel chiefly consists of brushwood, with which the rivers are in some parts very thickly lined. It is cut down by men who make it their employment, and who convey it to the towns for sale in clumsy boats laden half-mast high. On account of the distance from which it is brought, and the time and labour employed in cutting it down and transporting it, such a price is required from the consumer as renders it, although very sparingly used, one of the most costly articles of domestic consumption in the country. It is sold by weight, and the sellers are notorious for fraudulence in their dealings.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET
EZEKIEL.

VISION OF EZEKIEL.—RAFFAELLE.

CHAPTER I.

1 The time of Ezekiel's prophecy at Chebar. 4 His vision of four cherubims, 15 of the four wheels, 26 and of the glory of God.

OW it came to pass in the thirtieth year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I was among the 'captives by the river of Chebar, that the heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God.

2 In the fifth day of the month, which was the fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity,

3 The word of the LORD came expressly unto 'Ezekiel the priest, the son of Buzi, in the land of the Chaldeans by the river Chebar; and the hand of the LORD was there upon him.

4 ¶ And I looked, and, behold, a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire 'infoling itself, and a brightness was about it, and out of the midst thereof as the colour of amber, out of the midst of the fire.

5 Also out of the midst thereof came the likeness of four living creatures. And this was their appearance; they had the likeness of a man.

6 And every one had four faces, and every one had four wings.

7 And their feet were 'straight feet; the sole of their feet was like the sole of a calf's foot: and they sparkled like the colour of burnished brass.

8 And they had the hands of a man under their wings on their four sides; and they four had their faces and their wings.

9 Their wings were joined one to another; they turned not when they went; they went every one straight forward.

10 As for the likeness of their faces, they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion, on the right side: and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; they four also had the face of an eagle.

11 Thus were their faces: and their wings were 'stretched upward; two wings of every one were joined one to another, and two covered their bodies.

12 And they went every one straight forward: whither the spirit was to go, they went; and they turned not when they went.

13 As for the likeness of the living creatures, their appearance was like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps: it went up and down among the living creatures; and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning.

14 And the living creatures ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning.

15 ¶ Now as I beheld the living creatures, behold one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures, with his four faces.

16 The appearance of the wheels and their work was like unto the colour of a beryl: and they four had one likeness: and their appearance and their work was as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel.

17 When they went, they went upon their four sides: and they turned not when they went.

18 As for their rings, they were so high that they were dreadful; and their 'rings were full of eyes round about them four.

19 And when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them: and when the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up.

20 Whithersoever the spirit was to go, they went, thither was their spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit 'of the living creature was in the wheels.

21 When those went, these went; and when those stood, these stood; and when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit 'of the living creature was in the wheels.

22 And the likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creature was as the colour of the terrible crystal, stretched forth over their heads above.

23 And under the firmament were their wings straight, the one toward the other: every one had two, which covered on this side, and every one had two, which covered on that side, their bodies.

24 And when they went, I heard the noise of their wings, like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, as the noise of an host: when they stood, they let down their wings.

25 And there was a voice from the firmament that was over their heads, when they stood, and had let down their wings.

26 ¶ And above the firmament that was over their heads was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone: and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it.

27 And I saw as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it, from the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downward, I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about.

28 As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the LORD. And when I saw it, I fell upon my face, and I heard a voice of one that spake.

EZEKIEL.—Ezekiel, like Jeremiah, was of the sacerdotal race, and was one of the captives carried away, at the same time with Jehoiachin king of Judah, to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar. He was stationed with other captives at some place on the river Chebar; and it does not appear that he exercised the prophetic office until he had been removed from his own country. "The thirtieth year," which he gives as the date of his first prophecy, is supposed by some to be the year of his own age; it was certainly, as explained in the second verse, equivalent to the fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity, which leads Calmet to conjecture that it was rather the thirtieth year from the renewal of the covenant with God in the time of Josiah, as this was just thirty years prior to the time stated in the second and explanatory date. From a comparison of this date with that in chap. xxix. 17, it will appear that Ezekiel continued to prophesy nearly twenty-two years—the first being in the fifth year of his own captivity, and the last in the twenty-seventh. Thus Ezekiel, in Mesopotamia, did, during a very important period, prophesy contemporaneously with Jeremiah in Judea; but he began his prophecies later and continued them longer than Jeremiah. As the predictions of the prophets, so distant from each other, referred in a very considerable degree to the same events, and were mutually corroborative, it is not unlikely, as Jerome conjectures, that the prophecies of Jeremiah were sent to Mesopotamia, and those of Ezekiel to Judea, to give encouragement and confidence to the captive Jews, on the one hand, and, on the other, to reprove and leave without excuse those that remained in their own country. Some traditionary reports concerning Ezekiel himself, and the place of his interment, we reserve for the final note to his book of prophecy.

The principal object of Ezekiel's prophecies, according to their immediate and literal sense, is to rebuke the children of Israel for their idolatries and unbelief, and to announce—as Jeremiah had done before and was then doing—the terrible judgments which the Lord would exercise upon them by the hands of Nebuchadnezzar. This is the general subject of the twenty-four first chapters. The eight chapters following embrace prophecies against the Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, Philistines, Tyrians, Sidonians, Egyptians, and Babylonians. These prophecies respecting foreign nations, besides the conclusive evidence which they furnish to all ages of the Divine authority by which the prophets spoke, were, by the speedy accomplishment of many of them, well calculated to assure the Hebrews of the certain fulfilment of those other prophecies in which they were themselves more immediately interested. The remainder of the book, again, relates principally to the Hebrews, who, after proper warnings and reproofs, are assured of their final and happy re-establishment in their own country.

The visions of Ezekiel, particularly those with which the book opens and terminates, have always been regarded, both by Jews and Christians, as very abstruse and of difficult interpretation,—so much so, indeed, that the former anciently forbade either of them to be read by persons under thirty years of age.

The style and manner of this prophet is marked by a peculiar character of its own, which is easily distinguishable even in a translation. It is thus discriminated by Bishop Lowth:—"Ezekiel is much inferior to Jeremiah in elegance; in sublimity he is not even excelled by Isaiah: but his sublimity is of a totally different kind. He is deep, vehement, tragical; the only sensation he affects to excite is the terrible: his sentiments are elevated, fervid, full of fire, indignant; his imagery is crowded, magnificent, terrific, sometimes almost to disgust; his language is pompous, solemn, austere, rough, and at times unpolished: he employs frequent repetitions, not for the sake of grace or elegance, but from the vehemence of passion and indignation. Whatever subject he treats of, that he sedulously pursues, from that he rarely departs, but cleaves as it were to it, whence the connection is in general evident and well preserved. In many respects he is perhaps excelled by the other prophets; but in that species of composition to which he seems by nature adapted, the forcible, the impetuous, the great and solemn, not one of the sacred writers is superior to him. His diction is sufficiently perspicuous, all his obscurity consists in the nature of his subject." This estimate has been objected to by some writers, and particularly by Michaelis, who can by no means allow that Ezekiel is equal in sublimity to Isaiah: but to such discussions about style and manner, it may be well to append the remark of Archbishop Newcome, that the holy prophet is not to be considered merely as a poet, or as a framer of those august and astonishing visions, and of those admirable poetical representations which he committed to writing; but as an instrument in the hands of God, who vouchsafed to reveal himself through a long succession of ages, not only in divers parts constituting a magnificent and uniform whole, but also in divers manners, as by a voice, by dreams, by inspiration, and by plain or enigmatical vision.

Verse 1. "The river of Chebar."—This is doubtless the river that still bears the name of Khabour—being the same Oriental name, differently represented in European orthography. It is the only stream of note that enters the Euphrates, which it does from Mesopotamia. It is formed by the junction of a number of little brooks, which have their source at Ras-ul-lin (once a considerable town but now in ruins), thirteen fursungs south-west from Merdin. It takes a southerly direction till it receives the waters of another river, equal to itself, when it bends westward to the Euphrates, which it enters at Kerkesia, the ancient Circessium, which was the extreme boundary of the Roman empire in the time of Julian. This is about 280 miles to the north-west of Babylon. The river which the Khabour receives is the Hermes, or Nahr-el-Houali, to which the Greeks gave the name of Mygdonius. It rises in Mount Masius, near Merdin; and after washing the ruined ramparts of Nisibis, encircles the base of the mountain Sinjar, and finally disembogues itself into the Khabour. From this it appears clear that the band of captives to which Ezekiel belonged was settled in the higher Mesopotamia, at a very considerable distance from Babylon. See Kinneir's 'Geographical Memoir of the Persian Empire,' p. 244.

16. "Beryl."—See the note on Exod. xxviii. 20.

22. "The terrible crystal."—The הַקֶּרַח הַנּוֹרָא ha-kerach ha-nora seems to have been a term of pre-eminence for the diamond, for it is indeed an "admirable crystal" for its brilliancy and hardness. The diamond is found in alluvial beds in India and Brazil, and also in the diamond bed of clay in the former country underneath beds of red or bluish clay. The diamond reflects all the light falling on the posterior surface at an angle of incidence greater than $24^{\circ} 13'$, whence we have the cause of its superior brilliancy. When it is said that the firmament was as the colour of the terrible crystal, we must refer colour to the original, which is כֶּעֶן, "as the eye" or splendour of the diamond, which is sometimes yellow, red, or green, but colouring is not the remarkable feature of this gem, and seems therefore not to have been referred to here. It is remarkable that in the Levant the diamond is called "the eye of purity" (ain yaccout), whence Dr. Shaw also concludes that the diamond is here to be understood.

me: they and their fathers have transgressed against me, even unto this very day.

4 For they are 'impudent children and stiffhearted. I do send thee unto them; and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God.

5 And they, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, (for they are a rebellious house,) yet shall know that there hath been a prophet among them.

6 ¶ And thou, son of man, be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though 'briers and thorns be with thee, and thou dost dwell among scorpions: be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house.

7 And thou shalt speak my words unto them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear: for they are 'most rebellious.

8 But thou, son of man, hear what I say unto thee; Be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house: open thy mouth, and 'eat that I give thee.

9 ¶ And when I looked, behold, an hand was sent unto me; and, lo, a roll of a book was therein;

10 And he spread it before me: and it was written within and without: and there was written therein lamentations, and mourning, and woe.

⁴ Heb. rebellion.

⁵ Revel. 10. 2.

Verse 10. "Written within and without."—This was not a common practice, the rolls which formed the ancient books being usually written on one side only. But when the matter to be written exceeded the calculation under which the skin was prepared or provided, the writing was sometimes continued to the required extent on the other side, being the outer side of the roll. Therefore that the roll was written on "within and without," implies that it was redundantly full of "lamentation, mourning, and woe."

CHAPTER III.

1 Ezekiel eateth the roll. 4 God encourageth him. 15 God sheweth him the rule of prophecy. 22 God shutteth and openeth the prophet's mouth.

MOREOVER he said unto me, Son of man, eat that thou findest; eat this roll, and go speak unto the house of Israel.

2 So I opened my mouth, and he caused me to eat that roll.

3 And he said unto me, Son of man, cause thy belly to eat, and fill thy bowels with this roll that I give thee. Then did I 'eat it; and it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness.

4 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, go, get thee unto the house of Israel, and speak with my words unto them.

5 For thou art not sent to a people 'of a strange speech and of an hard language, but to the house of Israel;

6 Not to many people 'of a strange speech and of an hard language, whose words thou canst not understand. 'Surely, had I sent thee to them, they would have hearkened unto thee.

7 But the house of Israel will not hearken unto thee; for they will not hearken unto me: for all the house of Israel are 'impudent and hardhearted.

8 Behold, I have made thy face strong against their faces, and thy forehead strong against their foreheads.

9 As an adamant harder than flint have I made thy forehead: 'fear them not, neither be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house.

10 Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, all my words that I shall speak unto thee receive in thine heart, and hear with thine ears.

11 And go, get thee to them of the captivity, unto the children of thy people, and speak unto them, and tell them, Thus saith the Lord God; whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear.

12 Then the spirit took me up, and I heard behind me a voice of a great rushing, saying, Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place.

13 I heard also the noise of the wings of the living creatures that ⁷ touched one another, and the noise of the wheels over against them, and a noise of a great rushing.

14 So the spirit lifted me up, and took me away, and I went ⁸ in bitterness, in the ⁹ heat of my spirit; but the hand of the LORD was strong upon me.

15 ¶ Then I came to them of the captivity at Tel-abib, that dwelt by the river of Chebar, and I sat where they sat, and remained there astonished among them seven days.

16 And it came to pass at the end of seven days, that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, 17 ¹⁰ Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me.

18 When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

19 Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul.

20 Again, When a ¹¹ righteous man doth turn from his ¹² righteousness, and commit iniquity, and I lay a stumblingblock before him, he shall die: because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

21 Nevertheless if thou warn the righteous man, that the righteous sin not, and he doth not sin, he shall surely live, because he is warned; also thou hast delivered thy soul.

22 ¶ And the hand of the LORD was there upon me; and he said unto me, Arise, go forth into the plain, and I will there talk with thee.

23 Then I arose, and went forth into the plain: and, behold, the glory of the LORD stood there, as the glory which I ¹³ saw by the river of Chebar: and I fell on my face.

24 Then the spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet, and spake with me, and said unto me, Go, shut thyself within thine house.

25 But thou, O son of man, behold, they shall put bands upon thee, and shall bind thee with them, and thou shalt not go out among them:

26 And I will make thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth, that thou shalt be dumb, and shalt not be to them ¹⁴ a reprover: for they are a rebellious house.

27 But when I speak with thee, I will open thy mouth, and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; He that heareth, let him hear; and he that forbear-eth, let him forbear: for they are a rebellious house.

Verse 15. "Tel-abib."—Names of places beginning with "Tel" are still common in Assyria, Mesopotamia, and Syria. The word, in its present usage, indicates an artificial height or loosely, any height; and when used as a prefix, intimates that the place is situated on some elevation. Tel-abib means "heaps of ears of corn," and we are not sure whether it is the name of a town, so called from the fertility of its neighbourhood, or of the fertile district itself. Whether a town or a district it was certainly near to or traversed by the Chebar.

Junius thinks it was the name of the district extending from Mount Masius to the Euphrates; but perhaps a more distinct recognition may be obtained in the Thallaba, which the Theodosian table places in Mesopotamia, on the banks of the Chaborus (Khabour or Chebar), and the situation of which is marked in the map of D'Anville as in about the centre part of the district which Junius supposes the present name to describe.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Under the type of a siege is shewed the time from the defection of Jeroboam to the captivity. 9 By the provision of the siege, is shewed the hardness of the famine.

Thou also, son of man, take thee a tile, and lay it before thee, and pourtray upon it the city, even Jerusalem:

2 And lay siege against it, and build a fort against it, and cast a mount against it;

set the camp also against it, and set 'battering rams against it round about.

3 Moreover take thou unto thee 'an iron pan, and set it for a wall of iron between thee and the city: and set thy face against it, and it shall be besieged, and thou shalt lay siege against it. This shall be a sign to the house of Israel.

4 Lie thou also upon thy left side, and lay the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it: according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon it thou shalt bear their iniquity.

5 For I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity, according to the number of the days, three hundred and ninety days: 'so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel.

6 And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days: I have appointed thee 'each day for a year.

7 Therefore thou shalt set thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem, and thine arm shall be uncovered, and thou shalt prophesy against it.

8 And, behold, I will lay bands upon thee, and thou shalt not turn thee 'from one side to another, till thou hast ended the days of thy siege.

9 ¶ Take thou also unto thee wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentiles, and millet, and 'fitches, and put them in one vessel, and make thee bread thereof, ac- cording to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon thy side, three hundred and ninety days shalt thou eat thereof.

10 And thy meat which thou shalt eat shall be by weight, twenty shekels a day: from time to time shalt thou eat it.

11 Thou shalt drink also water by measure, the sixth part of an hin: from time to time shalt thou drink.

12 And thou shalt eat it as barley cakes, and thou shalt bake it with dung that cometh out of man, in their sight.

13 And the LORD said, Even thus shall the children of Israel eat their defiled bread among the Gentiles, whither I will drive them.

14 Then said I, Ah Lord God! behold, my soul hath not been polluted: for from my youth up even till now have I not eaten of that which dieth of itself, or is torn in pieces; neither came there abominable flesh into my mouth.

15 Then he said unto me, Lo, I have given thee cow's dung for man's dung, and thou shalt prepare thy bread therewith.

16 Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, behold, I will break the 'staff of bread in Jerusalem: and they shall eat bread by weight, and with care; and they shall drink water by measure, and with astonishment:

17 That they may want bread and water, and be astonished one with another, and consume away for their iniquity.

⁷ Lev. 26. 26. Chap. 5. 16, and 14. 13.

Verse 1. "Take thee a tile... and pourtray upon it the city."—For "tile," we may read "brick," and for "pourtray," "engrave." This is a striking reference to the Chaldean usage of writing and portraying by indented figures upon broad and thin bricks. Great numbers of such bricks, charged with inscriptions in the arrow-headed character, and with figures of animals and other objects, are found among the ruins of Babylon and other ancient sites in Chaldea. The inscriptions of those which have been brought to light have not been deciphered, except that Professor Grotefend has found the name of Darius upon one of them. The bricks applied to this use are of fine clay, much hardened in the fire. They are of different sizes, but very commonly a foot square by three inches in thickness. Heeren thinks it probable that the usual process in forming the inscriptions was to impress the characters upon the brick by means of forms which they applied before the mass was submitted to the fire. If so, they touched upon the invention of printing as nearly as the materials would allow. Some of these bricks, besides the lines of inscribed writing, bear the impression of seals, offering the figures of animals and other objects, with other lines of inscription attached to them; whence it has been conjectured that these bricks contain public or private documents, with the names and seals of witnesses, and that the ruined edifices from which they are obtained were the repositories of such archives. It is however not necessary to generalise this opinion, and to suppose that all the inscribed bricks were such documents, some of which may possibly contain the astronomical observations for a long series of years, which the ancient Chaldeans are said to have recorded on bricks. But it is difficult to explain, under any hypothesis, how it happens that such bricks should have been employed in the construction of walls, with their inscribed faces downward—their edges, which formed the front of the wall, only appearing—and connected by a strong cement, so as to preclude the possibility of their being read till after the destruction of the buildings of which they were composed. However, enough has been stated to illustrate, from the common practice of the country, the act of the prophet when he took a tile to "porray" Jerusalem thereon. How this was done, we do not know; but probably by inscribing its name or symbol upon the brick, or possibly by making a representation of some conspicuous part or building of the city.

3. "An iron pan."—Or "an iron plate," probably such as was employed for baking cakes of bread. See Lev. ii. 5.

9. "Beans."—פול pul, whence the Latin puls, and our English pulse, as a general appellation for the seeds of leguminous plants. The kinds most common in Syria are the white horse-bean and the kidney-bean. The paintings of Egypt show that the bean was cultivated in that country in very ancient times. It is stated by Herodotus that beans were held in abhorrence by the Egyptian priesthood, and that they were never eaten by the people. But, as they were nevertheless cultivated, the intimation of Diodorus, that the abstinence from beans was not general, is more than probable, though it is not likely that they formed so considerable an article in the diet of the poorer people as they do at present in the same country. It will be observed that the prophet is directed to make his bread with beans, dhourra, lentiles, and other coarse, inferior matters, mixed with wheat, to show that wheat should become too costly to be used alone, and to express the shifts to which the besieged people should be driven. Thus the Romans were in the habit of mixing the meal of the bean with that of corn-grasses, in times of scarcity, and the practice has been imitated in modern times. The present passage shows the antiquity of this resource.

"Millet."—The millet is the Panicum miliaceum of Linnæus, and is a kind of grass, which has a most extensive cultivation for the sake of its nutritive seeds. Panicum is from panis, "bread," and shows in what estimation it was held by the ancients. There is also another species which is called Panicum Italicum and Setaria. It is an annual, in the warmer parts of Europe, and produces a seed that is smaller than the foregoing species. The original word, in the present instance, is דוחן dochan, and may very possibly have been the dhourra, or holcus sorghum, of which we have given a representation under Gen. xli., and which is now so extensively cultivated and used in Palestine, Syria, Arabia, Egypt, Nubia, &c.; being in some of these countries the principal food of the lower classes. It is sometimes called the "greater millet," though belonging to a different genus. All these grasses have large spreading clusters of flowers at the top of the stem, and present a curious appearance to the eye that has been accustomed to regard wheat as the staff of life. In Egypt three harvests of the dhourra are obtained in one year; in other places two or one only, according to circumstances. The stalks grow very high. In the countries south of Egypt, the same species that is there cultivated often rises to the height of from sixteen to twenty feet. In those countries wheat is scarcely known; and dhourra forms the principal product of the ground, and the chief food of man and beast. Besides being made into bread, much of it is also consumed in the form of pap, seasoned with salt; and sometimes the grains are boiled and eaten like rice. The poorer inhabitants of Arabia have little other food than the dhourra-bread, which, from its coarseness, is seldom much liked by Europeans, till necessity accustoms them to it. The usual way of preparing it in Arabia is by kneading it with camel's milk, oil, butter, or grease. Niebuhr says he could not eat of it at first, and that he should have preferred to it the worst bread he had ever eaten in Europe. But the people of the country, being used to it, prefer it to barley, which they think too light.

Notwithstanding its present extensive use, it might be and has been questioned whether the dhourra was so early cultivated in the south-west of Asia as the time of Ezekiel. On this subject we have however no doubt. The dhourra does still also bear the Scriptural name of dochen or dokhen. Wilkinson, in his enumeration of the products of ancient Egypt, as evinced by paintings and seeds preserved in the ancient tombs, mentions dhourra, wheat, beans, lentiles—all of which are mentioned in this verse. In another place, after having spoken of wheat, he says, "Another species of grain, with a single round head, was plucked up by the roots, but formed, in the Thebaid at least, a much smaller proportion of the cultivated produce of the country. Its height far exceeds the wheat, near which they represent it growing; and its general appearance cannot better answer to any of the order of gramina than to the sorghum, or Egyptian dhourra." He adds, in a note, that of the fifteen species of holcus, five at least appear to be natives of Egypt: and that there seem also to be two unnoticed varieties. In another place Mr. Wilkinson expresses his full conviction that the Holcus sorghum was grown in Egypt.

15. "Cow's dung for man's dung."—The command, in the first instance, to use dung, implies that the siege should be of such duration that the supply of firewood in the town would be exhausted, and, being precluded from having more from the country, the inhabitants most necessarily resort to dung to prepare such miserable food as remained to them. In such cases, and in all cases where wood is scarce, animal dung, and especially cow's dung, is much employed in the East. But the command to use human dung intimates, further, that not only was the wood exhausted, but that no animal dung could be obtained, probably because all the animals in the town had been killed for food, or had perished for want of nourishment. Thus, as cow-dung is a common resource in the East, the command to use that at first would not have conveyed that intimation of distress which is involved in the other direction.

There is sufficient intimation that the Hebrews sometimes employed animal dung for fuel; but this could not generally have been the case in a country so tolerably well wooded as Palestine appears to have been. But in some regions of Western Asia, where wood is scarce, it forms the common fuel; and, as the supply of this is often inadequate to the occasions of the people, great anxiety is exhibited in collecting a sufficient quantity, and in regulating the consumption. In winter we have seen it used in the best rooms of some of the most respectable houses in towns of northern Persia; and while travelling through the same country, and some parts of Media and Armenia, when we formed our camp near the villages, all the children who were old enough would come out with baskets and wait long (and patiently to receive all the animal dung that occurred, to secure which there was often much rushing, contention, and violence among the numerous claimants for its possession. Cow-dung is considered much preferable to any other; but all animal dung is considered valuable. When collected it is made into cakes, which are stuck against the sunny side of the houses, giving them a curious and rather unsightly appearance. When it is quite dry and falls off, it is stored away in heaps for future use. It is much used for baking, being considered preferable to any other fuel for that purpose, as it is by the villagers in Devonshire. In the East, they either heat with it the portable oven, or iron plate, or else lay their cakes upon the fire of dung. A very common resource, in the want of a plate or oven, is to form the dough into balls, which are placed either among live coals or into a fire of camel's dung, and covered over till penetrated by the heat. The ashes are then removed and the bread eaten hot, with much enjoyment by the natives; but it sometimes contracts a flavour and appearance which is not pleasant to Europeans. It seems very probable that it was such cakes or balls, baked in immediate contact with the fire, which the prophet intended to provide, and which made him the more abhor the idea of employing human dung for the purpose.

CHAPTER V.

¹ Under the type of hair, 5 is shewed the judgment of Jerusalem for their rebellion, 12 by famine, sword, and dispersion.

AND thou, son of man, take thee a sharp knife, take thee a barber's razor, and cause it to pass upon thine head and upon thy beard: then take thee balances to weigh, and divide the hair.

2 Thou shalt burn with fire a third part in the midst of the city, when the days of the siege are fulfilled: and thou shalt take a third part, and smite about it with a knife: and a third part thou shalt scatter in the wind; and I will draw out a sword after them.

3 Thou shalt also take thereof a few in number, and bind them in thy 'skirts.

4 Then take of them again, and cast them into the midst of the fire, and burn them in the fire; for thereof shall a fire come forth into all the house of Israel.

5 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; This is Jerusalem: I have set it in the midst of the nations and countries that are round about her.

6 And she hath changed my judgments into wickedness more than the nations, and my statutes more than the countries that are round about her: for they have refused my judgments and my statutes, they have not walked in them.

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye multiplied more than the nations that are round about you, and have not walked in my statutes, neither have kept my judgments, neither have done according to the judgments of the nations that are round about you;

8 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I, even I, am against thee, and will execute judgments in the midst of thee in the sight of the nations.

9 And I will do in thee that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like, because of all thine abominations.

10 Therefore the fathers ²shall eat the sons in the midst of thee, and the sons shall eat their fathers; and I will execute judgments in thee, and the whole remnant of thee will I scatter into all the winds.

11 Wherefore, as I live, saith the Lord God; Surely, because thou hast defiled my sanctuary with all thy detestable things, and with all thine abominations, therefore will I also diminish thee; ³neither shall mine eye spare, neither will I have any pity.

12 ¶ A third part of thee shall die with the pestilence, and with famine shall they be consumed in the midst of thee: and a third part shall fall by the sword round about thee: and I will scatter a third part into all the winds, and I will draw out a sword after them.

13 Thus shall mine anger be accomplished, and I will cause my fury to rest upon them, and I will be comforted: and they shall know that I the LORD have spoken it in my zeal, when I have accomplished my fury in them.

14 Moreover I will make thee waste, and a reproach among the nations that are round about thee, in the sight of all that pass by.

15 So it shall be a 'reproach and a taunt, an instruction and an astonishment unto the nations that are round about thee, when I shall execute judgments in thee in anger and in fury and in furious rebukes. I the LORD have spoken it.

16 When I shall send upon them the evil arrows of famine, which shall be for their destruction, and which I will send to destroy you: and I will increase the famine upon you, and will break your 'staff of bread:

17 So will I send upon you famine and ⁴evil beasts, and they shall bereave thee; and pestilence and blood shall pass through thee; and I will bring the sword upon thee. I the LORD have spoken it.

EGYPTIAN KNIVES.

Verse 1. "A sharp knife . . . a barber's razor."—The word rendered "a sharp knife" is a general one denoting a sword, a knife, and other cutting instruments. Newcome has, "a sharp tool," Boothroyd, "a sharp instrument;" and some of the ancient versions understand a sword to be intended, and that the second clause does not define it to be a barber's razor, but describes it as sharper than a barber's razor. The supposition that a sword is denoted does certainly give force to the passage with reference to the final object of the symbolical action. We have, however, as a general illustration, introduced representations of the three forms of cutting instruments, other than swords (for which see Num. xxxi.), which most frequently occur in Egyptian paintings and sculptures.

The word rendered "razor" (רָזַח taar) is of more limited application to a sharp knife or a razor for shaving. As the Jews allowed their beards to grow, and did not habitually shave their heads like the modern Orientals, there could have been little occasion among them for the use of the razor. Perhaps the allusion in Isa. vii. 20, to "a razor that is hired," suggests that the suitable implements were so uncommon as to be hired from the persons who possessed them, on those occasions of mourning when it was usual to shave the head; or, as possibly, that there were professional barbers, little as their services were generally required—the employment of the hired barber, being perhaps involved in the hiring of the razor. The operation of shaving the head was probably performed much in the same manner as is now usual in the East, and a representation of which has been given under Jer. xvi. 6. The facility with which this operation is performed by the Oriental barbers, and the soothing sensation which is experienced by the patient, have been described by most travellers whose experience enabled them to do so. The operator rubs the head gently and comfortably with his hand, moistened with water. This he does a considerable time; and then applies the razor, shaving from the top of the head downward. The instrument is generally rude, and not remarkably sharp, as compared with our own; but in consequence of the previous handling of the head, the hair is removed with such extreme ease that the process is scarcely felt, or felt only as an agreeable sensation, by the person subject to it, and who is not roused by it from the gentle slumber into which he may have been soothed by the preceding part of the operation.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The judgment of Israel for their idolatry. 8 A remnant shall be blessed. 11 The faithful are exhorted to lament their calamities.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face toward the 'mountains of Israel, and prophesy against them,

3 And say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God to the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys; Behold, I, even I, will bring a sword upon you, and I will destroy your high places.

4 And your altars shall be desolate, and your 'images shall be broken: and I will cast down your slain men before your idols.

5 And I will 'lay the dead carcasses of the children of Israel before their idols; and I will scatter your bones round about your altars.

6 In all your dwellingplaces the cities shall be laid waste, and the high places shall be desolate; that your altars may be laid waste and made desolate, and your idols may be broken and cease, and your images may be cut down, and your works may be abolished.

7 And the slain shall fall in the midst of you, and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

8 ¶ Yet will I leave a remnant, that ye may have some that shall escape the sword among the nations, when ye shall be scattered through the countries.

9 And they that escape of you shall remember me among the nations whither they shall be carried captives, because I am broken with their whorish heart, which hath departed from me, and with their eyes, which go a whoring after their idols: and they shall lothe themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations.

10 And they shall know that I am the LORD, and that I have not said in vain that I would do this evil unto them.

11 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; Smite 'with thine hand, and stamp with thy foot, and say, Alas for all the evil abominations of the house of Israel! for they shall fall by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence.

12 He that is far off shall die of the pestilence; and he that is near shall fall by the sword; and he that remaineth and is besieged shall die by the famine: thus will I accomplish my fury upon them.

13 Then shall ye know that I am the LORD, when their slain men shall be among their idols round about their altars, upon every high hill, in all the tops of the mountains, and under every green tree, and under every thick oak, the place where they did offer sweet savour to all their idols.

14 So will I stretch out my hand upon them, and make the land desolate, yea, ^smore desolate than the wilderness toward Diblath, in all their habitations: and they shall know that I am the LORD.

Verse 11. "Smite with thine hand, and stamp with thy foot."—This was probably to smite the thigh with the hand, which we know to have been an action of grief (Jer. xxxi. 19; Ezek. xxi. 12). Stamping with the foot is not elsewhere mentioned as an expression of feeling; but it probably denoted indignation. Grief with indignation are the feelings obvious to the occasion, and which the text indeed expresses.

13. "Altars."—The altars of the idolaters are frequently alluded to in Scripture; and the Hebrews are here and elsewhere severely rebuked for erecting similar altars. Doubtless the Divine indignation is to be referred primarily to the idolatrous worship to which these borrowed altars were consecrated; but it is also to be remembered that the altars were in themselves unlawful, the materials, the situation, and even the form of the Lord's own altar having been specially defined, and all others being interdicted. We have therefore thought it might form an instructive illustration to assemble in one engraving representations of the most prevalent forms which the altars bore among different ancient nations—the Egyptians, Persians, Greeks, and Romans—as furnishing probable examples of those which were at different times adopted by the Jews. A Syrian altar has been given under 2 Kings xvi.; and of that we shall perhaps soon have occasion to speak more particularly. Leaving the representations we now supply to furnish their own information, a few particulars on the general subject may tend to illustrate some of the passages of Scripture which describe the use and abuse of altars.

Altars were doubtless the first constructions which men devoted to the service of God. They found it inconvenient to lay their offerings upon the ground, and at first therefore sought natural heaps or elevations for the purpose, and in mountainous countries the tops of the hills were favourite situations. But in plain countries, where such elevations could not easily be found, it was obvious to form them by art. Of this it seems to us singularly illustrative that in Persia, which is a very mountainous country, the natives long continued to burn their sacred fires upon the mountains, without altars; whereas in Egypt, which is a level valley, altars were so anciently in use that their origin is commonly ascribed to that country. The altars were at first simple heaps of unhewn stones or earth. But by degrees, when men became idolaters, and associated the power and presence of the object worshipped with the altar at which it was honoured, this patriarchal simplicity was relinquished. To this however Moses restricted the Israelites (Exod. xx. 24, and the note); and his injunction sufficiently intimates that the change had already taken place. Great diversity then arose in the materials, forms, and ornaments of altars. Every nation seems to have had a great variety of altars, although in each one general form appears to have been more common than any other, even when the details differed greatly. This was not so much owing to difference of taste as to the plurality of idols; some forms, ornaments, and materials being considered more proper to particular gods. Hence, even among the heathen, some altars remained of the most simple character. We are told, for instance, that the altar of Jupiter Olympus was nothing but a heap of ashes. There was scarcely any practicable material of which altars were not made. Some were hewn from single large blocks of stone, others were formed of squared stones, and many of precious marbles; some were of brick, others of metal—brass, and even gold—being probably overlaid with the metal, like the Hebrew brazen altar and the golden altar of incense: others again are said to have been of wood, even in Greece; but these were not common, neither do those appear to have been so which are described as having been built with the horns of animals curiously interlaced. Moses mentions the “horns of the altars,” but in a different sense, meaning only the salient angles of its platform. The shapes of altars were almost infinitely varied, as well as their dimensions; but the leading forms and proportions will be seen by the figures in our engraving. We may observe however that, to the best of our recollection, no native Oriental antiquities exhibit the round form which appears in one of our Grecian specimens, though they were probably brought into use by the Greeks of Asia. Altars were generally about three feet high; but some were lower, and some higher, those dedicated to the celestial gods being the highest. The fire-altars of Persia were not intended for sacrifice, but for the sacred fire to burn thereon: hence, perhaps, as the priests had little service to perform at them, they were often made of a height and size which would not have been convenient in an altar for sacrifice. Those grand altars which our engravings exhibit are cut out of the solid substance of a projecting mass of rock, and stand upon a rocky platform twelve or fourteen feet above the level ground. They grow narrow from the base upward, as do many of the most ancient altars; so that, although the base is a square of four feet six inches, the top is ten inches less. A fire-altar, smaller and somewhat different in form, may be seen under Job xxxi. Some ancient altars were solid, others were hollow; and most of them had at the top an enclosing ledge to confine the fire and offerings: there was also sometimes a hollow sunk in the platform, and a hole pierced in the side, to receive and discharge the libations and the blood of victims. Some of these particulars, of arrangements for convenience, may suggest ideas as to the altars of the tabernacle and temple. There were properly three kinds of altars—that on which the victims were consumed by fire—that on which unbloody offerings only were made—and that on which incense only was consumed. The Hebrews had two of these—the altar of burnt offerings, and the altar of incense; and the table of shewbread in some respects answered to the second. The tabernacle altars were portable, and the pagans also had portable altars, which were sometimes of stone, being formed of squared blocks which might be taken asunder and joined together at pleasure. There were also small private altars in almost every house, for the offerings to the household gods. To this there seems some allusion in Scripture, where certainly we read of altars upon the tops of houses. Altars were not by any means confined to temples: they abounded everywhere in and around idolatrous towns—in the fields—the highways—the streets (particularly the cross streets)—and in every public place. But upon the hill-tops, in groves, and under conspicuous trees, were chosen situations for altars; and how grievously the Hebrews were addicted to the erection of unholy altars in such places, the present verse and a great number of other passages abundantly show. We shall only add that the altars were usually inscribed with the name or symbols of the god to whom they were dedicated. Many of the altars were otherwise plain; but others had their sides ornamented with sculptures of gods and genii, or with festal figures of dancers and players on musical instruments. To prevent such things, probably, the use of iron tools was forbidden to those who constructed the Hebrew altars. When a particular deity was to be honoured, it was also usual to deck the altar with boughs and garlands, formed of such plants as were deemed most acceptable to the idol. (See Acts xiv. 13.)

BURNING INCENSE.

Trajan offering burning incense to Diana.—From the Arch of Constantine.

"Did offer sweet savour to all their idols."—It was a very common act of worship, in all countries, to offer incense to all descriptions of idols. We have already spoken of incense and incense offerings under Exod. xxx.; and as a suitable illustration of the present text, which mentions the offering of incense to idols, we here introduce an engraving representing the emperor Trajan offering incense to Diana. It is copied from a bas-relief upon the arch of Constantine, many of the sculptures on which were taken from that of Trajan. This illustration is the more appropriate as Diana answered to that "queen of heaven" (the moon), for burning incense to whom the apostate Hebrews are severely reproached by the prophets.

CHAPTER VII.

1 The final desolation of Israel. 16 The mournful repentance of them that escape. 20 The enemies defile the sanctuary because of the Israelites' abominations. 23 Under the type of a chain is shewed their miserable captivity.

MOREOVER the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Also, thou son of man, thus saith the Lord God unto the land of Israel; An end, the end is come upon the four corners of the land.

3 Now is the end come upon thee, and I will send mine anger upon thee, and will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompense upon thee all thine abominations.

4 And mine eye shall not spare thee, neither will I have pity: but I will recompense thy ways upon thee, and thine abominations shall be in the midst of thee: and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

5 Thus saith the Lord God; An evil, an only evil, behold, is come.

6 An end is come, the end is come: it watcheth for thee; behold, it is come.

7 The morning is come unto thee, O thou that dwellest in the land: the time is come, the day of trouble is near, and not the sounding again of the mountains.

8 Now will I shortly pour out my fury upon thee, and accomplish mine anger upon thee: and I will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompense thee for all thine abominations.

9 And mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity: I will recompense thee according to thy ways and thine abominations that are in the midst of thee; and ye shall know that I am the LORD that smiteth.

10 Behold the day, behold, it is come: the morning is gone forth; the rod hath blossomed, pride hath budded.

11 Violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness: none of them shall remain, nor of their multitude, nor of any of their's: neither shall there be wailing for them.

12 The time is come, the day draweth near: let not the buyer rejoice, nor the seller mourn: for wrath is upon all the multitude thereof.

13 For the seller shall not return to that which is sold, although they were yet alive: for the vision is touching the whole multitude thereof, which shall not return; neither shall any strengthen himself in the iniquity of his life.

14 They have blown the trumpet, even to make all ready; but none goeth to the battle: for my wrath is upon all the multitude thereof.

15 The sword is without, and the pestilence and the famine within: he that is in the field shall die with the sword; and he that is in the city, famine and pestilence shall devour him.

16 ¶ But they that escape of them shall escape, and shall be on the mountains like doves of the valleys, all of them mourning, every one for his iniquity.

25 ¹⁹Destruction cometh; and they shall seek peace, and there shall be none.

26 Mischief shall come upon mischief, and rumour shall be upon rumour; then shall they seek a vision of the prophet; but the law shall perish from the priest, and counsel from the ancients.

27 The king shall mourn, and the prince shall be clothed with desolation, and the hands of the people of the land shall be troubled: I will do unto them after their way, and ²⁰according to their deserts will I judge them; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

Verse 16. "Shall be on the mountains like doves of the valleys."—Newcome has, "as moaning doves;" following the reading of Houbigant, founded on some Greek copies. This certainly makes a good sense; but so does the common reading, which therefore we see no reason to disturb. Paxton is mistaken in supposing the "doves of the valleys" were necessarily tame ones; for the wild ones not only harbour in valleys, but in the trees around and in Oriental cities, and even in the courts of houses. These would naturally fly to the security and quiet of the mountains, when alarmed by the noise and confusion of war, supplying the very apt comparison which the prophet employs. Two pairs of wild doves harboured and reared their young in the palm-trees which grew in the court of the house in which the writer of this note resided at Bagdad; but they disappeared, as did others which had settled in the town, during the siege of the place by Ali Pasha—being doubtless frightened by "the noise of war." The flight of doves, under similar circumstances, to the clefts and caverns of the mountains, has supplied many allusions also to the heathen poets. Thus Homer describes the flight of Diana from the power of Juno's arm (Il. xxi. 493)—

"So, when the falcon wings her way above,
 To the cleft cavern speeds the gentle dove,
 Not fated yet to die."—POPE.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 Ezekiel, in a vision of God at Jerusalem, 5 is shewed the image of jealousy, 7 the chambers of imagery, 13 the mourners for Tammuz, 15 the worshippers towards the sun. 18 God's wrath for their idolatry.

AND it came to pass in the sixth year, in the sixth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I sat in mine house, and the elders of Judah sat before me, that the hand of the Lord God fell there upon me.

2 Then I beheld, and lo a likeness as the appearance of fire: from the appearance of his loins even downward, fire; and from his loins even upward, as the appearance of brightness, as the colour of amber.

3 And he ¹put forth the form of an hand, and took me by a lock of mine head; and the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem, to the door of the inner gate that looketh toward the north; where was the seat of the image of jealousy, which provoketh to jealousy.

4 And, behold, the glory of the God of Israel was there, according to the vision that I 'saw in the plain.

5 ¶ Then said he unto me, Son of man, lift up thine eyes now the way toward the north. So I lifted up mine eyes the way toward the north, and behold northward at the gate of the altar this image of jealousy in the entry.

6 He said furthermore unto me, Son of man, seest thou what they do? even the great abominations that the house of Israel committeth here, that I should go far off from my sanctuary? but turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations.

7 ¶ And he brought me to the door of the court; and when I looked, behold a hole in the wall.

8 Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall: and when I had digged in the wall, behold a door.

9 And he said unto me, Go in, and behold the wicked abominations that they do here.

10 So I went in and saw; and behold every form of creeping things, and abominable beasts, and all the idols of the house of Israel, pourtrayed upon the wall round about.

11 And there stood before them seventy men of the ancients of the house of Israel, and in the midst of them stood Jaazaniah the son of Shaphan, with every man his censer in his hand; and a thick cloud of incense went up.

12 Then said he unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen what the ancients of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery? for they say, 'The LORD seeth us not; the LORD hath forsaken the earth.

13 ¶ He said also unto me, Turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations that they do.

14 Then he brought me to the door of the gate of the LORD's house which was toward the north; and, behold, there sat women weeping for Tammuz.

15 ¶ Then said he unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations than these.

16 And he brought me into the inner court of the LORD's house, and, behold, at the door of the temple of the LORD, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the LORD, and their faces toward the east; and they worshipped the sun toward the east.

17 ¶ Then he said unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? 'Is it a light thing to the house of Judah that they commit the abominations which they commit here? for they have filled the land with violence, and have returned to provoke me to anger: and, lo, they put the branch to their nose.

18 Therefore will I also deal in fury: mine 'eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity: and though they 'cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them.

Verse 2. "Amber."—The original (חַשְׁמַל chasmal) is rendered ελεκτρον by the Septuagint; and this was certainly the Greek name for amber, but it was also the name of a very precious metal, so called from being of the colour of amber. The question is, which of the two is intended? The general opinion is perhaps in favour of the metal called electrum, and which we may therefore describe as being composed of fine gold alloyed with one fifth of silver. The brilliant lustre of this compound, and its paler colour, was considered to render it more agreeable to the eye, and in other respects preferable to pure gold. We have not, however, been able to meet with one good reason why amber itself should not be here understood. That amber becomes dim when it feels the fire is no reason at all, because the prophet does not say that what he saw was amber, but of the colour of amber; and as the electrum itself derives its name from being of the colour of amber, it seems far more reasonable to suppose that the reference is to the colour of the amber itself than to the colour of that which was distinguished for being like amber. We think there can be no reason to doubt that amber was known to the Hebrews. It is found in different parts of the world, but most abundantly on the shores of the Baltic. Without inquiring whether it might not have been obtained from sources known to the Hebrews, it will be enough to show that it might have been obtained through the Phœnicians, their neighbours; for Herodotus expressly says that amber was brought by that enterprising people from the northern sea, coupling which with the fact that the Baltic was always celebrated for its amber, we may gather that the Phœnician traffic extended even to that remote region. But indeed amber is also found in Spain, with which country the Phœnicians maintained extensive and intimate connections.

This beautiful substance is found floating on the coasts, particularly after tempests, having doubtless been detached from the shore or the submarine repositories; and it is also obtained from mines often far removed from the sea. When obtained from the latter source, the upper surface is composed of sand, under which is found a stratum of loam; below this is a bed of wood, partly entire, and partly changed into a bituminous substance, and under this occurs a stratum of an aluminous mineral in which the amber is found in lumps of various forms and sizes. This solid, hard, semi-pellucid substance is too well known to need description. Numerous and conflicting conjectures have been in all ages formed concerning its origin and formation. It has, under different theories, been ascribed to the animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms. It was, however, most generally regarded as a sort of bitumen. Pliny regarded it as a resinous juice oozing from ancient pines, and subsequently indurated. The researches of Sir David Brewster have led him to about the same conclusion. Instructed by the presence of certain optical phenomena, he considers it as an indurated vegetable juice allied to the gums and resins, by the effect which it has upon polarised light. A practical confirmation of this theory is derived from the presence of insects imbedded in amber, since it is easy to conceive that the luckless creatures, after being caught by the feet in the adhesive substance, were overwhelmed by the resinous distilment, which continued to flow till a beautiful tomb was formed for the dead. Chemical analysis concurs with the laws of optics in assigning a vegetable origin to this remarkable substance. The beautiful science of electricity derives its name from the Greek word for amber, on account of the remarkable property which this substance has of attracting light bodies towards it when excited by friction. This singular property was very anciently observed, as well as that by friction it may be brought to yield light rather copiously in the dark. On account of its beautiful yellow colour, its transparency, and the fine polish it receives, amber was anciently ranked among gems of the first class, and employed in all kinds of ornamental dress. The wax and honey yellow colours were most esteemed, not only on account of their beauty, but because they are more solid than the yellowish white varieties. This therefore may explain the particular colour of amber which the prophet had in view. The high esteem in which it was held may be judged from Pliny's statement, that a small piece of wrought amber was more than equivalent to the price of a strong and robust slave. Its present uses for necklaces, bracelets, snuff-boxes, and other articles of luxury, is well known; and it is still highly valued in the East to form the mouth-pieces of tobacco-pipes, for which it is admirably adapted. The varieties of colour already mentioned are still those to which the preference is given.

3. "The seat of the image of jealousy."—Much ingenious conjecture has been expended in the attempt to discover what false god this "image of jealousy" represented. If any particular idol be intended, it seems impossible to ascertain what it was; but, as a mere conjecture, the opinion that it represented a personification of the sun or moon (Baal or Astarte), seems the most probable. It will be recollected that the Lord is often described as "jealous" at the idolatries of his people, and that idols are mentioned as the objects of his "jealousy;" and therefore "the image of jealousy" is to be understood of some idol by which the Divine jealousy was provoked. This chapter contains a lively representation of the principal forms of idolatry to which the Hebrews were addicted; and Bishop Warburton conjectures, with some reason, that the image of jealousy which introduces the description, is idolatry itself personified and described as an idol.

10. "Behold every form of creeping things, and abominable beasts, and all the idols of the house of Israel, portrayed upon the wall round about."—Here begins the description of the idolatries which the Hebrews borrowed from their neighbours. This first was unquestionably taken from the Egyptians. How exactly it describes the inner chambers and sanctuaries of the Egyptian temples, the tombs, and mystic cells, must be obvious to any one who has read the various descriptions and seen the representations which modern travellers have supplied. The walls are covered with representations, sculptured or painted in vivid colours, of sacred animals, and of gods represented in the human form, and under various circumstances, or in various monstrous combinations of the animal and human forms. These things now appear even more conspicuously in the tombs than in the temples, perhaps because the decorations of the latter have suffered more from the hand of man. And although the illustration to be derived from the existing temples is abundantly adequate to the elucidation of the prophetic description, that to be obtained from tombs is not to be regarded as something different and distinct; for we are to recollect that the Egyptian tombs and temples appear to have been closely connected in their origin, and that those of royal persons often formed in fact cells of the temple, being within its sacred inclosure; and there is every probability and some authority for the conclusion, which is also supported by the character of the decorations which many of them exhibit, that they were not merely tombs, but cells for the celebration of the darker mysteries and idolatries of a most debasing superstition. A pious traveller, the Rev. W. Jowett, who visited Thebes, quotes the present text as furnishing an exact description of the tombs found there, adding, "The Israelites were but copyists, the master sketches being to be seen in all the ancient temples and tombs of Egypt." Having already noticed the idolatries of Egypt (Deut. iv.), and given the figures of many of their monstrous idols; and having also frequently had occasion to allude to the paintings of their tombs and temples, no particular description appears to be now necessary. We may however quote a passage in which Mr. Salt enumerates in verse the forms of creeping things, abominable beasts, and idols, which are portrayed upon their walls,

"And of such mystic fancies, in the range
Of these deep-cavern'd sepulchres are found
The wildest images, unheard of, strange,
Striking, uncouth, odd, picturesque, profound,
That ever puzzled antiquarian's brain;
Prisoners of different nations, bound and slain,
Genii with heads of birds, hawks, ibis, drakes,
Of lions, foxes, cats, fish, frogs, and snakes,
Bulls, rams, and monkeys, hippopotami,
With knife in paw, suspended from the sky;
Gods germinating men, and men turn'd gods,
Seated in honour with gilt crooks, and rods;
Vast scarabæi, globes by hands upheld
From chaos springing, 'mid an endless field
Of forms grotesque—the sphynx, the crocodile,
And other reptiles from the slime of Nile."

'ΕΓΥΠΤ,' in Hall's 'Life of Salt,' vol. ii. p. 416.

Under 1 Kings vi. we gave a representation of the great temple at Edfou, with the view of suggesting some idea as to the possible general disposition of parts in Solomon's temple. Now this temple has precisely such a "chamber of imagery" as the idolatrous Jews had at this time formed in that same temple at Jerusalem. The only means of access now afforded also suggests an analogy to the present text by which we were much struck when reading it in Madden's 'Travels in Turkey, Egypt,' &c. The Arabs have a miserable village upon the roof of this temple; its sanctuary is blocked up with a dunghill; part of the splendid portico is converted into a stable, and the whole interior is so filled up with rubbish that it is deemed impossible to enter. But an old man, to whose family the traveller had afforded medical relief, apprized him of a secret passage, which had never before been made known to any Frank, and through which he undertook to conduct him. "Considerably below the surface of the adjoining buildings, he pointed out to me a chink in an old wall, which he told me I should creep through on my hands and feet; the aperture was not two feet and a half high, and scarcely three feet and a half broad; my companion had the courage to enter first, thrusting in a lamp before him. I followed, and after me the son of the old man crept also; the passage was so narrow, that my mouth and nose were sometimes buried in the dust, and I was nearly suffocated. After proceeding about ten yards in utter darkness, the heat became excessive, breathing was laborious, the perspiration poured down my face, and I would have given the world to have got out; but my companion, whose person I could not distinguish, though his voice was audible, called out to me to crawl a few feet further, and that I should find plenty of space. I joined him at length, and had the inexpressible satisfaction of standing once more on my feet. We found ourselves in a splendid apartment of great magnitude, adorned with sacred paintings and hieroglyphics." The ceiling, which was also painted, was supported by several rows of pillars. How similar to this was the entrance of the prophet, through "a hole in the wall," to a similar chamber of imagery in the Lord's own temple! Our present engraving affords a view of one of the richest and best preserved of those Egyptian "chambers of imagery" which the Hebrew idolaters imitated.

14. "Women weeping for Tammuz."—As the former description referred to forms of idolatry borrowed from the Egyptians, so this applies to another form derived from the Phœnicians; but which was however in many respects similar to the Egyptian worship of Osiris and Isis. We do not find any reason to doubt the correctness of the usual identification of this Tammuz with the being who is better known to most readers by the classical name of Adonis. The story seems to be a mixture of history and allegory, as most of the ancient mythological fables are—arising from the fact that most, perhaps all, of the beings to which they refer were once living persons, deified after death, and whose memories were made the types and symbols of some ordinary or extraordinary phenomena of nature. There are different versions of the story of Adonis: but as the one best known, that of Ovid, bears evident marks of alteration from the original Phœnician fable, to adapt it to classical notions, we shall in the brief explanation which seems necessary, follow the version which is preferred by Selden, Marsham, and Le Clerc, as derived from Phurnutus and other mythologists. It will be seen, that this story essentially identifies him with the Osiris of Egypt, and his wife Astarte with the Egyptian Isis.

Adonis was the son of Ammon, by Myrrha the daughter of Cinyras, a Phœnician king, whose residence was at Byblos. Myrrha, having given offence to her father, was banished, and withdrew, with her husband and infant son, into Arabia. After some stay there, they went into Egypt, where, after his father's death, the young Adonis applied himself to the improvement of the Egyptians, teaching them agriculture and enacting many laws concerning the property of lands. There Astarte became his wife, and the greatest attachment subsisted between them. Adonis, having gone into Syria, was wounded by a wild boar in the forests of Mount Lebanon, where he had been hunting. Astarte thought his wound mortal, and manifested such an intensity of grief that the people believed him to be actually dead, and Egypt and Phœnicia made great lamentation for him. However, he recovered, and their mourning was then exchanged for the most rapturous joy. To perpetuate the memory of this event, an annual festival was instituted, during which the people first mourned bitterly for him as dead, and then abandoned themselves to joy for his restoration to life. The story adds that Adonis was in the end killed in battle, and his wife procured his deification. She continued to govern Egypt peacefully for many years; and after her death, divine honours were paid to her also. Such, in brief, is the story of Adonis, which, thus told, is clearly but a different version of that of Osiris and Isis; and as these were in Egypt the representatives of the sun and moon, so were Adonis and Astarte in Phœnicia. We are also told that while the feast of Osiris was celebrated in Egypt, another like it was observed in Phœnicia for Adonis—first mourning and then rejoicing. Indeed, it is stated that the Egyptians, during their celebration of the festival, used to set upon the Nile an osier basket containing a letter, which by the course of the waves was conveyed to the coast of Phœnicia, near Byblos, where it no sooner arrived than the people gave over their mourning for Adonis, and began to rejoice for his return to life. In fact, the circumstance, which was, both by the Egyptians and Phœnicians, celebrated with mourning succeeded by rejoicing, was, as acknowledged by themselves, the same thing differently typified—being the annual diminution and recovery of the power and glory of the sun; expressed in Egypt by the death and dismemberment of Osiris and the recovery of his scattered remains, and in Phœnicia, by the wound and revival of Adonis. It is no use to expound this story further, or to seek analogies, or to settle the discrepancies of different versions. Our only intention is to explain the object of the mourning which the prophet mentions, and concerning which all the versions agree. Lucian says he was a witness of the celebration of the festival in Phœnicia. There was a great mourning throughout the country—the people shaved their heads, smote themselves, and lamented bitterly, offering sacrifices to Adonis; but suddenly all was changed when the time came to celebrate his revival. We purposely omit to mention the atrocious obscenities which attended this celebration, and which, in the Divine view, rendered it a "greater abomination" than even the deeds of the elders in their "chambers of imagery."

The name of Adonis was given to a river of Lebanon which was supposed to have been stained with his blood when wounded by the wild boar; and which was alleged annually to commemorate the event by renewing its discoloration. In fact, Maundrell describes the stream as of a surprising redness, when seen by him, owing, no doubt, as he explains, to a sort of red earth washed into its bed by the violence of the rains. We cannot forbear from citing, in conclusion, the lines in which Milton alludes to these circumstances:—

— "Thammuz came next behind,
Whose annual wound in Lebanon allured
The Syrian damsels to lament his fate,
In amorous ditties all a summer's day;
While smooth Adonis, from his native rock,
Ran purple to the sea, supposed with blood
Of Thammuz yearly wounded: The love-tale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat,
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw, when by the vision led,
His eye survey'd the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah."—Paradise Lost, B. i., 446.

16. "They worshipped the sun."—To this other leading form of idolatry to which the Hebrews were addicted, we have already given some attention under Job xxxi.

CHAPTER IX.

1 A vision, whereby is shewed the preservation of some, 5 and the destruction of the rest. 8 God cannot be intreated for them.

HE cried also in mine ears with a loud voice, saying, Cause them that have charge over the city to draw near, even every man with his destroying weapon in his hand.

7 And he said unto them, Defile the house, and fill the courts with the slain: go ye forth. And they went forth, and slew in the city.

8 ¶ And it came to pass, while they were slaying them, and I was left, that I fell upon my face, and cried, and said, Ah Lord God! wilt thou destroy all the residue of Israel in thy pouring out of thy fury upon Jerusalem?

PERSIAN INSTRUMENTS OF WRITING.

1. Kalmān, or Case for Pen and Ink; 2, 2, Parts of the same, separate; 3. Spoon for watering the ink; 4. Pen, formed of a Reed; 5. Thin piece of Horn, on which the Pen is mended; 6. Whetstone; 7. Ink-holder, with a compass.

Verse 2. "With a writer's inkhorn by his side."—It is still the custom in the East to carry the inkhorn stuck in the girdle. Scribes carry them constantly in their girdles, and ministers of state wear them in the same manner as symbols of their office. The form of these receptacles is adapted to this custom, as will appear by our present engraving. That in most general use is a flat case, about nine inches long by an inch and a quarter broad and half an inch thick, the hollow of which serves to contain the reed pens and penknife. It is furnished at one end with a lid attached by a hinge. To the flat side of this shaft, towards the end furnished with the lid, is soldered the ink-vessel, which has at the top a lid with a hinge and clasp, fitting very closely. The ink-vessel is usually twice as heavy as the shaft. The latter is passed through the girdle, and is prevented from slipping through by the projecting ink-vessel. The whole is usually of polished metal, brass, copper, or silver. The case for pens and ink is worn in the same manner by the Persians, but it is very different in its form and appearance. It is a long case, eight or nine inches long, by about one and a half broad, and rather less in depth, rounded at each end. It is made of paper, stiff as board, and the whole exterior is japanned and covered with richly coloured drawings. This case contains another, which fits it exactly, and may be considered as a long drawer; it is of course uncovered at top, and slips into the outer case at one end, so that it can be easily drawn out, wholly or partially, to give access to the contents. These are shown in our engraving, and furnish an interesting exhibition of the utensils required the drawer is pulled out. It is of brass or silver, the upper surface being sometimes ornamented with mother-of-pearl and other materials; and is sometimes furnished with a small magnetic needle (as in our specimen), under a glass, to enable the proprietor to find the direction of Mecca when he prays. Then there is a little spoon, from which water is dropped into the inkstand, for the purpose of diluting the ink when become too thick or dry. The case also usually contains four or five pens of reed, whence the whole is called a "pencase," rather than an "inkstand." As these pens are too thick-pointed to be nibbed on the nail, after our fashion with quill pens, a thin piece of horn is provided, on which the pen is laid for the purpose. These are the more essential articles, but often a small whetstone is added, and also a pair of scissors for clipping paper. The former we have given, but not the latter. Of these two sorts of "inkhorns," so to call them, the first is best adapted to be worn in the girdle, but the Persian is certainly more light and elegant, and at least equally convenient with reference to its proper use; but neither of them is at all suited for such thin inks as we employ. It may be difficult to say which of them the "inkhorns" of the Hebrews most resembled; but from its being worn in the girdle it was doubtless something of the same kind.

4. "Set a mark upon the foreheads of the men."—See the note on Lev. xix. 28. There is no difficulty in perceiving that the object of this was to distinguish those who had the mark in the forehead, as the Lord's servants and the objects of his peculiar care. Compare Rev. vii. 3, and other texts indicated in the margin. The ancient customs in this matter, and which still subsist in different parts of the world, exceedingly well illustrate all the passages of Scripture which refer to the subject. Bond servants, or slaves, were not only marked upon the forehead as a punishment for offences or for attempts to escape from servitude, but to distinguish them as the property of their masters, to deter them from running away, or to facilitate their recovery if they should do so. The mark usually consisted of the name or some peculiar character belonging to the master. It was also a custom, but perhaps not a general one, to mark soldiers in the same manner, only they bore their marks on the hand not on the forehead, just as our sailors are by an Oriental writer. First there is the ink-stand, which is so put into the case that it is the first thing that offers when marked on their arms. Hence also the votaries of some of the gods were marked with signs, intended to denote that they were the devoted servants and worshippers of the god whose symbols they bore. Sometimes they contained the name of the god, but as often his particular symbol, as the thunderbolt of Jove, the trident of Neptune, the ivy of Bacchus, and so on; or else they marked themselves with a mystical number, whereby the name of the god was understood to be described. Thus the sun, which was signified by the number DCVIII, is said to have been represented by the two numeral characters, XH. It is well to explain this here; but it will be observed that in Rev. xiii. 16, 17, all these different methods are more distinctly enumerated:—"He causeth all... to receive a mark in their right hands or in their foreheads; and no man might buy or sell save he that had the mark or the name of the beast, or the number of his name." As tokens of devotement to the service and worship of particular idols, such marks are much mentioned by ancient writers, as common in different nations. Lucian, for instance, says that the worshippers of the Syrian goddess distinguished themselves by particular marks either upon their hands or necks, and Philo and others allude to it as a very general custom. That the Christians soon adopted a modification of this custom by impressing the figure of the cross or the monogram of Jesus Christ upon their arms, we learn from Procopius and others: and that the custom in a modified form is still kept up by the Oriental Christians, Roman Catholics, and pilgrims to the Holy Land, we have already intimated. The marks were in ancient times formed either by the impress of a hot iron, or by the punctures of needles, afterwards rubbed over by a colouring powder or composition, as described in the note to Isa. xlix. 14; the process being the same as continues to be in use. The marks were indelible. See also the notes on Lev. xix. 28, and Isa. xlv. 5.

CHAPTER X.

- 1 The vision of the coals of fire, to be scattered over the city,
8 The vision of the cherubims.

THEN I looked, and, behold, in the 'firmament that was above the head of the cherubims there appeared over them as it were a sapphire stone, as the appearance of the likeness of a throne.

2 And he spake unto the man clothed with linen, and said, Go in between the wheels, even under the cherub, and fill ²thine hand with coals of fire from between the cherubims, and scatter them over the city. And he went in in my sight.

3 Now the cherubims stood on the right side of the house, when the man went in; and the cloud filled the inner court.

4 Then the glory of the Lord ³went up from the cherub, and stood over the thresh-old of the house; and the house was filled with the cloud, and the court was full of the brightness of the LORD's glory.

5 And the 'sound of the cherubims' wings was heard even to the outer court, as the voice of the Almighty God when he speaketh.

6 And it came to pass, that when he had commanded the man clothed with linen, saying, Take fire from between the wheels, from between the cherubims; then he went in, and stood beside the wheels.

7 And one cherub ⁴stretched forth his hand from between the cherubims unto the fire that was between the cherubims, and took thereof, and put it into the hands of him that was clothed with linen: who took it, and went out.

8 ¶ And there appeared in the cherubims the form of a man's hand under their wings.

9 And when I looked, behold the four wheels by the cherubims, one wheel by one cherub, and another wheel by another cherub: and the appearance of the wheels was as the colour of a 'beryl stone.

10 And as for their appearances, they four had one likeness, as if a wheel had been in the midst of a wheel.

11 When they went, they went upon their four sides; they turned not as they went, but to the place whither the head looked they followed it; they turned not as they went.

12 And their whole 'body, and their backs, and their hands, and their wings, and the wheels, were full of eyes round about, even the wheels that they four had.

13 As for the wheels, ⁵it was cried unto them in my hearing, O wheel.

14 And every one had four faces: the first face was the face of a cherub, and the second face was the face of a man, and the third the face of a lion, and the fourth the face of an eagle.

15 And the cherubims were lifted up. This is the living creature that I saw by the river of Chebar.

16 And when the cherubims went, the wheels went by them: and when the cherubims lifted up their wings to mount up from the earth, the same wheels also turned not from beside them.

17 When they stood, these stood; and when they were lifted up, these lifted up themselves also: for the spirit of the living creature was in them.

18 Then the glory of the Lord departed from off the threshold of the house, and stood over the cherubims.

19 And the cherubims lifted up their wings, and mounted up from the earth in my sight: when they went out, the wheels also were beside them, and every one stood at the door of the east gate of the Lord's house: and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

20 This is the living creature that I saw under the God of Israel by the river of Chebar; and I knew that they were the cherubims.

21 Every one had four faces apiece, and every one four wings; and the likeness of the hands of a man was under their wings.

22 And the likeness of their faces was the same faces which I saw by the river of Chebar, their appearances and themselves: they went every one straight forward.

CHAPTER XI.

¹ The presumption of the princes. ⁴ Their sin and judgment. ¹³ Ezekiel complaining, God sheweth him his purpose in saving a remnant, ²¹ and punishing the wicked. ²² The glory of God leaveth the city. ²⁴ Ezekiel is returned to the captivity.

MOREOVER the spirit lifted me up, and brought me unto the east gate of the Lord's house, which looketh eastward: and behold at the door of the gate five and twenty men; among whom I saw Jaazaniah the son of Azur, and Pelatiah the son of Benaiah, princes of the people.

2 Then said he unto me, Son of man, these are the men that devise mischief, and give wicked counsel in this city:

3 Which say, 'It is not 'near; let us build houses: this city is the caldron, and we be the flesh.

4 ¶ Therefore prophesy against them, prophesy, O son of man.

5 And the Spirit of the Lord fell upon me, and said unto me, Speak; Thus saith the Lord; Thus have ye said, O house of Israel: for I know the things that come into your mind, every one of them.

6 Ye have multiplied your slain in this city, and ye have filled the streets thereof with the slain.

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Your slain whom ye have laid in the midst of it, they are the flesh, and this city is the caldron: but I will bring you forth out of the midst of it.

8 Ye have feared the sword; and I will bring a sword upon you, saith the Lord God.

9 And I will bring you out of the midst thereof, and deliver you into the hands of strangers, and will execute judgments among you.

10 Ye shall fall by the sword; I will judge you in the border of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

11 This city shall not be your caldron, neither shall ye be the flesh in the midst thereof; but I will judge you in the border of Israel:

12 And ye shall know that I am the Lord: ³for ye have not walked in my statutes, neither executed my judgments, but have done after the manners of the heathen that are round about you.

13 ¶ And it came to pass, when I prophesied, that Pelatiah the son of Benaiah died. Then fell I down upon my face, and cried with a loud voice, and said, Ah Lord God! wilt thou make a full end of the remnant of Israel?

14 Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

15 Son of man, thy brethren, even thy brethren, the men of thy kindred, and all the house of Israel wholly, are they unto whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, Get you far from the Lord: unto us is this land given in possession.

16 Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; Although I have cast them far off

² 2 Pet. 3. 4.

³ Or, which have not walked.

among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come.

17 Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; I will even gather you from the people, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel.

18 And they shall come thither, and they shall take away all the detestable things thereof and all the abominations thereof from thence.

19 And 'I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an heart of flesh:

20 That they may walk in my statutes, and keep mine ordinances, and do them: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God.

21 But as for them whose heart walketh after the heart of their detestable things and their abominations, I will recompense their way upon their own heads, saith the Lord God.

22 ¶ Then did the cherubims lift up their wings, and the wheels beside them; and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

23 And the glory of the Lord went up from the midst of the city, and stood upon the mountain which is on the east side of the city.

24 ¶ Afterwards the spirit took me up, and brought me in a vision by the Spirit of God into Chaldea, to them of the captivity. So the vision that I had seen went up from me.

25 Then I spake unto them of the captivity all the things that the Lord had shewed me.

Verse 3. "The caldron."—No doubt pots of strong earthenware were used, to a considerable extent, among the poorer Hebrews, for boiling their food; but those of the wealthier people were probably of metal, and copper seems to be more likely to have been used than any other metal—iron being comparatively rare in use in Western Asia, less from any natural scarcity than from the greater difficulty of working it. None of the utensils, either of the tabernacle or temple, were made of iron; a vessel or pot made of iron does not once occur in Scripture—the "iron pan" of ch. iv. 3, having been shown to be an "iron plate." Egypt is indeed described figuratively as an iron furnace; but this allusion refers not to a culinary vessel. The most definite circumstance is that the "pots," and even the "shovels" for the use of the Temple, were of "bright brass"—by which we may perhaps understand fine copper. The kitchen utensils which have been found at Herculaneum and Pompeii are mostly of bronze; and from the specimens which have been obtained, it would be difficult to say that our own culinary boilers exceed them in convenience, or equal them in elegance of form and workmanship. All the specimens we have seen are round, never oval; and they mostly rest upon feet, and are furnished with handles inserted into eyes or rings attached to the vessel. Some have ornamental mouldings and borders, with massive leaves and volutes below the rings for the handles, and some of the larger kinds with thick handles, have eyes at the top of the handle, by which they were doubtless suspended by hooks over the fire. It is very possible that the Hebrew utensils of this kind were not inferior to these; for whatever may have been their own skill or taste in such matters, we are to recollect that they had models for their caldrons in those which were made for Solomon by Hiram of Tyre, the most skilful worker in metal of his time, and to whose people the useful arts of eastern Europe probably owed as much as did those of their neighbours in Asia.

CHAPTER XII.

1 The type of Ezekiel's removing. 8 It shewed the captivity of Zedekiah. 17 Ezekiel's trembling sheweth the Jews' desolation. 21 The Jews' presumptuous proverb is re-proved. 26 The speediness of the vision.

THE word of the LORD also came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, thou dwellest in the midst of a rebellious house, which have eyes to see, and see not; they have ears to hear, and hear not: for they are a rebellious house.

3 Therefore, thou son of man, prepare thee 'stuff for removing, and remove by day in their sight; and thou shalt remove from thy place to another place in their sight: it may be they will consider, though they be a rebellious house.

4 Then shalt thou bring forth thy stuff

by day in their sight, as stuff for removing : and thou shalt go forth at even in their sight, ^aas they that go forth into captivity.

5 ^bDig thou through the wall in their sight, and carry out thereby.

6 In their sight shalt thou bear it upon thy shoulders, and carry it forth in the twilight : thou shalt cover thy face, that thou see not the ground : for I have set thee for a sign unto the house of Israel.

7 And I did so as I was commanded : I brought forth my stuff by day, as stuff for captivity, and in the even I ^cdigged through the wall with mine hand ; I brought it forth in the twilight, and I bare it upon my shoulder in their sight.

8 ¶ And in the morning came the word of the LORD unto me, saying,

9 Son of man, hath not the house of Israel, the rebellious house, said unto thee, What doest thou ?

10 Say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord God ; This burden concerneth the prince in Jerusalem, and all the house of Israel that are among them.

11 Say, I am your sign : like as I have done, so shall it be done unto them : ^dthey shall remove and go into captivity.

12 And the prince that is among them shall bear upon his shoulder in the twilight, and shall go forth : they shall dig through the wall to carry out thereby : he shall cover his face, that he see not the ground with his eyes.

13 My ^enet also will I spread upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare : and I will bring him to Babylon to the land of the Chaldeans ; yet shall he not see it, though he shall die there.

14 And I will scatter toward every wind all that are about him to help him, and all his bands ; and I will draw out the sword after them.

15 And they shall know that I am the LORD, when I shall scatter them among the nations, and disperse them in the countries.

16 But I will leave ^fa few men of them from the sword, from the famine, and from the pestilence ; that they may declare all their abominations among the heathen whither they come ; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

17 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

18 Son of man, eat thy bread with quaking, and drink thy water with trembling and with carefulness ;

19 And say unto the people of the land, Thus saith the Lord God of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and of the land of Israel ; They shall eat their bread with carefulness, and drink their water with astonishment, that her land may be desolate from ^gall that is therein, because of the violence of all them that dwell therein.

20 And the cities that are inhabited shall be laid waste, and the land shall be desolate ; and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

21 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

22 Son of man, what is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel, saying, The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth ?

23 Tell them therefore, Thus saith the Lord God ; I will make this proverb to cease, and they shall no more use it as a proverb in Israel ; but say unto them, The days are at hand, and the effect of every vision.

24 For there shall be no more any vain vision nor flattering divination within the house of Israel.

25 For I am the LORD : I will speak, and the word that I shall speak shall come to pass ; it shall be no more prolonged : for in your days, O rebellious house, will I say the word, and will perform it, saith the Lord God.

26 ¶ Again the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

27 Son of man, behold, they of the house of Israel say, The vision that he seeth is ^hfor many days to come, and he prophesieth of the times that are far off.

28 Therefore say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God ; There shall none of my words be prolonged any more, but the word which I have spoken shall be done, saith the Lord God.

Verse 7. "I digged through the wall with mine hand."—With respect to walls, compare the notes on Job iv. 19, Prov. xxviii. 3, and Isa. xxx. 13. In the first of these notes the class numbered 2 answers exactly to the cob-walls of Devonshire, which form the subject of an interesting paper in No. cxvi. of the 'Quarterly Review.' These walls, formed of earth and straw well beaten and trodden together, and raised upon a foundation of stone or brick, were very ancient and are still very common in the East; and, as observed in the note to which we refer, explain what is meant by digging through walls. To the brief intimation there given, we may as well add the somewhat larger remark in the recent 'Quarterly Review';—"Ezekiel, of all the prophets best acquainted with the customs of the Phœnicians—of which the thirty-seventh chapter is a proof—when speaking of breaking through a wall, invariably uses the word 'dig through,' διόρυττειν,—"I digged through the wall with mine hand" (Ezek. xii. 7); this would be impossible in the case of a stone or brick wall, but by no means so as to one of cob. The identical expression is used twice by our Saviour himself in the sixth chapter of St. Matthew, 'Lay up for yourselves treasures... where thieves do not break through and steal'—οπου κλεπται μη διορυττειν, where thieves 'do not dig through.' In fact, the common Greek term for a housebreaker was τοιχωρυχος, a wall-breaker. Therefore the author of that most ancient book, Job, in the fourth chapter, adverts to the little trust to be placed in those 'who dwell in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust, who are crushed by the moth.' A very high authority has suggested, that by the moth is meant the white ant. It is clear that some sort of those destructive insects are alluded to, which so notoriously harbour in walls of clay, that is, of cob."

13. "I will bring him to Babylon... yet shall he not see it, though he shall die there."—The prophet Jeremiah foretold of Zedekiah that his eyes should behold the eyes of the king of Babylon; and here Ezekiel predicts that he should not see Babylon though he should die there. We are informed by Josephus, that the king, thinking these prophecies contradicted each other, gave no credit to either. But both proved true; for, being taken captive and carried to Riblah, he there saw Nebuchadnezzar, and then his eyes were put out, and he was sent to Babylon, where he remained for the rest of his life; so that he saw not that city though he died in it.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 The reproof of lying prophets, 10 and their untempered mortar. 17 Of prophetesses and their pillows.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, prophesy against the prophets of Israel that prophesy, and say thou unto them that prophesy out of their own hearts, Hear ye the word of the LORD;

3 Thus saith the Lord God; Woe unto the foolish prophets, that follow their own spirit, and have seen nothing!

4 O Israel, thy prophets are like the foxes in the deserts.

5 Ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither made up the hedge for the house of Israel to stand in the battle in the day of the LORD.

6 They have seen vanity and lying divination, saying, The LORD saith: and the LORD hath not sent them: and they have made others to hope that they would confirm the word.

7 Have ye not seen a vain vision, and have ye not spoken a lying divination, whereas ye say, The LORD saith it; albeit I have not spoken?

8 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye have spoken vanity, and seen lies, therefore, behold, I am against you, saith the Lord God.

9 And mine hand shall be upon the prophets that see vanity, and that divine lies: they shall not be in the assembly of my people, neither shall they be written in the writing of the house of Israel, neither shall they enter into the land of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the Lord God.

10 ¶ Because, even because they have seduced my people, saying, Peace; and there was no peace; and one built up a wall, and, lo, others daubed it with untempered mortar:

11 Say unto them which daub it with untempered mortar, that it shall fall: there shall be an overflowing shower; and ye, O great hailstones, shall fall; and a stormy wind shall rend it.

12 Lo, when the wall is fallen, shall it not be said unto you, Where is the daubing wherewith ye have daubed it?

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; I will even rend it with a stormy wind in my fury; and there shall be an overflowing shower in mine anger, and great hailstones in my fury to consume it.

14 So will I break down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered mortar, and bring it down to the ground, so that the foundation thereof shall be discovered, and it shall fall, and ye shall be consumed in the midst thereof: and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

15 Thus will I accomplish my wrath upon the wall, and upon them that have daubed it with untempered mortar, and will say unto you, The wall is no more, neither they that daubed it;

16 To wit, the prophets of Israel which prophesy concerning Jerusalem, and which see visions of peace for her, and there is no peace, saith the Lord God.

17 ¶ Likewise, thou son of man, set thy face against the daughters of thy people, which prophesy out of their own heart; and prophesy thou against them,

18 And say, Thus saith the Lord God; Woe to the women that sew pillows to all ¹⁰armholes, and make kerchiefs upon the head of every stature to hunt souls! Will ye hunt the souls of my people, and will ye save the souls alive that come unto you?

19 And will ye pollute me among my people for handfuls of barley and for pieces of bread, to slay the souls that should not die, and to save the souls alive that should not live, by your lying to my people that hear your lies?

20 Wherefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against your pillows, wherewith ye there hunt the souls ¹¹to make them fly, and I will tear them from your arms, and will let the souls go, even the souls that ye hunt to make them fly.

21 Your kerchiefs also will I tear, and deliver my people out of your hand, and they shall be no more in your hand to be hunted; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

22 Because with lies ye have made the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad; and strengthened the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, ¹² ¹³by promising him life:

23 Therefore ye shall see no more vanity, nor divine divinations: for I will deliver my people out of your hand: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

Verse 10. "Daubed it with untempered mortar."—The Targum and Vulgate seem to understand this not of plaster but of the cement used in uniting the materials of the wall, rendering it, "clay without straw"—clay and straw, well mixed together, being correctly understood to have been the common cement of eastern buildings, as it still is in the East.

3 N 2

If this view be correct, it will of course imply that the wall was not built with wet cob, which requires no cement; but with dry cob, or clay and straw worked well together and formed into masses which are dried before employed in building; or else common sun-dried or kiln-burnt bricks, or even stone. We rather incline to this view of regarding the "mortar" here rather as cement than plaster. However, there is no reason to question that the Hebrews did at least sometimes plaster their walls. The most common in the East is made with the same materials as the cob walls, sun-dried bricks and mortar—namely, clay and straw mixed together—the straw, such as they give to their cattle, chopped and beaten small, and serving the same purpose as the ox-hair which our plasterers mix with their plaster. This, to be good, requires to be well tempered, which is generally done by long-continued treading or beating. This is much used for the exterior of walls of humbler materials; but it will only do for dry countries as the rain acts upon it very much, causing it to peel off, or else wearing it off; whence the prophet mentions an “overwhelming shower” as the agent of its destruction. We have seen the interiors even of houses above the common, with no other plastering than this. Lime is however sometimes mixed with the clay and straw, and for certain purposes—such as the external coat of an interior plastering—simple lime plasters, such as our own, are sometimes used. When lime is largely used alone, or in a large proportion with certain earths, the tempering is usually performed either by beating with sticks, or by the turning of a wheel or roller, in much the same manner that our brick-makers prepare their clay. This work is, as in the parallel case, done by a horse or other animal. It would be to little purpose to mention all the materials and preparations of plasters for different applications, such as the coating of walls, the covering of the terraced roofs, and the lining of baths, tanks, and pools. Some kinds, generally used in a semi-liquid state, set very hard and last long; and it is well understood that great pains must be taken to temper that required to resist wet. In the way of tempering, perhaps nothing affords a stronger manifestation of persevering and patient labour than the long-continued and repeated beatings to which the Orientals subject the plaster (of lime, ashes, and straw) which is more especially intended to resist wet, and which does most effectually answer that purpose.

459

18. “Women that sew pillows to all armholes.”—The verse is confessedly a very difficult one. In the present clause, the words rendered “armholes” (אֶצִּילַי יָדַי atzilai yadi) mean “the juncture of the arms,” and may be applied not merely to the shoulders or armholes, but to the elbows, or even the wrists; and, as “elbows” seems most intelligible in this context, and is preferred by the Septuagint and Vulgate, as well as given in our margin, we would here so understand it. And then, as to the sewing or applying pillows to elbows, we are disposed to think that it refers to some custom with which we are not acquainted, and for want of knowing which the passage cannot be well understood. However, the nearest approach to a reasonable explanation seems to be derived from a reference to the fact, that the Orientals, when they wish to be at their ease, sit, lounge, or recline on or against various kinds and qualities of rich pillows or cushions; and, as the evil woman in the Proverbs alludes to the costliness and richness of those which belonged to her divan or “bed,” among the circumstances by which she sought to seduce “the young man void of understanding” to her snare, it is not unreasonable to suppose that something of the same kind may be here intended, since it appears that females of loose character are alluded to in this, as they certainly are in the other instance. It is not impossible that the women here mentioned were false prophetesses, or female votaries of “the queen of heaven,” and that the prophet has in view the arts which they employed to seduce the faithful to a participation in the impure rites which so disgracefully signalled her worship.

“Kerchiefs upon the head of every stature.”—The meaning of this seems to be, that they put kerchiefs upon the heads of females of every age (or stature) whom they had brought to join their society. But what this kerchief was, and what peculiarity made it instrumental “to hunt (or seduce) souls” may be difficult to conjecture; perhaps it was merely a rich or peculiar veil or head-dress, which rendered their presence attractive; and possibly it did at the same time, by its shape or ornament, denote the profession or character of those who wore them, and which is, in the East, in all cases, more generally expressed by the head-dress than by anything else. It is clear that these women practised divinations, and pretended to deliver oracles, which contradicted the Divine prophecies—promising peace and safety where they predicted death and desolation. Joining this to the fact that Astarte was reputed to deliver oracles, and that, as appears from both Jeremiah and Ezekiel, the Hebrews—and particularly the women—were at this time greatly addicted to the worship of this idol, we may reasonably presume that these women were not only false prophetesses, but, as such, votaries of Astarte; and, if this be premised, the impurities practised by her worshippers may countenance the given explanation concerning the "pillows" and the "kerchiefs;" and with reference to the latter we may add, that in the figures of Astarte there is always something remarkable about the head-dress. Macrobius describes her as represented by her worshippers in Mount Lebanon under the figure of an afflicted woman, with her head covered, and leaning upon her left hand, mourning for Adonis.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 God answereth idolaters according to their own heart. 6 They are exhorted to repent, for fear of judgments, by means of seduced prophets. 12 God's irrevocable sentence of famine, 15 of noisome beasts, 17 of the sword, 19 and of pestilence. 22 A remnant shall be reserved for example of others.

THEN came certain of the elders of Israel unto me, and sat before me.

2 And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

3 Son of man, these men have set up their idols in their heart, and put the stumbling-block of their iniquity before their face: should I be enquired of at all by them?

4 Therefore speak unto them, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Every man of the house of Israel that setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumblingblock of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to the prophet; I the LORD will answer him that cometh according to the multitude of his idols;

5 That I may take the house of Israel in their own heart, because they are all estranged from me through their idols.

6 ¶ Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; Repent, and turn 'yourselves from your idols; and turn away your faces from all your abominations.

7 For every one of the house of Israel, or of the stranger that sojourneth in Israel, which separateth himself from me, and setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumblingblock of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to a prophet to enquire of him concerning me; I the LORD will answer him by myself:

8 And I will set my face against that man, and will make him a 'sign and a proverb, and I will cut him off from the midst of my people; and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

9 And if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the LORD 'have deceived that prophet, and I will stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from the midst of my people Israel.

10 And they shall bear the punishment of their iniquity: the punishment of the prophet shall be even as the punishment of him that seeketh unto him;

11 That the house of Israel may go no more astray from me, neither be polluted any more with all their transgressions; but that they may be my people, and I may be their God, saith the Lord God.

12 ¶ The word of the LORD came again to me, saying,

13 Son of man, when the land sinneth against me by trespassing grievously, then will I stretch out mine hand upon it, and will break the 'staff' of the bread thereof, and will send famine upon it, and will cut off man and beast from it:

14 'Though these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness, saith the Lord God.

15 ¶ If I cause noisome beasts to pass through the land, and they 'spoil it, so that it be desolate, that no man may pass through because of the beasts:

16 Though these three men were in it, as I live, saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither sons nor daughters; they only shall be delivered, but the land shall be desolate.

17 ¶ Or if I bring a sword upon that land, and say, Sword, go through the land; so that I cut off man and beast from it:

18 Though these three men were in it, as I live, saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither sons nor daughters, but they only shall be delivered themselves.

19 ¶ Or if I send a pestilence into that land, and pour out my fury upon it in blood, to cut off from it man and beast:

⁶ Jer. 15. 1.

⁷ Heb. in the midst of it.

20 Though Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, as I live, saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither son nor daughter; they shall but deliver their own souls by their righteousness.

21 For thus saith the Lord God; ^oHow much more when I send my four sore judgments upon Jerusalem, the sword, and the famine, and the noisome beast, and the pestilence, to cut off from it man and beast?

22 ¶ Yet, behold, therein shall be left a remnant that shall be brought forth, both sons and daughters: behold, they shall come forth unto you, and ye shall see their way and their doings: and ye shall be comforted concerning the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, even concerning all that I have brought upon it.

23 And they shall comfort you, when ye see their ways and their doings: and ye shall know that I have not done without cause all that I have done in it, saith the Lord God.

^oOr, Also when.

Verse 14. "Noah, Daniel, and Job."—The mention of those holy patriarchs, Noah and Job, does not require any explanation; but that Daniel, who was then living, and still a rather young man, should be joined with them in this manner may be pointed out as a most distinguished honour conferred upon that prophet. "Daniel was taken captive in the third year of Jehoiakim. (Dan. i. 1.) After this Jehoiakim reigned eight years. (2 Kings xxiii. 26.) And this prophecy, as appears from chap. viii. 1, was uttered in the sixth year of Jehoiachin's captivity, who succeeded Jehoiakim, and reigned only three months. (2 Kings xxiv. 6, 8.) Therefore at this time Daniel had been fourteen years in captivity." (Newcome.)

At this time, as we may see from the history in the early chapters of his own book, he had been for many years the most conspicuous and remarkable man of the Hebrew nation then living, whether we regard his exalted piety, and the singular favour which the Lord had shown unto him, or the high and influential place which he occupied at the Babylonian court. Is it not possible that the especial and singular mention of Daniel in this passage may have partly been intended to counteract an impression entertained by his countrymen, that his high station and great influence with Nebuchadnezzar rendered improbable, or would be successful in averting, those calamities which Jeremiah and Ezekiel foretold?

CHAPTER XV.

1 By the unfitness of the vine branch for any work 6 is shewed the rejection of Jerusalem.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, What is the vine tree more than any tree, or than a branch which is among the trees of the forest?

3 Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work? or will men take a pin of it to hang any vessel thereon?

4 Behold, it is cast into the fire for fuel; the fire devoureth both the ends of it, and the midst of it is burned. ¹Is it meet for any work?

5 Behold, when it was whole, it was ²meet for no work: how much less shall it be meet yet for any work, when the fire hath devoured it, and it is burned?

6 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord God; As the vine tree among the trees of the forest, which I have given to the fire for fuel, so will I give the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

7 And I will set my face against them; they shall go out from one fire, and another fire shall devour them; and ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I set my face against them.

8 And I will make the land desolate, because they have ³committed a trespass, saith the Lord God.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Under the similitude of a wretched infant is shewed the natural state of Jerusalem. 6 God's extraordinary love towards her. 15 Her monstrous whoredom. 35 Her grievous judgment. 44 Her sin, matching her mother, and exceeding her sisters, Sodom and Samaria, calleth for judgments. 60 Mercy is promised her in the end.

AGAIN the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, cause Jerusalem to know her abominations,

3 And say, Thus saith the Lord God unto Jerusalem; Thy ¹birth and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan; thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite.

4 And as for thy nativity, in the day thou wast born thy navel was not cut, neither wast thou washed in water ^{to} supple thee; thou wast not salted at all, nor swaddled at all.

5 None eye pitied thee, to do any of these unto thee, to have compassion upon thee; but thou wast cast out in the open field, to the lothing of thy person, in the day that thou wast born.

6 ¶ And when I passed by thee, and saw thee ^{polluted} in thine own blood, I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, Live; yea, I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, Live.

7 I have ^{caused} thee to multiply as the bud of the field, and thou hast increased and waxen great, and thou art come to ^{excellent} ornaments: thy breasts are fashioned, and thine hair is grown, whereas thou wast naked and bare.

8 Now when I passed by thee, and looked upon thee, behold, thy time was the time of love; and I spread my skirt over thee, and covered thy nakedness: yea, I swore unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee, saith the Lord God, and thou becamest mine.

9 Then washed I thee with water; yea, I thoroughly washed away thy ^{blood} from thee, and I anointed thee with oil.

10 I clothed thee also with broidered work, and shod thee with badgers' skin, and I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk.

11 I decked thee also with ornaments, and I put bracelets upon thy hands, and a chain on thy neck.

12 And I put a jewel on thy forehead, and earrings in thine ears, and a beautiful crown upon thine head.

13 Thus wast thou decked with gold and silver; and thy raiment was of fine linen, and silk, and broidered work; thou didst eat fine flour, and honey, and oil: and thou wast exceeding beautiful, and thou didst prosper into a kingdom.

14 And thy renown went forth among the heathen for thy beauty: for it was perfect through my comeliness, which I had put upon thee, saith the Lord God.

15 ¶ But thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passed by; his it was.

16 And of thy garments thou didst take, and deckedst thy high places with divers colours, and playedst the harlot thereupon: the like things shall not come, neither shall it be so.

17 Thou hast also taken thy fair jewels of my gold and of my silver, which I had given thee, and madest to thyself images ^{of} men, and didst commit whoredom with them,

18 And tookest thy broidered garments, and coveredst them: and thou hast set mine oil and mine incense before them.

19 My meat also which I gave thee, fine flour, and oil, and honey, wherewith I fed thee, thou hast even set it before them for ^a sweet savour: and thus it was, saith the Lord God.

20 Moreover thou hast taken thy sons and thy daughters, whom thou hast borne unto me, and these hast thou sacrificed unto them ^{to} be devoured. Is this of thy whoredoms a small matter, 21 That thou hast slain my children, and delivered them to cause them to pass through the fire for them?

22 And in all thine abominations and thy whoredoms thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, when thou wast naked and bare, and wast polluted in thy blood.

23 And it came to pass after all thy wickedness, (woe, woe unto thee! saith the Lord God;)

24 That thou hast also built unto thee an ^{eminent} place, and hast made thee an high place in every street.

25 Thou hast built thy high place at every head of the way, and hast made thy beauty to be abhorred, and hast opened thy feet to every one that passed by, and multiplied thy whoredoms.

26 Thou hast also committed fornication with the Egyptians thy neighbours, great of flesh; and hast increased thy whoredoms, to provoke me to anger.

27 Behold, therefore I have stretched out my hand over thee, and have diminished thine ordinary food, and delivered thee unto the will of them that hate thee, the ¹¹daughters of the Philistines, which are ashamed of thy lewd way.

28 Thou hast played the whore also with the Assyrians, because thou wast unsatiable; yea, thou hast played the harlot with them, and yet couldest not be satisfied.

29 Thou hast moreover multiplied thy fornication in the land of Canaan unto Chaldea; and yet thou wast not satisfied herewith.

30 How weak is thine heart, saith the Lord God, seeing thou doest all these things, the work of an imperious whorish woman;

31 ¹²In that thou buildest thine eminent place in the head of every way, and makest thine high place in every street; and hast not been as an harlot, in that thou scornest hire;

32 But as a wife that committeth adultery, which taketh strangers instead of her husband!

33 They give gifts to all whores: but thou givest thy gifts to all thy lovers, and ¹³hirest them, that they may come unto thee on every side for thy whoredom.

34 And the contrary is in thee from other women in thy whoredoms, whereas none followeth thee to commit whoredoms: and in that thou givest a reward, and no reward is given unto thee, therefore thou art contrary.

35 ¶ Wherefore, O harlot, hear the word of the Lord:

36 Thus saith the Lord God; Because thy filthiness was poured out, and thy nakedness discovered through thy whoredoms with thy lovers, and with all the idols of thy abominations, and by the blood of thy children, which thou didst give unto them;

37 Behold, therefore I will gather all thy lovers, with whom thou hast taken pleasure, and all them that thou hast loved, with all them that thou hast hated; I will even gather them round about against thee, and will discover thy nakedness unto them, that they may see all thy nakedness.

38 And I will judge thee, ¹⁴as women that break wedlock and shed blood are judged; and I will give thee blood in fury and jealousy.

39 And I will also give thee into their hand, and they shall throw down thine eminent place, and shall break down thy high places: they shall strip thee also of thy clothes, and shall take ¹⁵thy fair jewels, and leave thee naked and bare.

40 They shall also bring up a company against thee, and they shall stone thee with stones, and thrust thee through with their swords.

41 And they shall ¹⁶burn thine houses with fire, and execute judgments upon thee in the sight of many women: and I will cause thee to cease from playing the harlot, and thou also shalt give no hire any more.

42 So will I make my fury toward thee to rest, and my jealousy shall depart from thee, and I will be quiet, and will be no more angry.

43 Because thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, but hast fretted me in all these things; behold, therefore I also will recompense thy way upon thine head, saith the Lord God: and thou shalt not commit this lewdness above all thine abominations.

44 ¶ Behold, every one that useth proverbs shall use this proverb against thee, saying, As is the mother, so is her daughter.

45 Thou art thy mother's daughter, that lotheth her husband and her children; and thou art the sister of thy sisters, which lothed their husbands and their children: your mother was an Hittite, and your father an Amorite.

eth at thy right hand, is Sodom and her daughters.

47 Yet hast thou not walked after their ways, nor done after their abominations: but, ¹⁸as if that were a very little thing, thou wast corrupted more than they in all thy ways.

48 As I live, saith the Lord God, Sodom thy sister hath not done, she nor her daughters, as thou hast done, thou and thy daughters.

49 Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy.

50 And they were haughty, and committed abomination before me: therefore ¹⁹I took them away as I saw good.

51 Neither hath Samaria committed half of thy sins; but thou hast multiplied thine abominations more than they, and hast justified thy sisters in all thine abominations which thou hast done.

52 Thou also, which hast judged thy sisters, bear thine own shame for thy sins that thou hast committed more abominable than they: they are more righteous than thou: yea, be thou confounded also, and bear thy shame, in that thou hast justified thy sisters.

53 When I shall bring again their captivity, the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, and the captivity of Samaria and her daughters, then will I bring again the captivity of thy captives in the midst of them:

54 That thou mayest bear thine own shame, and mayest be confounded in all that thou hast done, in that thou art a comfort unto them.

55 When thy sisters, Sodom and her daughters, shall return to their former estate, and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their former estate, then thou and thy daughters shall return to your former estate.

²⁶ Galat. 4. 26.

Verse 4. "Thou wast not salted at all."—The treatment of new-born children, mentioned in this verse, consists of various acts—some of which are physically necessary, and are universally practised, while others are matters of usage; examples of which may be found in some countries, and not in others. The passage is interesting, as showing what the customs of the ancient Hebrews were in this matter. According to R. Kimchi, all these acts were considered of such immediate necessity, that the traditions of the elders allowed them to be performed even on the sabbath-day.

As to the salting, it is said to have been performed either by sprinkling the infant with salt, or by using salt and water. The custom was by no means confined to the Hebrews; it was in extensive use, and is still preserved, in some parts of the East. The salting was considered to dry up all superfluous humours, to purify the body, and prevent putrefaction. Galen recommends the sprinkling of a little salt upon the infant, to render its skin more dense and solid.

10. "Broidered work."—As we have on several occasions mentioned ancient and modern Oriental embroidery and embroidered dresses, we are now happy in affording the subject some pictorial illustration by adding two engravings. The first, from the ancient Egyptian paintings, shows a lady attired in one of those rich embroidered dresses to which the Scripture itself, on more than one occasion, alludes, and which have been mentioned by ourselves. The other engraving shows the manner in which kerchiefs and other small pieces are embroidered by the modern Egyptians, whose usages in this and many other respects are the same as those of south-western Asia in general.

"Shod thee with badgers' skin."—See the note on Exod. xxv. 5. Most of the details enumerated in this description of a rich female dress, have already been considered under different texts of Scripture. See, in particular, Isa. iii.

"Silk."—This is the only chapter in which the word (שׁוֹרֵשׁ meshi) occurs, which the generality of the Jewish interpreters, and most modern translators, understand to denote silk. But to this it has been objected, that silk was not likely to have been known to the Jews, since the Romans were not acquainted with it till the time of Augustus; and since, if it was known to them, it will be necessary to suppose an intercourse with China, which has always been regarded as the native country of silk, and from which only it is probable that raw silk could be obtained. The obscurity of the ancient intimations involves the subject in great uncertainty. For as those from whom the western nations obtained their silk, made a great mystery of its origin and manufacture, the ancient writers give such intimations and explanations—made up of conjecture founded on some obscure hints which had, in the course of time, been collected—that it might be at times doubtful whether they at all spoke of silk and the silk-worm, were it not that the later ancient writers, who lived when the article had become well known, continue to speak as obscurely as their predecessors about its origin.

The question may be narrowed a little by the observation—that it is not necessary to suppose that the Hebrews of Palestine had any knowledge of silk as a material of dress. If silk be intended in the present instance, it proves nothing on this point; for Ezekiel had spent many years in captivity to the Babylonians, and the question evidently is only, whether silk was known to that people. Indeed, that the question should be strictly limited to this, seems evident from the fact, that the word does not occur in any portion of Scripture written in Palestine. In estimating this probability, we are to recollect that Ezekiel himself, in the ensuing chapter (verse 4), calls Babylonia "a land of traffic," and Babylon "a city of merchants." This passage forms the text of Heeren's inquiry into the commerce of the Babylonians, to which it makes a most interesting commentary. Babylon was in fact a great commercial city, forming the entrepôt for the commerce of the countries to the east and west, being, from the advantages of its intermediate situation, upon a great navigable river opening to the gulf of Persia, an immense caravanserai, in which character it has in later days been, on a more humble scale, represented by Bagdad. Babylon was itself a place of great demand and consumption for all the luxuries of far countries; and hence such luxuries were sought by its merchants, or brought to them by the great mercantile people of the time; and that these luxuries included goods obtained on the shores of India, has already been intimated in the note on 2 Chron. xx. 36, to which we beg to refer the reader. It is quite true that silk does not occur in the list of the articles which was the object of the Indian trade; but that this list is very incomplete and unsatisfactory has been intimated in the note to which we refer. The country of silk, however, is not India, but China; the Indians themselves having been, down to a very modern date, supplied from that country. It is not, however, necessary to extend the voyages of the Babylonians, Phœnicians, or Arabians to China, in order to bring them into a condition to obtain silk. It is sufficient to suppose that they got it from the Indians, who, not only from a very obvious probability, but from historical intimations, would appear to have traded with China, and to have partially arrayed themselves with its silks. As worn by them, it could not fail to attract the attention of the traders from Western Asia, who would desire to obtain it, and did obtain it at an enhanced price, from the Indians, and sold it at a price still more enhanced at Babylon. Indeed, the scarcity of silk even in Roman times, and the prodigious price which it brought (weight for weight with gold), seems to demonstrate that it had passed through several hands in its progress westward, and that the merchants did not immediately derive it from the country in which it was produced.

These conjectures would be of little positive worth were they supported by probabilities only. But, in fact, "Assyria" (understood of Babylonia in the large sense) was the source from which the Romans continued to derive their silk even in the time of Pliny; and this is always mentioned, previously, as the country from which silk was brought; although the nations of Eastern Europe were not ultimately unaware that it came from a more remote country, which they called Serica, concerning which they had many absurd ideas, but by which China appears to have been vaguely understood. From this it will appear that the question as to the existence of silk in Babylonia is merely one of date, and although it may not be possible to find any positive statement to indicate its presence there at the time when Ezekiel wrote, there is every probability in favour of this conclusion; as, when we first find it in those intermediate countries, there is not the least intimation that it had there only newly become known; and we can come near enough to show, that, if it had not been newly introduced, it must have been known there in the time of Ezekiel.

It is a remarkable fact, that the first persons who brought wrought silk into Europe were the Greeks of Alexander's army, which conquered the Persian empire, in which Babylon was then included. In other words, about 250 years after Ezekiel, silk is known to have been used in the dress of the Persians. Jahn even conjectures that the famous robe, which the Persians adopted from the Medes as a dress of honour, was of silk; and if so, as the luxury of the Medes was contemporary with that of the Babylonians, we should find silk on the frontiers of Babylonia even about the time of Ezekiel. Now, what was known to the Persians, and possibly to the Medes, was not likely to be unknown to the still more luxurious Babylonians, who moreover had access to the shores of the country where silk might be found; and should it be alleged that the Persians had greater facilities of obtaining silk by the land route from the frontiers of China, the effect will be the same, for we may be sure that the results of Persian, as well as of Arabian and Phœnician, commerce, found their way to the great mart of Babylon. As the Medes and Babylonians (or at least the latter) were luxurious and wealthy, and fond of rich dresses, it may well be supposed that they absorbed all the limited supply which reached them; and as the nations more west were less rich and of plainer manners, the merchants had no motive to carry the commodity to a more western market. This will show that silk may long have been in use in Babylonia before it was known in Europe and on the western shores of Asia. It is a remarkable circumstance that the silk came to the west manufactured in cloth half silk; and it is said the plan was devised of unravelling the stuff, which was rewoven into cloth of entire silk. The only proper silk manufactures that we can find to have existed in the west, were those of the Phœnicians at Tyre and Berytus; which seems to show that the Phœnicians not only possessed the trade in silk but the process of manufacture, which they carefully kept secret.

As the dress described in this chapter is intended to be of the richest materials, it might well be supposed that the prophet would mention silk, if silk were known to him. Silk continued to bear an astonishing high price down to a comparatively late period. Thus we find that silk was forbidden to be worn by men, under Tiberius. When they did wear it, silk formed only a part of the fabric, robes entirely of silk being left to the women. It is numbered among the most extravagant luxuries or effeminacies of Heliogabalus, that he was the first man who wore a robe of entire silk; and the anecdotes are well known of the Emperor M. Antoninus, who caused a silk robe which had become his property to be sold: and of the Emperor Aurelian, who refused, on the ground of its extravagant cost, a silk dress which his consort earnestly requested from him. Such anecdotes have an emphasis here, where, by a figurative reference to the most rich and costly articles of dress then known, God describes the precious and glorious things with which he had invested the people he redeemed from the bondage and misery of Egypt.

12. "A jewel on thy forehead."—This doubtless means a nose-jewel, as we have explained on former occasions. See the marginal reading.

13. "Thou didst eat fine flour, and honey, and oil."—This probably means that the honey and oil were mixed with the fine flour to make cakes. Such are still made in the East, and are much liked. It may be, however, that cakes of fine flour were dipped in the honey or oil, this being also an Oriental custom of eating.

26. "The Egyptians . . . great of flesh."—This certainly cannot mean that the Egyptians were a corpulent, full-fleshed people, as some commentators imagine. Their climate is not favourable to corpulency; and among the thousands of figures of ancient Egyptians which occur in the remaining paintings and sculptures, a corpulent person is almost never seen. They appear to have been a light and active race of people. The word (בשר bashar) "flesh" is here, and in one or two other places, used, by an euphemism, to intimate what could not be plainly expressed, in describing the sensual character of the Egyptians.

CHAPTER XVII.

¹ Under the parable of two eagles and a vine, 11 is shewed God's judgment upon Jerusalem for revolting from Babylon to Egypt. 22 God promiseth to plant the cedar of the Gospel.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, put forth a riddle, and speak a parable unto the house of Israel;

3 And say, Thus saith the Lord God; A great eagle with great wings, long-winged, full of feathers, which had divers colours, came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar:

4 He cropped off the top of his young twigs, and carried it into a land of traffick; he set it in a city of merchants.

5 He took also of the seed of the land, and ¹planted it in a fruitful field; he placed it by great waters, and set it as a willow tree.

6 And it grew, and became a spreading vine of low stature, whose branches turned toward him, and the roots thereof were under him: so it became a vine, and brought forth branches, and shot forth sprigs.

7 There was also another great eagle with great wings and many feathers: and, behold, this vine did bend her roots toward him, and shot forth her branches toward him, that he might water it by the furrows of her plantation.

8 It was planted in a good ²soil by great waters, that it might bring forth branches, and that it might bear fruit, that it might be a goodly vine.

9 Say thou, Thus saith the Lord God; Shall it prosper? shall he not pull up the roots thereof, and cut off the fruit thereof, that it wither? it shall wither in all the leaves of her spring, even without great power or many people to pluck it up by the roots thereof.

10 Yea, behold, being planted, shall it prosper? shall it not utterly wither, when the east wind toucheth it? it shall wither in the furrows where it grew.

11 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

12 Say now to the rebellious house, Know ye not what these things mean? tell them, Behold, the king of Babylon is come to Jerusalem, and hath taken the king thereof, and the princes thereof, and led them with him to Babylon;

13 And hath taken of the king's seed, and made a covenant with him, and hath ³taken an oath of him: he hath also taken the mighty of the land:

14 That the kingdom might be base, that it might not lift itself up, ⁴but that by keeping of his covenant it might stand.

15 But he rebelled against him in sending his ambassadors into Egypt, that they might give him horses and much people. Shall he prosper? shall he escape that doeth such things? or shall he break the covenant, and be delivered?

16 As I live, saith the Lord God, surely in the place where the king dwelleth that made him king, whose oath he despised, and whose covenant he brake, even with him in the midst of Babylon he shall die.

17 Neither shall Pharaoh with his mighty army and great company make for him in the war, by casting up mounts, and building forts, to cut off many persons:

18 Seeing he despised the oath by breaking the covenant, when, lo, he had given his hand, and hath done all these things, he shall not escape.

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; As I live, surely mine oath that he hath despised, and my covenant that he hath broken, even it will I recompense upon his own head.

20 And I will ⁵spread my net upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare, and I will bring him to Babylon, and will plead with him there for his trespass that he hath trespassed against me.

21 And all his fugitives with all his bands shall fall by the sword, and they that remain shall be scattered toward all winds: and ye shall know that I the LORD have spoken it.

22 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it; I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain and eminent:

23 In the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it: and it shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit, and be a goodly cedar: and under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of the branches thereof shall they dwell.

24 And all the trees of the field shall know that I the LORD have brought down the high tree, have exalted the low tree, have dried up the green tree, and have made the dry tree to flourish: I the LORD have spoken and have done it.

Verse 3. "A great eagle," &c.—This beautiful parable, of the two eagles and the vine, is explained in the latter part of the chapter; and with this explanation, and a knowledge of the history of the last days of the Hebrew kingdom, no reader can fail to be struck by observing that, while every circumstance in the literal narrative is strictly appropriate to the subject of the parable, none of its details are irrelevant to the ulterior object, but are all made to adumbrate with inimitable effect the series of historical circumstances of which the parable is a shaded narrative.

It is interesting to find the eagle thus early made the symbol of imperial power, when we recollect how extensively it has since been employed for the same purpose. The strength and activity of this noble bird, its magnificent appearance, its exalted flight, and its far reaching and undazzled eye, have caused it to be regarded as the king of birds, and the fit emblem of royal power, in different nations and ages. We have noticed on a former occasion that an eagle with expanded wings formed the imperial standard of the Persians under Cyrus, very long before it became such among the Romans. In the present instance, while both the kings of Babylon and Egypt are described by this symbol, they are so discriminated as to show that the power of Babylon was at that time greater and more extensive than that of Egypt. The Egyptian is only "a great eagle, with great wings, and many feathers;" whereas the Babylonian is "a great eagle, with great wings, long winged, full of feathers, which had divers colours."

4. "A land of traffick . . . a city of merchants."—The land of the Babylonians and the city of Babylon are of course intended. See the note on ch. xvi. 10.

20. "I will spread my net upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare."—It seems doubtful whether this alludes to the methods by which wild beasts were taken or to those employed for the capture of birds. The language would seem to refer rather to the latter; and it is certain, from other passages, that the Hebrews caught birds with nets and snares. We have therefore considered this a suitable opportunity for introducing a representation of some of the nets and snares employed by the Egyptians, whose paintings and sculptures, many of which exhibit scenes of hunting and fowling, show that game of all kinds was a favourite food of the Egyptians, and the capture of birds a pursuit much followed, as a gainful occupation to some and an amusement to others. The cuts we offer, in the preceding page, too clearly show the manner in which the contrivances acted to require much explanation; and they will serve also to indicate how little of novelty the modern practices contain. There is scarcely any process now followed which was not known in very ancient times. Thus the ancients had not only traps, nets, and springes, but also bird-lime smeared upon twigs, and made use of stalking-horses, setting dogs, bird-calls, &c. The Egyptian paintings describe other modes of taking birds besides those which our cuts exhibit. In some instances we see them shot with arrows while upon the wing, and in others they are knocked down by sticks thrown at them, as they perched or flew in the thickets or marshes. The most striking scenes are however those which the water-fowling exhibits, as exercised apparently by men who supplied the great consumption of the Egyptians in water-fowl, particularly ducks and geese. There is a painting among the Egyptian antiquities in the British Museum, which shows the mode of operation in a very lively manner. The fowler stands up in a long narrow boat, in which are also a woman and girl, probably his wife and daughter. He is acting against a large number of various aquatic birds, with a few land birds among them, and it appears to be his object to drive or seduce them into a net or decoy, or perhaps he is represented as taking possession of birds already decoyed. The fowler holds three large long-billed birds erect by the legs in his left hand, and in the other grasps something that appears to represent such a loaded instrument as a "life preserver," seemingly for the purpose of bringing the birds down. A goose, probably a decoy-bird, stands at the head of the boat cackling, and as if inviting the wild birds to follow, while a cat is seen near the boat, upon the dry spot where most of the birds are, seizing one of them in its fore-paws. We might suppose this animal to be in the fowler's service; but it is as possible that it has escaped from the boat against the fowler's intention, as some of the birds have taken alarm and are in the act of flying off. A simpler scene of water-fowling is shown in our present fig. 1, which is copied from Rosellini, as are the others. The birds are taken in a large clap-net set in the midst of an oval lake, and which four men draw, by means of a strong cable, on a signal from a man ensconced among the tall plants growing near the lake. The small circular net (fig. 2) seems to be a self-acting one, by means of a sort of trap connected with it, so that the birds on coming in contact with it close the net upon themselves. Fig. 3 is very similar to fig. 2, except that it is oval; and it had in like manner a net, which has been worn off, in the painting, by time. It is composed of two arcs, which being kept open by the machinery in the middle, furnish the oval frame of the net; but when the bird flies in, and knocks out the pin in the centre, the arcs collapse (as shown in the fig. 4), enclosing the bird in the net. This simple contrivance has not yet fallen into disuse. These brief explanations may point out the modes of taking birds which were probably known to the Jews, and some of which were probably practised by themselves, and to which the sacred writers refer when they mention the nets and snares of the fowler.

In our note on this verse (20), the expression "I will spread my net upon him," &c., has been considered as applying more to the capture of birds; it may be here regarded however as one of many allusions in Scripture to the ancient method by which lions and other wild beasts were captured. By the mention of their being taken by nets, we are of course not to understand that such powerful animals are taken in a net in the same manner as birds and fishes; but that they were surrounded and driven into an enclosure formed by strong nets or palisades, where, their retreat being arrested, they were easily slain or captured. Spence, in his 'Polymetis,' has given a good description of this method of hunting. The hunters of forest-beasts "surrounded a considerable tract of ground by a circle of nets, and after contracting that circle by degrees, till they had forced all the beasts of that quarter together into a narrow compass, then it was the slaughter began. This manner of hunting was pursued in Italy, as well as all over the eastern parts of the world; and it was from this custom that the poets sometimes represent death as surrounding persons with his nets, and as encompassing them on every side." The same allusions occur in Scripture, particularly in the Psalms, as in Ps. xviii. 5: "The sorrows of hell compassed me about; the snares of death prevented me;" and, still more expressly, in cxi. 5: "The proud have hid a snare for me, and cords; they have spread a net by the way-side; they have set gins for me." This last clause, referring to gins or traps, probably alludes to the circumstance, that when the object was to take the wild beasts alive, gaps were sometimes left in the enclosure, where traps were set, or pitfalls formed, so that the animals were taken.

In the sculptures on the living rock at Takht-i-Bostan, in Persia, the manner of hunting here mentioned is very clearly represented. A large enclosure is shown, formed apparently of strong poles and curtains, into which the animals are driven by the hunters. The hunters are mounted some on elephants and others on horseback. The elephants remain outside, but the horsemen enter with the animals at full speed, and pursue them within the enclosure, spearing them (seemingly) and shooting them with arrows. The king is present on a stately charger, but does not actively engage in the hunt, unless a gigantic huntsman in the middle of the field, and somewhat resembling him, be a repetition of his figure. There are present bands of musicians, some standing on the ground and others seated on platforms. The slain beasts are dragged outside the enclosure by men in attendance for the purpose; and, further on, strings of camels are represented in the act of carrying them away. It is true that in this scene the animals are deer; but the same plan is pursued with others of a more ferocious character. Perhaps the fact that the animals enter at one side alive, and are drawn out dead at the other, gives a peculiar force to the Scriptural allusions to the subject. The Persians were always much addicted to this kind of hunting; and if, with some, we thought (but we do not) that Ezekiel was stationed in Persia, his allusions might be derived from what could not but be frequently brought under his notice in that country. But there was no necessity for this corroboration, the practice having been so exceedingly general in all ages and countries. Some idea of the enclosures formed on such occasions may be derived from the by no means incredible circumstance related by Plutarch, that when the Macedonian conquerors were in Persia, Philotas the son of Parmenio had hunting-nets that would enclose the space of a hundred furlongs. The Oriental sovereigns have sometimes employed whole armies in this sort of hunting, in which, however, the enclosure was formed by the persons of a vast host of men, forming a thick circular hedge many leagues in circumference, and enclosing forests, plains, and rivers. The men being formed, would march on, and as they marched of course contracted their circle, till they had driven all the beasts before them within a spot which had been previously determined. Till this no animals were killed, the soldiers being forbidden to wound or kill any beast whatever violence it might offer. But when the beasts of various kinds were driven within the limits, the king entered the circle, attended by princes and military chiefs, and himself commenced the slaughter, after which he withdrew to an eminence whence he could behold the prowess of his sons and nobles. When they had satisfied themselves, the young soldiers were allowed to take their place in the circle, and committed great slaughter among the multitude of animals there collected, until at last the young princes and lords made suit to the sovereign that the remaining beasts should have their lives and liberty granted to them; and this being allowed, those which had escaped the arrows and scimitars of the military hunters were suffered to withdraw and regain their forests and dens. (See the account in Ranking's 'Researches,' of the grand hunting match of Genghiz Khan, in the year 1221.) The military character given to these expeditions, and the scale on which the royal huntings were conducted, made these affairs images of war in a very striking degree; and hence the description which the scripture gives of the results of war by those of hunting are very remarkably appropriate.

CHASE OF THE LION.—FROM 'ANTIQUITÉS D'HERCULANUM.'

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 God reproveth the unjust parable of sour grapes. 5 He sheweth how he dealeth with a just father: 10 with a wicked son of a just father: 14 with a just son of a wicked father: 19 with a wicked man repenting: 24 with a just man revolting. 25 He defendeth his justice, 31 and exhorteth to repentance.

THE word of the LORD came unto me again, saying,

2 What mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel, saying,

The 'fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge?'

3 As I live, saith the Lord God, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel.

4 Behold, all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth, it shall die.

5 ¶ But if a man be just, and do ²that which is lawful and right,

² Heb. judgment and justice.

6 And hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, neither hath ³defiled his neighbour's wife, neither hath come near to ⁴a menstruous woman,

7 And hath not ⁵oppressed any, but hath restored to the debtor his ⁶pledge, hath spoiled none by violence, hath ⁷given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment;

8 He that hath not given forth upon ⁸usury, neither hath taken any increase, that hath withdrawn his hand from iniquity, hath executed true judgment between man and man,

9 Hath walked in my statutes, and hath kept my judgments, to deal truly; he is just, he shall surely live, saith the Lord God.

10 ¶ If he beget a son that is a ⁹robber, a shedder of blood, and ¹⁰*that* doeth the like to any one of these things,

11 And that doeth not any of those duties, but even hath eaten upon the mountains, and defiled his neighbour's wife,

12 Hath oppressed the poor and needy, hath spoiled by violence, hath not restored the pledge, and hath lifted up his eyes to the idols, hath committed abomination,

13 Hath given forth upon usury, and hath taken increase: shall he then live? he shall not live: he hath done all these abominations; he shall surely die; his ¹¹blood shall be upon him.

14 ¶ Now, lo, if he beget a son, that seeth all his father's sins which he hath done, and considereth, and doeth not such like,

15 That hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, hath not defiled his neighbour's wife,

16 Neither hath oppressed any, ¹²*hath* not withholden the pledge, neither hath spoiled by violence, but hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment,

17 That hath taken off his hand from the poor, that hath not received usury nor increase, hath executed my judgments, hath walked in my statutes; he shall not die for the iniquity of his father, he shall surely live.

18 As for his father, because he cruelly oppressed, spoiled his brother by violence, and did that which is not good among his people, lo, even he shall die in his iniquity.

19 ¶ Yet say ye, Why? doth not the son bear the iniquity of the father? When the son hath done that which is lawful and right, and hath kept all my statutes, and hath done them, he shall surely live.

20 The soul that sinneth, it shall die. ¹³The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son: the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him.

21 But if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die.

22 All his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not be mentioned unto him: in his righteousness that he hath done he shall live.

23 ¹⁴Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord God: and not that he should return from his ways, and live?

24 ¶ But when the righteous turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and doeth according to all the abominations that the wicked man doeth, shall he live? All his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned: in his trespass that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he die.

from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and dieth in them; for his iniquity that he hath done shall he die.

27 Again, when the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive.

28 Because he considereth, and turneth away from all his transgressions that he hath committed, he shall surely live, he shall not die.

CHAPTER XIX.

MOREOVER take thou up a lamentation for the princes of Israel,

2 And say, What is thy mother? A lioness: she lay down among lions, she nourished her whelps among young lions.

3 And she brought up one of her whelps: it became a young lion, and it learned to catch the prey; it devoured men.

4 The nations also heard of him; he was taken in their pit, and they brought him with chains unto the land of ¹Egypt.

5 Now when she saw that she had waited, and her hope was lost, then she took another of her whelps, and made him a young lion.

6 And he went up and down among the lions, he became a young lion, and learned to catch the prey, and devoured men.

7 And he knew ²their desolate palaces, and he laid waste their cities; and the land was desolate, and the fulness thereof, by the noise of his roaring.

8 Then the nations set against him on every side from the provinces, and spread their net over him: he was taken in their pit.

9 And they put him in ward ³in chains, and brought him to the king of Babylon: they brought him into holds, that his voice should no more be heard upon the mountains of Israel.

10 ¶ Thy mother is like a vine ⁴in thy blood, planted by the waters: she was fruitful and full of branches by reason of many waters.

11 And she had strong rods for the sceptres of them that bare rule, and her stature was exalted among the thick branches, and she appeared in her height with the multitude of her branches.

12 But she was plucked up in fury, she was cast down to the ground, and the ⁵east wind dried up her fruit: her strong rods were broken and withered; the fire consumed them.

13 And now she is planted in the wilderness, in a dry and thirsty ground.

14 And fire is gone out of a rod of her branches, which hath devoured her fruit, so that she hath no strong rod to be a sceptre to rule. This is a lamentation, and shall be for a lamentation.

LIONESSES AND WHELPS.

Verse 4. "Brought him with chains unto the land of Egypt."—This lion's whelp was therefore Jehoahaz, who was carried prisoner into Egypt by Pharaoh-necho. See the history, 2 Kings xxi. 31—33.

9. "Brought him to the king of Babylon."—It seems to be disputed whether this was Jehoiakim or his son Jeconiah. As, however, the former immediately succeeded Jehoahaz, being made king in his room by Pharaoh-necho, and reigned many years, whereas the latter reigned only three months, we suppose Jehoiakim to be intended. If it had been his son, the prophet would probably have described his being taken to Babylon; but he does not say this, and what he does say agrees with the history of the earlier monarch, of whom we are told that Nebuchadnezzar "bound him in fetters to carry him to Babylon" (2 Chron. xxxvi. 6); but as it is not said that he did carry him thither, and as the notice of his death is immediately subjoined, it is probable that he died before this intention could be executed. The text only says that the lion was brought in chains to the king of Babylon.

10. "A vine in thy blood."—As it is difficult to discover the sense of this, we may perhaps admit, as probable, the conjecture on which several modern translators have proceeded, that, by a mistake of similar letters, כרם, "in thy blood," has been read instead of כרם, "like a pomegranate." This proposed emendation results in a double comparison: "Thy mother is like a vine, like a pomegranate, planted by the waters."—The connection is natural, as the vine and pomegranate do not thrive in dry situations. In Georgia we have seen wild vines and pomegranates growing together on the banks of the same streams. This observation perhaps supports the suggested interpretation.

11. "Strong rods for the sceptres of them that bare rule."—The pastoral rod of the shepherd appears to have suggested the first use of a rod as a symbol of authority and rule; and was the more appropriate, as the early condition of superior power was compared to and illustrated by that which a shepherd exercises over his flock, and hence kings and chiefs were wont to be called, as well among the heathen as the Hebrews, "shepherds" of their people. In the Pentateuch we see that not only Moses and Aaron, but all the chiefs of tribes, were distinguished by their rods—doubtless as ensigns of their rank. These were, then, the sceptres of very ancient times, and, from the present text, appear to have continued such till the time of Ezekiel, when, however, they may have, and probably had, become walking staves of a distinctive fashion. Such are some of those which our present cut exhibits after Egyptian figures; the distinction being, in these, chiefly in the form given to the head of the rod: and such are those which the Persepolitan sculptures display in the hands of the king, being a tall and straight staff surmounted by a round head, and used by the monarch as a walking staff. This may be seen in the cuts to Ezra i. It is true that the Persian sceptre, the form of which is thus shown, is said to be of gold, in Esther, which Xenophon confirms: but by this we are probably to understand that it was covered or studded with gold, or had a golden head. Rods served for sceptres to the kings leagued against Troy (see the passage cited from the Iliad in the note to Num. xvii.) ; but we understand from Homer that they were adorned with studs and rings of gold.

As might be expected, the sceptre among the Hebrew kings appears to have varied at different times. It has been inferred from 1 Sam. xviii. 10 ; xxii. 6, that the sceptre of Saul was a spear : and if so it was doubtless distinguished from common spears by its size or ornaments. Possibly it was the war sceptre, while the rod was the sceptre of peace. There was anciently some distinction of this kind : thus, in Egypt, while the common forms were such as appear in all the other figures in our engraving, the war sceptre was sometimes a massive mace, of the form shown in one of the figures, and bearing, as will be seen, more resemblance than any other to the modern sceptres. That, on a similar principle of distinction, a spear should be used for a sceptre by kings when with their armies, is highly probable. Indeed we are told by Justin that the old kings of Rome wore no diadems to mark their dignity, but carried spears, which the Greeks called sceptres. He adds, as a reason, that, from the earliest times, the ancients revered spears as immortal divinities, and that it was in memory of this ancient worship that spears continued to be represented in the hands of the immortal gods. (Hist. l. xliii. c. 3.) All this means, we suppose, that, as spears seem to have been one of the earliest weapons of war that was invented, men originally, before statuary was practised, made the spear the symbol or representative of the God in whom they chiefly trusted. Under the same idea, the Scythians are said to have worshipped a sword as the representative of the god of war.

CHAPTER XX.

1 God refuseth to be consulted by the elders of Israel. 5 He sheweth the story of their rebellions in Egypt, 10 in the wilderness, 27 and in the land. 33 He promiseth to gather them by the Gospel. 45 Under the name of a forest he sheweth the destruction of Jerusalem.

AND it came to pass in the seventh year, in the fifth month, the tenth day of the month, that certain of the elders of Israel came to enquire of the LORD, and sat before me.

2 Then came the word of the LORD unto me, saying,

3 Son of man, speak unto the elders of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the LORD GOD ; Are ye come to enquire of me ? As I live, saith the LORD GOD, I will not be enquired of by you.

4 Wilt thou ¹ judge them, son of man, wilt thou judge them ? cause them to know the abominations of their fathers :

5 ¶ And say unto them, Thus saith the LORD GOD ; In the day when I chose Israel, and ² lifted up mine hand unto the seed of the house of Jacob, and made myself ³ known unto them in the land of Egypt, when I lifted up mine hand unto them, saying, I am the LORD your God ;

6 In the day that I lifted up mine hand unto them, to bring them forth of the land of Egypt into a land that I had espied for them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands :

7 Then said I unto them, Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt : I am the LORD your God.

8 But they rebelled against me, and would not hearken unto me : they did not every man cast away the abominations of their eyes, neither did they forsake the idols of Egypt : then I said, I will pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the midst of the land of Egypt.

9 But I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, among whom they were, in whose sight I made myself known unto them, in bringing them forth out of the land of Egypt.

10 ¶ Wherefore I ⁴ caused them to go forth out of the land of Egypt, and brought them into the wilderness.

11 And I gave them my statutes, and ⁵ shewed them my judgments, ⁶ which if a man do, he shall even live in them.

12 Moreover also I gave them my ⁷ sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the LORD that sanctify them.

13 But the house of Israel rebelled against me in the wilderness : they walked not in my statutes, and they despised my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them ; and my sabbaths they greatly ⁸ polluted : then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them in the ⁹ wilderness, to consume them.

14 But I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, in whose sight I brought them out.

15 Yet also I lifted up my hand unto

¹ Or, plead for them. ² Chap. 22. 2, and 23. 36. ³ Or, sware. And so verse 6, &c. ⁴ Exod. 3. 8, and 4. 31. ⁵ Exod. 13. 18.

them in the wilderness, that I would not bring them into the land which I had given them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands ;

16 Because they despised my judgments, and walked not in my statutes, but polluted my sabbaths : for their heart went after their idols.

17 Nevertheless mine eyes spared them from destroying them, neither did I make an end of them in the wilderness.

18 But I said unto their children in the wilderness, Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols :

19 I am the LORD your God ; walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them ;

20 And hallow my sabbaths ; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the LORD your God.

21 Notwithstanding the children rebelled against me : they walked not in my statutes, neither kept my judgments to do them, which if a man do, he shall even live in them ; they polluted my sabbaths : then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the wilderness.

22 Nevertheless I withdrew mine hand, and wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted in the sight of the heathen, in whose sight I brought them forth.

23 I lifted up mine hand unto them also in the wilderness, that I would scatter them among the heathen, and disperse them through the countries ;

24 Because they had not executed my judgments, but had despised my statutes, and had polluted my sabbaths, and their eyes were after their fathers' idols.

25 Wherefore I gave them also statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live ;

26 And I polluted them in their own gifts, in that they caused to pass ¹¹through the fire all that openeth the womb, that I might make them desolate, to the end that they might know that I am the LORD.

27 ¶ Therefore, son of man, speak unto the house of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God ; Yet in this your fathers have blasphemed me, in that they have ¹²committed a trespass against me.

28 For when I had brought them into the land, for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to them, then they saw every high hill, and all the thick trees, and they offered there their sacrifices, and there they presented the provocation of their offering : there also they made their sweet savour, and poured out there their drink offerings.

29 Then ¹³I said unto them, What is the high place whereunto ye go ? And the name thereof is called Bamah unto this day.

30 Wherefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God ; Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers ? and commit ye whoredom after their abominations ?

31 For when ye offer your gifts, when ye make your sons to pass through the fire, ye pollute yourselves with all your idols, even unto this day : and shall I be enquired of by you, O house of Israel ? As I live, saith the Lord God, I will not be enquired of by you.

32 And that which cometh into your mind shall not be at all, that ye say, We will be as the heathen, as the families of the countries, to serve wood and stone.

33 ¶ As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you :

34 And I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out.

35 And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face.

36 Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God.

¹¹ Chap. 16. 21.

¹² Heb. trespassed a trespass.

¹³ Or, I told them what the high place was, or, Bamah.

37 And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into ¹⁴the bond of the covenant :

38 And I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me : I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel : and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

39 As for you, O house of Israel, thus saith the Lord God ; Go ye, serve ye every one his idols, and hereafter also, if ye will not hearken unto me : but pollute ye my holy name no more with your gifts, and with your idols.

40 For in mine holy mountain, in the mountain of the height of Israel, saith the Lord God, there shall all the house of Israel, all of them in the land, serve me : there will I accept them, and there will I require your offerings, and the ¹⁵firstfruits of your oblations, with all your holy things.

41 I will accept you with your ¹⁶sweet savour, when I bring you out from the people, and gather you out of the countries wherein ye have been scattered ; and I will be sanctified in you before the heathen.

42 And ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I shall bring you into the land of Israel, into the country for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to your fathers.

43 And there shall ye remember your ways, and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled ; and ye shall lothe yourselves in your own sight for all your evils that ye have committed.

44 And ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I have wrought with you for my name's sake, not according to your wicked ways, nor according to your corrupt doings, O ye house of Israel, saith the Lord God.

45 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

46 Son of man, set thy face toward the south, and drop thy word toward the south, and prophesy against the forest of the south field ;

47 And say to the forest of the south, Hear the word of the LORD ; Thus saith the Lord God ; Behold, I will kindle a fire in thee, and it shall devour every green tree in thee, and every dry tree : the flaming flame shall not be quenched, and all faces from the south to the north shall be burned therein.

48 And all flesh shall see that I the LORD have kindled it : it shall not be quenched.

49 Then said I, Ah Lord God ! they say of me, Doth he not speak parables ?

¹⁴ Or, a delivering.

¹⁵ Or, chief.

¹⁶ Heb. savour of rest.

Verse 37. "To pass under the rod."—There is probably here an allusion to the custom followed in marking out the tenth animal from the flock or herd, for sacred uses, and which has been mentioned in the note to Lev. xxvii. 2.

46. "Toward the south."—That is, towards Judea, which lay to the south-west of the river Khabour, near which Ezekiel resided. We have already mentioned the Oriental neglect of all but the cardinal directions in their statements of the relative bearings of different places.

CHAPTER XXI.

¹ Ezekiel prophesieth against Jerusalem with a sign of sighing. ⁸ The sharp and bright sword, ¹⁸ against Jerusalem, ²⁵ against the kingdom, ²⁸ and against the Ammonites.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face toward Jerusalem, and drop thy word toward the holy places, and prophesy against the land of Israel,

3 And say to the land of Israel, Thus saith the LORD ; Behold, I am against thee, and will draw forth my sword out of his sheath, and will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked.

4 Seeing then that I will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked, therefore shall my sword go forth out of his sheath against all flesh from the south to the north :

5 That all flesh may know that I the LORD have drawn forth my sword out of his sheath : it shall not return any more.

6 Sigh therefore, thou son of man, with the breaking of thy loins ; and with bitterness sigh before their eyes.

7 And it shall be, when they say unto thee, Wherefore sighest thou? that thou shalt answer, For the tidings; because it cometh: and every heart shall melt, and all hands shall be feeble, and every spirit shall faint, and all knees ¹shall be weak as water: behold, it cometh, and shall be brought to pass, saith the Lord God.

8 ¶ Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

9 Son of man, prophesy, and say, Thus saith the Lord; Say, A sword, a sword is sharpened, and also furbished:

10 It is sharpened to make a sore slaughter; it is furbished that it may glitter: should we then make mirth? ²it contemneth the rod of my son, as every tree.

11 And he hath given it to be furbished, that it may be handled: this sword is sharpened, and it is furbished, to give it into the hand of the slayer.

12 Cry and howl, son of man: for it shall be upon my people, it shall be upon all the princes of Israel: ³terrors by reason of the sword shall be upon my people: ⁴smite therefore upon thy thigh.

13 ⁵Because it is a trial, and what if the sword condemn even the rod? it shall be no more, saith the Lord God.

14 Thou therefore, son of man, prophesy, and smite thine ⁶hands together, and let the sword be doubled the third time, the sword of the slain: it is the sword of the great men that are slain, which entereth into their privy chambers.

15 I have set the ⁷point of the sword against all their gates, that their heart may faint, and their ruins be multiplied: ah! it is made bright, it is ⁸wrapped up for the slaughter.

16 Go thee one way or other, either on the right hand, ⁹or on the left, whithersoever thy face is set.

17 I will also smite mine hands together, and I will cause my fury to rest: I the Lord have said it.

18 ¶ The word of the Lord came unto me again, saying,

19 Also, thou son of man, appoint thee two ways, that the sword of the king of Babylon may come: both twain shall come forth out of one land: and choose thou a place, choose it at the head of the way to the city.

20 Appoint a way, that the sword may come to Rabbath of the Ammonites, and to Judah in Jerusalem the defenced.

21 For the king of Babylon stood at the ¹⁰parting of the way, at the head of the two ways, to use divination: he made his ¹¹arrows bright, he consulted with ¹²images, he looked in the liver.

22 At his right hand was the divination for Jerusalem, to appoint ¹³¹⁴captains, to open the mouth in the slaughter, to lift up the voice with shouting, to appoint battering rams against the gates, to cast a mount, and to build a fort.

23 And it shall be unto them as a false divination in their sight, ¹⁵to them that have sworn oaths: but he will call to remembrance the iniquity, that they may be taken.

24 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye have made your iniquity to be remembered, in that your transgressions are discovered, so that in all your doings your sins do appear; because, I say, that ye are come to remembrance, ye shall be taken with the hand.

25 ¶ And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end, 26 Thus saith the Lord God; Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high.

27 ¹⁶I will overturn, overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him.

28 ¶ And thou, son of man, prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord God concerning the Ammonites, and concerning their reproach; even say thou, The sword, the sword is drawn: for the slaughter it is furbished, to consume because of the glittering:

29 Whiles they see vanity unto thee,

Verse 21. "The king of Babylon stood at the parting of the way... to use divination."—In what follows we have a remarkable allusion to some of the principal processes by which the ancient heathen sought to obtain the direction and sanction of the gods they worshipped; and by a recourse to which, rulers and military commanders often relieved themselves from the responsibility of deciding, on doubtful occasions, their own course of action. The object of the present divination being to ascertain whether Nebuchadnezzar should first direct his arms against Jerusalem or against Rabbath-Ammon, the ceremonies were performed at the parting of the way, where it of course became necessary that his march should assume a definite object and direction.

"He made his arrows bright."—Here is a clear reference to the very-widely diffused ancient superstition of Belomancy, or divination by arrows. This was exhibited after various methods, some of which were little other than simple lots, under supposed divine control. The most common process was to mark a number of arrows, corresponding to the alternatives, with the names of the nations or places which were the subject of consideration. The arrows were then shaken together in a quiver, and the marks on the one first drawn forth decided the preference. Jerome thinks this process was here intended. Not unlike it was a method in use among the Arabs, and which they employed on all occasions, whether public or private. The arrows were three in number, unfeathered, and called achdad or aslam. Upon one of them was written "Command me, Lord;" upon the second, "Forbid, or prevent, Lord;" and the third was blank. These were put into a bag, which was held by the diviner, by whom also the lot was drawn. If the first was drawn, it conveyed of course an affirmative response; the second intimated a negative; and, when the blank arrow appeared, a second drawing was made. There was another method, in which an arrow was shot perpendicularly into the air, and the direction in which it fell indicated the road which was to be taken. As the prophet mentions that the arrows were made bright for the occasion, some writers imagine that this divination consisted in the inspection of the appearances which their polished heads might exhibit. In an account (in Purchas) of the capture of the ship 'Jacob,' of Bristol, by the Algerine pirates, in 1621, we are informed that every large ship had on board a sort of wizard or diviner, by whom the commander was guided in his determinations. When two great ships appeared in sight, the captain of the vessel in which the narrator was held prisoner was afraid to chase them, apprehending that they might prove Spanish men-of-war; on such occasions the diviner is consulted:—"Then have they two arrowes and a curtlexe, lying upon a pillow, naked; the arrowes are one for the Turkes and the other for the Christians; then the witch readeth, and the captaine of (or?) some other taketh the arrowes in their hand by the heads; and if the arrow for the Christians commeth over the head of the arrow for the Turkes, then doe they advance their sayles, and will not endure the fight, whatsoever they see; but if the arrow of the Turkes is found, in the opening of the hand, upon that of the Christians, then will they stay and encounter with any shippe whatsoever."

"He looked in the liver."—This form of divination, called Hepatoscopia, constituted the principal part of those presages which were derived from observations made upon the internal parts of animals slain for sacrifice. Indeed, so important was the liver esteemed in this view, that the whole system of divination by entrails sometimes took the name of Hepatoscopia from this its principal part. The liver was the first part inspected, and, if this appeared very bad, no observations were made on the other parts; any favourable appearances which they offered not being in this case thought worthy of attention. If the liver exhibited its natural healthy colour and condition, or if, further, its head was large, or if it was double, or there were two livers, and if the lobes inclined inwards, the signs were highly favourable, and success in any proposed object was deemed to be ensured. But nothing but dangers and misfortunes were foreboded when there was too much dryness, or a band between the parts, or if it was without a lobe, and still more when the liver itself was wanting—a prodigy which is said to have sometimes happened. The omens were also considered full of evil when the liver had any blisters or ulcers, if it was hard, thin, or discoloured, had any humour upon it, or if, in boiling, it became soft or was displaced. The signs which appeared on the concave part of the liver concerned the family of the person offering the sacrifice; but those on the gibbous side affected his enemies: if either of these parts were shrivelled, corrupted, or in any way unsound, the omen was unfortunate, but the reverse when it appeared sound and large. The place between the parts, in the middle, was called the gate, and it was regarded as most unfavourable when this part was closed or compressed. Hence the soothsayers warned Caracalla to take care of himself, "because the gates of the liver were closed." It was also considered most unfortunate if the liver happened to be cut in slaying or opening the victim.

22. "To appoint battering rams against the gates."—The word is simply the name of the "ram"—the word "battering" being added to point the sense, and, we doubt not, correctly, although it has been questioned that the battering-ram could be known so early. But, when an engine is not only called by the same name which it bore among the Greeks and Romans (ῥαμ, car, κρως, aries, "ram"), but is so mentioned as to show that it was applied to an exactly similar use, it seems as clear as possible that a battering engine called a ram, that is, a battering-ram, was used by the Babylonians. That it was employed by the Jews themselves is perhaps unlikely, as it is only mentioned by Ezekiel, and by him only as used in the warlike operations of Nebuchadnezzar against Jerusalem. That the Romans themselves considered the invention of the battering-ram to be of very high antiquity appears from the report, preserved by Pliny, that it was invented by Epeus during the siege of Troy; but, as nothing of the kind is mentioned by Homer, it is perhaps better to follow Vitruvius and Tertullian, who ascribe it to the Tyrians; and, as Nebuchadnezzar, who besieged Jerusalem, besieged also Tyre, there may be very good reason to suspect that the Tyrians became acquainted with the engine from its having been used against them by the Babylonians.

Of the form of the Babylonian engines and their mode of action, we know nothing, unless from the probability that, from the similarity of name and use, they were not unlike those which we find employed in after-times by the Romans, and of which some representations remain. The name seems to have been derived from the mode in which the machine acted resembling the butting of a ram, and, this analogy having been suggested, it was, rather fancifully, thought of completing it by giving the form of a ram's head to that of the instrument.

There were three kinds of battering-rams:—1. One that that was held in suspension, like a scale-beam, by means of cables or chains in a frame of strong timber. This must have been easier to work and apparently of greater power than the others, as a very heavy body suspended in the air requires no great strength to move it with much force. 2. In another kind of ram, the mighty instrument acted upon rollers, and its power appears to have been very great, although it must have been worked with more labour than the preceding. Its advantage over the other seems to have been that, while its force was scarcely inferior (some suppose it was greater), it acted with more precision. 3. There was another ram, which was not suspended or mounted on rollers, but borne and worked by manual strength. It is difficult to estimate the effect which such an instrument could have upon a strong wall, and perhaps it was only used for such purposes as did not require the greater momentum which the other engines necessarily possessed. However, on the column of Trajan, we see the Dacians besieging some Romans in a fortress, which they batter with a ram, worked only by the strength of their arms. The battering-ram was very generally covered by a moveable shed, called a tortoise (testudo), which protected the men by whom it was worked. In estimating the effect of these engines from the accounts of ancient writers, we must make large allowance for the difference between the then existing and the present standards. Sir Christopher Wren found the ram a very serviceable instrument for throwing down old walls, particularly in disjoining the stones; but it is nevertheless calculated (Grose's 'Military Antiquities,' vol. i. p. 384) that the momentum of one, 28 inches in diameter, 180 feet long, with a head of a ton and a half, weighing 41,112 lbs., and worked by a thousand men, would only be equal to a point-blank shot from a thirty-six pounder.

Various methods were employed by the besieged to avert or counteract the effect of the battering-ram, which, from the accounts of ancient sieges, appears to have been more dreaded by them than any other machine of war, and against which therefore their ingenuity and force were chiefly directed. Fire was thrown down upon the roof of the covering, or on the timbers that supported the ram, in the hope of burning the whole concern together: to deaden the force of the blow, large sacks of wool or chaff were let down to cover the place at which it was levelled. This seems to have annoyed the besiegers more than anything else; but Josephus describes them as counteracting it by tying sharp hooks to the end of long poles, and cutting the cords by which the bags were suspended. Sometimes also other machines were opposed to the ram, to break its force, or to turn aside its head while battering the works. Vast stones were also sometimes thrown down, in the hope of breaking off the head of the engine. Josephus frequently alludes to the battering-rams in his account of the siege of Jerusalem, but the most complete and satisfactory account is that which he gives in the account of the affairs at Jotapata, where the defence was conducted under his own direction. It is too long for us to copy; but may be found in his Book iii. ch. 7, sects. 19-21.

CHAPTER XXII.

¹ A catalogue of sins in Jerusalem. ¹³ God will burn them as dross in his furnace. ²³ The general corruption of prophets, priests, princes, and people.

MOREOVER the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

² Now, thou son of man, 'wilt thou 'judge, wilt thou judge the 'bloody city? yea, thou shalt 'shew her all her abominations.

³ Then say thou, Thus saith the Lord God; The city sheddeth blood in the midst of it, that her time may come, and maketh idols against herself to defile herself.

⁴ Thou art become guilty in thy blood that thou hast 'shed; and hast defiled thyself in thine idols which thou hast made; and thou hast caused thy days to draw near, and art come even unto thy years: therefore have I made thee a reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries.

⁵ Those that be near, and those that be far from thee, shall mock thee, which art 'infamous and much vexed.

⁶ Behold, the princes of Israel, every one were in thee to their 'power to shed blood.

⁷ In thee have they set light by father and mother: in the midst of thee have they dealt by 'oppression with the stranger: in thee have they vexed the fatherless and the widow.

⁸ Thou hast despised mine holy things, and hast profaned my sabbaths.

⁹ In thee are 'men that carry tales to shed blood: and in thee they eat upon the mountains: in the midst of thee they commit lewdness.

¹⁰ In thee have they 'discovered their fathers' nakedness: in thee have they humbled her that was 'set apart for pollution.

12 In thee have they taken gifts to shed blood; thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortion, and hast forgotten me, saith the Lord God.

13 ¶ Behold, therefore I have ¹⁷smitten mine hand at thy dishonest gain which thou hast made, and at thy blood which hath been in the midst of thee.

14 Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee? I the Lord have spoken it, and will do it.

15 And I will scatter thee among the heathen, and disperse thee in the countries, and will consume thy filthiness out of thee.

16 And thou ¹⁸shalt take thine inheritance in thyself in the sight of the heathen, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord.

17 And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

18 Son of man, the house of Israel is to me become dross: all they are brass, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midst of the furnace; they are even the ¹⁹dross of silver.

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye are all become dross, behold, therefore I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem.

20 ²⁰As they gather silver, and brass, and iron, and lead, and tin, into the midst of the furnace, to blow the fire upon it, to melt it; so will I gather you in mine anger and in my fury, and I will leave you there, and melt you.

21 Yea, I will gather you, and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, and ye shall be melted in the midst thereof.

22 As silver is melted in the midst of the furnace, so shall ye be melted in the midst thereof; and ye shall know that I the Lord have poured out my fury upon you.

23 ¶ And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

24 Son of man, say unto her, Thou art the land that is not cleansed, nor rained upon in the day of indignation.

25 There is a conspiracy of her prophets in the midst thereof, like a roaring lion ravening the prey; they ²¹have devoured souls; they have taken the treasure and precious things; they have made her many widows in the midst thereof.

26 Her priests have ²²violated my law, and have profaned mine holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they shewed difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from my sabbaths, and I am profaned among them.

27 Her ²³princes in the midst thereof are like wolves ravening the prey, to shed blood, and to destroy souls, to get dishonest gain.

28 And her prophets have daubed them with untempered mortar, seeing vanity, and divining lies unto them, saying, Thus saith the Lord God, when the Lord hath not spoken.

29 The people of the land have used ²⁴oppression, and exercised robbery, and have vexed the poor and needy: yea, they have oppressed the stranger ²⁵wrongfully.

30 And I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it: but I found none.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 The whoredoms of Aholah and Aholibah. 22 Aholibah is to be plagued by her lovers. 36 The prophet reproveth the adulteries of them both, and sheweth their judgments.

THE word of the Lord came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, there were two women, the daughters of one mother;

3 And they committed whoredoms in Egypt; they committed whoredoms in their youth: there were their breasts pressed, and there they bruised the teats of their virginity.

4 And the names of them were Aholah the elder, and Aholibah her sister: and they were mine, and they bare sons and daughters. Thus were their names; Samaria is Aholah, and Jerusalem Aholibah.

5 And Aholah played the harlot when she was mine; and she doted on her lovers, on the Assyrians her neighbours,

6 Which were clothed with blue, captains and rulers, all of them desirable young men, horsemen riding upon horses.

7 Thus she ¹committed her whoredoms with them, with all them that were ²the chosen men of Assyria, and with all on whom she doted: with all their idols she defiled herself.

8 Neither left she her whoredoms brought from Egypt: for in her youth they lay with her, and they bruised the breasts of her virginity, and poured their whoredom upon her.

9 Wherefore I have delivered her into the hand of her lovers, into the hand of the ³Assyrians, upon whom she doted.

10 These discovered her nakedness: they took her sons and her daughters, and slew her with the sword: and she became 'famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her.

11 And when her sister Aholibah saw this, ⁴she was more corrupt in her inordinate love than she, and in her whoredoms 'more than her sister in her whoredoms.

12 She doted upon the ⁵Assyrians her neighbours, captains and rulers clothed most gorgeously, horsemen riding upon horses, all of them desirable young men.

13 Then I saw that she was defiled, that they took both one way,

14 And that she increased her whoredoms: for when she saw men pourtrayed upon the wall, the images of the Chaldeans pourtrayed with vermillion,

15 Girded with girdles upon their loins, exceeding in dyed attire upon their heads, all of them princes to look to, after the manner of the Babylonians of Chaldea, the land of their nativity:

16 And ⁶as soon as she saw them with her eyes, she doted upon them, and sent messengers unto them into Chaldea.

17 And the ⁷Babylonians came to her into the bed of love, and they defiled her with their whoredom, and she was polluted with them, and her mind was ¹⁰alienated from them.

18 So she discovered her whoredoms, and discovered her nakedness: then my mind was alienated from her, like as my mind was alienated from her sister.

19 Yet she multiplied her whoredoms, in calling to remembrance the days of her youth, wherein she had played the harlot in the land of Egypt.

20 For she doted upon their paramours, whose flesh is as the flesh of asses, and whose issue is like the issue of horses.

21 Thus thou calledst to remembrance the lewdness of thy youth, in bruising thy teats by the Egyptians for the paps of thy youth.

22 ¶ Therefore, O Aholibah, thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will raise up thy lovers against thee, from whom thy mind is alienated, and I will bring them against thee on every side;

23 The Babylonians, and all the Chaldeans, Pekod, and Shoa, and Koa, and all the Assyrians with them: all of them desirable young men, captains and rulers, great lords and renowned, all of them riding upon horses.

24 And they shall come against thee with chariots, wagons, and wheels, and with an assembly of people, which shall set against thee buckler and shield and helmet round about: and I will set judgment before them, and they shall judge thee according to their judgments.

25 And I will set my jealousy against thee, and they shall deal furiously with thee: they shall take away thy nose and thine ears; and thy remnant shall fall by the sword: they shall take thy sons and thy daughters; and thy residue shall be devoured by the fire.

⁹ Heb. children of Babel.

¹⁰ Heb. loosed, or, disjointed.

26 They shall also strip thee out of thy clothes, and take away thy ¹¹fair jewels.

27 Thus will I make thy lewdness to cease from thee, and thy whoredom brought from the land of Egypt: so that thou shalt not lift up thine eyes unto them, nor remember Egypt any more.

28 For thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will deliver thee into the hand of them whom thou hatest, into the hand of them from whom thy mind is alienated:

29 And they shall deal with thee hatefully, and shall take away all thy labour, and shall leave thee naked and bare: and the nakedness of thy whoredoms shall be discovered, both thy lewdness and thy whoredoms.

30 I will do these things unto thee, because thou hast gone a whoring after the heathen, and because thou art polluted with their idols.

31 Thou hast walked in the way of thy sister; therefore will I give her cup into thine hand.

32 Thus saith the Lord God; Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large: thou shalt be laughed to scorn and had in derision; it containeth much.

33 Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness and sorrow, with the cup of astonishment and desolation, with the cup of thy sister Samaria.

34 Thou shalt even drink it and suck it out, and thou shalt break the sherds thereof, and pluck off thine own breasts: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

35 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast forgotten me, and cast me behind thy back, therefore bear thou also thy lewdness and thy whoredoms.

36 ¶ The LORD said moreover unto me; Son of man, wilt thou ¹²¹³judge Aholah and Aholibah? yea, declare unto them their abominations;

37 That they have committed adultery, and blood is in their hands, and with their idols have they committed adultery, and have also caused their sons, whom they bare unto me, to pass for them through the fire, to devour them.

38 Moreover this they have done unto me: they have defiled my sanctuary in the same day, and have profaned my sabbaths.

39 For when they had slain their children to their idols, then they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it; and, lo, ¹⁴thus have they done in the midst of mine house.

40 And furthermore, that ye have sent for men ¹⁵to come from far, unto whom a messenger was sent; and, lo, they came: for whom thou didst wash thyself, paintedst thy eyes, and deckedst thyself with ornaments, 41 And satest upon a ¹⁶stately bed, and a table prepared before it, ¹⁷whereupon thou hast set mine incense and mine oil.

42 And a voice of a multitude being at ease was with her: and with the men ¹⁸of the common sort were brought ¹⁹Sabeans from the wilderness, which put bracelets upon their hands, and beautiful crowns upon their heads.

43 Then said I unto her that was old in adulteries, Will they now commit ²⁰whoredoms with her, and she with them?

44 Yet they went in unto her, as they go in unto a woman that playeth the harlot: so went they in unto Aholah and unto Aholibah, the lewd women.

45 ¶ And the righteous men, they shall ²¹judge them after the manner of adulteresses, and after the manner of women that shed blood; because they are adulteresses, and blood is in their hands.

46 For thus saith the Lord God; I will bring up a company upon them, and will give them ²²to be removed and spoiled.

47 And the company shall stone them with stones, and ²³dispatch them with their swords; they shall slay their sons and their daughters, and burn up their houses with fire.

Verse 6. "Clothed with blue."—This is one of many intimations in Scripture of the esteem in which the blue colour was held by the Jews and other Oriental nations. This blue was probably the sky-colour. The robe of the ephod, in the splendid dress of the high-priest, was all blue; this was also a prominent colour in the hangings of the tabernacle; and the Hebrews were required to put a blue fringe upon the borders of their garment, and upon the fringe a ribbon of the same colour. The magnificent feast of the Persian king Ahasuerus was given in a place hung with white, green, and blue hangings, upon a pavement of red, blue, white, and black marble (Esth. i. 6). Then there is the present text, in which the distinguished among the Assyrians are described as clad in blue. Light blue is still a favourite colour among the Persians, in whose dress it is more extensively used than any other. The outer gown and the drawers are the most usual articles of this colour, and these are commonly of linen; and to have these blue is common among all classes of society. In Arabia also the dress of the women commonly consists of an ample shift and drawers of blue linen; and in Turkey and Syria the large wrapper in which the women envelop themselves is often of that colour. We know not therefore on what grounds Paxton finds that blue has sunk in the estimation of the Orientals, particularly as blue is also employed very prominently in the interior decoration of houses and public buildings.

14. "She saw men portrayed upon the wall, the images of the Chaldeans."—This possibly alludes to similar chambers of imagery among the Chaldeans, to those of the Egyptians, noticed under ch. viii.; but probably with the difference that the representations were generally in the human figure, rather than of animals and creeping things which the zoology of the Egyptians occasioned to abound in their exhibitions. However, we may confine our attention to the simple fact, here announced, that the Babylonians had "images" portrayed upon their walls. That the Chaldeans did exhibit various representations upon their walls is also intimated by Diodorus; but in such a manner as leaves it a matter of investigation how this was done. As Babylonia was not a country of stone, it is not likely that the inhabitants sculptured their walls. Yet perhaps the want of stone has been exaggerated. Blocks of marble obtained from the ruins of Babylon are used to some extent in the first-rate houses of Bagdad, for steps, curb-stones, and pavements; and a few sculptured specimens have been found. However, as it must be allowed that probably even the best buildings of Babylon were of brick, it is likely that the representations in view were painted on a plane surface. Possibly, as in Egypt, the wall was coated with a fine plaster on which the representations were made; or it may be that, at least in some instances, the representations were formed on bricks, the outer surface of which was enamelled. The present inhabitants of the country have the art of enamelling bricks in great perfection, but are prevented by their religion from representing any objects upon them; and that the ancient Babylonians had the art of enamelling bricks, and that they did represent objects on bricks so enamelled, we are assured from actual specimens found among the ruins. Beauchamp found several varnished bricks, on one of which was the figure of a lion, and on the other of the sun and moon; and Mignan found a flat fragment of calcareous sandstone, glazed with brown enamel on the superior surface, and bearing a raised ornamental figure in good relief. After this statement we may as well see what Diodorus says (lib. ii. 1). Mentioning two palaces in the city built by Semiramis, he states that the one on the west bank of the Euphrates was enclosed by a high and extensive wall built with well-burnt bricks. Within was another wall—a circular one—upon which was portrayed, on the bricks before they were burnt, all sorts of living creatures, represented to the life, with great art, in admirable colours. We think this suggests that the bricks were enamelled, the enamel, with the colours of the painting, being fixed by fire. At least this appears the most obvious interpretation as illustrated by the bricks we have mentioned. But to proceed:—Within this wall was another, the innermost; and on this wall were also represented all sorts of living creatures, expressed in the most lively colours. Among these Diodorus particularly mentions one which represented a grand hunting-scene of various wild animals, on a scale of four cubits high and upwards, and in which was seen Semiramis transfixing a panther with her dart, and, near her, Ninus her husband piercing a savage lion with his spear. The other palace, on the eastern bank of the river, was smaller and less magnificent. The other wall was however highly adorned with various statues of brass, and with paintings representing armies drawn up in battalia, and various scenes of hunting. This seems, taken altogether, a very adequate illustration of the images upon the walls to which the prophet refers, particularly as it is probable that the decorations of the interior surfaces of walls were of the same description; and the subjects and general appearance of such representations, rather than the manner in which they were executed, form the illustration proper to the present text; and the statement of Diodorus is therefore satisfactory for our purpose, though by no means so for the other.

Of the representations which once adorned the walls of Babylon, none of course can now be expected to remain, unless, perchance, some fragments should be entombed under the vast mounds which mark the site of that desolated city. But perhaps some idea may be formed of the style and taste of such representations, and particularly of the dress and appearance of the ancient Chaldeans, to which the prophet more especially refers, by consulting the figures engraved upon the ancient cylinders which we have had former occasions to notice, and some specimens of which have been already given.

15. "Exceeding in dyed attire upon their heads."—From this we understand two things, that the head-dress was ample, and that it was coloured: indeed the text is usually considered to express that it was parti-coloured; and so Boothroyd, "having various coloured turbans upon their heads." The comparison of this head-dress to an Oriental turban was suggested by Calmet, and it is in fact difficult to understand anything else. This, as is well known, consists of a cap (which, however, is sometimes wanting), around which is wound a long and large bandage, which goes round the head in many folds till it often attains a very large circumference. But it is remarkable that these are seldom parti-coloured, except among the representatives of the ancient Assyrians, the Koords, who generally wear turbans striped or plaided of different colours, most commonly red, blue, and white. We know also that the ancient Persians were noted for their love of various gay colours in their dresses generally, as the Greek writers sneered at them and called them peacocks on that account. Gesenius, however, does not agree that there is any reference to colour, but renders, "with long turbans hanging down." At present one or both ends of the head-bandage are sometimes allowed to hang down, particularly in travelling, to cover the neck; and if we again refer to the Koords, we find that they allow long strings, attached to the end of the bandage and forming a deep fringe, to hang down about and between their shoulders. In fact, both explanations so well concur in the head-dress of this people, that we might almost suspect it has descended unaltered from very ancient times. The peculiarities alluded to indeed are found only among the representatives of ancient nations. The Turks rarely wear parti-coloured turbans, neither do theirs hang down; and the Persians wear caps. But the proper head-dress of the Koords is parti-coloured, and hangs down; and to the head-dress of the Arabs, the people least altered by time, the same observations apply, although in other respects it differs widely from that of the Koords.

23. "Pekod, and Shoa, and Koa."—The Vulgate, as well as Aquila and some Hebrew writers, with a few modern interpreters, take these words to denote the titles of dignitaries and governors in the Babylonian court or empire. But no such titles occur in Daniel, where, if this conjecture were well founded, we might expect to find them. There are other reasons of great weight in favour of the more general opinion that the names denote certain portions of the Babylonian empire, or of nations subject to that empire. But the attempts made by Junius, Grotius, and others, to determine the situation and limits of the territories thus distinguished, seem to us so utterly unsatisfactory, and based on such bald etymological conjectures, that, knowing so little as we do of the subdivisions of the Babylonian empire, it seems best to be content with knowing that the people of Pekod, Shoa, and Koa, were subject to that empire, and served in its army against Jerusalem.

25. "They shall take away thy nose and thine ears."—These barbarous punishments have always been most extensively in use in the East, and examples, without number, of their infliction might be adduced from history, ancient and modern. As the mystical adultery of Israel and Judah is the subject of this allegory, it may be instructive to learn that in Egypt the noses of adulterous persons were cut off, and in Chaldea both their ears and noses. For some offences, in the East, the nose has been and is cut off; for others, the ears; and frequently both members at once. Indeed there seems at all times to have been a barbarous fancy for joining these two members in the same punishment. It does not appear that the Hebrews ever exercised such mutilations; but they must have known them well as inflicted by their heathen neighbours. That it was common in Persia, in Scriptural times, appears from the story of Zopyrus, a Persian officer, who cut off his own nose and ears, and otherwise mutilated himself in a very barbarous manner. He then went to the Babylonians, and pretended to have been thus treated by his sovereign, Darius Hystaspes; and the trust and confidence which his pretended desire of revenge procured for him enabled him to betray the place to his master. This shows that this mutilation must have been known as a Persian punishment: and the same testimony is furnished by the merciful direction of Artaxerxes Longimanus, that these persons convicted of offences for which the ears were usually cut off, should have the flaps of their turbans clipped instead. Even in modern times this punishment has been inflicted on persons of consideration. Shah Abbas, in particular, was wont to cut off the ears and noses of governors of provinces convicted of injustice. We believe that these punishments have of late years become less common in Western Asia than formerly; and that they are chiefly confined to the punishment of fraudulent dealings by shopkeepers and others. The ear is more frequently cut off than the nose, and oftener the lobe of the ear than the entire ear. The loss of both members at the same time occurs but rarely; and then chiefly through the anger of some despotic prince or governor, who can direct what punishment he pleases for his offending servants. Thus the notorious Djezzar of Acre seldom allowed those about him to remain long in possession of their ears and noses, and often deprived them of their eyes and hands. "There were," says Dr. Clarke, "persons standing by the door of his apartment, some without a nose, others without an arm, with one ear only, or one eye—'marked men,' as he termed them; persons bearing signs of having been instructed to serve their master with fidelity."

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Under the parable of a boiling pot, 6 is shewed the irrevocable destruction of Jerusalem. 15 By the sign of Ezekiel not mourning for the death of his wife, 19 is shewed the calamity of the Jews to be beyond all sorrow.

AGAIN in the ninth year, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, write thee the name of the day, even of this same day: the king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem this same day.

3 And utter a parable unto the rebellious house, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Set on a pot, set it on, and also pour water into it:

4 Gather the pieces thereof into it, even every good piece, the thigh, and the shoulder; fill it with the choice bones.

5 Take the choice of the flock, and 'burn also the bones under it, and make it boil well, and let them seethe the bones of it therein.

6 ¶ Wherefore thus saith the Lord God; Woe to the bloody city, to the pot whose scum is therein, and whose scum is not gone out of it! bring it out piece by piece; let no lot fall upon it.

7 For her blood is in the midst of her; she set it upon the top of a rock; she poured it not upon the ground, to cover it with dust;

8 That it might cause fury to come up to take vengeance; I have set her blood upon the top of a rock, that it should not be covered.

9 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; ^aWoe to the bloody city! I will even make the pile for fire great.

10 Heap on wood, kindle the fire, consume the flesh, and spice it well, and let the bones be burned.

11 Then set it empty upon the coals thereof, that the brass of it may be hot, and may burn, and that the filthiness of it may be molten in it, that the scum of it may be consumed.

12 She hath wearied herself with lies, and her great scum went not forth out of her: her scum shall be in the fire.

13 In thy filthiness is lewdness: because I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged, thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more, till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee.

14 I the LORD have spoken it: it shall come to pass, and I will do it; I will not go back, neither will I spare, neither will I repent; according to thy ways, and according to thy doings, shall they judge thee, saith the Lord God.

15 ¶ Also the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

16 Son of man, behold, I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke: yet neither shalt thou mourn nor weep, neither shall thy tears ²run down.

17 'Forbear to cry, make no mourning for the dead, bind the tire of thine head upon thee, and put on thy shoes upon thy feet, and cover not thy ¹lips, and eat not the bread of men.

18 So I spake unto the people in the morning: and at even my wife died; and I did in the morning as I was commanded.

19 ¶ And the people said unto me, Wilt thou not tell us what these things are to us, that thou doest so?

20 Then I answered them, The word of the LORD came unto me, saying, 21 Speak unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will profane my sanctuary, the excellency of your strength, the desire of your eyes, and ⁶that which your soul pitieth; and your sons and your daughters whom ye have left shall fall by the sword.

22 And ye shall do as I have done: ye shall not cover your lips, nor eat the bread of men.

23 And your tires shall be upon your heads, and your shoes upon your feet: ye shall not mourn nor weep; but ye shall pine away for your iniquities, and mourn one toward another.

24 Thus Ezekiel is unto you a sign: according to all that he hath done shall ye do: and when this cometh, ye shall know that I am the Lord God.

25 Also, thou son of man, shall it not be in the day when I take from them their strength, the joy of their glory, the desire of their eyes, and ⁷that whereupon they set their minds, their sons and their daughters, 26 That he that escapeth in that day shall come unto thee, to cause thee to hear it with thine ears?

27 In that day shall thy mouth be opened to him which is escaped, and thou shalt speak, and be no more dumb: and thou shalt be a sign unto them; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

Verse 3. "Set on a pot."—See the note on ch. xi. 3, which equally applies here, where we introduce, for the purpose of proximate illustration, a collection, showing the forms of the pots most frequently found among the remains of ancient Egypt. Besides the note to which we refer, some notices on the subject of culinary vessels may be found under different texts in the Pentateuch.

16. "The desire of thine eyes."—By this beautiful and touching term the prophet's wife is described, as appears from verse 18. The natural expressions of grief, in which the prophet was forbidden to indulge, even when "the desire of his eyes" was taken away with a stroke, require no explanation; but such of the conventional forms of mourning, also interdicted, as have not already engaged our attention, may be shortly noticed.

17. "Bind the tire of thine head upon thee."—In this and the other directions, the prophet is enjoined to proceed as people did in ordinary life to whom no bereavement had happened; and the forms of mourning are therefore rather implied than expressed. The present text doubtless refers to the covering of the head, which is often mentioned in Scripture as the act of a mourner, and as such has already been duly noticed.

"Put on thy shoes upon thy feet."—This directs the prophet not to go barefoot, as mourners usually did.

"Cover not thy lips."—To muffle or cover the lower part of the face is a natural and expressive act of mourning, which may be seen any day among our mourners that go about the streets. The present text, however, perhaps refers to something more formal than this—something such as was not long ago, and probably is still, practised by the Jews of Barbary, according to the description which Harmer quotes from Deau Addison. "They return from the grave to the house of the deceased, where one, who as chief mourner receives them, with his jaws tied up with a linen cloth, after the same manner that they bind up the dead. And by this the mourner is said to testify that he was ready to die with his friend. And thus muffled the mourner goes for seven days; during which time the rest of his friends come every twenty-four hours to pray with him."

"The bread of men."—This is a correct translation from our present copies: but some of the ancient versions translate, "the bread of mourners," and must therefore have read אֲנִים, "mourners," instead of אֲנָשִׁים, "men;" and this interpretation has been followed by Houbigant and many of the moderns. It certainly produces a very clear sense (see Jer. xvi. 7), and is the more probable as the very phrase, as thus corrected, occurs in a similar sense in Hos. ix. 4. However, the word as it stands becomes sufficiently expressive when employed in the strict sense, with a reference to its root, "to be sick, miserable," allowing the translation given by Newcome and some others, "Eat not the bread of wretched men."

CHAPTER XXV.

1 God's vengeance, for their insolency against the Jews, upon the Ammonites; 8 upon Moab and Seir; 12 upon Edom, 15 and upon the Philistines.

THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face 'against the Ammonites, and prophesy against them;

3 And say unto the Ammonites, Hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God; Because thou saidst, Aha, against my sanctuary, when it was profaned; and against the land of Israel, when it was desolate; and against the house of Judah, when they went into captivity;

4 Behold, therefore I will deliver thee to the 'men of the east for a possession, and they shall set their palaces in thee, and make their dwellings in thee: they shall eat thy fruit, and they shall drink thy milk.

5 And I will make Rabbah a stable for camels, and the Ammonites a couching-place for flocks: and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

6 For thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast clapped thine 'hands, and stamped with the 'feet, and rejoiced in 'heart with all thy despite against the land of Israel;

7 Behold, therefore I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and will deliver thee for 'a spoil to the heathen; and I will cut thee off from the people, and I will cause thee to perish out of the countries: I will destroy thee; and thou shalt know that I am the LORD.

8 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; 'Because that Moab and Seir do say, Behold, the house of Judah is like unto all the heathen;

9 Therefore, behold, I will open the 'side of Moab from the cities, from his cities which are on his frontiers, the glory of the country, Beth-jeshimoth, Baal-meon, and Kiriathaim,

10 Unto the men of the east 'with the Ammonites, and will give them in possession, that the Ammonites may not be remembered among the nations.

11 And I will execute judgments upon Moab; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

12 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; Because that Edom hath dealt against the house of Judah 'by taking vengeance, and hath greatly offended, and revenged himself upon them;

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; I will also stretch out mine hand upon Edom, and will cut off man and beast from it; and I will make it desolate from Teman; and 'they of Dedan shall fall by the sword.

14 And I will lay my vengeance upon Edom by the hand of my people Israel: and they shall do in Edom according to mine anger and according to my fury; and they shall know my vengeance, saith the Lord God.

CHAP. XXV.—The prophecies in this chapter, directed against the guilty neighbours of the Jews, are the same in substance with those which have already engaged our attention in Isaiah and Jeremiah, and which therefore require little further remark.

Verse 5. "I will make Rabbah a stable for camels, and the Ammonites a couching-place for flocks."—See the end of the note on Rabbah, in Jer. xlix. 2; and also the note on Isa. xv. 2, which, although it primarily refers to Moab, is equally applicable here. With the word "Ammonites" we must of course understand "the chief city" or "cities" of the Ammonites: for it is not expressive of desolation that flocks should pasture anywhere in the open country; but it is eminently so, that they should be stabled among the ruins and fed upon the sites of cities once populous and eminent. That this is the sense, is shown by the context, as well as by other passages. When Mr. Buckingham visited Rabbah-Ammon, he halted for the night with a tribe of Arabs, who were found encamped among the ruins, in a hollow behind the top of the theatre. Next morning he inserts in his journal,—"During the night I was almost entirely prevented from sleeping by the bleating of the flocks, the neighing of mares, and the barking of dogs." ('Travels among the Arab Tribes,' pp. 72, 73.)

7. "I will cause thee to perish out of the countries."—In verse 10 it is also said that the Ammonites shall "not be remembered among the nations." These passages strikingly point to the difference between their case and that of the Hebrews. The latter, in the midst of their troubles and dispersions, have survived to this day as a distinct people; and their renowned land has never, since they lost it, ceased to be known and regarded with interest because they once occupied it. But for ages no one has lived claiming a descent from the Ammonites; and for ages their existence as a nation, or even as a tribe, has been extinct. And as to their country, it has only been within these few years that it has been recognized by European travellers, or that any information concerning it has been acquired. Till then its situation generally was collected from the Scriptural intimations, which, with some information from ancient writers concerning its towns, formed the amount of what was known concerning the land of Ammon. And even now, while the antiquarian traveller knows that he is in that land, recognizes the name which the Bible has made familiar, marks the position and character of sites and ruins, and, whether he intends it or not, collects information to confirm the predictions of ancient prophecy—the few inhabitants, while they preserve the names which the Ammonites gave to their towns, have no traditions concerning that people, nor know whose land it is that they occupy. So utterly has the memory of Ammon perished, that it would at this day be unknown that such a people ever existed, or that the country in question was ever in their possession, were it not that the Sacred Book preserves the record of their history and doom.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 Tyrus, for insulting against Jerusalem, is threatened. 7 The power of Nebuchadrezzar against her. 15 The mourning and astonishment of the sea at her fall.

AND it came to pass in the eleventh year, in the first day of the month, that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, because that Tyrus hath said against Jerusalem, Aha, she is broken that was the gates of the people: she is turned unto me: I shall be replenished, now she is laid waste:

3 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Tyrus, and will cause many nations to come up against thee, as the sea causeth his waves to come up.

4 And they shall destroy the walls of Tyrus, and break down her towers: I will also scrape her dust from her, and make her like the top of a rock.

5 It shall be a place for the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God: and it shall become a spoil to the nations.

6 And her daughters which are in the field shall be slain by the sword; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

7 ¶ For thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will bring upon Tyrus Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, a king of kings, from the north, with horses, and with chariots, and with horsemen, and companies, and much people.

8 He shall slay with the sword thy daughters in the field: and he shall make a fort against thee, and 'cast a mount against thee, and lift up the buckler against thee.

9 And he shall set engines of war against thy walls, and with his axes he shall break down thy towers.

10 By reason of the abundance of his horses their dust shall cover thee: thy walls shall shake at the noise of the horsemen, and of the wheels, and of the chariots, when he shall enter into thy gates, 'as men enter into a city wherein is a made breach.

11 With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets: he shall slay thy people by the sword, and thy strong garrisons shall go down to the ground.

12 And they shall make a spoil of thy riches, and make a prey of thy merchandise: and they shall break down thy walls, and destroy 'thy pleasant houses: and they shall lay thy stones and thy timber and thy dust in the midst of the water.

13 'And I will cause the noise of thy songs to cease; and the sound of thy harps shall be no more heard.

14 And I will make thee like the top of a rock: thou shalt be a place to spread nets upon; thou shalt be built no more: for I the LORD have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

15 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God to Tyrus; Shall not the isles shake at the sound of thy fall, when the wounded cry, when the slaughter is made in the midst of thee?

16 Then all the princes of the sea shall come down from their thrones, and lay away their robes, and put off their brodered garments: they shall clothe themselves with 'trembling; they shall sit upon the ground, and shall tremble at every moment, and be astonished at thee.

17 And they shall take up a 'lamentation for thee, and say to thee, How art thou destroyed, that wast inhabited 'of seafaring men, the renowned city, which wast strong in the sea, she and her inhabitants, which cause their terror to be on all that haunt it!

18 Now shall the isles tremble in the day of thy fall; yea, the isles that are in the sea shall be troubled at thy departure.

19 For thus saith the Lord God; When I shall make thee a desolate city, like the cities that are not inhabited; when I shall bring up the deep upon thee, and great waters shall cover thee;

20 When I shall bring thee down with them that descend into the pit, with the people of old time, and shall set thee in the low parts of the earth, in places desolate of old, with them that go down to the pit, that thou be not inhabited; and I shall set glory in the land of the living;

21 I will make thee 'a terror, and thou shalt be no more: though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again, saith the Lord God.

Verse 2. "Tyrus."—This prophecy, which so circumstantially predicts the downfall of Tyre, and its condition to remote ages, was delivered at a time when that city was in the height of its prosperity and power. From the interest necessarily connected with whatever relates to so remarkable a people as the Tyrians, and still more from the striking corroborations which may be obtained, from different sources, of the prophecies which relate to their history and condition, there are few passages of Scripture which afford room for more ample and interesting illustration than the present chapter. As the separate illustration of every point would occupy our space more fully than our limits allow, we judge it preferable to give a general historical notice of Tyre; adding, under verse 4, a series of brief notices from successive travellers, to illustrate its decline and present condition; thus enabling the reader to trace the historical connection and marked fulfilment of the prophecies which relate to that renowned city.

We have already taken some slight (but, for our purpose, sufficient) notice of the origin of Tyre, as a colony of Sidon (see the notes on Josh. xix. 24; Judges i. 31), and shall not here return to the subject, or inquire into the date—certainly very ancient—at which this Sidonian settlement was formed. It is however to be borne in mind that ancient history and geography recognize two Tyres, differently situated. The more ancient Tyre was placed on the shore of the continent; and the other upon a small island, about one-third of a mile from the shore. As it was only after the Old Tyre was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, as predicted in the present chapter, that the capital seat of the Tyrians was removed to the island—this must of course be understood as the Tyre of Scripture history. Whether it were also the sole Tyre of prophecy, we regard as a distinct question. It is certain that some of the prophecies are best understood with reference to the Old Tyre, and others as respecting the New Tyre; and if the latter did not exist when the prophecies which may be supposed to regard it were delivered, no objection can arise from this circumstance, when we reflect that all things are present to Him in whose name the prophets spoke, and that prophecy actually does, in other cases, sometimes relate the history and final condition of that which had no existence when the prophecy was delivered. It is indeed easy to understand that the prophets should speak in the wide sense of Tyre, the city of the Tyrians, as continuously connected with their history, and therefore proceeding with their history from the old town to the new. We have given this explanation in order to dispense with the necessity for the one of Bishop Newton, although that still remains probable and well-supported:—this is, that although the insular Tyre only became the sole city after the continental town had been destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, it had previously, and from very ancient times, been built upon, and formed part of Tyre, and is comprehended under that name. Whence it follows that the Tyre of Scripture history and prophecy embraced both the continental and insular portions of the town. It is indeed scarcely credible that the Tyrians, as a body of commercial navigators, could have overlooked the advantages offered by an island so close to their shore; and that they did not, and that it was regarded as part of Tyre, is almost demonstrated by the fact that the ancient authors cited by Newton bear witness to the remote antiquity of the insular city. It is a remarkable circumstance that Pliny (Nat. Hist. v. 19), in describing the circumference of Tyre as nineteen Roman miles, expressly includes the continental and insular Tyre together; adding, that the then existing (insular) Tyre had no more than twenty-two stades.

RUINS ON THE COAST OF TYRE.—CASSAS.

Concerning the continental Tyre we have no information but that which the Bible offers; and from which we learn that, according to the ideas of the time, it was a large, wealthy, and splendid city. That it did exist is acknowledged by the Greek writers, but they could furnish no information, as it had been utterly destroyed before their time. It was never rebuilt, and not the least trace of its ruins can be discovered; nor could indeed its site be determined, did we not know that it was on the coast opposite the island. Hence, having given a representation of the insular Tyre under Josh. xix., and wishing here to furnish some idea of the continental desolation, we have had no other alternative than to take an illustration characterising the desolation of the territory rather than of the exact spot; the ruins which our present engraving exhibits being a few miles from the site, and will be considered interesting as a general illustration.

When Nebuchadnezzar gained the city, after a siege of thirteen years, the previous removal by the inhabitants of their valuable effects to the island, and to other places beyond his reach, as explained under Jer. xliii., so disappointed him that he completely destroyed the place, and marched to Egypt. However, although the Tyrians had evaded the spoliation of their valuable property, they became subject to the Babylonians, as the prophets foretold. Indeed it would seem as if the royal family of Tyre, like that of Judah, had been carried into captivity, for Josephus cites the Phœnician annals, as showing that, after this time, the Tyrians received their kings from Babylon. The duration of their subjection was limited by prophecy to seventy years (Isa. xxiii. 15, 16, 17), that is, to the termination of the Babylonian monarchy, when the Tyrians, with some other remote nations, were restored to comparative independence by the Persians. They then seem to have been allowed the entire management of their own affairs, with the only discoverable limitation, that they were obliged to furnish subsidies and vessels to the Persians, when required. Accordingly they did render very valuable assistance to the Persians in the famous war of Xerxes against the Greeks; and Herodotus (viii. 67) particularly mentions the kings of Tyre and Sidon as present at the council of war held by the Persian monarch. Under the Persians, the people of Tyre recovered much of their former wealth and importance; and such were their resources, and the strength and advantageous situation of their insular city, that they were enabled to stay the progress of Alexander's arms longer than any other place under the Persian dominion. He spent eight months before Tyre, and at last only succeeded by constructing an embankment or causeway between the main land and the island, giving his troops and engines free access to the latter. The Tyrians still however made a valiant defence, which, with the delay they had occasioned, so provoked the conqueror, that, with a cruelty not unusual with him, and which has left a great stain upon his character, he crucified two thousand of the inhabitants, and sold thirty thousand for slaves; eight thousand had been slain in the storming and capture of the city. The town itself he set on fire. Yet it recovered once more; and only nineteen years after was able to withstand the fleets and armies of Antigonus, and sustained a siege of fifteen months before it was taken. After this it endured that frequent change of masters to which all this region was subject, in the continual contests between the Greek kings of Egypt and Syria, until it was finally, with all the rest, absorbed into the vast Roman empire. By that time Tyre had again greatly declined in importance.

Alexander did the Tyrians more evil than the ruin of their city and the slaughter of its people, by the foundation of Alexandria in Egypt, which gradually drew away from them that foreign traffic through which they had enjoyed unexampled prosperity for not less than a thousand years. With the loss of their monopolies and colonial establishments, the skill and enterprise of the Tyrians still, however, sufficed to keep Tyre in a respectable station as an individual town, and such it remained under the Romans. Many of the people of Tyre in the end embraced the Jewish religion; and that city was one of the first that received the faith of Christ, who himself visited the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, and miraculously healed the woman of Canaan's daughter. Paul found there some faithful disciples on his journey to Jerusalem; and in the persecution under Dioclesian, there were many sincere believers at Tyre, who "counted not their own lives dear" unto them. This, as well as most of the other circumstances we have related, appear very clearly to have been predicted by the prophets. (See in particular, Ps. xlv. 12; lxxii. 10; Isa. xxxiii. 18.) The decline of Tyre, even as a private town, may soon be told. It passed, with the rest of Syria, to the Arabs; in 1124 it was taken from them by the Crusaders; Saladin made an ineffectual attempt to recover it in 1187; and it was finally taken, in 1291, by Khalil, the Sultan of Egypt, who nearly razed it to the ground, that it might never again afford a stronghold or harbour to the Christians. The Turks took it from the Egyptian Mamelukes in 1516.

These facts are chiefly of interest as connecting the prophecies concerning Tyre; for it appears, as already intimated, that while Ezekiel speaks primarily of the destruction of continental Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, he, by a transition not unusual in Scripture, glances at the subsequent destruction of the insular Tyre by Alexander, and predicts its future history and condition. Even if this were disputed in the case of Ezekiel, the prophetic notice of the latter would be clear from Zechariah, who lived after the old Tyre had been destroyed, and yet foretells the destruction of Tyre, which must necessarily have been that of the insular Tyre by Alexander.

4. "They shall destroy the walls of Tyrus."—This was true both of the old and new Tyre: the walls of the former having been destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, and those of the insular Tyre by Alexander. The wall was afterwards rebuilt—doubtless on the old foundations, and with the old materials—but these were destroyed by the sultan Khalil, and, as stated in the preceding note, only the foundations can now be traced. The strength of the wall which opposed the efforts of Alexander is particularly noticed by Arrian, who states that opposite to the mole formed by the Macedonians, it was 150 feet high, and of proportionable thickness, constructed with great stones strongly cemented together.

5. "A place for the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea."—The last clause must clearly refer this to the insular, or (as the causeway of Alexander made it) peninsular Tyre. Indeed, besides the considerations stated in the preceding note, it will be observed that nothing has hitherto been said of Nebuchadnezzar; but, in these introductory verses, the prophet seems rather to speak of the ultimate result of the various succeeding desolations to which Tyre should be exposed, and of which Nebuchadnezzar's desolation of old Tyre was only the commencement.

The image of desolation employed, that of fishers spreading their nets to dry on the site of a once populous city, is as natural for a place on the coast, as that of feeding and stabling cattle is for inland desolation. And as fishermen naturally spread their nets on any convenient place, on a naked rock or beach, it only becomes necessary to say that Tyre has become a fishing station, to show that this prophecy has been literally accomplished, without our being required to find that some traveller has happened to say that he saw nets spread upon the strand where old Tyre stood. But this has been said by travellers even of the new or peninsular Tyre. This town seems to have been in a tolerably prosperous condition, though wofully different from what it once was, till it was destroyed by the Mameluke Sultan. From this it never recovered; and we no more find it mentioned as an existing town. Our best course here will be to introduce the substance of observations made by successive travellers, beginning with Benjamin of Tudela, who visited the place while possessed by the Crusaders, and whose account is instructive, though dashed with his usual extravagance in what he says about old Tyre. "One day's journey from Sidon is New Tyrus, furnished with a most commodious haven, which it containeth within itself, and receiveth ships between two towers built on both sides: so that a brazen chain being extended from one tower to the other by the publicans, serving for the gathering of customs, all entrance and going out of ships by night may be hindered, and no man can possibly convey any thing taken out of the ships. Nor do I think any haven in the world to be found like unto this. The city itself, as I have said, is goodly, and in it there are about 400 Jews, some of whom are very skilful in disciplinary readings, and especially Ephraim, the Egyptian judge, and Mair, and Carchasona, and Abraham the head of the college. Some of the Jews living there have ships at sea for the cause of gain. There are workmen in glass there, who make glass, called Tyrian glass"—[This by the way, was a very ancient manufacture at Tyre]—"the most excellent, and of the greatest estimation in all countries. The best and most approved sugar is also found here. Ascending the walls of New Tyrus, Old Tyrus is seen overwhelmed and covered with the sea, distant a cast out of a sling from the new; but if any please to take sea in a skiff or boat, he seeth the tower, market-places, streets, and palaces in the bottom. But New Tyrus is famous for public traffic, whereto they resort from all places."

Passing a long interval of time, we come to Sandys, who was at Tyre about a century after it fell to the Turks. After alluding to its former greatness, he adds: "But this once famous Tyrus is now no other than an heape of ruines; yet they have a reverent respect, and doe instruct the pensive beholder with their exemplarie frailtie." It had two harbours, of which that on the north side was, as he thought, the best in all the Levant, and which the corsairs entered at pleasure; the other was encumbered and choked up with the ruins of the city. Later, in the same century, the place is noticed by Thevenot, Dumont, and Lebrun, in their respective 'Voyages au Levant.' They describe it to the same effect as Maundrell, quoted below. Lebrun particularly notices the abundance of fish, and the bad state of the harbour. There were but a few miserable dwellings (Dumont says twelve or fifteen), inhabited by Turks and Arabs.

The learned Huet (in his 'Demonstratio Evangelica,' first published in 1679) says that he knew a Jesuit named Hadrian Parvillarius, a candid and learned man, who had spent ten years in Syria, and who related to him how strongly this prediction of Ezekiel was brought to his mind when he approached the ruins of Tyre, and beheld the rocks stretching forth to the sea, and the large stones strewed upon the shore, made smooth by the sun, the waves, and the wind, and on which the fishermen dried their nets. To the same purpose follows our own admirable traveller, Maundrell (1697). "The city, standing in the sea, upon the peninsula, promises at a distance something very magnificent. But when you come to it, you see no similitude of that glory for which it was renowned in ancient times, and which the prophet Ezekiel describes. On the north side it has an old Turkish ungarrisoned castle, besides which you see nothing but a mere Babel of broken walls, pillars, vaults, &c., there being not so much as an entire house left. Its present inhabitants are only a few poor wretches, harbouring themselves in the vaults, and subsisting chiefly upon fishing; who seem to be preserved in this place by Divine Providence as a visible argument how God has fulfilled his word concerning Tyre, that it should be as the top of a rock, a place for fishers to dry their nets on." The east end of an ancient Christian church remained tolerably entire: near it was a staircase, and Maundrell got upon the top, and had a full prospect over the peninsula, the isthmus, and neighbouring shore. The island appeared of a circular form, containing about forty acres, and at the utmost margin of the land the foundations might be traced of the wall by which it was anciently encircled. The island makes with the isthmus two large bays, which were in part defended from the ocean each by a long ridge resembling a mole, stretching directly out on both sides from the head of the island; but whether these were walls or rocks, the work of nature or art, Maundrell could not discover.

Dr. Shaw says, that the best of the harbours, that to the north, was in his time so choked up with sand and rubbish, that even the boats of the poor fishermen who now and then visit this once renowned emporium could only with difficulty obtain admittance. Volney's avowed infidelity renders him a valuable witness to the fulfilment of prophecy—which service to truth he often unconsciously renders. Besides quoting him with this view, we shall add such particulars from his general account of the place as may serve to complete the preceding intimations concerning its situation and condition. The peninsula projects into the sea in the form of a mallet with an oval head; this head is of solid rock, covered with a brown cultivable earth, which forms a small plain about eight hundred paces long by four hundred broad. The isthmus, which joins the plain to the continent, is of pure sea sand. The difference of soil renders the ancient insular state of this plain, before Alexander joined it to the sea by a mole, very manifest, since it is clearly seen that the sea, by covering the whole with sand, has enlarged it by successive accumulations, and formed the present isthmus. The port on the north side appears to have been formed by art, but is so choked up that children pass it without being wet above the middle. From the towers at its entrance began a line of walls which, after surrounding the basin, enclosed the whole island; but, as in Maundrell's time, it can only be traced by the foundations which run along the shore. On approaching the continent from the island, the ruins of arches at equal distances are perceived, as shown in our engraving under Josh. xix., having at top a channel three feet wide by two and a half deep, lined by a cement harder than the stones themselves. This was an aqueduct which conveyed water to the shore in the first instance, and which the inhabitants, turning to good account the mole of Alexander, afterwards continued across the isthmus to the island. When Volney was there, the huts had increased to a poor village, situated at the junction of the isthmus with the ancient island. "The whole village contains only fifty or sixty poor families, who live but indifferently on the produce of their little grounds and a trifling fishery. The houses they occupy are no longer, as in the time of Strabo, edifices three or four stories high, but wretched huts ready to crumble to pieces." Since Volney's time this place has increased to a small and miserable looking town, and a peddling trade has arisen, which serves more (like the villages at Thebes and Memphis) to impress the degradation of Tyre upon the minds of those who have heard the story of its ancient renown, than would its abandonment to solitary ruin. "Some miserable cabins," says Jolliffe, "ranged in irregular lines, and dignified with the name of streets, and a few buildings of a rather better description, occupied by the officers of government, compose nearly the whole of the town. It still makes, indeed, some languishing efforts at commerce, and continues annually to export to Alexandria cargoes of silk and tobacco, but the amount merits no consideration. The noble dust of Alexander, traced by the imagination till found stopping a beer-barrel, would scarcely afford a stronger contrast of grandeur and debasement than Tyre, at the period of being besieged by that conqueror, and the modern town of Tsour erected on its ashes." ('Letters from Palestine,' p. 13.) The modern name, Tsour, is precisely the same as that which the ancient city bears (צור, a rock) in the Hebrew Scriptures.

10. "Thy walls shall shake at the noise of the horsemen, and of the wheels."—This must necessarily refer to the continental Tyre, as of course neither horses nor chariots could approach that on the island.

12. "They shall lay thy stones and thy timber and thy dust in the midst of the water."—In this verse the prophetic vision seems to go on to the circumstances attending the desolation of the insular Tyre by Alexander. We are told that the conqueror should make a spoil of the riches of Tyre, which was true of Alexander—at least more true than of Nebuchadnezzar, of whom the same prophet declares that he should be disappointed of the anticipated spoil, and that he should therefore have Egypt for his reward. The transition from Nebuchadnezzar to the Macedonians is indicated by a change of person: the doings of the former having been indicated in the singular number—he shall do this and that; then it comes abruptly—"they shall make a spoil," &c. But the change would be clear enough without this. The principal cause of the difference was that the Tyrians, on the latter occasion, trusted with more confidence to the safety derived from their insular position and their fortifications, than they had when besieged by Nebuchadnezzar on the continent; and hence they did not, at least to the same extent, take the precaution of removing their valuable property and merchandise beyond the reach of the invader.

The passage we have cited at the head of this note seems most clearly to refer to the manner in which Alexander employed the ruins of the continental Tyre to facilitate the conquest of the insular; and hence it furnishes a remarkable instance of most definite prophecy, analogous to that which foretold the very manner in which Babylon should be taken by Cyrus. Alexander having no fleet, and seeing that nothing could be hoped from an ordinary course of operations against Tyre, conceived, as we have already intimated, the bold idea of forming a mole from the continent to the island, which might enable him to bring his troops and military engines underneath its walls. The difficulties of this enterprise, which has in all ages been the wonder and admiration of military men, are fully stated by Q. Curtius, who says that the soldiers were in despair when the work was proposed to them; for the sea was so deep, that it seemed impossible to them, even with the assistance of the gods, to fill it up; and besides, where could they find stones large enough and trees tall enough for so prodigious an undertaking? Alexander encouraged them, and desired them to recollect that the ruins of the old town afforded plenty of stone suitable for the purpose, and that timber suitable for their boats and towers might be obtained from the neighbouring mountains of Lebanon. Arrian also notices that there was plenty of stone not far off, with a sufficient quantity of timber and rubbish to fill up the vacant spaces. (Compare Q. Curtius, iii. 2, 3, with Arrian, ii. 18.) As the mole when nearly completed was swept away by a storm, and a new one had to be constructed, the materials must have been well exhausted, and this, while it accounts for the entire disappearance of Old Tyre, does most strikingly corroborate the prediction that its stones, its timber, and its very dust (rubbish) should be laid in the midst of the water. See also verse 19, "I shall bring up the deep upon thee, and great waters shall cover thee." We wish to note the emphasis to be placed on the word "lay thy stones," &c., in the present text, as implying a deliberate act, corresponding to the construction of the mole which was composed of successive layers of stones, rubbish, and timber. (See Q. Curtius, as above.)

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 The rich supply of Tyrus. 26 The great and unrecoverable fall thereof.

THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Now, thou son of man, take up a lamentation for Tyrus;

3 And say unto Tyrus, O thou that art situate at the entry of the sea, which art a merchant of the people for many isles, Thus saith the Lord God; O Tyrus, thou hast said, I am ¹of perfect beauty.

4 Thy borders are in the ²midst of the seas, thy builders have perfected thy beauty.

5 They have ³made all thy ship boards of fir trees of Senir: they have taken cedars from Lebanon to make masts for thee.

6 Of the oaks of Bashan have they made thine oars; ⁴the company of the Ashurites have made thy benches of ivory, brought out of the isles of Chittim.

7 Fine linen with broidered work from Egypt was that which thou spreadest forth to be thy sail; ⁵blue and purple from the isles of Elishah was that which covered thee.

8 The inhabitants of Zidon and Arvad were thy mariners: thy wise men, O Tyrus, that were in thee, were thy pilots.

9 The ancients of Gebal and the wise men thereof were in thee thy ⁷⁸calkers: all the ships of the sea with their mariners were in thee to occupy thy merchandise.

10 They of Persia and of Lud and of Phut were in thine army, thy men of war: they hanged the shield and helmet in thee; they set forth thy comeliness.

11 The men of Arvad with thine army were upon thy walls round about, and the Gammadims were in thy towers: they hanged their shields upon thy walls round about; they have made thy beauty perfect.

12 Tarshish was thy merchant by reason of the multitude of all kind of riches; with silver, iron, tin, and lead, they traded in thy fairs.

13 Javan, Tubal, and Meshech, they were thy merchants: they traded the persons of men and vessels of brass in thy ⁹market.

14 They of the house of Togarmah traded in thy fairs with horses and horsemen and mules.

15 The men of Dedan were thy merchants; many isles were the merchandise of thine hand: they brought thee for a present horns of ivory and ebony.

16 Syria was thy merchant by reason of the multitude of ¹⁰the wares of thy making: they occupied in thy fairs with emeralds, purple, and broidered work, and fine linen, and coral, and ¹¹agate.

17 Judah, and the land of Israel, they were thy merchants: they traded in thy market wheat of Minnith, and Pannag, and honey, and oil, and ¹²balm.

18 Damascus was thy merchant in the multitude of the wares of thy making, for the multitude of all riches; in the wine of Helbon, and white wool.

19 Dan also and Javan ¹³going to and fro occupied in thy fairs: bright iron, cassia, and calamus, were in thy market.

20 Dedan was thy merchant in ¹⁴precious clothes for chariots.

21 Arabia, and all the princes of Kedar, ¹⁵they occupied with thee in lambs, and rams, and goats: in these were they thy merchants.

22 The merchants of Sheba and Raamah, they were thy merchants: they occupied in thy fairs with chief of all spices, and with all precious stones, and gold.

23 Haran, and Canneh, and Eden, the merchants of Sheba, Asshur, and Chilmad, were thy merchants.

24 These were thy merchants in ¹⁶all sorts of things, in blue ¹⁷clothes, and broidered work, and in chests of rich apparel, bound with cords, and made of cedar, among thy merchandise.

25 The ships of Tarshish did sing of thee in thy market: and thou wast replenished, and made very glorious in the midst of the seas.

CHAP. XXVII.—We now arrive at a very singular and interesting chapter, giving an account of the commercial relations of Tyre, to the satisfactory elucidation of which, in all the lines of inquiry which it opens, the research and study of years might be advantageously applied. If we reflect on the extensive ramifications of the commerce which this enterprising people conducted, we shall find, with Dr. Vincent, that if we consider this chapter “only as historical, without any reference to the divine authority of the prophet, it is not only the most early but the most authentic record extant, relative to the commerce of the ancients.” Something has been done towards its illustration by Bochart, Michaelis, Rosenmüller, Heeren, Vincent, and some others; but upon the whole, the hints and allusions which it offers have not yet received that sort of treatment, through which it might be made to throw a strong light upon many passages of Scripture and upon the early history of commerce. It has only hitherto been treated incidentally, whereas it requires to become the principal subject of attention to minds prepared by long study and instruction.

The limits and plan of this work necessarily confine us to a few observations on the principal facts which this chapter offers, and in performing this duty we shall avail ourselves of the researches of the authors we have named, particularly of Dr. Vincent, whose commencing observations may suitably introduce the ensuing notes:—“Let us, in conformity to the opening of the prophecy, consider Tyre as a city of great splendour, magnificently built, and inhabited by merchants, whose wealth rivalled the opulence of kings—who traded to the east by the intervention of Arabia*, and to the west by means of the Mediterranean: let us add to this, that in ages prior to the celebrity of Greece and Rome, their fleets had braved the dangers of the ocean, and their people were the only mariners who were not limited within the circle of the Mediterranean; that they penetrated eastward through the Straits of Death, which were the termination of the Red Sea, and westward beyond the Pillars of Hercules, which were the boundaries of all knowledge to every nation but their own; that they advanced northward to the British Isles, and southward to the coast of Africa on the Atlantic Ocean. Let us contemplate these enterprises as completed by the efforts of a single city which possibly did not possess a territory of twenty miles in circumference; which sustained a siege of thirteen years against all the power of Babylon, and another of eight months against Alexander, in the full career of his victories; and then judge whether a commercial spirit debases the nature of man, or unfits it for the exertion of determined valour; or whether any single city, recorded in history, is worthy to be compared with Tyre.” (‘Commerce and Navigation of the Ancients,’ vol. ii. p. 624-5.)

Verse 5. “Thy ship boards of fir trees of Senir.”—Senir is understood to be the same as Sirion, the Phœnician name for Hermon, a mountain of Lebanon (Deut. iii. 9). Our knowledge of the firs of Lebanon is very limited indeed. It is very possible, however, that that here intended may have been the Pinus Laricio, or Corsican pine, which very much resembles the Pinus sylvestris, or Scotch fir, in appearance as well as in the structure of the cone. The wood is however more compact and flexible than that of the Scotch fir, and is therefore better adapted to the purpose indicated in the text—the planking of vessels. We are however persuaded that the word ברוש berosh was a general name among the Hebrews for several kindred of trees, and not for one species in particular. We do not know what species of fir grew in their country and neighbourhood; but as it may be conjectured with tolerable safety that the P. Halepensis and P. Orientalis were of the number, and included under the general name, we give specimens of these, in addition to the P. Laricio. The P. Halepensis certainly grew in the neighbourhood of Palestine, as its name, derived from Aleppo, indicates; and that the P. Orientalis—distinguished for the elegance of its cone—grew in Lebanon, may safely be presumed. There are some grounds on which the Pinaster might also have been added.

* Not only through Arabia, surely; compare the notes in vol. ii. p. 340. 366.

PINUS ORIENTALIS.

PINUS LARICIO.

"Cedars from Lebanon to make masts."—It is by no means certain that the tree to which naturalists have given the name "cedar of Lebanon," is the same as the "arez (ארז) of Lebanon" so often mentioned in Scripture. As the word in the Aramean dialects is applied to several similar trees of the pine tribe, it may very possibly have been the same in the Hebrew. Under this view it might sometimes denote the "cedar of Lebanon," and often other trees of a similar character; and if so, those equally err who insist that this tree can only be intended, and those who contend for some other particular species to the exclusion of all the rest. This is a subject of some interest, to which we may possibly return in some less occupied place. Meanwhile we may observe that the so called "cedar of Lebanon" can hardly be intended in this particular text, as, although the trunk of this tree is large, it is neither long nor straight, and therefore utterly unfit to be the mast of a ship. To which we may add that the wood is soft, and inferior to the worst kinds of deal. Separately from any speculation about words, the probability is unquestionable that the Tyrians would employ the fir-trees of Lebanon, or some one of the several species growing there, for masts to their vessels. Even the Egyptians made large importations of firs from Syria to be applied to this and other uses.

6. "Of the oaks of Bashan have they made thine oars."—The common oak (Quercus robur) does at this day occur rather frequently in Bashan and the neighbouring districts east of Jordan. We do not however recollect any instance in which oak occurs among the timbers used in ancient ship-building; and from its heaviness and want of elasticity it seems peculiarly ill adapted for oars, hence Houbigant translates "alders." But, although it is by no means certain that oak is intended, it may be well to recollect that the oars used in the ancient shipping were often of great length, and must hence have been employed at a greater mechanical disadvantage, and consequently with more force than is required by any use of the oar among ourselves. The same qualities were therefore not required in the wood they employed, and we indeed read of oars covered with brass or silver.

"The company of the Ashurites," &c.—It is very difficult to comprehend this verse as it stands in our translation. We do not know who may be intended by "the company of the Ashurites;" that benches should be made of ivory is wholly improbable; neither was ivory brought from any of the places supposed to be denoted by the name "Chittim." The Targum and R. Jarchi, followed by most modern interpreters, by a very simple alteration, that of reading בית אשורים as one word, produce a very clear sense—"Thy benches have they made of ivory, inlaid in box from the isles of Chittim." This supposes that the benches were made of box inlaid or covered with ivory—an employment of ivory very probable, from the manner in which we know that substance to have been anciently used for the interior decoration of houses. In ancient vessels there are many benches for the numerous rowers to sit on; but here perhaps the distinguished seats, in what appears to have been a magnificent galley, may be intended. It is however uncertain whether seats be at all indicated.

"Chittim."—This seems to be a name of large signification (such as our "Levant"), applied to the isles and coasts of the Mediterranean, in a loose sense, without fixing the particular part, though particular and different parts of the whole are probably in most cases to be understood. Some however would restrict it to some particular part, but with such difference between them as seems to corroborate this explanation. Josephus makes it Cyprus; the 1st of Maccabees applies it to Macedonia; the Vulgate has Italy; and Bochart makes it the same, with the islands around it, particularly Corsica, where the best box grew in abundance; Jerome ascribes it to the islands of the Ionian and Egean Sea. "The latter," says Dr. Vincent, "appears to correspond best with the importation of box-wood from Cytorus in the Euxine, the place most celebrated poetically for that production; and the box-wood of Pontus and Asia Minor is imported at this day into the port of London from Smyrna." Any of these places, which seems most probable, may be intended as included in the larger acceptance of the word "Chittim."

7. "Fine linen with brodered work from Egypt. . . to be thy sail."—Fine Egyptian linen, embroidered, was not very well adapted, one would think, for the sails of vessels, in any other than holiday navigation; nor would be very eligible even then. This consideration probably led the Targum and Vulgate to conclude that it would be better to understand the term to refer to a flag or ensign than to a sail. The flags of ancient vessels were usually placed at the prow, and in most cases each ship had its own particular flag, by which it was distinguished from others. It usually contained the representation of a mountain, a tree, a flower, a bird, a beast, or some imaginary creature. If, however, we understand that the present description rather refers to the splendid pleasure-galleys of the merchant-princes of Tyre, than to ships intended for the business of navigation and commerce, sails may very well be understood. For the fact is that, in Egypt, while the ordinary sails were white, those belonging to the pleasure-vessels of the king and the grandees appear to have been often painted with rich colours, or embroidered with fanciful devices, representing the phoenix, flowers, and various emblems. Some exhibit chequered patterns, and others are striped. Sails of this sort were also furnished with a strong hem or border, neatly coloured, to strengthen and preserve them from injury; and, for the same purpose, a light rope was generally sewed round it. (See Wilkinson's 'Ancient Egyptians,' vol. i. ch. 9.)

"Blue and purple from the isles of Elisha. . . covered thee."—Elisha was one of the sons of Javan (Gen. x. 4); and as Javan is the general title for the Greek nation, Elisha may well be taken for a part, and that part Elis, Hellas, or Peloponnesus. It seems odd that the Tyrians, who were themselves so famous for their purples, should have required this from Elisha. But "the purple of Laconia was the finest dye next to the Tyrian; and the purple cloth of that province was possibly employed because it was cheaper than that of Tyre, which was reserved for the use of kings" (Vincent). It seems to have been employed for coverings or awnings to the galleys, which were sometimes very magnificent. Our readers will remember that the famous galley in which Cleopatra went to meet Anthony had an awning of cloth of gold. Indeed, it is observed by Bishop Newton, that "Cleopatra's sailing down the river Cydnus, to meet her gallant, Anthony, was not with greater finery and magnificence; nor have the historians and poets painted the one in more lively colours than the prophet has the other."

8—11. These verses are very instructive, and the information they furnish is too clear to require explanation. "The Tyrians themselves were wholly devoted to commerce and the management of their vessels; while the kindred Phœnicians furnished them with mariners and shipwrights. Like the Carthaginians, also their kindred, their army was composed of foreign mercenaries, obtained by them from Persia and Africa; while the important trust of forming the garrison of the city was given to native Phœnicians, the men of Arvad (Aradus) and the Gammadim. Of the latter we do not elsewhere read; but "they were probably a people of Phœnicia; and perhaps the inhabitants of Ancon, Ἀγκων and ʾḤḤ both signifying a cubit. Pliny mentions Gamah, a city of Phœnicia; for which some propose to read Gamade" (L. ii. c. x. 91)—Newcome. Perhaps no certainty can be obtained on this point. But it appears that the mercenaries were for foreign, or more properly colonial, service; while the Aradians, at least, as joined in the same commercial interest, had the defence of the city confided to them; and the same people, with the Sidonians, manned the ships of Tyre.

12. "Tarshish."—Whatever may be sometimes the more extended signification of "Tarshish," it is probably here to be understood with reference to Tartessus in Spain (see the note on 2 Chron. ix.), as the articles mentioned are such as the Phœnicians obtained from Spain, or from the coasts in the Atlantic to which they traded; and the commodities of which they appear to have brought in the first instance to Tartessus, where the cargoes seem to have been finally made up for Tyre. It is well to understand that Tartessus was not only the port for the products of Spain, but the general entrepôt for the western commerce of the Phœnicians. The tin probably came from Britain.

13. "Javan, Tubal, and Meshech."—Javan has already been explained to mean Greece, in the large sense. With respect to the other names, we see no reason to dissent from the opinion that they designate countries situated between and near the Black and Caspian Seas. This is very much confirmed by the fact that the merchandises named continue to be those of the same countries. The inhabitants of the north-east angle of Asia Minor have been in all ages, and still are, the manufacturers of steel, iron, and brass, for the supply of Armenia, Persia, Greece, and the eastern countries of the Mediterranean; and the Caucasian countries have always been a source from which a highly-valued class of slaves was drawn. The race of men inhabiting this region has always been considered eminent for personal comeliness; and in this kind of commerce this consideration has been much regarded. The important part which the male slaves from these countries have taken in the Turkish empire is well known; and none are ignorant that the harems of the rich Turks and Persians have always been filled, in preference, with female slaves from Georgia and Circassia. It seems, from the present text, that the Tyrians obtained slaves and vessels of brass, as well intermediately through the Greeks as directly from the native merchants.

14. "Togarmah traded in thy fairs with horses."—Togarmah, we believe, with Michaelis, to have been Armenia. This country was in very ancient times celebrated for its horses. It was in this country and Media that the Persian kings bred horses for themselves and their armies; and in later times the Armenians paid their tribute in horses. The word rendered "horsemen" (פָּרָשִׁים parashim) has certainly sometimes that meaning, and may here imply, that, along with the horses, were sold slaves, skilled in the care and treatment of those animals. But the word also means horses for riding, as distinguished from others; and if thus understood here, the others were probably chariot-horses. Michaelis thinks that the two words (סוּסִים susim, and פָּרָשִׁים parashim) distinguish the common and more noble breeds; and if so, this is a distinction anciently applicable, so far as we know, to no other part of the East than Armenia; and we may recognise in the latter the famous Nysæan horses, which were in those times the coursers of luxury, and which were admired not less for the colour and brightness of their hair than for the elegance of their forms, on which account they alone were held worthy to draw the chariots of the Persian kings. Compare Michaelis, Heeren, and Vincent, on this verse.

15. "Dedan," &c.—The common explanation is, that this Dedan was on the southern coast of Arabia; the people of which brought to Tyre, in their caravans, the produce of India. Heeren, however, following a hint thrown out by Michaelis, considers that this passage rather points to the Indian trade, which visited Tyre through the Persian Gulf, and to which we have already had occasion to refer in the note to 2 Chron. xx. Dedan he considers to have been one (that called Tylos) of the isles on which the Phœnicians established themselves in the Persian Gulf, to facilitate their trade in that direction. In these isles the Phœnicians would appear, from his collections and reasonings, to have arranged much of the trade of the far east before it was finally transmitted to Tyre, as they did at Tartessus, in Spain, that of the far west. The case of the men of Dedan and merchants of the isles therefore would be analogous, in an opposite direction, to that of Tarshish, already mentioned. We unwillingly refrain from any longer statement on this subject, referring the reader to Heeren's 'Phœnicians,' sect. i. ch. 4; 'Babylonia' nians,' sect. ii. ch. 2; and also to the above-cited note. We may add, however, that this view is in our opinion much strengthened by our observing another Dedan mentioned below (verse 20), which appears clearly, from the connection, to be that of Arabia.

"Horns of ivory and ebony."—"Horns" of ivory would mean tusks, from their resemblance to horns; but, indeed, the better and more received reading is "horns, ivory, and ebony." What the "horns" were has been disputed. Some have it to be the horns of the ibex, or some other kind of goat. However, it is not necessary to suppose that horns are actually intended. That the substance resembled horn, or that the article bore the shape of a horn, are probable alternatives. Hence some suggest tortoise-shell; and Heeren, following Michaelis, proposes the tusks of the narwal, which is found in the Indian Ocean. All these products might, it seems, be derived from the coasts of Ethiopia, as well as from India; but whether Dedan be placed in the Persian Gulf, or near it on the coast of Arabia, it is equally allowed that they were derived in this instance from India. The best kind of ebony, at least, seems to have been by the Romans regarded as peculiar to India. Thus, Virgil,—

"India alone will the dark ebony bear."—

Georg. ii. 117.—SOTHEBY.

That ebony is intended by the הבנים habenim of the text, is one of the least doubtful of the conclusions concerning the botanical products mentioned in the Bible. The similarity of the names alone is of great weight with regard to an Oriental production, the name of which usually passed with the article itself into Greece; and the derivation of the names ἔβερος, ebenum, ebony, from the Hebrew habenim, seems clear enough. In this, and with respect to other costly woods, the name occurs only in the plural; probably, as Gesenius suggests, because the wood was brought from abroad divided into planks. The ebony is the heart-wood of a family of trees (the Ebenaceæ of Brown), various species of which occur in India, in eastern Africa, and in the intermediate islands. The best ebony is not afforded by any one species in all its habitats. The species figured above is the important one called Diospyros Ebenum. It bears a berry that is eaten by the natives, when ripe. The leaves are elliptical, with numerous veins. The corolla or coloured part is shaped like an antique vase, and bears eight stamens, with which the eight cells and eight seeds in the berry correspond. The white wood which surrounds the heart or ebony is soft, and soon falls a prey to insects.

16. "Syria," &c.—Syria, in the original, is Aram, or Aramæa; and Aram, in Scripture, is sometimes Mesopotamia, sometimes Damascus, and likewise the country about Libanus and the Orontes. With a due regard to the nature of the articles enumerated, Dr. Vincent reasonably concludes that they were all brought by land from the Gulf of Persia, through Mesopotamia or Damascus, in exchange for the manufactures of Tyre.

17. "Judah, and the land of Israel."—This verse is of much importance, as showing that the Hebrews were included, as indeed from their vicinity they could not help being, among the number of nations affected by the Tyrian commerce. We see that Tyre afforded a ready market for the redundant produce of their fertile country, and in return for which they doubtless obtained those manufactured articles and foreign commodities which they could not otherwise have procured. Thus we may consider that, in exchange for their own valuable produce, they might have obtained any of the articles mentioned in this chapter, and for which the known world was ransacked to furnish the great markets of Tyre: and we should probably, for instance, not be mistaken in concluding that, through this source, the tin used by them came originally from Britain. The neighbourhood of an agricultural people, like the Hebrews, was, on the other hand, a great advantage to the Tyrians, who were not addicted to cultivation, and the mountainous character and limited extent of whose territory would at all times have prevented them from raising the supplies they required. The Hebrew territory was thus in some sort the granary of the Phœnicians, and the tie of mutual benefits may explain the generally friendly character of the relations which subsisted between them. Heeren well observes, with reference to this verse, "The corn of Palestine was the best then known, not excepting even that of Egypt; whence we may infer that the proximity of this country was not the only motive which engaged the Phœnicians to draw their supplies from it. The other products of Palestine, of which the prophet makes mention were also of a superior quality. The vine, which was at all times cultivated, afforded abundance of delicious raisins. The olive, as still cultivated by the actual population, is said to furnish an oil superior to that of Provence, notwithstanding the ignorance and barbarism into which the country has fallen under the Ottoman despotism. And the balm which is collected in the neighbourhood of the lake of Genesareth is the same which still enjoys so great a reputation under the name of "the balm of Mecca."

18. "Damascus."—It seems from this verse that Damascus received the richest manufactures of Tyre in exchange for wine of Helbon and white wool—that is, wool in the fleece, or unwrought. If Tyre bought wool in the fleece, and manufactured it, it is the same policy as Flanders formerly adopted in regard to the wool of England. The wine of Helbon is the Chalybon of the Greeks; the kings of Persia drank no other. The eastern name of Aleppo is still Haleb; and Haleb, Halebon, or Chalybon, are only varied by different aspirations or Greek terminations. (Vincent, vol. ii. p. 645.)

19. "Dan also."—"Dan also" (דָּן) may read "Vadan," or "and Dan." Michaelis, followed by Heeren, thinks it may be Vadan, a city in Arabia, considering it difficult to connect the Hebrew tribe of Dan, as in this verse, with the trade of Tyre. But, as Vincent remarks, the situation of this tribe between the Philistines and Joppa, was very commodious for its receiving the caravans from Arabia, in that age, which came to Rhinocolura in a later; and equally convenient for embarking at Joppa the commodities brought by the caravans to be conveyed to Tyre.

"Javan."—This, most clearly, cannot be the Javan of Greece; but, as the commodities are Indian, we are to look for it in Arabia. Indeed the distinction between the two names is pointed out by the adjunct, which in our version is rendered "going to and fro," but which in the original is, Javan-me-Uzal, and Uzal is explained by Gen. x. 27, where Uzal is the son of Joktan, joined with Hazarmaveth (Hadramaut), Theba, Ophir, and Havilah; all of which we know to be in Arabia, and consequently Javan-me-Uzal is so likewise.

The "cassia and calamus" brought by these are evidently Oriental, indeed Indian, and probably also the iron, for Indian iron is likewise a part of the eastern invoice in the Periplus. We have already alluded to the intercourse which the Phœnicians had with India through the Persian Gulf; and the present verse is of great interest, in Dr. Vincent's view, as clearly intimating their intercourse with India through Arabia, and as furnishing the most ancient record of the trade between India and Arabia that can be called historical. "For, although spices are mentioned frequently, that term is not decisive, as all the gums and odours of Arabia are comprehended under that name. Cinnamon, cassia, and calamus alone prove an Indian origin; and notwithstanding these are mentioned by Moses, David, and Solomon, the conveyance of them by caravans from the southern coast of Arabia is nowhere specified till we arrive at this passage in Ezekiel."

20. "Dedan...precious clothes for chariots."—This was probably the Dedan of Arabia, if it were not rather the one of Edom. (Jer. xlix. 8.) The verse is altogether very obscure. We do not know whether the cloths were a native manufacture, or obtained from countries more to the East; nor how they were employed, the term rendered "chariots" being very indefinite, literally, "riding," and may apply either to horses, horsemen, chariots, or charioteers.

21. "Arabia."—This verse refers to the trade of the Bedouin Arabs with the produce of their flocks and herds.

22. "The merchants of Sheba and Raamah."—This verse seems to relate to the trade which Arabian nations in the south of the peninsula carried on with Tyre, in both the produce of their own country and commodities which they obtained from Arabia. This and preceding verses open interesting views concerning the commerce between Tyre and Arabia, and, being ourselves obliged to abstain from the subject, we may refer the reader to the valuable particulars, in relation to it, which have been given by Heeren.

23. "Haran," &c.—Michaelis, followed as usual by Heeren, would place these names also in Arabia; but we have no hesitation in agreeing with Vincent in fixing them to Mesopotamia and Assyria. Indeed most of the names are such as we at once recognise as applied in Scripture to places in that quarter. The single name of Ashur would show this, if those of Haran and Canneh (Calneh) should be doubtful. With respect to the commodities mentioned in the next verse, Vincent also observes, "The chests of cedar bound with cords seem to imply great caution adopted for the preservation of the clothes, which were the costly manufacture of Babylon, if not of India; and this caution seems more necessary for a conveyance overland, not only to prevent injury to the goods, but robbery likewise."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 God's judgment upon the prince of Tyrus for his sacrilegious pride. 11 A lamentation of his great glory corrupted by sin. 20 The judgment of Zidon. 24 The restoration of Israel.

THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, say unto the prince of Tyrus, Thus saith the Lord God; Because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, I am a god, I sit in the seat of God, in the midst of the seas; yet thou art a man, and not God, though thou set thine heart as the heart of God:

3 Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel; there is no secret that they can hide from thee:

4 With thy wisdom and with thine understanding thou hast gotten thee riches, and hast gotten gold and silver into thy treasures:

5 By thy great wisdom and by thy traffick hast thou increased thy riches, and thine heart is lifted up because of thy riches:

6 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast set thine heart as the heart of God;

7 Behold, therefore I will bring strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations: and they shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy brightness.

8 They shall bring thee down to the pit, and thou shalt die the deaths of them that are slain in the midst of the seas.

9 Wilt thou yet say before him that slayeth thee, I am God? but thou shalt be a man, and no God, in the hand of him that 'slayeth thee.

10 Thou shalt die the deaths of the uncircumcised by the hand of strangers: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

11 ¶ Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying.

12 Son of man, take up a lamentation upon the king of Tyrus, and say unto him, Thus saith the Lord God; Thou sealest up the sum, full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty.

13 Thou hast been in Eden the garden of God; every precious stone was thy covering, the 'sardius, topaz, and the diamond, the 'beryl, the onyx, and the jasper, the sapphire, the 'emerald, and the carbuncle, and gold: the workmanship of thy tabrets and of thy pipes was prepared in thee in the day that thou wast created.

14 Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth; and I have set thee so: thou wast upon the holy mountain of God; thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire.

15 Thou wast perfect in thy ways from the day that thou wast created, till iniquity was found in thee.

16 By the multitude of thy merchandise they have filled the midst of thee with violence, and thou hast sinned: therefore I will cast thee as profane out of the mountain of God: and I will destroy thee, O covering cherub, from the midst of the stones of fire.

17 Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty, thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness: I will cast thee to the ground, I will lay thee before kings, that they may behold thee.

18 Thou hast defiled thy sanctuaries by the multitude of thine iniquities, by the iniquity of thy traffick; therefore will I bring forth a fire from the midst of thee, it shall devour thee, and I will bring thee to ashes upon the earth in the sight of all them that behold thee.

19 All they that know thee among the people shall be astonished at thee: thou shalt be 'a terror, and never shalt thou be any more.

20 ¶ Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

21 Son of man, set thy face against Zidon, and prophesy against it,

22 And say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Zidon; and I will be glorified in the midst of thee: and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall have executed judgments in her, and shall be sanctified in her.

23 For I will send into her pestilence, and blood into her streets; and the wounded shall be judged in the midst of her by the sword upon her on every side; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

24 ¶ And there shall be no more a pricking brier unto the house of Israel, nor any grieving thorn of all that are round about them, that despised them; and they shall know that I am the Lord God.

25 Thus saith the Lord God; When I shall have gathered the house of Israel from the people among whom they are scattered, and shall be sanctified in them in the sight of the heathen, then shall they dwell in their land that I have given to my servant Jacob.

26 And they shall dwell 'safely therein, and shall build houses, and plant vineyards; yea, they shall dwell with confidence, when I have executed judgments upon all those that 'despise them round about them; and they shall know that I am the Lord their God.

Verse 5. "By thy great wisdom and by thy traffick hast thou increased thy riches."—It will be observed that the early part of this chapter is addressed to the "prince" or "king of Tyre." Heeren, with reference to these verses, observes: "The prophet Ezekiel, in his prophecy against the king of Tyre, makes us acquainted with the power of the sovereign of that city. He represents him as a powerful prince, surrounded with great splendour, but faithful to the spirit of commercial states, filling his coffers by commerce, and conforming himself at first to the maxims of political wisdom, but soon degenerating into cunning and injustice, the chastisement of which was foretold and duly received. It also results from this remarkable passage, that the revenues of the Tyrian kings, and doubtless those of other Phœnician cities, were founded upon commerce; but we are uninformed whether they arose from dues and customs, or from monopolies exercised by the sovereign, or whether from both sources at once."

13. "Every precious stone was thy covering."—This verse seems to show, in a very striking manner, the pitch to which luxury and splendour had arrived among the princely merchants of Tyre.

22. "Zidon."—See the account of Zidon given under Josh. xix., with an engraving, representing the modern town.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1 The judgment of Pharaoh for his treachery to Israel.
8 The desolation of Egypt. 13 The restoration thereof after forty years. 17 Egypt the reward of Nebuchadnezzar. 21 Israel shall be restored.

IN the tenth year, in the tenth month, in the twelfth day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and prophesy against him, and against all Egypt:

3 Speak, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt, the great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers, which hath said, My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself.

4 But I will put hooks in thy jaws, and I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales, and I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers, and all the fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy scales.

5 And I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers: thou shalt fall upon the open fields; thou shalt not be brought together, nor gathered: I have given thee for meat to the beasts of the field and to the fowls of the heaven.

6 And all the inhabitants of Egypt shall know that I am the LORD, because they have been a staff of reed to the house of Israel.

7 When they took hold of thee by thy hand, thou didst break, and rend all their shoulder: and when they leaned upon thee, thou brakest, and madest all their loins to be at a stand.

8 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord God;

Behold, I will bring a sword upon thee, and cut off man and beast out of thee.

9 And the land of Egypt shall be desolate and waste; and they shall know that I am the LORD: because he hath said, The river is mine, and I have made it.

10 Behold, therefore I am against thee, and against thy rivers, and I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste and desolate, from the tower of Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia.

11 No foot of man shall pass through it, nor foot of beast shall pass through it, neither shall it be inhabited forty years.

12 And I will make the land of Egypt desolate in the midst of the countries that are desolate, and her cities among the cities that are laid waste shall be desolate forty years: and I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries.

13 ¶ Yet thus saith the Lord God; At the end of forty years will I gather the Egyptians from the people whither they were scattered:

14 And I will bring again the captivity of Egypt, and will cause them to return into the land of Pathros, into the land of their habitation; and they shall be there a base kingdom.

15 It shall be the basest of the kingdoms; neither shall it exalt itself any more above the nations: for I will diminish them, that they shall no more rule over the nations.

16 And it shall be no more the confidence of the house of Israel, which bringeth their iniquity to remembrance, when they

17 ¶ And it came to pass in the seven and twentieth year, in the first month, in the first day of the month, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

18 Son of man, Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon caused his army to serve a great service against Tyrus: every head was made bald, and every shoulder was peeled: yet had he no wages, nor his army, for Tyrus, for the service that he had served against it:

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord God;

Behold, I will give the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; and he shall take her multitude, and ⁹take her spoil, and take her prey; and it shall be the wages for his army.

20 I have given him the land of Egypt ¹⁰for his labour wherewith he served against it, because they wrought for me, saith the Lord God.

ASSOUAN (SYENE).

Verse 3. "The great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers."—The crocodile is doubtless alluded to. This animal is elsewhere, and very properly, made to represent the Egyptian king; and it is remarkable that it was also used among the ancients as a symbol of Egypt, and appears as such upon some Roman coins.

"My river is mine own."—This was the Nile, which here symbolizes the kingdom of Egypt, as the crocodile in it does the king. The king alluded to is doubtless Apries, the Pharaoh-hophra of Scripture; and it well deserves observation how exactly this vaunting language agrees with the character which Herodotus gives of the same king. "He considered himself so securely established, that he is said to have been of opinion that it was beyond the power of a god to deprive him of his kingdom." (Euterpe, 169.) Yet he was deprived of it by a God whom he knew not. See the account which has been given of his affairs under Jer. xlv. 30. The verses which follow evidently refer to the same events which Jeremiah foretold.

10. "From the tower of Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia."—Syene itself being the last town of Egypt towards the frontier of Ethiopia, this version does not convey the sense of the original, which is correctly given by Newcome,—"From Migdol to Syene, even to the border of Ethiopia." Migdol, rendered "tower" in our version, but which should be preserved as a proper name, was in the north of Egypt, while Syene was at its southern frontier; so "from Migdol to Syene" is an expression for describing the whole extent of the country, analogous to "from Dan to Beersheba." The cataracts (or rather the first cataract) of the Nile, which occur above this place, and the difficult navigation of the river, make a natural boundary-line, so that Syene (now called Assouan) has under all governments been considered the frontier-town of Egypt in this direction. Speaking more strictly, the boundary may be said to be formed by the mighty terraces of that peculiar kind of reddish granite, called syenite from the name of the place. These terraces, shaped into peaks, stretch across the bed of the Nile, and over them the great river rolls its foaming stream, forming the cataracts so often mentioned in every description of Egypt. It was from the quarries at this place that the Egyptians obtained the stone so frequently employed by them in their obelisks and colossal statues. The town of Syene long retained its importance with a very considerable population. Ruins of works and buildings, by the successive masters of the land, the Pharaohs, the Ptolemies, the Romans, and the Arabians, are still seen on and around the site of the old town, which the present town so closely adjoins on the north, that the northern wall of the old town forms the southern one of the new. The removal is said to have been made in the year 1403 A.D. (806 A.H.), in consequence of a plague, which destroyed 21,000 of the inhabitants; from which the importance of the place, down to comparatively later times, may be estimated. The scenery in this part is very striking:—"The river is rocky here, and the navigation, by night at least, dangerous. At the pass of Assouan, ruin and devastation reign around. This pass, which nature has so well fortified, seems ill-treated by man. Hardly anything was to be seen but the vast remains of the old town of Syene, with mud-built walls and hovels on every side. Rocks, forming islands, were in the middle of the stream, upon which shrubs were growing. The scene altogether was wild and forlorn. In the distance appear high mountains, or masses of stone; with trees, corn, and grass, of great height, extending to the water's edge." (Madox's 'Excursions in the Holy Land, Egypt,' &c. vol. i. pp. 285-6.)

15. "It shall be the basest of the kingdoms."—By this, and as usually explained, we are to understand that Egypt should speedily become, and should long remain, subject to oppressing strangers. And how markedly this has been accomplished, the slightest acquaintance with history suffices to evince! For more than two thousand years Egypt has ever been subject to a succession of foreign governors. Under the Persians, the Egyptians were allowed at first to retain their own kings, by becoming tributary to the conquerors; repeated attempts, however, having been made by the Egyptians to re-establish their own independence, it was finally annexed by the Persians to their empire as a province, governed by Persians. Such it remained, till it was conquered by Alexander, whose successors established a royal dynasty in Egypt; from the termination of which, through the long series of ages down to our own time, Egypt has never lifted its head in independence, but, under its successive foreign rulers—the Romans, Arabians, Mamelukes, and Turks—has been subject to the most intense oppression from a foreign body of people. Egypt has indeed been an independent kingdom under the Ptolemies and the Saracens, and it may be possible that the present ruler should establish its independence. But this matters not: for these independent sovereigns in Egypt were foreigners, surrounded by people of their own nation, who engrossed all wealth, power, and distinction; leaving Egypt as a country, and the proper Egyptians as a people, oppressed and miserable. This is surely a marked fulfilment of prophecy, delivered at a time when Egypt, under its own kings, great and magnificent, took no second place among the nations. And further, where is the nation against which the prophecies were delivered? The present inhabitants of the country are altogether a different people. The descendants of the ancient Egyptians have usually been sought in the Copts, a body of people few in number, who act as shopkeepers, &c., in Egypt. But since opportunities have been obtained of comparing their persons with the sculptures and statues representing the form and appearance of the ancient Egyptians, their claim to this distinction has been much weakened; and if it be set aside, it remains undetermined where the remnant of the old Egyptian nation should be sought, if any remnant still survives. That, if it does not exist in the Copts, it is not now to be found in the present Egypt, is, however, agreed. On this point see the observations of Dr. Richardson, and also the curious account given by Mr. Madden ('Travels,' p. 91—95) of the results obtained by the comparison and measurement of the heads of twelve adult mummies with the heads of twelve living Copts and Nubians. The result seems as decisive against the Copts as that obtained from a comparison of their forms exhibited in ancient paintings and sculptures; but whether equally in favour of the Nubians, as the descendants of the ancient Egyptians, as Madden and others incline to suppose, seems a question not so well determined, nor is the investigation required for our present purpose.

CHAPTER XXX.

1 The desolation of Egypt and her helpers. 20 The arm of Babylon shall be strengthened to break the arm of Egypt.

THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Howl ye, Woe worth the day!

3 For the day is near, even the day of the LORD is near, a cloudy day; it shall be the time of the heathen.

4 And the sword shall come upon Egypt, and great pain shall be in Ethiopia, when the slain shall fall in Egypt, and they shall take away her multitude, and her foundations shall be broken down.

5 Ethiopia, and ²Libya, and Lydia, and all the mingled people, and Chub, and the ¹men of the land that is in league, shall fall with them by the sword.

6 Thus saith the LORD; They also that uphold Egypt shall fall; and the pride of her power shall come down: from the tower of Syene shall they fall in it by the sword, saith the Lord God.

7 And they shall be desolate in the midst of the countries that are desolate, and her cities shall be in the midst of the cities that are wasted.

8 And they shall know that I am the LORD, when I have set a fire in Egypt, and when all her helpers shall be 'destroyed.

9 In that day shall messengers go forth from me in ships to make the careless Ethiopians afraid, and great pain shall come upon them, as in the day of Egypt: for, lo, it cometh.

10 Thus saith the Lord God; I will also make the multitude of Egypt to cease by the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon.

11 He and his people with him, the terrible of the nations, shall be brought to destroy the land: and they shall draw their swords against Egypt, and fill the land with the slain.

12 And I will make the rivers 'dry, and sell the land into the hand of the wicked: and I will make the land waste, and 'all that is therein, by the hand of strangers: I the LORD have spoken it.

13 Thus saith the Lord God; I will also 'destroy the idols, and I will cause their images to cease out of Noph; and there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt: and I will put a fear in the land of Egypt.

14 And I will make Pathros desolate, and will set fire in 'Zoan, and will execute judgments in No.

15 And I will pour my fury upon 'Sin, the strength of Egypt; and I will cut off the multitude of No.

16 And I will set fire in Egypt: Sin shall have great pain, and No shall be rent asunder, and Noph shall have distresses daily.

17 The young men of ¹⁰Aven and of ¹¹Pi-beseth shall fall by the sword: and these cities shall go into captivity.

18 At Tehaphnehes also the day shall be ¹²darkened, when I shall break there the yokes of Egypt: and the pomp of her strength shall cease in her: as for her, a cloud shall cover her, and her daughters shall go into captivity.

19 Thus will I execute judgments in Egypt: and they shall know that I am the LORD.

20 ¶ And it came to pass in the eleventh year, in the first month, in the seventh day of the month, that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

21 Son of man, I have broken the arm of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and, lo, it shall not be bound up to be healed, to put a roller to bind it, to make it strong to hold the sword.

22 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and will break his arms, the strong, and that which was broken; and I will cause the sword to fall out of his hand.

23 And I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries.

24 And I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and put my sword in his hand: but I will break Pharaoh's arms, and he shall groan before him with the groanings of a deadly wounded man.

25 But I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and the arms of Pharaoh shall fall down; and they shall know that I am the LORD, when I shall put my sword into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall stretch it out upon the land of Egypt.

26 And I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and disperse them among the countries; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

Verse 14. "Zoan."—See Num. xiii. 22. Some other Egyptian names which here occur have already passed under our notice: we shall now attend to those which have not previously engaged our attention.

17. "Aven."—This place is mentioned by several names in Scripture.—By On, which seems to have been the native Egyptian name, and which occurs in the history of Joseph, who married a daughter of the priest of On, a fact which shows the extreme antiquity of the place. The Hebrew name for it seems to have been Beth-shemesh, or "house of the sun," which, or "city of the sun," is the meaning of all the names given to the place, except that of Aven, or Beth-aven, as in the text, meaning "vanity," or "house of vanity," being a nick-name which the Hebrews were accustomed to apply to noted places of idolatrous worship—to Bethel, for instance.

The Greek name of the place was Heliopolis, by which name the Seventy render the original; and it is well in such cases to defer as much as possible to their authority, as they, of all men, were likely to know well the corresponding Egyptian, Hebrew, and Greek names of the same places. But indeed their conclusion, in the present case, has not been disputed.

Heliopolis received its name from the worship of the sun, to which a very celebrated temple was here consecrated. It was a famous seat of the Egyptian science and learning. The inhabitants are said by Herodotus to have been the wisest of the Egyptians; and it is said that Moses spent his youth here, and received that education which rendered him "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians." This is not unlikely; but it is more certain that in the college of priests at this place, Eudoxus, Plato, and Herodotus received their instruction in the astronomy, philosophy, and history—in all that learning of the Egyptians, which sacred and profane writers concur in celebrating. This college, and those of Thebes and Memphis, were those alone which sent deputations to form, at Thebes, the tribunal of Thirty—that supreme court of justice which Diodorus compares to the Areopagus at Athens, or to the Senate of Lacedæmon. Of the proper history of Heliopolis we have little information. Josephus says that it was given to the Israelites to dwell in when they first went to Egypt; but of this Scripture says nothing. The destruction of the city, the temple, and the people, which Jeremiah and Ezekiel foretold, was probably accomplished by Nebuchadnezzar. The town gave its name to the district (nome) in which it was situated: and in Isa. xix. 18, there is a supposed allusion to this name of the province, which is usually explained with reference to the town and temple which the expelled Jewish high-priest, Onias, obtained permission to found within it. See the note there.

The town was situated in the Pelusiac branch of the Nile, about five miles below the point of the ancient delta. It was deserted even in the time of Strabo, a little before the birth of Christ, and this geographer mentions its mounds of ruin; but the houses in which Eudoxus and Plato had studied were still shown to the Greek traveller. The place was famous for its learning and temple, rather than its extent; and as, after the accession of the Ptolemies, the schools of Alexandria supplied the place of its colleges, we need not wonder that no attempt was made to restore it from the desolations of the Babylonian and Persian kings. The form and size of the town may be judged from the remaining mounds of the wall of circuit; from these it would appear to have been of irregular shape, and in its extent not exceeding 3750 feet by 2870. The houses stood on the north side, covering a space of about 575,000 square feet, to the south of which stood the temple of the sun. There are no ruins of ancient buildings, unless the mounds be considered such; but there are many fragments of the materials employed in their construction, the greater part of which are of common calcareous stone, marble, and granite. The only entire monument is an obelisk—one of two mentioned by the ancients. It is of red granite, 70 feet high, and appears from its shape to have supported some ornamental device, probably of metal. From its high historical antiquity, this obelisk has received a large measure of curious attention from the learned. In the neighbouring villages there are many fragments of antiquity which have been evidently transported from Heliopolis. A village standing in the immediate neighbourhood bears the name of Matarieh, signifying “fresh water,” taken from a spring of excellent water, supposed to be the same as “the fountain of the sun” of ancient times, and which indeed is still distinguished by that title, Ain Shems. See ‘Description de l’Egypte’ (Ant. Descript. ch. xxi.); Wilkinson’s ‘Topography of Thebes;’ Clarke’s ‘Travels;’ &c.

PLAIN AND OBELISK OF HELIOPOLIS.

“Pi-beseth.”—The Seventy regard this as the famous city of Bubastis, on the Pelusiac branch of the Nile; and their conclusion has, in this instance, been generally admitted. Bubastis derived its name and celebrity from a magnificent temple, dedicated to the goddess Bubastis, of which a particular description has been given by Herodotus (Euterpe, 138). He identifies Bubastis with Diana, and describes (40) the annual festival celebrated at this place in her honour. The site still bears the name of Tel-Bastah; but the great mass of ruins is rather more than half a mile west of the Tel at Chobra and Heryeh. There is no portion of any standing edifice remaining. All is overthrown, and the wide-spread rubbish affords the only remaining evidence of the ancient splendour of Bubastis. The direction of the ruins can however easily be traced, and they correspond precisely to the ancient intimations concerning Bubastis.

18. “Tehaphnehes.”—We have already mentioned this as usually, and on what appears good grounds, identified with Daphnæ Pelusiæ, not far from Pelusium, and on the eastern branch of the Nile, which took its name from that city. It appears from Jer. xliii., that the kings of Egypt had a royal residence at this town, though there is no record that it was ever considered a capital city. The desolation of the ancient city is so complete, that the site now offers nothing that calls for notice. Tyrius, as cited by Adrichomius (Theatrum Terræ Sanctæ, p. 125), says that the site was in his time occupied by a very small town; as it is at present by a poor village, called Safnas,—a manifest modification of the ancient name.

CHAPTER XXXI.

1 A relation unto Pharaoh, 3 of the glory of Assyria, 10 and the fall thereof for pride. 18 The like destruction of Egypt.

AND it came to pass in the eleventh year, in the third month, in the first day of the month, that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, speak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, and to his multitude; Whom art thou like in thy greatness?

3 ¶ Behold, the Assyrian was a cedar in Lebanon ¹with fair branches, and with a shadowing shroud, and of an high stature; and his top was among the thick boughs.

4 The waters ²made him great, the deep ³set him up on high with her rivers running round about his plants, and sent out her ⁴little rivers unto all the trees of the field.

5 Therefore his height was exalted above all the trees of the field, and his boughs were multiplied, and his branches became long because of the multitude of waters, ⁵when he shot forth.

6 All the ⁶fowls of heaven made their nests in his boughs, and under his branches did all the beasts of the field bring forth their young, and under his shadow dwelt all great nations.

7 Thus was he fair in his greatness, in the length of his branches: for his root was by great waters.

8 The cedars in the ⁷garden of God could not hide him: the fir trees were not like his boughs, and the chesnut trees were not like his branches; nor any tree in the garden of God was like unto him in his beauty.

9 I have made him fair by the multitude of his branches: so that all the trees of Eden, that were in the garden of God, envied him.

10 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast lifted up thyself in height, and he hath shot up his top among the thick boughs, and his heart is lifted up in his height;

11 I have therefore delivered him into the hand of the mighty one of the heathen;

⁸he shall surely deal with him: I have driven him out for his wickedness.

12 And strangers, the terrible of the nations, have cut him off, and have left him: upon the mountains and in all the valleys his branches are fallen, and his boughs are broken by all the rivers of the land; and all the people of the earth are gone down from his shadow, and have left him.

13 Upon his ruin shall all the fowls of the heaven remain, and all the beasts of the field shall be upon his branches:

14 To the end that none of all the trees by the waters exalt themselves for their height, neither shoot up their top among the thick boughs, neither their trees ⁹stand up in their height, all that drink water: for they are all delivered unto death, to the nether parts of the earth, in the midst of the children of men, with them that go down to the pit.

15 Thus saith the Lord God; In the day when he went down to the grave I caused a mourning: I covered the deep for him, and I restrained the floods thereof, and the great waters were stayed: and I caused Lebanon ¹⁰to mourn for him, and all the trees of the field fainted for him.

16 I made the nations to shake at the sound of his fall, when I cast him down to hell with them that descend into the pit: and all the trees of Eden, the choice and best of Lebanon, all that drink water, shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth.

17 They also went down into hell with him unto them that be slain with the sword; and they that were his arm, that dwelt under his shadow in the midst of the heathen.

18 ¶ To whom art thou thus like in glory and in greatness among the trees of Eden? yet shalt thou be brought down with the trees of Eden unto the nether parts of the earth: thou shalt lie in the midst of the uncircumcised with them that be slain by the sword. This is Pharaoh and all his multitude, saith the Lord God.

Verse 3. "The Assyrian."—Bishop Lowth thinks this noble parable much confused by the translation here of אֲשׁוּר ashur, as a proper name, "the Assyrian," which, he says, can have no meaning at all in this passage. He would therefore, with Meibonius, understand it here as an epithet, "tall," or "straight," applied to the cedar. This is certainly an unusual sense, but occurs in Isa. i. 17. It is adopted by Boothroyd, who translates, "Lo, he is as a tall cedar in Lebanon;" and adds in a note, "The exigence of the place requires this unusual sense, or else that we should suppose the word a mistake for some other." This is possible: but we do not see much difficulty in the common interpretation, or that any force is lost by supposing that the king of Egypt is admonished by the account of the glory and downfall of the Assyrian empire, under the image of a cedar. The doom of Assyria had been foretold by the prophets, and the recent accomplishment of their predictions might well be adduced as an argumentative confirmation of the prophet's veracity, in declaring that Egypt should soon meet with a like fate. For such reasons Newcome, though aware of the objections we have stated, prefers the common interpretation.

CHAPTER XXXII.

1 A lamentation for the fearful fall of Egypt. 11 The sword of Babylon shall destroy it. 17 It shall be brought down to hell, among all the uncircumcised nations.

AND it came to pass in the twelfth year, in the twelfth month, in the first day of the month, that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, take up a lamentation for Pharaoh king of Egypt, and say unto him, Thou art like a young lion of the nations, and thou art as a 'whale in the seas: and thou camest forth with thy rivers, and troubledst the waters with thy feet, and fouledst their rivers.

3 Thus saith the Lord God; I will therefore 'spread out my net over thee with a company of many people; and they shall bring thee up in my net.

4 Then will I leave thee upon the land, I will cast thee forth upon the open field, and will cause all the fowls of the heaven to remain upon thee, and I will fill the beasts of the whole earth with thee.

5 And I will lay thy flesh upon the mountains, and fill the valleys with thy height.

6 I will also water with thy blood 'the land wherein thou swimdest, even to the mountains; and the rivers shall be full of thee.

7 And when I shall 'put thee out, 'I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark; I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light.

8 All the 'bright lights of heaven will I make 'dark over thee, and set darkness upon thy land, saith the Lord God.

9 I will also 'vex the hearts of many people, when I shall bring thy destruction among the nations, into the countries which thou hast not known.

10 Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings shall be horribly afraid for thee, when I shall brandish my sword before them; and they shall tremble at every moment, every man for his own life, in the day of thy fall.

11 ¶ For thus saith the Lord God; The sword of the king of Babylon shall come upon thee.

12 By the swords of the mighty will I cause thy multitude to fall, the terrible of the nations, all of them: and they shall spoil the pomp of Egypt, and all the multitude thereof shall be destroyed.

13 I will destroy also all the beasts thereof from beside the great waters; neither shall the foot of man trouble them any more, nor the hoofs of beasts trouble them.

14 Then will I make their waters deep, and cause their rivers to run like oil, saith the Lord God.

15 When I shall make the land of Egypt desolate, and the country shall be 'destitute of that whereof it was full, when I shall smite all them that dwell therein, then shall they know that I am the LORD.

16 This is the lamentation wherewith they shall lament her: the daughters of the nations shall lament her: they shall lament for her, even for Egypt, and for all her multitude, saith the Lord God.

17 ¶ It came to pass also in the twelfth year, in the fifteenth day of the month, that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, 19 Whom dost thou pass in beauty? go down, and be thou laid with the uncircumcised.

20 They shall fall in the midst of them that are slain by the sword: ¹⁰she is delivered to the sword: draw her and all her multitudes.

21 The strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of hell with them that help him: they are gone down, they lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword.

22 Asshur is there and all her company: his graves are about him: all of them slain, fallen by the sword:

23 Whose graves are set in the sides of the pit, and her company is round about her grave: all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which caused ¹¹terror in the land of the living.

24 There is Elam and all her multitude round about her grave, all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which are gone down uncircumcised into the nether parts of the earth, which caused their terror in the land of the living; yet have they borne their shame with them that go down to the pit.

25 They have set her a bed in the midst of the slain with all her multitude: her graves are round about him: all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword: though their terror was caused in the land of the living, yet have they borne their shame with them that go down to the pit: he is put in the midst of them that be slain.

26 There is Meshech, Tubal, and all her multitude: her graves are round about him: all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword, though they caused their terror in the land of the living.

27 And they shall not lie with the mighty that are fallen of the uncircumcised, which are gone down to hell ¹²with their weapons of war: and they have laid their swords under their heads, but their iniquities shall be upon their bones, though they were the terror of the mighty in the land of the living.

28 Yea, thou shalt be broken in the midst of the uncircumcised, and shalt lie with them that are slain with the sword.

29 There is Edom, her kings, and all her princes, which with their might are ¹³laid by them that were slain by the sword: they shall lie with the uncircumcised, and with them that go down to the pit.

30 There be the princes of the north, all of them, and all the Zidonians, which are gone down with the slain; with their terror they are ashamed of their might; and they lie uncircumcised with them that be slain by the sword, and bear their shame with them that go down to the pit.

31 Pharaoh shall see them, and shall be comforted over all his multitude, even Pharaoh and all his army slain by the sword, saith the Lord God.

32 For I have caused my terror in the land of the living: and he shall be laid in the midst of the uncircumcised with them that are slain with the sword, even Pharaoh and all his multitude, saith the Lord God.

Verse 22. "Asshur is there and all her company; his graves are about him."—The latter portion of this remarkable chapter describes the nations in the state of the dead, and as some curious distinctions occur in the mention of some of them, it would appear that there are several allusions to the different modes of sepulture which prevailed among them. When one of the nations is mentioned thus in nearly the same terms as another, we may perhaps infer that no remarkable distinction existed. This view has not entirely escaped the notice of some commentators; but we are aware of none who have given it so much attention as Mr. Charles Taylor, in one of the 'Fragments' appended to his edition of Calmet. In adopting the same view, we are glad that the plan of our work enables us to give the subject that pictorial illustration which it has not hitherto received, and which is calculated to afford the most effective elucidation of the prophet's meaning. In introducing the subject, Mr. Taylor well observes, "It is more than possible that if we could discriminate accurately the meaning of words employed by the sacred writers, we should find them adapted with a surprising precision to the subjects on which they treat. Of this the various construction of sepulchres might, probably, afford convincing evidence; and perhaps it is a leading idea in passages where it has not hitherto been observed. The numerous references in the Sacred Scriptures to sepulchres supposed to be well peopled, would be misapplied to nations which burned their dead, as the Greeks and Romans did, or to those who committed them to rivers, as the Hindoos; or to those who expose them to birds of prey, as the Parsees. Nor would the phrase, 'to go down to the sides of the pit' be strictly applicable to, or be properly descriptive of, that mode of burial which prevails among ourselves. Single graves, admitting one body only, in width or in length, have no openings on the sides to which the bodies may be said to go down."—We may observe, once for all, that the frequently recurring expression here alluded to by Mr. Taylor, seems generally to refer to excavated sepulchral chambers, in the sides of which were recesses to receive the bodies of the dead. Many sepulchres of this description occur in different parts of the East.

With respect to the present allusion to the Assyrians, Taylor acknowledges that nothing is known about their mode of sepulture, except that it appears to have been similar to that of the Persians; and, he might have added, the Babylonians: and this resemblance is corroborated by the evidence, with which Taylor does not seem to have been acquainted, of many existing sepulchral sites on the banks of the Tigris and Euphrates—the rivers of Assyria and Babylonia. Some of these have been examined with interest by the writer of the present note, and they consist of urns of various forms, lined with bitumen, and sometimes glazed, containing bones and dust. They are found in almost every situation—in mounds of ruin, in the cliffs of the rivers, and even within the thick walls of ancient towns and fortresses; in some places, where the stream has cut the bank perpendicularly, its steep face presents multitudes of urns, from the summit to the water's edge, in every variety of form and size, arranged sometimes regularly, and sometimes not; which, with the occasional discovery of lines of brick-work connected with these sepulchral remains, suggests the idea, sanctioned by the Desatir, that most of the public buildings of the country had within their mass receptacles of various kinds, as cellars, niches, &c., for sepulchral urns. These seem to have been formed of kiln-dried brick, investing an interior mass of sun-dried material. Few of the urns are large enough to contain an adult human body, and which therefore could not have been deposited entire. The statement of Taylor, that bodies were not burnt in this region, though a very common one, is incorrect; and we have ourselves seen bones that bore traces of the action of fire. But this is not always the case; and, upon the whole, the evidence of existing remains tends strongly to confirm the account of the prevalent modes of sepulture, in this part of the world, which is given in the Desatir. TEXT.—"A corpse you may place in a vase of aquafortis, or consign it to the fire, or to the earth."—COMMENT.—"The usage of the Fersendajians, regarding the dead, was this: after the soul had left the body, they washed the body in pure water, and dressed it in clean and perfumed vestments; they then put it into a vase of aquafortis, and when the body was dissolved, carried the liquid far from the city, and poured it out; or else they burned it in fire, after attiring it as has been said; or they made a dome, and formed a deep pit within it, which they built and whitened with stone, brick, and mortar; and on its edges niches were constructed and platforms erected, on which the dead were deposited: or they buried a vase in the earth, and enclosed the corpse in it; or buried it in a coffin in the ground: and in the estimation of the Fersendajians, the most eligible of all these was the vase of aquafortis." We regard this passage as of remarkable and curious interest, not only from the general view it gives of the ancient modes of sepulture in this region, but as affording some explanation of allusions contained in Scripture. A sufficient elucidation of the present text, for instance, seems to be conveyed in the passage which we have distinguished by Italics.

24. "Elam."—That is, Persia. The passage on this subject in the Desatir applies primarily to the modes of sepulture among this people, although, considering it equally applicable to Assyria and Babylonia, we have given it in the preceding note. However, we also know that the ancient Persians deposited their mighty dead in such sepulchres hewn in the living rock as we have frequently had occasion to notice—the practice being common among the Jews themselves, and existing formerly in almost every country of Western Asia; the sepulchres of this class being distinguished chiefly, in the different nations, by peculiarities of internal arrangement and external ornament, to which we need not particularly refer after the ample statements we have already on different occasions furnished. As a suitable illustration of the present allusion to Persian sepulture, we now introduce a representation of "the mountain of sepulchres" at Nakshi-Roustam, which appear to be of an antiquity not long posterior to the time of Ezekiel, and which we have already had occasion to notice under Isa. xxii. 16, to which we may refer the reader. And that he may be enabled to form some idea of the internal appearance and arrangement of such sepulchres, we also introduce a representation of the interior of the "Sepulchre of the Kings," at Jerusalem; an exterior view of which, with a description, has been given under 2 Chron. xxiv. On this point we may also refer to the note on Gen. xxiii. 19.

MOUNTAIN OF SEPULCHRES AT NAKSHI-ROUSTAM.

INTERIOR OF THE TOMB OF THE KINGS AT JERUSALEM.

26. "Meshech, Tubal, and all her multitude."—The allusions which may be collected from this passage to the mode of sepulture among the people indicated, correspond remarkably to the conclusion that these people were situated about, and northward from, the Euxine and Caspian seas. The circumstances by which the present is distinguished from the other descriptions here given, are contained in verse 27, where they are described as buried with their weapons of war—their swords under their heads; and the remarkable expression, "their iniquities shall be upon their bones," may be well understood as an allusion taken from the vast heaps of earth which it was customary to pile over their bodies. This cannot so well be supposed to allude to anything else as to barrow-burial, which not only answers to these allusions, but is actually described by ancient authors, as practised among the very people of whom it is generally agreed that the prophet here speaks. Nothing therefore can be more to the purpose than to observe how their usages, in this matter, are described by Herodotus, who wrote not very long time after Ezekiel. His account refers to the burial of the Scythian kings, whose sepulchres were in a remote district, named Gerrhus, where the Borysthenes became navigable. When one of the kings died, his corpse, embalmed and covered with wax, was conveyed in a chariot, in solemn state, to this place. A large quadrangular pit was dug, and in this they placed the royal corpse, on a mattress of straw. On each side of this they planted spears, and covered it with wood, and roofed it over with hurdles of willow. In the remaining part of the pit they interred one of the late king's women, strangled for the purpose, together with his cup-bearer, his cook, his groom, his minister, his courier, his horses, as well as some articles of every kind he may be supposed to need, including several goblets of gold. This done, the people eagerly contended with each other in the work of heaping over the whole a mound of earth, as vast as possible. The proceedings did not here terminate; for, the year following, fifty of the late king's confidential attendants and fifty of his horses, were slain and placed, the men on the horses, around his sepulchre." (Melp. 71-2.) This account includes every explanation the text requires:—the "weapons of war;" for besides the spears, particularly mentioned, other weapons were doubtless included among the articles which the deceased might be supposed to require; then there is the vast heaped up mound; and lastly, if this illustration seems to be required, there are the numbers—the multitudes gone down to the tomb with him, and whose graves are around him.

In the country in question, the present writer has seen great numbers of such mounds as are here described, and of various sizes, but generally in the form of a broad cone, more or less obtuse. They occur in the open steppe or desert, and we have sometimes seen them on approaching the Caucasian region, in the midst of the wide plains or hollows, enclosed by a surrounding border of natural hills; and where the few vast but simple tumuli of the mighty dead, holding these magnificent spots in solitary occupation, make an impression upon the mind which no excavated rocks or sculptured tombs could possibly create. These mounds are frequently overgrown with verdure; and, in favourable situations, trees are found upon them; but although they sometimes emulate natural hills in their dimensions, the situations in which they are found, and often the regularity of form which they still retain, prevent their being mistaken for such. Such of them as have been opened, have been found to contain human bones, skeletons of horses, articles of gold and silver, weapons and instruments of war, domestic utensils, and personal ornaments: all confirming the account of Herodotus; as does also the frequent occurrence of the bones of many bodies in one sepulchre. It is true that many of these mounds appear to have been erected by the Tartars of Genghiz Khan and their successors; and it appears that the Kalmucs are still in the habit of burying arms, horses, &c., with their chiefs. But many mounds, and those of the largest size, are considered by the modern Tartars and the Russians, to be of very remote antiquity, as their contents exhibit articles, and indicate some usages not known to themselves even by tradition. Upon the whole, the tumuli which appear in this region seem to be of different ages, some very ancient, perhaps as ancient as the times before us: but, of whatever age, indicating the general accuracy of the account given by Herodotus, and supposed to be alluded to by the sacred writer, as to the custom of this country.

The custom was not, however, peculiar to the Scythians, but was one of the most extensive as well as most ancient in the world. The heroes who perished in the war which Homer celebrates, were honoured with such sepulchres on the plain of Troy; and mounds which are declared to be their tombs, remain to this day the subject of antiquarian discussion; and the downs of Wiltshire, no less than the plains of Troy, bear evidence of the same custom, in the sepulchral "barrows" which they exhibit, and in the contents which these barrows offer. But this suggests a large and interesting subject from which we are warned to abstain by the recollection that the mounds of Meshech and Tubal are those only that require our attention. We have only therefore further to observe, how the essential identity of the custom is established, wherever traced, by the existence of animal bones, together with the human, and "weapons of war," and various utensils, in the larger proportion of the sepulchral hills which have hitherto been examined.

29. "There is Edcm," &c.—We should have had much to say concerning the sepulchres of Edom, as exhibited at Petra, the city of tombs, had not such notice as we could take of the subject been anticipated by the general statement concerning that wonderful place which has been given under Jer. xlix., with the incidental notices which may be elsewhere found in this work. Many of these tombs are also represented in engravings formerly given, and which may be safely left to speak for themselves—the rather, as all that is peculiar to them is shown in these engravings: for these monuments, in general, however rich externally, present nothing in the interior but coarsely chiseled walls. There is, however, one exception,

GROUP OF SCYTHIAN BARROWS.—FROM PALLAS.

SEPULCHRAL MONUMENTS NEAR SIDON.

noticed by Laborde, of a sepulchral chamber, with rows of sculptured pillars, and which forms the finest interior to be found in the place. "When the Bedouins descend into the valley, this tomb, which is easily closed, serves as a stable for their herds. Such are the uses to which the costly monuments of human vanity have been converted." (Laborde.) And such too, we may add, are the fulfilments which the predictions of the prophets concerning the desolations of Edom have received.

30. "The Zidonians."—There are several places on the coasts of Phœnicia and Syria where sepulchral remains of a very interesting character occur. They consist of subterranean sepulchral chambers, with sarcophagi above, of the character shown in our engraving, which exhibits a spot in the Sidonian territory, on the road from Sidon to Beirout. In giving a brief explanation, we shall avail ourselves chiefly of the account which has been given by Dr. Shaw ('Travels,' p. 324—5; folio, 1738): for although his description refers to the sepulchres at Lātikea, he states that those in Phœnicia are precisely similar to them. This is indeed clear from our engraving, as well as from the further allusions of this author, as compared with Maundrell and other travellers. The sarcophagi are chests of stone, of the form shown in our engraving: some that Maundrell saw were two yards and a half long. Some have lost their covers, others retain them in the proper position, but they are often thrown aside, having been probably removed in the search for treasure, which the Orientals generally expect to find in such situations. The chests are sometimes panelled, and often enriched with sculptures in shell-work and foliage, or with human or animal figures. Ox-heads, with wreaths between them, occur frequently. The covers are sometimes supported by pilasters; and Maundrell mentions traces of inscriptions too much defaced to be legible. The rocky ground on which these sarcophagi are found is hollowed below into a number of sepulchral chambers, some of which are ten, others twenty or thirty feet square; but the height is not in proportion to this extent. A range of narrow cells, wide enough to receive one of the sarcophagi, and long enough for two or three, runs along the sides of most of these sepulchral chambers, and appear to be the only provision that has been made for the reception of the dead. "The sepulchral chambers near Jebilee, Tortosa, and the Serpent's Fountain," says Shaw, "with those that are commonly called the Royal Sepulchres at Jerusalem, are all of them of exactly the same workmanship and contrivance with the cryptæ at Lātikea. And in one of the chambers of the royal sepulchres (see our engraving) there is one of these ancient sarcophagi remaining, which is of Parian-like marble, in the fashion of a trunk, very elegantly carved all over with flowers, fruit, and foliage. Instead likewise of those long narrow cells that are common in other cryptæ, some of these have several benches only, of stone, upon which the coffins were placed."

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1 According to the duty of a watchman, in warning the people, 7 Ezekiel is admonished of his duty. 10 God sheweth the justice of his ways towards the penitent, and towards revolvers. 17 He maintaineth his justice. 21 Upon the news of the taking of Jerusalem he prophesieth the desolation of the land. 30 God's judgment upon the mockers of the prophets.

AGAIN the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, speak to the children of thy people, and say unto them, 'When I bring the sword upon a land, if the people of the land take a man of their coasts, and set him for their watchman:

3 If when he seeth the sword come upon the land, he blow the trumpet, and warn the people;

4 Then ²whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning; if the sword come, and take him away, his blood shall be upon his own head.

5 He heard the sound of the trumpet, and took not warning; his blood shall be upon him. But he that taketh warning shall deliver his soul.

6 But if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand.

7 ¶ ³So thou, O son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me.

8 When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

9 Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it; if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul.

10 Therefore, O thou son of man, speak unto the house of Israel; Thus ye speak, saying, If our transgressions and our sins be upon us, and we pine away in them, how should we then live?

11 Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, 'I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for ⁴why will ye die, O house of Israel?

12 Therefore, thou son of man, say unto the children of thy people, The ⁵'righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression : as for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness ; neither shall the righteous be able to live for his righteousness in the day that he sinneth.

13 When I shall say to the righteous, that he shall surely live ; if he trust to his own righteousness, and commit iniquity, all his righteousnesses shall not be remembered ; but for his iniquity that he hath committed, he shall die for it.

14 Again, when I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die ; if he turn from his sin, and do ⁷that which is lawful and right ;

15 If the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity ; he shall surely live, he shall not die.

16 None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him : he hath done that which is lawful and right ; he shall surely live.

17 ¶ Yet the children of thy people say, The way of the Lord is not equal : but as for them, their way is not equal.

18 When the righteous turneth from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, he shall even die thereby.

19 But if the wicked turn from his wickedness, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall live thereby.

20 ¶ Yet ye say, ⁸The way of the Lord is not equal. O ye house of Israel, I will judge you every one after his ways.

21 ¶ And it came to pass in the twelfth year of our captivity, in the tenth month, in the fifth day of the month, that one that had escaped out of Jerusalem came unto me, saying ⁹The city is smitten.

22 Now the hand of the LORD was upon me in the evening, afore he that was escaped came ; and had opened my mouth, until he came to me in the morning ; and my mouth was opened, and I was no more ¹⁰dumb.

23 Then the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

24 Son of man, they that inhabit those wastes of the land of Israel speak, saying, Abraham was one, and he inherited the land : but we are many ; the land is given us for inheritance.

25 Wherefore say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God ; Ye eat with the blood, and lift up your eyes toward your idols, and shed blood : and shall ye possess the land ?

26 Ye stand upon your sword, ye work abomination, and ye defile every one his neighbour's wife : and shall ye possess the land ?

27 Say thou thus unto them, Thus saith the Lord God ; As I live, surely they that are in the wastes shall fall by the sword, and him that is in the open field will I give to the beasts ¹¹to be devoured, and they that be in the forts and in the caves shall die of the pestilence.

28 For I will lay the land ¹²most desolate, and the ¹³pomp of her strength shall cease ; and the mountains of Israel shall be desolate, that none shall pass through.

29 Then shall they know that I am the LORD, when I have laid the land most desolate because of all their abominations which they have committed.

30 ¶ Also, thou son of man, the children of thy people still are talking against thee by the walls and in the doors of the houses, and speak one to another, every one to his brother, saying, Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the LORD.

31 And they come unto thee ¹⁴as the people cometh, and ¹⁵they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them : for with their mouth ¹⁶they shew much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness.

32 And, lo, thou art unto them as ¹⁷a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument : for they hear thy words, but they do them not.

33 And when this cometh to pass, (lo, it will come,) then shall they know that a prophet hath been among them.

Verse 30. "Talking...by the walls and in the doors of the houses."—While residing in Oriental towns, and particularly in Mesopotamia, where Ezekiel was, we had constant occasion to notice this practice. We never went out in fine weather without observing frequent groups of men conferring together or solacing themselves at the doors of houses, or seated on the ground, under the shade of the walls, in the broader streets and public places.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

1 A reproof of the shepherds. 7 God's judgment against them. 11 His providence for his flock. 20 The kingdom of Christ.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, prophesy against the ¹shepherds of Israel, prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God unto the shepherds; Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! should not the shepherds feed the flocks?

3 Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, ye kill them that are fed: but ye feed not the flock.

4 The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost; but with ²force and with cruelty have ye ruled them.

5 And they were scattered, ³because there is no shepherd: and they became meat to all the beasts of the field, when they were scattered.

6 My sheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill: yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth, and none did search or seek after them.

7 ¶ Therefore, ye shepherds, hear the word of the LORD;

8 As I live, saith the Lord God, surely because my flock became a prey, and my flock became meat to every beast of the field, because there was no shepherd, neither did my shepherds search for my flock, but the shepherds fed themselves, and fed not my flock;

9 Therefore, O ye shepherds, hear the word of the LORD;

10 Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against the shepherds; and I will require my flock at their hand, and cause them to cease from feeding the flock; neither shall the shepherds feed themselves any more; for I will deliver my flock from their mouth, that they may not be meat for them.

11 ¶ For thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I, even I, will both search my sheep, and seek them out.

12 'As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered; so will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day.

13 And I will bring them out from the people, and gather them from the countries, and will bring them to their own land, and feed them upon the mountains of Israel by the rivers, and in all the inhabited places of the country.

14 I will feed them in a good pasture, and upon the high mountains of Israel shall their fold be: there shall they lie in a good fold, and in a fat pasture shall they feed upon the mountains of Israel.

15 I will feed my flock, and I will cause them to lie down, saith the Lord God.

16 I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick: but I will destroy the fat and the strong; I will feed them with judgment.

17 And as for you, O my flock, thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I judge between ⁴cattle and cattle, between the rams and the ⁵he goats.

18 Seemeth it a small thing unto you to have eaten up the good pasture, but ye must tread down with your feet the residue of your pastures? and to have drunk of the deep waters, but ye must foul the residue with your feet?

⁵ Heb. small cattle of lambs and kids.

⁶ Heb. great he-goats.

19 And as for my flock, they eat that which ye have trodden with your feet; and they drink that which ye have fouled with your feet.

20 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord God unto them; Behold, I, even I, will judge between the fat cattle and between the lean cattle.

21 Because ye have thrust with side and with shoulder, and pushed all the diseased with your horns, till ye have scattered them abroad;

22 Therefore will I save my flock, and they shall no more be a prey; and I will judge between cattle and cattle.

23 And I will set up one ⁷shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd.

24 And I the LORD will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them; I the LORD have spoken it.

25 And I will make with them a covenant of peace, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land: and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods.

26 And I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing; and I will cause the shower to come down in his season; there shall be showers of blessing.

27 And the tree of the field shall yield her fruit, and the earth shall yield her increase, and they shall be safe in their land, and shall know that I am the LORD, when I have broken the bands of their yoke, and delivered them out of the hand of those that served themselves of them.

28 And they shall no more be a prey to the heathen, neither shall the beast of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid.

29 And I will raise up for them a ⁸plant ⁹of renown, and they shall be no more ¹⁰consumed with hunger in the land, neither bear the shame of the heathen any more.

30 Thus shall they know that I the LORD their God am with them, and that they, even the house of Israel, are my people, saith the Lord God.

31 And ye my ¹¹flock, the flock of my pasture, are men, and I am your God, saith the Lord God.

Verse 25. "They shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods."—Many of the allusions of this chapter are derived from, and descriptive of the proceedings of shepherds sent out and tarrying abroad with the flocks belonging to a settled people. Chandler's account of his meeting with a party of such shepherds, conveys some interesting points of parallel illustration, particularly with respect to the present verse. "About two in the morning, our whole attention was fixed by the barking of dogs, which, as we advanced, became exceedingly furious. Deceived by the light of the moon, we now fancied we could see a village; and were much mortified to find only a station of poor goat-herds, without even a shed, and nothing for our horses to eat. They were lying, wrapped in their thick capots or loose coats, by some glimmering embers, among the bushes in a dale, under a spreading tree by the fold. They received us hospitably, heaping on fresh fuel, and producing some curds and coarse bread, which they toasted for us on the coals. We made a scanty meal, sitting on the ground, lighted by the fire and by the moon; after which sleep suddenly overpowered me. On waking... I was much struck with the wild appearance of the spot. The tree was hung with rustic utensils; the she-goats in a pen, sneezed, and bleated, and rustled to and fro; the shrubs by which our horses stood, were leafless; and the earth bare; a black cauldron with milk was simmering over the fire; and a figure more than gaunt or savage, close by us, struggling on the ground with a kid, whose ears he had slit, and was endeavouring to cauterize with a red-hot iron."—'Travels,' p. 157.

CHAPTER XXXV.

The judgment of mount Seir for their hatred of Israel.

MOREOVER the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

3 And say unto it, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O mount Seir, I am against thee, and I will stretch out mine hand against thee, and I will make thee ¹most desolate.

4 I will lay thy cities waste, and thou shalt be desolate, and thou shalt know that I am the LORD.

dren of Israel by the 'force of the sword in the time of their calamity, in the time that their iniquity had an end:

6 Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord God, I will prepare thee unto blood, and blood shall pursue thee: sith thou hast not hated blood, even blood shall pursue thee.

7 Thus will I make mount Seir 'most desolate, and cut off from it him that passeth out and him that returneth.

8 And I will fill his mountains with his slain men: in thy hills, and in thy valleys, and in all thy rivers, shall they fall that are slain with the sword.

9 I will make thee perpetual desolations, and thy cities shall not return: and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

10 Because thou hast said, These two nations and these two countries shall be mine, and we will 'possess it; 'whereas the LORD was there:

11 Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord God, I will even do according to thine anger, and according to thine envy which thou hast used out of thy hatred against them; and I will make myself known among them, when I have judged thee.

12 And thou shalt know that I am the LORD, and that I have heard all thy blasphemies which thou hast spoken against the mountains of Israel, saying, They are laid desolate, they are given us 'to consume.

13 Thus with your mouth ye have 'boasted against me, and have multiplied your words against me: I have heard them.

14 Thus saith the Lord God; When the whole earth rejoiceth, I will make thee desolate.

15 As thou didst rejoice at the inheritance of the house of Israel, because it was desolate, so will I do unto thee: thou shalt be desolate, O mount Seir, and all Idumea, even all of it: and they shall know that I am the LORD.

Verse 4. "I will lay thy cities waste, and thou shalt be desolate."—To the testimonies already furnished in verification of Scripture prophecy, we may add a passage from the unpublished Travels of Irby and Mangles, which concludes with a reference to the present prediction. "On leaving Petra, the track rises considerably, and is slippery and dangerous: our attention was particularly excited on this side, by remarking with how much care the scanty soil had been banked up into terraces, and disposed into fields and gardens: every nook that could furnish footing for a single plant was turned to account, proving that Strabo was not mistaken, in speaking of the horticultural advantages of this city: and the inhabitants seem to have made the most of them. At present the barren state of the country, together with the desolate condition of the city, without a single human being living near it, seem strongly to verify the judgment pronounced against it.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1 The land of Israel is comforted, both by destruction of the heathen, who spitefully used it, 8 and by the blessings of God promised unto it. 16 Israel was rejected for their sin, 21 and shall be restored without their desert. 25 The blessings of Christ's kingdom.

Also, thou son of man, prophesy unto the 'mountains of Israel, and say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the LORD:

2 Thus saith the Lord God; Because the enemy hath said against you, Aha, even the ancient high places are our's in possession:

3 Therefore prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord God; 'Because they have made you desolate, and swallowed you up on every side, that ye might be a possession unto the residue of the heathen, and 'ye are taken up in the lips of talkers, and are an infamy of the people:

4 Therefore, ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God to the mountains, and to the hills, to the 'rivers, and to the valleys, to the desolate wastes, and to the cities that are forsaken, which became a prey and derision to the residue of the heathen that are round about;

5 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Surely in the fire of my jealousy have I spoken against the residue of the heathen, and against all Idumea, which have appointed my land into their possession with the joy of all their heart, with despightful minds, to cast it out for a prey.

6 Prophecy therefore concerning the land of Israel, and say unto the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I have spoken in my jealousy and in my fury, because ye have borne the shame of the heathen:

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; I have lifted up mine hand, Surely the heathen that are about you, they shall bear their shame.

8 ¶ But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are at hand to come.

9 For, behold, I am for you, and I will turn unto you, and ye shall be tilled and sown:

10 And I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it: and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded:

11 And I will multiply upon you man and beast; and they shall increase and bring fruit: and I will settle you after your old estates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings: and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

12 Yea, I will cause men to walk upon you, even my people Israel; and they shall possess thee, and thou shalt be their inheritance, and thou shalt no more henceforth bereave them of men.

13 Thus saith the Lord God; Because they say unto you, Thou land devourest up men, and hast bereaved thy nations;

14 Therefore thou shalt devour men no more, neither ^bbereave thy nations any more, saith the Lord God.

15 Neither will I cause men to hear in thee the shame of the heathen any more, neither shalt thou bear the reproach of the people any more, neither shalt thou cause thy nations to fall any more, saith the Lord God.

16 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

17 Son of man, when the house of Israel dwelt in their own land, they defiled it by their own way and by their doings: their way was before me as the uncleanness of a removed woman.

18 Wherefore I poured my fury upon them for the blood that they had shed upon the land, and for their idols wherewith they had polluted it:

19 And I scattered them among the heathen, and they were dispersed through the countries: according to their way and according to their doings I judged them.

20 And when they entered unto the heathen, whither they went, they ^cprofaned my holy name, when they said to them, These are the people of the LORD, and are gone forth out of his land.

21 ¶ But I had pity for mine holy name, which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went.

22 Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went.

23 And I will sanctify my great name, which was profaned among the heathen, which ye have profaned in the midst of them; and the heathen shall know that I am the LORD, saith the Lord God, when I shall be sanctified in you before ^dtheir eyes.

24 For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land.

25 ¶ Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you.

26 A ^enew heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh.

28 And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.

29 I will also save you from all your uncleannesses: and I will call for the corn, and will increase it, and lay no famine upon you.

30 And I will multiply the fruit of the tree, and the increase of the field, that ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen.

31 Then shall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and shall lothe yourselves in your own sight for your iniquities and for your abominations.

32 Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you: be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel.

33 Thus saith the Lord God; In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded.

34 And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by.

35 And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of ¹⁰Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced, and are inhabited.

36 Then the heathen that are left round about you shall know that I the LORD build the ruined places, and plant that that was desolate: I ¹¹the LORD have spoken it, and I will do it.

37 Thus saith the Lord God; I will yet for this be enquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them; I will increase them with men like a flock.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

¹ By the resurrection of dry bones, 11 the dead hope of Israel is revived. 15 By the uniting of two sticks, 18 is shewed the incorporation of Israel into Judah. 20 The promises of Christ's kingdom.

THE hand of the LORD was upon me, and carried me out in the spirit of the LORD, and set me down in the midst of the valley which was full of bones,

2 And caused me to pass by them round about: and, behold, there were very many in the open ¹valley; and, lo, they were very dry.

3 And he said unto me, Son of man, can these bones live? And I answered, O Lord God, thou knowest.

4 Again he said unto me, Prophecy upon these bones, and say unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the LORD.

5 Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones; Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live:

6 And I will lay sinews upon you, and will bring up flesh upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall live; and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

7 So I prophesied as I was commanded: and as I prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone.

8 And when I beheld, lo, the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and the skin covered them above: but there was no breath in them.

9 Then said he unto me, Prophecy unto the ²wind, prophecy, son of man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord God; Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live.

² Or, breath.

10 So I prophesied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army.

11 ¶ Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel: behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts.

12 Therefore prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel.

13 And ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, 14 And shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land: then shall ye know that I the LORD have spoken it, and performed it, saith the LORD.

15 ¶ The word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

16 Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions:

17 And join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand.

18 ¶ And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Wilt thou not shew us what thou meanest by these?

19 Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand.

20 ¶ And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes.

21 And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land:

22 And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and ³one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all:

23 Neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions: but I will save them out of all their dwellingplaces, wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them: so shall they be my people, and I will be their God.

24 And ⁴David my servant shall be king over them; and they all shall have one shepherd: they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them.

25 And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever; and my servant David shall be their prince for ever.

26 Moreover I will make a ⁵covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them: and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my ⁶sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore.

27 My tabernacle also shall be with them: yea, I will be ⁷their God, and they shall be my people.

28 And the heathen shall know that I the LORD do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore.

Verse 20. "The sticks whereon thou writest."—There are many curious traces of this kind of writing upon sticks or pieces of wood. This indeed is not the first instance of the practice in scripture; for so early as the time of Moses, we find a parallel example of writing upon rods. The custom existed among the early Greeks; as we are informed that the laws of Solon, preserved at Athens, were inscribed on billets of wood called axones. The custom has also existed in various applications in our own and other northern countries. The ancient Britons used to cut their alphabet with a knife upon a stick, which, thus inscribed, was called Coelbren y Beirdd, "the billet of signs of the bards," or the Bardic Alphabet. And not only were the alphabets such, but compositions and memorials were registered in the same manner. These sticks were commonly squared, but sometimes were three-sided, and, consequently, a single stick would contain either three or four lines. The squares were used for general subjects, and for stanzas of four lines in poetry; the triliteral ones being adapted to triads, and for a peculiar kind of ancient metre called Triban, or triplet, and Englyn-Milwyr, or the warrior's verse. Several sticks with writing upon them were united together in a kind of frame, as represented in the first of our present cuts. This was called Peithynen, or Elucidator, and was so constructed that each stick might be turned for the facility of reading, the end of each running out alternately on both sides. A continuation, or different application of the same practice, is offered by the Runic clog (a corruption of log) almanac, the use of which has been preserved to a comparatively recent period, being described by Dr. Plot in his 'History of Staffordshire' (1686), as still in common use in that county; some, of large size, being usually hung up at one side of the mantletree of the chimney, while others were smaller and carried in the pocket. Our engraving is copied from a representation of one of the family "clogs," given in his work. Properly, the almanac was a single four-sided stick, inscribed on each side; but, for the convenience of representation, it is shown "in plano," each angle of the square stick, with the moiety of each of the flat sides, being expressed apart." The edges have notches, answering to the days of the year; the Sundays being distinguished by a larger notch. Connected with these, on one of the flat sides, are crosses, the form and size of which are varied, for the sake of distinction or to mark the rank which the saint of that day was supposed to occupy: the dots are considered to denote the number of paternosters, aves, &c. appropriate to the day. The opposite side of the notched edge is occupied by arbitrary or significant signs to denote the greater festivals, or other commemorative occasions—as a star for the Epiphany, a branch for May-day, a sword for St. John, keys for St. Peter, and so forth. They were, in short, calendars containing similar indications to those prefixed to the books of Common-prayer. Dr. Clarke met with several of such Runic stave-calendars in Sweden, rather as curious antiquities than as things in actual use; although the inhabitants were well acquainted with them, and were often able to explain the meaning of the characters upon them, and the purpose for which these instruments were used. "They were all of wood, about three feet and a half long, shaped like the straight swords represented in churches upon the brassen sepulchral plates of our Saxon ancestors. The blades were on each side engraved with Runic characters, and signs like hieroglyphics extended their whole length... We saw one of more elaborate workmanship, where the Runic characters had been very elegantly engraved upon a stick, like a physician's cane; but this last seemed to be of a more modern date. In every instance it was evident, from some of the marks upon them, that the first owners had been Christians: the different lines and characters denoting the fasts and festivals, golden numbers, dominical letter, epact, &c. But the custom of thus preserving written records upon rods or sticks is of the highest antiquity. There is an allusion to the custom in Ezek. xxxvii. 16—20, where mention is made of something very similar to the Runic staff." The difference between these and the one represented in our cut, seems to be no more than in the variation of arbitrary signs and characters to denote the same objects.

CLOG ALMANAC.

The use of sticks and pieces of wood for the keeping of accounts, has been retained much longer than the rest; and has indeed remained to our own day, in evidence of the various purposes of this kind to which sticks have been applied. We have seen alphabets, records, books, poems, and calendars of stick; and the account sticks may be briefly noticed to complete the series. The most perfect and interesting of those which have remained in modern use appears to be the Saxon Reive Pole, still, or down to a recent date, used in the island of Portland for collecting the yearly rent paid to the sovereign as lord of the manor. The lands of this island are denominated ancient customary demesne and lands of inheritance, paying a 14 ¶ Therefore, son of man, prophesy and say unto Gog, Thus saith the Lord God; In that day when my people of Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it?

15 And thou shalt come from thy place out of the north parts, thou, and many people with thee, all of them riding upon horses, a great company, and a mighty army:

16 And thou shalt come up against my people of Israel, as a cloud to cover the land: it shall be in the latter days, and I will bring thee against my land, that the heathen may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes.

17 Thus saith the Lord God; Art thou he of whom I have spoken in old time by my servants the prophets of Israel, which prophesied in those days many years that I would bring thee against them?

18 And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face.

19 For in my jealousy and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken, Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel;

20 So that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth, shall shake at my presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground.

21 And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God: every man's sword shall be against his brother.

22 And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone.

23 Thus will I magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am the LORD.

Verse 2. "Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal."—Great diversity of opinion has been entertained concerning the situation of Gog and Magog, and the various alternatives suggested have given occasion to no common amount of discussion. This we cannot follow: but content ourselves with stating that the opinion which seems to us the most probable, and which moreover has the support of Josephus, is that these are to be understood as names applied to the Scythians of the ancients, answering to the Tartars of the moderns—a people extending through the centre of Asia, and the south-east of Europe, and who, at various times, have left their native plains to overrun the civilized countries of Asia and eastern Europe, overthrowing thrones and kingdoms before them. Gog and Magog are probably to be understood as applied to this people in the most extensive sense; Meshech and Tubal being limited to the nearer and better known portions of the whole. Considering that the present Turks are descended from the Tartars, many commentators seem disposed to consider that the prophecies concerning Gog and Magog have an ultimate reference to that people. It is, however, allowed, on all hands, that this is one of the most difficult prophecies of the Old Testament, and interpreters are greatly divided about its application.

4. "I will turn thee back."—It therefore appears that the people in question had at this time made an incursion from their native wilds into the countries with which the Hebrews were acquainted. It corroborates the conclusion stated in the preceding note, that this actually happened, in the time of Ezekiel, with respect to the Scythians, and not, so far as history certifies, with respect to any other people. This prophecy has no date: and if we assign it an early one, there is every historical and internal probability that the first part of the chapter refers to the expulsion of the Scythians, after they had for several years (28) assumed a position in south-western Asia which made them and their peculiar habits well known in that part of the world, and which may well be taken to explain the allusions which Ezekiel seems to make to them. About the time of the fall of Nineveh, they made their appearance in Upper Asia, and were about to enter Media, when they were opposed by the king of that country (Cyaxares I.) who sustained a signal defeat. The Scythians then proceeded, and extended their conquests over Syria to the confines of Egypt, which they were only prevented from entering by entreaties and valuable presents from the king. On their return they passed through the land of the Philistines, in their progress through which some stragglers of their main body plundered the temple of Venus (Astarte) at Ascalon, which was believed to be the most ancient in the world dedicated to that goddess. It does not appear that they molested the kingdom of Judea, and the already desolated country of the expatriated ten tribes offered them little temptation. They did however appropriate to themselves the town of Beth-shan, in the territories of Manasseh west of Jordan, which long retained, for this reason, the name of Scythopolis, or "city of the Scythians." After this people had for twenty-eight years remained in possession of the two Armenias, Cappadocia, Pontus, Colchis, Iberia, and the greater part of Lydia, their chiefs were cut off by a treacherous stratagem of the same king of Media whom they had in the first instance defeated. The expulsion of their dispirited followers was then easily effected; and to this event, which happened in his own time, the prophet may well be supposed to refer, while his view extends from thence far forward into the future history of the same people, to an extent which we cannot follow through its disputed applications.

9. "Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm." This verse does very strikingly describe the character of a Scythian or Tartar invasion, the force of which is illustrated by every account of such transactions which has been preserved. Their vast numbers covering the land like a cloud, their rapid and irresistible progress, compared to a storm—are circumstances to which the prophets allude, and which all historians describe with wonder. Gibbon's notice of the invasions of China by the Tartars contains a passage strikingly illustrative of this verse; and it is always a pleasant office to oblige infidels to bring evidence of the truth of the descriptions and prophecies of that Divine Book which they affect to condemn. "The cavalry of the Tanjou frequently consisted of two or three hundred thousand men; formidable by the matchless dexterity with which they managed their bows and their horses; by their hardy patience in supporting the inclemency of the weather; and by the incredible speed of their march, which was seldom checked by torrents or precipices, by the deepest rivers, or by the most lofty mountains. They spread themselves at once over the face of the country; and their rapid impetuosity surprised, astonished, and disconcerted the grave and elaborate tactics of a Chinese army." The vast numbers of men which were brought into the field by the people in question are repeatedly noticed in this and the following chapter: and indeed it used to be a matter of wonder how such immense bodies of men as the ancient Scythians and modern Tartars assembled could be brought together. But this is accounted for by the recollection, that among all the Tartar tribes every adult serves, when required, as a soldier; so that their thinly-peopled wildernesses have often been able to send forth armies far exceeding those which the most populous civilized countries could ever raise. One of the laws of the Mongol Tartars, in the time of Genghiz Khan, was, "Husbands are to be employed solely in hunting and war; all other occupations belong to women."

15. "All of them riding upon horses."—"The plains of Tartary are filled with a strong and serviceable breed of horses, which are easily trained for the purposes of war and hunting. The Scythians of every age have been celebrated as bold and skilful riders; and constant practice has seated them so firmly on horseback, that they were supposed by strangers to perform the ordinary duties of civil life—to eat, to drink, and even to sleep—without dismounting from their steeds."—Gibbon, ch. xxvi.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1 God's judgment upon Gog. 8 Israel's victory. 11 Gog's burial in Hamon-gog. 17 The feast of the fowls. 23 Israel, having been plagued for their sins, shall be gathered again with eternal favour.

THEREFORE, thou son of man, prophesy against Gog, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal:

2 And I will turn thee back, and 'leave but the sixth part of thee, and will cause thee to come up from 'the north parts, and will bring thee upon the mountains of Israel:

3 And I will smite thy bow out of thy left hand, and will cause thine arrows to fall out of thy right hand.

4 Thou shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel, thou, and all thy bands, and the people that is with thee: I will give thee unto the ravenous birds of every 'sort, and to the beasts of the field 'to be devoured.

5 Thou shalt fall upon 'the open field: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

6 And I will send a fire on Magog, and among them that dwell 'carelessly in the isles: and they shall know that I am the LORD.

7 So will I make my holy name known in the midst of my people Israel; and I will not let them pollute my holy name any more: and the heathen shall know that I am the LORD, the Holy One in Israel.

8 ¶ Behold, it is come, and it is done, saith the Lord God; this is the day whereof I have spoken.

9 And they that dwell in the cities of Israel shall go forth, and shall set on fire and burn the weapons, both the shields and the bucklers, the bows and the arrows, and the 'handstaves, and the spears, and they shall 'burn them with fire seven years:

10 So that they shall take no wood out of the field, neither cut down any out of the forests; for they shall burn the weapons with fire: and they shall spoil those that spoiled them, and rob those that robbed them, saith the Lord God.

11 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will give unto Gog a place there of graves in Israel, the valley of the passengers on the east of the sea: and it shall stop the 'noses of the passengers: and there shall they bury Gog and all his multitude: and they shall call it The valley of ¹⁰Hamon-gog.

13 Yea, all the people of the land shall bury them; and it shall be to them a renown the day that I shall be glorified, saith the Lord God.

14 And they shall sever out ¹¹men of continual employment, passing through the land to bury with the passengers those that remain upon the face of the earth, to cleanse it: after the end of seven months shall they search.

15 And the passengers that pass through the land, when any seeth a man's bone, then shall he ¹²set up a sign by it, till the buriers have buried it in the valley of Hamon-gog.

16 And also the name of the city shall be ¹³Hamonah. Thus shall they cleanse the land.

17 ¶ And, thou son of man, thus saith the Lord God; Speak ¹⁴unto every feathered fowl, and to every beast of the field, Assemble yourselves, and come; gather yourselves on every side to my ¹⁵sacrifice that I do sacrifice for you, even a great sacrifice upon the mountains of Israel, that ye may eat flesh, and drink blood.

18 Ye shall eat the flesh of the mighty, and drink the blood of the princes of the earth, of rams, of lambs, and of ¹⁶goats, of bullocks, all of them fatlings of Bashan.

19 And ye shall eat fat till ye be full, and drink blood till ye be drunken, of my sacrifice which I have sacrificed for you.

20 Thus ye shall be filled at my table with horses and chariots, with mighty men, and with all men of war, saith the Lord God.

21 And I will set my glory among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see my judgment that I have executed, and my hand that I have laid upon them.

22 So the house of Israel shall know that I am the LORD their God from that day and forward.

23 ¶ And the heathen shall know that the house of Israel went into captivity for their iniquity: because they trespassed against me, therefore hid I my face from them, and gave them into the hand of their enemies: so fell they all by the sword.

24 According to their uncleanness and according to their transgressions have I done unto them, and hid my face from them.

25 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy upon the whole house of Israel, and will be jealous for my holy name;

26 After that they have borne their shame, and all their trespasses whereby they have trespassed against me, when they dwelt safely in their land, and none made them afraid.

27 When I have brought them again from the people, and gathered them out of their enemies' lands, and ¹⁷am sanctified in them in the sight of many nations;

28 Then shall they know that I am the LORD their God, ¹⁸which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen: but I have gathered them unto their own land, and have left none of them any more there.

Verse 3. "I will smile thy bow out of thy left hand."—There are several other passages which intimate that the bow was the principal weapon of the people intended. So it has always been among the Scythian nations. "The long Tartar bow," says Gibbon, "is drawn with a nervous arm; and the weighty arrow is directed to its object with unerring aim and irresistible force." The same has been intimated in the extract, from the same author, under verse 9 of the preceding chapter. Compare also the enumeration of other articles of their military array in verse 4 of the preceding chapter, and verse 9 of this, with the following law of Genghiz Khan's time. "The arms appointed are the sabre, the bow, the battle-axe, with some ropes. The officers to wear helmets and breastplates of leather or iron, or an entire coat of mail. Soldiers who can afford it are permitted to wear armour. The officers are strictly to examine the edges and points of the sabres." This law does not mention spears or lances, which we know to have been also favourite weapons among the ancient and modern Scythians. The "hand-staves," in verse 9, are we suppose maces, which are also very common among them, and formidable in their hands.

9. "They shall burn them with fire seven years."—That is to say, that the shafts or wooden parts of their weapons should be so abundant as to last the people of the land seven years for fuel. This is intended, doubtless, to convey an idea of their prodigious numbers. But it is right to add, that the inhabitants of those genial climates make but a sparing use of fuel, which will explain any difficulty the text might be supposed to offer.

11. "The valley of the passengers on the east of the sea."—The Targum, followed by many Jewish and Christian interpreters, take this "sea" to have been the Lake of Genesaret. The valley near this sea may have been called "The valley of passengers," because a great number of merchants, traders, and others, from Syria and other eastern countries, passed through it, in their way to and from Egypt. We see, in Gen. xxvii. 17, 25, that the Ishmaelite merchants to whom Joseph was sold, were passing this way towards Egypt.

14. "They shall sever out men of continual employment."—It was anciently the usual custom for the conquerors to leave the bodies of their slaughtered enemies for a prey to the birds, and beasts of prey; and this custom is frequently alluded to in Scripture. When however the slain were in great numbers, and the slaughter occurred in a peopled district, bodies were often disposed of, in some way or other, by the inhabitants, out of a regard to their own safety and comfort. Thus, also, it seems that when the Jews gained a battle on a foreign field they left their slain enemies unburied, or to be buried by others; but when, as in the present instance, the event happened in their own country, we discover from these verses that they were accustomed to inter the dead: and to this the Hebrews had not only the inducement common to all people, but another, more immediately constraining, which arose from the pollution which they contracted by the contact of a dead body; and which they could not fail to have been constantly incurring while so many dead bodies remained uninterred. It seems that two sets of men were employed in this business, one to seek out the corpses and to set up a mark of direction for the others, whose duty it was to inter the bodies thus found. The mark set up for this purpose would also, in the mean time, by warning passengers from the spot prevent the danger of accidental pollution.

IN the five and twentieth year of our captivity, in the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month, in the fourteenth year after that the city was smitten, in the selfsame day the hand of the LORD was upon me, and brought me thither.

2 In the visions of God brought he me into the land of Israel, and set me upon a very high mountain, 'by which was as the frame of a city on the south.

3 And he brought me thither, and, behold, there was a man, whose appearance was like the appearance of brass, with a line of flax in his hand, and a measuring reed; and he stood in the gate.

4 And the man said unto me, Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, and set thine heart upon all that I shall shew thee; for to the intent that I might shew them unto thee art thou brought hither: declare all that thou seest to the house of Israel.

5 And behold a wall on the outside of the house round about, and in the man's hand a measuring reed of six cubits long by the cubit and an hand breadth: so he measured the breadth of the building, one reed; and the height, one reed.

6 ¶ Then came he unto the gate 'which looketh toward the east, and went up the stairs thereof, and measured the threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad; and the other threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad.

7 And every little chamber was one reed long, and one reed broad; and between the little chambers were five cubits; and the threshold of the gate by the porch of the gate within was one reed.

8 He measured also the porch of the gate within, one reed.

9 Then measured he the porch of the gate, eight cubits; and the posts thereof, two cubits; and the porch of the gate was inward.

10 And the little chambers of the gate eastward were three on this side, and three on that side; they three were of one measure: and the posts had one measure on this side and on that side.

11 And he measured the breadth of the entry of the gate, ten cubits; and the length of the gate, thirteen cubits.

12 The 'space also before the little chambers was one cubit on this side, and the space was one cubit on that side: and the little chambers were six cubits on this side, and six cubits on that side.

13 He measured then the gate from the roof of one little chamber to the roof of another: the breadth was five and twenty cubits, door against door.

14 He made also posts of threescore cubits, even unto the post of the court round about the gate.

15 And from the face of the gate of the entrance unto the face of the porch of the inner gate were fifty cubits.

16 And there were 'narrow windows to the little chambers, and to their posts within the gate round about, and likewise to the 'arches: and windows were round about 'inward: and upon each post were palm trees.

17 Then brought he me into the outward court, and, lo, there were chambers, and a pavement made for the court round about: thirty chambers were upon the pavement.

18 And the pavement by the side of the gates over against the length of the gates was the lower pavement.

19 Then he measured the breadth from the forefront of the lower gate unto the forefront of the inner court 'without, an hundred cubits eastward and northward.

20 ¶ And the gate of the outward court 'that looked toward the north, he measured the length thereof, and the breadth thereof.

21 And the little chambers thereof were three on this side and three on that side; and the posts thereof and the 'arches thereof were after the measure of the first gate: the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

22 And their windows, and their arches, and their palm trees, were after the measure of the gate that looketh toward the east; and they went up unto it by seven steps; and the arches thereof were before them.

23 And the gate of the inner court was over against the gate toward the north, and toward the east; and he measured from gate to gate an hundred cubits.

24 ¶ After that he brought me toward the south, and behold a gate toward the south: and he measured the posts thereof and the arches thereof according to these measures.

25 And there were windows in it and in the arches thereof round about, like those windows: the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

26 And there were seven steps to go up to it, and the arches thereof were before them: and it had palm trees, one on this side, and another on that side, upon the posts thereof.

27 And there was a gate in the inner court toward the south: and he measured from gate to gate toward the south an hundred cubits.

28 And he brought me to the inner court by the south gate: and he measured the south gate according to these measures;

29 And the little chambers thereof, and the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, according to these measures: and there were windows in it and in the arches thereof round about: it was fifty cubits long, and five and twenty cubits broad.

30 And the arches round about were five and twenty cubits long, and five cubits ¹⁰broad.

31 And the arches thereof were toward the utter court; and palm trees were upon the posts thereof: and the going up to it had eight steps.

32 ¶ And he brought me into the inner court toward the east: and he measured the gate according to these measures.

33 And the little chambers thereof, and the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, were according to these measures: and there were windows therein and in the arches thereof round about: it was fifty cubits long, and five and twenty cubits broad.

34 And the arches thereof were toward the outward court; and palm trees were upon the posts thereof, on this side, and on that side: and the going up to it had eight steps.

35 ¶ And he brought me to the north gate, and measured it according to these measures;

36 The little chambers thereof, the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, and the windows to it round about: the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

37 And the posts thereof were toward the utter court; and palm trees were upon the posts thereof, on this side, and on that side: and the going up to it had eight steps.

38 And the chambers and the entries thereof were by the posts of the gates, where they washed the burnt offering.

39 ¶ And in the porch of the gate were two tables on this side, and two tables on that side, to slay thereon the burnt offering and the sin offering and the trespass offering.

40 And at the side without, ¹¹as one goeth up to the entry of the north gate, were two tables; and on the other side, which was at the porch of the gate, were two tables.

41 Four tables were on this side, and four tables on that side, by the side of the gate; eight tables, whereupon they slew their sacrifices.

42 And the four tables were of hewn stone for the burnt offering, of a cubit and an half long, and a cubit and an half broad, and one cubit high: whereupon also they laid the instruments wherewith they slew the burnt offering and the sacrifice.

43 And within were ¹²hooks, an hand broad, fastened round about: and upon the tables was the flesh of the offering.

44 ¶ And without the inner gate were the chambers of the singers in the inner court, which was at the side of the north gate; and their prospect was toward the south: one at the side of the east gate having the prospect toward the north.

45 And he said unto me, This chamber, whose prospect is toward the south, is for the priests, the keepers of the ¹³charge of the house.

46 And the chamber whose prospect is toward the north is for the priests, the keepers of the charge of the altar: these are the sons of Zadok among the sons of Levi, which come near to the LORD to minister unto him.

47 So he measured the court, an hundred cubits long, and an hundred cubits broad, foursquare; and the altar that was before the house.

48 ¶ And he brought me to the porch of the house, and measured each post of the porch, five cubits on this side, and five cubits on that side: and the breadth of the gate was three cubits on this side, and three cubits on that side.

49 The length of the porch was twenty cubits, and the breadth eleven cubits; and he brought me by the steps whereby they went up to it: and there were pillars by the posts, one on this side, and another on that side.

CHAPS. XL.—XLVIII. We have mentioned, in the introductory note, the great and acknowledged difficulty involved in the obscure vision contained in these chapters. For this reason the Hebrews forbade this portion of Scripture to be read by persons under thirty years of age; and many Christian expositors have abstained altogether from comment. We do not approve of this, being persuaded that "all Scripture is profitable;" as, however, we should despair of giving a satisfactory explanation of all the details, and as the attempt would occupy more room than a regard to our limits would allow us to spare for the subject, we shall confine our attention to a few detached passages which offer occasion for such remarks as we have been accustomed to give.

One of the great difficulties in this description is to understand its design. Perhaps none of the numerous conjectures which have been offered are entirely satisfactory, and we are not disposed to add to the number. A very common explanation is, that, as the Temple and city were overthrown, and the ecclesiastical and civil polity of the Hebrews destroyed, these chapters were written to instruct them in what they were to do on their return from captivity, and in particular to give them such a detailed description as might enable them to build another temple, similar in form and dimensions to that of Solomon. It is under this explanation that the writers who have attempted to give us an account of Solomon's Temple, have freely availed themselves of the present chapters to complete their descriptions.

It would however be difficult to show that the temple of Zerubbabel answered to this description, or that which, as reconstructed and enriched by Herod, existed in the time of our Saviour, and is described by Josephus and the Rabbins; and even allowing that the later temple did, in essential matters, correspond to this representation, it is certain that the division of the land was not the same after the return from captivity, as is here prescribed, nor the governors and civil polity those which are here directed. On these grounds the Jews themselves allow that the directions given in these chapters have not hitherto been followed. They believe that many things which they contain cannot be understood till Elias (whom they still expect) shall come and explain them; and that the temple here described will not be built, nor the regulations take effect, until the Messiah comes, to whose advent they still look forward. Some Christian writers have been disposed to apply the whole to the condition of the Jews under a future restoration to their own land and privileges; while others interpret the whole with a mystical application to the church of Christ. We cannot enter into these explanations; but the reader will be glad to see the observations of Professor Dathe, as applying to what we have stated as the more common explanation, and as meeting the objections to which that explanation is open. His opinion, which he submits with diffidence to the consideration of others, is, that the passage "does not contain a prophecy, nor does it predict any future event; but it describes what ought to have been done, if the whole Jewish people, consisting of all the tribes, had returned from captivity to their own country. Liberty was granted to all, and all had it in their power to return. God now orders, by the mouth of his prophet, what should be the nature and character of his worship, and what division of the country should take place between the different tribes. There is nothing in the whole description which might not have been carried into effect, provided that all of them had returned, and taken possession of the land, which God granted to them. In this new possession of the Promised Land, which God offered to his people, the same thing happened as on a former occasion, when they entered into the land, which they had so long desired, under their leader Joshua. The division which then took place was very different from that which ought to have been made, according to the will of God; for the sloth and cowardice of the people, dreading a protracted war, was the reason why a great part of the country was allowed to remain in possession of the first inhabitants; and the same baseness of disposition, or love of present advantage, now detained them where they were; so that they chose rather to live as exiles among the nations, than to return to their own country, which was now either laid waste or occupied by others."

Verse 16. "Arches."—The marginal reading, "galleries, or, porches," as understood of a covered walk with pillars, is that which most interpreters seem to prefer. We are not, upon the whole, disposed to contest this preference; but there is one reason adduced in support of it, from which we are obliged to withhold our assent: this is, that the arch is a comparatively late invention and could not have been known to the Hebrews. Now as this reason involves the conclusion that no arches appeared in the public or private constructions of the Hebrews, though they abound in modern Oriental architecture, a question of some interest is suggested by the occurrence of the word here, which we may be expected to notice briefly, without its being necessary to show that the word is in the present instance properly used.

One of the arguments that was employed against the early antiquity of the arch, was its alleged absence from the more ancient architecture of the Egyptians. If therefore we can show that this impression is incorrect, and that the more ancient Egyptians were acquainted with the principle of the arch and did employ it in their constructions, we suppose it will no longer be contended that it was unknown to the Jews, who had so much intercourse with Egypt. Belzoni was decidedly of opinion that he had found Egyptian arches of very remote antiquity, and gives the specimens which we have copied: but his evidence on the subject is less conclusive than that which has since been supplied by Mr. Wilkinson, in a work printed by him a few years since at Malta, and containing much curious information, not superseded by that contained in his more recent publication, 'The Topography of Thebes.' He notices a curious imitation of an arch which he found in a fine edifice with an avenue of sphinxes, under the mountain of Qoorneh, on the Libyan side of Thebes. "It is formed of large blocks of stone placed horizontally over each other, the upper one projecting over that immediately below it, till the two upper ones meet in the centre, the inner angles being afterwards cut off so as to form a vault. Though this is not constructed on the principle of the arch, there is every reason to suppose that the Egyptians were well acquainted with that mode of building, as they appear to have adopted it from time immemorial in their tombs and crude brick houses, as I shall have occasion to remark presently."—The promised remark is as follows:—"An opinion, admitted by the generality of the learned world, gains force by want of contradiction, till at length it passes into fact. Such has been the case with the antiquity of the arch, which, to the surprise of every one who has attentively considered ancient remains, has been confined to the æra of Augustus. Without stopping to mention one of the time of Psamaticus II., or the probability of its being employed in the houses of the Egyptians from the earliest times, owing to the small quantity of wood growing in this country, and in roofing the chambers of crude brick pyramids, I proceed to facts, which require neither argument to support nor allow prejudice to refute them. I had long felt persuaded that the greater part of the crude brick vaults in the western tombs of Thebes were at least coeval with the 18th dynasty, but had never been fortunate enough to find proofs to support my conjecture, till chance threw in my way a tomb, vaulted in the usual manner, with an arched doorway of the same materials, stuccoed, and bearing in every part the fresco paintings and name of Amunoph I. Innumerable vaults and arches exist in Thebes, of early date, but unfortunately none with the names of kings remaining on them. The style of the paintings in the crude brick pyramids evince at once that they belong either to the end of the last mentioned or the beginning of the 17th dynasty."

It will be observed that this discovery carries the ascertained antiquity of the arch up to 1540 B.C., that is, to the time of the earlier Hebrew judges, and 460 years prior to the commencement of Solomon's Temple. The unascertained antiquity may have been, and probably was, much higher. Not long before the ascertained date, the Hebrews were bondsmen in Egypt, and are supposed by many to have been employed in the construction of those very pyramids of crude brick to which Mr. Wilkinson alludes. As we consider that the above facts suffice to substantiate the more than probability that the arch was known to the Hebrews, we resist the inducements which the subject offers to a more extended investigation.

43. "Hooks."—It is probable that these hooks were attached to posts, and that the victims were suspended from them to be skinned and dressed for sacrifice. Thus we are informed by the Rabbinical writers, that in the slaughter-place of the second temple, to the north of the altar, there were eight pillars of stone boarded with cedar, in each of which were fixed three rows of iron hooks, one above another, and that from the higher hooks were suspended the bullocks, from the next the rams, and from the lowest the lambs, when dressed for sacrifices. A large variety of instruments were employed in the ancient sacrifices. Of knives alone there were several kinds, and some of these have a hooked shape in ancient paintings; and something of this sort might be intended here, unless the above explanation should seem preferable.

CHAPTER XLI.

The measures, parts, chambers, and ornaments of the temple.

AFTERWARD he brought me to the temple, and measured the posts, six cubits broad on the one side, and six cubits broad on the other side, which was the breadth of the tabernacle.

2 And the breadth of the ¹door was ten cubits; and the sides of the door were five cubits on the one side, and five cubits on the other side: and he measured the length thereof, forty cubits: and the breadth, twenty cubits.

3 Then went he inward, and measured the post of the door, two cubits; and the door, six cubits; and the breadth of the door, seven cubits.

4 So he measured the length thereof, twenty cubits; and the breadth, twenty cubits, before the temple: and he said unto me, This is the most holy place.

5 After he measured the wall of the house, six cubits; and the breadth of every side chamber, four cubits, round about the house on every side.

6 And the side chambers were three, ²one over another, and ³thirty in order; and they entered into the wall which was of the house for the side chambers round about, that they might ⁴have hold, but they had not hold in the wall of the house.

7 And ⁵there was an enlarging, and a winding about still upward to the side chambers: for the winding about of the house went still upward round about the house: therefore the breadth of the house was still upward, and so increased from the lowest chamber to the highest by the midst.

8 I saw also the height of the house round about: the foundations of the side chambers were a full reed of six great cubits.

9 The thickness of the wall, which was for the side chamber without, was five cubits: and that which was left was the place of the side chambers that were within.

10 And between the chambers was the wideness of twenty cubits round about the house on every side.

11 And the doors of the side chambers were toward the place that was left, one door toward the north, and another door toward the south: and the breadth of the place that was left was five cubits round about.

12 Now the building that was before the separate place at the end toward the west was seventy cubits broad; and the wall of the building was five cubits thick round about, and the length thereof ninety cubits.

13 So he measured the house, an hundred cubits long; and the separate place, and the building, with the walls thereof, an hundred cubits long;

14 Also the breadth of the face of the house, and of the separate place toward the east, an hundred cubits.

15 And he measured the length of the building over against the separate place which was behind it, and the 'galleries thereof on the one side and on the other side, an hundred cubits, with the inner temple, and the porches of the court;

16 The door posts, and the narrow windows, and the galleries round about on their three stories, over against the door, 'cieled with wood round about, 'and from the ground up to the windows, and the windows were covered;

17 To that above the door, even unto the inner house, and without, and by all the wall round about within and without, by 'measure.

18 And it was made with cherubims and palm trees, so that a palm tree was between a cherub and a cherub; and every cherub had two faces;

19 So that the face of a man was toward the palm tree on the one side, and the face of a young lion toward the palm tree on the other side: it was made through all the house round about.

20 From the ground unto above the door were cherubims and palm trees made, and on the wall of the temple.

21 The ¹⁰posts of the temple were squared, and the face of the sanctuary; the appearance of the one as the appearance of the other.

22 The altar of wood was three cubits high, and the length thereof two cubits; and the corners thereof, and the length thereof, and the walls thereof, were of wood: and he said unto me, This is the table that is before the LORD.

23 And the temple and the sanctuary had two doors.

24 And the doors had two leaves apiece, two turning leaves; two leaves for the one door, and two leaves for the other door.

25 And there were made on them, on the doors of the temple, cherubims and palm trees, like as were made upon the walls; and there were thick planks upon the face of the porch without.

26 And there were narrow windows and palm trees on the one side and on the other side, on the sides of the porch, and upon the side chambers of the house, and thick planks.

Verse 8. "A full reed of six great cubits."—This reed of six great cubits was that with which all the measurements were taken. Compare verse 5 of the preceding chapter, where this reed is called "a measuring reed of six cubits long, by the cubit, and a hand's breadth." It has there been disputed whether the whole reed exceeded six cubits by a hand's breadth, or that each of the six cubits was a hand's breadth more than the common cubit. To us it seems that the present text decides for the latter alternative, which is that also chosen by the Targum, followed by many Jewish and Christian interpreters. The distinction of measures (and also weights, as in our own troy and avoirdupois), great and small, has existed among different nations, ancient and modern, and probably existed also among the Hebrews. That there was such a distinction among the Babylonians, among whom the prophet was a captive, is attested by Herodotus, who so gives the measurement of the walls of Babylon in such a manner as to supply a parallel illustration of some interest. "The width of the wall is fifty royal cubits, and its height two hundred cubits: the royal cubit exceeds the common cubit by three fingers' breadth." (Clio, 178.) It may not be impossible that this "royal cubit" was the very measure called the "great cubit" by the prophet.

CHAPTER XLII.

1 The chambers for the priests. 13 The use thereof. 19 The measures of the outward court.

THEN he brought me forth into the utter court, the way toward the north: and he brought me into the chamber that was over against the separate place, and which was before the building toward the north.

2 Before the length of an hundred cubits was the north door, and the breadth was fifty cubits.

3 Over against the twenty cubits which were for the inner court, and over against the pavement which was for the utter court, was gallery against gallery in three stories.

4 And before the chambers was a walk of ten cubits breadth inward, a way of one cubit; and their doors toward the north.

5 Now the upper chambers were shorter: for the galleries ¹were higher than these, ²than the lower, and than the middlemost of the building.

6 For they were in three stories, but had not pillars as the pillars of the courts: therefore the building was straitened more than the lowest and the middlemost from the ground.

7 And the wall that was without over against the chambers, toward the utter court on the forepart of the chambers, the length thereof was fifty cubits.

8 For the length of the chambers that were in the utter court was fifty cubits: and, lo, before the temple were an hundred cubits.

9 And ³from under these chambers was 'the entry on the east side, ⁴as one goeth into them from the utter court.

10 The chambers were in the thickness of the wall of the court toward the east, over against the separate place, and over against the building.

11 And the way before them was like the appearance of the chambers which were toward the north, as long as they, and as broad as they: and all their goings out were both according to their fashions, and according to their doors.

12 And according to the doors of the chambers that were toward the south was a door in the head of the way, even the way directly before the wall toward the east, as one entereth into them.

13 ¶ Then said he unto me, The north chambers and the south chambers, which are before the separate place, they be holy chambers, where the priests that approach unto the LORD shall eat the most holy things: there shall they lay the most holy things, and the meat offering, and the sin offering, and the trespass offering; for the place is holy.

14 When the priests enter therein, then shall they not go out of the holy place into the utter court, but there they shall lay their garments wherein they minister; for they are holy; and shall put on other garments, and shall approach to those things which are for the people.

15 Now when he had made an end of measuring the inner house, he brought me forth toward the gate whose prospect is toward the east, and measured it round about.

16 He measured the east 'side with the measuring reed, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed round about.

17 He measured the north side, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed round about.

18 He measured the south side, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed.

19 ¶ He turned about to the west side, and measured five hundred reeds with the measuring reed.

20 He measured it by the four sides: it had a wall round about, five hundred reeds long, and five hundred broad, to make a separation between the sanctuary and the profane place.

² Or, and the building consisted of the lower and the middlemost.

³ Or, as he came.

⁵ Or, from the place.

⁶ Or, he that brought me.

Verse 14. "There they shall lay their garments wherein they minister."—From this it appears still more clearly than from Exod. xxviii., that the priests did not ordinarily wear any of the sacred garments in which they discharged their sacred functions. Whether there was any thing in their dress which distinguished them in common life from the mass of the people does not appear in Scripture; but certainly they wore none of their sacred habiliments; and the probability is, that they wore the common dress of the time, being, as the Targum expresses it, "mingled with the people." The Jewish writers favour the opinion that the priests appeared in the common dress of private persons when not officiating. The Rabbinical writers say that the priestly wardrobe was kept by a priest, whose duty it was to deliver out and receive back the sacerdotal vestments, the several articles of which were kept separately in chests in an apartment appropriated to the purpose, each chest having on it the name of the article of dress which it contained, so that there was no confusion or mistake when the dresses were wanted.

CHAPTER XLIII.

1 The returning of the glory of God into the temple. 7 The sin of Israel hindered God's presence. 10 The prophet exhorteth them to repentance, and observation of the law of the house. 13 The measures, 18 and the ordinances of the altar.

AFTERWARD he brought me to the gate, even the gate that looketh toward the east:

2 And, behold, the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east: and his voice was like a noise of many waters: and the earth shined with his glory.

3 And it was according to the appearance of the vision which I saw, even according to the vision that I saw ^{when} I came to destroy the city: and the visions were like the vision that I saw by the river Chebar; and I fell upon my face.

4 And the glory of the LORD came into the house by the way of the gate whose prospect is toward the east.

5 So the spirit took me up, and brought me into the inner court; and, behold, the glory of the LORD filled the house.

6 And I heard him speaking unto me out of the house; and the man stood by me.

7 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, the place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever, and my holy name, shall the house of Israel no more defile, neither they, nor their kings, by their whoredom, nor by the carcasses of their kings in their high places.

8 In their setting of their threshold by my thresholds, and their post by my posts, and the wall between me and them, they have even defiled my holy name by their abominations that they have committed:

wherefore I have consumed them in mine anger.

9 Now let them put away their whoredom, and the carcasses of their kings, far from me, and I will dwell in the midst of them for ever.

10 ¶ Thou son of man, shew the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities: and let them measure the ^{pattern}.

11 And if they be ashamed of all that they have done, shew them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof, and the goings out thereof, and the comings in thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the laws thereof: and write it in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them.

12 This is the law of the house; Upon the top of the mountain the whole limit thereof round about shall be most holy. Behold, this is the law of the house.

13 ¶ And these are the measures of the altar after the cubits: The cubit is a cubit and an hand breadth; even the ^{bottom} shall be a cubit, and the breadth a cubit, and the border thereof by the ^{edge} thereof round about shall be a span: and this shall be the higher place of the altar.

14 And from the bottom upon the ground even to the lower settle shall be two cubits, and the breadth one cubit; and from the lesser settle even to the greater settle shall be four cubits, and the breadth one cubit.

15 ^{So} the altar shall be four cubits; and from ^{the} altar and upward shall be four horns.

18 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, thus saith the Lord God; These are the ordinances of the altar in the day when they shall make it, to offer burnt offerings thereon, and to sprinkle blood thereon.

19 And thou shalt give to the priests the Levites that be of the seed of Zadok, which approach unto me, to minister unto me, saith the Lord God, a young bullock for a sin offering.

20 And thou shalt take of the blood thereof, and put it on the four horns of it, and on the four corners of the settle, and upon the border round about: thus shalt thou cleanse and purge it.

21 Thou shalt take the bullock also of the sin offering, and he shall burn it in the appointed place of the house, without the sanctuary.

22 And on the second day thou shalt offer a kid of the goats without blemish for a sin offering; and they shall cleanse the altar, as they did cleanse it with the bullock.

23 When thou hast made an end of cleansing it, thou shalt offer a young bullock without blemish, and a ram out of the flock without blemish.

24 And thou shalt offer them before the Lord, and the priests shall cast salt upon them, and they shall offer them up for a burnt offering unto the Lord.

25 Seven days shalt thou prepare every day a goat for a sin offering: they shall also prepare a young bullock, and a ram out of the flock, without blemish.

26 Seven days shall they purge the altar and purify it; and they shall ¹⁰consecrate themselves.

27 And when these days are expired, it shall be, that upon the eighth day, and so forward, the priests shall make your burnt offerings upon the altar, and your ¹¹peace offerings; and I will accept you, saith the Lord God.

Verse 3. "When I came to destroy the city."—That is, when he came to prophesy that the city should be destroyed. This is a strong and remarkable instance of what occurs several times in the writings of the prophets, who express themselves as doing, or having done, that which they were commissioned to foretell or declare. Some other instances of this practice have been noticed as they occurred.

7. "By the carcasses of their kings."—Michaelis, apparently following a hint to that effect in the Targum, suggests that some of the kings were buried and their monuments erected near the wall which surrounded the temple and its courts, and that this vicinity is regarded as a profanation of the temple. The very general disposition manifested in different countries to inter the dead in or near holy places renders this far from improbable; while, on the other hand, it is certain that the law regarded the contact and proximity of a dead body as most polluting. Other explanations of the present text have, however, been given. Some understand the passage to refer to idols, called "carcasses," as things lifeless and abominable, while others suppose it alludes to the carcasses of the human sacrifices offered to Moloch or Milcom, understanding the word rendered "their kings" as the proper or titular name of this idol.

8. "Threshold."—See the note on 1 Sam. v. 5.

CHAPTER XLIV.

¹ The east gate assigned only to the prince. ⁴ The priests reprov'd for polluting of the sanctuary. ⁹ Idolaters incapable of the priest's office. ¹⁵ The sons of Zadok are accepted thereto. ¹⁷ Ordinances for the priests.

THEN he brought me back the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary which looketh toward the east; and it was shut.

2 Then said the Lord unto me; This gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened, and no man shall enter in by it; because the Lord, the God of Israel, hath entered in by it, therefore it shall be shut.

3 It is for the prince; the prince, he shall sit in it to eat bread before the Lord; he shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate, and shall go out by the way of the same.

4 ¶ Then brought he me the way of the north gate before the house: and I looked, and, behold, the glory of the LORD filled the house of the LORD: and I fell upon my face.

5 And the LORD said unto me, Son of man, 'mark well, and behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears all that I say unto thee concerning all the ordinances of the house of the LORD, and all the laws thereof; and mark well the entering in of the house, with every going forth of the sanctuary.

6 And thou shalt say to the rebellious, even to the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; O ye house of Israel, let it suffice you of all your abominations,

7 In that ye have brought *into my sanctuary*² strangers, uncircumcised in heart, and uncircumcised in flesh, to be in my sanctuary, to pollute it, even my house, when ye offer my bread, the fat and the blood, and they have broken my covenant because of all your abominations.

8 And ye have not kept the charge of mine holy things: but ye have set keepers of my ³charge in my sanctuary for yourselves.

9 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; No stranger, uncircumcised in heart, nor uncircumcised in flesh, shall enter into my sanctuary, of any stranger that is among the children of Israel.

10 And the Levites that are gone away far from me, when Israel went astray, which went astray away from me after their idols; they shall even bear their iniquity.

11 Yet they shall be ministers in my sanctuary, having charge at the gates of the house, and ministering to the house: they shall slay the burnt offering and the sacrifice for the people, and they shall stand before them to minister unto them.

12 Because they ministered unto them before their idols, and 'caused the house of Israel to fall into iniquity; therefore have I lifted up mine hand against them, saith the Lord God, and they shall bear their iniquity.

13 And they shall not come near unto me, to do the office of a priest unto me, nor to come near to any of my holy things, in the most holy place: but they shall bear their shame, and their abominations which they have committed.

14 But I will make them keepers of the charge of the house, for all the service thereof, and for all that shall be done therein.

15 ¶ But the priests the Levites, the sons of Zadok, that kept the charge of my sanctuary when the children of Israel went astray from me, they shall come near to me to minister unto me, and they shall stand before me to offer unto me the fat and the blood, saith the Lord God:

16 They shall enter into my sanctuary, and they shall come near to my table, to minister unto me, and they shall keep my charge.

17 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that when they enter in at the gates of the inner court, they shall be clothed with linen garments; and no wool shall come upon them, whiles they minister in the gates of the inner court, and within.

18 They shall have linen bonnets upon their heads, and shall have linen breeches upon their loins; they shall not gird *themselves*⁴ with any thing that causeth sweat.

19 And when they go forth into the utter court, even into the utter court to the people, they shall put off their garments wherein they ministered, and lay them in the holy chambers, and they shall put on other garments; and they shall not sanctify the people with their garments.

20 Neither shall they shave their heads, nor suffer their locks to grow long; they shall only poll their heads.

21 Neither shall any priest drink wine, when they enter into the inner court.

22 Neither shall they take for their wives a ⁵widow, nor her that is ⁶put away; but they shall take maidens of the seed of the house of Israel, or a widow ⁷that had a priest before.

25 And they shall come at no ¹⁰dead person to defile themselves: but for father, or for mother, or for son, or for daughter, for brother, or for sister that hath had no husband, they may defile themselves.

26 And after he is cleansed, they shall reckon unto him seven days.

27 And in the day that he goeth into the sanctuary, unto the inner court, to minister in the sanctuary, he shall offer his sin offering, saith the Lord God.

28 And it shall be unto them for an inheritance: I ¹¹*am* their inheritance: and ye shall give them no possession in Israel: I am their possession.

29 They shall eat the meat offering, and the sin offering, and the trespass offering; and every ¹²dedicated thing in Israel shall be their's.

30 And the ¹³ ¹⁴first of all the firstfruits of all things, and every oblation of all, of every sort of your oblations, shall be the priest's: ye shall also give unto the priest the first of your dough, that he may cause the blessing to rest in thine house.

Verse 2. "This gate shall be shut."—In the note to 1 Chron. ix. 18, we have taken some notice of the Oriental custom of honouring monarchs by appropriating gates to their exclusive use, keeping them closed, except when they are to enter, and of building others, which had been in common use, completely up after the sovereign has passed through them. This usage seems to explain the present passage: and to the illustrations already given we may now add the one furnished by Chardin, who informs us, that when a great man in Persia had built a palace, it was the custom for him to entertain the king and his grandees in it for several days. The great gate was then kept open; but when the festivities were over, and the king had departed, it was shut up to be opened no more.

He adds, that he understood the same custom to exist in Japan.

20. "They shall only poll their heads."—That is, only cut their hair: they were not to shave their heads, on the one hand, nor to allow their hair to grow long, on the other. Jerome conjectures that the regulation forbidding the priests to shave their heads was in order to distinguish them from several of the heathen priests, and particularly the Egyptian priests of Isis and Serapis, who had their heads shaved and uncovered. Most of the rules which the priests are directed to observe, in this chapter, are the same as those that occur in the Law of Moses, where the most remarkable of them have already received our attention.

CHAPTER XLV.

¹ The portion of land for the sanctuary, 6 for the city, 7 and for the prince. 9 Ordinances for the prince.

MOREOVER, 'when ye shall divide by lot the land for inheritance, ye shall offer an oblation unto the LORD, 'an holy portion of the land: the length shall be the length of five and twenty thousand reeds, and the breadth shall be ten thousand. This shall be holy in all the borders thereof round about.

2 Of this there shall be for the sanctuary five hundred in length, with five hundred in breadth, square round about; and fifty cubits round about for the 'suburbs thereof.

3 And of this measure shalt thou measure the length of five and twenty thousand, and the breadth of ten thousand: and in it shall be the sanctuary and the most holy place.

4 The holy portion of the land shall be for the priests the ministers of the sanctuary, which shall come near to minister unto the LORD: and it shall be a place for their houses, and an holy place for the sanctuary.

5 And the five and twenty thousand of length, and the ten thousand of breadth, shall also the Levites, the ministers of the house, have for themselves, for a possession for twenty chambers.

6 ¶ And ye shall appoint the possession of the city five thousand broad, and five and ² Heb. holiness.

³ Or, void places.

twenty thousand long, over against the oblation of the holy portion: it shall be for the whole house of Israel.

7 ¶ And a portion shall be for the prince on the one side and on the other side of the oblation of the holy portion, and of the possession of the city, before the oblation of the holy portion, and before the possession of the city, from the west side westward, and from the east side eastward: and the length shall be over against one of the portions, from the west border unto the east border.

8 In the land shall be his possession in Israel: and my princes shall no more oppress my people; and the rest of the land shall they give to the house of Israel according to their tribes.

9 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; Let it suffice you, O princes of Israel: remove violence and spoil, and execute judgment and justice, take away your 'exactions from my people, saith the Lord God.

10 Ye shall have just 'balances, and a just ephah, and a just bath.

11 The ephah and the bath shall be of one measure, that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the ephah the tenth part of an homer: the measure thereof shall be after the homer.

12 And the 'shekel shall be twenty gerahs: twenty shekels, five and twenty shekels, fifteen shekels, shall be your maneh.

13 This is the oblation that ye shall offer; the sixth part of an ephah of an homer of wheat, and ye shall give the sixth part of an ephah of an homer of barley:

14 Concerning the ordinance of oil, the bath of oil, ye shall offer the tenth part of a bath out of the cor, which is an homer of ten baths; for ten baths are an homer:

15 And one 'lamb out of the flock, out of two hundred, out of the fat pastures of Israel; for a meat offering, and for a burnt offering, and for 'peace offerings, to make reconciliation for them, saith the Lord God.

16 All the people of the land 'shall give this oblation ¹⁰for the prince in Israel.

17 And it shall be the prince's part to give burnt offerings, and meat offerings, and drink offerings, in the feasts, and in the new moons, and in the sabbaths, in all solemnities of the house of Israel: he shall prepare the sin offering, and the meat offering, and the burnt offering, and the ¹¹peace offerings, to make reconciliation for the house of Israel.

18 Thus saith the Lord God; In the first month, in the first day of the month, thou shalt take a young bullock without blemish, and cleanse the sanctuary:

19 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin offering, and put it upon the posts of the house, and upon the four corners of the settle of the altar, and upon the posts of the gate of the inner court.

20 And so thou shalt do the seventh day of the month for every one that erreth, and for him that is simple: so shall ye reconcile the house.

21 In the first month, in the fourteenth day of the month, ye shall have the pass-over, a feast of seven days; unleavened bread shall be eaten.

22 And upon that day shall the prince prepare for himself and for all the people of the land a bullock for a sin offering.

23 And seven days of the feast he shall prepare a burnt offering to the Lord, seven bullocks and seven rams without blemish daily the seven days; and a kid of the goats daily for a sin offering.

24 And he shall prepare a meat offering of an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and an hin of oil for an ephah.

25 In the seventh month, in the fifteenth day of the month, shall he do the like in the ¹²feast of the seven days, according to the sin offering, according to the burnt offering, and according to the meat offering, and according to the oil.

Verse 12. "Twenty shekels, five and twenty shekels, fifteen shekels, shall be your maneh."—"During the captivity of the Jews and after their return, they made use of the weights and measures of other nations. Ezekiel accordingly mentions foreign manehs of fifteen, of twenty, and of five and twenty shekels." (Jahn's 'Archæologia Biblica,' p. 115.) There is, however, another explanation, which supposes that we are to add these several sums together, in order to obtain the amount of the Hebrew maneh, which is thus stated at sixty shekels. And to account for the singular mode of computation, it is alleged that the component sums were pieces of money, of the respective values stated, and the amount of which made a maneh. Another explanation of this last matter suggests a reference to the Oriental mode of stating sums of money in contracts and acknowledgments; when, to prevent fraud by changes in single words and figures, not only is the whole sum stated, but it is added, that the half of it is so much, and the quarter so much. Nothing of all this appears very satisfactory to our minds. As it would require discussion, we will not here particularly insist that a comparison of 1 Kings x. 17, with 2 Chron. ix. 16, seems to furnish clearer evidence for taking the maneh at 100 shekels than the present text does for making it sixty; but, with respect to what is said about coins of different values, we may observe that there is not the least evidence or probability that the Hebrews had any such pieces of money, and that the text does not speak of money or value, but of weight. And then, as to the explanation suggested by the Oriental mode of stating values, it clearly cannot apply in the present instance, since the numbers fifteen, twenty, twenty-five, have not that corresponding relation to each other, and to the whole sum, which the practice alluded to requires. The text is however very difficult; and it is easier to object to the explanations which have been given, than to suggest one liable to no objection.

CHAPTER XLVI.

1 Ordinances for the prince in his worship, 9 and for the people. 16 An order for the prince's inheritance. 19 The courts for boiling and baking.

THUS saith the Lord God; The gate of the inner court that looketh toward the east shall be shut the six working days; but on the sabbath it shall be opened, and in the day of the new moon it shall be opened.

2 And the prince shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate without, and shall stand by the post of the gate, and the priests shall prepare his burnt offering and his peace offerings, and he shall worship at the threshold of the gate: then he shall go forth; but the gate shall not be shut until the evening.

3 Likewise the people of the land shall worship at the door of this gate before the Lord in the sabbaths and in the new moons.

4 And the burnt offering that the prince shall offer unto the Lord in the sabbath day shall be six lambs without blemish, and a ram without blemish.

5 And the meat offering shall be an ephah for a ram, and the meat offering for the lambs 'as he shall be able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

6 And in the day of the new moon it shall be a young bullock without blemish, and six lambs, and a ram: they shall be without blemish.

7 And he shall prepare a meat offering; an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and for the lambs according as his hand shall attain unto, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

8 And when the prince shall enter, he shall go in by the way of the porch of that gate, and he shall go forth by the way thereof.

9 ¶ But when the people of the land shall come before the Lord in the solemn feasts, he that entereth in by the way of the north gate to worship shall go out by the way of the south gate; and he that entereth by the way of the south gate shall go forth by the way of the north gate: he shall not return by the way of the gate whereby he came in, but shall go forth over against it.

10 And the prince in the midst of them, when they go in, shall go in; and when they go forth, shall go forth.

11 And in the feasts and in the solemnities the meat offering shall be an ephah to a bullock, and an ephah to a ram, and to the lambs as he is able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

12 Now when the prince shall prepare a voluntary burnt offering or peace offerings voluntarily unto the Lord, one shall then open him the gate that looketh toward the east, and he shall prepare his burnt offering and his peace offerings, as he did on the sabbath day: then he shall go forth; and after his going forth one shall shut the gate.

13 Thou shalt daily prepare a burnt offering unto the Lord of a lamb ²of the first year without blemish: thou shalt prepare it every morning.

14 And thou shalt prepare a meat offering for it every morning, the sixth part of an ephah, and a third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour; a meat offering continually by a perpetual ordinance unto the LORD.

15 Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the meat offering, and the oil, every morning for a continual burnt offering.

16 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; If the prince give a gift unto any of his sons, the inheritance thereof shall be his sons'; it shall be their possession by inheritance.

17 But if he give a gift of his inheritance to one of his servants, then it shall be his to the year of liberty; after it shall return to the prince: but his inheritance shall be his sons' for them.

18 Moreover the prince shall not take of the people's inheritance by oppression, to thrust them out of their possession; but he shall give his sons inheritance out of his own possession: that my people be not scattered every man from his possession.

19 ¶ After he brought me through the entry, which was at the side of the gate, into the holy chambers of the priests, which looked toward the north: and, behold, there was a place on the two sides westward.

20 Then said he unto me, This is the place where the priests shall boil the trespass offering and the sin offering, where they shall bake the meat offering; that they bear them not out into the utter court, to sanctify the people.

21 Then he brought me forth into the utter court, and caused me to pass by the four corners of the court; and, behold, 'in every corner of the court there was a court.

22 In the four corners of the court there were courts 'joined of forty cubits long and thirty broad: these four 'corners were of one measure.

23 And there was a row of building round about in them, round about them four, and it was made with boiling places under the rows round about.

24 Then said he unto me, These are the places of them that boil, where the ministers of the house shall boil the sacrifice of the people.

Verse 3. "The people of the land shall worship at the door of this gate."—We have met with a very curious engraving in the 'Antiquités d'Herculanum,' after an ancient painting found at Portici, representing the Egyptian worship of Isis. This we have copied; for while some allege that the forms of the Hebrew worship resembled, essentially, those of the Egyptians, and others contend that their forms were designedly made as different as possible from those of Egypt, it is an advantage to ascertain the truth from the unexceptionable testimony of an ancient painting.

That there are some resemblances is certain; and most of these applied not merely to the worship of the Egyptians, but to that of other nations also. And when we quietly consider the subject, while we can see very clearly why observances and ceremonies liable to misconception or abuse, should be altered or omitted, there does not appear any reason why the forms which the general consent of mankind had considered suitably to mark their reverence or adoration, should be changed to something else which had not previously been known. Bowing the knee is a ceremony; but the Hebrews were not forbidden to bow the knee, so that they did not bow it to Baal.

The resemblances we see here are:—that sacrifice and worship are not performed in the sanctuary, but in the court before it, where the altar also appears to occupy nearly the same position as it did in the court before the Hebrew temple. The altar, moreover, is provided with "borns." Other analogies are, that the worshippers are in a standing posture, with one exception; that they are all barefooted; and that one man is blowing a trumpet precisely similar to that which the Levites blew at the Hebrew sacrifices.

The differences are more considerable than the analogies. The temple is in a grove—a thing forbidden in Scripture: every individual is bareheaded, whereas the Jews never worshipped but with covered heads: the man who blows the trumpet is sitting, whereas it is a received maxim among the Jewish doctors that no one could sit in the temple courts, excepting only the king, for the time being, of the house of David. The most important difference, however, is the presence of the congregation on each side of the altar, ranged in lines between it and the sanctuary. This is evidently a mixed congregation, including even women; but among the Hebrews the congregation was not admitted at all into the court immediately before the sanctuary, which was appropriated solely to the priests and Levites; and moreover the women did not assemble in the same outer court as the men, but had a separate one of their own. So different indeed were the practices in this matter, that we see in the present example that one of the three most conspicuous of the officiating personages (those at the top of the steps) is a female, a priestess of Isis. Among the Hebrews, also, the space between the porch and the altar was accounted, after the sanctuary itself, the most holy part of "the mountain of the Lord's house," and hence, when an act of worship commenced, all persons entitled to be in this court, withdrew from that part, and ranged themselves below the altar. The present cut exhibits exactly the opposite custom. These observations, suggested by the engraving we now give, will serve to point out some of the more remarkable of the agreements and differences found in the external forms of worship among the Hebrews as compared with those of their heathen neighbours. It is more than probable, that when the Jews fell into idolatry, they worshipped some of their idols after the fashion shown in the cut, and particularly "the queen of heaven" and the idols borrowed from Egypt.

WORSHIP OF ISIS.—FROM 'ANTIQUITÉS D'HERCULANUM.'

CHAPTER XLVII.

1 The vision of the holy waters. 6 The virtue of them.
13 The borders of the land. 22 The division of it by lot.

AFTERWARD he brought me again unto the door of the house; and, behold, waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward: for the forefront of the house stood toward the east, and the waters came down from under from the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar.

2 Then brought he me out of the way of the gate northward, and led me about the way without unto the utter gate by the way that looketh eastward: and, behold, there ran out waters on the right side.

3 And when the man that had the line in his hand went forth eastward, he measured a thousand cubits, and he brought me through the waters; the 'waters were to the ankles.

4 Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through the waters; the waters were to the knees. Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through; the waters were to the loins.

5 Afterward he measured a thousand; and it was a river that I could not pass over: for the waters were risen, 'waters to swim in, a river that could not be passed over.

6 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen this? Then he brought me, and caused me to return to the brink of the river.

7 Now when I had returned, behold, at the 'bank of the river were very many 'trees on the one side and on the other.

8 Then said he unto me, These waters issue out toward the east country, and go down into the 'desert, and go into the sea: which being brought forth into the sea, the waters shall be healed.

9 And it shall come to pass, that every thing that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the 'rivers shall come, shall live: and there shall be a very great multitude of fish, because these waters shall come thither:

for they shall be healed; and every thing shall live whither the river cometh.

10 And it shall come to pass, that the fishers shall stand upon it from En-gedi even unto En-eglaim; they shall be a place to spread forth nets; their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of the great sea, exceeding many.

11 But the miry places thereof and the marishes thereof shall not be healed; they shall be given to salt.

12 And by the river upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed: it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months, because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary: and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine.

13 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; This shall be the border, whereby ye shall inherit the land according to the twelve tribes of Israel; Joseph shall have two portions.

14 And ye shall inherit it, one as well as another: concerning the which I lifted up mine hand to give it unto your fathers: and this land shall fall unto you for inheritance.

15 And this shall be the border of the land toward the north side, from the great sea, the way of Hethlon, as men go to Zedad;

16 Hamath, Berothah, Sibraim, which is between the border of Damascus and the border of Hamath; Hazar-hatticon, which is by the coast of Hauran.

17 And the border from the sea shall be Hazar-enan, the border of Damascus, and the north northward, and the border of Hamath. And this is the north side.

18 And the east side ye shall measure from Hauran, and from Damascus, and from Gilead, and from the land of Israel by Jordan, from the border unto the east sea. And this is the east side.

19 And the south side southward, from Tamar even to the waters of strife in Kadesh, the river to the great sea. And this is the south side southward, 20 The west side also shall be the great sea from the border, till a man come over against Hamath. This is the west side.

Verse 1. "Behold waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward."—Whatever be thought of the description contained in these chapters, as a whole, it is generally admitted that the account contained in this chapter of the waters issuing from the temple, deepening and widening as they went, blessing the land through which they passed, and healing the sea of death to which they came, must be figuratively understood. And, thus understood, most commentators seem inclined to apply the allegory to the spread and the blessings of the Christian faith. It is indeed impossible to understand the account literally; yet it is certain that this figurative description is founded upon circumstances proper to the place and country, and which are applied and sustained with great felicity in this very beautiful parable.

It must be evident that a great quantity of water must have been required for the service of the temple. How this supply was obtained appears from the Rabbinical writers, and still more distinctly from Aristæas, whose book was written while the second temple stood, and whose account we give as quoted by Lightfoot ('Prospect of the Temple,' ch. xxiii.): "There was a continual supply of water, as if there had been an abundant fountain underneath. And there were wonderful and inexpressible receptacles under ground, as appeared five furlongs' space above the temple; each one of which had divers pipes, by which waters came in on every side; all these were of lead, under ground, and much earth laid upon them. And there were many vents on the pavement, not to be seen at all but to those that served; so that in a trice, and easily, all the blood of the sacrifices could be washed away, though it were never so much. And I will tell you how I came to know of these under-ground receptacles: they brought me out more than four furlongs space out of the city, and one bade me stoop down at a certain place, and listen what a noise the meeting of the waters made." From this it seems that the waters were collected from many neighbouring sources; but the Rabbins inform us that the principal supply was derived from the fountain of Etam. It appears that these streams, after having passed under the temple and filled its cisterns, went out on the east side, and there uniting with each other, and with the waters of Siloam, Kidron, and other streams, that seem to have been more numerous and abundant about Jerusalem in ancient times than at present—the whole formed a considerable body of water, augmented by other streams as it passed, till it ultimately fell into the Dead Sea. In this climate, we may be sure that this stream, in proportion to its extent, fertilized the land through which it passed, and was lined with shrubs and bushes, if not trees also; supplying the comparison or statement in verse 7. We are not to suppose that this stream had any considerable effect in "healing" the waters of the Dead Sea, for even the stream of the Jordan has not; but as the stream of living water did enter the salt and bitter waters of the Dead Sea, the figurative account, which follows, of the blessed effects of the fresh stream upon the waters of death, is most naturally and beautifully applied. The sea is supposed thus to receive that healing which it did and does still require: and the reader who has perused the accounts of this Sea (our own, under Gen. xix. 25, for instance) will not fail to observe how remarkably the healing effects are stated, so as to convey distinct intimations of the peculiarities by which that lake was distinguished from others; such as that it should abound in fish—intimating that it naturally did not; that, in consequence, fishers should frequent all its shores, which never happened in the natural state of the lake; and that its banks should be lined with trees of nourishment and health, of which it was naturally destitute.

DEAD SEA.—FORBIN.

11. "The miry places . . . and the marishes . . . shall be given to salt."—See the note on 2 Kings xiv. 7.

16. "Hauran."—This name occurs only here and in verse 18; and denotes a district to the south of Damascus, and east of the half tribe of Manasseh and the tribe of Gad, beyond Jordan. Its extent seems to have varied at different times. Col. Leake supposes that it was of inconsiderable extent in the time of the Jews, but enlarged its boundaries under the Greeks and Romans, who modified its name to Auranitis. It has been still further increased since that time, and the district which now bears the name includes not only Auranitis but Ituræa also, together with the greater part of Bashan, or Batanæa, and Trachonitis; extending, in its greatest length, from about twenty miles to the south of Damascus to a little below Bozra.

Very little was known of this tract of country till the ample accounts which have been furnished by Burckhardt and Buckingham, in their respective 'Travels.' As it is but slightly mentioned in Scripture, we may content ourselves with a reference to the descriptions which these travellers supply; although some further notice of this territory may be taken under Luke iii. 1, where the ancient districts which form the most considerable portion of the modern Hauran are particularly mentioned.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

1, 23 The portions of the twelve tribes, 8 of the sanctuary, 15 of the city and suburbs, 21 and of the prince. 30 The dimensions and gates of the city.

Now these are the names of the tribes. From the north end to the coast of the way of Hethlon, as one goeth to Hamath, Hazar-enan, the border of Damascus northward, to the coast of Hamath; for these are his sides east and west; ¹ a portion for Dan.

2 And by the border of Dan, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Asher.

3 And by the border of Asher, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Naphtali.

4 And by the border of Naphtali, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Manasseh.

5 And by the border of Manasseh, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Ephraim.

6 And by the border of Ephraim, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Reuben.

7 And by the border of Reuben, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Judah.

8 ¶ And by the border of Judah, from the east side unto the west side, shall be the offering which ye shall offer of five and twenty thousand reeds in breadth, and in length as one of the other parts, from the east side unto the west side: and the sanctuary shall be in the midst of it.

9 The oblation that ye shall offer unto the LORD shall be of five and twenty thousand in length, and of ten thousand in breadth.

10 And for them, even for the priests, shall be this holy oblation; toward the north five and twenty thousand in length, and toward the west ten thousand in breadth, and toward the east ten thousand in breadth, and toward the south five and twenty thousand in length: and the sanctuary of the LORD shall be in the midst thereof.

11 ² It shall be for the priests that are sanctified of the sons of Zadok; which have kept my ³charge, which went not astray when the children of Israel went astray, as the Levites went astray.

12 And this oblation of the land that is offered shall be unto them a thing most holy by the border of the Levites.

13 And over against the border of the priests the Levites shall have five and twenty thousand in length, and ten thousand in breadth: all the length shall be five and twenty thousand, and the breadth ten thousand.

14 And they shall not sell of it, neither exchange, nor alienate the firstfruits of the land: for it is holy unto the LORD.

15 ¶ And the five thousand, that are left in the breadth over against the five and twenty thousand, shall be a profane place for the city, for dwelling, and for suburbs: and the city shall be in the midst thereof.

16 And these shall be the measures thereof; the north side four thousand and five hundred, and the south side four thousand and five hundred, and on the east side four thousand and five hundred, and the west side four thousand and five hundred.

17 And the suburbs of the city shall be toward the north two hundred and fifty, and toward the south two hundred and fifty, and toward the east two hundred and fifty, and toward the west two hundred and fifty.

18 And the residue in length over against the oblation of the holy portion shall be ten thousand eastward, and ten thousand westward: and it shall be over against the oblation of the holy portion; and the increase thereof shall be for food unto them that serve the city.

19 And they that serve the city shall serve it out of all the tribes of Israel.

20 All the oblation shall be five and twenty thousand by five and twenty thousand: ye shall offer the holy oblation foursquare, with the possession of the city.

21 ¶ And the residue shall be for the prince, on the one side and on the other of the holy oblation, and of the possession of the city, over against the five and twenty thousand of the oblation toward the east border, and westward over against the five and twenty thousand toward the west border, over against the portions for the prince: and it shall be the holy oblation; and the sanctuary of the house shall be in the midst thereof.

22 Moreover from the possession of the Levites, and from the possession of the city, being in the midst of that which is the prince's, between the border of Judah and the border of Benjamin, shall be for the prince.

23 As for the rest of the tribes, from the east side unto the west side Benjamin shall have ^a portion.

24 And by the border of Benjamin, from the east side unto the west side, Simeon shall have a portion.

25 And by the border of Simeon, from the east side unto the west side, Issachar a portion.

26 And by the border of Issachar, from the east side unto the west side, Zebulun a portion.

27 And by the border of Zebulun, from the east side unto the west side, Gad a portion.

28 And by the border of Gad, at the south side southward, the border shall be even from Tamar unto the waters of 'strife in Kadesh, and to the river toward the great sea.

29 This is the land which ye shall divide by lot unto the tribes of Israel for inheritance, and these are their portions, saith the Lord God.

30 ¶ And these are the goings out of the city on the north side, four thousand and five hundred measures.

31 And the gates of the city shall be after the names of the tribes of Israel: three gates northward; one gate of Reuben, one gate of Judah, one gate of Levi.

32 And at the east side four thousand and five hundred: and three gates; and one gate of Joseph, one gate of Benjamin, one gate of Dan.

33 And at the south side four thousand and five hundred measures: and three gates; one gate of Simeon, one gate of Issachar, one gate of Zebulun.

34 At the west side four thousand and five hundred, with their three gates; one gate of Gad, one gate of Asher, one gate of Naphtali.

Verse 16. "These shall be the measures thereof."—That is, of the city; which, it will be seen, was an exact square, measuring 4500 on each side, and being 18,000 in circumference, and each side of the square having three gates, called after the tribes of Israel. The dimensions have occasioned some discussion; for the measure, in which the estimate is made, not being mentioned, has been variously supplied. Many suppose that the measure was the "reed," in which the other measurements were taken; and our translators appear to have been of this opinion, as they supply the word in verse 8. This, according to the usual computation of Ezekiel's "reed," would make the circumference about thirty-six miles. Others suppose the cubit to be intended, which would reduce the dimensions so as not to greatly exceed the thirty-three stades which Josephus gives as the circuit of Jerusalem. There have however been some who interpret the dimensions in such an extent that, as they state, not all the land of Israel, nor even all Europe, if all the world could contain it: and then allege this impossibility as an argument for the figurative interpretation of the whole account contained in these final chapters of Ezekiel. Luther, for one, makes the circumference of the city to be thirty-six thousand German miles—each being equal to four and a half of our own miles: and this computation is really moderate compared with some that we have seen. Our own impression is, that the "reed" is the highest measure which can in this instance be taken; and that very probably the cubit rather than this reed is to be understood. Whatever measure be taken in this instance, must of course be applied to the other parts, describing the lands of the priests, and the Levites, in the neighbourhood of the city. The whole of this, it appears, formed one great square containing five rectangles—thus; that for the priests (verses 9, 10) was 25,000 by 10,000; that for the Levites (verse 13), also 25,000 by 10,000; that for the city and suburbs (verses 16, 17), 5000 by 5000; adding two on each side of 10,000 by 5000 (verse 18), equal to 10,000 by 10,000—making altogether, a rectangle of 25,000 by 25,000, which would, by Ezekiel's reed, afford a circuit of about 200 miles, but only of about thirty miles by the cubit. This statement serves for little more than to show the uncertainty in which the whole subject is involved.

IN CONCLUDING the notes to the book of Ezekiel it may be proper to take some notice of the alleged tomb of this prophet. The tomb is situated a few miles to the south-east of the ruins of Babylon, on the road to Meshid Ali—the place where the Caliph Ali is supposed to have been interred. If we were to allow that the Jews—a considerable body of whom has always been found in this country, from the time of the Captivity till now—were likely to transmit correctly, from one generation to another, the knowledge of the places where the prophets of the captivity were interred; the presence of this tomb near Babylon, and at a distance from the river Khabour, where the prophet usually resided, might admit of an easy explanation, arising from the probability that he died while on a visit to the metropolis. Be this as it may, the tomb of Ezekiel has been pointed out for ages at the spot indicated. It was first described to Europeans by Benjamin of Tudela. He says there were several synagogues at the place, and that behind one of them was the tomb of Ezekiel, under a great and very goodly vault, supposed to have been built by the captive king Jeconiah over the remains of the prophet. That this deposed king, when liberated from prison and treated with respect by Evil-merodach, should have erected a suitable monument to his venerable fellow-captive, is not unlikely; but that this was the same building which Benjamin saw, we might very safely dispute. However, the account which this Jew proceeds to give is quite in conformity with existing usages, at those tombs of great prophets which are made places of pilgrimage. "This place is holy even unto this day. And unto that place, at a certain time, many assemble for the cause of prayer, from the beginning of the year unto the feast of expiation; and there they live most pleasant days. And their principal man, whom they call the Prince of the Captivity, with the other heads of the assemblies, come hither also from Bagdad, and abide all in that field for two and twenty miles together. Moreover the Arabian merchants come thither, and the greatest and most frequented fairs are kept there. But at this time a great book, renowned for authority and antiquity, written by Ezekiel the prophet, is brought forth, wherein they read on the day of expiation. And upon the sepulchre of Ezekiel a lamp continually burneth day and night. There is also a certain great sacred temple there, full of books, kept as well from the time of the first house (temple) as of the second: and it is and was the custom, that they who had no children should consecrate their books in this place. Moreover, vows are made in that place, to be performed by the Jews dwelling in Media and Persia. The principal men also of the Ishmaelites resort hither to pray, among whom the authority and reverence of the prophet Ezekiel is great. The name of the place is, in their language, Dar melihha, that is, the House of Congregation; and thither all the Arabians come for cause of prayer." He adds, that this general reverence for the memory of Ezekiel has preserved untouched, in the midst of frequent and bitter wars, the tomb and other venerated places in this neighbourhood. This account is one of the best and most consistent statements in Benjamin's book. The present tomb is described by Sir John Macdonald (Kinneir) as "a large clumsy building, without beauty or ornament; and like the tomb of Ezra, on the banks of the Tigris, a short way above Kornah, is much frequented by the Jews." ('Geographical Memoir,' p. 282.)

D A N I E L.

CHAPTER I.

¹ Jehoiakim's captivity. ³ Ashpenaz taketh Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah. ⁸ They refusing the king's portion do prosper with pulse and water. ¹⁷ Their excellency in wisdom.

N the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim king of Judah 'came Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon unto Jerusalem, and besieged it.

² And the Lord gave Jehoiakim king of Judah into his hand, with part of the vessels of the house of God : which he carried into the land of Shinar to the house of his god ; and he brought the vessels into the treasure house of his god.

³ ¶ And the king spake unto Ashpenaz the master of his eunuchs, that he should bring certain of the children of Israel, and of the king's seed, and of the princes ;

⁴ Children in whom was no blemish, but well favoured, and skilful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science, and such as had ability in them to stand in the king's palace, and whom they might teach the learning and the tongue of the Chaldeans.

⁵ And the king appointed them a daily provision of the king's meat, and of ²the wine which he drank : so nourishing them three years, that at the end thereof they might stand before the king.

⁶ Now among these were of the children of Judah, Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah :

⁷ Unto whom the prince of the eunuchs gave names : for he gave unto Daniel the name of Belteshazzar ; and to Hananiah, of Shadrach ; and to Mishael, of Meshach ; and to Azariah, of Abed-nego.

⁹ Now God had brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince of the eunuchs.

¹⁰ And the prince of the eunuchs said unto Daniel, I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink : for why should he see your faces ³worse liking than the children which are of your ⁴'sort ? then shall ye make me endanger my head to the king.

¹¹ Then said Daniel to ⁵'Melzar, whom the prince of the eunuchs had set over Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, ¹² Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days : and let them give us ⁶'pulse' to eat, and water to drink.

¹³ Then let our countenances be looked upon before thee, and the countenance of the children that eat of the portion of the king's meat: and as thou seest, deal with thy servants.

14 So he consented to them in this matter, and proved them ten days.

15 And at the end of ten days their countenances appeared fairer and fatter in flesh than all the children which did eat the portion of the king's meat.

16 Thus Melzar took away the portion of their meat, and the wine that they should drink; and gave them pulse.

17 ¶ As for these four children, God gave them knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom: and Daniel had understanding in all visions and dreams.

* Or, he made Daniel understand.

18 Now at the end of the days that the king had said he should bring them in, then the prince of the eunuchs brought them in before Nebuchadnezzar.

19 And the king communed with them; and among them all was found none like Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah: therefore stood they before the king.

20 And in all matters of wisdom and understanding, that the king enquired of them, he found them ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers that were in all his realm.

21 And Daniel continued even unto the first year of king Cyrus.

DANIEL.—FROM THE FRESCOS BY MICHAEL ANGELO IN THE SISTINE CHAPEL.

DANIEL.—The history of Daniel is contained in the book which bears his name. From this we learn that he was in the first band of Hebrew captains sent to Babylon in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, about seven years before the deportation of the second band, which included Ezekiel. It appears from the history that he was quite a youth at this time; and as those carried into captivity on this occasion appear to have been exclusively persons of consideration and youths of distinguished families, there is every reason to believe that Daniel must have belonged to a family of rank and consequence. The Jews indeed go further, and believe that he was of the royal family, and descended from Hezekiah; and therefore cite his history in confirmation of the prophecy of Isaiah (xxxix. 7) to that monarch, "Of thy sons which shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon." Daniel, being one of the youths selected to be brought up for future service at the court of the conqueror, received instruction in all the learning of the Chaldeans. But it was through the wisdom given him from above, and the signal favour of God manifested remarkably towards him before the eyes of the heathen, that he rose to distinction at the court of Babylon, and was held in high consideration by its successive kings, through all the seventy years in which his nation remained in captivity, and whose condition in captivity was probably much meliorated through his influence. As Josephus observes, he was the only one of the prophets who enjoyed a high degree of worldly prosperity. His life was however not without its trials, disturbed as it was by the envy and murderous plots of jealous courtiers; but all these served but the more to manifest his righteousness and faith, and in the end tended to establish him all the more firmly in his high place. Daniel must have lived to a great age. There is an interval of seventy years between the date of his first prophecy (ii. 1) and his last (x. 1). Some suppose him to have been twenty years of age when carried into captivity; he was very possibly younger. However, ten years after, we find him celebrated for his piety and wisdom (Ezek. xiv. 14, 20), which seems indeed to have become proverbial (Ezek. xxviii. 3). At the date of his last prophecy, in the first year of Cyrus, he must have been about ninety years of age; and it is not probable that he survived much longer. There is no record of the time or place of his death; but the pseudo-Epiphanius, who wrote the lives of the prophets, having stated that he died at Babylon, his account has been usually followed, although it would seem quite as probable that he died at Susa, whence his last prophecy is dated. Although he survived the captivity, there is nothing to sanction the opinion that he returned to his own country. His great age might well prevent him; as also, perhaps, the consideration that he was in the way of being more serviceable to his nation by remaining at the Persian court than by returning to Palestine.

The Hebrews always accounted this book as canonical. Josephus calls Daniel not only a prophet, but one of the greatest of the prophets; adding, that he not only, in common with other prophets, foretold future things, but also fixed the precise time of their coming to pass. Our Saviour also cites him as "Daniel the prophet." It is important to note this, as, in the Hebrew Bible, the book of Daniel does not appear among those of the prophets, but in the Hagiographa; that is to say, the Jews fully recognize the book of Daniel as holy writ, but refuse to consider it prophetic, or to regard Daniel as a prophet, and therefore give it no place among their prophetic books. For this they assign many frivolous reasons; but the real one is conjectured by many Christian commentators to be, that Daniel's famous predictions concerning the Messiah so remarkably corresponded to the history of Christ, and, what is more, to the time of his appearance, that they could not justify their refusal to consider him as the expected Messiah, without altogether denying the prophetic character of Daniel's book. This was done; and certainly after the time of Christ and the destruction of Jerusalem; for we have not only the testimony of Josephus, as to the belief of the Jews in his time, but know that so fully did they acknowledge the prophetic character of Daniel, and so accurately calculate the time given by him, that at the date of our Saviour's appearance there was a general expectation in the nation that the time for the Messiah's advent was come. And he did come, but they knew him not: he came unto his own, and his own received him not. (John i. 10, 11.)

Verse 4. "Children in whom was no blemish, but well favoured."—That a fine person is one of the recommendations for the royal service will be seen in the succeeding note. On this point the following remark may be quoted from Sir Paul Ricaut's 'Present State of the Ottoman Empire':—"The youths that are designed for the great offices of the Turkish empire must be of admirable features and pleasing looks, well shaped in their bodies, and without any defects of nature; for it is conceived that a corrupt and sordid soul can scarce inhabit in a serene and ingenuous aspect; and I have observed, not only in the seraglio but also in the courts of great men, their personal attendants have been of comely, lusty youths, well habited, deporting themselves with singular modesty and respect in the presence of their masters."

"Such as had ability in them to stand in the king's palace."—The whole of the account here given of the arrangements for these picked Hebrew youths, together with the high distinction which Daniel and some of the others ultimately attained, is very instructive as to the usages of the Chaldean court; and we have been interested in observing that there is not a single intimation in the account which may not be illustrated from the customs of the Turkish seraglio, till some alterations were made in this, as in other matters, by the present sultan. The pages of the seraglio and officers of the court, as well as the greater part of the public functionaries and governors of provinces, were originally Christian boys, taken captive in war, or bought or stolen in time of peace. The finest and most capable of these were sent to the palace, and, if accepted, were placed under the charge of the chief of the white eunuchs. The lads did not themselves become eunuchs; which we notice, because it has been erroneously inferred that Daniel and the other Hebrew youths must have been made eunuchs, because they were committed to the care of the chief eunuch. The accepted lads were brought up in the religion of their masters; and there were schools in the palace where they received such complete instruction in Turkish learning and science as it was the lot of few others to obtain. Among their accomplishments we find it mentioned that the greatest pains were taken to teach them to speak the Turkish language (a foreign one to them) with the greatest purity, as spoken at court. Compare this with "Teach them the learning and tongue of the Chaldeans." The lads were clothed very neatly, and well, but temperately, dieted. They slept in large chambers, where there were rows of beds. Every one slept separately; and between every third or fourth bed lay a white eunuch, who served as a sort of guard, and was bound to keep a careful eye upon the conduct of the lads near him, and report his observations to his superior. When any of them arrived at a proper age they were instructed in military exercises, and pains were taken to render them active, robust, and brave. Every one also, according to the custom of the country, was taught some mechanic or liberal art, to serve him as a resource in adversity.

When their education was completed in all its branches, those who had displayed the most capacity and valour were employed about the person of the King, and the rest given to the service of the treasury and the other offices of the extensive establishment to which they belonged. In due time the more talented or successful young men got promoted to the various high court offices which give them access to the private apartments of the seraglio, so that they could at almost any time see and speak to their great master. This advantage soon paved the way for their promotion to the government of provinces and to military commands; and it has often happened that favoured court officers have stepped at once into the post of grand vizier, or chief minister, and other high offices of state, without having been previously abroad in the world as pashas and military commanders. How well this agrees to and illustrates the usages of the Babylonian court will clearly appear to the reader without particular indication. (See Habesci's 'Ottoman Empire'; Tavernier's 'Relation de l'Intérieur du Sérail du Grand Seigneur,' &c.)

7. "Unto whom the prince of the eunuchs gave names."—The captive youths of whom we have spoken in the preceding notes also receive new names, that is, Mohammedan names, their former names being Christian. So in the present case, the names are changed from Hebrew to Babylonian. Names are almost everywhere changed with a change of religion: but, in the present case, we know that no change on that account took place. The circumstance is therefore to be explained with reference to the general custom of changing the native names of foreign slaves, and which is as well illustrated by the practice with regard to the negro slaves in European colonies, as by any other reference. It is uncertain whether the Chaldeans had any particular ideas concerning the names they gave to their slaves and captives. It might almost seem so, as the names here mentioned nowhere occur as names of native Chaldeans: that given to Daniel, indeed, resembles that of a future king of Babylon (Belshazzar), but is a syllable longer. The Athenians were very particular that their slaves should not bear names accounted dignified or respectable. They commonly gave them short names, seldom of more than two syllables, probably that they might be the more easily and quickly pronounced when called by their masters; and hence, when a slave became free, he changed his name again, taking good care that his new name should be a long one. We see that Daniel continues to call himself by his native name: and it is probable that the Hebrew captives did not, among themselves, acknowledge the names which their masters imposed.

CHAPTER II.

1 Nebuchadnezzar, forgetting his dream, requireth it of the Chaldeans, by promises and threatenings. 10 They acknowledging their inability are judged to die. 14 Daniel obtaining some respite findeth the dream. 19 He blesseth God. 24 He staying the decree is brought to the king. 31 The dream. 36 The interpretation. 46 Daniel's advancement.

AND in the second year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar Nebuchadnezzar dreamed dreams, wherewith his spirit was troubled, and his sleep brake from him.

2 Then the king commanded to call the magicians, and the astrologers, and the sorcerers, and the Chaldeans, for to shew the king his dreams. So they came and stood before the king.

3 And the king said unto them, I have dreamed a dream, and my spirit was troubled to know the dream.

4 Then spake the Chaldeans to the king in Syriack, 'O king, live for ever: tell thy servants the dream, and we will shew the interpretation.

5 The king answered and said to the Chaldeans, The thing is gone from me: if ye will not make known unto me the dream, with the interpretation thereof, ye shall be ² cut in pieces, and your houses shall be made a dunghill.

6 But if ye shew the dream, and the interpretation thereof, ye shall receive of me gifts and 'rewards and great honour: therefore shew me the dream, and the interpretation thereof.

7 They answered again and said, Let the king tell his servants the dream, and we will shew the interpretation of it.

8 The king answered and said, I know of certainty that ye would 'gain the time, because ye see the thing is gone from me.

9 But if ye will not make known unto me the dream, there is but one decree for you: for ye have prepared lying and corrupt words to speak before me, till the time be changed: therefore tell me the dream, and I shall know that ye can shew me the interpretation thereof.

10 ¶ The Chaldeans answered before the king, and said, There is not a man upon the earth that can shew the king's matter: therefore there is no king, lord, nor ruler, that asked such things at any magician, or astrologer, or Chaldean.

11 And it is a rare thing that the king requireth, and there is none other that can shew it before the king, except the gods, whose dwelling is not with flesh.

12 For this cause the king was angry and very furious, and commanded to destroy all the wise men of Babylon.

13 And the decree went forth that the wise men should be slain; and they sought Daniel and his fellows to be slain.

14 ¶ Then Daniel 'answered with counsel and wisdom to Arioch the ⁷ captain of the king's guard, which was gone forth to slay the wise men of Babylon:

15 He answered and said to Arioch the king's captain, Why is the decree so hasty from the king? Then Arioch made the thing known to Daniel.

16 Then Daniel went in, and desired of the king that he would give him time, and that he would shew the king the interpretation.

17 Then Daniel went to his house, and made the thing known to Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, his companions :

18 That they would desire mercies ⁹of the God of heaven concerning this secret ; ¹⁰that Daniel and his fellows should not perish with the rest of the wise men of Babylon.

19 ¶ Then was the secret revealed unto Daniel in a night vision. Then Daniel blessed the God of heaven.

20 Daniel answered and said, "Blessed be the name of God for ever and ever : for wisdom and might are his :

21 And he changeth the times and the seasons : he removeth kings, and setteth up kings : he giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding :

22 He revealeth the deep and secret things : he knoweth what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with him.

23 I thank thee, and praise thee, O thou God of my fathers, who hast given me wisdom and might, and hast made known unto me now what we desired of thee : for thou hast now made known unto us the king's matter.

24 ¶ Therefore Daniel went in unto Arioch, whom the king had ordained to destroy the wise men of Babylon : he went and said thus unto him ; Destroy not the wise men of Babylon : bring me in before the king, and I will shew unto the king the interpretation.

25 Then Arioch brought in Daniel before the king in haste, and said thus unto him, ¹²I have found a man of the ¹³captives of Judah, that will make known unto the king the interpretation.

26 The king answered and said to Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, Art thou able to make known unto me the dream which I have seen, and the interpretation thereof ?

27 Daniel answered in the presence of the king, and said, The secret which the king hath demanded cannot the wise men, the astrologers, the magicians, the soothsayers, shew unto the king ;

28 But there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and ¹⁴maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days. Thy dream, and the visions of thy head upon thy bed, are these ;

29 As for thee, O king, thy thoughts ¹⁵came into thy mind upon thy bed, what should come to pass hereafter : and he that revealeth secrets maketh known to thee what shall come to pass.

30 But as for me, this secret is not revealed to me for any wisdom that I have more than any living, but for their sakes that shall make known the interpretation to the king, and that thou mightest know the thoughts of thy heart.

31 ¶ Thou, O king, ¹⁶sawest, and behold a great image, This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee ; and the form thereof was terrible.

32 This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his ¹⁷thighs of brass, 33 His legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay.

34 Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out ¹⁸without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces.

35 Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshingfloors ; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them : and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth,

36 ¶ This is the dream ; and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king.

37 Thou, O king, art a king of kings : for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory.

40 And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron; forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things: and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise.

41 And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potters' clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay.

42 And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly ¹⁹broken.

43 And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed: of men but they shall not cleave ²⁰one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay.

46 ¶ Then the king Nebuchadnezzar fell upon his face, and worshipped Daniel, and commanded that they should offer an oblation and sweet odours unto him.

47 The king answered unto Daniel, and said, Of a truth it is, that your God is a God of gods, and a Lord of kings, and a revealer of secrets, seeing thou couldest reveal this secret.

48 Then the king made Daniel a great man, and gave him many great gifts, and made him ruler over the whole province of Babylon, and ²⁶chief of the governors over all the wise men of Babylon.

Verse 2. "The magicians, and the astrologers, and the sorcerers, and the Chaldeans."—It is no use to distinguish these various professors of what seems to have formed the boasted learning and science of the Babylonians, and which appears to have consisted in the neglect of really practicable and useful knowledge, for the vain pursuit, and not very humble profession, of that which must ever be unattainable to man, and which would be useless and mischievous could it be attained. The present was made the handmaid of the future; and the abilities which might have profited for the existing time, were exhausted in the attempt to unveil the secrets of the time to come. Their boasted cultivation of astronomy was merely an accident resulting from the attempt to read the future in the stars. Astronomy, as it ever has been in the East, was attended to so far, and no farther, than the vain science of astrology made it necessary. The best account we possess of the learning and science of the Chaldeans is that given by Diodorus Siculus (b. ii. chap. 3); and although he speaks of it with respect, it is easy enough, from his account, to see its false foundations and delusive character. He mentions the Chaldeans, as so called by the Babylonians themselves, and intimates the distinction by describing them as "the more ancient Babylonians." They seem, in fact, to have formed the learned caste, occupying the same station as the priests did in Egypt. They spent all their time in the study of "philosophy," and were especially famous in the art of astrology. They were greatly given to divination, and the foretelling of future events, and employed themselves, either by purifications, sacrifices, or enchantments, in averting evils and in procuring good fortune and success. They were also skilful in the art of divination by the flying of birds, and in the interpretation of dreams and prodigies: and the passages which they derived from the exact and diligent inspection of the entrails of sacrifices, were received as oracles by the people. Diodorus makes some approving observations on their method of study, stating that their knowledge and science were traditionally transmitted from father to son, thus proceeding on long established rules: and he then proceeds to inform us, that the Chaldeans held the world to be eternal, that it had no certain beginning and should have no end. But they all agreed that all things were ordered, and the beautiful fabric of the universe supported by a divine providence; and that the motions of the heavens were not performed by chance, or of their own accord, but by the determinate will and appointment of the gods. Therefore, from long observation of the stars, and an exact knowledge of the motions and influences of every one of them (in which they excelled all other nations), they professed to foretell things that should come to pass. The five planets, the Sun, Mars, Venus, Mercury, and Jupiter, they called "Interpreters," as being principally concerned in making known to man the will of the gods. Future events they held to be foreshown by their rising, their setting, and their colour, presaging hurricanes, tempestuous rains, droughts, the appearance of comets, eclipses, earthquakes, and all other circumstances which were thought to bode good or evil not only to nations in general, but to kings and private persons in particular. The planets also, in their courses through the twelve signs, into which the Chaldeans divided the visible heavens, were held, as by more modern astrologers, to have a great influence, either good or bad, on men's nativities, so that, from a consideration of their several natures, and respective positions, it might be foreknown what should befall people in afterlife. The following is remarkable:—"As they foretold things to come to other kings formerly, so they did to Alexander who conquered Darius, and to his successors Antigonos and Seleucus Nicator; and accordingly things fell out as they declared. They also tell private men their fortunes, so certainly, that those who have found the thing true by experience, have esteemed it a miracle, and beyond the art of man to perform." After giving some account of their astronomical system, Diodorus adds:—"This we may justly and truly say, that the Chaldeans excel all men in astrology, having studied it more than any other art or science. But the number of years during which the Chaldeans allege that their predecessors have been devoted to this study is incredible: for when Alexander was in Asia, they reckoned up four hundred and seventy thousand years since they first began to observe the motions of the stars." Cicero also ridicules this pretension. The Chaldeans did, certainly, make and record astronomical observations from very ancient times, since Calisthenes, the philosopher who accompanied Alexander, found at Babylon such observations, extending backwards for 1903 years; and the above preposterous statement will be within this account, if we understand that the number (as corrected) of 473,040 years was, as Dr. Hales concludes, produced by the multiplication of two factors—the square of the Chaldean Saros (a period of lunar inequalities), $18 \times 18 = 324$, and the Nabonassarcan or Sothiacal period of 1460 years. Whether the statement of the result as "years," arose from a misconception of their statement, or from an intention to deceive, is not very clear; but it does appear that the later Chaldeans were in the habit of turning days into years, to give to themselves an antiquity somewhat more commensurate than the truth could be to their belief that the world had no beginning.

Such were the principles and practices of the men who now appeared before Nebuchadnezzar, and over whom Daniel was ultimately appointed to preside.

5. "The dream, with the interpretation thereof."—Dr. Hales observes on this:—"The king's requisition to the wise men of Babylon, to tell him his dream, in the first instance, before they attempted to interpret it, though, as they alleged in excuse for not doing so, unusual and impossible for mere mortals, was yet founded on profound policy. He justly considered their telling the dream itself, as a sure test of the truth of the interpretation afterwards, and which it was not unreasonable to require of them even upon their own principles: because the same divine power which could communicate to them the interpretation as they professed, could also communicate to them the dream itself. He did not forget the dream, as generally imagined, from the expression 'the thing is gone from me,' and which may rather be rendered, with the Septuagint and Arabic, 'the decree is gone forth from me,' and shall not be reversed; or with the Syriac version, 'the decree which I have pronounced is certain,' or unalterable; namely, for putting them all to death, if they could not tell the dream. And this surely was a more consistent reason, why the wise men wished to gain time, or suspend the execution of it (verse 8); and why Daniel, who was involved in their danger, complained, 'why is the decree so hasty from the king?'" 'Analysis,' ii. 456.

31. "A great image."—In ancient coins and medals, nothing is more common than to see cities and nations represented by human figures, male or female. According to the ideas which suggested such symbols, a vast image in the human figure was, therefore, a very fit emblem of sovereign power and dominion, while the materials of which it was composed did most significantly typify the character of the various empires, the succession of which was foreshown by this vision. This last idea, of expressing the condition of things by metallic symbols, was prevalent before the time of Daniel. Hesiod, who lived about two centuries before Daniel, characterises the succession of ages (four) by the very same metals—the ages of gold, silver, brass, and iron.

The vision which follows is so clear—as explained by Daniel and with the illustration derived from his own future visions—that it has been explained with little difference of opinion in essential points, except in that portion which is still considered to remain to be fulfilled. Daniel himself declares the head of gold to represent the Babylonian empire; and the other parts, downward, the great empires which should successively arise. The breast and arms of silver must therefore denote the empire of the Persians: the belly and thighs of brass, the empire of Alexander and his successors: the third kingdom of iron, which broke in pieces and subdued all things, must mean that of the Romans; and the toes, partly iron and partly clay, cannot but denote the several kingdoms, some strong and some weak, which arose upon the ruin of their magnificent empire. The last empire, typified by the stone cut out without hands from the mountain, and breaking in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold—subduing all kingdoms and enduring for ever—is by the Jews referred to the kingdom of their still expected Messiah. Christians also apply it to the kingdom of Christ, but under various modifications of explanation and hypothesis, which it is not our object to follow: there can, however, be no question that this part of the vision can refer to nothing else than to our Saviour's dominion upon earth, whatever form or character that dominion may be considered to bear.

CHAPTER III.

1 Nebuchadnezzar dedicateth a golden image in Dura. 8 Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego are accused for not worshipping the image. 13 They, being threatened, make a good confession. 19 God delivereth them out of the furnace. 26 Nebuchadnezzar seeing the miracle blesseth God.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR the king made an image of gold, whose height was threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof six cubits: he set it up in the plain of Dura, in the province of Babylon.

2 Then Nebuchadnezzar the king sent to gather together the princes, the governors, and the captains, the judges, the treasurers, the counsellors, the sheriffs, and all the rulers of the provinces, to come to the dedication of the image which Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up.

3 Then the princes, the governors, and captains, the judges, the treasurers, the counsellors, the sheriffs, and all the rulers of the provinces, were gathered together unto the dedication of the image that Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up; and they stood before the image that Nebuchadnezzar had set up.

4 Then an herald cried 'aloud, To you 'it is commanded, O people, nations, and languages,

5 That at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, ³ 'dulcimer, and all kinds of musick, ye fall down and worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up:

6 And whoso falleth not down and worshippeth shall the same hour be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace.

7 Therefore at that time, when all the people heard the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and all kinds of musick, all the people, the nations, and the languages, fell down and worshipped the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up.

8 ¶ Wherefore at that time certain Chaldeans came near, and accused the Jews.

9 They spake and said to the king Nebuchadnezzar, O king, live for ever.

10 Thou, O king, hast made a decree, that every man that shall hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of musick, shall fall down and worship the golden image:

11 And whoso falleth not down and worshippeth, that he should be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace.

12 There are certain Jews whom thou hast set over the affairs of the province of Babylon, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego; these men, O king, 'have not regarded thee: they serve not thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.

13 ¶ Then Nebuchadnezzar in his rage and fury commanded to bring Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. Then they brought these men before the king.

14 Nebuchadnezzar spake and said unto them, Is it 'true, O Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, do not ye serve my gods, nor worship the golden image which I have set up?

15 Now if ye be ready that at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of musick, ye fall down and worship the image which I have made; well: but if ye worship not, ye shall be cast the same hour into the midst of a burning fiery furnace; and who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands?

16 Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, answered and said to the king, O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter.

17 If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king.

18 But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.

19 ¶ Then was Nebuchadnezzar 'full of fury, and the form of his visage was changed against Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego: therefore he spake, and commanded that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heated.

20 And he commanded the 'most mighty men that were in his army to bind Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, and to cast them into the burning fiery furnace.

21 Then these men were bound in their 'coats, their hosen, and their 'hats, and their other garments, and were cast into the midst of the burning fiery furnace.

22 Therefore because the king's 'commandment was urgent, and the furnace exceeding hot, the 'flame of the fire slew those men that took up Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego.

23 And these three men, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, fell down bound into the midst of the burning fiery furnace.

24 Then Nebuchadnezzar the king was astonished, and rose up in haste, and spake, and said unto his ¹³counsellors, Did not we cast three men bound into the midst of the fire? They answered and said unto the king, True, O king.

25 He answered and said, Lo, I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and ¹⁴they have no hurt; and the form of the fourth is like the Son of God.

26 ¶ Then Nebuchadnezzar came near to the ¹⁵mouth of the burning fiery furnace, and spake, and said, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, ye servants of the most high God, come forth, and come hither. Then Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, came forth of the midst of the fire.

27 And the princes, governors, and captains, and the king's counsellors, being gathered together, saw these men, upon whose bodies the fire had no power, nor was an hair of their head singed, neither were their coats changed, nor the smell of fire had passed on them.

28 Then Nebuchadnezzar spake, and said, Blessed be the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, who hath sent his angel, and delivered his servants that trusted in him, and have changed the king's word, and yielded their bodies, that they might not serve nor worship any god, except their own God.

29 Therefore ¹⁶I make a decree, That every people, nation, and language, which speak ¹⁷any thing amiss against the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, shall be ¹⁸¹⁹cut in pieces, and their houses shall be made a dunghill: because there is no other God that can deliver after this sort.

Verse 1. "An image of gold."—Dr. Hales suggests that this image of gold may have been made and erected by the haughty and arrogant conqueror in opposition to his dream, and the foregoing interpretation thereof. "The whole image, and not the head only, was made of gold to denote the continuance of his empire, and it was consecrated to his tutelary god Bel, or Belus (verse 14; chap. iv. 18), whose power he now considered superior to that of the God of the Jews, revoking his former confession." Some think that the image was intended as a statue of Nabopolassar, the father of Nebuchadnezzar, and whom he proposed to rank among the gods; and others imagine that the image represented Nebuchadnezzar himself, who intended to be adored under this form. But the opinion that it was consecrated to the great Babylonian god Bel, or Baal, is the most probable and best supported. The dimensions given, sixty cubits high by six in breadth, would be quite disproportionate if understood of the figure alone, and we are, therefore, probably to understand that the height included the pedestal or pillar on which the statue was elevated. That the Chaldeans were accustomed to set up vast golden images, of their gods, and particularly of Belus, appears from Herodotus, who, after describing the famous temple dedicated to him, and in which there was no statue, adds, 'that within the precincts of this temple, there was a smaller sacred edifice upon the ground; within which there was an immense golden statue of Jupiter (Belus), in a sitting posture: around the statue were large tables, which, with the steps and throne, were all of gold, and as the Chaldeans affirmed, contained eight hundred talents of gold. He adds that there was also, not long since, within the sacred enclosure, a statue of solid gold, twelve cubits in height. Darius Hystaspes would fain have taken away this figure, but dared not execute his wishes: but his son Xerxes not only did so, but put to death the priest who endeavoured to prevent its removal. It may seem by no means unlikely that one of these statues, and more particularly, perhaps, the one mentioned last, was the very same that was made by Nebuchadnezzar, and which, after the transaction recorded in this chapter, we may suppose to have been removed from the plain of Dura to the sacred enclosure of the temple.

6. "Hour."—This is the first instance in which division of time by hours occurs in Scripture; and we are, therefore, supplied with a tolerably certain intimation that this was one of the useful things which the Hebrews learnt from the Chaldeans. We merely notice this circumstance in passing; as John ix. 11, will afford us a better opportunity of considering the manner in which the day was anciently divided into hours.

10. "The sound of the cornet," &c.—All the inquiry which has been directed to the discrimination of the several instruments of music mentioned in this chapter has not been attended with any very satisfactory results. The whole subject is involved in great obscurity, which there seems no hope of seeing dispelled; for which reason, as well as because the general subject, and also several of the instruments, have already received some attention in the notes to the book of Psalms, we shall avoid any extended investigations, and confine ourselves to a few brief notices on such points as have not already been considered. "Cornets" or horns, "harps" and "psalteries," do not appear to require further notice than they have already obtained.

"Flute."—The Chaldee word used here (מִשְׁרוּקִיתָא mash-rokitha) occurs nowhere but in this chapter, and appears to denote all such instruments of the pipe or flute class as were in use among the Babylonians. The corresponding Hebrew word is חָלִיל chalil, usually rendered "pipe" in our version, which we suppose not only to have been a general term, but to have specially denoted the pipe of a single stem, with an orifice through it, while the occurrence of the word נְחִילֹת nechiloth, in a plural form with a singular sense, may suggest that they had also the double pipe or flute. Both words come from roots which signify "to bore through." Some also find the name of a pipe, as our translators do, in the word נֶקֶב nekeb (Ezek. xxviii. 13); but this sense does not agree with the context, and a casket is more probably intended. Flutes and pipes are mentioned under a great many different names by ancient writers, the specific distinctions of which it is now impossible to discover. They acquired such different names rather perhaps from the dispositions of parts producing variations of musical power, than from any marked distinctions of form. We shall therefore only generally state that the ancient flutes were cylindrical tubes, sometimes of equal diameter throughout, but often wider at the off than the near end, and sometimes widened at that end into a funnel shape, resembling a clarinet. They were always blown, like pipes, at one end, never transversely: they had mouth-pieces, and sometimes plugs or stopples, but no keys to open or close the holes beyond the reach of the hands. The holes varied in number in the different varieties of the flute. In their origin they were doubtless made of simple reeds or canes, but in the progress of improvement they came to be made of wood, ivory, bone, and even metal. They were sometimes made in joints, but connected by an interior nozzle, which was generally of wood. The flutes were sometimes double, that is, a person played on two instruments at once, either connected or detached; and among the classical ancients, the player on the double-flute often had a leathern bandage over his mouth to prevent the escape of his breath at the corners. The ancient Egyptians, as appears by our first engraving, used the double flute; but we have not, among them, been able to find any example of the bandaged mouth, of which many instances occur in classical remains. To our other illustrations we have added a very simple instrument (the nây), which is a favourite with the modern Orientals: and appears to answer very correctly in its form and use to the more common instrument of ancient times. Instruments of the pipe class are of such high antiquity, and so universally diffused, that we have deemed it useless to inquire concerning the inventor, or the time and place of its origin. Examples of the instruments similar to those which appear in the preceding engraving, have been found in the sculptures of a tomb behind the Great Pyramid, between 3000 and 4000 years old. The reader may find much curious information on the ancient and the modern Oriental instruments of this class in the following papers in the 'Description de l'Égypte';—Mémoire sur la Musique de l'Antique Égypte; 'Dissertation sur les Instrumens de Musique des Égyptiens'; and 'Instrumens de Musique des Orientaux,' and Wilkinson's 'Ancient Egyptians,' ch. vi. Rosellini has also something on this subject; and Lane's 'Modern Egyptians' should not be overlooked.

ANCIENT EGYPTIAN FLUTES, SINGLE AND DOUBLE.

"Sackbut."—The word in the original is סַבְכָּא sabka; whence evidently the Greek σαμβυκη. We must look for it in the sambuca of the ancients. The classical writers mention this instrument as very ancient, and seem to ascribe its invention to the Syrians. Porphyry and Suidas describe it as a triangular instrument of music, furnished with cords of unequal length and thickness; a description which suggests that it was an instrument of the harp kind, perhaps resembling the triangular lyre, of which we have spoken in the note on Psalm xcii. 3. Musonius describes the sambuca as rendering a sharp sound; and we are also told that it was much employed to accompany the voice in singing iambic verses.

"Psallery."—The Chaldee word, פִּסְטֵרִין pesanterin, is different from that (נֶבֶל nebel) rendered "psaltery" in the earlier Scriptures. As however there seems good reason to believe that the respective Chaldee and Hebrew words denote the same instrument, we must refer to the statement already furnished under Psalm xcii. 3.

"Dulcimer."—The word thus rendered is סוּמְפֹנְיָה sumponjah, being just the same word as the συμφωνία of the Greek. Although the Greek word certainly denotes, primarially, a concert or harmony of many instruments, yet it seems also, as in the text, to have been the name of a musical instrument. Servius (on Virgil, Æn. xi. 27) describes the symphonia as a sort of bagpipe; which is in remarkable conformity with the Hebrew writers, who describe the present instrument also as a bagpipe, consisting of two pipes thrust through a leathern bag, and affording a mournful sound. When we add to this, that the very same name was that which the bagpipe bore among the Moors of Spain, we seem to have a greater mass of probabilities in favour of the bagpipe than can often be obtained in this class of subjects, or than can be produced for any other alternative which has been suggested. The known antiquity of this instrument, together with its continued existence in the East, are also corroborative circumstances. The modern Oriental bagpipe is composed of a goat-skin, usually with the hair on, and in the natural form, but deprived of the head, the tail, and the feet: being thus just of the same shape as that used by the water-carriers. The pipes are usually of reeds, terminating in the tips of cow's horns, slightly curved; the whole instrument being most primitively simple in its materials and construction.

MODERN EGYPTIAN FLUTE (NAY).

21. "Their coats, their hosen, and their hats."—It is exceedingly difficult to determine, what articles of dress are really denoted by the words thus translated. The סרבל sarbal is considered by Gesenius to denote such wide drawers or trousers as are still worn by the Persians and others, and thinks that the present Persian name for this article of dress (shalwar) is the same word in a transposed form. He adds, "the name has passed with the article of dress into the western language, as in Greek σαρβαρα, σαρβαλλα, σαρπαραι; in Latin sarabara, saraballa; in Spanish, ceroulas, in Hungarian and Slavonic, shalvary; in Polish, sharmvari." To understand these analogies, it should be observed that b and v are convertible powers in the Hebrew, Chaldee, and other Oriental dialects ancient and modern. As to the rest, the marginal readings, of "mantle" for "coat," and "turban," for "hat,"—probably furnish as correct an interpretation as can now be obtained.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Nebuchadnezzar confesseth God's kingdom, 4 maketh relation of his dreams, which the magicians could not interpret.
8 Daniel heareth the dream. 19 He interpreteth it. 28 The story of the event.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR the king, unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth; Peace be multiplied unto you.

2 'I thought it good to shew the signs and wonders that the high God hath wrought toward me.

3 How great are his signs! and how mighty are his wonders! his kingdom is ²an everlasting kingdom, and his dominion is from generation to generation.

4 ¶ I Nebuchadnezzar was at rest in mine house, and flourishing in my palace:

5 I saw a dream which made me afraid, and the thoughts upon my bed and the visions of my head troubled me.

6 Therefore made I a decree to bring in all the wise men of Babylon before me, that they might make known unto me the interpretation of the dream.

7 Then came in the magicians, the astrologers, the Chaldeans, and the soothsayers: and I told the dream before them; but they did not make known unto me the interpretation thereof.

8 ¶ But at the last Daniel came in before me, whose name was Belteshazzar, according to the name of my god, and in whom is the spirit of the holy gods: and before him I told the dream, saying,

9 O Belteshazzar, ³master of the magicians, because I know that the spirit of the holy gods is in thee, and no secret troubleth thee, tell me the visions of my dream that I have seen, and the interpretation thereof.

10 Thus were the visions of mine head in my bed: 'I saw, and behold a tree in the midst of the earth, and the height thereof was great.

11 The tree grew, and was strong, and the height thereof reached unto heaven, and the sight thereof to the end of all the earth:

12 The leaves thereof were fair, and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all: the beasts, of the field had shadow under it, and the fowls of the heaven dwelt in the boughs thereof, and all flesh was fed of it.

13 I saw in the visions of my head upon my bed, and, behold, a watcher and an holy one came down from heaven;

14 He cried ⁴aloud, and said thus, Hew down the tree, and cut off his branches, shake off his leaves, and scatter his fruit: let the beasts get away from under it, and the fowls from his branches:

15 Nevertheless leave the stump of his roots in the earth, even with a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field; and let it be wet with the dew of heaven, and let his portion be with the beasts in the grass of the earth:

16 Let his heart be changed from man's, and let a beast's heart be given unto him; and let seven times pass over him.

17 This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones: to the intent that the living may know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men.

18 This dream I king Nebuchadnezzar have seen. Now thou, O Belteshazzar, declare the interpretation thereof, forasmuch as all the wise men of my kingdom are not able to make known unto me the interpretation: but thou art able; for the spirit of the holy gods is in thee.

19 ¶ Then Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, was astonished for one hour, and his thoughts troubled him. The king spake, and said, Belteshazzar, let not the dream, or the interpretation thereof, trouble thee. Belteshazzar answered and said, My lord, the dream be to them that hate thee, and the interpretation thereof to thine enemies.

20 The tree that thou sawest, which grew, and was strong, whose height reached unto the heaven, and the sight thereof to all the earth;

21 Whose leaves were fair, and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all; under which the beasts of the field dwelt, and upon whose branches the fowls of the heaven had their habitation:

22 It is thou, O king, that art grown and become strong: for thy greatness is grown, and reacheth unto heaven, and thy dominion to the end of the earth.

23 And whereas the king saw a watcher and an holy one coming down from heaven, and saying, Hew the tree down, and destroy it; yet leave the stump of the roots thereof in the earth, even with a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field ; and let it be wet with the dew of heaven, and let his portion be with the beasts of the field, till seven times pass over him ;

24 This is the interpretation, O king, and this is the decree of the most High, which is come upon my lord the king :

25 That they shall 'drive thee from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field, and they shall make thee to eat grass as oxen, and they shall wet thee with the dew of heaven, and seven times shall pass over thee, till thou know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will.

26 And whereas they commanded to leave the stump of the tree roots ; thy kingdom shall be sure unto thee, after that thou shalt have known that the heavens do rule.

27 Wherefore, O king, let my counsel be acceptable unto thee, and break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor ; if it may be 'a lengthening of thy tranquillity.

28 ¶ All this came upon the king Nebuchadnezzar.

29 At the end of twelve months he walked ⁸in the palace of the kingdom of Babylon.

30 The king spake, and said, Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty ?

31 While the word was in the king's mouth, there fell a voice from heaven, saying, O king Nebuchadnezzar, to thee it is spoken ; The kingdom is departed from thee.

32 And they shall drive thee from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field : they shall make thee to eat grass as oxen, and seven times shall pass over thee, until thou know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will.

33 The same hour was the thing fulfilled upon Nebuchadnezzar : and he was driven from men, and did eat grass as oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven, till his hairs were grown like eagles' feathers, and his nails like birds' claws.

34 And at the end of the days I Nebuchadnezzar lifted up mine eyes unto heaven, and mine understanding returned unto me, and I blessed the most High, and I praised and honoured 'him that liveth for ever, whose dominion is 'an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom is from generation to generation :

35 And all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing : and he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth : and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, ¹⁰What doest thou ?

36 At the same time my reason returned unto me : and for the glory of my kingdom, mine honour and brightness returned unto me ; and my counsellors and my lords sought unto me ; and I was established in my kingdom, and excellent majesty was added unto me.

37 Now I Nebuchadnezzar praise and extol and honour the King of heaven, all whose works are truth, and his ways judgment : and those that walk in pride he is able to abase.

Verse 30. "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built ?"—Nebuchadnezzar did not found Babylon, which existed as a city from the earliest ages ; but he did liberally employ his vast resources in its improvement, extension, and aggrandizement, until it became that great and magnificent city which the ancient world regarded with equal wonder and admiration. The Greek writers do not indeed notice Nebuchadnezzar as the author of the great works at Babylon, but rather refer them to two queens—Semiramis who lived before him, and Nitocris who was after him. But, on the other hand, the native historian Berosus, together with Megasthenes and Abydenus, expressly attribute them to this great monarch ; and moreover it would seem that Nitocris, whom some make the queen of Nebuchadnezzar, and others the wife of his son Evilmerodach, merely completed the great works which he had begun. Indeed, these could only have been accomplished after the fall of Nineveh, and when Babylon had become the seat of a great empire, neither of which events happened till the time of Nebuchadnezzar.

It would occupy far more room than we can spare to describe, after the ancient writers, the glories of "the golden city." We must therefore content ourselves with a very limited statement.

The Euphrates passed through the city, dividing it into two parts, of which that on the western side of the stream exceeded in magnificence, and comprehended most of the new improvements. According to Herodotus, the city as a whole, was a perfect square, each side of which was equal to 120 stadia, and, consequently, its circuit to 480 stadia, which (Greek stadia being of course intended) would make not much less than fifty miles. This extent seems so enormous, that various attempts have been made to reduce it: but not, we think, on authority equal to those which furnished and have corroborated the statement: and when we see how our own metropolis is spreading around, and may be expected at no very remote period to reach the same dimensions; and, still more, when we are told that the city was very loosely built, and much of the ground enclosed by the walls was left vacant, or laid out in cultivated fields and gardens, it may very well be doubted whether it contained a population equal to that of the present London, or comprehended as large a number of buildings. However surprising, therefore, the account may seem in the first instance, it is much less incredible than has sometimes been supposed.

A deep ditch, lined with brickwork and full of water, went round the city; and as the soil dug out from it furnished the bricks with which the wall was built, some idea of its capacity may be formed from the alleged dimensions of the wall, which was 200 royal cubits high by fifty in thickness. These bricks were baked in a furnace and cemented with hot bitumen. In the wall there were a hundred gates, twenty-five on each side, all these gates were of solid brass and of prodigious size and strength; besides which there were, in the wall lining the river, smaller gates of the same metal, from which steps conducted down to the stream. Between every two of the great gates there were three watch-towers, ten feet higher than the walls, with four such towers at each of the four angles of the wall, and three more between each of these angles and the next adjoining gate on either side. There were, however, but 250 towers in all, as there were none on that side where the morasses rendered unnecessary the protection which they offered. This grand square was divided into twenty-five grand streets, which intersected each other, dividing the city into 626 squares. Each of these streets went quite across the city in a straight line, extending from a principal gate on one side to another on the opposite side. The vast squares formed, in so extensive a plot, by the intersection of the streets, were not built upon, but hollow, and laid out in fields, gardens, and pleasure grounds; and, besides this, the houses which lined at the same time the streets and the squares, stood much apart from each other, which suffices to show how loosely the city was built. The houses are described as being three or four stories high, and adorned with all the splendour and magnificence of ancient Oriental taste.

The wonders at Babylon which seem most to have attracted the attention of ancient travellers were the temple of Belus, or rather the pile on which it stood, which pile, from the description given of it, may very possibly seem to have been the famous Tower of Confusion, which may have been repaired, and this temple or chapel built thereon, probably by Nebuchadnezzar. (See the note on Gen. xi. 4.) The tower was in the midst of a large enclosure, two stadia square, with gates of brass: and within which were other sacred buildings, as alluded to in the note on ch. iii. 1. The banks of the river, in that part which ran through the city, were faced with brick, like the enclosing trench, and a continued quay was formed, the whole length of the town. The river was crossed by a bridge said to have been rather more than a furlong in length, and constructed on some new and much admired principle, to supply a defect in the bottom of the river, which was all sandy. Another communication was afforded by a tunnel under the bed of the river. At the western end of the bridge, stood the palace, which Nebuchadnezzar is said to have built to supersede another, smaller and less magnificent, which stood on the other side of the stream. This palace may be taken as that so often mentioned in the present book. It was enclosed by a triple wall, and with its parks and gardens was included in a circuit of little less than eight miles. Adjoining this palace, and within the general enclosure, were the hanging gardens, which were constructed by the king to gratify his wife, who was a native of the hilly and wooded Media, with a resemblance to her own country in the plain of Babylon. According to Diodorus, these gardens formed a square of 400 feet (about three acres and a half) and were raised on terraces supported by walls or piers eleven feet asunder, ascending one above another till the uppermost was brought to the level of the top of the city wall, commanding a most extensive prospect. The terraces were covered with a deep layer of mould in which were planted various plants, shrubs, and trees, many of the latter being of considerable girth: and as some trees are found on this site no specimens of which exist elsewhere in the country, it is not impossible that some of these may have been perpetuated to this day, notwithstanding the sinking of the terraces, through the mouldering of the piers by which they were supported.

To the canals and lake we have incidentally referred on former occasions; and have no room to enumerate all the minor wonders of ancient Babylon. What we have stated will suffice to suggest a general notion of the works which raised the fatal pride of the Babylonian king—of the scenes which were continually before the eyes of Daniel—and of the city whose streets were so often traversed by the captives of Israel.

33. "He was driven from men, and did eat grass as oxen," &c.—The malady by which the Divine judgment punished the pride of Nebuchadnezzar is a subject on which opinions have been very much divided. The principal explanations have been recapitulated in the interesting 'Dissertation sur la Métamorphose de Nebuchodonosor' of Dom. Calmet, who himself gives the explanation which is now generally received and seems the most probable of any. The same view has also been taken by Dr. Mead in his 'Medica Sacra,' and by Dr. J. M. Good in his 'Study of Medicine.' We cannot perhaps do better than transcribe the opinion of the former of these learned and pious physicians.

"All the circumstances of Nebuchadnezzar's case agree so well with an hypochondriacal madness, that to me it appears evident that Nebuchadnezzar was seized with this distemper, and under its influence ran wild into the fields; and that, fancying himself transformed into an ox, he fed on grass, after the manner of cattle. For every sort of madness is the disease of a disturbed imagination; which this unhappy man laboured under full seven years. And through neglect of taking proper care of himself, his hair and nails grew to an uncommon length; whereby the latter, growing thicker and crooked, resembled the claws of birds. Now the ancients called people affected with this kind of madness λυκανθρωποι (wolf-men) or κυνανθρωποι (dog-men); because they went abroad in the night imitating wolves or dogs; particularly intent upon opening the sepulchres of the dead, and had their legs much ulcerated, either from frequent falls or the bites of dogs. In like manner are the daughters of Prætus related to have been mad, who, as Virgil says (Ecl. vi. 48);—

— 'Implerunt falsis mugitibus agros.'
'With mimic howlings fill'd the fields.'

For, as Servius observes, Juno possessed their minds with such a species of fury, that, fancying themselves cows, they ran into the fields, bellowed often, and dreaded the plough. Nor was this disorder unknown to the moderns; for Schenckius records a remarkable instance of it in a husbandman of Padua, who, imagining himself a wolf, attacked and even killed several people in the fields; and when at length he was taken, he persevered in declaring himself a real wolf, and that the only difference consisted in the inversion of his skin and hair. But it may be objected to our opinion that this misfortune was foretold to the king, so that he might have prevented it by correcting his morals; and therefore it is not probable that it befel him in the course of nature. But we know that those things which God executes either through clemency or vengeance are frequently performed by the assistance of natural causes. Thus, having threatened Hezekiah with death, and being afterwards moved by his prayers, he restored him to life, and made use of figs laid on the tumour as a medicine for his disease. He ordered king Herod, upon account of his pride, to be devoured by worms. And nobody doubts but that the plague, which is generally attributed to Divine wrath, most commonly owes its origin to corrupted air."

In corroboration of the view here taken, it may be observed, that after the seven years, the king describes his reason as returning to him, which as clearly as possible intimates that it had previously been taken from him.

CHAPTER V.

1 Belshazzar's impious feast. 5 A handwriting, unknown to the magicians, troubleth the king. 10 At the commendation of the queen, Daniel is brought. 17 He, reproving the king of pride and idolatry, 25 readeth and interpreteth the writing. 30 The monarchy is translated to the Medes.

BELSHAZZAR the king made a great feast to a thousand of his lords, and drank wine before the thousand.

2 Belshazzar, whiles he tasted the wine, commanded to bring the golden and silver vessels which his father Nebuchadnezzar had taken out of the temple which was in Jerusalem; that the king, and his princes, his wives, and his concubines, might drink therein.

3 Then they brought the golden vessels that were taken out of the temple of the house of God which was at Jerusalem; and the king, and his princes, his wives, and his concubines, drank in them.

4 They drank wine, and praised the gods of gold, and of silver, of brass, of iron, of wood, and of stone.

5 ¶ In the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote over against the candlestick upon the plaister of the wall of the king's palace: and the king saw the part of the hand that wrote.

6 Then the king's countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him, so that the joints of his loins were loosed, and his knees smote one against another.

7 The king cried aloud to bring in the astrologers, the Chaldeans, and the soothsayers. And the king spake, and said to the wise men of Babylon, Whosoever shall read this writing, and shew me the interpretation thereof, shall be clothed with scarlet, and have a chain of gold about his neck, and shall be the third ruler in the kingdom.

8 Then came in all the king's wise men: but they could not read the writing, nor make known to the king the interpretation thereof.

9 Then was king Belshazzar greatly troubled, and his countenance was changed in him, and his lords were astonished.

10 ¶ Now the queen by reason of the words of the king and his lords came into the banquet house: and the queen spake and said, O king, live for ever: let not thy thoughts trouble thee, nor let thy countenance be changed:

11 There is a man in thy kingdom, in whom is the spirit of the holy gods; and in the days of thy father light and understanding and wisdom, like the wisdom of the gods, was found in him; whom the king Nebuchadnezzar thy father, the king, I say, thy father, made master of the magicians, astrologers, Chaldeans, and soothsayers;

12 Forasmuch as an excellent spirit, and knowledge, and understanding, interpreting of dreams, and shewing of hard sentences, and dissolving of doubts, were found in the same Daniel, whom the king named Belteshazzar: now let Daniel be called, and he will shew the interpretation.

13 Then was Daniel brought in before the king. And the king spake and said unto Daniel, Art thou that Daniel, which art of the children of the captivity of Judah, whom the king my father brought out of Jewry?

14 I have even heard of thee, that the spirit of the gods is in thee, and that light and understanding and excellent wisdom is found in thee.

15 And now the wise men, the astrologers, have been brought in before me, that they should read this writing, and make known unto me the interpretation thereof: but they could not shew the interpretation of the thing:

16 And I have heard of thee, that thou canst ¹⁷make interpretations, and dissolve doubts: now if thou canst read the writing, and make known to me the interpretation thereof, thou shalt be clothed with scarlet, and have a chain of gold about thy neck, and shalt be the third ruler in the kingdom.

17 ¶ Then Daniel answered and said before the king, Let thy gifts be to thyself, and give thy ¹⁸rewards to another; yet I will read the writing unto the king, and make known to him the interpretation.

18 O thou king, the most high God gave Nebuchadnezzar thy father a kingdom, and majesty, and glory, and honour:

19 And for the majesty that he gave him, all people, nations, and languages, trembled and feared before him: whom he would he slew; and whom he would he kept alive; and whom he would he set up; and whom he would he put down.

20 But when his heart was lifted up, and his mind hardened ¹⁹in pride, he was ²⁰deposed from his kingly throne, and they took his glory from him:

21 And he was ²¹driven from the sons of men; and ²²his heart was made like the beasts, and his dwelling was with the wild asses: they fed him with grass like oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven; till he knew that the most high God ruled in the kingdom of men, and that he appointeth over it whomsoever he will.

22 And thou his son, O Belshazzar, hast not humbled thine heart, though thou knewest all this;

23 But hast lifted up thyself against the Lord of heaven; and they have brought the vessels of his house before thee, and thou, and thy lords, thy wives, and thy concubines, have drunk wine in them; and thou hast praised the gods of silver, and gold, of brass, iron, wood, and stone, which see not, nor hear, nor know: and the God in whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways, hast thou not glorified:

29 Then commanded Belshazzar, and they clothed Daniel with scarlet, and put a chain of gold about his neck, and made a proclamation concerning him, that he should be the third ruler in the kingdom.

Verse 1. "Belshazzar."—The name of Belshazzar does not occur in the profane historians; and it has therefore become a question, with which of the Babylonian kings mentioned by them he should be identified. The other perplexities, historical and chronological, which involve this period of Babylonian history, have also been alluded to by us on more than one occasion. In the note to 2 Kings xxv. 27, we have stated, very briefly, the substance of the common account;

B.C. FROM 'L'ART DE VÉRIFIER.'

605 NEBUCHADNEZZAR, who was succeeded by his son
562 EVILMERODACH, who having provoked general indignation by his tyranny and atrocities, was, after a short reign of about two years, assassinated by his brother-in-law

560 NERIGLISSAR, or NERICASSOLASSAR, who was regarded as a deliverer, and succeeded by the choice of the nation. He perished in a battle against Cyrus the Persian, and was succeeded by his son

555 LABOROSOARCHOD, notorious for his cruelty and oppression, and who was assassinated by two nobles, Gobryas and Gadatas, whose sons he had slain. The vacant throne was then ascended by

554 NABONADIUS, the LABYNETUS of Herodotus, the NABONDEL of Josephus, and the BELSHAZZAR of Daniel, who was the son of Evilmerodach, and who now succeeded to the throne of his father. After a voluptuous 538 reign, his city was taken by the Persians, under Cyrus, on which occasion he lost his life.

We believe that this form of stating the question too clearly exhibits the difference generally, and concerning Belshazzar in particular, to render further explanation necessary. It will be observed that the principal point is, that Hales contends that the succession of Darius the Mede to the Babylonian throne was not attended with war; that Belshazzar was not the king in whose time the city was taken by Cyrus; and, consequently, that the events which took place this night were quite distinct from, and anterior to that siege and capture of the city by the Persian king, which Isaiah and Jeremiah so particularly and remarkably foretold.

8. "They could not read the writing."—"The reason why the wise men of Babylon could not read the Divine inscription was, that it was written in the primitive Hebrew character, which differed totally from the Chaldee. It was the original from which the Samaritan was formed, and which therefore it nearly resembled, though greatly superior to it in beauty, symmetry, and elegance. Some advantageous specimens of it are fortunately preserved on sacred shekels and Jewish coins of high antiquity, drawings of which may be seen in Walton's 'Supplementum de Sclorum formis et inscriptionibus,' pre-and, under Ezra i., we have furnished a corrected statement, collected from Dr. Hales. As this matter is of importance to the proper understanding of this chapter, we wish here to return to it, but not further than to enable the reader to see clearly the effect of the different statements. The common account we shall collect from 'L'Art de Vérifier les Dates,' and the other from Hales's 'Analysis,' disposing them in opposite columns for the sake of comparison.

B.C. FROM HALE'S 'ANALYSIS.'

604 NEBUCHADNEZZAR, was succeeded by his son
561 EVILMERODACH, or ILVERODAM, who was slain in a battle against the Medes and Persians, and was succeeded by his son

558 NERIGLISSAR, NERICASSOLASSAR, or BELSHAZZAR, the common accounts of whom seem to combine what is said both of Neriglissar and his son, opposite. He was killed by conspirators on the night of the "impious feast," leaving a son (a boy)

553 LABOROSOARCHOD, on whose death, nine months after, the dynasty became extinct, and the kingdom came peaceably to "Darius the Mede," or Cyaxares, who, on the well-known policy of the Medes and Persians, appointed a Babylonian nobleman, named

NABONADIUS, or LABYNETUS, to be king or viceroy. This person revolted against Cyrus, who had succeeded to the united empire of the Medes and Persians. Cyrus could not immediately attend to him, but at last marched 536 to Babylon, and took the city, as foretold by the prophets, and as we have described in the notes on Jer. li.

fixed to the first volume of the London Polyglott Bible, and elsewhere." (Hales's 'Analysis,' vol. ii. p. 463.)

10. "The queen...came into the banquet-house."—We are informed above, that the "wives and concubines" of the king were present at the banquet. It therefore seems probable that the "queen" who now first appears was the queen-mother; and this probability is strengthened by the intimate acquaintance which she exhibits with the affairs of Nebuchadnezzar's reign; at the latter end of which, she, as wife of Evilmerodach, who was regent during his father's alienation of mind, took an active part in the internal policy of the kingdom, and in the completion of the great works which Nebuchadnezzar had begun at Babylon. This she continued during the reigns of her husband and of her son, the present Belshazzar. This famous queen Nitocris could not therefore but be well acquainted with the character and services of Daniel. But how happens it that Belshazzar needed the information concerning Daniel which the queen afforded: and how was it that he should have been unacquainted even with the person (as it appears from verse 13—"Art thou that Daniel?"—that he was) of so eminent a person and important public officer as

Daniel? An ingenious and not improbable solution of this difficulty has been afforded by Sir John Chardin, in his MS., quoted by Harmer. As mentioned by the queen, Daniel had been made, by Nebuchadnezzar, "master of the magicians, astrologers, Chaldeans, and soothsayers." Of this employment, Chardin conjectures that he had been deprived on the death of that king; and obtains this conclusion from the fact, that when a Persian king dies, both his astrologers and physicians are driven from court—the former for not having predicted, and the latter for not having prevented, his death. If such was the etiquette of the ancient Babylonian, as it is of the modern Persian court, we have certainly a most satisfactory solution of the present difficulty, as Daniel must then be supposed to have relinquished his public employments, and to have lived retired in private life during the eight years occupied by the reigns of Evil-merodach and Belshazzar.

25. "MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN."—The word PERES, below in verse 28, is the singular of the word which is here as PHARSIN, with the prefixed u (1), or "and." Whether this singular is in exchange for the plural of the text, or whether it should be inserted before that plural, is doubtful. A repetition of the same words, both singular, as in "MENE, MENE," or one singular and the other plural, as would be "PERES, UPHARSIN," are forms employed to give intensity to the sense. The words are Chaldean; but being in the ancient Hebrew character, the Chaldeans could not read them; and if they could have done so, it would have been beyond their power to supply that interpretation which Daniel gives. We may take the following view of the inscription and interpretation from Hales:—

THE INSCRIPTION.
MENE,	MENE,	TEKEL.
"NUMBER,"	"NUMBER,"	"WEIGHT."
[PERES]	UPHARSIN.
["DIVISION"]	"AND DIVISIONS."

THE INTERPRETATION:

MENE—"God hath numbered thy reign, and MENE—"hath finished it." The repetition emphatically signifying that the decree was certain, and should shortly come to pass. (See Gen. xli. 32.)

TEKEL—"Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting." (See Job xxxi. 6; Rev. vi. 5.)

PERES—"Thy kingdom is divided,"

[UPHARSIN]—"And given to the Mede and the Persian." [Darius and Cyrus.]

ANCIENT EGYPTIAN DEATH JUDGMENT.

From a Drawing on one of the Sepulchral Papyrus Rolls.

27. "Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting."—The idea involved in this is sufficiently obvious in itself. But it is by no means impossible that the allusion received more force and meaning than we give to it from a reference to some opinion or custom common among the Babylonians. What that was, we cannot say precisely; but probabilities may be suggested by analogies derived from other sources. Thus the Egyptians entertained the belief that the actions of the dead were solemnly weighed in balances before Osiris, and that the condition of the departed was determined according to the preponderance of good or evil. Such judgment scenes are very frequently represented in the paintings and papyri of ancient Egypt, and one of them we have copied as a suitable illustration of the present subject. One of these scenes, as represented on the walls of a small temple at Dayrel-Medeeneh, has been so well explained by Mr. Wilkinson, that we shall avail ourselves of his description; for although that to which it refers is somewhat different from the one which we have engraved, his account affords an adequate elucidation of all that ours contains. "Osiris, seated on his throne, awaits the arrival of those souls that are ushered into Amenti. The four genii stand before him on a lotus-blossom [ours has the lotus without the genii], the female Cerberus sits behind them, and Harpocrates on the crook of Osiris. Thoth, the god of letters, arrives in the presence of Osiris bearing in his hand a tablet, on which the actions of the deceased are noted down, while Horus and Anubis are employed in weighing the good deeds* of the judged against the ostrich feather, the symbol of truth and justice. A cynocephalus, the emblem of truth, is seated on the top of the balance. At length arrives the deceased, who appears between two figures of the goddess, and bears in his hand the symbol of truth†, indicating his meritorious actions, and his fitness for admission to the presence of Osiris."

Ancient Egyptian Scales.

If the Babylonians entertained a similar notion, the declaration of the prophet, "Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting!" must have appeared exceedingly awful to them. But again, there are allusions in this declaration to some such custom of literally weighing the royal person, as is described in the following passage in the account of Sir Thomas Roe's embassy to the Great Mogul:—"The first of September, (which was the late Mogul's birth-day,) he, retaining an ancient yearly custom, was, in the presence of his chief grandees, weighed in a balance: the ceremony was performed within his house, or tent, in a fair spacious room, whereinto none were admitted but by special leave. The scales in which he was thus weighed were plated with gold; and so was the beam, on which they hung by great chains, made likewise of that most precious metal. The king, sitting in one of them, was weighed first against silver coin, which immediately afterwards was distributed among the poor; then was he weighed against gold; after that against jewels (as they say), but I observed (being there present with my lord ambassador) that he was weighed against three several things, laid in silken bags in the contrary scale. When I saw him in the balance, I thought on Belshazzar, who was found too light. By his weight (of which his physicians yearly keep an exact account), they presume to guess of the present state of his body, of which they speak flatteringly, however they think it to be."

* "This, M. Champollion supposes to be the heart. I still incline to the construction I have put upon it—a type of the good actions of the deceased."

† "Sometimes, instead of the ostrich-feather, the deceased bears a vase (which is placed in the other scale), and it has then a similar import."

CHAPTER VI.

1 Daniel is made chief of the presidents. 4 They conspiring against him obtain an idolatrous decree. 10 Daniel, accused of the breach thereof, is cast into the lions' den. 18 Daniel is saved. 24 His adversaries devoured, 25 and God magnified by a decree.

It pleased Darius to set over the kingdom an hundred and twenty princes, which should be over the whole kingdom;

2 And over these three presidents; of whom Daniel was first: that the princes might give accounts unto them, and the king should have no damage.

3 Then this Daniel was preferred above the presidents and princes, because an excellent spirit was in him; and the king thought to set him over the whole realm.

4 ¶ Then the presidents and princes sought to find occasion against Daniel concerning the kingdom; but they could find none occasion nor fault; forasmuch as he was faithful, neither was there any error nor fault found in him.

5 Then said these men, We shall not find any occasion against this Daniel, except we find it against him concerning the law of his God.

6 Then these presidents and princes assembled together to the king, and said thus unto him, King Darius, live for ever.

7 All the presidents of the kingdom, the governors, and the princes, the counsellors, and the captains, have consulted together to establish a royal statute, and to make a firm ²decree, that whosoever shall ask a petition of any God or man for thirty days, save of thee, O king, he shall be cast into the den of lions.

8 Now, O king, establish the decree, and sign the writing, that it be not changed, according to the ³law of the Medes and Persians, which ⁴altereth not.

9 Wherefore king Darius signed the writing and the decree.

10 ¶ Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house: and his windows being open in his chamber ⁵toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees ⁶three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime.

11 Then these men assembled, and found Daniel praying and making supplication before his God.

12 Then they came near, and spake before the king concerning the king's decree; Hast thou not signed a decree, that every man that shall ask a petition of any God or man within thirty days, save of thee, O king, shall be cast into the den of lions? The king answered and said, The thing is true, according to the law of the Medes and Persians, which altereth not.

¹ Or, came tumultuously.

² Or, interdict.

³ Esther 1. 19, and 8. 8.

⁴ Chald. pusseth not.

⁵ 1 Kings 8. 48.

13 Then answered they and said before the king, That Daniel, which is of the children of the captivity of Judah, regardeth not thee, O king, nor the decree that thou hast signed, but maketh his petition three times a day.

14 Then the king, when he heard these words, was sore displeased with himself, and set his heart on Daniel to deliver him: and he laboured till the going down of the sun to deliver him.

15 Then these men assembled unto the king, and said unto the king, Know, O king, that the law of the Medes and Persians is, That no decree nor statute which the king establisheth may be changed.

16 Then the king commanded, and they brought Daniel, and cast him into the den of lions. Now the king spake and said unto Daniel, Thy God whom thou servest continually, he will deliver thee.

17 And a stone was brought, and laid upon the mouth of the den; and the king sealed it with his own signet, and with the signet of his lords: that the purpose might not be changed concerning Daniel.

18 ¶ Then the king went to his palace, and passed the night fasting: neither were ⁷instruments of musick brought before him: and his sleep went from him.

19 Then the king arose very early in the morning, and went in haste unto the den of lions.

20 And when he came to the den, he cried with a lamentable voice unto Daniel: and the king spake and said to Daniel, O Daniel, servant of the living God, is thy God, whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the lions?

21 Then said Daniel unto the king, O king, live for ever.

22 My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions' mouths, that they have not hurt me: forasmuch as before him innocency was found in me: and also before thee, O king, have I done no hurt.

23 Then was the king exceeding glad for him, and commanded that they should take Daniel up out of the den. So Daniel was taken up out of the den, and no manner of hurt was found upon him, because he believed in his God, 24 ¶ And the king commanded, and they brought those men which had accused Daniel, and they cast them into the den of lions, them, their children, and their wives; and the lions had the mastery of them, and brake all their bones in pieces or ever they came at the bottom of the den.

25 ¶ Then king Darius wrote unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth; Peace be multiplied unto you.

26 I make a decree, That in every dominion of my kingdom men tremble and fear before the God of Daniel: for he is the living God, and stedfast for ever, and his kingdom that which shall not be ⁹destroyed, and his dominion shall be even unto the end.

27 He delivereth and rescueth, and he worketh signs and wonders in heaven and in earth, who hath delivered Daniel from the ¹⁰power of the lions.

28 So this Daniel prospered in the reign of Darius, and in the reign of ¹⁰Cyrus the Persian.

Verse 1. "Darius."—We have already had occasion to mention this Darius as the Cyaxares of the Greek writers. One of his sisters, married to the king of Persia, was the mother of the great Cyrus, and another married to the king of Babylon, appears to have been the mother of Belshazzar. In his latter days he was in fact governed by his nephew and heir, Cyrus, "by that ascendancy," says Hales, "which great souls have always over little ones." Their interests were so much identified at this time, and the connexion between them was so close, that this alone will sufficiently account for the Medes and Persians being in this book mentioned constantly together. Horne, remarking on the truth with which the characters of kings are drawn in the book of Daniel, observes that Xenophon "represents Cyaxares as weak and pliable, but of a cruel temper, easily managed for the most part, and ferocious in his anger. Is not this Darius?—the same Darius who allowed his nobels to make laws for him, and then repented—suffered Daniel to be cast into the lions' den, and then spent a night in lamentation for him, and at last in strict conformity with Xenophon's description, condemned to death not only his false counsellors, but also their wives and children?"—"Introduction," iv. 213.

8. "The law of the Medes and Persians which altereth not."—See the note on Esther vi. 1. It is singular that the only law which seems to have limited the royal power of the Median and Persian kings, was one by which that power was most strongly magnified and maintained. The king's word was law; and as the king was thus the fountain of law, and as he was looked up to as something more than man—it was quite natural on these premises, however revolting to common sense, to decree that his purpose once declared should not be altered: because a law ought to be a determined thing, on the one hand; and, on the other, because to have allowed him to yield to the voice of reason and mercy, after his purpose had been declared, would have involved an admission that he had been hasty and mistaken—an idea which could not be tolerated under the intense despotisms of ancient Asia. In the present instance, we see the king, in consequence of a declaration, the purpose of which he had not comprehended, compelled to do what he viewed with horror and aversion: and in the Book of Esther, we have seen a king unable to recall an order which he had issued for a massacre of the Jews; all he could do being to issue a counter order, allowing the doomed people to stand upon their defence—that is, they were permitted to do their best to kill those, who were, by his previous order, bound to kill them. Thus the kings sometimes suffered—and their people more—from the infallibility which formed one of the royal prerogatives. This custom has been noticed by ancient heathen authors. The same idea of the inviolability of the royal word has remained in Persia, in a mitigated form, even to modern times. A remarkable example of this is related, by Sir John Malcolm, of Aga Mahomed Khan, the last but one of the Persian kings. After alluding to the present case and that in Esther, he observes, "the character of the power of the king of Persia has undergone no change. The late king, Aga Mahomed Khan, when encamped near Shiraz, said he would not move till the snow was off the mountain in the vicinity of his camp. The season proved severe, and the snow remained longer than was expected: the army began to suffer distress and sickness, but the king said, while the snow remained upon the mountain he would not move: and his word was as law, and could not be broken. A multitude of labourers were collected and sent to remove the snow: their efforts, and a few fine days, cleared the mountain, and Aga Mahomed Khan marched. This anecdote was related to me by one of his principal chiefs, and who told it to me with a desire of impressing my mind with a high opinion of Aga Mahomed Khan, who knew, he observed, the sacred nature of a word spoken by the king of Persia."—"Hist. of Persia," i. 268.

16. "Cast him into the den of lions."—This is a new kind of punishment, not previously mentioned in Scripture; and that it first occurs here at Babylon, is a remarkable fact, showing the accuracy of the sacred writers in their references to the manners and usages of different nations. We are not aware that any ancient writer mentions that the inhabitants of Babylon were in the habit of throwing offenders to be devoured by lions kept in dens for the purpose. But we have the still more conclusive evidence of monuments brought to light by modern travellers, on the sites not only of Babylon but of Susa also, representing lions destroying and preying upon human beings. We will not go so far as the author of an ingenious little work*, as to say that any of these refer to the transaction recorded in the present chapter, being satisfied with the greater certainty with which they demonstrate the point we have mentioned. We give representations of some of the more remarkable of the figures to which we refer. The first was found at Babylon, near the great mass of ruin which is supposed to mark

* "The Truths of Revelation demonstrated by an Appeal to existing Monuments, Sculptures, Gems, Coins, and Medals. By a Fellow of several learned Societies," 1831.

the site of the grand western palace alluded to in a note on ch. iii. It represents a lion standing over the body of a prostrate man, extended on a pedestal which measures nine feet in length by three in breadth. The whole is from a block of stone of the ingredient and texture of granite, the scale colossal, and the sculpture in a very barbarous style. The head has been lately knocked off; but when Mr. Rich saw it, the statue was in a perfect state, and he remarks that "the mouth had a circular aperture into which a man might introduce his fist." The second very curious representation is from an engraved gem, dug from the ruins of Babylon by Captain Mignan. It exhibits a man standing upon two sphinxes and engaged with two fierce animals, possibly intended for lions. If it be not an astronomical representation, it might seem very probably an exhibition, partly symbolical, of some such event as the present. The 'Fellow of several learned Societies,' in adverting to this, directs attention to the great similarity which he finds between the features and dress of the man, and those of the captive Jews in Egypt, in that representation which we have copied, from the source to which he refers, under 2 Chron. xxxv. On comparing them, considerable resemblance may certainly be found about the head and its attire. The third subject is from a block of white marble found near the tomb of Daniel at Susa, and thus described by Sir R. K. Porter in his 'Travels' (vol. ii. 416). "It does not exceed ten inches in width and depth, measures twenty in length, and is hollow within, as if to receive some deposit. Three of its sides are cut in bas-relief, two of them with similar representations of a man apparently naked, except a sash round his waist and a sort of cap on his head. His hands are bound behind him. The corner of the stone forms the neck of the figure, so that its head forms one of its ends. Two lions in sitting postures appear on either side at the top, each having a paw on the head of the man." These are certainly satisfactory illustrations of the custom in question, as existing at Babylon and Susa, and others might be adduced from Babylonian coins. As to the punishment itself, opinions will be divided. But it is remarkable that Dr. Paley thought that something similar would, as a capital punishment, be preferable to public executions, which he considered to have rather a hardening than a corrective effect upon the public mind.

CHAPTER VII.

- 1 Daniel's vision of four beasts. 9 Of God's kingdom.
15 The interpretation thereof.

IN the first year of Belshazzar king of Babylon Daniel had a dream and visions of his head upon his bed: then he wrote the dream, and told the sum of the 'matters.

2 Daniel spake and said, I saw in my vision by night, and, behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea.

3 And four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another.

4 The first was like a lion, and had eagle's wings: I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked, ³and it was lifted up from the earth, and made stand upon the feet as a man, and a man's heart was given to it.

5 And behold another beast, a second, like to a bear, and ⁴it raised up itself on one side, and it had three ribs in the mouth of it between the teeth of it: and they said thus unto it, Arise, devour much flesh.

6 After this I beheld, and lo another, like a leopard, which had upon the back of it four wings of a fowl; the beast had also four heads; and dominion was given to it.

7 After this I saw in the night visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it: and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns.

8 I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things.

9 ¶ I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool: his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire.

10 A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him: ⁵thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set, and the ⁶books were opened.

11 I beheld then because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake: I beheld even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame.

12 As concerning the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away: yet ⁷their lives were prolonged for a season and time.

13 I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him.

14 And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is ⁸an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.

15 ¶ I Daniel was grieved in my spirit in the midst of my ⁹body, and the visions of my head troubled me.

16 I came near unto one of them that stood by, and asked him the truth of all this. So he told me, and made me know the interpretation of the things.

17 These great beasts, which are four, are four kings, which shall arise out of the earth.

18 But the saints of the ¹⁰most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever.

19 Then I would know the truth of the fourth beast, which was diverse ¹¹from all the others, exceeding dreadful, whose teeth were of iron, and his nails of brass; which devoured, brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with his feet;

20 And of the ten horns that were in his head, and of the other which came up, and before whom three fell; even of that horn that had eyes, and a mouth that spake very great things, whose look was more stout than his fellows.

21 I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints; and prevailed against them;

22 Until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom.

23 Thus he said, The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces.

24 And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise: and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings.

25 And he shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time.

26 But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end.

27 And the ¹²kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all ¹³dominions shall serve and obey him.

28 Hitherto is the end of the matter. As for me Daniel, my cogitations much troubled me, and my countenance changed in me: but I kept the matter in my heart,

Verse 1. "Visions."—In going through the visions which follow, we shall be constrained, by a regard to our limits, to remember that the interpretation of prophecy is no part of the duty we have undertaken. Our notes therefore will be few and brief; the necessity for which we the less regret, inasmuch as Daniel is, to a very great extent, his own interpreter; and the reader who compares the visions with each other, and who possesses the slightest acquaintance with history, cannot fail to discover the subjects to which they refer, and the remarkable and literal fulfilment they have all received—with the exception of those concluding ones which are left for the time yet future to reveal. So clear are these prophecies, and so definite even in their dates, that it is impossible for the boldest unbelief to deny the divine inspiration of the prophet, without at the same time asserting that the prophecies were written after the events to which they refer. But that they were not so, is demonstrable by the completest proof that ever was brought to bear on any historical or literary question; and for this reason, as well as from the circumstance that nearly all the events which form the subjects of prediction are the most conspicuous events in general history, and with the details of which we are amply informed by heathen or infidel historians, we have always been of opinion that the book of Daniel furnishes such powerful and unanswerable evidence of the divine authority of the sacred writers, that it is rather surprising that so powerful a weapon as this might be, in skilful and blessed hands, has not been wielded for the overthrow of unbelief.

Although we are restricted with respect to notes on this portion of Scripture, it may be desirable to prefix a few observations for the guidance of the less instructed reader.

If the visions in ch. vii., viii., and xi., be attentively considered, and compared with each other and with the dream of Nebuchadnezzar, it will clearly appear that they all refer to the same subject, and all describe the same things under a variety of figures. The object, as briefly intimated under ch. ii. 31, is to furnish a prophetic sketch of general history to the end of time; yet so that each sketch contains some particulars which are not to be found in the others; and in some cases one sketch expatiates on one branch of the subject, which the others pass over slightly. To obtain therefore a full view of the information which the prophecies contain, the student of Scripture finds it necessary to collate them with one another. The following hints may be useful.

THE GENERAL SUBJECT is proposed in the dream of Nebuchadnezzar, under the similitude of a compound image of four metals—gold, silver, brass, and iron; and in the present vision by four wild beasts rising from the sea: both denoting four great sovereignties.

THE BABYLONIAN EMPIRE is represented, in ch. ii., by the head of gold; and in the present vision, by a lion with eagle's wings. There is great propriety in this representation when we recollect that this empire has been described by other prophets under the figures of a lion and an eagle—a long-winged and full-feathered eagle in Ezekiel (Jer. iv. 7; xlviii. 40; Ezek. xvii. 2).

THE MEDO-PERSIAN EMPIRE—denoted in Nebuchadnezzar's dream by the breast and arms of silver; in the present vision by a bear with three ribs between his teeth; and in the next (viii. 3, 4.), by a ram with unequal horns, the last, higher than the others, pushing (extending its conquests) to the west, the north, and the south. This last explains what is meant by the three ribs in the bear's mouth, and by the breast and two arms (three portions) of silver. In all these chapters the reader will not fail to recollect that the horn was the common symbol of sovereign power.

THE MACEDO-GRECIAN EMPIRE, by which the preceding was overthrown. These prophecies, which relate to it, are exceedingly remarkable; and the reader, in tracing this empire in the dream and visions, cannot fail to observe that they became progressively more definite, till at last the "king of Grecia" (Alexander) is distinctly mentioned. This is first represented by the belly and thighs of brass (ii. 39); a leopard with four wings and four heads (vii. 6.); a swift he-goat from the west, with a great horn, afterwards broken into four smaller ones, to the four winds, or towards every point of the compass (viii. 5—8); and this is explained in xi. 2—4, to mean a mighty king of Grecia (Alexander) who should overthrow the king of Persia; his kingdom to be divided into four inferior kingdoms, to the four winds—but not to his posterity. How all this was fulfilled everybody knows. The last clause is most remarkable for its definite reference to the exclusion of Alexander's posterity from the conquests of their father, and the division of his vast empire among four of his generals; in this partition Cassander obtaining Macedon and Greece and the western parts; Lysander having Thrace, Bithynia, and the northern regions; while Ptolemy possessed Egypt and the south; and Seleucus gained Syria and the eastern provinces.

THE ROMAN EMPIRE.—In the vision of Nebuchadnezzar this empire seems to be viewed in its three periods. The legs, all of iron, appear to describe it in its strongest and most flourishing period, under the consular government, and perhaps the early emperors; the feet, partly iron and partly clay, would well describe the empire as weakened and divided by the mixture of barbarous nations, and ultimately by the separation into two empires, the eastern and western, while the ten toes, also partly iron and partly clay, some strong and some weak, describe the ultimate breaking up of the iron empire into as many kingdoms. In the present chapter the same empire is represented by a strong and terrible wild beast, diverse from the rest, with iron teeth, and afterwards ten horns. In the next vision (viii. 9, &c.) mention is made of a little horn which should spring up from one of the four representing the Macedo-Grecian kingdoms, which should wax exceeding great towards the south and east, and the pleasant land (of Judea), magnifying itself against the Prince of the Host, taking away the daily sacrifice, and overthrowing the sanctuary. In the explanation of this which the angel gives (verse 23, &c.), this horn is explained to mean "a king (a kingdom or government of any kind) of fierce countenance," who should do as described. On the explanation of this, interpreters are divided. Most of the old commentators refer it to Antiochus Epiphanes and his persecutions; but the prevailing opinion among the most esteemed modern interpreters is, that this representation can, in all its circumstances, only apply to the Romans, of whose empire and history this therefore is to be taken as a third description. This point is fully discussed in Bishop Newton's 'Dissertations,' xv.

THE TEN KINGDOMS, represented by the ten toes of the image in Nebuchadnezzar's dream, and by the ten horns of the wild beast. The ten kingdoms are determined with little difference by the various writers who have attended to the subject. The following list is that which Dr. Hales gives from Machiavelli, "the best, because the most unprejudiced authority, in his History of Florence, lib. i., with their respective dates, furnished by Bishop Lloyd."

1. Huns (Hungary), A.D. 356. 2. Ostrogoths (Mæsia-Italy), 377. 3. Visigoths (Pannonia), 378. 4. Franks (Gaul), 407. 5. Vandals (Africa), 407. 6. Suevi (Spain), 407. 7. Burgundians (Burgundy), 407. 8. Heruli (Italy), 476. 9. Saxons (Britain), 476. 10. Longobards (Danube), 483; Lombardy, 526.

In such attempts as this at furnishing a precise list of the several powers represented by the ten toes and the ten horns, there may be differences of opinion and even mistakes, but the general result will not be affected. We may conclude this rapid sketch with the words of Bishop Newton:—"What an amazing prophecy is this, comprehending so many various events, and extending through so many successive ages, from the first establishment of the Persian empire, upwards of 530 years before Christ, to the general resurrection! What a proof of a Divine Providence, and of a Divine Revelation! for who could thus declare the things that shall be, with their times and seasons, but He only who hath them in his power: whose dominion is over all, and whose kingdom endureth from generation to generation!"

9. "I beheld till the thrones were cast down."—Properly, "till thrones were set," or "placed," for the Ancient of Days and his assessors.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 Daniel's vision of the ram and he goat. 13 The two thousand three hundred days of sacrifice. 15 Gabriel comforteth Daniel, and interpreteth the vision.

IN the third year of the reign of king Belshazzar a vision appeared unto me, even unto me Daniel, after that which appeared unto me at the first.

2 And I saw in a vision; and it came to pass, when I saw, that I was at Shushan in the palace, which is in the province of Elam; and I saw in a vision, and I was by the river of Ulai.

3 Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and, behold, there stood before the river a ram which had two horns: and the two horns were high; but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last.

4 I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward; so that no beasts might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand; but he did according to his will, and became great.

5 And as I was considering, behold, an he goat came from the west on the face of the whole earth, and *²*touched not the ground: and the goat had *³*a notable horn between his eyes.

6 And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and ran unto him in the fury of his power.

7 And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns: and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him: and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand.

8 Therefore the he goat waxed very great: and when he was strong, the great horn was broken; and for it came up four notable ones *⁴*toward the four winds of heaven.

9 And out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great, toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the ⁵'pleasant land.

10 And it waxed great, even ⁶'to the host of heaven; and it cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them.

11 Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down.

12 And an host was given him against the daily sacrifice by reason of transgression, and it cast down the truth to the ground; and it practised, and prospered.

13 ¶ Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto ¹⁰ ¹¹ that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression ¹² of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?

14 And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred ¹³ days; then shall the sanctuary be ¹⁴ cleansed.

15 ¶ And it came to pass, when I, even I Daniel, had seen the vision, and sought for the meaning, then, behold, there stood before me as the appearance of a man.

16 And I heard a man's voice between the banks of Ulai, which called, and said, ¹⁵ Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision.

17 So he came near where I stood: and when he came, I was afraid, and fell upon my face: but he said unto me, Understand, O son of man: for at the time of the end shall be the vision.

18 Now as he was speaking with me, I was in a deep sleep on my face toward the ground: but he touched me, and ¹⁶ set me upright.

19 And he said, Behold, I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation: for at the time appointed the end shall be.

21 And the rough goat is the king of Grecia: and the great horn that is between his eyes is the first king.

22 Now that being broken, whereas four stood up for it, four kingdoms shall stand up out of the nation, but not in his power.

23 And in the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors ¹⁷ are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up.

24 And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power: and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper, and practise, and shall destroy the mighty and the ¹⁸ holy people.

25 And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and by ¹⁹ peace shall destroy many: he shall also stand up against the Prince of princes; but he shall be ²⁰ broken without hand.

26 And the vision of the evening and the morning which was told is true: wherefore shut thou up the vision; for it shall be for many days.

27 And I Daniel fainted, and was sick certain days; afterward I rose up, and did the king's business; and I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it.

Verse 2. "At Shushan, in the palace."—There is no doubt that Susa, which we afterwards find as one of the royal cities of Persia, is here intended. As we find a Babylonian palace there in the time of Belshazzar, it would seem that the district was at this time subject to his empire, although it appears always to have been regarded as a part of Persia, and although the ancient classical writers, and the modern Orientals, give a Persian origin to the city. It appears to have existed as a city from very ancient times; and is said to have been first made a residence of the Persian court by Cyrus: that is to say, the kings resided there during the whole or part of the winter, the climate and local position rendering the temperature remarkably mild in that season, but so warm in summer, that the court then removed to Ecbatana, the elevated position and more northern situation of which rendered its summer comparatively cool and supportable, while the severity of its winter cold compelled a return to the mild region of the plain. The city seems to have been greatly improved by Darius Hystaspis; and here the Persian kings deposited their treasures and the records of their kingdom; though it seems from Scripture that Ecbatana had a share of both. Descriptively, we know little about its ancient condition, except that, as Strabo states, it was built entirely of brick, like Babylon; and was of an oblong figure, 120 stadia in circumference. The palace was accounted one of the most magnificent royal residences in the world, and the fortress was so strong that, according to Polybius (Hist. lib. v. 249), Molon, after having won the city, was unable to take the fortress, but raised the siege in despair. The wealth treasured up at Susa was immense. In that interesting account where Aristagoras comes before Cleomenes, to tempt him to foreign conquests, having with him a brazen tablet, "on which was engraved the entire circuit of the earth, with all its seas, and rivers," he points, among other places, to Susa, saying, "On the banks of the Choaspes stands Susa, where the great king fixes his residence, and where are his treasures. Master of that city, you may boldly vie with Jupiter himself for riches." (lib. v. c. 48.)

There has been some considerable dispute concerning the site of the ancient Susa. It had usually been placed at Shuster: but Major Rennel, in his Geography of Herodotus, preferred to find it at Shus, a site commencing about 36 miles more to the west, or nearer to Babylon. This conclusion was contested with considerable warmth by Dr. Vincent, in his 'Commerce and Navigation of the Ancients.' But Sir John Macdonald Kinneir, who had the advantage of being practically acquainted with both sites, after recapitulating the arguments on both sides, determines for Rennel's alternative, and supplies additional reasons, which may be considered to have set the question at rest. We shall therefore consider Shus to represent the Susa of ancient times. Of the ruins we have no better description than that which Kinneir himself has supplied. They are very extensive, stretching not less perhaps than twelve miles from one extremity to the other. They extend as far as the eastern bank of the Kerah; occupy an immense space between that river and the Abzal; and, like the ruins of Babylon, Ctesiphon, and Kufah, consist of hillocks of earth and rubbish, covered with broken pieces of brick and coloured tile. The largest and most remarkable of these mounds stands at the distance of about two miles from the Kerah. The first is, at the lowest computation, a mile in circumference, and nearly 100 feet in height; and the other, although not quite so high, is double the circuit of the former. These mounds bear some resemblance to the pyramidal heaps of Babylon; with this difference, that, instead of being entirely made of brick, they are formed of clay and pieces of tile, with irregular layers of brick and mortar, five or six feet in thickness, to serve, it would seem, as a kind of prop to the mass. Large blocks of marble covered with hieroglyphics are not unfrequently discovered here by the Arabs, when digging in search of hidden treasure; and at the foot of the most elevated of the pyramids stands the Tomb of Daniel, a small and apparently modern building, erected on the spot where the relics of that prophet are believed to rest. Sir John Kinneir adds to this account, which is from him, "The city of Shus is now a gloomy wilderness, infested by lions, hyenas, and other beasts of prey. The dread of these furious animals compelled Mr. Monteith and myself to take shelter for the night within the walls that encompass Daniel's tomb." With respect to this tomb, the following further information from Sir John Malcolm's 'History of Persia,' may be acceptable:—"It is a small building, but sufficient to shelter some dervishes, who watch the remains of the prophet, and are supported by the alms of pious pilgrims, who visit the holy sepulchre. These dervishes are now the only inhabitants of Susa; and every species of wild beast roams at large over that spot, on which some of the proudest palaces ever raised by human art once stood" (vol. i. pp. 255-6). He adds in a note, "Though the building at the tomb of Daniel be comparatively modern, nothing could have led to its being built where it is, but a belief that that was the real site of the prophet's sepulchre."

"The river of Ulai."—Diodorus and Arrian concur with Daniel in describing the Ulai, or Euleus, as the river of Susa; but Herodotus names the Choaspes in that character: we might therefore be led to conclude that the same river is intended by these different names. Kinneir says, "If we admit the ruins of Shus to be those of ancient Susa, the Kerah will correspond with the description of the Choaspes, but not to that of the Euleus; for the latter entered the Persian Gulf by a channel of its own, while the Kerah flows into the Shat-ul-Arab." Knowing, however, how much the courses of ancient streams have been altered in this region, we are not ourselves inclined to lay much stress on this objection, and are still disposed to consider the Choaspes and Euleus as identical, and answering to the modern Kerah. However, as the ruins at Shus are situated at the point where the rivers Kerah and Abzal make their nearest approach to each other, and these ruins extend over much of the distance between them, the alternative is open of supposing that the Choaspes and Euleus were different streams, both rivers of Susa; the former being represented by the Kerah, and the latter by the Abzal. The kings of Persia drank no other water than that of the Choaspes, a sufficient quantity being carried for them wherever they went.

5. "The goat had a notable horn."—This has been explained in the general note, and is universally admitted to describe Alexander. It is rather a curious coincidence that when this conqueror claimed to be the son of Jupiter Ammon—who was worshipped under the figure of a ram, and who, when represented in the human figure, had rams' horns on his head—he assumed, as far as he could, the symbols which denoted his assumed paternity, causing his head to be sometimes represented as horned. One such representation we have copied as a suitable illustration. It is also remarkable that the Oriental Mohammedans still recognize the horns of Alexander, without being aware of the origin of the symbol. In their writings he is frequently mentioned by the title of "The horned," without any addition.

CHAPTER IX.

1 Daniel, considering the time of the captivity, 3 maketh confession of sins, 16 and prayeth for the restoration of Jerusalem. 20 Gabriel informeth him of the seventy weeks.

IN the first year of Darius the son of Ahasuerus, of the seed of the Medes, 'which was made king over the realm of the Chaldeans ;

2 In the first year of his reign I Daniel understood by books the number of the years, whereof the word of the LORD came to 'Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem.

3 ¶ And I set my face unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes :

4 And I prayed unto the LORD my God, and made my confession, and said, O 'Lord, the great and dreadful God, keeping the covenant and mercy to them that love him, and to them that keep his commandments ;

5 'We have sinned, and have committed iniquity, and have done wickedly, and have rebelled, even by departing from thy precepts and from thy judgments :

6 Neither have we hearkened unto thy servants the prophets, which spake in thy name to our kings, our princes, and our fathers, and to all the people of the land.

7 O Lord, righteousness 'belongeth unto thee, but unto us confusion of faces, as at this day ; to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and unto all Israel, that are near, and that are far off, through all the countries whither thou hast driven them, because of their trespass that they have trespassed against thee.

8 O Lord, 'to us belongeth confusion of face, to our kings, to our princes, and to our fathers, because we have sinned against thee.

9 To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses, though we have rebelled against him ;

10 Neither have we obeyed the voice of the LORD our God, to walk in his laws, which he set before us by his servants the prophets.

11 Yea, all Israel have transgressed thy law, even by departing, that they might not obey thy voice ; therefore the curse is poured upon us, and the oath that is written in the 'law of Moses the servant of God, because we have sinned against him.

12 And he hath confirmed his words, which he spake against us, and against our judges that judged us, by bringing upon us a great evil : for under the whole heaven hath not been done as hath been done upon Jerusalem.

13 As 'it is written in the law of Moses, all this evil is come upon us : yet 'made we not our prayer before the LORD our God, that we might turn from our iniquities, and understand thy truth.

14 Therefore hath the LORD watched upon the evil, and brought it upon us : for the LORD our God is righteous in all his works which he doeth : for we obeyed not his voice.

15 And now, O Lord our God, that hast brought thy people forth out of the land of Egypt with a mighty hand, and hast 'gotten thee 'renown, as at this day ; we have sinned, we have done wickedly.

16 ¶ O Lord, according to all thy righteousness, I beseech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from thy city Jerusalem, thy holy mountain : because for our sins, and for the iniquities of our fathers, Jerusalem and thy people are become a reproach to all that are about us.

17 Now therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary that is desolate, for the Lord's sake.

18 O my God, incline thine ear, and hear ; open thine eyes, and behold our desolations, and the city 'which is called by thy name : for we do not 'present our supplications before thee for our righteousnesses, but for thy great mercies.

19 O Lord, hear ; O Lord, forgive ; O

21 Yea, whiles I was speaking in prayer, even the man ¹⁴Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly ¹⁵swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation.

22 And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth ¹⁶to give thee skill and understanding.

23 At the beginning of thy supplications the ¹⁷commandment came forth, and I am come to shew thee; for thou art ¹⁸greatly beloved: therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision.

24 Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, ¹⁹to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and ²⁰to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and ²¹prophecy, and to anoint the most Holy.

25 Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks: the street ²²shall be built again, and the ²³wall, even in ²⁴troublous times.

26 And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, ²⁵but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war ²⁶desolations are determined.

27 And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and ²⁷for the overspreading of ²⁸abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate.

Verse 2. "I...understood by books," &c.—Daniel thus calls the prophecies of Jeremiah, referring particularly to the 25th and 29th chapters. The information conveyed would be very interesting, were it only that it informs us that the later prophets possessed and studied the writings of their predecessors, and anxiously watched the times of their fulfilment.

24. "Seventy weeks."—These weeks, commencing from the going forth of the decree to restore Jerusalem. Every one sees that "weeks" are not to be literally understood. They are weeks of years, each week answering to seven years, and the whole therefore amounting to 490 years, and consequently extending from the year 420 B.C. to 70 A.D., corresponding exactly to the respective dates of the decree of Cyrus to restore Jerusalem, and of its final destruction by the Romans. This entire period of seventy weeks of years, is in the ensuing verses historically divided into sixty-two, seven, and one weeks, and the one week subdivided into a half week. The following observations on these divisions are from Hales, who however acknowledged his obligations for the adjustment of the chronology of the seventy weeks, to Hans Wood, Esq., of Rossmead, co. Westmeath, Ireland, published by him (1787) in an anonymous commentary on the Revelations. "After the sixty-two weeks, but not immediately, the "Messiah was cut off;" for the sixty-two weeks expired A.D. 14; and the one week, or passion week, in the midst of which our Lord was crucified, A.D. 31, began with his public ministry, A.D. 28, and ended with the martyrdom of Stephen,

A.D. 34. The passion week began, therefore, two weeks (14 years) after the sixty-two weeks, or at the end of sixty-four weeks; and there were five weeks, or thirty-five years, after the passion week to the destruction of Jerusalem. So that the seventy weeks must be chronologically divided into sixty-four, one, and five weeks; for the one week of the prophecy is evidently not the last of the Jewish war, and cannot therefore follow, in the order of time, the sixty-two and seven weeks. The commencement of the war, which ended with the ruin of the city and temple, seems to be fixed at the expiration of the 62+7=69 weeks, or 483 years; and accordingly the Jewish war commenced in the last, or seventieth week, A.D. 65, during the administration of Gessius Florus, whose exactions drove the Jews into rebellion, according to Josephus Ant. xx. 10, 1."

In the preparatory note to this book, we have intimated the general expectation which this prophecy led the Jews to entertain of the appearance of the Messiah, about the time when he actually did appear, although they knew him not. The prophecy was therefore understood by them as Christians have always understood it. So clear indeed is its specification of the time of the Messiah's appearance, that, says Gill (quoting T. Bab., Bava Bathrah, fol. 15, 1)—"One of the Rabbins, who lived about fifty years before the coming of Christ, asserted that the coming of the Messiah, as signified by Daniel, could not be deferred longer than those fifty years." In fact, all the history of the Jews about that time evinces the prevalence of this belief among them. But the Messiah they expected was one who should appear as a conquering king, and establish a Jewish monarchy all over the world, being blind to the fact that his kingdom was not of this world. It was this persuasion that chiefly animated them in their war with the Romans. This is testified by Josephus (vii. 12), who states—“That which chiefly excited them to the war was an obscure oracle, found in the holy writings, that about this time, one coming out of that land should rule over the whole world; which they interpreted of one of their own nation, and many of their wise men were deceived therein. But this oracle signified the empire of Vespasian.” This was a very convenient and courtly explanation for the Jewish priest to find. Suetonius and Tacitus also state that there was in the world at this time a general fame that one coming out of Judea should rule over the whole world. This belief could only have come from the Jews, who had it from Daniel; and the succession of Vespasian, the general commanding against the Jews, to the Roman empire, suggested that application of it to him which even Josephus sanctions, though his sincerity in making it may very well be questioned.

27. “In the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease.”—“In the midst” means any time between the commencement and completion. It is a remarkable fact that, according to Josephus, the sacrifice and oblation, meaning every offering made by fire, did cease before the city was taken. Indeed the Temple was destroyed twenty-seven days before the latter event.

CHAPTER X.

1 Daniel having humbled himself seeth a vision. 10 Being troubled with fear he is comforted by the angel.

In the third year of Cyrus king of Persia a thing was revealed unto Daniel, whose name was called Belteshazzar; and the thing was true, but the time appointed was long: and he understood the thing, and had understanding of the vision.

2 In those days I Daniel was mourning three ¹full weeks.

3 I ate no ²pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in my mouth, neither did I anoint myself at all, till three whole weeks were fulfilled.

4 And in the four and twentieth day of the first month, as I was by the side of the great river, which is ³Hiddekel;

5 Then I lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and behold ⁴a certain man clothed in linen, whose loins were ⁵girded with fine gold of Uphaz:

6 His body also was like the beryl, and his face as the appearance of lightning, and his eyes as lamps of fire, and his arms and his feet like in colour to polished brass, and the voice of his words like the voice of a multitude.

7 And I Daniel alone saw the vision: for the men that were with me saw not the vision; but a great quaking fell upon them, so that they fled to hide themselves.

8 Therefore I was left alone, and saw this great vision, and there remained no strength in me: for my ⁶comeliness was turned in me into corruption, and I retained no strength.

9 Yet heard I the voice of his words: and when I heard the voice of his words, then was I in a deep sleep on my face, and my face toward the ground.

10 ¶ And, behold, an hand touched me, which ⁷set me upon my knees and upon the palms of my hands.

11 And he said unto me, O Daniel, ⁸a man greatly beloved, understand the words that I speak unto thee, and ⁹stand upright: for unto thee am I now sent. And when he had spoken this word unto me, I stood trembling.

12 Then said he unto me, Fear not, Daniel: for from the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand, and to chasten thyself before thy God, thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words.

13 But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days: but, lo, Michael, ¹⁰one of the chief princes, came to help me; and I remained there with the kings of Persia.

14 Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days: for yet the vision is for many days.

15 And when he had spoken such words unto me, I set my face toward the ground, and I became dumb.

16 And, behold, one like the similitude of the sons of men touched my lips: then I opened my mouth, and spake, and said unto him that stood before me, O my lord, by the vision my sorrows are turned upon me, and I have retained no strength.

19 And said, O man greatly beloved, fear not: peace be unto thee, be strong, yea, be strong. And when he had spoken unto me, I was strengthened, and said, Let my lord speak; for thou hast strengthened me.

20 Then said he, Knowest thou wherefore I come unto thee? and now will I return to fight with the prince of Persia: and when I am gone forth, lo, the prince of Grecia shall come.

Verse 4. "Hiddekel."—That is, the Tigris. This shows that Daniel was at Susa, Babylon being on the Euphrates.

13. "The prince of the kingdom of Persia."—From the context this would seem to mean not any human prince, but an angel—and that an evil one—who endeavoured to influence the Persians against the Jews, and was opposed by Gabriel, who was commissioned to remain at the Persian court, to incline the king and nobles to their favour, and to whose assistance, in the accomplishment of this object, Michael came. This is the obvious meaning of the verse, though other interpretations have been suggested. It is well observed here by Boothroyd, "We are too much unacquainted with the invisible world to decide that nothing of this kind actually occurs: and yet the whole may be symbolical, to show Daniel that his people would meet with opposition from that quarter."

ALSO I in the first year of Darius the Mede, even I, stood to confirm and to strengthen him.

2 And now will I shew thee the truth. Behold, there shall stand up yet three kings in Persia; and the fourth shall be far richer than they all: and by his strength through his riches he shall stir up all against the realm of Grecia.

3 And a mighty king shall stand up, that shall rule with great dominion, and do according to his will.

4 And when he shall stand up, his kingdom shall be broken, and shall be divided toward the four winds of heaven; and not to his posterity, nor according to his dominion which he ruled: for his kingdom shall be plucked up, even for others beside those.

5 ¶ And the king of the south shall be strong, and one of his princes; and he shall be strong above him, and have dominion; his dominion shall be a great dominion.

6 And in the end of years they ¹shall join themselves together; for the king's daughter of the south shall come to the king of the north to make ²an agreement: but she shall not retain the power of the arm; neither shall he stand, nor his arm: but she shall be given up, and they that brought her, and ³he that begat her, and he that strengthened her in these times.

7 But out of a branch of her roots shall one stand up in his estate, which shall come with an army, and shall enter into the fortress of the king of the north, and shall deal against them, and shall prevail:

8 And shall also carry captives into Egypt their gods, with their princes, and with ⁴their precious vessels of silver and of gold; and he shall continue more years than the king of the north.

9 So the king of the south shall come into his kingdom, and shall return into his own land.

10 But his sons ⁵shall be stirred up, and shall assemble a multitude of great forces: and one shall certainly come, and overflow, and pass through: then shall he return, and be stirred up, even to his fortress.

³ Or, whom she brought forth.

11 And the king of the south shall be moved with choler, and shall come forth and fight with him, even with the king of the north: and he shall set forth a great multitude; but the multitude shall be given into his hand.

12 And when he hath taken away the multitude, his heart shall be lifted up; and he shall cast down many ten thousands: but he shall not be strengthened by it.

13 For the king of the north shall return, and shall set forth a multitude greater than the former, and shall certainly come ⁶after certain years with a great army and with much riches.

14 And in those times there shall many stand up against the king of the south: also ⁷the robbers of thy people shall exalt themselves to establish the vision; but they shall fall.

15 So the king of the north shall come, and cast up a mount, and take ⁸the most fenced cities; and the arms of the south shall not withstand, neither ⁹his chosen people, neither shall there be any strength to withstand.

16 But he that cometh against him shall do according to his own will, and none shall stand before him: and he shall stand in the ¹⁰ ¹¹glorious land, which by his hand shall be consumed.

17 He shall also set his face to enter with the strength of his whole kingdom, and ¹²upright ones with him; thus shall he do: and he shall give him the daughter of women, ¹³corrupting her: but she shall not stand on his side, neither be for him.

18 After this shall he turn his face unto the isles, and shall take many: but a prince ¹⁴for his own behalf shall cause ¹⁵the reproach offered by him to cease; without his own reproach he shall cause it to turn upon him.

19 Then he shall turn his face toward the fort of his own land: but he shall stumble and fall, and not be found.

20 Then shall stand up in his estate ¹⁶a raiser of taxes in the glory of the kingdom: but within few days he shall be destroyed, neither in ¹⁷anger, nor in battle.

21 And in his estate shall stand up a vile person, to whom they shall not give the honour of the kingdom: but he shall come in peaceably, and obtain the kingdom by flatteries.

22 And with the arms of a flood shall they be overflowed from before him, and shall be broken; yea, also the prince of the covenant.

23 And after the league made with him he shall work deceitfully: for he shall come up, and shall become strong with a small people.

24 He shall enter ¹⁸peaceably even upon the fattest places of the province; and he shall do that which his fathers have not done, nor his fathers' fathers; he shall scatter among them the prey, and spoil, and riches: yea, and he shall ¹⁹forecast his devices against the strong holds, even for a time.

25 And he shall stir up his power and his courage against the king of the south with a great army; and the king of the south shall be stirred up to battle with a very great and mighty army; but he shall not stand: for they shall forecast devices against him.

26 Yea, they that feed of the portion of his meat shall destroy him, and his army shall overflow: and many shall fall down slain.

27 And both these kings' ²⁰hearts shall be to do mischief, and they shall speak lies at one table; but it shall not prosper: for yet the end shall be at the time appointed.

28 Then shall he return into his land with great riches; and his heart shall be against the holy covenant; and he shall do exploits, and return to his own land.

29 At the time appointed he shall return, and come toward the south; but it shall not be as the former, or as the latter.

come against him: therefore he shall be grieved, and return, and have indignation against the holy covenant: so shall he do; he shall even return, and have intelligence with them that forsake the holy covenant.

31 And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate.

32 And such as do wickedly against the covenant shall he corrupt by flatteries: but the people that do know their God shall be strong, and do exploits.

33 And they that understand among the people shall instruct many: yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days.

34 Now when they shall fall, they shall be holpen with a little help: but many shall cleave to them with flatteries.

35 And some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, and to purge, and to make them white, even to the time of the end: because it is yet for a time appointed.

36 And the king shall do according to his will; and he shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every god, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods, and shall prosper till the indignation be accomplished: for that that is determined shall be done.

37 Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers, nor the desire of women, nor regard any god: for he shall magnify himself above all.

38 But in his estate shall he honour the God of forces: and a god whom his fathers knew not shall he honour with gold, and silver, and with precious stones, and pleasant things.

39 Thus shall he do in the most strong holds with a strange god, whom he shall acknowledge and increase with glory: and he shall cause them to rule over many, and shall divide the land for gain.

40 And at the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him: and the king of the north shall come against him like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships; and he shall enter into the countries, and shall overflow and pass over.

41 He shall enter also into the glorious land, and many countries shall be overthrown: but these shall escape out of his hand, even Edom, and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon.

42 He shall stretch forth his hand also upon the countries: and the land of Egypt shall not escape.

43 But he shall have power over the treasures of gold and of silver, and over all the precious things of Egypt: and the Libyans and the Ethiopians shall be at his steps.

44 But tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him: therefore he shall go forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly to make away many.

45 And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palaces between the seas in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him.

CHAP. XI.—To Dr. Hales, who has furnished us so much valuable help in this book, we are indebted for the following general view of this chapter:—

“The last prophecy contains four parts in the eleventh chapter, and an appendix in the twelfth.

“1. The first part explains the overthrow of the Persian empire, under Darius Codomanus, the last king, by Alexander the Great; and the division of his great empire among his four generals.—verses 2–4.

“2. The second details, with minute historical precision, the intermarriages and wars of the kings of the north and south, or of Syria and Egypt; and the oppressions and persecutions of the Jews, between the two contending powers, till the depression of Syria by the Romans.—verses 5–30.

“3. The third takes up the conclusion of the second vision, and relates, in continuation, the proceedings of the Romans after the removal of the daily sacrifice, and setting up the abomination of desolation, at the destruction of Jerusalem, A.D. 70; their various persecutions, blasphemies, apostacies, and innovations, heathen and Christian.—verses 30–39.

“4. The fourth recounts the war of the wilful king with the king of the south; his expedition into the glorious land of Palestine; his conquest of many countries in the east, except Moab, Edom, and Ammon; and, in the south, of Egypt, Libya, and Ethiopia. His return in consequence of tidings from the north which shall trouble him; his planting the tabernacle of his palace in the glorious holy mount between the two seas; and his final destruction, without any to help him.—verses 40-45.

“This last part of the prophecy appears to be unfulfilled; and to coincide, in point of time, with the third woe of the Apocalypse. They are therefore both sealed, or shut up, for the present, till further lights shall be furnished by the event.” —‘Analysis,’ vol. ii. p. 528.

CHAPTER XII.

1 Michael shall deliver Israel from their troubles. 5 Daniel is informed of the times.

AND at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people: and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book.

2 And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt.

3 And they that be ^{wise} shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever.

4 But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased.

5 ¶ Then I Daniel looked, and, behold, there stood other two, the one on this side of the ^{bank} of the river, and the other on that side of the bank of the river.

6 And one said to the man clothed in ^{linen}, which was ^{upon} the waters of the river, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?

7 And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he ^{held} up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and swore by him that liveth for ever that it shall be for a time, times, and ^{an} half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished.

8 And I heard, but I understood not; then said I, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?

9 And he said, Go thy way, Daniel: for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end.

10 Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand.

11 And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and ^{the} abomination that ^{maketh} desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days.

12 Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days.

13 But go thou thy way till the end be: ^{for} thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days.

CHAPTER I.

¹ Hosea, to shew God's judgment for spiritual whoredom, taketh Gomer, 4 and hath by her Jezreel, 6 Lo-ruhamah, 8 and Lo-ammi. 10 The restoration of Judah and Israel.

HE word of the LORD that came unto Hosea, the son of Beeri, in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash, king of Israel.

² The beginning of the word of the LORD by Hosea. And the LORD said to Hosea, Go, take unto thee a wife of whoredoms and children of whoredoms: for the land hath committed great whoredom, departing from the LORD.

³ So he went and took Gomer the daughter of Diblaim; which conceived, and bare him a son.

⁴ And the LORD said unto him, Call his name Jezreel; for yet a little while, and I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu, and will cause to cease the kingdom of the house of Israel.

⁵ And it shall come to pass at that day, that I will break the bow of Israel in the valley of Jezreel.

⁶ ¶ And she conceived again, and bare a daughter. And God said unto him, Call her name Lo-ruhamah: for I will no more have mercy upon the house of Israel; but I will utterly take them away.

⁷ But I will have mercy upon the house of Judah, and will save them by the LORD their God, and will not save them by bow, nor by sword, nor by battle, by horses, nor by horsemen.

⁸ ¶ Now when she had weaned Lo-ruhamah, she conceived, and bare a son.

⁹ Then said God, Call his name Lo-ammi: for ye are not my people, and I will not be your God.

¹⁰ ¶ Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered; and it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God.

¹¹ Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head, and they shall come up out of the land: for great shall be the day of Jezreel.

Hosea.—Our own division of “Four prophets the greater, and twelve prophets the less” seems to regard the latter, in a certain sense, as forming one book. This was also the view of the Jews. Thus, Stephen, quoting a passage out of Amos, says, “It is written in the book of the prophets.” (Acts vii. 42.) Josephus also counts them as one book. So Kimchi reports from the Rabbins that the twelve prophets were put together in one book, lest, from their smallness, any of them should be lost. All this only implies, that in the early copies of the Hebrew Scriptures, the several books of these twelve prophets were put together in one roll or volume. Hosea is placed first, probably because his book is the largest of those which contain prophecies delivered before the Captivity, and indeed the largest of all the twelve, with the single exception of Zechariah. In order of time he was preceded by Jonah and perhaps Amos. And here it may be useful to many of our readers to have at one view the order of time in which the several prophecies were delivered. For this purpose we give the table of Bishop Gray.

4 E 2

579

PROPHETS.	B.C.	KINGS OF JUDAH.	KINGS OF ISRAEL.
JONAH . . .	Between 856 and 784 .	..	Jehu, and Jehoahaz, according to Bishop Lloyd; but Jeroboam II. according to Blair (2 Kings xiv. 25).
AMOS 810 .. 785 .	Uzziah. (Chap. i. 1.)	Jeroboam II. (Chap. i. 1.)
HOSEA 810 .. 725 .	Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, the third year of Hezekiah.	..
ISAIAH 810 .. 698 .	Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah (chap. i. 1), and perhaps Manasseh.	..
JOEL 810 .. 660 .	Uzziah, or possibly Manasseh.	..
MICAH 758 .. 699 .	Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah. (Ch. i. 1.)	Pekah and Hosea.
NAHUM 720 .. 698 .	Probably towards the close of Hezekiah's reign.	..
ZEPHANIAH .	.. 640 .. 609 .	In the reign of Josiah. (Ch. i. 1.)	..
JEREMIAH .	.. 628 .. 586 .	From the thirteenth year of Josiah.	..
HABAKKUK .	.. 612 .. 598 .	Probably in the reign of Jehoiakim.	..
DANIEL 606 .. 534 .	During all the Captivity.	..
OBADIAH 588 .. 583 .	Between the taking of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, and the destruction of the Edomites by him.	..
EZEKIEL 595 .. 536 .	During part of the Captivity.	..
HAGGAI . .	About 520 to 518 .	After the return from Babylon.	..
ZECHARIAH .	From 520 to 518
	or longer
MALACHI . .	Between 436 and 420

This table does not profess to fix the precise times of every prophet beyond dispute, as, with respect to some of them, the indications of Scripture are not very clear as to particular years, and the chronological intimations which they offer are traced with difficulty. The order in which the names occur shows the order of presumed seniority, when that is not indicated by the date. Thus the table does not fix the particular year after 810 B.C. in which Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, and Joel severally began to prophesy; but is contented to intimate that none began earlier, and to suggest the order of priority, after 810, by the order in which the names are given. It appears from the list of kings that, however calculated, Hosea must have lived and prophesied for a very long time. That he commenced his prophetic life early in the long reign of Uzziah is clear from the mention of Jeroboam, king of Israel; for that king died in the fifteenth of Uzziah, after a reign of forty-seven years, and from thence to the beginning of Hezekiah's reign, in whose time also Hosea prophesied, was about seventy years. This therefore must have been the least duration of his prophetic life: and it may have been considerably more, within the reigns specified; as from the first year of Uzziah to the last of Hezekiah gives not less than 113 years.

As the prophecies of Hosea are chiefly directed against the abominations of the ten tribes forming the kingdom of Israel, it seems probable that he was a native of that kingdom, and resided in it. Some of the Jewish commentators, indeed, make him of the tribe of Reuben, by confounding his father Beerai with the Beerah, a prince of that tribe who was carried into captivity by Tiglathpileser. Others say he was of Issachar; but there is no authority for either assertion, and the first is chronologically improbable.

Bishop Horsley thinks that it is a mistaken notion that Hosea's prophecies are almost wholly against the kingdom of Israel, or that the captivity of the ten tribes is the immediate and principal subject. On the contrary, he conceives that Hosea's principal subject is also that which is the principal subject of all the prophets—the guilt of the Jewish nation in general, their disobedient, refractory spirit, the heavy judgments that awaited them, and their final restoration to God's favour. "He seems, indeed, of all the prophets, if I may so express my conception of his peculiar character, to have been the most of a Jew. Comparatively he seems to care little about other people. He wanders not, like Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, into the collateral history of the surrounding heathen. He meddles not, like Daniel, with the revolutions of the great empires of the world. His own country seems to engross his whole attention; her privileges, her crimes, her punishments, her pardon. . . His country and his kindred is the subject next his heart. Their crimes excite his indignation; their sufferings interest his pity; their future exaltation is the object on which his imagination fixes with delight. Not that the ten tribes are exclusively his subject. His country is indeed his peculiar and constant subject; but his country generally, in both its branches, not in either taken by itself."

The style of Hosea has been skilfully characterised by Bishops Lowth and Horsley. We give the statement of the latter, as the result of a more intimate acquaintance with this prophet's peculiarities than Lowth had occasion to realize. "He delights in a style which always becomes obscure, when the language of the writer ceases to be a living language. He is commatic, to use St. Jerome's word, more than any other of the prophets. He writes in short, detached, disjointed sentences; not wrought up into periods, in which the connection of one clause with another, and the dialectic relations are made manifest to the reader by an artificial collocation, and by those connective particles that make one discourse of parts, which otherwise appear as a string of unconnected propositions, which it is left to the reader's discernment to unite. His transitions from reproof to persuasion, from threatening to promise, from terror to hope, and the contrary, are rapid and unexpected. His similes are brief, accumulated, and often introduced without the particle of similitude. Yet these are not the vices but the perfections of the holy prophet's style; for to these circumstances it owes that eagerness and fiery animation which are the characteristic excellence of his writings, and are so peculiarly suited to his subject."

Verse 4. "Call his name Jezreel."—There seem to be no less than three allusions declared here by the interposition of one name. The royal city was called Jezreel, or, as we may spell it, Izrael (2 Kings xv. 10, 11), and here a great slaughter of Ahab's family was made by Jehu. Jezreel, or Izrael, was also the name of the valley or plain in which the city stood, and where Israel was routed, with great loss, by the Assyrians

(2 Kings xv. 29). To signify, therefore, the punishment of Jehu's posterity for the blood shed at Jezreel, and the punishment of Jezreel, or Izrael (which differs from Israel only in a single letter, scarcely distinguishable in pronunciation) in the field of Jezreel, Hosea's son was so named. This single name thus became a sign and memorial of all these things. See Chandler, 'Defence of Christianity.'

SAY ye unto your brethren, ¹Ammi; and to your sisters, ²Ruhamah.

² Plead with your mother, plead: for ³she is not my wife, neither am I her husband: let her therefore put away her 'whoredoms out of her sight, and her adulteries from between her breasts;

³ Lest I strip her naked, and set her as in the day she was ⁴born, and make her as a wilderness, and set her like a dry land, and slay her with thirst.

⁴ And I will not have mercy upon her children; for they be the children of whoredoms.

⁵ For their mother hath played the harlot: she that conceived them hath done shamefully: for she said, I will go after my lovers, that give me my bread and my water, my wool and my flax, mine oil and my 'drink.

⁶ ¶ Therefore, behold, I will hedge up thy way with thorns, and 'make a wall, that she shall not find her paths.

⁷ And she shall follow after her lovers, but she shall not overtake them; and she shall seek them, but shall not find them: then shall she say, I will go and return to my first husband; for then was it better with me than now.

⁸ For she did not know that I gave her corn, and 'wine, and oil, and multiplied her silver and gold, 'which they prepared for Baal.

⁹ Therefore will I return, and take away my corn in the time thereof, and my wine in the season thereof, and will ¹⁰recover my wool and my flax given to cover her nakedness.

¹⁰ And now will I discover her 'lewdness in the sight of her lovers, and none shall deliver her out of mine hand.

¹¹ I will also cause all her mirth to cease, her feast days, her new moons, and her sabbaths, and all her solemn feasts.

¹² And I will ¹³destroy her vines and her fig trees, whereof she hath said, These are my rewards that my lovers have given me: and I will make them a forest, and the beasts of the field shall eat them.

¹⁴ ¶ Therefore, behold, I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak ¹⁵comfortably unto her.

¹⁵ And I will give her her vineyards from thence, and the valley of Achor for a door of hope: and she shall sing there, as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when she came up out of the land of Egypt.

¹⁶ And it shall be at that day, saith the LORD, that thou shalt call me ¹⁷Ishi; and shalt call me no more ¹⁸Baali.

¹⁷ For I will take away the names of Baalim out of her mouth, and they shall no more be remembered by their name.

¹⁸ And in that day will I make a 'covenant for them with the beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground: and I will break the bow and the sword and the battle out of the earth, and will make them to lie down safely.

¹⁸ Rom. 9. 26. 1 Pet. 2. 10.

Verse 6. "Thorns."—We have intimated on former occasions that a considerable number of different words in the original are rendered by "thorn" in our version. By the present word, סִר sir, we may probably understand one or more species of buckthorn, and particularly the Zisypus spina Christi, or Christ's thorn, so called because it is commonly supposed to have been the same which formed the crown of mockery and torture set on the head of our Saviour. It is impossible to be certain on this point; but the pliant stem and crooked thorn of this plant, would certainly have suited it but too well to this barbarous use. A hedge also of such thorns would offer a more formidable obstacle to any one who should attempt to pass through, than one formed of any species growing in this country, inasmuch as the thorns are large, hooked, and exceedingly numerous. The flowers grow in flattish-headed clusters: the leaves are egg-shaped, with a downy pubescence underneath; and the thorns occur in pairs, and are evidently the transformed stipulæ.

15. "The valley of Achor."—Jerome says that this valley was to the north of Jericho, and that in his time it still retained its ancient name. It was eminent for its fertility; and in allusion to this, and to its being one of the earliest of the acquisitions of the Hebrews in the land of promise, giving them the hope and foretaste of the entire possession, it is here significantly called "a door of hope."

CHAPTER III.

¹ By the expiation of an adulteress, 4 is shewed the desolation of Israel before their restoration.

THEN said the LORD unto me, Go yet, love a woman beloved of her friend, yet an adulteress, according to the love of the LORD toward the children of Israel, who look to other gods, and love flagons¹ of wine.

2 So I bought her to me for fifteen pieces of silver, and for an homer of barley, and an² half homer of barley:

3 And I said unto her, Thou shalt³ abide for me many days; thou shalt not play the harlot, and thou shalt not be for another man: so will I also be for thee.

4 For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without⁴ an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim.

5 Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the LORD their God, and⁵ David their king; and shall fear the LORD and his goodness in the⁶ latter days.

4. "Without teraphim."—See the note on Gen. xxxi. 19. The verse seems to intimate that while, on the one hand, they should be unable to conduct the worship of God in the manner prescribed by the law, on the other, and at the same time, they should neglect their ancient and favourite objects of superstition. This was true during the Captivity, and is true at this day. The mournful comment of Rabbi Kimchi on this deserves attention, "These are the days of the Captivity, in which we are at this day." (Kimchi flourished in the 12th century). "We have no king nor prince out of Israel, for we are in the power of the Gentiles and of their kings and princes. We have no sacrifices for God, nor images for idols: no ephod, for God, that declares future things; nor any teraphim, for idolatry, which show things to come, according to the mind of those that believe in them." Other Hebrew commentators interpret to the same effect.

CHAPTER IV.

1 God's judgments against the sins of the people, 6 and of the priests, 12 and against their idolatry. 15 Judah is exhorted to take warning by Israel's calamity.

HEAR the word of the LORD, ye children of Israel: for the LORD hath a 'controversy with the inhabitants of the land, because there is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land.

2 By swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing, and committing adultery, they break out, and 'blood toucheth blood.

3 Therefore shall the land mourn, and every one that dwelleth therein shall languish, with the beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven; yea, the fishes of the sea also shall be taken away.

4 Yet let no man strive, nor reprove another: for thy people are as they that strive with the priest.

5 Therefore shalt thou fall in the day, and the prophet also shall fall with thee in the night, and I will 'destroy thy mother.

6 ¶ My people are 'destroyed for lack of knowledge: because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me: seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children.

7 As they were increased, so they sinned against me: therefore will I change their glory into shame.

8 They eat up the sin of my people, and they 'set their heart on their iniquity.

9 And there shall be, 'like people, like priest: and I will 'punish them for their ways, and 'reward them their doings.

10 For they shall eat, and not have enough: they shall commit whoredom, and shall not increase: because they have left off to take heed to the LORD.

11 Whoredom and wine and new wine take away the heart.

12 ¶ My people ask counsel at their stocks, and their staff declareth unto them: for the spirit of whoredoms hath caused them to err, and they have gone a whoring from under their God.

13 They sacrifice upon the tops of the mountains, and burn incense upon the hills, under oaks and poplars and elms, because the shadow thereof is good: therefore your daughters shall commit whoredom, and your spouses shall commit adultery.

14 'I will not punish your daughters when they commit whoredom, nor your spouses when they commit adultery: for themselves are separated with whores, and they sacrifice with harlots: therefore the people that doth not understand shall ¹⁰fall.

15 ¶ Though thou, Israel, play the harlot, yet let not Judah offend; and come not ye unto Gilgal, neither go ye up to 'Beth-aven, nor swear, The LORD liveth.

16 For Israel slideth back as a back-sliding heifer: now the LORD will feed them as a lamb in a large place.

17 Ephraim is joined to idols: let him alone.

18 Their drink ¹²is sour: they have committed whoredom continually: her ¹³rulers with shame do love, Give ye.

Verse 12. "Their staff declareth unto them."—The terms "stock," and "staff," may possibly be terms of contempt and derision, applied to idols, which were often of wood. The allusion is however more usually applied to a species of divination by means of rods or staves, which was much in use among the ancient heathen. There are notices of very various practices of this description, to more than one of which the prophet may possibly refer. Theophylact illustrates this text, by noticing a very common practice, to which he supposes it may allude. The diviners set up rods, and began to mutter verses and enchantments, and when the rods fell, they drew their presages from the manner and direction of the fall.

The Hebrew writers, however, thus describe the custom which they suppose to be intended.—When a person began a journey or commenced any other undertaking, he desired to know whether the result would be prosperous or otherwise; and, to this end, he took a branch of a tree, or rod, and stripped off the bark on one side and left it on the other. He then threw up the rod twice, and if the side with the bark lay upwards the first time, and the peeled side the second time, the omen was good, and he proceeded in his undertaking; but if the reverse happened, the sign was bad, and the matter in hand was for the time discontinued. If either of the sides appeared uppermost at both throws, the sign was neither good nor evil, and the man decided¹ as he judged best. Another way was for a man to take a rod and measure its length by spans, or by the length of his finger, saying each time, "I will go; I will not go," or "I will do; I will forbear," alternately, and he decided according to the alternative which was associated with the last span or finger's measure. The method of divination by rods, as in use among the ancient Germans, and described by Tacitus (De Moribus Germani, c. x.), was not much unlike one of the modes of divination by arrows, as noticed under Ezek. xxi. 21. They cut a twig of a fruit tree into several pieces, and, having distinguished the pieces by marks, threw them promiscuously into a white cloth. Then the priest of the community—if information was desired concerning a public event or, if a private one, the father of a family—addressed a prayer to the gods, and, looking towards heaven, took up each piece thrice, one after another, and from the order in which the marks presented themselves, he drew inferences for the solution of the difficulty or for the prediction of the future. Herodotus also (Melp. [lxvii.]), describes the original and common divination of the Scythians as by rods; but the application of the details given by him are not very clear.—Things not very unlike some of these, and at least equally absurd, are done daily by ignorant people in our own country. The difference is, that with us such persons only are addicted to these practices, whereas anciently they were matters of solemnity and ceremony, by which not only the uninstructed people, but the educated, the learned, and the great, were guided; and by which, important measures of public and private conduct were often determined. Yet all men think they act with reason; and they satisfied their understandings with such conclusions as these:—"If the power of the gods proceeds in pre-manifestation as far as to things inanimate—such as pebble-stones, rods, pieces of wood, stones, corn, or wheat—this very thing is most admirable in the presignification of divine prophecy, because it imparts soul to things inanimate, motion to things immovable, and makes all things to be clear and known, to partake of reason, and to be defined by the measures of intellection, though possessing no portion of reason for themselves." (Jamblichus 'On the Mysteries of the Egyptians, Chaldeans, and Assyrians,'—Taylor's Translation.) More on the subject may be found there; and from which it seems that it was understood that the gods being appealed to, used these things as instruments for making known their will. But for this belief no reason is given, and we know well that none existed.

CHAPTER V.

¹ God's judgments against the priests, the people, and the princes of Israel, for their manifold sins, 15 until they repent.

HEAR ye this, O priests; and hearken, ye house of Israel; and give ye ear, O house of the king; for judgment is toward you, because ye have been a snare on Mizpah, and a net spread upon Tabor.

2 And the revolvers are profound to make slaughter, 'though I have been ² a rebuker of them all.

3 I know Ephraim, and Israel is not hid from me: for now, O Ephraim, thou committest whoredom, and Israel is defiled.

4 ³ 'They will not frame their doings to turn unto their God; for the spirit of whoredoms is in the midst of them, and they have not known the LORD.

5 And the pride of Israel doth testify to his face: therefore shall Israel and Ephraim fall in their iniquity; Judah also shall fall with them.

6 They shall go with their flocks and with their herds to seek the LORD; but they shall not find him; he hath withdrawn himself from them.

7 They have dealt treacherously against the LORD: for they have begotten strange children: now shall a month devour them with their portions.

8 Blow ye the cornet in Gibeah, and the trumpet in Ramah: cry aloud at Beth-aven, after thee, O Benjamin.

9 Ephraim shall be desolate in the day of rebuke: among the tribes of Israel have I made known that which shall surely be.

10 The princes of Judah were like them that remove the bound: therefore I will pour out my wrath upon them like water.

11 Ephraim is oppressed and broken in judgment, because he willingly walked after the commandment.

12 Therefore will I be unto Ephraim as a moth, and to the house of Judah as rottenness.

13 When Ephraim saw his sickness, and Judah saw his wound, then went Ephraim to the Assyrian, and sent 'to king Jareb: yet could he not heal you, nor cure you of your wound.

14 For I will be unto Ephraim as a lion, and as a young lion to the house of Judah: I, even I, will tear and go away; I will take away, and none shall rescue him.

15 ¶ I will go and return to my place, 'till they acknowledge their offence, and seek my face: in their affliction they will seek me early.

Verse 2. "The revolters," &c.—Gesenius translates this clause, "In slaying (of sacrifices), they sin greatly;" and understands that the allusion is to human sacrifices. It will be observed that the snare on Mizpah and the net on Tabor, doubtless allude to their being used as "high places" for idolatrous worship which was often signalized by the sacrifice of human beings. But, on the other hand, Horsley thinks that the figure is continued in the present verse, and translates "prickers" instead of "revolters;" and explains, in his note, that the "prickers" were scouts that waited on horseback attendants on the chase, whose business it was to scour the country all round, and drive the wild beasts into the toils. Some others, adopting the same idea, have however supposed that the allusion is less to huntsmen than to fowlers, who lay themselves flat upon the ground to manage their snares and nets, and to observe and secure the birds they succeed in decoying.

CHAPTER VI.

1 An exhortation to repentance. 4 A complaint of their un-wardness and iniquity.

COME, and let us return unto the LORD: for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath smitten, and he will bind us up.

2 'After two days will he revive us: in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight.

3 Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the LORD: his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth.

4 ¶ O Ephraim, what shall I do unto thee? O Judah, what shall I do unto thee? for your 'goodness is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away.

5 Therefore have I hewed them by the prophets; I have slain them by the words of my mouth: 'and thy judgments are as the light that goeth forth.

6 For I desired 'mercy, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt offerings.

7 But they 'like men have transgressed the covenant: there have they dealt treacherously against me.

8 Gilead is a city of them that work iniquity, and is 'polluted with blood.

9 And as troops of robbers wait for a man, so the company of priests murder in the way 'by consent: for they commit 'lewdness.

10 I have seen an horrible thing in the house of Israel: there is the whoredom of Ephraim, Israel is defiled.

WHEN I would have healed Israel, then the iniquity of Ephraim was discovered, and the 'wickedness of Samaria: for they commit falsehood; and the thief cometh in, and the troop of robbers 'spoileth without.

2 And they 'consider not in their hearts that I remember all their wickedness: now their own doings have beset them about; they are before my face.

3 They make the king glad with their wickedness, and the princes with their lies.

4 They are all adulterers, as an oven heated by the baker, 'who ceaseth 'from raising after he hath kneaded the dough, until it be leavened.

5 In the day of our king the princes have made him sick 'with bottles of wine; he stretched out his hand with scorners.

6 For they have 'made ready their heart like an oven, whiles they lie in wait: their baker sleepeth all the night; in the morning it burneth as a flaming fire.

7 They are all hot as an oven, and have devoured their judges; all their kings are fallen: there is none among them that call-eth unto me.

11 ¶ Ephraim also is like a silly dove without heart: they call to Egypt, they go to Assyria.

12 When they shall go, I will spread my net upon them; I will bring them down as the fowls of the heaven; I will chastise them, as their congregation hath heard.

13 Woe unto them! for they have fled from me: ¹⁰destruction unto them! because they have transgressed against me: though I have redeemed them, yet they have spoken lies against me.

14 And they have not cried unto me with their heart, when they howled upon their beds: they assemble themselves for corn and wine, and they rebel against me.

15 Though I ¹¹have bound and strengthened their arms, yet do they imagine mischief against me.

16 They return, but not to the most High: they are like a deceitful bow: their princes shall fall by the sword for the ¹²rage of their tongue: this shall be their derision in the land of Egypt.

¹² Psal. 73. 9.

Verse 5. "The day of our king."—The Hebrew writers understand that this was either the anniversary of the king's birth or accession. It was no doubt some public feast-day or other, signalized, at the palace, by intemperate drinking, and when the king, being intoxicated, "stretched forth his hand with scorn;" an expression which usually denotes some act of profanity or impiety. This is perhaps one of many passages which allude to then recent occurrences, concerning which we possess no information.

7. "Hot as an oven."—In the course of this work, and particularly under Gen. xviii. and Lev. ii., we have mentioned various methods of baking bread in the East, as well as the different ovens employed for the purpose. We have noticed the baking of bread on the heated ground, or sand, and upon heated stones; the simple plate of iron with a fire underneath; the portable oven of earthenware; and, what most nearly approaches to our idea of an oven, the round pit in the ground, against the heated sides of which, or on the heated stones at the bottom, the bread is baked. A still nearer approach to our oven than this last, is now offered in the following engraving, and which is common enough in towns of sufficient population in Western Asia and Egypt, to support bakers by trade. They are found usually in the markets, as represented in the cut, where the master has his cakes arranged for sale, while the baking is going on behind. The oven is rather large, and is half occupied by the combustible materials which afford the required heat. The cakes are small, and are baked in less than five minutes. The other cut exhibits a different process, which is chiefly employed by pastrycooks, in their more delicate bakings, and which, as may be seen, is little other than a convenient adaptation of the principle of the iron plate or pan. The pan is here placed over a furnace, and the composition, in the form of a thin paste, being spread upon it, is speedily baked, when it is handed over to the woman who cuts it up into convenient portions. The preparation is, in the present instance, a sort of spiced bread, in a large but very thin cake. The thin bread, similar to this, but unspiced, which we have formerly described as very commonly used in the East, is prepared in much the same manner by professed bakers in towns; but in places where there is no baker, or where, from choice or necessity, families bake their bread at home, the more simple processes above mentioned are exclusively employed. These two are properly bakers' ovens, and as such, are the more appropriate as illustrations of the present text; but it remains difficult to say which of the different "ovens" and processes of baking the prophet had more particularly in his view.

11. "Ephraim also is like a silly dove without heart."—There is much force and beauty in this comparison of Ephraim to a "silly dove without heart"—or rather, without understanding—which, when pursued by a bird of prey, trusts to the rapidity of its flight; that is, relies upon its own powers for the means of escape, instead of at once throwing itself into the nearest recess, where the interference of man, or the narrowness of the place, might render it secure from further molestation. Israel, instead of taking shelter under the wing of the Almighty, who is a God near at hand, and not afar off, rested his hope of defence upon the celerity of his negotiations—stretching his wing towards Assyria or Egypt, but in the length of the flight is overtaken, secured, and dies in the cruel talons of his unrelenting pursuer.

CHAPTER VIII.

1, 12 Destruction is threatened for their impiety, 5 and idolatry.

SET the trumpet to 'thy mouth. He shall come as an eagle against the house of the LORD, because they have transgressed my covenant, and trespassed against my law.

2 Israel shall cry unto me, My God, we know thee.

3 Israel hath cast off the thing that is good: the enemy shall pursue him.

4 They have set up kings, but not by me: they have made princes, and I knew it not: of their silver and their gold have they made them idols, that they may be cut off.

5 ¶ Thy calf, O Samaria, hath cast thee off; mine anger is kindled against them: how long will it be ere they attain to innocency?

6 For from Israel was it also: the workman made it; therefore it is not God: but the calf of Samaria shall be broken in pieces.

7 For they have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind: it hath no 'stalk: the bud shall yield no meal: if so be it yield, the strangers shall swallow it up.

⁵ Or, In the sacrifices of mine offerings, they, &c.

Verse 8. "A vessel wherein is no pleasure."—A similar expression occurs in Jer. xlviii. 38, with an addition, as to its being broken; which suggests that the vessel was of earthenware from which the allusion is taken. To understand the use of an earthen vessel, as a figure of insignificance and worthlessness, it should be stated that the earthenware vessels in common use in the East, for various purposes, are so exceedingly cheap that they form the least valuable possession which any one can have. The common sorts, moreover, are not well or strongly compacted, and are so constantly breaking that they are decidedly perishable articles, and a source of constant, though small, expense. This may be shown by the single fact that the present writer, having occasion during summer, as is customary, to keep for his single use a water-jug and cup—both of earthenware, for the sake of keeping the water cool—found it necessary to purchase several at once, from his experience that probably not less than a dozen would be broken in the course of the season, though they were by no means subject to rough treatment.

CHAPTER IX.

The distress and captivity of Israel for their sins and idolatry.

REJOICE not, O Israel, for joy, as other people: for thou hast gone a whoring from thy God, thou hast loved a 'reward 'upon every cornfloor.

2 The floor and the 'winepress shall not feed them, and the new wine shall fail in her.

3 They shall not dwell in the Lord's land; but Ephraim shall return to Egypt, and they shall eat unclean things in Assyria.

4 They shall not offer wine offerings to the Lord, neither shall they be pleasing unto him: their sacrifices shall be unto them as the bread of mourners: all that eat thereof shall be polluted: for their bread for their soul shall not come into the house of the Lord.

5 What will ye do in the solemn day, and in the day of the feast of the Lord?

6 For, lo, they are gone because of 'destruction: Egypt shall gather them up, Memphis shall bury them: ⁶'the pleasant places for their silver, nettles shall possess them: thorns shall be in their tabernacles.

7 The days of visitation are come, the days of recompence are come; Israel shall know it: the prophet is a fool, the 'spiritual man is mad, for the multitude of thine iniquity, and the great hatred.

8 The watchman of Ephraim was with my God: but the prophet is a snare of a fowler in all his ways, and hatred 'in the house of his God.

9 They have deeply corrupted themselves, as in the days of 'Gibeah: therefore he will remember their iniquity, he will visit their sins.

10 I found Israel like grapes in the wilderness; I saw your fathers as the first-ripe in the fig tree at her first time: but they went to ¹⁰Baal-peor, and separated themselves unto that shame; and their abominations were according as they loved.

of their doings I will drive them out of mine house, I will love them no more: all their princes are revolvers.

16 Ephraim is smitten, their root is dried up, they shall bear no fruit: yea, though they bring forth, yet will I slay even ¹³the beloved fruit of their womb.

17 My God will cast them away, because they did not hearken unto him: and they shall be wanderers among the nations.

Verse 1. "Thou hast loved a reward upon every corn-floor."—This is susceptible of various interpretations. The most probable seems to be, that they attributed the plenty of their corn-floors to the favour of the idols whom they served; and acknowledged the obligation either by giving to them the offerings therefrom which were due to the Lord, or by erecting altars to their honour on their corn-floors, as an act of thanksgiving for a good harvest, which they attributed to them, or in order to obtain one. Both things may indeed have been done. The Targum seems to take the latter sense,—"You have erred from the worship of your God; you have loved to serve idols on all corn-floors."

6. "Nettles."—The Hebrew word קִמּוֹשׁ (kimosh) very probably denotes the common nettle, one of those offensive weeds which at once indicate a neglect of cultivation and hinder us from gathering what else of a vegetable nature may be instructive and engaging. The nettle (Urtica) is the type of a numerous family, and though apparently of little value itself, is connected by kindred marks with trees and shrubs which are in divers places of the highest importance. As none of God's works in creation are without use, or exclusively pernicious, it is due even to the nettle to observe that it can be described as of little value only in a relative sense; for the common nettle (Urtica dioica), many ages since, had a three-fold application;—as nutritive, when gathered young as a pot-herb; as yielding tough fibres for the manufacture of cloth; and as a vesicatory, or producing irritation and blisters when laid upon a suffering part of the body.

"Thorns."—We have already had occasion to express our opinion that the word here employed (תִּנְתִּי choach)—one of the many rendered "thorns" in our version—is a general name for different kinds of thorny, prickly plants. It is therefore of little use to attempt to identify it with any particular species; but perhaps, with a regard to the etymology of the word, it might not be unsafe to limit its signification to such kinds as have their thorns hooked, as the same word appears to denote a fish-hook in Job xl. 26; xli. 2.

CHAPTER X.

Israel is reproved and threatened for their impiety and idolatry.

ISRAEL is 'an empty vine, he bringeth forth fruit unto himself: according to the multitude of his fruit he hath increased the altars; according to the goodness of his land they have made goodly ¹images.

2 ²Their heart is divided; now shall they be found faulty: he shall 'break down their altars, he shall spoil their images.

3 For now they shall say, We have no king, because we feared not the LORD; what then should a king do to us?

4 They have spoken words, swearing falsely in making a covenant: thus judgment springeth up as hemlock in the furrows of the field.

5 The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear because of the calves of Beth-aven: for the people thereof shall mourn over it, and ³the priests thereof that rejoiced on it, for the glory thereof, because it is departed from it.

¹³ Heb. the evil of your evil.

13 Ye have plowed wickedness, ye have reaped iniquity; ye have eaten the fruit of lies: because thou didst trust in thy way, in the multitude of thy mighty men.

14 Therefore shall a tumult arise among thy people, and all thy fortresses shall be spoiled, as Shalman spoiled ¹²Beth-arbel in the day of battle: the mother was dashed in pieces upon her children.

15 So shall Beth-el do unto you because of ¹³your great wickedness: in a morning shall the king of Israel utterly be cut off.

Verse 6. "King Jareb."—This occurs also in ch. v. 13. Interpreters are much divided about it in both cases, as our translators indicate by putting "king Jareb" in the text, and giving the alternatives, "king of Jareb," and "the king that should plead," in the margin. This suggests that the subject is involved in the greatest possible uncertainty. Taking it as a proper name, we do not know whether it is the king's own name, or that of the country, or of a chief city in the country, which he governed: and if it be not a proper name, we are ignorant whether it is to be taken as a characterizing epithet applied to the king, or as a title of honour and distinction. Understood as the former, the derivation of the word from jarib involves the notions of contending, pleading with or for, and avenging; and hence such translations as "the king who takes up quarrels" (Horsley); "the king who should plead or contend," and "the avenging king" (Houbigant). But, again, instead of coming from "to," in may be from the Syriac root jirib, signifying jarib be great," or, "magnificent"—which would produce "the great," or "mighty king;" and as this is such a title as Oriental monarchs were accustomed to assume, this alternative seems as probable as any. We know that "the great king" was the style by which the king of Persia was usually distinguished. It is commonly understood, as the result of all the alternatives suggested that the king of Assyria is intended; and the prophecy is usually explained by a reference to 2 Kings xvii. 3. Many think that this clause applies to the conduct of Judah; and that either the name has been dropped, or that Judah must be understood as included in the nominative Ephraim: under this view, the clause would be explained by a reference to 2 Kings xvi. 18. Horsley, for one, is of this opinion; and Pocock seems to incline to it.

The text describes the golden calf at Bethel, as carried away and presented to the king of Assyria. It is hardly to be supposed that the Israelites themselves sent it to him as a present, but rather that it was among the spoil which the Assyrian army should make and convey to their own country; according to the custom of the Orientals, as also of the Romans, to carry away the gods of conquered nations.

8. "Thorn."—This is another of the different words rendered "thorn" in our version. The original is ynet kolz, which may very possibly denote the Ononis spinosa, or rest-harrow, a papilionaceous shrub of a thorny nature; and which, like the dardar, or thistle, is in some places a great foe to the farmer. Here it is represented as overgrowing the altar, to intimate the ruinous and neglected state of that idolatrous worship whereby Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, made Israel to sin.

11. "Judah shall plow, and Jacob shall break his clods."—It seems probable that the custom here alluded to is similar to that which still continues in Persia. There, as fast as the ground is turned up, men break the clods with large wooden mallets, and also employ a small harrow, assisted by the spade, to level the furrows and the ridge between them. It has, however, been doubted whether any harrow was used by the Hebrews, whose operations after ploughing may seem to have consisted in breaking the clods and covering the seed, when sown, by cross furrows. This was an ancient custom, and still prevails in Palestine, where also, when the soil is sandy, they often sow without previous ploughing, and afterwards plough down the seed. We still, however, think the Persian method was at least sometimes used, for it not only agrees with the Scriptural intimations, but coincides with the notice which Pliny takes of the process in use among the ancient Syrians.

12. "Till he come and rain."—This and other allusions regarding rain, in connection with agricultural operations, may perhaps receive some illustration from the fact, that when the "former," or autumnal rains begin to fall, there are commonly two or three days of heavy rain, after which the weather clears up for twenty or thirty days, when the rains return and continue at intervals during the winter. The present inhabitants of the land never think of plowing or sowing till these rains have commenced; for till then the ground is so parched and hard from the long drought of summer, that to sow before the rain would be to throw away the seed, even if ploughing, with their slight plough, were till then practicable.

4 I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love: and I was to them as they that 'take off the yoke on their jaws, and I laid meat unto them.

5 ¶ He shall not return into the land of Egypt, but the Assyrian shall be his king, because they refused to return.

6 And the sword shall abide on his cities, and shall consume his branches, and devour them, because of their own counsels.

7 And my people are bent to backsliding from me: though they called them to the most High, 'none at all would exalt him.

8 How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? how shall I deliver thee, Israel? how shall I make thee as 'Admah? how shall I set thee as Zeboim? mine heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together.

9 I will not execute the fierceness of mine anger, I will not return to destroy Ephraim: for I am God, and not man; the Holy One in the midst of thee: and I will not enter into the city.

10 They shall walk after the LORD: he shall roar like a lion: when he shall roar, then the children shall tremble from the west.

11 They shall tremble as a bird out of Egypt, and as a dove out of the land of Assyria: and I will place them in their houses, saith the LORD.

Verse 4. "I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love."—That is, they were drawn by such ties of reason and affection as those by which man acts upon and induces his children and fellow men; as contrasted with those bands of force and compulsion by which he constrains the brute creatures subject to him, but to whose reason and affection he can make no appeal. It is observable that it is still a popular expression in the East to describe as "the cords of love" the ties which bind a child to its parent, or a wife to her husband.

"Take off the yoke on their jaws."—The yoke was laid upon the neck and shoulders of the labouring animal, not in any way upon the jaws: hence some suppose that here we should understand the word yy, which usually denotes a yoke, rather of a bridle or muzzle, the kind removal of which enabled the animal to refresh himself with food, as the following clause seems to intimate. However, it is very likely that the word rendered "jaw" is to be understood in a loose sense for the fore part of the animal, and that the yoke is really intended; in which case we may probably understand that it refers to the custom of raising the yoke forward occasionally, to relieve and cool the neck of the labouring ox. Pocock illustrates this view by an extract from Columella, containing a rule of ancient Roman husbandry: "When they come to a turning, let him thrust the yoke forward, and stop the oxen, that their necks may cool; for they quickly become hot, and, unless thus refreshed, swellings arise, followed by ulcers." The Targum seems to combine both the interpretations suggested, thus paraphrasing: "My word was to them as a good husbandman, who lightens the shoulder of oxen, and looses the bridles in their jaws."

8. "Admah. . . Zeboim."—These were two of the "cities of the plain," which the Lord overthrew, as recorded in Gen. xviii. The names are mentioned with those of Sodom and Gomorrah in Deut. xxix. 23.

11. "They shall tremble as a bird out of Egypt, and as a dove out of the land of Assyria."—The allusion seems to be rather to the speed of an alarmed bird—a dove in particular—than to the alarm itself. Hence Horsley renders: "They shall hurry like the sparrow from Egypt, and like the dove from Assyria." No doubt many Jews of the ten tribes who had been captives in Assyria, or who had sought refuge in Egypt, returned to their own country, as well as the captives of Judah, after the decree of Cyrus in favour of the nation. And to this the prophet appears to refer.

Verse 1. "Oil is carried into Egypt."—When the Hebrews wanted to pay their court to the Egyptians, they could hardly transmit a more acceptable offering than a quantity of the excellent olive oil which their country produced in such abundance and perfection. The difference between Egypt and Palestine in this respect has been already noticed. The present inhabitants of Egypt consume as much oil, perhaps, as any people. It is used not only for lamps, but with food. But as Egypt is not a country of the olive, the Egyptians, although they value highly its oil, are obliged for the most part to content themselves with inferior vegetable oils, less palatable to the taste with food, and burning less brightly and smelling disagreeably in lamps. If this was the case anciently, as no doubt it was, we may find a good reason for the sending of oil to Egypt. It is here evidently regarded as a criminal act ; and that criminality is usually supposed to consist in its being offered as a bribe to Pharaoh to induce him to render that assistance which the Hebrews should not have sought. But as much oil was consumed in honour of idols, Harmer ingeniously conjectures that the Jews are considered culpable in sending oil to Egypt, with the knowledge that it would be, and with the intention that it should be, thus employed.

11. "Their altars are as heaps in the furrows of the field."—This probably means to express the number of the idolatrous altars dispersed over the country, by comparing them to the frequent heaps of stones thrown up by husbandmen on lands cleared for the plough. It has, however, been suggested by some writers, that the passage may rather be understood to describe the ruined condition to which such altars should be reduced.

We may add here the very apposite instance which Horsley cites from Cicero (in Verrem), who mentions a brazen statue of Hercules at Agrigentum, in which the workmanship of the mouth was sensibly worn by the frequent kisses of the worshippers.

3. "Smoke out of the chimney."—The only thing in the East that approaches to a chimney, is a funnel above the fireplace, to conduct the smoke out of the room. A structure rising above the roof, for the same purpose and to increase the draught, is not known, nor is the other much in use. There is no evidence for the existence of a chimney in ancient times. It is not clear that even the Romans had any, and none certainly occur at Pompeii or Herculaneum. They employed charred wood, or wood that emitted no smoke, or let the smoke escape at the windows, or at holes made for the purpose. In the present instance, the word rendered "chimney," אֲרֻבָּה arubeh, means any kind of hole or opening, and particularly a window; hence, as Jerome explains, it is here to be understood of a hole or opening of some kind at which the smoke escaped, without saying what kind of hole or opening it might be.

9 Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? prudent, and he shall know them? for the ways of the LORD are right, and the just shall walk in them: but the transgressors shall fall therein.

Verse 5. "He shall grow as the lily."—Dr. Russell, in his 'Natural History of Aleppo,' says:—"After the first rains in the autumn, the fields everywhere throw out the autumnal lily daffodil; and the few plants that have stood the summer now grow with fresh vigour." This lily grows also in the Holy Land, under the same circumstances.

7. "The wine of Lebanon."—Harmer has collected from travellers some distinct notices of the still superior quality of the wine of Lebanon—or at least of one of its wines—and we can ourselves confirm their statements, having had opportunities of comparing it with other wines of the Levant. Rauwolff relates that the patriarch (at Canobin) gave him some white wine in Venice glasses, of which he was tempted to drink a good deal, for it was so pleasant that he never, in all his life, drank any like it. Le Bruyn, when at the same place, says he found there more delicate wines than were to be met with anywhere else in the world. "They are red, of a beautiful colour, and so oily that they adhere to the glass." After citing the present text, he adds, that there were other wines, not so good, but more abundant. "As the patriarch had a great esteem for us, he always caused the best to be given to us. I found it so excellent that I did not think I ever tasted any kind of drink more delicious." La Roque, at the same convent, observes that it would be difficult to find elsewhere more excellent wines than can be there obtained—"Which caused us to think the reputation of the wine of Lebanon, of which the prophet speaks, was well founded. These wines are of two sorts: the most common is the red, and the most exquisite is of the colour of our muscadine wine. They call it 'golden wine' on account of its colour."

8. "Green fir tree."—The Septuagint translates ἀρκενδοξ πικαζουσα, an umbrageous juniper tree, but there is no need to go wide from the English translation "fir tree," since the Pinus pinea, or stone pine, produces an edible nut within the scales of its cone. This handsome fruit measures about four inches in length, and about three in diameter; the scales are polygonal, with an umbilicated or depressed crown, and before expansion form a beautiful mosaic pavement. The meat of each nut is as sweet as an almond, and far more wholesome. These cones are occasionally brought to this country, and sold by foreign fruiterers, while the nuts disengaged from their confinement are made to form a part in comfits and other confections. The Portuguese call them Pinhao, and cultivate the tree for the sake of the fruit. The leaves are confined in pairs within a membranous hose or sheath at the base, and are five or six inches long. The male flowers occur in large red clusters at the extremity of the branches, and form an elegant setting off with the verdure around them. These male flowers are accompanied by the fertile cones, so that both conspire to ornament the same branch. The tree attains to a great height when in full prosperity, and illustrates in a striking manner the comparison used by the sacred penman: "I am like a green fir tree. From me is thy fruit found." The Pinus pinea is, however, not the only fir tree that bears an edible nut; for we have the Pinus cembra, or the Siberian stone pine, which, among the Tartars and the Swiss, serves for a dessert, and in seasons of plenty for a much-relished article of diet. The leaves are clustered in fives, and the flowers present a most beautiful appearance. The kernel within each nut is about the size of a pea. The tree wears a very showy aspect, delights in marshy situations, and yields a timber that has a finer grain than that of the common deal. One or perhaps both of these trees may be referred to in the verse of the prophet; either of them will justify the comparison, which is all we require. We can easily conceive that they were the subject of cultivation, if not the native products, of the Holy Land, since Palestine comprehends all that is excellent among the trees of Europe, and very many of the choicest kinds found in the more southern regions.

CHAPTER I.

¹ Joel, declaring sundry judgments of God, exhorteth to observe them, ⁸ and to mourn. ¹⁴ He prescribeth a fast for complaint.

THE word of the LORD that came to Joel the son of Pethuel.

² Hear this, ye old men, and give ear, all ye inhabitants of the land. Hath this been in your days, or even in the days of your fathers?

³ Tell ye your children of it, and let your children tell their children, and their children another generation.

⁵ Awake, ye drunkards, and weep; and howl, all ye drinkers of wine, because of the new wine; for it is cut off from your mouth.

⁶ For a nation is come up upon my land, strong, and without number, whose teeth are the teeth of a lion, and he hath the cheek teeth of a great lion.

⁷ He hath laid my vine waste, and ²barked my fig tree: he hath made it clean bare, and cast it away; the branches thereof are made white.

⁸ ¶ Lament like a virgin girded with sackcloth for the husband of her youth.

⁹ The meat offering and the drink offering is cut off from the house of the LORD; the priests, the LORD's ministers, mourn.

¹⁰ The field is wasted, the land mourneth; for the corn is wasted: the new wine is ³dried up, the oil languisheth.

¹¹ Be ye ashamed, O ye husbandmen; howl, O ye vinedressers, for the wheat and for the barley; because the harvest of the field is perished.

¹⁴ ¶ Sanctify ye a fast, call a ⁵solemn assembly, gather the elders and all the inhabitants of the land into the house of the LORD your God, and cry unto the LORD, ¹⁵ Alas for the day! for ⁶the day of the LORD is at hand, and as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come.

¹⁶ Is not the meat cut off before our eyes, yea, joy and gladness from the house of our God?

¹⁷ The ⁷seed is rotten under their clods, the garners are laid desolate, the barns are broken down; for the corn is withered.

JOEL.—That Joel was the son of Pethuel is all the certain information we possess concerning him. That he was of the tribe of Reuben, and a native of the town of Bethoron, are reports which rest on very doubtful authority. Concerning the time in which this prophecy was delivered, such internal evidence, affirmative and negative, which it offers, tends to support the conclusion which may be found in the table prefixed to Hosea. Joel is cited as a prophet in the New Testament; and the important prophecy with which the book concludes, has occasioned his being regarded with peculiar reverence by the Jews. Bishop Lowth considers that the style of Joel is essentially different from that of Hosea: but the general character of his diction, though of a different kind, is not less poetical. Dr. Gray, partly availing himself of Lowth, thus characterises the style of the prophet:—"The style of Joel is equally perspicuous and elegant; obscure only towards the conclusion, where the beauties of his expression are somewhat shaded by allusions to circumstances yet unaccomplished. His descriptions are highly animated; the contexture of the prophecy in the first and second chapters is extremely curious; and the double destruction to be produced by locusts, and those enemies of which they are the harbingers, is painted with the most expressive force, in terms that are reciprocally metaphorical, and admirably adapted to the twofold character of the description."

Verse 4. "The palmerworm."—The Hebrew writers generally agree that the four insects mentioned in this verse are different species of the locust; and this opinion has been supported by Bochart with his usual ability and research. There is, however, a very strong objection to this conclusion in the fact, that the three rendered "palmerworm," "cankerworm," and "caterpillar," in our version, were not regarded as locusts by the Seventy, who were likely, in this matter, to be acquainted with the real meaning of the Hebrew words, and who wrote much earlier than any of those Hebrew writers who consider all the words to denote varieties of the locust. Without therefore pretending to arrive at any positive conclusion on so precarious a subject, we shall regard the three insects in question as different from locusts, for the sake of obtaining a view which shall give us the advantage of being in agreement both with the Septuagint and with the original text, so far as the meaning of the latter can be ascertained.

First, then, as to the "palmerworm." The original name is גזז gazam, καμμη of the Septuagint. This seems to be the caterpillar, which was called eruca by the Romans, ab erodendo, from gnawing, as Isidore remarks. The ancients describe it as a worm, which rolls up itself in the leaves of herbs, and especially the vine, including perhaps several species of insect under one name. Plautus, an old Latin poet, speaks of it as a mischievous beast, that rolls itself up in a vine leaf. "Imitatus nequam bestiam et maleficam involutam in pampino." It does not fly like the locust from plant to plant, or run hither and thither like some other insects, and leave them half eaten, but continues upon the perishing herbage till by its sluggish motion and lazy jaws it has devoured the whole. The ravages made by caterpillars are too familiar to render any expatiation upon them necessary. A reference to the respective meanings of the Hebrew, Latin, and Greek terms makes it probable that the same kind of insect was intended by גזז, καμμη, and eruca. The first is from גזז, to cut or shear; the second from καμπτω, to bend; and the third from erodendo, gnawing—the first and last pointing out to us its mischievous operations, and the second the habit of rolling itself up in a leaf, to protect itself against those enemies which are every moment upon the watch to secure it. The Arabic version has dud, which seems to be a general denomination for what we call the larva state of an insect, such as, for instance, the caterpillar is in respect of the butterfly, being then in the second grade of its progress towards the perfect or imago condition.

"Locust."—ארבה arbeh, ἀκρις of the Septuagint and the jerad of the Arabic version. The present is the common name for the locust in the Hebrew Scriptures. The locust and its ravages have been slightly alluded to in former notes; and on the present occasion it may not be amiss to glance at the Gryllus Migratorius in respect of the order and family to which it belongs, the Orthoptera and the Saltatoria. All the insects of this order are characterised by having soft or pliant covers, under which the true wings are folded, often with the elegance of a fan. The mouth has its parts very distinct and prominent, especially the mandibles, which are strong and robust, and seem destined for the work of destruction. Some of the grasshoppers apply these jaws with so much pertinacity that we have seen them suffer their heads to be pulled off rather than quit their hold. When put into a box with beetles, they will fall to work and bite off the horny limbs of their luckless companions, with as much address as if they had been shorn off with a pair of scissors. The members of this order generally subsist upon the living vegetable, to which they do incalculable harm by their voracious disposition. The female is generally provided with a sword-like appendage, which serves to conduct the eggs to the ground, where they are hatched, and assume the shape of the perfect insect, except in the absence of wings and wing-cases. These insects are provided with a crop or membranous stomach, formed like a bagpipe, and a muscular gizzard, presenting a singular analogy to the gallinaceous fowls, the hen, the partridge, and the dove.

The account we have given of the strength and magnitude of the mandibles possessed by the locust tribe illustrates what is said in a subsequent verse, "For a nation is come up upon my land, strong, and without number, whose teeth are the teeth of a lion, and he hath the cheek teeth of a lioness." With these destructive weapons the swarm of locusts had stripped the bark off the vine and the fig-tree, and rendered them so white and bare that nothing more was to be found. "It hath cast it away," or forsaken it, after having completed the work of devastation.

"Cankerworm."—יֵלֶק yelek.—The Septuagint (ὁ βρονχος) would seem to determine this to be a species of Melolontha, or May-chaffer, which in certain summers are very numerous, and are very destructive to vegetation, particularly to trees. The melolontha is provided with strong mandibles and jaws, by which it makes great havoc among the leaves. The antennae or horns consist of a knob borne upon a pedicle. This knob is divisible into several plates, and forms a beautiful characteristic of the family.

"Caterpillar."—חַסִּיל chasil, ἐρυσίλη of the Septuagint, which is equivalent to our words "blight and mildew." The Arabic would lead us to suppose the chasil to have meant the plant-louse or aphis, and was perhaps included under the general term ἐρυσίλη. For it is not unlikely that the same word was applied among the Greeks to denote the aphis, which had also been used to signify the mildew. The mildew is a species of fungus that vegetates upon the half-decayed materials of the bark, which is greatly promoted by moisture or damp air and a want of a free circulation. The aphis lives in numerous families, and sucks the juices of the plants by its trunk. It is very prolific, and by piercing the younger shoots makes them assume strange shapes. The honey-dew which is sometimes found upon trees inhabited by these insects flows from a pair of horn-like tubes, situated upon the back of the animal. They are often covered with farinaceous or cottony threads, disposed in small bundles.

DATE PALM (Phœnix dactylifera.)

12. "The palm tree."—The palm tree has been slightly noticed on different occasions, and a representation of its fruit—a cluster of dates—has been given under Ps. cxii. In Exod. xv., we have also given an engraving of a remarkable wild palm growing in Sinai. We now add further pictorial illustrations, with such supplementary observations as the subject seems to require.

The numerous allusions to the palm, particularly in the poetical Scriptures, sufficiently intimate the estimation in which it was held, not only for the surpassing grace of its form, but on account of its useful properties, for the variety and importance of which it is not exceeded, and perhaps scarcely equalled, by any product of the vegetable kingdom. There are many varieties of the palm family, some of them not very well defined; but there is no doubt that the palm tree known and prized so highly by the Hebrews was the common date palm (Phœnix dactylifera); which is therefore that which should engage our principal attention. But besides this, they could not be unacquainted with the doum palm, which abounded in Egypt, as it does at present; and we have therefore introduced a representation of this also. That the date palm was anciently frequent in Palestine is expressly affirmed by ancient writers—so much was this the case, indeed, that the tree appears to have been made by the Romans a symbol of the Hebrew nation. We thus find it on the medals which commemorate the victories of Vespasian and Titus; while upon a medal of Domitian it is delineated as an emblem of Neapolis or Naplosa, the ancient Sichem, and upon another of Trajan it appears as the symbol of Sepphoris, the metropolis of Galilee. And the palm tree in Judea does still mournfully typify the desolate condition of the Hebrew people. It was prosperous in their prosperous days, and has become desolate with their desolation. Palestine is not now a country of the palm. Such extensive plantations and forests of this generous tree as adorn and bless the plain of Egypt, and the borders and oases of the North African and Arabian deserts, are nowhere seen in Judea. There are some trees in the south and in the plain of Jericho, the ancient "city of palms;" but at Jerusalem, Sichem, and other places more to the north, two or three palms are rarely seen together; and even these, as their fruit seldom or never comes to maturity, are of no further service than, like the palm tree of Deborah, to shade the dwellings of the inhabitants, and to supply them with branches at their solemn festivals. As it is not our object to enter into any extended botanical account of this tree, we content ourselves with introducing the following very clear description from an interesting statement concerning it in the 'Library of Entertaining Knowledge,' (Vegetable Substances, vol. i. p. 353). "The date palm, though some of the family are more majestic, is still a beautiful tree. The stem of it shoots up, in one cylindrical column, to the height of fifty or sixty feet, without branch or division, and of the same thickness throughout its whole length. When it attains this height, its diameter is from a foot to eighteen inches. From the summit of this majestic trunk, it throws out a magnificent crown of leaves, which are equally graceful in their formation and their arrangement. The main stems of these leaves are from eight to twelve feet long, firm, shining, and tapering; and each embraces at its insertion a considerable part of the trunk. The trunk of the palm is in fact made up of the remains of leaves, the ends of which are prominent just under the crown, but more obliterated towards the root of the tree.

The bottoms of these leaves are enveloped in membranous sheaths, or fringed with very tough fibrous matter. These leaves are pinnated, or in the form of feathers, each leaf being composed of a great number of long narrow leaflets, which are alternate, and of a bright lively green. Near the base of the leaf these leaflets are often three feet long; but even then they are not one inch in breadth; neither do they open flat, but remain with a ridge in the middle, like the keel of a boat. When the leaves are young they are twisted together, and matted up with loose fibres, which open and disperse as the leaf expands. The young leaflet is also armed at the extremity with a hard black spine or thorn. They are more stiff and firmer than the leaves of any other tree."

The fibrous character of the stem, composed of the roots of leaves, renders the trunk useless as timber—indeed it cannot be called timber—but very valuable for other purposes. The character of the wood of palms has lately been an object of attention; and a communication on the subject from Mr. Gardner, residing in Brazil, was read at a late meeting of the British Association. By making a vertical section of a palm four inches in circumference, Mr. Gardner traced, very plainly, woody fibres proceeding from the base of the leaves to the centre of the stem, at an angle of 18° : they then turned downwards and outwards to within a few lines of the external corticle of the stem, running parallel with its axis; the distance between these two points being about two feet and a half. The fibres were traced quite distinctly up to the centre of the leaf. In answer to questions proposed by Professor Lindley, the author further stated,—1. That the wood of palms was always hard and compact outside, gradually getting softer towards the centre; the fibres of the upper leaves not descending to so great a length as the lower. 2. The wood is much harder at the bottom than at any other part of the stem; the inhabitants of tropical climates using only this part for economical purposes. (Report, in the 'Athenæum,' Sept. 16, 1837.)

It should be observed, that the lower leaves of the crown droop and wither every year, and are cut off at the base in such a manner that the stumps left upon the trunk, from the base to the leafy top, give the stem a remarkable appearance, and have the advantage of serving as steps to enable persons to ascend to the summit, which would otherwise be a very difficult enterprise. This ascent is necessary, not only to lop the decayed leaves and gather the fruit, but to impregnate the fruit-bearing tree. For the date-palm is a dioecious tree, having the male flowers in one plant, and the female, or fruiting ones, in another. The male tree bears no fruit, and that of the female would be abortive without communication from the flowers of the male. This distinction has been known and acted upon from the most ancient times in Africa and the south-west of Asia: and Scott Waring ('Tour to Shiraz') suggests that it is from the neglect of this that none of the palms of India bear fruit. We notice this chiefly as furnishing a reason, beyond the mere grace of its form, for the name of the date palm, Tamar, being used by the Hebrews as a proper name for females; and apparently a very common one, for of the few women whose names occur in Scripture two bear this name, the daughter-in-law of Judah, and the sister of Absalom.

19. "The fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness."—This appears to refer to the custom of setting the parched herbage on fire before the autumnal rains; with a further allusion, probably, to the sometimes destructive spread of the conflagration far beyond the intention of those by whom it was kindled.

CHAPTER II.

¹² He exhorteth to repentance, 15 prescribeth a fast, 18 promiseth a blessing thereon. ²¹ He comforteth Zion with present, 28 and future blessings.

Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain: let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: for the day of the LORD cometh, for it is nigh at hand;

2 A day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains: a great people and a strong; there hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years ²of many generations.

3 A fire devoureth before them; and behind them a flame burneth: the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness; yea, and nothing shall escape them.

4 The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses; and as horsemen, so shall they run.

5 Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap, like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, as a strong people set in battle array.

6 Before their face the people shall be much pained: all faces shall gather ³blackness.

7 They shall run like mighty men; they shall climb the wall like men of war; and they shall march every one on his ways, and they shall not break their ranks:

8 Neither shall one thrust another; they shall walk every one in his path: and when they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded.

9 They shall run to and fro in the city; they shall run upon the wall, they shall climb up upon the houses: they shall enter in at the windows like a thief.

10 The earth shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble: ⁵the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining:

11 And the LORD shall utter his voice before his army: for his camp is very great: for he is strong that executeth his word: for the ⁶day of the LORD is great and very terrible; and who can abide it?

12 ¶ Therefore also now, saith the LORD, ⁷turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning:

13 And rend your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the LORD your God: for he is ⁸gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil.

14 ⁹Who knoweth if he will return and repent, and leave a blessing behind him; even a meat offering and a drink offering unto the LORD your God?

15 ¶ Blow the trumpet in Zion, ¹⁰sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly:

16 Gather the people, sanctify the congregation, assemble the elders, gather the children, and those that suck the breasts: let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet.

17 Let the priests, the ministers of the LORD, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O LORD, and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should ¹¹rule over them: ¹²wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God?

18 ¶ Then will the LORD be jealous for his land, and pity his people.

19 Yea, the LORD will answer and say unto his people, Behold, I will send you corn, and wine, and oil, and ye shall be satisfied therewith: and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen:

20 But I will remove far off from you the northern army, and will drive him into a land barren and desolate, with his face toward the east sea, and his hinder part toward the utmost sea, and his stink shall come up, and his ill savour shall come up, because ¹³he hath done great things.

21 ¶ Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice: for the LORD will do great things.

22 Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field:

Verse 2. "A day of darkness and of gloominess."—In the preceding chapter the prophet describes the locusts as the army of God; and now, pursuing the same metaphor, he describes more particularly their fierceness and speed (v. 4), the noise and din of their approach (v. 5), the regularity of their march (v. 7, 8), their obscuring the light of day by their number and flight (v. 2-10), the havoc they should occasion (v. 3), the places they should invade (v. 7, 9), and the consternation and distress which they should bring upon all the inhabitants of the land (v. 6). We are forbidden by our limits to give to the various details of this sublime description all the illustration which it might receive, and which our reading and personal observations might enable us to supply. We shall therefore confine ourselves to a very few observations. In the first place, we beg the reader to observe how many points of this description have been unintentionally illustrated and confirmed by Volney, in his account of the ravages of the locusts in Syria. One might almost imagine that he had written to illustrate the prophet. "Syria, as well as Egypt, Persia, and almost all the south of Asia, is subject to another calamity, no less dreadful (than earthquakes); I mean those clouds of locusts so often mentioned by travellers. The quantity of these insects is incredible to all who have not themselves witnessed their astonishing numbers; the whole earth is covered with them for the space of several leagues. The noise they make in browsing on the trees and herbage may be heard to a great distance, and resembles that of an army foraging in secret. The Tartars themselves are a less destructive enemy than these little animals; one would imagine that fire had followed their progress. Wherever their myriads spread, the verdure of the country disappears, as if a covering had been removed; trees and plants, stripped of their leaves, and reduced to their naked boughs and stems, cause the dreary image of winter to succeed, in an instant, to the scenery of spring. When these clouds of locusts take their flight, to surmount any obstacle, or to traverse more rapidly a desert soil, the heavens may be literally said to be obscured by them. Happily this calamity is not frequently repeated, for it is the inevitable forerunner of famine and the maladies it occasions." ("Travels in Egypt and Syria," vol. i. pp. 283—4.) This is really an admirable condensed commentary on the present description; and as such may be taken in the place of a longer statement, which could do little more than corroborate and amplify its details. We shall therefore only add that some notion may be formed of the point of view in which the Orientals regard these destructive creatures from the meaning which they give to the inscription which they think may be deciphered upon their wings. Some allege the characters to be Chaldaic, and signify "the scourge of God;" whilst others contend that they form Arabic letters, and read, "We are the army of the mighty God: we have each ninety and nine eggs; and had we but the hundredth, we would consume the world and all that it contains."

4. "The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses," &c.—This may perhaps allude rather to their rapidity and force than to their form. We may however state that the first time we saw locusts browsing, with their wings closed, the idea of comparing them to horses arose spontaneously to our minds—as we had not previously met with such a comparison, and did not at the time advert to the present text. The resemblance in the head first struck our attention, and this notion having once arisen, other analogies were found or imagined in its general appearance and action in feeding. We have since found the observation very common.

The Italians, indeed, from this resemblance, call the locust cavaletta, or little horse. Sir W. Ouseley reports,—“Zakaria Cazvini divides the locusts into two classes, like horsemen and footmen, ‘mounted and pedestrian;’ which will call to the recollection of a Biblical reader some passages from Joel and the Apocalypse.” For the latter, he of course refers to Rev. ix. 7. Niebuhr says that he heard from a Bedouin, near Russorah, a particular comparison of the locust to other animals; but as this passage of Scripture (in Revelations) did not occur to him at the time, he thought it a mere fancy of the Arab’s, till he heard it repeated at Bagdad. He compared the head of the locust to that of a horse, the breast to that of a lion, the feet to those of a camel, the belly with that of a serpent, the tail with that of a scorpion, and the feelers (if Niebuhr remembered rightly) to the hair of a virgin. Compare this with the passage alluded to.

20. “His stink shall come up,” &c.—The figures employed in this verse are derived from the fate which often terminates the career of the locust legions—but which, at the same time, is frequently accompanied with most unpleasant and disastrous effects from the stench attending the decay of such enormous masses of animal matter. The course which the locusts take is very much determined by the direction of the wind. This sometimes drives them into the sea, or, in continuing their onward course over the sea, they alight upon it when weary, and are drowned; and perhaps they do so as much from being unacquainted with the sea, and unable to distinguish it from land, as from weariness. But storms, whether on the land or sea, are the chief agents of their destruction: then, falling to the earth, they cover it to a vast extent with their bodies, and fill the rivers; or, if upon the sea, at no great distance from the land, the continued storms, or the common operation of wind and tide, cast up their bodies on the shore, which they line in dense masses, casting an intolerable odour far around, and by which pestilential disorders are necessarily generated. In connection with the whole account, and the humiliation and supplication recommended on the occasion, we have been much struck by a passage in Alvarez, relating a visitation of locusts in Abyssinia, and the measures taken on the occasion by the Portuguese missionaries. “The plague of God being come upon us, the priests of the place repaired unto me, beseeching me to give them some remedy to chase them away. To which I answered, that I could tell them none other remedy save only to pray devoutly to God, that He would chase them out of the country.” This was done by the Portuguese “according to their custom, and I commanded those of the town to cry unto God like as we did, saying in their language ‘Zio Marina Christos!’ that is, ‘O Lord God, have mercy upon us!’... It pleased God to hear us sinners; for as we returned homeward, there came so many of them (the locusts) behind us, that it seemed they would break our heads and our shoulders; they struck us so hard,* that they seemed to be blows of stones and of staves; and went from this part towards the sea. The men, women, and children which stayed in the town were gotten up to the roofs of the houses, praising God, because the locusts began to depart and fly before us, and part of them followed after us. In the meanwhile arose a great storm and thunder towards the sea, which came right against them, and lasted three hours, with an exceeding great shower and tempest which filled all the rivers: and when the water ceased, it was a dreadful thing to behold the locusts, which we measured to be above two fathoms high upon the banks of the rivers, and in some rivers there were exceeding great mountains of them, in such wise that on the next morning there was not one of them found alive upon the ground.” (Purchas his Pilgrimes, p. 1046-7.)

Out of numerous other illustrations we can only afford room for another from De Tott, who states that he often saw the shores of the Black Sea, towards the Bosphorus of Thrace, covered with the dried remains of locusts, in such multitudes that one could not walk along the strand without sinking half leg deep into a bed of their skinny skeletons. He had opportunities of observing the true cause of this destruction, being witness to their ruin by a storm which overtook them so near the shore that their bodies were cast upon the land while yet entire. This produced so great an infection that it was several days before they could be approached.

CHAPTER III.

1 God’s judgments against the enemies of his people. 9 God will be known in his judgment. 18 His blessing upon the church.

FOR, behold, in those days, and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem,

2 I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land.

3 And they have cast lots for my people; and have given a boy for an harlot, and sold a girl for wine, that they might drink.

4 Yea, and what have ye to do with me,

O Tyre, and Zidon, and all the coasts of Palestine? will ye render me a recompence? and if ye recompense me, swiftly and speedily will I return your recompence upon your own head;

6 The children also of Judah and the children of Jerusalem have ye sold unto ‘the Grecians, that ye might remove them far from their border.

7 Behold, I will raise them out of the place whither ye have sold them, and will return your recompence upon your own head:

11 Assemble yourselves, and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves together round about: thither ⁶cause thy mighty ones to come down, O LORD.

16 The LORD also shall ¹⁰roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake: but the LORD will be the ¹¹hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel.

17 So shall ye know that I am the LORD your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be ¹²holy, and there shall no ¹³strangers pass through her any more.

18 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the mountains shall ¹⁴drop down new wine, and the hills shall flow with milk, and all the rivers of Judah ¹⁵shall flow with waters, and a fountain shall come forth of the house of the LORD, and shall water the valley of Shittim.

19 Egypt shall be a desolation, and Edom shall be a desolate wilderness, for the violence against the children of Judah, because they have shed innocent blood in their land.

Verse 2. "The valley of Jehoshaphat."—The word Jehoshaphat, which gave a name to the famous king of Judah, means "the judgment of Jehovah:" and hence a question arises, whether the valley here mentioned is to be understood as taking the word as a proper name, after this king, or should be rendered "the valley of the Lord's judgment." On this point interpreters are divided; as also on—whether a particular valley is definitively indicated, or that the expression is to be figuratively understood. We are very strongly of opinion that the word is not to be understood here as a proper name, that no particular valley is pointed out, and, consequently, that the expression is figurative. However, a great weight of authority, Jewish, Christian, and Mohammedan, supports the opposite alternative, and points definitively to the so-called "valley of Jehoshaphat," near Jerusalem, as the subject of this reference. Why it got this name, nobody can tell—whether because Jehoshaphat erected some building, did some work, gained some victory, or was buried, in the valley. Possibly the name was imposed on the valley posterior to the time of Joel, from the notion that he referred to the particular valley by this name. We have already mentioned that the valley in question is that to the east of the city, between it and the Mount of Olives, being that through which the Kedron flows, and hence sometimes called the valley of Kedron. Some extend the denomination to the whole length of this valley, while others restrict it to the lower or southern part of it, where its expansion is greatest. It is noticed by most travellers. Sandys thus speaks of it: "The valley of Jehoshaphat (so called of that good king) from hence extendeth full north, and then inclineth a little to the west, first presenting (though natural) no other than a large dry ditch to the east of the city, contracted between it and the over-peering hills of the opposite Olivet. It is said to be two miles long; and if it be so, but short ones; where broadest, fruitful; watered by the torrent Kidron, which runneth no longer than fed with showers, losing his intermitted streams in the lake Asphaltia. It was also called the valley of the Kedron, and of the King; where the general judgment shall be, if the Jews or Latins may be believed; who ground their opinions upon the prophecy of Joel: which I will not gainsay, for some of our own divines have of late so laboured to approve it. Of the same opinion are the Mohametans. In the wall above it, there is a window, not far from the golden gate: where they say that Mahomet shall sit while Christ shall execute justice." Maundrell, and other later travellers, notice in the place of this window, "a short end of a pillar, jutting out of the wall," as marking the place which the Moslems suppose Mohammed shall occupy at the day of judgment. This tradition of the Mohammedans is differently reported—some making Mohammed himself the judge, and others as an assessor with Christ, who shall sit enthroned on Olivet to judge the multitudes assembled in the vale below. But the Jerusalem Moslems must have founded this notion on the traditions of the Jews and Christians, as it is not one of the general doctrines of the sect, and is incompatible with what those doctrines teach. We cannot find it in the Koran, in the Book of Traditions, or in Jalal-Addin's 'History of the Temple.'

The valley is now for the most part a rocky flat, with a few patches of earth here and there. The western side is formed by the high chalk cliff supporting the city wall, and the opposite side by the declivities of the Mount of Olives and that of Offence. It was evidently a burial-place of the ancient Jews, from the number of old sepulchral remains and excavations which it offers, and which the Jews have had neither the means nor power to execute since their own desolation. That it was the cemetery of their fathers, and that they here expect the final judgment to take place, is a sufficient inducement to them to desire to lay their bones in this valley. For this reason many of the more devout Hebrews resort to Jerusalem from all parts of the world, to die there, and to be buried in the valley of Jehoshaphat. For the privilege of interment in this venerated spot, immense prices are often paid to the exacting Turks, and not seldom a grave is stolen in the solitude and darkness of the night. The modern Jews content themselves for the most part with placing Hebrew inscriptions on small upright slabs of marble, or of common limestone, raised after the manner generally in use in the East. Many of these are broken—many fallen; and altogether the scene offers a most desolate and melancholy appearance. "From the stillness of Jerusalem," says Chateaubriand, "whence no smoke arises and no noise proceeds—from the solitude of these hills where no living creature is seen,—from the ruinous state of all the tombs, overthrown, broken, and half open, one might imagine that the trumpet of judgment had already sounded, and that the valley of Jehoshaphat was about to render up its dead" (vol. ii. p. 39). CHAPTER I.

¹ Amos sheweth God's judgment upon Syria, 6 upon the Philistine's, 9 upon Tyrus, 11 upon Edom, 13 upon Ammon.

HE words of Amos, who was among the herdmen of Tekoa, which he saw concerning Israel in the days of Uzziah king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash king of Israel, two years before the earthquake.

2 And he said, The LORD will ²roar from Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the habitations of the shepherds shall mourn, and the top of Carmel shall wither.

3 Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of Damascus, ³and for four, I will not ⁴turn away the punishment thereof; because they have threshed Gilead with threshing instruments of iron:

4 But I will send a fire into the house of Hazael, which shall devour the palaces of Ben-hadad.

5 I will break also the bar of Damascus, and cut off the inhabitant from ⁵the plain of Aven, and him that holdeth the sceptre from ⁶the house of Eden: and the people of Syria shall go into captivity unto Kir, saith the LORD.

6 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of ⁷Gaza, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they ⁸carried away captive the whole captivity, to deliver them up to Edom:

7 But I will send a fire on the wall of Gaza, which shall devour the palaces thereof:

8 And I will cut off the inhabitant from Ashdod, and him that holdeth the sceptre from Ashkelon, and I will turn mine hand against Ekron: and the remnant of the Philistines shall perish, saith the Lord God.

9 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of Tyrus, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they delivered up the whole captivity to Edom, and remembered not ⁹the brotherly covenant:

10 But I will send a fire on the wall of Tyrus, which shall devour the palaces thereof.

11 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of Edom, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because he did pursue his brother with the sword, and ¹⁰did cast off all pity, and his anger did tear perpetually, and he kept his wrath for ever:

12 But I will send a fire upon Teman, which shall devour the palaces of Bozrah.

13 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of the children of Ammon, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they have ¹¹ripped up the women with child of Gilead, that they might enlarge their border:

14 But I will kindle a fire in the wall of Rabbah, and it shall devour the palaces thereof, with shouting in the day of battle, with a tempest in the day of the whirlwind:

15 And their king shall go into captivity, he and his princes together, saith the LORD.

AMOS.—In the first verse, Amos describes himself as of Tekoa, a town in the tribe of Judah (see 2 Sam. xv. 2): but as in ch. vii., we find him prophesying at Bethel, it appears that he went into the land of Israel to deliver his prophecies relating to the ten tribes, if he did not commonly reside there. As on this occasion, when his presence at Bethel is intimated, he is warned by Amaziah, the priest of Bethel, to retire into the land of Judah and prophesy there, this may seem equivalent to telling him to go home again; and thus confirm the impression, given by the introductory verse, that he was of the tribe of Judah. From the passage mentioned, however, a contrary inference has been deduced, by Calmet and others, who suppose that he was of Israel, and went to Tekoa when warned to withdraw into Judah by Amaziah, and hence that the first verse describes him as resident at Tekoa, not as being a native of the place; and this notion is supposed to receive confirmation from the almost exclusive reference of the prophecies of Amos to the ten tribes. We have, however, very little hesitation in considering the first explanation the most probable of the two.

Amos particularly informs us concerning his condition of life. He was a herdsman and shepherd, and a gatherer (or cultivator) of sycamore fruit (ch. i. 1; vii. 14): he was not a prophet, neither a prophet's son (vii. 14), by which we are doubtless to understand that he had not been brought up in those "schools of the prophets" which appear to have been founded by Samuel (see 1 Sam. x. 5), and the students in which were called "prophets," and "sons of the prophets." It was not from these colleges, but from the sheepfolds, that the Lord called him to prophesy. We have no other information concerning the life or death of this prophet: but a doubtful tradition, preserved by the Pseudo-Epiphanius, states that he was often beaten and buffeted by Amaziah, the priest at Bethel, whose son at last drove a nail into his temples, upon which he was carried, alive, into his own country, where he died and was buried in the sepulchre of his fathers at Tekoa. The following is what Bishop Lowth says with respect to the style of Amos:—

"Jerome calls Amos 'rude in speech, but not in knowledge;' applying to him what St. Paul modestly professes of himself (2 Cor. xi. 6). Many have followed the authority of Jerome in speaking of this prophet, as if he were indeed quite rude, ineloquent, and destitute of all the embellishments of composition. The matter is however far otherwise. Let any person who has candour and perspicuity enough to judge, not from the man, but from his writings, open the volume of his predictions, and I think he will agree with me, that our shepherd 'is not a whit behind the very chief of the prophets.' He will agree that as in sublimity and magnificence he is almost equal to the greatest, so in splendour of diction and elegance of expression he is scarcely inferior to any. The same celestial Spirit indeed actuated Isaiah and Daniel in the court, and Amos in the sheepfold, constantly selecting such interpreters of the Divine will as were best adapted to the occasion, and sometimes 'from the mouth of babes and sucklings perfecting praise:' occasionally employing the natural eloquence of some, and occasionally making others eloquent."

Verse 1. "Two years before the earthquake."—This earthquake appears to have been a well known and marked event of this period. Many years after, it was referred to by Zechariah (xiv. 5), as a terrible calamity which happened in the time of Uzziah; and Lowth thinks it is also alluded to in Isa. v. 25. The Jewish writers, including Josephus, and after them, many Christian commentators, assign this to an earthquake which they allege to have attended the attempt of this king to burn incense upon the golden altar (2 Chron. xxvi. 16). Josephus says, that on this occasion a great earthquake shook the ground, and a rent was made in the temple, through which the bright rays of the sun shone in upon the king's face, and made apparent the leprosy which was upon him. At the same time, at a place called Eroge, before the city on the west, the mountain was rent, and one half fell and rolled itself four furlongs, stopping at the foot of the east mountains, so that the road and the royal gardens were spoiled by the obstruction. This is not mentioned in the Scriptural narrative of the event; which does however mention the occurrence of an earthquake in the time of Uzziah. It is possible that the real earthquake was such, substantially, as Josephus describes, but that he erroneously connects it with the sacrilege of Uzziah. It is perfectly clear that the earthquake mentioned by Amos must have been earlier than the latter transaction; for this prophecy, "two years before the earthquake," was delivered in the lifetime of Jeroboam II., king of Israel. This king died in the fifteenth of Uzziah, and constantly the earthquake could not have been later than the seventeenth of the same reign, and may have been considerably sooner. But Uzziah reigned in all fifty-two years, and his sacrilegious attempt was made toward the end of his reign, as appears from the circumstance that, then becoming a leper, the regency was assumed by his son; and as this son was but twenty-five years old at the demise of his father (2 Chron. xxvii. 1), he was so far from being in a condition to act as regent at the latest date assignable to the earthquake of Amos, that he was not born till ten years later. It is therefore quite evident that the earthquake mentioned in Scripture, and the sacrilege of Uzziah, are events between which there was an interval of many years.

3. "For three transgressions . . . and for four."—Houbigant renders this frequent expression by,—"After three transgressions of Damascus, I will not bear that which was the fourth; because," &c. This certainly produces a clear meaning; but it seems better to understand the phrase as a colloquial expression of plurality, equivalent to "many." The meaning would therefore be correctly conveyed by translating, "For the repeated transgressions of Damascus," &c. A similar form of expression occurs in the Greek and Latin poets; as in Homer (Odys. v. 306), repeated by Virgil (Æn. i. 98.), where he makes Æneas exclaim—

—"O terque quaterque beati!"
O thrice and four times happy!

5. "I will break also the bar of Damascus."—Here we have the singular "bar" for the plural "bars"—meaning the gates and fortifications of Damascus. Hewlett, in illustration, aptly notices that one of the city gates of London is still called "Temple-bar;" another entrance was called "Holborn-bars;" and a third, "Smithfield-bars."

CHAPTER II.

1 God's wrath against Moab, 4 upon Judah, 6 and upon Israel. 9 God complaineth of their unthankfulness.

THUS saith the LORD; For three transgressions of Moab, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because he 'burned the bones of the king of Edom into lime:

2 But I will send a fire upon Moab, and it shall devour the palaces of Kirioth: and Moab shall die with tumult, with shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet:

3 And I will cut off the judge from the midst thereof, and will slay all the princes thereof with him, saith the LORD.

4 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of Judah, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they have despised the law of the LORD, and have not kept his commandments, and their lies caused them to err, after the which their fathers have walked:

5 But I will send a fire upon Judah, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem.

6 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; for three transgressions of Israel, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because ²they sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes;

7 That pant after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor, and turn aside the way of the meek: and a man and his father will go in unto the same ³maid, to profane my holy name:

8 And they lay themselves down upon clothes laid to pledge by every altar, and they drink the wine of ⁴the condemned in the house of their god.

9 ¶ Yet destroyed I the ⁵Amorite before them, whose height was like the height of the cedars, and he was strong as the oaks; yet I destroyed his fruit from above, and his roots from beneath.

10 Also ⁶I brought you up from the land of Egypt, and led you forty years through the wilderness, to possess the land of the Amorite.

11 And I raised up of your sons for prophets, and of your young men for Nazarites. Is it not even thus, O ye children of Israel? saith the LORD.

12 But ye gave the Nazarites wine to drink; and commanded the prophets, ⁷saying, Prophecy not.

13 Behold, ⁸I am pressed under you, as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves.

14 Therefore the flight shall perish from the swift, and the strong shall not strengthen his force, neither shall the mighty deliver ⁹himself:

15 Neither shall he stand that handleth the bow; and he that is swift of foot shall not deliver himself: neither shall he that rideth the horse deliver himself.

16 And he that is ¹⁰courageous among the mighty shall flee away naked in that day, saith the LORD.

⁷ Heb. his soul, or life.

¹⁰ Heb. strong of his heart.

Verse 1. "He burned the bones of the king of Edom into lime."—This does not perhaps mean any more than that the body of the king of Edom was treated with much indignity—burned till the bones became like lime. That the burnt bones were actually made into lime, and used by the king of Moab to plaster his palace, is, however, the interpretation suggested by the Targum and some of the Rabbins. This interpretation seems to be derived from the fact, that the original word (ṭṭṭ), rendered lime, equally means plaster. Bones, when reduced to ashes, contain eighty parts, out of one hundred, of phosphate of lime; and if the Rabbinical explanation be correct, it might suggest one of the uses to which bones were in those times employed. If bones were used to make plaster, those of animals [were doubtless employed for the purpose; and the barbarous act of the king of Moab would, under this view, seem to be, that he insulted the remains of the king of Edom, by burning down his bones for plaster with those of brute animals.

6. "For a pair of shoes," or "sandals;" which appears to have been a proverbial expression, as it still is in the East, to denote anything of trifling and inadequate value. The passage refers to the conduct of corrupt judges in accepting bribes from parties interested in the cause before them, and deciding unjustly in favour of the wealthier suitor. Such practices are still most notoriously common in the East.

CHAPTER III.

1 The necessity of God's judgment against Israel. 9 The publication of it, with the causes thereof.

HEAR this word that the LORD hath spoken against you, O children of Israel, against the whole family which I brought up from the land of Egypt, saying,

2 You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will ¹punish you for all your iniquities.

3 Can two walk together, except they be agreed?

4 Will a lion roar in the forest, when he hath no prey? will a young lion cry out of his den, if he have taken nothing?

5 Can a bird fall in a snare upon the earth, where no gin is for him? shall one take up a snare from the earth, and have taken nothing at all?

6 Shall a trumpet be blown in the city, and the people not be afraid? shall there be evil in a city, and the LORD hath not done it?

7 Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.

8 The lion hath roared, who will not fear? the Lord God hath spoken, who can but prophesy?

9 ¶ Publish in the palaces at Ashdod, and in the palaces in the land of Egypt, and say, Assemble yourselves upon the mountains of Samaria, and behold the great tumults in the midst thereof, and the oppressed in the midst thereof.

10 For they know not to do right, saith the LORD, who store up violence and robbery in their palaces.

11 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; An adversary there shall be even round about the land; and he shall bring down thy strength from thee, and thy palaces shall be spoiled.

12 Thus saith the LORD; As the shepherd taketh out of the mouth of the lion two legs, or a piece of an ear; so shall the children of Israel be taken out that dwell in Samaria in the corner of a bed, and in Damascus in a couch.

13 Hear ye, and testify in the house of Jacob, saith the Lord God, the God of hosts, 14 That in the day that I shall visit the transgressions of Israel upon him I will also visit the altars of Beth-el: and the horns of the altar shall be cut off, and fall to the ground.

15 And I will smite the winter house with the summer house; and the houses of ivory shall perish, and the great houses shall have an end, saith the LORD.

² Heb. give forth his voice.

³ Or, not run together.

⁴ Or, and shall not the LORD do somewhat?

⁵ Or, oppressions.

⁶ Or, spoil.

⁷ Heb. delivereth.

⁸ Or, on the bed's feet.

⁹ Or, punish Israel for.

Verse 12. "As the shepherd taketh out of the mouth of the lion two legs, or a piece of an ear."—An explanation of this may be derived from a comparison of Gen. xxxi. 39, with Exod. xxii. 13; from which we learn that when a flock was entrusted to a shepherd or other person, he was expected to make good the loss of any sheep "torn of beasts," unless he produced the torn carcase, or part of it, in evidence of the circumstance; and hence, of course, when the flock was attacked by a wild beast, the shepherd was anxious to secure so much of the torn remains as might furnish sufficient proof to the owner that his property had not been improperly disposed of by the shepherd. There is something of a similar test required in Persia of those who have in their hands any of the king's horses. These animals are marked on the near thigh; and when one of them dies, the holder cuts out the piece of skin bearing the mark, with a portion of the flesh adhering to it, and takes it to the proper officer, who then blots the horse from the royal register, after the person who had it has sworn that the animal died a natural death, and not from any want of care. He then stands exonerated, and another horse is given to him. It is said that the officers of the stables are able to discover, by steeping the piece in water for a few hours, whether the animal died from hunger, hard work, or violence. (Chardin, tome iii. pp. 372-3. Langles's edition.)

"The corner of a bed."—The corner has already been noticed as the place of honour in the East. By the word rendered "bed," a divan or low sofa, on which the Orientals usually sit, is probably to be understood. See the notes on Deut. iii. 11, and 2 Sam. iv. 5.

CHAPTER IV.

1 He reproveth Israel for oppression, 4 for idolatry, 6 and for their incorrigibleness.

HEAR this word, ye kine of Bashan, that are in the mountain of Samaria, which oppress the poor, which crush the needy, which say to their masters, Bring, and let us drink.

2 The Lord God hath sworn by his holiness, that, lo, the days shall come upon you, that he will take you away with hooks, and your posterity with fishhooks.

3 And ye shall go out at the breaches, every cow at that which is before her; and ye shall cast them into the palace, saith the LORD.

4 ¶ Come to Beth-el, and transgress; at Gilgal multiply transgression; and bring your sacrifices every morning, and your tithes after ²three years:

5 And ³offer a sacrifice of thanksgiving with leaven, and proclaim and publish the free offerings: for 'this liketh you, O ye children of Israel, saith the Lord God.

6 ¶ And I also have given you cleanness of teeth in all your cities, and want of bread in all your places: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

7 And also I have withholden the rain from you, when there were yet three months to the harvest: and I caused it to rain upon one city, and caused it not to rain upon another city: one piece was rained upon, and the piece whereupon it rained not withered.

8 So two or three cities wandered unto one city, to drink water; but they were not satisfied: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

9 I have smitten you with blasting and mildew: ⁴when your gardens and your vineyards and your fig trees and your olive trees increased, the palmerworm devoured them: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

10 I have sent among you the pestilence 'after the manner of Egypt: your young men have I slain with the sword, 'and have taken away your horses; and I have made the stink of your camps to come up unto your nostrils: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

11 I have overthrown some of you, as God overthrew 'Sodom and Gomorrah, and ye were as a firebrand plucked out of the burning: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

12 Therefore thus will I do unto thee, O Israel: and because I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel.

12 For, lo, he that formeth the 'mountains, and createth the 'wind, and declareth unto man what is his thought, that maketh the morning darkness, and treadeth upon the high places of the earth, The LORD, The God of hosts, is his name.

⁶ Or, in the way.

⁸ Gen. 19. 24, 25.

⁹ Or, spirit.

Verse 6. "Cleanness of teeth."—A 'proverbial expression to express famine, derived from the general, rather than a particular observation, that things remain clean when unused. The famine, if any one in particular be alluded to, may be that mentioned in 2 Kings viii.

11. "As a firebrand plucked out of the burning."—This is a proverbial expression several times repeated in Scripture, denoting a narrow escape from imminent danger. The same figure, in the same signification, was also employed by the heathen writers.

CHAPTER V.

1 A lamentation for Israel. 4 An exhortation to repentance.
21 God rejecteth their hypocritical service.

HEAR ye this word which I take up against you, even a lamentation, O house of Israel.

2 The virgin of Israel is fallen; she shall no more rise: she is forsaken upon her land; there is none to raise her up.

3 For thus saith the Lord God; The city that went out by a thousand shall leave an hundred, and that which went forth by an hundred shall leave ten, to the house of Israel.

4 ¶ For thus saith the LORD unto the house of Israel, Seek ye me, and ye shall live:

5 But seek not 'Beth-el, nor enter into Gilgal, and pass not to Beer-sheba: for Gilgal shall surely go into captivity, and Beth-el shall come to nought.

6 Seek the LORD, and ye shall live; lest he break out like fire in the house of Joseph, and devour it, and there be none to quench it in Beth-el.

7 Ye who turn judgment to wormwood, and leave off righteousness in the earth,

8 Seek him that maketh the 'seven stars and Orion, and turneth the shadow of death into the morning, and maketh the day dark with night: that ¹calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth: The LORD is his name:

9 That strengtheneth the 'spoiled against the strong, so that the spoiled shall come against the fortress.

10 They hate him that rebuketh in the gate, and they abhor him that speaketh uprightly.

11 Forasmuch therefore as your treading is upon the poor, and ye take from him burdens of wheat: 'ye have built houses of hewn stone, but ye shall not dwell in them; ye have planted 'pleasant vineyards, but ye shall not drink wine of them.

12 For I know your manifold transgressions and your mighty sins; they afflict the just, they take 'a bribe, and they turn aside the poor in the gate from their right.

13 Therefore the prudent shall keep silence in that time; for it is an evil time.

14 Seek good, and not evil, that ye may live; and so the LORD, the God of hosts, shall be with you, as ye have spoken.

15 'Hate the evil, and love the good, and establish judgment in the gate: it may be that the LORD God of hosts will be gracious unto the remnant of Joseph.

16 Therefore the LORD, the God of hosts, the Lord, saith thus; Wailing shall be in all streets; and they shall say in all the highways, Alas! alas! and they shall call the husbandman to mourning, and such as are skilful of lamentation to wailing.

17 And in all vineyards shall be wailing: for I will pass through thee, saith the LORD.

18 'Woe unto you that desire the day of the LORD! to what end is it for you? the day of the LORD is darkness, and not light.

19 As if a man did flee from a lion, and a bear met him; or went into the house, and leaned his hand on the wall, and a serpent bit him.

Verse 8. "The seven stars and Orion."—כִּמָּה וְכֶסֶל Kemah and Kesil; concerning both of which see the notes on Job xxxviii.

16. "Call . . . such as are skilful of lamentation to wailing."—This doubtless alludes to the mourning women, of whom we have already spoken, particularly under Jer. ix. The pictorial illustration which we now introduce affords an interesting practical commentary on the custom. The scene is a Turkish cemetery. The women, at the grave of one lately interred, are professional mourners, as appears by their tambourines, which form the proper instruments and badges of their calling. They could not be introduced so characteristically as among the graves; and their presence there is explained by the fact, that, although the more proper sphere of their vocation is to mourn over the uninterred corpse, and while following it to the tomb, yet they also often accompany the chief female mourner in the daily visits which she pays to the grave during the seven first days of mourning, and sometimes go alone to mourn over the grave, when she is absolutely unable to attend.

19. "Leaned his hand on the wall, and a serpent bit him."—The smaller serpents in the East delight to harbour in the old walls of houses, and particularly of dark chambers, to which they obtain easy access, as the doors hang loosely, and the windows are often mere wooden lattices without glass. In such situations they will remain and increase, unless extirpated; and their extirpation from such places is the principal vocation of the serpent-charmer, who in some respects answers to the rat-catcher of Europe. It is particularly common to find serpents, and also scorpions, in houses or rooms that have remained for any time unoccupied; and the new occupants are obliged to be careful. Under these circumstances such accidents as that to which the prophet refers are by no means uncommon.

26. "Ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chiun," &c.—This is a very difficult verse, the full investigation of which, or even a mere statement of the different views which have been taken of its contents, would take far more room than we can afford, or should consider to be profitably occupied. A few observations, however, as to the nature of the act here condemned, and the time in which it was committed, may not be misapplied; and these happen to be the most important points, as well as the clearest, and those which involve the least discussion.

It may be necessary, first, to premise that the clauses of this verse have, under different theories, been supposed all to refer to one and the same idol, Moloch; or to two, Moloch and Chiun; or to three, the two thus named, and another, unnamed, in "the star of your god," or, as some would prefer, "your star god." In connection with this, the following are the principal alternatives of translation. 1. As in our version; 2. "Ye bore the tabernacle of your Moloch, and the star of your god Chiun" (Newcome, Boothroyd, &c.)—a version which supposes that confusion in the Hebrew text has been produced by transposition, and attempts to restore the supposed correct reading; 3. "Ye bore the tabernacle of your Moloch (or king), the car of your idols, the star of your god" (Calmet, Gesenius, &c.). The difference in this is produced chiefly by the understanding of Chiun (כִּיּוֹן) not as a proper name, but as denoting the carriage in which the idol was borne; and certainly this explanation does make the clause agree best with the one which precedes and that which follows. If but one idol be understood, that one is of course Moloch; if more than one, the attempt to identify the others involves a most unprofitable discussion, which we shall avoid.

It is generally agreed that the act with which the prophet reproaches the Hebrews, consisted in carrying or drawing about, in solemn procession or during a march, the shrine, car, or portable temple, containing the image of the idol, or some idolatrous symbol, or it might be the tent or tabernacle of the idol god, which was carried from place to place, and pitched for the idol's reception. The interpretation which rejects "Chiun" as a proper name, would suggest both a car for the march of the idol, and a tent for his reception. However, it is supposed that a car, or receptacle of some kind or other, is intended; and nothing can be more probable, as we know that in whatever nation, ancient or modern, the worship or reverence of images is found, it has been and is customary to carry about some principal idols on solemn festival occasions, under a canopy, in cars or chariots, or upon the shoulders of men. How magnificently such affairs are managed by the Hindoos is known to all; and we have introduced a representation of one of their idols' cars, or moveable temples, as a suitable illustration of the general practice, but not certainly of the particular form in which that practice may have been followed by the Hebrews. We may also refer to the curious specimens of a Phœnician car of this kind, for the goddess Astarte, afforded by the ancient coin which we have engraved under 2 Chron. xv. We also know that not only were the images of idols thus carried about in procession on festival occasions, but that they were sometimes conveyed about in armies with much state and ceremony. That the idolatrous Hebrews had the custom of carrying their idols about, is clear from other passages; and it is possible they may have taken it from the Egyptians, among whom it existed in remote time, as attested not only by ancient writers, but from the evidence of existing paintings and sculptures. And this derivation of the practice may seem the more obvious, if we conceive that the circumstance to which the prophet refers occurred during the forty years' wanderings in the desert, when the Hebrews were deeply imbued with the idolatries of Egypt. That it did then occur seems to be very obviously intimated; and is generally allowed, though disputed by some on the ground, chiefly, that so conspicuous an act of idolatry could not have been concealed from Moses, or have been allowed by him. But it is not necessary to contend that they constantly did this during the years of their sojourning: it is enough to suppose that they did so—that they got up idolatrous processions during one or more of those occasions when, in the wilderness, the people turned aside to idols—when, abandoning themselves to the worship of the golden calf, or when drawn into the idolatries of Moab and Midian. Another conjecture has been made, which would allow the act in question to have been continuous and secret. This supposes that the “tabernacle” which was borne by the Hebrews was a small and portable idolatrous symbol, worn about the person, and analogous to the “silver shrines” of Diana, the manufacture of which brought no small gain to the silversmiths of Ephesus.

Verse 4. "That lie upon beds of ivory."—From the description, given in this and the following verses, of the feasts of the Hebrews, it would seem that they had arrived at a somewhat luxurious condition of life in the time of Amos. Such of the usages to which it refers, as have not already been illustrated, we shall hereafter have occasion to notice separately. At present it may suffice to sum up the information it contains:—That the Hebrews reclined at their entertainments upon splendid couches or beds; the guests were anointed with rich ointments or oils; they indulged freely in wine; and were entertained with vocal and instrumental music. All these usages were common in most ancient nations; and nearly all these, and others which may be collected from different passages of Scripture, are still retained in the East. One important exception is the drinking of wine, which is forbidden by the law of Mohammed, and which gives a peculiar character of sobriety, but not dulness, to the most luxurious entertainments of Western Asia, in which the law is not transgressed.

5. "Chant to the sound of the viol."—The word here rendered "viol" is the same as the נבל nebel, which has already been noticed under Ps. xcii. and cviii.

10. "He that burneth him."—This remarkable passage has been incidentally illustrated under Jer. xxxv. 5, and since then, the illustration of this text has been further anticipated by some intimations which have been given in the note on Ezek. xxxii. 22. It will be seen from these notes that we are disposed to contend that the custom of burning the dead was at one time in use among the Hebrews, though perhaps not commonly in use. We are willing to allow, however, that even at this time, when burning appears to have been regarded as an honourable mode of disposing of the remains even of kings, the practice was more generally resorted to when deaths occurred in great numbers, from plague, war, or other circumstances. The prophet is here describing the effects of pestilence. And it appears—from the admission of the Rabbins, that fires were kept burning in the valley of Tophet to consume dead carcasses, for fear of pestilence—that the Hebrews were not ignorant that the mephitic vapours arising from putrescent bodies were favourable to the rise and spread of pestilence. On the subject of this connection an interesting paper was read by Mr. Urquhart at the recent meeting of the British Association at Liverpool, on which occasion Colonel Briggs observed, that the plague was unknown in India, and attributed it to the custom of burning the dead. (Report in 'Athenæum,' Sept. 30, 1837.) If the Hebrews burned their dead, when deaths were numerous, as a measure of precaution for preventing the spread of pestilence, they knew more than is known to the present inhabitants of Syria.

CHAPTER VII.

1 The judgments of the grasshoppers, 4 and of the fire, are diverted by the prayer of Amos. 7 By the wall of a plumbline is signified the rejection of Israel. 10 Amaziah complaineth of Amos. 14 Amos sheweth his calling, 16 and Amaziah's judgment.

Thus hath the Lord God shewed unto me; and, behold, he formed 'grasshoppers in the beginning of the shooting up of the latter growth; and, lo, it was the latter growth after the king's mowings.

2 And it came to pass, that when they had made an end of eating the grass of the land, then I said, O Lord God, forgive, I beseech thee: by ³whom shall Jacob arise? for he is small.

3 The LORD repented for this: It shall not be, saith the LORD.

4 ¶ Thus hath the Lord God shewed unto me: and, behold, the Lord God called to contend by fire, and it devoured the great deep, and did eat up a part.

5 Then said I, O Lord God, cease, I beseech thee: by whom shall Jacob arise? for he is small.

6 The LORD repented for this: This also shall not be, saith the Lord God.

² Or, who of (or, for) Jacob shall stand?

7 ¶ Thus he shewed me: and, behold, the Lord stood upon a wall made by a plumbline, with a plumbline in his hand.

8 And the Lord said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, A plumbline. Then said the Lord, Behold, I will set a plumbline in the midst of my people Israel: I will not again pass by them any more:

9 And the high places of Isaac shall be desolate, and the sanctuaries of Israel shall be laid waste; and I will rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword.

10 ¶ Then Amaziah the priest of Beth-el sent to Jeroboam king of Israel, saying, Amos hath conspired against thee in the midst of the house of Israel: the land is not able to bear all his words.

11 For thus Amos saith, Jeroboam shall die by the sword, and Israel shall surely be led away captive out of their own land.

12 Also Amaziah said unto Amos, O thou seer, go, flee thee away into the land of Judah, and there eat bread, and prophesy there:

13 But prophesy not again any more at Beth-el: for it is the king's 'chapel, and it is the 'king's court.

14 ¶ Then answered Amos, and said to Amaziah, I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son; but I was an herdman, and a gatherer of 'sycamore fruit:

15 And the Lord took me 'as I followed the flock, and the Lord said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel.

16 ¶ Now therefore hear thou the word of the Lord: Thou sayest, Prophesy not against Israel, and 'drop not thy word against the house of Isaac.

17 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Thy wife shall be an harlot in the city, and thy sons and thy daughters shall fall by the sword, and thy land shall be divided by line; and thou shalt die in a polluted land: and Israel shall surely go into captivity forth of his land.

Verse 1. "Grasshoppers."—See the note on Nahm iii. 17.

"The latter growth after the king's mowings."—It is difficult to understand this, without supposing that the first growth of grass, in certain common pastures, was appropriated to the king's cattle; and if so, we have another instance of those severe regal exactions which Samuel foretold to the Hebrews when they were so anxious to have a king "to rule them like the nations." If we suppose the first growth was for the king's horses, we then obtain a good reason for that growth being preferred, as it is usual to turn the horses out to grass in about the month of March, when the grass is pretty well grown up, and it is at this time only that they are fed with it. The after-growth appears to have been left to the people; and this was consumed by the "grasshoppers." The original word, rendered "mowings," means as well eating or feeding down, as cutting down; and the former sense would seem preferable, as it is not usual to cut down grass or to make hay in the East.

14. "Sycamore fruit."—The fig-sycamore tree and its fruit have been noticed under 1 Kings x., with an allusion to the present text, illustrating the probable employment of Amos.

We are now enabled to introduce a representation of the fruit, referring to the above note for explanatory particulars.

Sycamore Figs (Ficus sycomorus).

Verse 5. "The flood of Egypt."—This is an interesting allusion to the annual overflowing of the Nile, by which the land is poetically represented as being "drowned." This inundation has been noticed under Exod. vii. 15.

6. "Buildeth his stories in the heaven," &c.—Harmer collects from Jer. xxii. 13, 14, that the chief and most ornamented apartments in the palace which Jehoiakim set himself to build were upper chambers. He adds, from Russell, "The chief rooms of the houses of Aleppo at this day are those above; the ground floor being there chiefly made use of for their horses and servants. Perhaps the prophet Amos referred to this circumstance when he spoke of the heavens as God's chambers, the most noble and splendid apartments of the palace of God, and where his presence is chiefly manifested; and the bundle or collection of its offices, its numerous little mean apartments, the divisions of this earth." ('Observations,' vol. i. p. 344.) What is here said of the houses in Aleppo is equally true in other Oriental towns, all the state rooms and apartments occupied by the family being above ground, while the ground floor is occupied by store-rooms, kitchens, and servants' offices and apartments.

13. "The plowman shall overtake the reaper," &c.—Similar expressions occur in Lev. xxvi. 5, and appear to be used as poetical terms to denote the copiousness and long continuance of the harvest and vintage. Harmer thinks that the expressions involve the intimation that the vintage and harvest should not be gathered in an immature condition, as is now, and probably was then, often necessary from fear of the Arabs and others, who are in the habit of committing ruinous depredations upon the ripened fruits and corn fields. Thus understood, the words of the prophet would express not only abundance, but peace and safety.

"The mountains shall drop sweet wine."—This is a fine poetical expression, denoting the abundance of the vintages—vineyards being usually planted on the declivities of the hills.

OBADIAH.—The Scriptures afford us no information whatever concerning this prophet; and the time in which he lived can only be conjectured from the bearing of his prophecy. The uncertainty concerning the person and history of this prophet has given occasion to a multitude of conjectures, which it is not worth while to repeat, since none of them come to us with the least authority. The opinion most generally entertained by the Jews themselves, that this was the same Obadiah who is so honourably distinguished in the history of Elijah, seems the least probable of any; and some of the more judicious of the Hebrew commentators, as Aben-Ezra and Kimchi, candidly confess that the time and history of the prophet are unknown. However, from the matter of the prophecy, which recites the triumph of the Edomites over the desolation of Israel, and their most unbrotherly conduct on that occasion, and proceeds to pronounce their doom, it is generally concluded by modern writers that Obadiah was the contemporary of Jeremiah and Ezekiel, and delivered this prophecy within the interval of the few years which took place between the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, and the desolation of Edom by the same prince. The object of the prophecy is substantially the same as that in Jer. xlix. 7—22, and it is observable that the early part of the present book abounds in expressions identical with or similar to those found in that prophecy of Jeremiah; on which account, as well as because Edom has already engaged a considerable share of our attention, no further observations will now be offered.

Verse 14. "To cut off those of his that did escape."—On the destruction of Jerusalem many Jews endeavoured to escape into Egypt; and, seeing by what strong enmity the Edomites were actuated, it is exceedingly probable that they did not fail to avail themselves of the facilities which their intermediate position offered for cutting off and destroying numbers of these fugitives.

CHAPTER I.

¹ Jonah, sent to Nineveh, fleeth to Tarshish. ⁴ He is bewrayed by a tempest, 11 thrown into the sea, 17 and swallowed by a fish.

OW the word of the LORD came unto 'Jonah the son of Amittai, saying, ² Arise, go to Nineveh, that ³great city, and cry against it; for their wickedness is come up before me.

³ But Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the LORD, and went down to Joppa; and he found a ship going to Tarshish: so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it, to go with them unto Tarshish from the presence of the LORD.

⁴ ¶ But the LORD ⁵sent out a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship ⁶was like to be broken.

⁵ Then the mariners were afraid, and cried every man unto his god, and cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them. But Jonah was gone down into the sides of the ship; and he lay, and was fast asleep.

⁶ So the shipmaster came to him, and said unto him, What meanest thou, O sleeper? arise, call upon thy God, if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not.

⁷ And they said every one to his fellow, Come, and let us cast lots, that we may know for whose cause this evil is upon us. So they cast lots, and the lot fell upon Jonah.

⁸ Then said they unto him, Tell us, we pray thee, for whose cause this evil is upon us; What is thine occupation? and whence comest thou? what is thy country? and of what people art thou?

⁹ And he said unto them, I am an Hebrew; and I fear the LORD, the God of heaven, which hath made the sea and the dry land.

¹⁰ Then were the men ⁷exceedingly afraid, and said unto him, Why hast thou done this? For the men knew that he fled from the presence of the LORD, because he had told them.

¹¹ ¶ Then said they unto him, What shall we do unto thee, that the sea ⁸may be calm unto us? for the sea ⁹wrought, and was tempestuous.

¹² And he said unto them, Take me up, and cast me forth into the sea; so shall the sea be calm unto you: for I know that for my sake this great tempest is upon you.

¹³ Nevertheless the men ¹⁰rowed hard to bring it to the land; but they could not: for the sea wrought, and was tempestuous against them.

¹⁴ Wherefore they cried unto the LORD, and said, We beseech thee, O LORD, we beseech thee, let us not perish for this man's life, and lay not upon us innocent blood:

JONAH.—FROM THE FRESCOS, BY MICHAEL ANGELO, IN THE SISTINE CHAPEL.

JONAH.—In 2 Kings xiv. 25, there is a notice of this prophet which supplies some information concerning him not to be found in the present book. It states that he was a native of Gath-hepher, a town of Zebulun, in the kingdom of Israel, and in after times a part of Galilee. The remaining information is open to two interpretations. We are told that certain things were done by Jeroboam II., king of Israel, "according to the word of the Lord God of Israel, which he spake by the hand of his servant Jonah." If this means that this word of the Lord was delivered personally to Jeroboam by Jonah, we then learn that he lived in the reign of that monarch, and was contemporary with the earliest of the prophets (Amos and Hosea) whose writings are exhibited in a collected form. But it may be understood that the word of the Lord by Jonah was a prediction delivered by Jonah in a preceding reign, and fulfilled in that of Jeroboam; in which case, he of course becomes more ancient than the earliest of the other prophets whose time can be ascertained. Both explanations have their respective advocates; and we are ourselves disposed to consider that he was earlier, but not considerably earlier, than Amos and Hosea.

We have no authentic information concerning Jonah later than the transaction which the present book records. The probability is that he returned to his own country, and died and was buried there. Such, however, is not the opinion of the people of Mesopotamia; for on one of the mounds which mark the site of ancient Nineveh, a tomb is shown which is alleged to cover the remains of the prophet. But, on the other hand, another tomb of the same prophet, for which similar claims were made, existed even in the time of Jerome, at a place within the tribe of Zebulun, two miles from Sepphoris on the road to Tiberias, which still retained the name of Gath. Benjamin of Tudela, correspondingly, describes the tomb of Jonah, as on a hill near Sepphoris. It is also noticed by Thevenot, who says that the Turks had built a mosque over the sepulchral cave, and held the spot in such high veneration that they would allow no Christian to draw near. The Moslems, indeed, who have a garbled version, in the Koran, of the narrative before us, hold the prophet Jonas in very high consideration. This is perhaps because Mohammed took every occasion to check any disposition which he perceived to speak disparagingly of Jonah, as compared with other prophets, on account of those infirmities of character which his history displays. Thus, in the Book of Traditions, Mohammed is reported to have said, "I do not say that there are any of the prophets better than Yûnas-bin-Matta." And in one tradition it is thus:—"Do not give to some prophets greater excellence than to others." Again,—“It is unworthy of a servant to say, ‘I am better than Jonas the prophet.’” And another tradition has, “Whoever shall say, ‘I am better than Jonas the prophet,’ is a liar.” Most of these were good lessons to self-relying pride, notwithstanding the source from which they came.

Verse 3. "To flee unto Tarshish."—Concerning the place to which Jonah designed to go, opinions have been greatly divided, according to all the varieties of explanation which have been applied to Tarshish in general, and to which we have had former occasions to allude. According to some, it denotes the sea generally; and, accordingly, the Targum suggests that he intended simply to go to sea; and, the Mediterranean being intended, this must of course have led him in an opposite direction to that which he ought to have taken—westward instead of eastward. It is more generally understood, however, that a particular place is intended. Josephus says it was Tarsus, in Cilicia, the birth-place of St. Paul; and Tunis or Carthage in Africa, and Tartessus in Spain, have been offered as other alternatives. To us the last alternative seems as probable as any. The object of Jonah would have led him to desire to take a very distant voyage, in the contrary direction to Nineveh, and these conditions are well answered by Tartessus; besides which we may observe that the people of the ship were manifestly Phœnicians—for they were foreigners and idolaters, and these were the only such men that Jonah was likely to find at Joppa: and that they understood his language also implies that they were not a nation more remotely foreign than the Phœnicians. And it was more likely that Jonah should find at Joppa a Phœnician ship bound to Tartessus than to any of the other places; for Tartessus belonged to them, being an important colonial emporium with which they maintained a constant and extensive intercourse; which is not the case with respect to any of the other places which we have named.

5. "Down into the sides of the ship."—It is easiest to understand this to mean the sleeping-berths, which in the ships of the Phœnicians seem to have been, as they are now, constructed in or against the sides of the ships. We are aware of no evidence that the ancients had in their ships such things as swinging beds, or hammocks.

7. "For whose cause this evil is upon us."—It was a common notion among the ancient mariners, that an extraordinary storm must be attributed to the indignation of the gods against some guilty person on board the ship. This was particularly so when there was anything so unusual or unseasonable in the storm as to suggest the idea of its being supernatural, as was probably the case in the present instance. Under similar circumstances, when the vessel which carried Diagoras was assailed by a storm, the sailors had no difficulty in concluding that it arose principally on account of that philosopher, who was an open professor of atheism.

15. "Cast him forth into the sea."—This was an obvious resource of sailors who became convinced that the storm by which they were endangered was owing to the presence of a particular person. There are other examples of guilty or suspected persons being thrown overboard on such occasions. The hesitation which the present mariners felt as to what they should do to Jonah to make the sea calm, is well illustrated by Archbishop Newcome by the following extract from the Argonautics of Orpheus:—

"And much they doubted in their prudent minds,
Whether to kill, and cast a prey to fishes,
Wretched Medea, and avert their fate."—V. 1168.

In this case they attributed to the presence of Medea the storm by which the Argo was visited.

17. "A great fish."—A great deal of profane witticism has been directed against this statement. On such occasions it has been generally assumed that a whale is to be understood; and then we are told that the circumstance was impossible, since the whale has not a swallow large enough for a man to pass. But the text does not say that the fish was a whale, but only, "a great fish;" and although "a whale" is mentioned in the reference to this passage which our Saviour makes (Matt. xii. 40), the name, particularly as collated with the original, is to be understood not as the name of any one fish, but as a common name for the larger inhabitants of the deep. Until therefore it shall be proved that there is no "great fish" capable of swallowing a man entire, the objection is equally ignorant and puerile. But it has been proved that there are great fishes, particularly some of the shark kind, which are not only capable of swallowing the human body entire, but in whose stomachs entire human bodies have been found. As the animal stomach has no power over substances endued with vitality, a person swallowed alive, and who received no injury from the fish before being swallowed, would necessarily remain alive for a considerable time, unless suffocated in so uncongenial a situation and element. There is, however, one explanation which might allow a whale to be intended, if that fish were known in the Mediterranean—that is, to suppose that the fish did not actually swallow Jonah (and the text does not oblige us to affirm that it did), but detained him in its mouth. If a whale had done this, the prophet would have been less unpleasantly circumstanced than in the stomach of any fish. For the mouth of a common whale, when open, presents a cavity as large as a room, and capable of containing a merchant ship's jolly-boat, full of men, being six or eight feet wide, ten or twelve feet high (in front), and fifteen or sixteen feet long (Scoresby, i. 455). It is perfectly true that difficulties will remain under any explanation; but it is enough to show the circumstance not to be physically impossible; for the remaining difficulties are more than sufficiently met by the miraculous character of the transaction. It was the Lord who "prepared" the great fish: and the Lord of all creatures might exert influences beyond the ordinary course of nature (though it does not appear that they were against nature) to ensure the accomplishment of his Divine purposes. They who undertake to explain every thing in a transaction of this nature, perform a work of very great supererogation. As a whole, the narrative presents fewer difficulties than many of the other miracles recorded in Scripture. The greatest difficulty in it, may be to find by what provision Jonah was preserved from suffocation. And for this it is not necessary to account. "Is anything too hard for the Lord?" And to the Lord it was not harder to preserve Jonah in the belly of the fish, than the three youths at Babylon in the midst of the "burning fiery furnace." They who believe that the Almighty has, at sundry times and in divers manners, exercised powers beyond the ordinary course of the laws which He has appointed to govern nature, will find no difficulties; and those who do not believe this have read the Bible, if they do read it, to little purpose. Our limits do not allow us to investigate the subject more fully; but we may refer the reader to Calmet's 'Dissertation sur Jonas;' the 'Dissertations' in Gleig's edition of Stackhouse; and Bishop Jebb's 'Sacred Literature.'

"Three days and three nights."—This by no means necessarily implies three entire days and nights; but would be true if understood of one complete day, and any part, however small, of two others. Thus our Saviour, who lay in the tomb from Friday evening to Sunday morning, is said to have lain three days and nights in the grave. And that the present text should be similarly understood, is the more probable from the remarkable text in which the Son of Man makes this situation of Jonah a type of his own sojourn for "three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." (Matt. xii. 40.)

CHAPTER II.

1 The prayer of Jonah. 10 He is delivered from the fish.

THEN Jonah prayed unto the LORD his God out of the fish's belly,

2 And said, I 'cried ²by reason of mine affliction unto the LORD, and he heard me; out of the belly of ³hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice.

3 For thou hadst cast me into the deep, in the 'midst of the seas; and the floods compassed me about: all thy billows and thy waves passed over me.

4 Then I said, I am cast out of thy sight; yet I will look again toward thy holy temple.

5 The 'waters compassed me about, even to the soul: the depth closed me round about, the weeds were wrapped about my head.

6 I went down to the 'bottoms of the mountains; the earth with her bars was about me for ever: yet hast thou brought up my life from 'corruption, O LORD my God.

7 When my soul fainted within me I remembered the LORD: and my prayer came in unto thee, into thine holy temple.

8 They that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy.

9 But I will sacrifice unto thee with the voice of 'thanksgiving: I will pay that that I have vowed. 'Salvation is of the LORD.

10 ¶ And the LORD spake unto the fish, and it vomited out Jonah upon the dry land.

CHAPTER III.

1 Jonah, sent again, preacheth to the Ninevites. 5 Upon their repentance, 10 God repenteth.

AND the word of the LORD came unto Jonah the second time, saying,

2 Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee.

3 So Jonah arose, and went unto Nineveh, according to the word of the LORD. Now Nineveh was an 'exceeding great city of three days' journey.

4 And Jonah began to enter into the city a day's journey, and he cried, and said, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.

5 ¶ So the people of Nineveh 'believed God, and proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them.

6 For word came unto the king of Nineveh, and he arose from his throne, and he laid his robe from him, and covered him with sackcloth, and sat in ashes.

7 And he caused it to be proclaimed and 'published through Nineveh by the decree of the king and his 'nobles, saying, Let neither man nor beast, herd nor flock, taste any thing: let them not feed, nor drink water:

8 But let man and beast be covered with sackcloth, and cry mightily unto God: yea, let them turn every one from his evil way, and from the violence that is in their hands.

9 'Who can tell if God will turn and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger, that we perish not?

10 ¶ And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil, that he had said that he would do unto them; and he did it not.

Verse 3. "Nineveh was an exceeding great city of three days' journey."—Opinions are divided whether we are to understand that Nineveh was three days' journey in length, or in circuit. We have never ourselves felt any doubt that the circuit must be intended, as this not only is more probable, but agrees remarkably with the dimensions given by ancient writers. Three days' journey may be taken as giving from fifty to sixty miles, accordingly as we understand a journey on foot, or a caravan journey. This is absolutely incredible as the length of a city; but the different computations of the circuit of Nineveh do actually range between 48 and 60 miles—a very strong and decisive coincidence. The only objection to this conclusion arises from the statement, in the next verse, that Jonah went a day's journey into the city; which has been commonly enough understood to mean that he went a day's journey into the city, till he arrived at a particular public place, where he delivered his message. And be it so; but may not this particular place have been near the opposite extremity of the town to that at which the prophet entered? Or, rather, may we not understand the passage actually to intimate that the city was a day's journey in length, stating that Jonah went through the city, being a day's journey, proclaiming its destruction? Of this it is another remarkable corroboration, that although, according to Diodorus, the city was equal to three days' journey in circuit, its length was not less, but rather more, than a third of the circuit—that is, one day's journey. Had Nineveh been four-square, like Babylon, this could not have been the case; but it was of an oblong figure, 150 stadia in length, by 90 in breadth. We therefore, from this correspondence, conclude that the "three days' journey" of Jonah describes the circuit, and the "one day's journey" the length of Nineveh.

It appears that the city extended its length along the eastern bank of the Tigris, while its breadth reached from the river to the eastern hills. All the ancient writers concur with Jonah in describing Nineveh as an "exceeding great city." But as none of these writers lived till after its destruction, their accounts, derived from old records and reports, are necessarily brief and incomplete. The best account which we possess is that furnished by Diodorus, who states that Ninus, having surpassed all his ancestors in the glory and success of his arms, resolved to build a city, of such state and grandeur, that it should not only be the greatest then in the world, but such as no sovereign coming after him should be easily able to exceed. Accordingly, having brought a vast number of his forces together, and provided the necessary treasure, and every thing which his design required, he built near the Tigris a city very famous for its walls and fortifications. Its length was 150 stadia, its breadth 90, and the circumference 480. Diodorus adds, that the founder was not deceived in his expectations, for no one ever after built a town equal to it for the extent of its circumference and the stateliness of its walls. These were a hundred feet high, and so wide that three chariots might be driven upon them abreast. There were 1500 towers upon the walls, all of them two hundred feet high. Ninus appointed the city to be chiefly inhabited by the richest of the Assyrians; and freely allowed people from other nations to dwell there. He also granted to the citizens a large surrounding territory, and gave his own name, Ninus, to the city. (Diod. ii. 1.) It may be added, that Strabo and other ancient writers say that Nineveh was more extensive than even Babylon. If we compare the dimensions assigned by Diodorus to Nineveh, with those which Herodotus (and Pliny after him) gives to Babylon, this is not true, both having 480 stadia of circumference. But if we take any other measurement of Babylon than that of Herodotus, its circuit becomes ten or twelve miles less than that which Diodorus gives to Nineveh: for Ctesias makes the circumference of Babylon but 360 stadia; Clitarchus, 365; Curtius, 368; and Strabo, 385.

We are not to suppose that the whole of the vast enclosure of Nineveh was built upon. It was no doubt loosely built, with the houses much apart, as at Babylon; and contained extensive plantations, parks, gardens, fields, and open grounds, as did the same city, and as the larger Oriental towns still do.

Such is the substance of our information concerning the ancient Nineveh. It only now remains to notice its desolate site: but it is best to reserve this part of the subject to illustrate the prophecy of Nahum or Zephaniah, who foretold, with remarkable precision, the desolation which that site now exhibits.

7, 8. "Let neither man nor beast...taste any thing...Let man and beast be covered with sackcloth."—Among the Hebrews we find no instance of their extending fasting, and other acts of mourning and humiliation, to their cattle. Something similar, however, may be found in other nations. Homer and some other ancient Greeks authors inform us that when any hero or great warrior died, it was customary to make the horses fast for some time, and to cut off part of their hair. It is also mentioned by Plutarch, that when the Persian general Masistias was slain, the horses and mules of the Persians were shorn as well as themselves. Virgil has a remarkable passage in one of his Eclogues (v. 24), in speaking of the death of Daphnis (Julius Cæsar), which seems illustrative, although we are not sure that it is more than a poetical representation:—

"The swains forgot their sheep, nor near the brink
Of running waters brought their herds to drink;
The thirsty cattle, of themselves, abstain'd
From water, and their grassy fare disdain'd."—DRYDEN.

In Peru and the Canaries, it was usual for the people, in time of great drought, to shut up their animals without food, under the notion that their loud cries and bleating would reach heaven, and prevail with God to send rain.—It should be observed that, in the East, those who fasted abstained from all manner of food until the evening, as is still the custom in the same countries. However the fasting may be extended, we are doubtless to understand that the animals clothed in sackcloth were horses, mules, and camels, which were deprived of their usual caparisons and ornaments, and invested with sackcloth, the attire of mourning; a circumstance which may in some degree be illustrated by our own custom of covering with black cloth or velvet the horses employed at funerals. See Stackhouse (Hist. Bible, ii. 362), Newcome and Hewlett, on this text.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Jonah, repining at God's mercy, 4 is reprov'd by the type of a gourd.

BUT it displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry.

2 And he prayed unto the LORD, and said, I pray thee, O LORD, was not this my saying, when I was yet in my country? Therefore I fled before unto Tarshish: for I knew that thou art a gracious God, and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repentest thee of the evil.

3 Therefore now, O LORD, take, I beseech thee, my life from me; for it is better for me to die than to live.

4 ¶ Then said the LORD, 'Doest thou well to be angry?

5 So Jonah went out of the city, and sat on the east side of the city, and there made him a booth, and sat under it in the shadow, till he might see what would become of the city.

6 And the LORD God prepared a ⁴gourd, and made it to come up over Jonah, that it might be a shadow over his head, to deliver him from his grief. So Jonah 'was exceeding glad of the gourd.

7 But God prepared a worm when the morning rose the next day, and it smote the gourd that it withered.

8 And it came to pass, when the sun did arise, that God prepared a 'vehement east wind; and the sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die, and said, It is better for me to die than to live.

9 And God said to Jonah, 'Doest thou well to be angry for the gourd? And he said, 'I do well to be angry, even unto death.

10 Then said the LORD, Thou hast ¹⁰had pity on the gourd, for the which thou hast not laboured, neither madest it grow; which ¹¹came up in a night, and perished in a night:

JONAH'S GOURD (Ricinus communis).

Verse 6. "Gourd."—קִיקָיוֹן Kikayon; Sept. κολοκυνθη; Vulg. hedera. We see, therefore, that while the Greek version makes the plant a kind of gourd, the Vulgate reckons it a species of ivy. But it would be a waste of time to discuss the merits of these respective versions, when a hint suggested by the similarity between κικι and קִיקָיוֹן leads us at once to the Ricinus communis, or castor-oil tree, which with its broad palmate leaves extends a grateful shade over the parched traveller. It is described by Dioscorides under the name of κικι or cici, as having leaves like those of the Oriental plane-tree, but larger, smoother, and of a deep hue. The stem and branches are hollow, and of rapid growth, though incapable, without the interposition of a miracle, of rising and becoming a shelter in the course of a night. It belongs to the natural order of the Euphorbiaceæ, and is hence related to the Euphorbium, or Spurge and Jatropha, or tapioca-tree. The lively red of the inner threads of the flower gives a pleasing variety to the deep green of the foliage. It grows in all the warmer regions of the old and new continents, and flourishes in the driest soil, among stones and rubbish. The conclusion that this plant is to be identified with the gourd of Jonah is corroborated by local traditions; as well as by the fact that it abounds near the Tigris, where it is not an annual, and grows to a size much more considerable than it is commonly supposed to attain.

11. "Wherein are more than six score thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand."—By these the young children are commonly understood. As these are, in any place, usually reckoned to form one-fifth of the entire population, the result would give 600,000 persons as the population of Nineveh. This is not by any means an extraordinary population for a town of such extent. The case is, indeed, so much otherwise as to show that the great ancient cities of the East covered a vast extent of ground in proportion to their population. And if, to obtain a better comparison, we take these two cities in the largest extent, comprehending their environs, which contain extensive parks, fields, gardens, and open grounds, we shall find that, in 1831, London contained not less than 1,776,500 persons, within a circle with a radius of eight British miles from St. Paul's; and that, in 1829, Paris contained 1,013,000 persons within a circle of equal extent. See Mr. Rickman's Preface to the Population Returns of 1831.

CHAPTER I.

1 Micah sheweth the wrath of God against Jacob for idolatry.
10 He exhorteth to mourning.

THE word of the LORD that came to Micah the Morasthite in the days of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, which he saw concerning Samaria and Jerusalem.

2 ¹Hear, all ye people; ²hearken, O earth, and ³all that therein is: and let the Lord God be witness against you, the Lord from his holy temple.

3 For, behold, ⁴the LORD cometh forth out of his ⁵place, and will come down, and tread upon the ⁶high places of the earth.

4 And ⁷the mountains shall be molten under him, and the valleys shall be cleft, as wax before the fire, and as the waters that are poured down ⁸a steep place.

5 For the transgression of Jacob is all this, and for the sins of the house of Israel. What is the transgression of Jacob? is it not Samaria? and what are the high places of Judah? are they not Jerusalem?

6 Therefore I will make Samaria as an heap of the field, and as plantings of a vineyard: and I will pour down the stones thereof into the valley, and I will discover the foundations thereof.

7 And all the graven images thereof shall be beaten to pieces, and all the hires thereof shall be burned with the fire, and all the idols thereof will I lay desolate: for she gathered it of the hire of an harlot, and they shall return to the hire of an harlot.

8 Therefore I will wail and howl, I will go stripped and naked: I will make a wailing like the dragons, and mourning as the ⁹owls.

9 For ¹⁰her wound is incurable; for it is come unto Judah; he is come unto the gate of my people, even to Jerusalem.

10 ¶ ¹¹Declare ye it not at Gath, weep ye not at all: in the house of ¹²Aphrah ¹³roll thyself in the dust.

11 Pass ye away, ¹⁴thou ¹⁵inhabitant of Saphir, having thy ¹⁶shame naked: the inhabitant of ¹⁷Zaanan came not forth in the mourning of ¹⁸Beth-ezel; he shall receive of you his standing.

12 For the inhabitant of Maroth ¹⁹waited carefully for good: but evil came down from the LORD unto the gate of Jerusalem.

13 O thou inhabitant of Lachish, bind the chariot to the swift beast: she is the beginning of the sin to the daughter of Zion: for the transgressions of Israel were found in thee.

14 Therefore shalt thou give presents ²⁰to Moresheth-gath: the houses of ²¹Achzib shall be a lie to the kings of Israel.

15 Yet will I bring an heir unto thee, O inhabitant of Mareshah: ²²he shall come unto Adullam the glory of Israel.

MICAH.—The time of Micah, as stated in the first verse of his prophecy, shows that he began to prophesy in the times of Amos, Hosea, Joel, and Isaiah; but that he began later than any of them, and continued also later than any except Isaiah and perhaps Hosea. Although a native of the kingdom of Judah, his prophetic mission extended to the other kingdom as well. Some of the old writers unaccountably confound him with Micaiah, the prophet who is so honourably mentioned in the history of Ahab (1 Kings xxii; 2 Chron. xviii.); but who must have lived at least one hundred and thirty years prior to the present prophet. Micah seems to have been a native of Mareshah, which is mentioned in Josh. xv. 44 as one of the towns of Judah “in the valley;” and of which Jerome says, that only the ruins were to be seen in his time, about two miles from Eleutheropolis. The alleged grave of Micah was still, however, shown, over which a church had been erected. Sozomen, in his Ecclesiastical History, says that the body of Micah was found, in the time of Theodosius the Elder, by Zebennus, bishop of Eleutheropolis, at a place which he calls Berathsalia, about ten furlongs from the city, and near which was the prophet’s grave, called by the common people “The Faithful Monument,” perhaps because they also confounded him with the Micaiah of Ahab’s time, and who is reputed to have been slain by that monarch.

The style of Micah is briefly characterised by Bishop Lowth as being “for the most part close, forcible, pointed, and concise; sometimes approaching the obscurity of Hosea; in many parts animated and sublime, and in general poetical.”

Verse 8. “Stripped and naked.”—That is, as having thrown off the outer garment and ornaments, and remaining in the under gown or tunic. This is on several occasions described as “nakedness” in Scripture.

“Mourning as the owls.”—Rather “as the ostriches,” here distinguished by their poetical title, עננה בנות עננה benoth-yaanah, “daughters of screeching.” See the note on Job xxxix. 13, where the elucidation of this name is included in the account given of the bird. We may add from Shaw (p. 455): “During the lonesome part of the night, they often make a very doleful and hideous noise. I have often heard them groan as if they were in the greatest agonies: an action beautifully alluded to by Micah.”

10. “The house of Aphrah.”—The name of Aphrah, and some of the others that follow which do not elsewhere occur in Scripture, have given occasion to some speculation. 1. Some understand them as proper names of towns. 2. Others regard them as significant names, imposed, some upon Samaria and others upon Jerusalem, by the prophet, to give him occasion to apply their meanings to the existing and future condition of those places and their people. 3. Those who translate the words, instead of retaining them as proper names, do not understand them differently from the former. And our own translators leave us the choice of explanations by giving the words as proper names in the text, and translating them in the margin. By consulting the marginal explanations the reader will see the play upon the significations, which is involved: and after having premised the interpretations to which each example is open, we will so far defer to the first as to see what information can be found, on the hypothesis that they are proper names of towns.

The present Aphrah is thought by some to be the same as the Ophrah of Josh. xviii. 23, where it is mentioned as a city of Benjamin; and which in Jerome’s time was a village, then called Effrem, five miles east of Bethel. The mention of Bethel (house of God) gives one occasion to recollect that the nickname Beth-aven (house of vanity), given to that place by the prophets, suggests an example, applicable to the instances before us, of the practice of imposing a nickname—sometimes by only slightly altering the real one—to express the character of the place, or to point the allusion intended to be conveyed. The present example, Beth-aphrah, “House of Dust,” is remarkably analogous.

11. “Saphir.”—The name Shamir occurs, in Josh. xv. 48, as that of a town in the hill country of Judah. That name is read Sophir in the Alexandrian copy of the Septuagint, and is thought by some to be the place intended by the prophet. A place of this name is mentioned by Eusebius and Jerome, as a village in the hilly country between Eleutheropolis and Askelon. Calmet, however, thinks that the prophet may intend the city of Sephora, or Sephoris, in Galilee.

“Zaanan.”—This name is not very different from that of Zenan in Josh. xv. 37; and concerning which we can find no other information than that text conveys, namely, that it was a town “in the valley” of Judah.

“Beth-ezel.”—There might not be much difficulty in supposing this a name for Bethel.

12. “Maroth.”—No place of this name occurs elsewhere. Grotius and some others think that, by a transposition of the m and r, Ramoth may be understood. Of this name, or, in the singular, Ramah, there were several places in Israel and Judah; and if this conjecture be probable, all or the principal of them may be intended by the plural name; but from the connection with Jerusalem, implying vicinity, we should rather be disposed to understand the noted Ramah, a few miles to the north of that metropolis. Hiller’s conjecture, that Jarmuth should be understood, seems to us not very probable.

13. “Lachish.”—This we know to have been one of the strongest fortified towns of Judah; and we are very much disposed to consider that the occurrence of this, and other real and known names of the list, sufficiently indicates that all of them are real names of places, selected by the prophet either on account of their importance in his time, or on account of some special circumstances in the events related or foreseen, or because their names had such significance as pointed the allusions he intended to convey. Pococke, after allowing the difficulty of identifying some of the places, says: “But the taking them otherwise than as the proper names of cities, doth but open the way to more uncertain conjectures and doubtful interpretations.”

14. “Moreseth-gath.”—The addition “Gath,” taken with the context, shows clearly that the place belonged to the Philistines of Gath, if that city itself be not, as some suppose, intended. The sacred history is silent as to the occasion on which Lachish sought the aid of the Philistines: perhaps when apprehensive of a siege, or actually besieged, by the king of Assyria.

“Achzib.”—Another town of the Philistines, noticed under Josh. xii. 20. “Mareshah,” in the next verse, is perhaps the same supposed to be the native place of the prophet; and “Adullam” has been noticed under Josh. xii.

CHAPTER II.

1 Against oppression. 4 A lamentation. 7 A reproof of injustice and idolatry. 12 A promise of restoring Jacob.

Woe to them that devise iniquity, and work evil upon their beds! when the morning is light, they practise it, because it is in the power of their hand.

away: so they ²oppress a man and his house, even a man and his heritage.

3 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Behold, against this family do I devise an evil, from which ye shall not remove your necks; neither shall ye go haughtily: for this time is evil.

4 ¶ In that day shall one take up a parable against you, and lament ³with a doleful lamentation, and say, We be utterly spoiled: he hath changed the portion of my people: how hath he removed it from me! ⁴turning away he hath divided our fields.

5 Therefore thou shalt have none that shall ⁵cast a cord by lot in the congregation of the LORD.

6 ⁶ ⁷ ⁸Prophesy ye not, say they to them that prophesy: they shall not prophesy to them, that they shall not take shame.

7 ¶ O thou that art named the house of Jacob, is the spirit of the LORD ⁹straitened? are these his doings? do not my words do good to him that walketh ¹⁰uprightly?

8 Even ¹¹of late my people is risen up as an enemy: ye pull off the robe ¹²with the garment from them that pass by securely as men averse from war.

9 The ¹³women of my people have ye cast out from their pleasant houses; from their children have ye taken away my glory for ever.

10 Arise ye, and depart; for this is not your rest: because it is polluted, it shall destroy you, even with a sore destruction.

11 If a man ¹⁴walking in the spirit and falsehood do lie, saying, I will prophesy unto thee of wine and of strong drink; he shall even be the prophet of this people.

12 ¶ I will surely assemble, O Jacob, all of thee; I will surely gather the remnant of Israel; I will put them together as the sheep of Bozrah, as the flock in the midst of their fold: they shall make great noise by reason of the multitude of men.

13 The breaker is come up before them: they have broken up, and have passed through the gate, and are gone out by it: and their king shall pass before them, and the LORD on the head of them.

Verse 5. "Cast a cord by lot."—This probably alludes to the division of the lands by a cord or measuring line, and to their distribution by lot to "the congregation of the Lord"—the Hebrew nation—in the time of Joshua.

8. "Ye pull off the robe with the garment," &c.—To strip a traveller of his clothes is an exceedingly common form of depredation in the East—particularly among the Bedouin Arabs. To this the text seems to refer.

CHAPTER III.

1 The cruelty of the princes. 5 The falsehood of the prophets. 8 The security of them both.

AND I said, Hear, I pray you, O heads of Jacob, and ye princes of the house of Israel; Is it not for you to know judgment?

2 Who hate the good, and love the evil; who pluck off their skin from off them, and their flesh from off their bones;

3 Who also eat the flesh of my people, and flay their skin from off them; and they break their bones, and chop them in pieces, as for the pot, and as flesh within the caldron.

4 Then shall they cry unto the LORD, but he will not hear them: he will even hide his face from them at that time, as they have behaved themselves ill in their doings.

5 ¶ Thus saith the LORD concerning the prophets that make my people err, that ¹bite with their teeth, and cry, Peace; and he that putteth not into their mouths, they even prepare war against him:

6 Therefore night shall be unto you, ²that ye shall not have a vision; and it shall be dark unto you, ³that ye shall not divine; and the sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark over them.

7 Then shall the seers be ashamed, and the diviners confounded: yea, they shall all cover their 'lips; for there is no answer of God.

8 ¶ But truly I am full of power by the spirit of the LORD, and of judgment, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin.

9 Hear this, I pray you, ye heads of the house of Jacob, and princes of the house of Israel, that abhor judgment, and pervert all equity.

10 They build up Zion with ⁵ 'blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity.

11 The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money: yet will they lean upon the LORD, ⁷ and say, Is not the LORD among us? none evil can come upon us.

12 Therefore shall Zion for your sake be ⁶plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest.

⁸ Jer. 26. 18.

Verse 12. "Therefore shall Zion... be plowed as a field."—Whether this received any literal fulfilment when the city was ruined by the Babylonians we do not know; but we do know that Jerusalem then "became heaps," as the next clause expresses. The prediction has, however, been literally accomplished in more ways than one. It was an insulting act of ancient conquerors to pass a plough over a conquered and ruined city, to express that the site should be built upon no more, but be devoted to agriculture. Horace mentions it as a Roman custom:—

"From hence proud cities date their overthrow,
When, insolent in ruin, o'er their walls
The wrathful soldier draws the hostile plough,
That haughty mark of total overthrow."

Carmin. l. i. Ode xvi. FRANCIS.

And these very Romans did draw the "hostile plough" over Jerusalem. For we are told by various old Hebrew writers, whose testimony is confirmed by Jerome, that after the city and temple of Jerusalem had been by them destroyed, Turnus Rufus, or, as Jerome calls him, Titus Annius Rufus, passed the plough over the site, according to an order which he received from the emperor; and in consequence of which the site remained for many years utterly desolate.

Another interesting corroboration of this passage, if understood as applying specially to Mount Zion, might be found in its present condition, as described by Dr. Richardson, in a passage quoted under Ps. xlviii. 2; and in which its application to the illustration of the present text is particularly mentioned.

CHAPTER IV.

1 The glory, 3 peace, 8 kingdom, 11 and victory of the church.

BUT 'in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the LORD shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it.

2 And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

3 ¶ And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into ²plowshares, and their spears into ³pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

4 But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the LORD of hosts hath spoken it.

5 For all people will walk every one in the name of his god, and we will walk in the name of the LORD our God for ever and ever.

6 In that day, saith the LORD, will I assemble her that halteth, and I will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted;

7 And I will make her that 'halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation: and the LORD ¹shall reign over them in mount Zion from henceforth, even for ever.

11 ¶ Now also many nations are gathered against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion.

12 But they know not the thoughts of the LORD, neither understand they his counsel: for he shall gather them as the sheaves into the floor.

13 Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion: for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass: and thou shalt beat in pieces many people: and I will consecrate their gain unto the LORD, and their substance unto the LORD of the whole earth.

Verse 4. "They shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree."—This proverbial and beautiful image, employed by the Hebrews to express a state of security and peace, has already received, under 1 Kings iv. 25, the requisite explanation. We are happy, under the present recurrence of the image, to afford it that pictorial illustration from existing Oriental usages, with which we were not provided on the former occasion. We may take this opportunity of adding a few further observations. Pliny, in speaking of vines, mentions three kinds and modes of training:—1. Those which ran along the ground;—2. Those which grew upright, without support;—3. Those which were sustained by a single prop;—4. And those which covered a frame or trellis. We have ourselves seen all these methods in the East: and although we doubt that the first method of treating the vine was the prevalent one in Syria and Asia generally, as Pliny seems to intimate, it no doubt existed there, the vineyard being probably, as now, laid out in ridges over which the vines extended. May not this explain the "spreading vine of low stature" of Ezek. xvii. 6? But some one of the other vines, or all or them, did of course supply the shade under which the Hebrews delighted to repose. In reading this and the parallel passages, it is by no means necessary to suppose that vines were trained over a trellis, and formed a sheltering arbour; since one or more of the standard vines, which grow unsupported, and which to a considerable extent form the vineyards of the East, would extend a grateful shade, whether in the suburban garden or in that which the house enclosed. Vine-shades, or arbours, such as our cuts exhibit, must however be understood as included, and are perhaps principally intended. These are and have been in use, wherever the vine is common. Palestine was more of a vine-country than Egypt: yet even in Egypt, the ancient inhabitants were fond of sitting in vine-arbours. There are examples in their paintings; and one of considerable interest appears in the mosaic pavement of Præneste. In this example the arched trellis, over which the vine is trained, spans a stream, on each bank of which, within the arbour thus formed, persons repose on couches, drinking wine and playing on instruments of music.—The old rabbinical writers attest the prevalence of the general custom to which the text alludes, as they are constantly describing their learned predecessors as sitting and studying the law, meditating or conversing, on particular occasions, under fig-trees, olive-trees, and vines. Where the fig-tree grows, its broad leaf and expanded shade naturally point it out for that preference which the Scriptural intimations assign.

Although, in the previous note, we have supposed that the vine and fig-tree may have been generally in the court of the house, this does not by any means preclude the notion that the people may not also have rejoiced in the shelter of the fig-trees and the vines which grew in their suburban gardens. Indeed, as these became dangerous places in troublous times, when it is unsafe to venture beyond the walls of a town, the blessed condition of the times of which the prophet speaks would be beautifully evolved by our understanding him to intimate that the people might then repair in safety to their gardens, and that none should make them afraid as they sat there under their own vine and under their own fig-tree.

BETHLEHEM.—FORBIN.

Verse 2. "Beth-lehem Ephratah."—Ephratah appears to have been the more ancient name of the place (see the note on Gen. xxxv. 16), and is here added to the later and more common name, Bethlehem, to distinguish it from another Bethlehem. This is the place where Christ was born—an event to which the prophet not obscurely refers: and it being thus a spot of the greatest interest to Christian travellers, there are few who have visited Jerusalem without making an excursion to Bethlehem. Hence the accounts which we possess are numerous and ample; but they are chiefly occupied with details concerning the place of the nativity, and other spots connected or supposed to be connected with the circumstances which the sacred narrative records. Reserving these for a future and more appropriate occasion, we shall confine our present notice to the town itself and the approach to it.

Bethlehem is about six miles to the south of Jerusalem, and the distance is thickly strewn with spots and objects of alleged sanctity, which are enumerated by most travellers, as pointed out to them by their guides. These are nearly the same now as upwards of two centuries since, when they were mentioned by Sandys. After clearing the immediate vicinity of Jerusalem, that instructive old traveller thus proceeds:—"We passed through a country hilly and stony, yet not utterly forsaken of the vine, though onely planted by Christians; in many places producing corne; here shadowed with the fig-tree, and there with the olive. Sundry small turrets are dispersed about, which serve for solace as well as for safeguard. Some two miles from the citie, on the left hand, and by the highway side, there groweth a turpentine-tree, yet flourishing, which is said to have afforded a shelter to the Virgin Marie, as she passed between Bethlehem and Jerusalem. This tradition, however absurd, is generally believed by those Christians; and it is a place of high repute in their devotions. Towards the west, about two miles off, on a little hill, stands an ancient tower, which is said to have been the habitation of Simeon. A mile beyond the foresaid tree, in the midst of the way, is a cistern, vast within and square at the mouth, which is called the Cistern of the Starre, for that (as they say) the wise men of the East there first againe did see that conducting star, which went before them unto the place of our Saviour's nativitie. A little on the right hand, there are the small remaynes of an ancient monasterie, built, they affirme, in that place where the angell tooke up Abacuck by the haire of the head, and conveyed him to Babylon. Half a mile further, on the left side of the way, there is another religious house, but in good repaire, in forme of a fortresse, and environed with high walls, to withstand the insolencies of the infidels; possessed by the Greek Coloieros, and dedicated to Elias. Hard by there is a flat rocke, whereon they told us that the prophet accustomed to sleepe, and that it bears as yet the impression of his bodie. Indeed, there are certain hollowes in the same, but not by my eyes apprehended to retayne any manly proportion. As farre beyond are the decayes of a church, which stood (as they say) in the place where the patriarch Jacob inhabited. About a mile further west of the way, and a little off, stands the Sepulchre of Rachel." But of this, see the note on Gen. xxxv. Then, after this, the road soon conducts the traveller to a ridge of hills, from whence "The Dead Sea doth appeare as if neere at hand; but not so found by the traveller, for that those high declining mountains are not to be directly descended. Within half a mile of Bethlehem, separated from the same by a valley, and a little on the left hand of the way, are the cisternes of David, whereof he so much desired to drinke—a large deepe vault, now out of use, having onely two small tunnels at the top, by which they draw out water." All these objects are noticed by later travellers, with the exception of the terebinth-tree and the Cistern of the Star: the former has probably since perished. Sandys omitted to notice that the same hills which offer a view of the Dead Sea, also first bring Bethlehem under the traveller's notice. The view of Bethlehem obtained from hence is very interesting. The town appears covering the ridge of a hill, on the southern side of a deep and extensive valley, and reaching from east to west; the most conspicuous object being the monastery erected over the Cave of the Nativity, in the suburbs and upon the eastern side. The battlements and walls of this building seem like those of a vast fortress. The ground in front of the town is divided into several small enclosures, and planted with olives and fig-trees. The soil is diversified with hill and dale, and other requisites of picturesque situation; but the soil has now few visible claims to the character of fertility, implied in the appellation of Ephratah, by which it was anciently distinguished. Volney, indeed, says, "The soil is the best in all these districts; fruits, vines, olives, and sesamum succeed here extremely well;" but he tempers his eulogium with the observation, "But, as is the case everywhere else, cultivation is wanting." Bethlehem itself is now but a poor village; "But," said Dr. Richardson, "it was the birth-place of David and David's Lord, which is praise sufficient for any village upon earth. It is not the least among the princes of Judah." Dr. Richardson seems however to form a lower estimate of the place than most other travellers. Volney says that in his time it contained about 600 men capable of bearing arms, which would give a population of about 2500. Buckingham says it is nearly as large as Nazareth, and containing a population of from 1000 to 1500; while Richardson does not state it at more than 300. Probably the population is declining. The place has an air of cleanliness and comfort not often seen in Eastern villages. The inhabitants are mostly Christians, and derive a very considerable part of their support from the manufacture of rosaries, crosses, &c., which are eagerly purchased by pilgrims. Buckingham describes the men as robust and well made, and the women as among the fairest and handsomest he had seen in Palestine. The men bear an indifferent character. What Pococke long ago observed is true now, that the Christians at the holy places, Jerusalem, Bethlehem, St. John's, and Nazareth, were worse than any other Christians. At Bethlehem the women bore a good character; but at the other places, and especially at Jerusalem, they were worse than the men. He adds, wisely, "I will not venture to say whether too great a familiarity with those places in which the sacred mysteries of our redemption were acted may not be a cause to take off from the reverence and awe which they should have for them, and lessen the influence they ought to have on their conduct." (See the respective 'Travels' of Sandys, Volney, Clarke, Buckingham, and Richardson; with the 'Journey' of Maundrell, and the 'Letters' of Jolliffe.)

Verse 7. "Shall I give my firstborn for my transgression," &c.—We may refer the reader back to the considerations on human sacrifice stated under Jer. xx. 5; where we have supposed that the horrid custom originated in the impression that the life of the most valuable creature must needs be most acceptable to the gods. This verse announces a principle of the practice—a reason for it—not distinct from, nor adverse to, that which we have considered, but connected with and involved in it. We are told that such sacrifices were sometimes intended to be expiatory—were sacrifices of atonement. A father offered his first-born, or his other children, for his transgression—for the sin of his soul. No one conversant with the principles and practice of heathenism can be unaware that common animal sacrifices were often regarded as expiatory. In the heathen poets, the gods are continually requiring from particular persons, or bodies of men, sacrifices at their shrines, to appease their anger and atone for offences committed against them: and in these and other ancient writings, where a person sees cause to fear that by some act he has incurred the displeasure of some god, he hastens, as soon as he can, to offer a sacrifice to appease the incensed deity. This being the case, it follows, on the principle alleged in the previous note, that when men became familiar with human sacrifices, the life most precious to the offerer himself was deemed to furnish the most acceptable and prevailing atonement for his offences. And, to a father, the most precious lives were those of his children; and of his children, that of the first-born above all. And as even men the most besotted in superstition could not, we should suppose, be induced frequently to offer such costly sacrifices without a powerful constraining motive, we may perhaps believe that, when we read of such sacrifices, we are always to understand them rather as sacrifices of atonement than as free-will offerings. This might be clearer if our information were more complete: but the ancient writers, and the moderns also, usually mention the custom in general terms, without stating on what principle it proceeded: but, when they happen to do so, it generally proves that the horrid sacrifice was made to pacify an incensed god, or to atone for the past offences of a nation, city, family, or individual. Indeed it is surprising to what an extent this principle has operated, among nations in every respect most different from each other, not merely in the East, but also in America and the regions of the Northern Sea. To illustrate this, one or two examples may suffice. When we learn from Eusebius that the Phœnicians sacrificed children once a-year to Saturn, may we not, under the view suggested by the prophet, understand that the day on which this was done had a similar object with the Day of Atonement among the Hebrews; and that the design of the horrid rites then performed was to atone for the offences of the past year? The famous sacrifice of Iphigenia, with the consent of her father, seems a very striking illustration of the subject, if taken in the version of Æschylus. The sacrifice was avowedly one of expiation—to atone for the offence which the goddess avenged by tempests and contrary winds, which kept the Argive fleet from sailing. The victim was her demand; and nothing is more instructive as to the real character of such transactions than the grief and horror which the demand inspired, and which attended and followed the consummation. From this we may gather, that the offerers might, as is alleged, consider it a duty to seem cheerful, and even joyous, but that their real feelings were agonized and their hearts rent at the inevitable necessity which their "dark idolatries" laid upon them. In this instance the father did not, as the mother bitterly alleges that he did,—

— "Think no more his tender child to spare
Than a young lamb from fleecy pastures torn
From out the midst of his unnumber'd sheep."

But rather, when the prophet announced the fatal demand,—

"The sons of Atreus, starting from their thrones, Dash'd to the ground their sceptres, nor withheld
The bursting tears that dew'd their warrior cheeks;
And thus exclaiming spoke the elder king:

'O heavy, fatal doom! to disobey!
O heavy, fatal doom! my child to slay!
My child! the idol-treasure of my house!

Must I, her father, all bedabbled o'er
In streaming rivers of her virgin gore,
Stand by the altar with polluted hands?
O woe! woe! woe!
Where shall I turn me?"

Agamemnon.—SYMMONS.

The whole of this powerful tragedy is most instructive, as to the ideas, feelings, and practices connected with such sacrifices as the inspired prophet mentions: but we cannot advert to them further, or refer to the other examples which press upon our recollection.

CHAPTER VII.

1 The church, complaining of her small number, 3 and the general corruption, 5 putteth her confidence not in man, but in God. 8 She triumpheth over her enemies. 14 God comforteth her by promises, 16 by confusion of the enemies, 18 and by his mercies.

3 ¶ That they may do evil with both hands earnestly, the prince asketh, and the judge asketh for a reward; and the great man, he uttereth 'his mischievous desire: so they wrap it up.

4 The best of them is a brier: the most upright is sharper than a thorn hedge: the day of thy watchmen and thy visitation cometh; now shall be their perplexity.

5 ¶ Trust ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a guide: keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom.

6 For 'the son dishonoureth the father, the daughter riseth up against her mother, the daughter in law against her mother in law; a man's enemies are the men of his own house.

7 Therefore I will look unto the LORD; I will wait for the God of my salvation: my God will hear me.

8 ¶ Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, the LORD shall be a light unto me.

9 I will bear the indignation of the LORD, because I have sinned against him, until he plead my cause, and execute judgment for me: he will bring me forth to the light, and I shall behold his righteousness.

10 'Then she that is mine enemy shall see it, and shame shall cover her which said unto me, 'Where is the LORD thy God? mine eyes shall behold her: now 'shall she be trodden down as the mire of the streets.

15 According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt will I shew unto him marvellous things.

16 ¶ The nations shall see and be confounded at all their might: they shall lay their hand upon their mouth, their ears shall be deaf.

¹⁵ Exod. 34. 6, 7.

Verse 1. "My soul desired the firstripe fruit."—From a note on this by Sir John Chardin, quoted by Harmer, from his MS., he appears to have thought it might be illustrated by the fact that the Turks and Persians are remarkably fond of eating their fruits as soon as they approach to ripeness, and before they are perfectly ripe; this being more particularly true of the Persians, who eat almonds, melons, plums, &c., before they are ripe; and that with less injurious consequences than may be imagined—perhaps from the great dryness of their atmosphere. To this we may add, as helping to explain the frequent allusions in Scripture to the eating of fruit, that the Orientals, when fruits are in season, consume such enormous quantities as would astonish an Englishman, who probably does not consume in a whole month as much crude fruit as a Persian will eat in a single day.

4. "Brier."—The original word (חֵדֶק chedek) is translated "thorn" in Prov. xv. 19, where the words חֵדֶק מְסוּכָה, chedek mesuka, occur in juxtaposition, but are separated in the passage before us. They intimate to us that it was sometimes the practice to make fences of some thorny shrub, to check the progress of aggressors. Among the most thorny shrubs found in Palestine are the Paliurus aculeatus and the Zizyphus spina Christi, either of which, if used as a rampart for defence, would answer the purpose, as the thorns are sharp and hooked, and the branches long and pliant, so as to catch hold and stick to the clothes and body in the most painful and vexatious manner possible. These two shrubs, as has been said on other occasions, belong to the natural order or family Rhamneæ, of which the type is the buckthorn of our hedges.

NAHUM.—This prophet is described in the first verse as the “Elkoshite,” but it has been disputed whether this description is derived from his parentage or the place of his birth. The latter seems the most probable conclusion. Jerome says that there was in his days a village called Helkesi. It was so much fallen to ruin that the traces of the old buildings could scarcely be distinguished; but it was known to the Jews, and was shown to him by one who went about the country with him. This was in Galilee; and if this was the birth-place of Nahum, another instance is offered, in addition to that of Jonah, that the Jews were in the wrong in alleging that “Out of Galilee ariseth no prophet.”

The prophecy of Nahum, which entirely relates to the judgment of God against Assyria, contains strong internal evidence of being written between the subversion of the kingdom of Israel and the destruction of Nineveh, with the overthrow of the proud empire of which that city was the metropolis. The particular time in this long interval is less easily determined: but probability seems in favour of its being placed rather in the early than in the latter part; if not very soon, or immediately, after the desolation of Israel. The style of Nahum is thus characterized by Bishop Lowth:—“None of the minor prophets seem to equal Nahum in boldness, ardour and sublimity. His prophecy too forms a regular and perfect poem; the exordium is not merely magnificent, it is truly majestic: the preparation for the destruction of Nineveh, and the description of its downfall and desolation, are expressed in the most lively colours, and are bold and luminous in the highest degree.”

Verse 10. “While they are drunken...they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry.”—In the ancient writers there is considerable discrepancy with respect to the names of the persons, who acted the more prominent parts in that last scene of Assyrian history which is the subject of the present prophecy. They however substantially agree, in the circumstances of that great event, with one another, and with the inspired prophets. And as the circumstances are alone mentioned by the latter, without any names being given, and as circumstantial corroborations are of the most interest and importance, we shall limit our notices to them, without opening any discussion about the names of the principal persons. We shall follow the account of Diodorus, which is not only the most complete and connected which remains to us, but is proved to be generally accurate by the remarkable illustration which it affords to, and receives from, the prophecies of Scripture.

In the present verse the prophet intimates that a great destruction should befall the Assyrians while they were in a condition of drunkenness. Accordingly, Diodorus informs us, that on the advance of the allied forces of the Medes and Babylonians, the king of Assyria marched against them, and obtained signal victories over them in three successive battles. The revolted tributaries began to think of abandoning their enterprise in despair, when they received news of the advance of a powerful army out of Bactria, to the king's assistance. This force, after some parleying, they succeeded in persuading to make common cause with themselves, against the king whom they came to assist. Meanwhile the Assyrian monarch, ignorant of the revolt of the Bactrians, and elated by former successes, abandoned himself to his revelry and sloth, and was chiefly intent on preparing wine and victuals in abundance to feast his army. The allied revolters being apprised by deserters of the intemperance and security of the adverse army, attacked their camp suddenly, in the night, in the midst of their revelry and drunkenness; and being in excellent order, while the camp was in the most disordered and helpless condition imaginable, and altogether unprovided for defence, they easily broke into the camp, and made a prodigious slaughter of the Assyrians. The survivors were glad to escape with their king into the city. As this was the first great blow, in those closing transactions, which the Assyrians received—and was indeed the severest of all that preceded the final overthrow—we may reasonably conclude it to be the same event to which the prophet refers.

11 Where is the dwelling of the lions, and the feedingplace of the young lions, where the lion, even the old lion, walked, and the lion's whelp, and none made them afraid?

12 The lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, and strangled for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin.

13 Behold, I am against thee, saith the LORD of hosts, and I will burn her chariots in the smoke, and the sword shall devour thy young lions: and I will cut off thy prey from the earth, and the voice of thy messengers shall no more be heard.

Verse 5. "The defence shall be prepared."—In this and the two preceding verses we have a very animated description of the preparations for defence. In like manner, we find the defensive preparations particularly mentioned by Diodorus. When the king found himself shut up within the walls of the town, he was by no means discouraged, but took the most active and well-advised measures for the defence. The town was well stored with necessaries, and the lofty and strong walls seemed to defy any force the besiegers could bring to bear against them. Yet not feeling too confident or secure, the king sent off a great part of his treasures, together with his children, to the care of his intimate friend Cotta, the governor of Paphlagonia; and despatched posts into all the provinces of the kingdom to raise soldiers and procure every possible assistance. Having thus made every arrangement for the defence which prudence or courage could suggest, the king resolved to abide the siege till the expected aid from the provinces should arrive. So well were his measures taken, and such the strength and resources of the place, that nothing of any consequence was effected for two years by the besiegers, beyond the keeping the besieged confined to the city, and making some abortive assaults upon the walls.—But the end came at last, and in the manner which the prophet repeatedly declares.

6. "The gates of the river shall be opened."—Compare this with ch. i. 8. Both passages mark very distinctly the agency of an inundation in opening the way to the besiegers of Nineveh. And most remarkably was this accomplished. We are told by Diodorus that in his plans for the defence of the city, the king of Assyria was greatly encouraged by an ancient prophecy, That Nineveh should never be taken until the river became its enemy. But that after the allied revolvers had besieged the city for two years without effect, there occurred a prodigious inundation of the Tigris, when the stream overflowed its banks, and rose up to the city, and swept away about twenty furlongs of its great wall. When the king heard this unexpected fulfilment of the old prediction, he was filled with consternation and despair: he gave up all for lost: and that he might not fall into the hands of his enemies, he caused a large pile of wood to be raised in his palace, and heaping thereon all his gold, silver, and apparel, and collecting his eunuchs and concubines, caused the pile to be set on fire, whereby all these persons, with himself, his treasures, and his palace, were utterly consumed.—It claims to be noticed that the prophet mentions fire, as well as water, among the agents employed in the destruction of Nineveh (ch. iii. 13, 15).

As Diodorus does not specify the time of the year in which the inundation of the Tigris took place, we are left in doubt by which of the causes which still periodically operate in swelling its stream, and which sometimes occasion it to overflow its bank in particular places, it was produced. In autumn it is swollen by rains, and in spring by the melting of the snows in the mountains of Armenia. As the latter cause, more abundantly than the former, replenishes the channel of the river, and more frequently occasions inundations, it was probably by this that the proud walls of Nineveh were thrown down. A similar circumstance occurred a few years since to the greatest city, Bagdad, that now exists on the same river. While the inhabitants were expecting a siege, the river overflowed its banks, producing one of the most extensive and destructive river-inundations that history records. In one night a large part of the city wall, with a great number of the houses, were overthrown by the irruption of the waters, thousands of the sleeping inhabitants being overwhelmed in the ruins. In this case, however, the extent of the inundation around the city, and the length of time which it took to subside, allowed opportunity for the repair of the wall before the hostile army could approach.

7. "Huzzab."—This word (חֲזַב) has been very differently understood. Of the numerous alternatives which have been suggested, the following are the principal:—The queen of Nineveh; Nineveh itself represented as a queen; a female idol; the warriors; the host; the foundation; the fortress, &c. These diversities are obtained by alterations in, or additions to, the present reading; by derivations from different roots; and by reading in a different connection; as well as by different apprehensions of the word as it stands. The interpretation "fortress," which Newcome and Boothroyd prefer, requires the word to end verse 6 rather than to begin verse 7; and the last clause of the former and the first of the latter will then read thus: "The palace shall be dissolved and the fortress. She shall be led away captive," &c. As we are strongly persuaded that verse 7 describes Nineveh as a captive queen brought before the conqueror, we do not object to the interpretation we have quoted, since it disposes of the doubtful word in verse 6, and leaves this conclusion open for verse 7, where we suppose a new circumstance to be taken up, only connected generally with the preceding verse. The present description may then be understood to represent Nineveh as a queen (or, if we will, the queen of Nineveh), led before the conqueror, attended by her maidens, who are described as mourning like doves and smiting upon their breasts. The act of smiting is strongly expressed, as in our version by "tabering," from the action of a performer on the tabret. This remarkable expression has been duly noticed by various expositors, who have however overlooked two circumstances which add to the force of the allusion,—one is, that tambourines are used exclusively by females in the East; and the other, that such are the instruments employed by the women who wail for the dead.

9. "Take ye the spoil of silver... of gold."—Diodorus describes the conquerors of Nineveh as greatly enriched by the spoils of gold and silver, collected from the ashes of the funeral pile and the rubbish of the burnt palace of the Assyrian king.

Verse 12. "If they be shaken, they shall even fall," &c.—This will appear from the fact that all figs, when ripe, fall of their own accord; a little shaking of the tree will therefore bring down many figs, when the fruit is ripe, or approaching ripeness. The "firstripe figs," that is, the early or spring figs, drop with more facility than those of summer or late autumn.

14. "Tread the mortar."—We have explained, under Ezek. 638 xiii., that mortar is usually trodden by the feet in the East. So is the clay for making bricks; and, from the context, we should rather suppose that this is to be understood in the present passage.

17. "The great grasshoppers."—We are strongly of opinion that the construction here employed (גֹּב גֹּב gob gub) does not express the size of the species, but the vastness of the aggregate number. We have been furnished with some ingenious arguments to show that the mole-cricket is to be understood. But the insect in question is described in Amos vii. 1, as very destructive to vegetable produce, while the food of the mole-cricket is chiefly composed of insects: and the fact that it does much damage to the roots of vegetables when burrowing in the earth, like the mole (whence its name), does not appear sufficiently to meet the required conditions. We are therefore more disposed to acquiesce in the conclusion that the locust, before it is in a condition for flight, is to be understood; particularly as the ravages of the locust, in this state of its existence, could not fail to have been a matter of sad experience to the Hebrews. It will also appear from the following statement, that this part of the natural history of the locust fully corresponds to all the Scriptural intimations.

The female locust lays her eggs in autumn. She makes choice of a light earth, under the shelter of a bush or hedge, where she deposits, and carefully covers over, an oblong substance of the shape of her own body, containing a great number of eggs. These are protected by their situation from the cold of winter, and are hatched early in the spring by the heat of the sun. Consequently, in the places which have been visited by the plague of locusts, the hedges and ridges swarm with the young ones about the middle of April. In this their larva state, they differ from the perfect insect only in their colour, size, and in the absence of the wings and wing-cases, and in the incapacities which hence arise. In other respects they enjoy the same faculties, except of reproduction, as in their ultimate condition. The same observation extends to their adolescent, or nymphal, condition, when the wings and wing-cases remain enclosed in covers.

Their formal and wholesale ravages begin before they are in a condition for flight; and are then indeed far more ruinous than those of the winged invaders. When they leave their native hedges, they march along, as it were in battalions, devouring every leaf and bud as they pass, and not sparing even the bark of trees. The husbandmen, who dread this visitation above all things, have various expedients for preventing or lessening the calamity. They have much tact in discovering the places where the eggs are deposited, great quantities of which they sometimes extract and destroy: and when the evil day has actually arrived, a common plan is to dig ditches across their path, into which they fall, and are destroyed in vast numbers. Great quantities are also devoured by birds and domestic fowls. At last, when the sun has waxed warm, about the end of June, they acquire their perfect condition by the development of their wings, and "flee away," to inflict on other places the desolation to which they have reduced the place of their birth.

CHAPTER I.

^a Unto Habakkuk, complaining of the iniquity of the land, ⁵ is shewed the fearful vengeance by the Chaldeans. ¹² He complaineth that vengeance should be executed by them who are far worse.

THE burden which Habakkuk the prophet did see.

² O LORD, how long shall I cry, and thou wilt not hear! even cry out unto thee of violence, and thou wilt not save!

⁴ Therefore the law is slacked, and judgment doth never go forth: for the wicked doth compass about the righteous; therefore wrong judgment proceedeth.

⁵ ¶ Behold ye among the heathen, and regard, and wonder marvellously: for I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe, though it be told you.

⁶ For, lo, I raise up the Chaldeans, that bitter and hasty nation, which shall march through the breadth of the land, to possess the dwellingplaces that are not theirs.

⁷ They are terrible and dreadful: their judgment and their dignity shall proceed of themselves.

⁹ They shall come all for violence: their faces shall sup up as the east wind, and they shall gather the captivity as the sand.

¹¹ Then shall his mind change, and he shall pass over, and offend, imputing this his power unto his god.

HABAKKUK.—There have been singularly different opinions as to the time of this prophet. Some of the old Jewish writers thought him to have been the son of the Shunamite woman, so noted in the history of Elisha; while the author of the apocryphal story of Bel and the Dragon introduces him into his narrative, which he lays in the time of Cyrus in the last years of Daniel. The former account makes him far the earliest of the collected prophets, and the latter the latest except Daniel. But both of the accounts are entitled to equal disbelief. We have no positive information; but the probability is that Habakkuk prophesied in the reign of Jehoiakim, which would make him a contemporary of Jeremiah. The Jews generally place him in the reign of Manasseh: and certainly he may be allowed to have lived partly in that reign, although his present prophecies may not have been delivered till that of Jehoiakim. The traditions preserved by the pseudo-Epiphanius and Dorotheus state, that Habakkuk was of the tribe of Simeon, and was born and died at Bethzacar. The same account states that he withdrew into Arabia on the approach of the Chaldean army against Jerusalem; but returned and cultivated his paternal fields after the Babylonians had retired. Little faith is however to be placed in these accounts. Habakkuk's tomb is spoken of as existing at Bethzacar, Keila, Echela, or Gabbatha, by the early Christian writers. As they are all mentioned as in the neighbourhood of Eleutheropolis, perhaps the tomb was about equally near the places thus named, and its situation denoted by different authors with varied references to the neighbouring towns or villages.

The general subject of Habakkuk's prophecy is the same as that of Jeremiah. He foretels the approaching punishment of the Jewish nation for its iniquities, by the hands of the Chaldeans; suggests ultimate objects of hope and consolation; and predicts the final ruin of the Babylonian empire. The style of Habakkuk gives to his prophecy a high place among the poetical parts of Scripture. The sublime song with which it concludes is considered by Bishop Lowth as one of the most perfect specimens of the Hebrew ode; and from the repetition of the word "Selah," which occurs so frequently in the Psalms, it would appear to have been adapted to music, and was perhaps intended to be used in the public worship.

Verse 8. "Swifter than the leopards."—The swiftness of 17 Shall they therefore empty their net, and not spare continually to slay the nations?

the leopard is proverbial in all countries where it is found. This, conjoined with its other qualities, suggested the idea, in the East, of partially taming it, that it might be employed in hunting; and Harmer ingeniously conjectures that the image here employed by the prophet may have been the more familiar and striking to the people, from their having had opportunities of witnessing the prodigious feats of leopards used in the royal hunts. He would have considered this the more probable if he had known that the leopard was certainly thus employed in ancient Egypt, as appears from existing paintings. Leopards are now rarely kept for hunting in Western Asia, unless by kings and governors; but they are more common in the eastern parts of Asia. Osorius relates that one was sent by the king of Portugal to the Pope, which excited great astonishment by the velocity with which it overtook and the facility with which it killed deer and wild boars. Le Bruyn mentions a leopard kept by the pasha who governed Gaza and the other territories of the ancient Philistines, and which he frequently employed in hunting jackals. But it is in India that the cheetah, or hunting leopard, is most frequently employed, and is seen in the perfection of his power. There is an interesting account of a cheetah hunt in Forbes's 'Oriental Memoirs,' vol. i. pp. 170-175, from which it appears that the cheetah, when the prey is in view, endeavours to steal undiscovered within the distance of seventy yards before it starts against the game, and seldom perseveres in the chase if it does not overtake it in a very short run, which, however, it seldom fails to do. "When the cheetah resolves to exert himself, his velocity is astonishing; for although the antelope is esteemed the swiftest species of the deer, and the course generally begins at the distance of seventy or eighty yards, yet the game is usually caught, or else makes his escape within the distance of three or four hundred yards, the cheetah seldom running a greater distance, and in that I have measured repeated strokes of seven or eight paces. On coming up with the game, especially if a doe or fawn, it is difficult to describe the celerity with which it overthrows its prey. But the attack of an old buck is a more arduous task: his great strength sometimes enables him to make a hard struggle, though seldom with success; for although I have known a buck get loose two or three times, yet I never saw one escape after having been fairly seized."

FISHING WITH NETS.

15. "They take...them with the angle, they catch them in their net, and gather them in their drag."—This verse is remarkable for the various modes of fishing to which it alludes; and to complete the list, the "fish-spears," mentioned by Job, might be added. There appears indeed to have been no mode of fishing now in use which was not known to and practised by the ancient nations. The subject of ancient fishing is susceptible of extensive illustration (from which we must abstain); and it is one of peculiar interest to the Christian reader from the numerous circumstances connected with fishing which occur in the Gospels, arising from the fact that several of those whom Christ called to follow him, and who became his apostles, were fishermen.

ANGLING.

Angling seems to have been regarded among the Egyptians and Romans much in the same light as it is at present; and was pursued very much in the same manner. Figures of persons angling occur frequently in the paintings of the Egyptian tombs, and on the walls of the Roman Herculaneum. From the former we have copied one specimen, showing the mode of angling with the rod and line, and with the line alone. The difference between the two processes is well discriminated in the different attitudes of the anglers, and in the decided manner with which the one with the rod draws out his fish, as contrasted with the caution of the one who fishes with the line only. The ancient rods seem to have been shorter than the modern; and we are not aware that they were ever jointed. The lines in our specimen look very clumsy, and we do not know what they are made with. Horse-hair was anciently much employed in the lines used by anglers, as it has been since. Fishing, particularly with a line, seems to have been a favourite amusement among the ancient Egyptians. Wilkinson states that in all cases they adopted a ground-bait, without any float: and that it does not appear they ever put winged insects to the hook, and still less that they had devised any process similar to our artificial fly-fishing, which is still unknown to the Egyptians. The hooks appear to have been of bronze. We may observe that the mode of angling without a rod, as shown in our cut, is exactly the same as is still practised by the fellahs of modern Egypt.

The cut in p. 641 is copied from a painting in the same tomb, at Beni-Hassan—from which the other is taken. From a comparison with other examples it appears to exhibit the common mode of fishing by a net in the river Nile. In other representations there are some variations; but none very essential. Fishing with nets seems to have been a very ancient practice in different nations. The angle was most generally employed by those who fished for sport, as at present, and the net more exclusively by those who made fishing their business. Yet the Romans used the net as well as the angle for sport, and Suetonius states that Nero was accustomed to fish with a net of gold and purple. There were a variety of nets for varied uses—for different waters, and for taking different sized fishes. Plutarch mentions corks and leaden weights as an addition which nets had received. Harmer supposes that nets were not used by the ancient Egyptians, and consequently that the word rendered "nets" in the account of Egyptian fishery which we have given in Isa. xix. 8–10, must be understood of weirs or toils. He adds, "the not using them (the nets) in Egypt, I should think must be in consequence of its being an old custom not to use them in that country." The painting from which our engraving is copied, with others of a similar character, evince that it was an old custom to use the net in Egypt. We are of course aware that the Egyptians did use weirs and toils in their fisheries; but we do not feel assured that Scripture contains any allusion to them.

The use of fish-spears, however, to which there are distinct references in the sacred writings, appears very clearly in the paintings of ancient Egypt. The spear consists of a long and stout pole terminating in two long and fine prongs single barbed, and one of them longer than the other. One of Rosellini's engravings (Monum. Civili, pl. xxv. fig. 2) shows a man standing up in his boat who has struck two fish at once with this instrument, one on each prong. These fish-spears appear to have been employed by the fishers as they gently floated down the stream in their boats.

Our present note will of course be understood as an illustration not only of the text before us, but of that in Isaiah, and others in which fishing is mentioned.

Verse 11. "The stone shall cry out of the wall," &c.—The sure revelation of those deeds of shame and darkness which the perpetrators would fain conceal, is in almost every country expressed by a similar form of speech, declaring that the very walls have a voice to make known the things which they have witnessed. Does "the beam out of the timber," answering to "the stone out of the wall," imply that beams of timber were used by the Hebrews, to unite and strengthen the mass of masonry ? Walpole, in his 'Memoirs of Turkey,' is of this opinion ; and his statement renders it probable. "The ancient architects of Egypt, Syria, and Italy used wood to unite and bind the stones together. The French, during their expedition to Egypt, observed, at Ombos and Philæ, that pieces of the sycamore had been formed for that purpose into a dove-tail shape ; at Ombos they appear to have been covered with bitumen. Fastenings made of wood, of similar forms, were used in the ancient buildings of Italy, and were seen and described by F. Vacca. The Greeks, as we learn from Jerome, expressed this mode of binding stones together by the word μαρτυρῶν. In the prophet Habakkuk ii. 11, the Hebrew term bearing a similar meaning is caphis. In the first Bible printed in English, by Coverdale, the passage is rendered 'like as the bond of wood bound together in the foundation of a house.' We should add, that the word in question (ספסל) occurs only in this text ; and the explanation suggested by the above statement is corroborated by the author of the Apocryphal book of Ecclesiasticus :—"Timber girt and bound together in a building cannot be loosened with shaking" (xxii. 16). And conformably to the same view, Jerome renders the present text "Lignum quod ad continendos parietes in medio structuræ ponitur."

Verse 4. "He had horns coming out of his hand."—The same word (קֶרֶן keren) denotes both a horn and a ray of light—probably from the resemblance found between a cone of rays and a horn; and the same word, as a verb, signifies to shine or emit rays. In like manner, the Arabian poets call the rays of the sun its horns. The context in the present verse shows quite plainly that the marginal reading of "beams" is here to be preferred to that of "horns." Conformably, Newcome renders "Rays streamed from his hand." See further on this subject under Exod. xxiv. 29.

9. "Thy bow was made quite naked."—This means that it was prepared for action; it being, both in ancient and modern times, customary in the East to carry the bow in a case when not required for immediate use.

19. "My feet like hinds' feet...to walk upon mine high places."—Probably this and the corresponding allusion in the Psalms is not merely to the swiftness of the hind, but also to the sureness and safety of its tread, which seems to have given occasion for its being styled "brazen-footed" by Virgil and other classical poets. Some of the Rabbins imagine, we know not with what reason, that the females stand and tread with a firmer foot than the males; and that for this cause the feet of hinds, rather than of harts, are mentioned here and in Ps. xviii. 34.

The various subjects which supply allusions to the prophet, in this very noble poem, have been so far explained and illustrated on different previous occasions as to supersede the notes which might otherwise be required.

ZEPHANIAH.

CHAPTER I.

God's severe judgment against Judah for divers sins.

THE word of the LORD which came unto Zephaniah the son of Cushi, the son of Gedaliah, the son of Amariah, the son of Hizkiah, in the days of Josiah the son of Amon, king of Judah.

2 'I will utterly consume all things from off ²the land, saith the LORD.

3 I will consume man and beast; I will consume the fowls of the heaven, and the fishes of the sea, and the ³stumblingblocks with the wicked; and I will cut off man from off the land, saith the LORD.

4 I will also stretch out mine hand upon Judah, and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and I will cut off the remnant of Baal from this place, and the name of the Chemarims with the priests;

5 And them that worship the host of heaven upon the housetops; and them that worship and that swear ⁵by the LORD, and that swear by Malcham;

6 And them that are turned back from the LORD; and those that have not sought the LORD, nor enquired for him.

7 Hold thy peace at the presence of the Lord God: for the day of the LORD is at hand: for the LORD hath prepared a sacrifice, he hath ⁸bid his guests.

8 And it shall come to pass in the day of the LORD's sacrifice, that I will ⁸punish the princes, and the king's children, and all such as are clothed with strange apparel.

9 In the same day also will I punish all those that leap on the threshold, which fill their masters' houses with violence and deceit.

10 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the LORD, that there shall be the noise of a cry from the fish gate, and an howling from the second, and a great crashing from the hills.

11 Howl, ye inhabitants of Maktesh, for all the merchant people are cut down; all they that bear silver are cut off.

12 And it shall come to pass at that time, that I will search Jerusalem with candles, and punish the men that are ¹²settled on their lees: that say in their heart, The LORD will not do good, neither will he do evil.

13 Therefore their goods shall become a booty, and their houses a desolation: they shall also build houses, but ¹³not inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, but not drink the wine thereof.

14 The great day of the LORD is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the LORD: the mighty man shall cry there bitterly.

¹¹ Chap. 3. 8.

ZEPHANIAH.—The time and parentage of Zephaniah are expressed in the first verse of his prophecy, which affords the only authentic information concerning him which we possess. The pseudo-Epiphanius, with whom Isidore agrees, says that he was of the tribe of Simeon, a native of mount Sarabatha, a place not mentioned in Scripture, and where he died and was buried. In this last particular they are however at variance with the author of the 'Cippi Hebraici,' who states that he was buried at Geba in Lebanon, in a cave shut up—a place where flowing fountains abounded, and whence the clouds never departed: language which appears to mean no more than that it was in an elevated region of Lebanon. With respect to the characteristic of Zephaniah's writings, Bishop Lowth briefly observes, that it is poetical, but that there is nothing very uncommon either in the arrangement of his matter, or the complexion of his style.

Verse 4. "The name of the Chemarims."—In 2 Kings xxiii. 5, the word "Chemarim" (כִּמְרִים) is rendered "idolatrous priests," as applied to those that were put down by Josiah, in whose reign Zephaniah prophesied; and probably the very same persons, or certainly the same kind of persons, are here to be understood. The signification is perhaps derived from the Syriac, in which language the analogous word means a priest generally, and of course the Syrian priests were idolaters, and hence its use to express idolatrous priests. Might not the name be particularly employed to denote the priests of the idols borrowed from the Syrians?

5. "Malcham"—or, as elsewhere, Milcom, Molech, the god of the Ammonites. The Septuagint translates it, "By their king;" but it is better to retain the proper name as denoting the idol.

9. "That leap on the threshold."—Instead of "on," we might read "over the threshold;" when, as the Targum suggests, it may allude to the custom of the priests of Dagon, who, after their idol was broken on the threshold (1 Sam. v. 4, 5), never trod on it, but stepped or leaped over it, when entering or leaving the temple. Some however rather, and perhaps better, explain it of persons who, seeing houses rich and full of good things, entered them violently and insolently, taking what they pleased. If this be admitted, there may be no objection to allow the conclusion of Harmer, that the leaping over the threshold, to fill houses with violence and deceit, may refer to the custom for insolent spoilers and oppressors, in the East, to ride into the houses—that is, into the interior courts—of their victims; for which reason, as well as to prevent the interior wealth from being suspected, the gates towards the street are in general purposely made too low to permit a man on horseback to pass through. If the allusion does not exclusively refer to this practice, we may certainly understand it to be included in the general sense of a violent and dishonest entrance into other people's houses.

11. "Maktesh."—The word means a mortar. Aben Ezra says that it was the name of a street or quarter in Jerusalem; in which opinion many concur. But there is another opinion, that the prophet by this title designates Jerusalem, in the state to which it should be reduced by the Chaldeans, crushed and broken, as in a mortar. But as the word means not only a mortar, but any deep, hollow place, Jerome thinks that the valley of Siloam is intended; an opinion sanctioned by the Targum, which renders "the valley of Kedron," which was another name for that of Siloam, or for the whole of which it was a part. There seems no deciding between these alternatives.

CHAPTER II.

1 An exhortation to repentance. 4 The judgment of the Philistines, 8 of Moab and Ammon, 12 of Ethiopia and Assyria.

GATHER yourselves together, yea, gather together, O nation 'not desired;

2 Before the decree bring forth, before the day pass as the chaff, before the fierce anger of the LORD come upon you, before the day of the LORD's anger come upon you.

3 Seek ye the LORD, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness: it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the LORD's anger.

4 ¶ For Gaza shall be forsaken, and Ashkelon a desolation: they shall drive out Ashdod at the noon day, and Ekron shall be rooted up.

5 Woe unto the inhabitants of the sea coasts, the nation of the Cherethites! the word of the LORD is against you; O Canaan, the land of the Philistines, I will even destroy thee, that there shall be no inhabitant.

6 And the sea coast shall be dwellings and cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks.

7 And the coast shall be for the remnant of the house of Judah; they shall feed thereupon: in the houses of Ashkelon shall they lie down in the evening: 'for the LORD their God shall visit them, and turn away their captivity.

8 ¶ I have heard the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children of Ammon, whereby they have reproached my people, and magnified themselves against their border.

9 Therefore as I live, saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah, even the breeding of nettles, and saltpits, and a perpetual desolation: the residue of my people shall spoil them, and the remnant of my people shall possess them.

10 This shall they have for their pride, because they have reproached and magnified themselves against the people of the LORD of hosts.

11 The LORD will be terrible unto them: for he will 'famish all the gods of the earth; and men shall worship him, every one from his place, even all the isles of the heathen.

12 ¶ Ye Ethiopians also, ye shall be slain by my sword.

13 And he will stretch out his hand against the north, and destroy Assyria; and will make Nineveh a desolation, and dry like a wilderness.

14 And flocks shall lie down in the midst of her, all the beasts of the nations: both the 'cormorant and the bittern shall lodge in the 'upper lintels of it; their voice shall sing in the windows; desolation shall be in the thresholds: 'for he shall uncover the cedar work.

15 This is the rejoicing city that dwelt carelessly, that said in her heart, 'I am, and there is none beside me: how is she become a desolation, a place for beasts to lie down in! every one that passeth by her shall hiss, and wag his hand.

Verse 4. "Gaza shall be forsaken."—Accordingly, the Gaza which existed in the time of the prophet did become forsaken, ruined, and desolate. But, in due time another town arose on or near its site, which still remains a place of some consideration. But of all this we have written fully under Judges xvi., and have now the satisfaction of introducing an engraving representing the modern town of Gaza.

"Ashkelon."—This place has been considered under Judges xiv.; and of it also we are now enabled to furnish a pictorial representation. There is a particular propriety in thus introducing Gaza and Ascalon together, as the two places are much associated in the Scriptures. The Mohammedan writers also distinguish these two cities as "the Two Brides." Mohammed is reported to have said, "Happy is he who takes up his dwelling-place with one of the Two Brides, Ascalon and Gaza." Another tradition reports him to have said, "Ascalon is one of the two Brides, whom God will raise up, sanctify, and glorify, in the day of judgment. Here will be seventy thousand martyrs, who will come forward together as ambassadors unto God." Jalal-Addin, the Arabian author of 'the History of the Temple,' lately translated by the Rev. James Reynolds, mentions a collection of a Portion of the Wondrous Virtues of Ascalon, by the historian Ibn Asákir, in which the various traditions concerning it are discriminated according to the degree of credit to which they are supposed to be entitled. Jalal-Addin, who wrote about the middle of the fifteenth century, makes a statement rather adverse to the laudatory traditions which he cites:—"Ascalon is said to be given to excess in eating, drinking, and adultery. The intelligent say that the cause of this is to be found in the fact that Ascalon is a dépôt for sacred cavalry, a frontier town, ever guarding against the attacks of the enemy. Even now, in these days, although many sacred cavalry quota contributions are to be found in other places, yet it is far from being no longer a point of attack by the enemy."

GAZA.—FORBIN.

6. "The sea coast," &c.—See the previous note on Ascalon, under Judges xiv. A more striking corroboration of the Divine prediction could not be given than is supplied in the account which Volney gives of the modern state of the coasts of Philistia. "In the plain between Ramla and Gaza, we meet with a number of villages, badly built, of dried mud, and which, like their inhabitants, exhibit every mark of poverty and wretchedness. The houses, on a nearer view, are only so many huts, sometimes detached and sometimes arranged in the form of cells around a court-yard enclosed by a mud wall. In winter they and their cattle may be said to live together, the part of the dwelling allotted to them being only raised two feet above that in which they lodge their beasts. The peasants are by this means kept warm without burning wood; an economy indispensable in a country absolutely destitute of fuel. The fires needed for culinary purposes are made of dung, kneaded into cakes and dried in the sun. In summer their lodging is more airy; but all their furniture consists of a single mat, and a pitcher for drinking. The environs of these villages are sown, at the proper season, with grain and water melons; all the rest is a desert, and abandoned to the Bedouin Arabs, who feed their flocks on it." Travels, ii. 281, 282.

13. "Will make Nineveh a desolation," &c.—How Nineveh was made a desolation has been shown in the notes on Nahum. The desolation in which it still remains will sufficiently appear from a foregoing engraving.

We have already mentioned that the earliest of the Greek writers who mention Nineveh, wrote a good while after that city was destroyed; and from the manner in which they indicate its situation, and the discrepancies between them, it almost appears uncertain whether they were acquainted with its position. Indeed, Lucian, who lived in the second century after Christ, distinctly avows, [that so utterly had Nineveh been destroyed, that no vestige of it remained, nor could it be easily ascertained where it had once stood. There is indeed no ground on which to feel positively certain as to the site of Nineveh; and this uncertainty is itself a most striking corroboration of Scripture prophecy. But there is considerable probability in the now generally received opinion which finds the site of Nineveh on the eastern bank of the Tigris, opposite Mousul, where the site of an extensive ancient city may be traced, by such earth-covered hills and ridges of ruin as now mark the place of Babylon and other ancient towns of Assyria and Chaldea. The long-continued state of desolation in which Nineveh has remained for ages might be illustrated from the successive notices of various travellers and historians. Thus we are told of an occasion (in A.D. 627) when the emperor Heraclius defeated the Persians in a great action fought on the convenient battle field offered by the vacant site of Nineveh (Gibbon, ch. xlv.) Benjamin of Tudela says that Al-Mutsal (Mousal) was separated only by a bridge from the ancient Nineveh; but Nineveh was utterly destroyed, although there were some streets and many castles within the ancient circuit—meaning, of course, modern erections within the limits of the ancient city. Haiho, the Armenian, (about 1300 A.D.) also mentions Nineveh as lying in total ruin. Our own "Master John Cartwright," who was therein the latter part of the sixteenth century, after giving the substance of the ancient accounts of the great Nineveh, adds, "Now it is destroyed (as God foretold it should be by the Chaldeans), being nothing else than a sepulchre of herselfe." In a later age Thevenot mentioned the great extent of its ruins; and Tavernier described the remains as "a heap of rubbish only." Such still is the site of Nineveh. Kinneir says, "I examined these remains in November, 1810, and found them to consist of a rampart and fosse, forming an oblong square, not exceeding four miles in compass, if so much. I saw neither stones nor rubbish of any kind. The wall is, on an average, twenty feet high; and as it is covered with grass, the whole has a striking resemblance to some of the Roman entrenchments which are extant in England." (Geographical Memoir of the Persian Empire, p. 250.) More complete accounts have recently been furnished by Buckingham and Rich.

If the prolonged mounds, mentioned by Kinneir, and disposed in the form of a square, were walls, as he supposes, it is clear that they could not have been the city walls; but must have belonged to the citadel or the palace and its enclosures. The dimensions of the square as given by Kinneir appear to be much too small; however, these mounds do not by any means form the only indications of ancient ruin, for there are appearances of mounds and ruins extending for several miles to the southward, and still more distinctly seen to the northward of this, though both are less marked than the mounds of the centre. The alleged tomb of Jonah is on the southernmost of these central mounds, which extend nearly east and west from the neighbourhood of the river. A Mohammedan village has been formed around the tomb. It appears that, where openings are made in the soil-covered mounds, sections of sun-dried brickwork are exposed; and some important conclusions might perhaps be deduced from more extended researches. The space between and about the central mounds is a level plain, over every part of which broken pottery, and the other usual debris of ruined cities in this region, are seen scattered about. Buckingham thus speaks of the view over the site obtained from the most northern of the central mounds: "As far as I could perceive, from our elevated point of view, on the highest summit of Tel Ninoah, there were mounds of ruins similar to those near us, but less distinctly marked, as far as the eye could reach to the northward; and the plain to the eastward of us, or between the river and the mountains, had a mixture of large brown patches, like heaps of rubbish seen at intervals, scattered over a cultivated soil." The low grounds near the river, where not cultivated, are covered to a considerable extent with tamarisk bushes. Mr. Rich holds that it is impossible to determine what part of the site was occupied by the ancient Nineveh, observing that, "In such a country it is not easy to say what are ruins and what are not; what is art, converted by the lapse of ages into a semblance of nature, and what is merely nature broken by the hand of time into ruins approaching in their appearance those of art." One remarkable circumstance is, that the remains obtained from the mounds are very similar to those afforded by the mounds of Babylon; and this even to fragments of cuneiform inscriptions on stone, resembling in every respect those which Babylon offers. Mr. Rich arrived at one important conclusion, which was, that all the remains belonged to the same age and character; but, as he adds, "Whether they belonged to Nineveh or some other city is another question, and one not so easily determined."

1 A sharp reproof of Jerusalem for divers sins. 8 An exhortation to wait for the restoration of Israel, 14 and to rejoice for their salvation by God.

WOE to ¹her that is filthy and polluted, to the oppressing city!

2 She obeyed not the voice; she received not ³correction; she trusted not in the LORD; she drew not near to her God.

3 Her princes within her are roaring lions; her judges are evening wolves; they gnaw not the bones till the morrow.

4 Her ⁴prophets are light and treacherous persons: her priests have polluted the sanctuary, they have done ⁵violence to the law.

5 The just LORD is in the midst thereof; he will not do iniquity: ⁶every morning doth he bring his judgment to light, he faileth not; but the unjust knoweth no shame.

6 I have cut off the nations: their ⁷towers are desolate; I made their streets waste, that none passeth by: their cities are destroyed, so that there is no man, that there is none inhabitant.

7 I said, Surely thou wilt fear me, thou wilt receive instruction; so their dwelling should not be cut off, howsoever I punished them: but they rose early, and corrupted all their doings.

8 ¶ Therefore wait ye upon me, saith the LORD, until the day that I rise up to the prey: for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger: for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my ⁹jealousy.

9 For then will I turn to the people a pure ¹⁰language, that they may all call upon the name of the LORD, to serve him with one ¹¹consent.

10 From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia my suppliants, even the daughter of my dispersed, shall bring mine offering.

11 In that day shalt thou not be ashamed for all thy doings, wherein thou hast transgressed against me: for then I will take away out of the midst of thee them that rejoice in thy pride, and thou shalt no more be haughty ¹²because of my holy mountain.

12 I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the LORD.

13 The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth: for they shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid.

14 ¶ Sing, O ¹³daughter of Zion; shout, O Israel; be glad and rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem.

15 The LORD hath taken away thy judgments, he hath cast out thine enemy: the king of Israel, even the LORD, is in the midst of thee: thou shalt not see evil any more.

16 In that day it shall be said to Jerusalem, Fear thou not: and to Zion, Let not thine hands be ¹⁴slack.

17 The LORD thy God in the midst of thee is mighty; he will save, he will rejoice over thee with joy; ¹⁵he will rest in his love, he will joy over thee with singing.

18 I will gather them that are sorrowful for the solemn assembly, who are of thee, to whom ¹⁶the reproach of it was a burden.

19 Behold, at that time I will undo all that afflict thee: and I will save her that ¹⁷halteth, and gather her that was driven out; and ¹⁸I will get them praise and fame in every land ¹⁹where they have been put to shame.

20 At that time will I bring you again, even in the time that I gather you: for I will make you a name and a praise among all people of the earth, when I turn back your captivity before your eyes, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER I.¹

¹ Haggai reproveth the people for neglecting the building of the house. 7 He inciteth them to the building. 12 He promiseth God's assistance to them being forward.

IN the second year of Darius the king, in the sixth month, in the first day of the month, came the word of the LORD ¹by Haggai the prophet unto Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, ²governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, saying, ² Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, saying, This people say, The time is not come, the time that the LORD's house should be built.

³ Then came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying,

⁴ Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your cieled houses, and this house lie waste?

⁵ Now therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts; ³Consider your ways.

⁶ Ye have 'sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag ⁵with holes.

⁷ ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Consider your ways.

⁸ Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the LORD.

⁹ Ye looked for much, and, lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did 'blow upon it. Why? saith the LORD of hosts. Because of mine house that is waste, and ye run every man unto his own house.

¹⁰ Therefore ⁷the heaven over you is stayed from dew, and the earth is stayed from her fruit.

¹¹ And I called for a drought upon the land, and upon the mountains, and upon the corn, and upon the new wine, and upon the oil, and upon that which the ground bringeth forth, and upon men, and upon cattle, and upon all the labour of the hands.

¹² ¶ Then Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, with all the remnant of the people, obeyed the voice of the LORD their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, as the LORD their God had sent him, and the people did fear before the LORD.

¹³ Then spake Haggai the LORD's messenger in the LORD's message unto the people, saying, I am with you, saith the LORD.

¹⁴ And the LORD stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and the spirit of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and the spirit of all the remnant of the people; and they came and did work in the house of the LORD of hosts, their God, HAGGAI.—There is no doubt concerning the date of this prophecy, which is given with much precision in the first verse; and from which, as well as from the book of Ezra (iv. 24), we learn that it was delivered after the Jews had returned to Jerusalem from their captivity, to stimulate and encourage them in the rebuilding of the temple. Bishop Lowth considers the style of Haggai's prophecy to be altogether prosaic; but Archbishop Newcome's translation proceeds on the idea that the greater part of it admits of a metrical division.

Haggai was probably born at Babylon, or in one of the towns in which the Hebrew captives were placed by the Babylonians. We know not when or where he died: the pseudo-Epiphanius says at Jerusalem, which is probable; and he adds, that he was buried among the priests: but the Cippi Hebraici place his sepulchre in a cave on the declivity of the mount of Olives. But whatever, in this and other instances, we state on these authorities, we regard as very uncertain.

CHAPTER II.

1 He encourageth the people to the work, by promise of greater glory to the second temple than was in the first. 10 In the type of holy things and unclean he sheweth their sins hindered the work. 20 God's promise to Zerubbabel.

IN the seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the word of the LORD ^{by} the prophet Haggai, saying,

2 Speak now to Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and to the residue of the people, saying,

3 Who is left among you that saw this house in her first glory? and how do ye see it now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing?

4 Yet now be strong, O Zerubbabel, saith the LORD; and be strong, O Joshua, son of Josedech, the high priest; and be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the LORD, and work: for I am with you, saith the LORD of hosts:

5 According to the word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt, so my spirit remaineth among you: fear ye not.

6 For thus saith the LORD of hosts; ^{yet} once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land;

7 And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come: and I will fill this house with glory, saith the LORD of hosts.

8 The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the LORD of hosts.

9 The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the LORD of hosts: and in this place will I give peace, saith the LORD of hosts.

10 ¶ In the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying,

11 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Ask now the priests concerning the law, saying,

12 If one bear holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be holy? And the priests answered and said, No.

13 Then said Haggai, If one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean.

14 Then answered Haggai, and said, So is this people, and so is this nation before me, saith the LORD; and so is every work of their hands; and that which they offer there is unclean.

15 And now, I pray you, consider from this day and upward, from before a stone was laid upon a stone in the temple of the LORD:

16 Since those days were, when one came to an heap of twenty measures, there were but ten: when one came to the pressfat for to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty.

17 I smote you ^{with} blasting and with mildew and with hail in all the labours of your hands; yet ye turned not to me, saith the LORD.

18 Consider now from this day and upward, from the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, even from the day that the foundation of the LORD's temple was laid, consider it.

19 Is the seed yet in the barn? yea, as yet the vine, and the fig tree, and the pomegranate, and the olive tree, hath not brought forth: from this day will I bless you.

20 ¶ And again the word of the LORD

² Heb. 12. 26.

³ Amos 4. 9.

came unto Haggai in the four and twentieth day of the month, saying,

21 Speak to Zerubbabel, governor of Judah, saying, I will shake the heavens and the earth ;

22 And I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen ; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them ; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother.

23 In that day, saith the LORD of hosts, will I take thee, O Zerubbabel, my servant, the son of Shealtiel, saith the LORD, and will make thee as a signet : for I have chosen thee, saith the LORD of hosts.

Verse 7. "The desire of all nations shall come : and I will fill this house with glory."—Many Jewish and some Christian interpreters understand the clause, rendered "the desire of all nations," to mean not a person, but things—the desirable things of all nations—their wealth, their treasure, and productions, which should be brought to adorn and glorify the second house. It does indeed appear, from the account of the valuable things taken away by Antiochus (1 Macc. i. 21, 22), that this temple did become very rich ; and still more so, when, in a later age, Herod expended immense sums in rebuilding, improving, and ornamenting the sacred structure—producing the temple which stood in the time of our Saviour, and was destroyed by Titus ; and of which Josephus says that with respect to magnitude, building, and the splendour of its ornaments, utensils, and furniture, it was the most magnificent structure he had ever seen or heard of. Yet probably if he or any other Jew had been asked whether he thought it more glorious than Solomon's Temple, a negative reply would have been given. We are much of opinion that the later temple was probably more magnificent and beautiful, considered architecturally, than the former ; but that it equalled or approached it in the abundance of its precious things, and the costliness of its materials, ornaments, and utensils, there is every reason to doubt, particularly when we compare the resources of Herod with those of David and Solomon. But, above all, the latter house wanted the Shechinah, or divine glory, which filled the former house, as well as the tables of the law, the pot of manna, &c. : and wanting these, we are firmly convinced that no Jew, before the later temple was destroyed, would for a moment have allowed that it exceeded the former in glory, even had he believed its material magnificence greater than that of Solomon's Temple. We have therefore no hesitation in believing that this important prophecy refers to the Messiah as "the Desire of all Nations," and predicts his coming in the times of the later temple. To what else, also—to what increase of temporal splendour or security—can we refer the declaration in verse 9, "In this place will I give peace, saith the LORD of Hosts" ? No other peace than that which Christ brought was ever given there.

9. "The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former."—As a sequel to the preceding note, we may here notice a difficulty which has been suggested in the view which it states. This is, that the house which the presence of the Messiah glorified, was not the same as that of which Haggai spoke, but a new one built by Herod. For we are informed by Josephus, that, before the birth of Christ, the temple built by the returned captives was pulled down, the very foundations being removed, and a new and larger structure erected by Herod. As, however, the Jewish writers are in the habit of speaking of improvements in a large sense—as when some kings are described as having "built" cities which we know to have been in previous existence, and which they merely improved or fortified—the statement of Josephus is quite open to the explanation—that Herod did not wholly rebuild the Temple, but repaired it generally and extensively, taking down certain parts that were decayed, and constructing them again on new foundations, and adding new buildings and walls ; completing, strengthening, and adorning the whole, on a regular plan. Such alterations and repairs, although very extensive, would not destroy the identity of the building. As we do not read of any alteration in the mode of celebrating the services of religion while these works were in progress, it is more than probable that the Holy Place at least remained standing ; and if so, this was alone sufficient to maintain the identity of the building, for that was essentially the "house," although it occupied but a small part of the site covered by the courts and buildings of the "Temple," in the extensive sense.

To this explanation, which is in substance that most usually given, we will venture to add the suggestion that the Hebrews did not consider the identity of a building destroyed unless when a new one was erected after the old one had lain for a time in a state of desolation, ruined and overthrown. Such an interval occurred between the destruction of Solomon's Temple and the foundation of a new one by the returned captives ; and the latter was therefore a second temple. But no such interval occurred between this and the temple built or improved by Herod ; and therefore the latter was not a third temple, but continued to be identified with the second. At all events, nothing is more certain than that the Jews did regard the temple which stood in the time of our Saviour, and which was destroyed by Titus, as the second temple ; and this is really all that is essential to be known. Even Josephus, on other occasions, regards it as the second temple with respect to that of Solomon ; as do all the Jewish writers who have occasion to make any distinction. And, still more, the early Jews, who did consider the present prophecy to refer to the advent of the Messiah, continued to expect that he would come in the time of Herod's Temple. Hence the mournful and memorable cry which the Rabbi Jose is said to have uttered when that temple was destroyed,—"Alas ! the time of the Messiah is past !"

CHAPTER I.

1 Zechariah exhorteth to repentance. 7 The vision of the horses. 12 At the prayer of the angel comfortable promises are made to Jerusalem. 18 The vision of the four horns, and the four carpenters.

N the eighth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD unto Zechariah, the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo the prophet, saying,

2 The LORD hath been 'sore displeased with your fathers.

3 Therefore say thou unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts; 'Turn ye unto me, saith the LORD of hosts, and I will turn unto you, saith the LORD of hosts.

4 Be ye not as your fathers, unto whom the former prophets have cried, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts; 'Turn ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doings: but they did not hear, nor hearken unto me, saith the LORD.

5 Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live for ever?

6 But my words and my statutes, which I commanded my servants the prophets, did they not 'take hold of your fathers? and they returned and said, 'Like as the LORD of hosts thought to do unto us, according to our ways, and according to our doings, so hath he dealt with us.

7 ¶ Upon the four and twentieth day of the eleventh month, which is the month Sebat, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD unto Zechariah, the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo the prophet, saying,

8 I saw by night, and behold a man riding upon a red horse, and he stood among the myrtle trees that were in the bottom; and behind him were there, red horses, 'speckled, and white.

9 Then said I, O my lord, what are these? And the angel that talked with me said unto me, I will shew thee what these be.

10 And the man that stood among the myrtle trees answered and said, These are they whom the LORD hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth.

11 And they answered the angel of the LORD that stood among the myrtle trees, and said, We have walked to and fro through the earth, and, behold, all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest.

12 ¶ Then the angel of the LORD answered and said, O LORD of hosts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation these threescore and ten years?

13 And the LORD answered the angel that talked with me with good words and comfortable words.

14 So the angel that communed with me said unto me, Cry thou, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts; I am 'jealous for Jerusalem and for Zion with a great jealousy.

20 And the LORD shewed me four carpenters.

21 Then said I, What come these to do? And he spake, saying, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, so that no man did lift up his head: but these are come to fray them, to cast out the horns of the Gentiles, which lifted up their horn over the land of Judah to scatter it.

ZECHARIAH.—FROM THE FRESCOS, BY MICHAEL ANGELO, IN THE SISTINE CHAPEL.

ZECHARIAH.—It appears from the prefixed inscription, that Zechariah was the contemporary of Haggai, beginning to prophesy two months after Haggai had delivered his commencing prophecy. He was, of course, one of that body which returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel. Although the names of his father and grandfather are given, we are not told to what tribe he belonged; nor are any particulars of his history supplied: for this Zechariah is not to be confounded with any other person of the same name mentioned in Scripture. It may be presumed from ch. ii. 4, that he was a young man when he commenced his prophetic career; but how long he lived or where he died, we know not. Traditions state that he was buried near Jerusalem; and with this concurs the existing belief which finds, in a remarkable monument in the Valley of Jehoshaphat, the tomb of Zechariah. Some further information concerning this monument will be found at the end of this book.

The object of Zechariah's prophecy is the same as that of Haggai's—to stimulate the returned captives to rebuild the temple and restore the regular worship of God; and to encourage their faith and hope by the promise of the Messiah. The Jews considered the style of Zechariah so remarkably similar to that of Jeremiah, that they were accustomed to observe that the spirit of the latter prophet had passed into him. His style is characterized by Bishop Lowth as generally prosaic: but “towards the conclusion of the prophecy there are some poetical passages, and those highly ornamented; they are also perspicuous, considering that they are the production of the most obscure of all the prophetic writers.”

Verse 8. “Myrtle.”—(מִדְבָּר) hadassim). The myrtle family abounds in trees of a most charming aspect. The foliage is generally of a polished green; and the leaves are punctured with a multitude of translucent spots, which are seen when they are interposed between the eye and the light. The flowers are of a snowy whiteness in some, as the Myrtus communis, or myrtle, for example; in others they grow in clusters, and glow with the richest tints of crimson, as in the Jambosa Malaccensis, or Malay apple. The stamens are numerous, and form circular rows of palisades about the pistil or central column, bestowing an elegant appearance upon the blossom. Many of them yield an edible fruit, as the Psidium and the Eugenia, the Guava and the Cayenne Cherry. But the transparent dots upon the leaves afford an easy and beautiful characteristic of the Myrtaceæ, while the whole of the numerous genera and species are connected together by the most intelligible features of neatness and grace. As they often grow in the shaded valleys, between two neighbouring mountains, where all is calm and tranquil, they naturally become associated in the mind with everything that is lovely and peaceful. The myrtle-trees offered a choice emblem of peace and quietude, and gave a living freshness to the annunciation of the angel, “We have walked to and fro through the earth, and, behold, all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest.”

HORNED HEAD-DRESSES.

18. “Horns.”—Here and in the following verses the “horn” occurs, as it frequently does in Scripture, as a symbol of power and exaltation. Hannah’s declaration (1 Sam. ii. 1), “Mine horn is exalted in the Lord,” gave us occasion to notice the horn, or tantoura, worn by the women of Lebanon and other places: and now we have the pleasure of introducing pictorial representations of these remarkable appendages of the head. The same cut contains, after Bruce, two portraits of Abyssinian chiefs, showing the horn which such persons attach to their heads, which practice seems founded on the idea of power, and particularly military power, attached to that symbol. They therefore illustrate rather the idea than anything else; for there does not appear much reason to conclude that the Hebrew chiefs or military commanders assumed a similar mark of distinction, although there is something remarkable in the fact that the false prophet Zedekiah “made him horns of iron;” and said to Ahab, to encourage him in his expedition against the Syrians, “With these shalt thou push the Syrians, until thou hast consumed them” (1 Kings xxii. 11). These “horns” attracted the particular attention of Bruce in a cavalcade, when he observed that the governors of provinces were distinguished by this head-dress. It consists of a large broad fillet, tied behind, from the centre of which is a horn, or conical piece of silver, gilt, about four inches long, and in its general appearance very much resembling a candle extinguisher. It is called kirn (just the same word in the Hebrew קִרְן keren), and is only worn at reviews, or parades, after a victory. The peculiar manner in which the wearers are obliged to hold their heads, when bearing this ornament, to prevent it from falling forward, agrees remarkably with the text, “Lift not your horn on high, speak not with a stiff neck.” (Ps. lxxv. 5.)

20. “Carpenters.”—This is perhaps too definite. The word חֹרֶשׁ cheresh, means generally any artificer in metal, stone, or wood, and it is better to take it in the general sense of “workmen,” as Newcome does here, unless when the context sufficiently indicates a more definite application. Some suppose that the present context so far does this as to warrant the conclusion that the workmen were smiths, represented as coming to destroy the horns, understanding these to have been of iron.

CHAPTER II.

1 God, in the care of Jerusalem, sendeth to measure it.
 6 The redemption of Zion. 10 The promise of God's presence.

I LIFTED up mine eyes again, and looked, and behold a man with a measuring line in his hand.

2 Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof.

3 And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him,

4 And said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein:

5 For I, saith the LORD, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her.

6 ¶ Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the LORD: for I have spread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, saith the LORD.

Verse 5. "A wall of fire round about."—It is not unlikely that this image may be derived from the very general custom, in places where danger is apprehended from wild beasts, for travellers to keep fires burning round their own resting-place to prevent their approach. Such a wall of fire round about a resting party is in general most effectual for their protection

7 Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon.

8 For thus saith the LORD of hosts; After the glory hath he sent me unto the nations which spoiled you: for he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye.

9 For, behold, I will shake mine hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants: and ye shall know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me.

10 ¶ Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the LORD.

11 And many nations shall be joined to the LORD in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto thee.

12 And the LORD shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again.

13 Be silent, O all flesh, before the LORD: for he is raised up out of his holy habitation.

from beasts of prey, in consequence of the dread with which fire is regarded by all wild animals; although examples are recorded in which the more powerful beasts, rendered desperate by famine, have defied the obstruction which the fiery barrier offered, and rushed through its flames upon their prey.

CHAPTER III.

1 Under the type of Joshua, the restoration of the church,
 8 Christ the Branch is promised.

AND he shewed me Joshua the high priest standing before the angel of the LORD, and Satan standing at his right hand to resist him.

2 And the LORD said unto Satan, The LORD rebuke thee, O Satan; even the LORD that hath chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee: is not this a brand plucked out of the fire?

3 Now Joshua was clothed with filthy garments, and stood before the angel.

4 And he answered and spake unto those that stood before him, saying, Take away the filthy garments from him. And unto him he said, Behold, I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with change of raiment.

5 And I said, Let them set a fair mitre upon his head. So they set a fair mitre upon his head, and clothed him with garments. And the angel of the LORD stood by.

6 And the angel of the LORD protested unto Joshua, saying,

7 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; If thou wilt walk in my ways, and if thou wilt keep my charge, then thou shalt also judge my house, and shalt also keep my courts, and I will give thee 'places to walk among these that stand by.

8 Hear now, O Joshua the high priest, thou, and thy fellows that sit before thee: for they are 'men wondered at; for, behold, I will bring forth my servant the 'BRANCH.

9 For behold the stone that I have laid before Joshua; upon one stone shall be seven eyes: behold, I will engrave the graving thereof, saith the LORD of hosts, and I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day.

10 In that day, saith the LORD of hosts, shall ye call every man his neighbour under the vine and under the fig tree.

⁷ Isa. 11. 1. Jer. 23. 5, and 33. 15. Chap. 6. 12. Luke 1. 78.

Verse 4. "Take away the filthy garments from him."—There are sufficient intimations in Scripture that it was a custom among the Hebrews for persons in a condition of mourning, humiliation, or degradation, to clothe themselves in mean and neglected attire; but, on the contrary, to express a state of rejoicing, happiness, and relief, by rich and gay apparel. The ideas connected with this custom appear to be involved in the present passage. The practice still prevails in the East, and in ancient times was not by any means confined to the Orientals. It was common among the Romans, whose usages in this matter are applied by Gill with good effect to the illustration of the present passage. When a man was charged with capital crimes, it was usual for him to neglect his hair and beard, and to wear filthy, ragged garments, presenting altogether a very sordid and dirty appearance. Hence such persons were called sordidati. In such attire he appeared before his judges to take his trial; and not only himself, but his friends and relations appeared with him, with hair dishevelled, and in garments old and foul, weeping and deprecating punishment, hoping thus to move the compassion of the people. Hence history does not omit to record the fact of certain eminent men (as Scipio Africanus) who, in the pride of conscious innocence of the crimes laid to their charge, refused to assume the mean attire and appearance of arraigned persons, but continued to wear their customary dress, and shaved their beards as usual, or even put on attire richer than their customary wear. A somewhat remarkable illustration, with a reverse application, might perhaps be taken from the instance of the Rhodian ambassadors, who put on the white robes of congratulation when they heard of a victory gained by the Romans; but instantly changed them for sordid and mean attire as soon as they understood that the Rhodian people had not been thought to have acted the part of friends and allies, or to have deserved well of the Roman people. (Liv. Hist. l. xlv. c. 20.)

CHAPTER IV.

1 By the golden candlestick is foreshewed the good success of Zerubbabel's foundation. 11 By the two olive trees the two anointed ones.

AND the angel that talked with me came again, and waked me, as a man that is wakened out of his sleep,

2 And said unto me, What seest thou? And I said, I have looked, and behold a candlestick all of gold, 'with a bowl upon the top of it, and his seven lamps thereon, and 'seven pipes to the seven lamps, which are upon the top thereof:

3 And two olive trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof.

4 So I answered and spake to the angel that talked with me, saying, What are these, my lord?

5 Then the angel that talked with me answered and said unto me, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my lord.

6 Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the word of the LORD unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by 'might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the LORD of hosts.

7 Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain: and he shall bring forth the headstone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it.

8 Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

9 The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house; his hands shall also finish it; and thou shalt know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto you.

10 For who hath despised the day of small things? 'for they shall rejoice, and shall see the 'plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel with those seven; 'they are the eyes of the LORD, which run to and fro through the whole earth.

11 ¶ Then answered I, and said unto him, What are these two olive trees upon the right side of the candlestick and upon the left side thereof?

CHAPTER V.

1 By the flying roll is shewed the curse of thieves and swearers. 5 By a woman pressed in an ephah, the final damnation of Babylon.

THEN I turned, and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and behold a flying roll.

2 And he said unto me, What seest thou? And I answered, I see a flying roll; the length thereof is twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof ten cubits.

3 Then said he unto me, This is the curse that goeth forth over the face of the whole earth: for ¹every one that stealeth shall be cut off as on this side according to it; and every one that sweareth shall be cut off as on that side according to it.

4 I will bring it forth, saith the LORD of hosts, and it shall enter into the house of the thief, and into the house of him that sweareth falsely by my name: and it shall remain in the midst of his house, and shall consume it with the timber thereof and the stones thereof.

5 ¶ Then the angel that talked with me went forth, and said unto me, Lift up now thine eyes, and see what is this that goeth forth.

6 And I said, What is it? And he said, This is an ephah that goeth forth. He said moreover, This is their resemblance through all the earth.

7 And, behold, there was lifted up a ²talent of lead: and this is a woman that sitteth in the midst of the ephah.

8 And he said, This is wickedness. And he cast it into the midst of the ephah; and he cast the weight of lead upon the mouth thereof.

9 Then lifted I up mine eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came out two women, and the wind was in their wings; for they had wings like the wings of a stork: and they lifted up the ephah between the earth and the heaven.

10 Then said I to the angel that talked with me, Whither do these bear the ephah?

11 And he said unto me, To build it an house in the land of Shinar: and it shall be established, and set there upon her own base.

Verse 4. "It shall enter into the house of the thief, and ... of him that sweareth falsely ... and shall consume it."—Calmet observes that, under the two names of thief and false swearer, the Hebrews and Chaldeans comprehended all other crimes; theft denoting every kind of injustice and violence executed against men; and perjury, all crimes against God. Grotius and others have observed a considerable resemblance between this text and a passage in Herodotus (Erato, 86), in which Leotychides relates to the Athenians an anecdote of a man called Glaucus, who, being desirous of appropriating to his own use a sum of money which had been intrusted to him, consulted the Pythian oracle whether he might do so by taking a false oath—the money having been claimed by the sons of the owner. The oracle answered:—

"Son of Epicyles! your oath retains,
Just for the moment, all the plunder'd gains.
Swear then; for death alike the just—the knave
Lays undistinguished in the silent grave.
But the False Oath a direful monster sends,
Which, footless, hastens—which, though handless, rends
His house and offspring whom the gods detest, While his, who fears an oath, are ever blest."

TAYLOR'S Translation.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The vision of the four chariots. 9 By the crowns of Joshua are shewed the temple and kingdom of Christ the Branch.

AND I turned, and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came four chariots out from between two mountains; and the mountains were mountains of brass.

2 In the first chariot were red horses ; and in the second chariot black horses ;

3 And in the third chariot white horses ; and in the fourth chariot grisled and ¹bay horses.

4 Then I answered and said unto the angel that talked with me, What are these, my lord ?

5 And the angel answered and said unto me, These are the four ²spirits of the heavens, which go forth from standing before the LORD of all the earth.

6 The black horses which are therein go forth into the north country ; and the white go forth after them ; and the grisled go forth toward the south country.

7 And the bay went forth, and sought to go that they might walk to and fro through the earth : and he said, Get you hence, walk to and fro through the earth. So they walked to and fro through the earth.

8 Then cried he upon me, and spake unto me, saying, Behold, these that go toward the north country have quieted my spirit in the north country.

9 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

10 Take of them of the captivity, even of Heldai, of Tobijah, and of Jedaiah, which are come from Babylon, and come thou the same day, and go into the house of Josiah the son of Zephaniah ;

11 Then take silver and gold, and make crowns, and set them upon the head of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest ;

12 And speak unto him, saying, Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, saying, Behold the man whose name is The ³BRANCH ; and he shall ⁴grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the LORD :

13 Even he shall build the temple of the LORD ; and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne ; and he shall be a priest upon his throne : and the counsel of peace shall be between them both.

14 And the crowns shall be to Helem, and to Tobijah, and to Jedaiah, and to Hen the son of Zephaniah, for a memorial in the temple of the LORD.

15 And they that are far off shall come and build in the temple of the LORD, and ye shall know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto you. And this shall come to pass, if ye will diligently obey the voice of the LORD your God.

² Or, winds.

³ Chap. 3. 8.

⁴ Or, branch up from under him.

Verse 1. "Four chariots."—It is generally understood, both by Jewish and Christian interpreters, that these chariots denote the four great empires—the Babylonian, Persian, Greek, and Roman—which successively arose in the world. The larger commentaries sometimes seek reasons for the distinguishing colours in the horses of the several chariots ; but we do not see that any reliance can be placed on the explanatory conjectures which have been offered.

12. "The BRANCH."—Some of the Jewish writers understand that this title is applied to Zerubbabel himself. But he was already grown up in his place ; and the application to him is so greatly and obviously improper, that it has not been much followed. Most of the Jewish interpreters and all the Christian apply it to the Messiah ; and of the correctness of this application no reasonable doubt can be entertained. (See the marginal references.) "The Branch" is a name frequently applied to the Messiah in the Talmud and other Jewish writings.

CHAPTER VII.

1 The captives enquire of fasting. 4 Zechariah reproveth their fasting. 8 Sin the cause of their captivity.

AND it came to pass in the fourth year of king Darius, that the word of the LORD came unto Zechariah in the fourth day of the ninth month, even in Chisleu ;

2 When they had sent unto the house of God Sherezer and Regem-melech, and their men, ¹to pray before the LORD,

3 And to speak unto the priests which were in the house of the LORD of hosts, and to the prophets, saying, Should I weep in the fifth month, separating myself, as I have done these so many years ?

4 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD of hosts unto me, saying, even those seventy years, did ye at all fast unto me, even to me?

6 And when ye did eat, and when ye did drink, ³did not ye eat for yourselves, and drink for yourselves?

7 'Should ye not hear the words which the LORD hath cried ⁵by the former prophets, when Jerusalem was inhabited and in prosperity, and the cities thereof round about her, when men inhabited the south and the plain?

8 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto Zechariah, saying,

9 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, saying, ⁶Execute true judgment, and shew mercy and compassions every man to his brother:

10 And ⁷oppress not the widow, nor the fatherless, the stranger, nor the poor; and let none of you imagine evil against his brother in your heart.

11 But they refused to hearken, and ⁸pulled away the shoulder, and ⁹stopped their ears, that they should not hear.

12 Yea, they made their hearts as an adamant stone, lest they should hear the law, and the words which the LORD of hosts hath sent in his spirit ¹⁰by the former prophets: therefore came a great wrath from the LORD of hosts.

13 Therefore it is come to pass, that as he cried, and they would not hear; so ¹¹they cried, and I would not hear, saith the LORD of hosts:

14 But I scattered them with a whirlwind among all the nations whom they knew not. Thus the land was desolate after them, that no man passed through nor returned: for they laid the ¹²pleasant land desolate.

Verse 5. "When ye fasted...in the fifth and seventh month."—This is one of several allusions in Zechariah to anniversary fast-days concerning which we cannot do better than transcribe the following from Jahn's 'Archæologia Biblica,' ch. iii. sect. 357. "The Hebrews, in the early period of their history, were in the habit of fasting whenever they met with any adverse occurrences (Judg. xx. 26; 1 Sam. vii. 6; xxxi. 13; 2 Sam. iii. 35; Isa. lviii. 3—12). But it was not till about the time of the Captivity that they introduced anniversary fast-days. The days to which we allude are as follows:—

I. The seventeenth day of the fourth month, namely, Tammuz, or July. This fast was instituted in memory of the capture of Jerusalem; Jer. liii. 6, et seq.; Zech. viii. 19.

II. The ninth day of the fifth month, Ab, or August, in memory of the burning of the Temple; Zech. vii. 3; viii. 19.

III. The third day of the seventh month, Tishri, or October, in memory of the death of Gedaliah; Jer. xl. 4; Zech. vii. 5; viii. 19.

IV. The tenth day of the tenth month, Tebeth, or January, in memory of the commencement of the attack on Jerusalem; Zech. viii. 19.

The prophet Zechariah, in reference to inquiries which were made to him, asserted that these mournful occasions were, at some future time, to be converted into festivals of joy; but the Jews, notwithstanding, have ever continued to observe them as fasts." They expect this change to take place in the days of the, by them, still expected Messiah.

It will be recollected that only one annual public fast, that of the day of atonement, was instituted by the Law of Moses; but several instances occur in Scripture of extraordinary public fasts, appointed by the authority of the civil magistrate (1 Sam. vii. 5. 6; 2 Chron. xx. 3; Jer. xxxvi. 9). Thus the present were the first annual fasts held in commemoration of public calamities which befel the nation. It is observable of the second, that the Jews fast on the ninth Ab, not only for the destruction of the first but of the second Temple; as they are persuaded that both events took place on the same day of the same month.

7. "The south and the plain."—The south explains itself; the plain means the western part of Judea, being the same as the valley of Josh. xv. 33: see the note there.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 The restoration of Jerusalem. 9 They are encouraged to the building by God's favour to them. 16 Good works are required of them. 18 Joy and enlargement are promised.

AGAIN the word of the LORD of hosts came to me, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; 'I was jealous for Zion with great jealousy, and I was jealous for her with great fury.

3 Thus saith the LORD; I am returned unto Zion, and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem: and Jerusalem shall be called a city of truth; and the mountain of the LORD of hosts the holy mountain.

4 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; There shall yet old men and old women dwell in the streets of Jerusalem, and every man with his staff in his hand ²for very age.

5 And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof.

6 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; If it be ³marvellous in the eyes of the remnant of this people in these days, should it also be marvellous in mine eyes? saith the LORD of hosts.

7 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Behold, I will save my people from the east country, and from ⁴the west country;

8 And I will bring them, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God, in truth and in righteousness.

9 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Let your hands be strong, ye that hear in these days these words by the mouth of the prophets, which were in the day that the foundation of the house of the LORD of hosts was laid, that the temple might be built.

10 For before these days ⁵there was no ⁶hire for man, nor any hire for beast; neither was there any peace to him that went out or came in because of the affliction: for I set all men every one against his neighbour.

11 But now I will not be unto the residue of this people as in the former days, saith the LORD of hosts.

12 For the seed shall be ⁷prosperous; the vine shall give her fruit, and the ground shall give her increase, and the heavens shall give their dew; and I will cause the remnant of this people to possess all these things.

13 And it shall come to pass, that as ye were a curse among the heathen, O house of Judah, and house of Israel; so will I save you, and ye shall be a blessing: fear not, but let your hands be strong.

14 For thus saith the LORD of hosts; As I thought to punish you, when your fathers provoked me to wrath, saith the LORD of hosts, and I repented not:

15 So again have I thought in these days to do well unto Jerusalem and to the house of Judah: fear ye not.

16 ¶ These are the things that ye shall do; ⁸Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbour; ⁹execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates:

17 And let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbour; and love no false oath: for all these are things that I hate, saith the LORD.

18 ¶ And the word of the LORD of hosts came unto me, saying,

19 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; The fast of the fourth month, and the fast of the fifth, and the fast of the seventh, and the fast of the tenth, shall be to the house of Judah joy and gladness, and cheerful ¹⁰feasts; therefore love the truth and peace.

20 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; It shall yet come to pass, that there shall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities:

21 And the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, ¹¹Let us go ¹²¹³speedily ¹⁴to pray before the LORD, and to seek the LORD of hosts: I will go also.

22 Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the LORD of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the LORD.

23 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you.

constraint involved, such perhaps as appears in Jacob's declaration to the angel, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me."

CHAPTER IX.

1 God defendeth his church. 9 Zion is exhorted to rejoice for the coming of Christ, and his peaceable kingdom. 12 God's promises of victory and defence.

THE burden of the word of the LORD in the land of Hadrach, and Damascus shall be the rest thereof: when the eyes of man, as of all the tribes of Israel, shall be toward the LORD.

2 And Hamath also shall border thereby; Tyrus, and Zidon, though it be very 'wise.

3 And Tyrus did build herself a strong hold, and heaped up silver as the dust, and fine gold as the mire of the streets.

4 Behold, the LORD will cast her out, and he will smite her power in the sea; and she shall be devoured with fire.

5 Ashkelon shall see it, and fear; Gaza also shall see it, and be very sorrowful, and Ekron; for her expectation shall be ashamed; and the king shall perish from Gaza, and Ashkelon shall not be inhabited.

6 And a bastard shall dwell in Ashdod, and I will cut off the pride of the Philistines.

7 And I will take away his 'blood out of his mouth, and his abominations from between his teeth: but he that remaineth, even he, shall be for our God, and he shall be as a governor in Judah, and Ekron as a Jebusite.

8 And I will encamp about mine house because of the army, because of him that passeth by, and because of him that returneth: and no oppressor shall pass through them any more: for now have I seen with mine eyes.

9 ¶ 'Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he is just, and 'having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass.

10 And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the horse from Jerusalem, and the battle bow shall be cut off: and he shall speak peace unto the heathen: and his dominion shall be 'from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth.

11 As for thee also, 'by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy 'prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water.

12 ¶ Turn you to the strong hold, ye prisoners of hope: even to day do I declare that I will render double unto thee;

13 When I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece, and made thee as the sword of a mighty man.

14 And the LORD shall be seen over them, and his arrow shall go forth as the lightning: and the Lord God shall blow the trumpet, and shall go with whirlwinds of the south.

15 The LORD of hosts shall defend them; and they shall devour, and 'subdue with sling stones; and they shall drink, and make a noise as through wine; and they 'shall be filled like bowls, and as the corners of the altar.

16 And the LORD their God shall save them in that day as the flock of his people: for they shall be as the stones of a crown, lifted up as an ensign upon his land.

17 For how great is his goodness, and how great is his beauty! corn shall make the young men 'cheerful, and new wine the maids.

Verse 9. "Lowly, and riding upon an ass."—This, which was literally fulfilled by Christ, affords an interesting intimation that riding on horseback had at this time become so familiar to the Jews, that riding on an ass had come to be considered an act of humility and lowliness. In short, they had arrived at much the same ideas on the subject as are still entertained in the East, and which we have already had different opportunities of explaining. The ass is not by any means despised; but so much dignity and consequence is attached to riding on horseback, that men of moderate means will submit to great discomforts in order to keep one or more horses: and hence, for one who can obtain a horse, to prefer to ride on an ass, is considered a manifestation of great humbleness of mind. Hence, in Persia, for example, the ecclesiastics (so to call them) who have not yet attained to any high station, and wish to convey the impression of their humble and self-denying character, make it a point to ride on asses.

11, "The pit wherein is no water."—Evidently a dry well or cistern used as a prison.

13. "Greece."—In the original Javan (נִי) by which the Greeks are usually understood. In the present instance it is generally supposed to denote the Syro-Macedonians, with whom the Jews had such bitter conflicts in the times of the Maccabees. Archbishop Newcome, however, conceives the language employed to be too strong for these events; and is therefore disposed to place this among the prophecies which remain to be fulfilled in future time. But the former explanation does still seem preferable.

15. "Corners of the altar."—The blood of the sacrifices was poured out upon the "horns" or corners of the altar. (Lev. iv. 25.) To this the prophet seems to allude.

16. "The stones of a crown."—The Vulgate has lapides sancti, sacred stones; which is the sense conveyed by all the ancient versions, which appear to have understood the prophet to refer to such stones, or heaps of stones, as the Hebrews were accustomed to set up in commemoration of blessings conferred or promised, or of victories obtained. These were sometimes anointed; but at any rate were separated, set apart or consecrated to a particular purpose. Hence, Blayney has "consecrated stones;" Houbigant, after Capellus, "crowned stones,"—supposing them to have been stones set up as trophies, and crowned with garlands, a practice of which we find nothing in Scripture; Newcome, "crowned trophies;" Boothroyd, simply "trophies." The difference of these versions is less than may appear, as they all agree that the stones in question were stones of memorial.

CHAPTER X.

1 God is to be sought unto, and not idols. 5 As he visited his flock for sin, so he will save and restore them.

ASK ye of the LORD rain in the time of the latter rain; so the LORD shall make 'bright clouds, and give them showers of rain, to every one grass in the field.

2 For the 'idols have spoken vanity, and the diviners have seen a lie, and have told false dreams; they comfort in vain: therefore they went their way as a flock, they 'were troubled, because there was no shepherd.

3 Mine anger was kindled against the shepherds, and I 'punished the goats: for the LORD of hosts hath visited his flock the house of Judah, and hath made them as his goodly horse in the battle.

4 Out of him came forth the corner, out of him the nail, out of him the battle bow, out of him every oppressor together.

5 ¶ And they shall be as mighty men, which tread down their enemies in the mire of the streets in the battle: and they shall fight, because the LORD is with them, and 'the riders on horses shall be confounded.

6 And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and I will save the house of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them; for I have mercy upon them: and they shall be as though I had not cast them off: for I am the LORD their God, and will hear them.

7 And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, and their heart shall rejoice as through wine: yea, their children shall see it, and be glad; their heart shall rejoice in the LORD.

8 I will hiss for them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them: and they shall increase as they have increased.

9 And I will sow them among the people: and they shall remember me in far countries; and they shall live with their children, and turn again.

10 I will bring them again also out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Assyria; and I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon; and place shall not be found for them.

11 And he shall pass through the sea with affliction, and shall smite the waves in the sea, and all the deeps of the river shall dry up: and the pride of Assyria shall be brought down, and the sceptre of Egypt shall depart away.

12 And I will strengthen them in the LORD; and they shall walk up and down in his name, saith the LORD.

OPEN thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars.

a voice of the roaring of young lions; for the pride of Jordan is spoiled.

4 Thus saith the LORD my God; Feed the flock of the slaughter;

5 Whose possessors slay them, and hold themselves not guilty: and they that sell them say, Blessed be the LORD; for I am rich: and their own shepherds pity them not.

6 For I will no more pity the inhabitants of the land, saith the LORD: but, lo, I will ³deliver the men every one into his neighbour's hand, and into the hand of his king: and they shall smite the land, and out of their hand I will not deliver them.

7 And I will feed the flock of slaughter, ⁴*even* you, O poor of the flock. And I took unto me two staves; the one I called Beauty, and the other I called ⁵Bands; and I fed the flock.

8 Three shepherds also I cut off in one month; and my soul ⁶loathed them, and their soul also abhorred me.

9 Then said I, I will not feed you: ⁷that that dieth, let it die; and that that is to be cut off, let it be cut off; and let the rest eat every one the flesh ⁸of another.

10 ¶ And I took my staff, even Beauty, and cut it asunder, that I might break my covenant which I had made with all the people.

11 And it was broken in that day: and ⁹so the poor of the flock that waited upon me knew that it was the word of the LORD.

12 And I said unto them, ¹⁰If ye think good, give me my price; and if not, forbear. So they ¹¹weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver.

13 And the LORD said unto me, Cast it unto the ¹²potter: a goodly price that I was prised at of them. And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them to the potter in the house of the LORD.

14 Then I cut asunder mine other staff, even ¹³Bands, that I might break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel.

15 ¶ And the LORD said unto me, Take unto thee yet the instruments of a foolish shepherd.

16 For, lo, I will raise up a shepherd in the land, which shall not visit those that be ¹⁴cut off, neither shall seek the young one, nor heal that that is broken, nor ¹⁵feed that that standeth still: but he shall eat the flesh of the fat, and tear their claws in pieces.

Verse 1. "Lebanon...thy cedars."—Without now again adverting to the question whether the עֵץ אֶרֶז of Scripture should be identified with the tree called the cedar of Lebanon, we shall take this opportunity of noticing what are considered the remains, or rather the humbled representatives, of those forests of cedars which existed in Lebanon; and concerning which it is particularly observable that the natives give to them the Scriptural name Arsileban.

These trees occur in a clump or small wood, upon uneven ground, at the foot of the steep declivities of those higher divisions of the mountain, the summits of which command noble and extensive views over the whole region. The situation of the place may be marked by its vicinity to the village of Bshirrai, which stands about three miles to the west, on a spot less elevated. The village of Eden, Eddin, or Eydhén, as it is differently spelt, and that of Kanobin, the seat of the Maronite Patriarch, are also in the neighbourhood, though more distant than Bshirrai—the one to the north of the cedars, and the other to the north-west. The trees are now few in number; and, from the statements of different travellers, it would appear that the largest and oldest have remained for several centuries in nearly the same state as at present. Dr.

Harris, indeed, in his 'Natural History of the Bible,' and some other writers, have given statements from different travellers, to show that the trees had decreased from 28 to 24, from the middle to the end of the sixteenth century; from 24 to 16, during the seventeenth century; and from 16 to 7, from 1699 to 1818. But, on comparing for ourselves, there seems to have been a much less diminution, as the older travellers, in giving their numbers, include all the larger trees; and the moderns say that there are still 25 or 20 (Burckhardt, Buckingham), but distinguish that among these large ones there are from seven to twelve enormously large. The accounts therefore of the old and recent travellers differ little as to the number of the greater and older trees. In evidence of this view, it may be enough to quote William Biddulph, who was at the spot near the end of the sixteenth century, and like other travellers of the time, counted 24 large trees; and it is clear that he counted all the large ones that he saw. "From Eden we rode ten miles further up the mountayne, to see certayne cedar trees, where we saw foure and twentie cedar trees growing together, as bigge as the greatest oakes, with divers rowes of branches one over another, stretching straight out, as though they were kept by art. Although we read of great store of cedars which have grown on Mount Lybanus, yet now there are very few, for we saw none but these four and twenty, neither heard we of any other but in one place more." From this it would seem that these twenty-four were not only all the larger cedars, but the only cedars he saw; and if this be correct, it would show not merely the correctness of our inference, but, beyond this, that the cedars have actually increased rather than diminished; those of the middling and small size, which now appear together with the great ones, having grown up since the time of his visit. Burckhardt's statement, dated in 1810, is that there were then eleven or twelve of the oldest and best-looking trees, twenty-five very large ones, about fifty of the middling size, and more than three hundred smaller and young ones. "The oldest trees are distinguished by foliage and small branches at the top only, and by four, five, or even seven trunks springing from one base: the branches and foliage of the others were lower, but I saw none whose leaves touched the ground, like those in Kew Gardens. The trunks of the old trees are covered with the names of travellers and other persons who have visited them: I saw a date of the seventeenth century. The trunks of the oldest trees seem to be quite dead; the wood is of a grey tint." Of the many descriptions which travellers have supplied, the following from Dr. Richardson seems best calculated to give the reader a general idea of the scene. In descending from the higher summit of Lebanon, "The descent is rather precipitous, and winds by a long circuitous direction down the side of the mountain. In a few minutes we came in sight of the far-famed cedars, that lay before us on our right. At first they appeared like a dark spot on the base of the mountain, and afterwards like a clump of dwarfish shrubs, that possessed neither dignity nor beauty, nor anything to entitle them to a visit but the name. In about an hour and a half we reached them. They are large and tall, and beautiful, the most picturesque productions of the vegetable creation that we had ever seen. There are in this clump two generations of trees; the oldest are large and massy, rearing their heads to an enormous height, and spreading their branches afar. We measured one of them, which we afterwards saw was not the largest in the clump, and found it thirty-two feet in circumference. Seven of these trees have a particularly ancient appearance; the rest are younger, but equally tall, though, for want of space, their branches are not so spreading; yet the spectator views them with an elevation and warmth of heart, and feels as if he were introduced to the venerable descendants of an illustrious family, who, tired with the persecution and assaults of fortune, had taken up their abode in this sequestered and sunny spot, which they hallow by their presence, where they grow uncontaminated, and look with a lordly pre-eminence over the ground which, in better days, their ancestors called their own. The clump is so small that a person may walk round it in half an hour. The old cedars are not found in any other part of Lebanon. Young trees are occasionally met with; they are very productive, and cast many seeds annually. The surface all around is covered with rock and stone, with a partial but luxuriant vegetation springing up in the interstices."

2. "Fir tree...cedar...oaks."—In the preceding note we have introduced the cedar of Lebanon, conformably to our impression that the Hebrew name עֵרֶץ erez, was a general name for trees of the kind to which the cedar belonged, and therefore including the cedar without being confined to that tree in particular. In like manner, the word rendered "fir-tree" (ברוש berosh) need not perhaps be limited to any particular species. We have already illustrated it as possibly represented by the Pinus laricio (Isa. xli. 19; Ezek. xxvii. 5), but would not contend that it might not comprehend the Pinus sylvestris, or Scotch fir, and other kindred trees. And then as to the אֵלֹן allon, rendered "oak," we have in other places been disposed to identify it with the terebinth-tree; yet still we think that it may be a general word for all very large trees other than pines, and therefore sometimes meaning an oak; and we are strengthened in this opinion by finding that the same word, with a slight alteration, denotes a tree in general, in the Syriac language. One thing is certain, that the oak (Quercus robur) and the Scotch fir (Pinus sylvestris) are trees of Palestine; and therefore we are quite safe when now, in accommodation to different views, we add to our previous illustrations a group of these trees, which, if they be unnecessary to assist the eye in discrimination, will serve to impress upon the mind the fact that they are probably alluded to in connection with others, if they have not a special mention in the Scriptures.

10. "I took my staff... and cut it asunder, that I might break my covenant."—The idea of breaking or cutting a staff or wand, in token of the termination of an engagement or obligation, happens to be one that is very familiar to ourselves. The memory and meaning of what was an act among our fathers, is still preserved; for while this work has been in progress our readers have had occasion to learn that, at the funeral of our sovereign, the great officers of the royal household break over the grave their wands of office, to denote the termination of their functions and obligations. That their duties and engagements were undertaken under the sanction of an oath, gives the more force to this illustration, as the breaking of the staves seems, in connection with this circumstance, to be designed to express the final disruption of a sworn covenant. In the present text, and in the obvious and literal acceptance, the breaking of the staff appears to express the termination of the engagement of the shepherd who had been out to the pasture grounds with the flock.

12. "Give me my price."—The price of his services as a shepherd. We have explained, on former occasions, that the shepherds to whom the flocks are intrusted often remain long abroad with them in distant pastures.

"They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver."—Most commentators observe that this was the price of a slave in the time of Moses (Exod. xxi. 32); and therefore infer the unworthiness of the price. But the inference does not seem to us just; and indeed we should rather draw a contrary inference from this very circumstance. For a slave is generally costly and valuable; and if therefore they gave for the services of a shepherd, during one season in which he had been out with the flock, such a sum as would have purchased the perpetual services of a slave, they must have considered that they were making him a very fair remuneration. Their mistake probably lay in their acting as in a matter of real business, without understanding of, or reference to, the figurative and typical meaning of the prophet. Thus, that which would have been sufficient in a real affair of the nature described, would have been utterly unworthy—as all price must have been—when understood with reference to the latent and ulterior meaning. That meaning cannot be otherwise explained than as referring to the circumstances which attended the betrayal of Christ by Judas—the price at which he was valued by the chief priests—and the use to which that price was finally applied. Indeed the Evangelist expressly declares the present passage to be a prediction which was fulfilled on the occasion mentioned. (Matt. xxvii. 9, 10.)

CHAPTER XII.

1 Jerusalem a cup of trembling to herself, 3 and a burdensome stone to her adversaries. 6 The victorious restoring of Judah. 9 The repentance of Jerusalem.

THE burden of the word of the LORD for Israel, saith the LORD, which stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and formeth the spirit of man within him.

2 Behold, I will make Jerusalem a cup of ¹trembling unto all the people round about, ²when they shall be in the siege both against Judah and against Jerusalem.

3 ¶ And in that day will I make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people: all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it.

4 In that day, saith the LORD, I will smite every horse with astonishment, and his rider with madness: and I will open mine eyes upon the house of Judah, and will smite every horse of the people with blindness.

5 And the governors of Judah shall say in their heart, ³The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be my strength in the LORD of hosts their God.

6 ¶ In that day will I make the governors of Judah like an hearth of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire in a sheaf; and they shall devour all the people round about, on the right hand and on the left: and Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem.

7 The LORD also shall save the tents of Judah first, that the glory of the house of David and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem do not magnify themselves against Judah.

8 In that day shall the LORD defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and he that is ⁴'feeble among them at that day shall be as David; and the house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the LORD before them.

9 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem.

10 And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall ⁵'look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his firstborn.

11 In that day shall there be a great ⁶'mourning in Jerusalem, ⁷as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon.

12 And the land shall mourn, ⁸'every family apart; the family of the house of David apart, and their wives apart; the family of the house of Nathan apart, and their wives apart;

13 The family of the house of Levi apart, and their wives apart; the family of Shimei apart, and their wives apart;

14 All the families that remain, every family apart, and their wives apart.

Verse 3. "A burdensome stone."—It is not impossible that this allusion may be explained by a custom which Jerome describes as common in his time throughout Judea. Large and heavy round stones were kept in the towns and villages; and the youths exercised themselves in a sort of game which consisted in lifting such a stone; he who lifted it highest being the victor. This exercise differed from the common ones of the athletæ of Greece and Rome. However, something like it was not unknown; for Jerome goes on to say, that in the tower at Athens, near the statue of Minerva, he had seen a heavy globe of brass which he was himself unable to move; but on inquiring its use, he was told that it was employed for testing the strength of the wrestlers; none being admitted as combatants till it was ascertained, by their lifting of this weight, with whom they should be matched. This reminds us that, in the piratical states of Barbary, when European captives were brought in to be disposed of as slaves, they were often compelled by their captors, or intended purchasers, to afford evidence of their strength by raising large and most burdensome stones provided for the purpose.

11. "The mourning of Hadadrimmon."—This was the great mourning for Josiah, 2 Chron. xxxv. 22—25. Jerome says that Hadad-rimmon was the name of a place which, in his time, went by the name of Maximianopolis, so called in honour of the emperor Maximian, and which was situated seventeen miles from Cæsarea and ten miles from Jezreel. This was perhaps the exact place, in the valley or plain of Megiddo, where Josiah was slain.

CHAPTER XIII.

¹ The fountain of purgation for Jerusalem, 2 from idolatry, and false prophecy. 7 The death of Christ, and the trial of a third part.

IN that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness.

2 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the LORD of hosts, that I will cut off the names of the idols out of the land, and they shall no more be remembered: and also I will cause the prophets and the unclean spirit to pass out of the land.

3 And it shall come to pass, that when any shall yet prophesy, then his father and his mother that begat him shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live; for thou speakest lies in the name of the LORD: and his father and his mother that begat him shall thrust him through when he prophesieth.

4 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the prophets shall be ashamed every one of his vision, when he hath prophesied;

neither shall they wear ^a rough garment to deceive:

5 But he shall say, I am no prophet, I am an husbandman; for man taught me to keep cattle from my youth.

6 And one shall say unto him, What are these wounds in thine hands? Then he shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends.

7 ¶ Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith the LORD of hosts: smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered: and I will turn mine hand upon the little ones.

8 And it shall come to pass, that in all the land, saith the LORD, two parts therein shall be cut off and die; but the third shall be left therein.

9 And I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried: they shall call on my name, and I will hear them: I will say, It is my people: and they shall say, The LORD is my God.

Verse 4. "Wear a rough garment to deceive."—It appears from various passages of Scripture, that the prophets usually wore a rough or hairy garment; and it would seem that the deception of which Zechariah here speaks was, that the false prophets, to complete their imposition on the people, assumed the outward garb by which prophets were distinguished.

CHAPTER XIV.

¹ The destroyers of Jerusalem destroyed. 4 The coming of Christ, and the graces of his kingdom. 12 The plague of Jerusalem's enemies. 16 The remnant shall turn to the Lord, 20 and their spoils shall be holy.

BEHOLD, the day of the LORD cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee.

2 For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.

3 Then shall the LORD go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle.

4 ¶ And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south.

5 And ye shall flee to the valley of the mountains; for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal: yea, ye shall flee, like as ye fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah king of Judah: and the LORD my God shall come, and all the saints with thee.

that the light shall not be 'clear, nor 'dark:

7 But 'it shall be 'one day which shall be known to the LORD, not day, nor night: but it shall come to pass, that at 'evening time it shall be light.

8 And it shall be in that day, that living 'waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the ¹⁰former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea: in summer and in winter shall it be.

9 And the LORD shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one LORD, and his name one.

10 All the land shall be ¹¹turned as a plain from Geba to Rimmon south of Jerusalem: and it shall be lifted up, and ¹²inhabited in her place, from Benjamin's gate unto the place of the first gate, unto the corner gate, and from the tower of Hanneel unto the king's winepresses.

11 And men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction; but Jerusalem ¹³shall be safely inhabited.

12 ¶ And this shall be the plague wherewith the LORD will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem; Their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth.

13 And it shall come to pass in that day, that a great tumult from the LORD shall be among them; and they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbour, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbour.

14 And ¹⁴Judah also shall fight ¹⁵at Jerusalem; and the wealth of all the heathen round about shall be gathered together, gold, and silver, and apparel, in great abundance.

15 And so shall be the plague of the horse, of the mule, of the camel, and of the ass, and of all the beasts that shall be in these tents, as this plague.

16 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the LORD of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles.

17 And it shall be, that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the LORD of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain.

18 And if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, ¹⁶that have no rain; there shall be the plague, wherewith the LORD will smite the heathen that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles.

19 This shall be the ¹⁷punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles.

20 ¶ In that day shall there be upon the ¹⁸bells of the horses, HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD; and the pots in the LORD's house shall be like the bowls before the altar.

21 Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness unto the LORD of hosts: and all they that sacrifice shall come and take of them, and seethe therein: and in that day there shall be no more the ¹⁹Canaanite in the house of the LORD of hosts.

Verse 18. "The family of Egypt... that have no rain."—This is a very remarkable distinction made with respect to Egypt. The nations that would not go up to Jerusalem were to be punished with the want of rain; but since Egypt had "no rain," it would not be comprehended under this ban; and therefore a special clause is added for that country, denouncing on it a different punishment. The statement that Egypt had no rain is, like that of Pliny, to be understood in the qualified sense,—that Egypt had not rain so abundantly or frequently as other countries; and possessed, in the periodical overflowings of the Nile, and in the means of irrigation which that river at other times supplies, peculiar sources which would prevent even the entire deprivation of rain from producing calamitous consequences. (See the note on Exod. vii. 15.) The case is, that during the usual season of rain, which corresponds to our winter, falls of rain are rather frequent, though not of long continuance, in the provinces which border on the Mediterranean, and in the deserts between the valley of the Nile and the Red Sea. But in the interior of Egypt it almost never rains; the inundation of the Nile, and the abundant nocturnal dews, being the sole fertilizing principles. This extraordinary dryness of the valley of the Nile is to be attributed to the heat of the sun, and to the course of the winds which, as determined by the form of the valley, blow pretty constantly from the north-west. The clouds formed from the vapours of the seas, which bound Egypt on the north and east, are drawn into this current of air, which drives them towards Nubia and Ethiopia, where they speedily fall in rain upon the woods and mountains—thus ultimately benefiting Egypt by rendering the increase of its river more abundant. The currents of air which traverse the valley of the Nile are most sensible at a distance from the mountains which confine that valley on the east and west; near these mountains, the effect of the currents is less powerful; and there it sometimes rains.

20. "The bells of the horses."—Dr. Gill, who wrote about ninety years since—when, from the bad condition of the roads, goods were conveyed by pack-horses far more extensively than of late years—says, that they, as well as draught-horses, were often furnished with bells, under the notion that the animals were encouraged and enlivened by the sound. We are not aware that pack-horses now wear bells in this country; but they have not wholly disappeared from draught-horses. In Western Asia, where there are no draught-horses, bells are much employed on baggage-animals, that is, in caravans, except in districts which, on account of danger from robbers, it is desired to pass through in silence. When this consideration does not prevent, the continual jingling of numerous bells is a remarkable characteristic of an Oriental caravan. The objects of this usage are alleged to be—to encourage the beasts, to frighten animals of prey, and, above all, to keep the party together, enabling those who may have strayed or lingered to rejoin the caravan by following the sound of the bells. This is an object of great importance in countries where the routes pass over trackless plains and mountain-passes, marked by no regular roads or pathways. The bells, which are thick, are seldom very musical, are attached in various fashions, but generally as in our cut, and always under the animal's throat. Frequently a single animal has but one bell; but we have seen baggage-mules, which seem to have been regarded as a sort of leaders, furnished with seven or eight bells. The bells are in general about the size of our common house-bells, but not so broad in proportion at the base. It is singular that the Orientals do not use bells for any other purpose whatever than this.

Camel's Head with Bells.

As to the inscription upon the bells of the horses, it is of course a figurative expression to denote the consecration of the meanest things to the Divine glory. Nevertheless, the mention of bells with pots, in this connection, reminds us to mention that the expression might contain an allusion to an actual practice; for nothing is more common than for the Orientals to have the name of God, or some pious text or moral maxim, inscribed upon their vessels of metal, generally in such a manner as to form an ornamental border near the rim. We have ourselves used cups and dishes of tinned copper thus ornamented; and we had almost said that we have seen the same on the bells of animals; but feeling slightly doubtful as to the accuracy of our recollection, we abstain.

HERE, at the close of Zechariah's book of prophecy, we proceed to notice, as promised in the introductory note, the sepulchral structure which stands in the valley of Jehoshaphat, bearing the name of the Tomb of Zechariah; and a representation of which is contained in the engraving at p. 603 of the present volume. It will be seen that, in its general character, it resembles Absalom's Tomb in the same valley (see 2 Sam. xviii.); and, like that, belongs rather to sculpture than architecture, being altogether a mass of hewn rock. Mr. Buckingham has given perhaps the best description of it, as follows:—"It is a square mass of rock, hewn down into form, and isolated from the quarry out of which it is cut, by a passage of twelve or fifteen feet wide on three of its sides; the fourth, or western side being open towards the valley and to Mount Moriah, the foot of which is only a few yards distant. This square mass is eight paces in length on each side, and about twenty feet high in the front, and ten feet high at the back, the hill on which it stands having a steep ascent. It has four semi-columns cut out of the same rock on each of its faces, with a pilaster at each angle, all of a bastard Ionic order and ornamented in bad taste. The architrave, the full moulding, and the deep overhanging cornice which finishes the square, are all perfectly after the Egyptian manner; and the whole is surmounted by a pyramid, the sloping sides of which rise from the very edges of the square below, and terminate in a finished point. The square of this monument is one solid mass of rock, as well as its semi-columns on each face; but the surmounting pyramid appears to be of masonry: its sides however are perfectly smooth, like the coated pyramids of Saccara and Dashour, and not graduated by stages as the pyramids of Gizeh in Egypt... There is no appearance of an entrance to any part of it; so that it seems, if a tomb, to have been as firmly closed as the Egyptian pyramids themselves; perhaps from the same respect for the inviolability of the repose of the dead." The same was the case with the "Tomb of Absalom" till a passage was broken into it. Pococke was informed that there was a subterranean entrance to this tomb, known to none but the Jews; and he thought this not unlikely.

The mixed character of this and some of the other sepulchral monuments in this neighbourhood, has occasioned some perplexity to antiquarian travellers. Dr. Clarke thinks it impossible to determine in what age or by what people they were formed. Buckingham and some others are of opinion that the substantial part—the square mass, with the moulding, broad cornice, and surmounting pyramid, were the work of a Jewish age; but that the bastard Ionic columns and pilasters raised from the mass on each of its sides, were the ornamental work of a more modern period, added either out of veneration for the monument itself, or to transfer it by modification to some other purpose. The probability of such a conjecture we were disposed to admit with respect to the tomb of Absalom; because, supposing it to be what its name imported (which we by no means affirmed), it was probably erected too early for the admixture of the Greek style, which it exhibits, to have been part of the original fabric. But the tomb of Zechariah does not require this explanation, supposing it to have been really erected in honour of that prophet, which is very uncertain. He died at a comparatively late period; and it is not necessary to conclude that the Jews thought of erecting a grand monument in honour of the prophet till a much later day, when their subjection to the Romans and long intercourse with the Greeks of Asia would naturally have some influence in modifying their former notions of architecture, which were probably derived from the Egyptians. That this was the case may be collected from the account which Josephus gives of Herod's buildings: and that this and some other of the monuments which still remain were probably erected after such influence had been received, appears the more probable from the intimation afforded in one of our Saviour's reproofs, that the Jews were, in his time, solicitous to honour the memory of the prophets by building their sepulchres. We consider this impression further supported by the fact, that it is impossible to identify this mixture of Egyptian and Greek styles as belonging to any people who have held possession of Jerusalem since it was lost to the Jews. These considerations are of interest not merely as respects this and the other tombs, but as affecting the general subject of the later Jewish architecture; and thus opening a large question which it is not necessary that we should discuss.

CHAPTER I.

HE burden of the word of the LORD to Israel ¹by Malachi.

² I have loved you, saith the LORD. Yet ye say, Wherein hast thou loved us? Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the LORD: yet I ³loved Jacob,

³ And I hated Esau, and laid his mountains and his heritage waste for the dragons of the wilderness.

⁴ Whereas Edom saith, We are impoverished, but we will return and build the desolate places; thus saith the LORD of hosts, They shall build, but I will throw down; and they shall call them, The border of wickedness, and, The people against whom the LORD hath indignation for ever.

⁵ And your eyes shall see, and ye shall say, The LORD will be magnified ⁶from the border of Israel.

⁶ ¶ A son honoureth his father, and a servant his master: if then I be a father, where is mine honour? and if I be a master, where is my fear? saith the LORD of hosts unto you, O priests, that despise my name. And ye say, Wherein have we despised thy name?

⁷ Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar; and ye say, Wherein have we polluted thee? In that ye say, The table of the LORD is contemptible.

⁸ And if ye offer the blind ⁸for sacrifice, is it not evil? and if ye offer the lame and sick, is it not evil? offer it now unto thy governor; will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person? saith the LORD of hosts.

⁹ And now, I pray you, beseech ⁹God that he will be gracious unto us: this hath been ¹⁰by your means: will he regard your persons? saith the LORD of hosts.

¹⁰ Who is there even among you that would shut the doors for nought? neither do ye kindle fire on mine altar for nought. I have no pleasure in you, saith the LORD of hosts, neither will I accept an ¹¹offering at your hand.

¹¹ For from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same my name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering: for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the LORD of hosts.

¹² ¶ But ye have profaned it, in that ye say, The table of the LORD is polluted; and the fruit thereof, even his meat, is contemptible.

¹³ Ye said also, Behold, what a weariness is it! ¹⁴and ye have snuffed at it, saith the LORD of hosts; and ye brought that which was torn, and the lame, and the sick; thus ye brought an offering: should I accept this of your hand? saith the LORD.

¹⁴ But cursed be the deceiver, ¹⁵which hath in his flock a male, and voweth, and sacrificeth unto the LORD a corrupt thing: for I am a great King, saith the LORD of hosts, and my name is dreadful among the heathen.

MALACHI.—This name signifies “my angel” or “my messenger;” but whether it is to be understood as a proper name, or as a title applied to his office as a prophetic messenger of God, is a question difficult to decide. It is more certain that “Malachi” does not occur as a proper name in any part of Scripture; and we rather incline to suppose that the prophecy is anonymous, and that the title Malachi is given to the prophet from his distinct prediction concerning the messenger (“my messenger” i.e. מַלְאָכִי malachi: iii. 1), which has always been considered by both Jews and Christians as one of the most remarkable and important prophecies of Scripture. As so many conjectures have been offered on the subject, we add this one with some hesitation; but it seems to us at least as probable as any other, and to those who know that several books of the Hebrew Scripture take their titles from words which they contain, this probability will seem all the greater. One strange opinion, supported by Origen and others, supposes that this prophet was really an incarnate angel: another identifies him with Mordecai; and a third with Ezra. This last opinion has the support of the Chaldee Paraphrast, and of several Christian writers of note: but the arguments adduced in support of this opinion are by no means convincing when carefully examined. What is more certain is, that Malachi was the last of the Old Testament prophets. Haggai and Zechariah prophesied in the time of Zerubbabel, during the building of the Temple; but Malachi speaks of the Temple as having been some time built; and from this and other intimations it appears that he prophesied while Nehemiah was governor. The prophecy describes exactly the same state of affairs as the history of Nehemiah; and the “governor,” which was the title of Nehemiah, is mentioned in ch. i. 8. The Jewish writers state that prophecy continued for forty years in the time of the second Temple, under Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, of whom the latter was, as we have seen, evidently the last. With him the Old Testament prophecies conclude, and conclude most strikingly with foretelling the coming of John the Baptist, with whose mission the New Testament opens.

“The last of the prophetic books,” says Bishop Lowth, “that of Malachi, is written in a kind of middle style, which seems to indicate that the Hebrew poetry, from the time of the Babylonish captivity, was in a declining state, and, being past its prime and vigour, was then fast verging towards the debility of age.” Although this is probably true as to the state of Hebrew poetry in general, we do not see that it clearly follows from the style of Malachi’s prophecy, the latter portion of which, at least, does not appear to be by any means wanting in force or elegance.

Verse 8. “Ye offer the blind for sacrifice,” &c.—By consulting Lev. xxii. 20-24, the reader will perceive that the practices here specified were expressly forbidden by the Law. The feeling of proper reverence for God and the services of his altar would indeed alone have dictated that what was offered to Him should be the best and most perfect of its kind. Even the heathen were sensible of this propriety, and were careful that their victims were without blemish or imperfection. Thus, Homer, in the Iliad (i. 66), makes Achilles propose to consult some priest, prophet, or interpreter of dreams, to know whether the angry Apollo might not be “Sooth’d with steam”

Of lambs or goats unblemish’d.”—COWPER.

Indeed, it was required generally, that the victims should not be lame, diseased, or sickly, or in any other than a good condition; or rather it was desired that they should be more above than below the average condition of their species. Pliny, in his chapter De Bubus (l. viii., c. 45), says, that no calf that could not go to the altar on its feet, but required to be carried, was acceptable to the gods; and that, in general, no lame victim was fit for sacrifice. The Jews themselves seem, in the end, to have become remarkably particular, even above the law, as to the qualifications of the victims, if what Maimonides says be true, that there were no less than fifty blemishes (enumerated by him) which rendered an animal unfit to be offered on the Lord’s altar.

CHAPTER II.

1 He sharply reproveth the priests for neglecting their covenant, 11 and the people for idolatry, 14 for adultery, 17 and for infidelity.

AND now, O ye priests, this commandment is for you.

2 ¹If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, saith the LORD of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you, and I will curse your blessings: yea, I have cursed them already, because ye did not lay it to heart.

3 Behold, I will ²corrupt your seed, and ³spread dung upon your faces, even the dung of your solemn feasts; and ⁴one shall take you away with it.

4 And ye shall know that I have sent this commandment unto you, that my covenant might be with Levi, saith the LORD of hosts.

5 My covenant was with him of life and peace; and I gave them to him for the fear wherewith he feared me, and was afraid before my name.

6 The law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips: he walked with me in peace and equity, and did turn many away from iniquity.

7 For the priest’s lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the messenger of the LORD of hosts.

8 But ye are departed out of the way; ye have caused many to ⁵stumble at the law; ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, saith the LORD of hosts.

9 Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, according as ye have not kept my ways, but ⁶have been partial in the law.

15 And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek ¹²a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal ¹³treacherously against the wife of his youth.

16 For the LORD, the God of Israel, saith ¹⁴that he hateth ¹⁵putting away: for one covereth violence with his garment, saith the LORD of hosts: therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously.

17 ¶ Ye have wearied the LORD with your words. Yet ye say, Wherein have we wearied him? When ye say, Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the LORD, and he delighteth in them; or, Where is the God of judgment?

Verse 3. "I will corrupt your seed."—Newcome translates, "I will take away from you the shoulder"—following the Septuagint, which appears to have read shoulder, instead of seed; but indeed this translation will still be a fair alternative, taking the original as it stands. The reason for this preference given to "shoulder" is, that this part was the portion of the sacrifices which belonged to the priests; and, consequently, the adoption of this reading conveys a clear sense quite in unison with the general bearing of the context.

"Spread dung upon your faces."—The maw as well as the shoulder was the portion of the priests: and if the shoulder be really intended in the preceding clause, it may well be supposed that the present allusion is to the maw, only that, by way of indignity, the contents of the maw, rather than the maw itself, are mentioned—perhaps to intimate that such priests as are described deserved not the maw, but only its contents. The Seventy have maw instead of dung; which suffices to show that they understood the allusion to be to that portion of the priests. The same sense is thus obtained with either reading. Mr. Roberts, after mentioning that the holy ashes, used by the Hindoos to rub their foreheads and bodies, are the ashes of burnt cows' dung, suggests that an illustration of the present text might be derived from this fact. Probably not: as the above seems a clearer explanation. Nor does any such custom appear in Scripture, although it is not impossible that something of the sort may have been exhibited while the Hebrews worshipped the golden calves. But, whatever else they were, the Jews were never idolaters after the Captivity.

Verse 1.—“My messenger . . . he shall prepare the way before me.”—See the note on Isa. xl. 3, which probably explains the custom to which an allusion is here made. That explanation referred to the preparing of the way, literally; but to complete the illustration of the custom to which this passage appears to contain an allusion, we may here add, that when an individual of any note is travelling in the East, a messenger is sent off, considerably in advance, to the designed resting-place, to announce his approach and to make every arrangement with the people of the place for his reception, so that he may find all things ready for his entertainment when he arrives. When the traveller is a royal person, the messenger goes farther in advance than in ordinary circumstances, to obtain time for the more extensive preparations which are then necessary.

2. “Fullers’ sope.”—The word “soap” by which the Hebrew בִּרְיָת borith, is translated, might lead the general reader to suppose the Hebrews possessed such soap as is in use among ourselves. Such was not the case. The word borith is translated by the Septuagint, followed by the Vulgate, “fuller’s herb,” whence, and from the explanation of the Rabbins, as well as from our knowledge of the substances anciently and even now employed in the place of soap, we may collect, that the purifying substance was a vegetable alkali, obtained from the ashes of an alkaline plant. This was used, or a solution of it, in connection with oil, for washing clothes, in ancient times, and continues to be employed for the same purpose in different parts of the East. As there are several plants which furnish the requisite alkali, it is doubtful what particular plant, or whether any one alkaline plant in particular, may be intended. The substance may have been obtained from different plants; and it appears to us that the name borith denotes not the plant which furnished the substance, but the substance itself, from whatever plant obtained. Jerome, however, supposes that the substance was furnished by a particular plant, growing in Palestine in moist and green places, and which had the same virtue as nitre to take away filth. Maimonides says the plant was called gazul in the Arabic language. Although this borith be that which our version renders “soap,” we are not to suppose that the Hebrews employed no other substance for purification. The Bible itself (Prov. xxv. 20; Jer. ii. 22) mentions a mineral alkali (נָטֶר neter, i. e. nitrum, nitre) as employed for the same purpose; and the Mishna counts the borith but as one of seven things employed to extract spots and dirt from clothing.

3. "He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver."—The annexed engraving, from the paintings of the ancient Egyptians, may be of some interest in connection with this text, as showing the manner in which the refiners and workers of silver sat at their employment and conducted their operations. The representation is also valuable as exhibiting the very ancient use of the blow-pipe and forceps, and of fire-places with cheeks for confining and reflecting the heat.

3 And ye shall tread down the wicked;

² Exod. 20. 3.

³ Matth. 11. 44. Mark 9. 11. Luke 1. 17.

Verse 2. "The Sun of righteousness (shall) arise with healing in his wings."—We cannot withhold the following remarkable illustration of this passage, which we find in Burder's 'Oriental Customs' (No. 367). "The late Mr. Robinson of Cambridge called upon a friend just as he had received a letter from his son, who was surgeon on board a vessel then lying off Smyrna. The son mentioned to his father that every morning about sun-rise a fresh gale of air blew from the sea across the land, and, from its wholesomeness and utility in clearing the infected air, this wind is always called the Doctor. 'Now,' says Mr. Robinson, 'it strikes me that the prophet Malachi, who lived in that quarter of the world, might allude to this circumstance, when he says that the Sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings. The Psalmist mentions the wings of the wind, and it appears to me that this salubrious breeze, which attends the rising of the sun, may properly enough be considered as the wings of the sun, which contain such healing influences, rather than the beams of the sun, as the passage has been commonly understood."

3. "Ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be as ashes under the soles of your feet."—This seems to imply that ashes were trodden under the feet. We have already had occasion to explain that mortar is usually prepared in the East by treading with the feet; and as one kind of mortar is prepared with a mixture of ashes, it is not unlikely that, as Chardin suggests, this may explain the allusion. Indeed, our own plasterers and slaters, in preparing mortar for particular uses, sometimes mix ashes instead of sand with their lime: for this purpose they prefer the ashes of a furnace, and the Orientals the ashes of a bath.
