OF

Anglo=Saxon and Middle English Poetry

J. W. BRIGHT AND G. L. KITTREDGE
GENERAL EDITORS

The Albion Series.

This series will comprise the most important Anglo-Saxon and Middle English poems in editions designed to meet the wants of both the scholar and the student. Each volume will ordinarily contain a single poem, critically edited, and provided with an introduction, notes, and a full glossary.

PREFACE

No less than nine Middle English manuscripts of The Seven Sages of Rome have survived to the present time. Yet only two of these manuscripts have until now been published, — one the Auchinleck (A), by Weber,² in 1810; the other, the Cambridge MS. Dd. I. 17 (D), by Wright, in 1845. The need for a new edition of The Seven Sages, then, is obvious. And this need has long been recognized. It is now more than twenty years since Professor Kölbing announced that he would undertake to edit the entire volume of Middle English manuscripts of the poem; 4 later the Early English Text Society announced an edition of the Cotton MS. (C) — the basis of the present edition by the lamented Dr. Robert Morris; and still more recently the Scottish Text Society has promised an edition of the Asloan MS. (As) by Professor Varnhagen. I should not omit to say also that the Early English Text Society has for several years advertised as in preparation an edition of C by Dr. Squires, and that it is now seeking an editor for the whole of Balliol MS. 354, in which B occurs. My purpose to edit the Cotton MS. I first announced in 1898, in my dissertation, A Study of the Romance of The Seven Sages with Special Reference to the Middle English Versions.⁵ I am glad now, after eight years of necessarily intermittent effort, to see my promise made good.

Since the printing of my dissertation I have come to learn (through Professor A. S. Napier¹) of another copy of the same redaction as that represented by C,—namely, the Bodleian MS. Rawlinson Poet. 175 (R). The discovery of R naturally enhanced the value of C. At the same time it gave rise to the question whether it would not be wise to make R rather than C the basis of my edition, for the handwriting of R is perhaps fifty years older than the handwriting of C. The chief considerations that led me to give the preference to C are, first, that R is incomplete, and, secondly, that C, though transcribed somewhat later than R, is nevertheless quite as archaic in its spelling and, besides, represents in several minor respects a more accurate transcription. Still, to meet any apprehensions as to the wisdom of my choice and to lend greater thoroughness to my undertaking, I have given in footnotes the variants of R from C.

In the Introduction I have attempted, besides considering in detail the English versions, to bring together in compact form the results of modern scholarly investigation of the Oriental versions of The Seven Sages, to restate the problem of the transmission of the story to Western Europe, and to classify anew the many redactions made in France, Italy, Spain, Germany, Holland, Scandinavia, and Russia. In this part of my Introduction I have done little more than reproduce what I conceive to be the most approved results of the investigations of others.

But in the discussion of the English versions I have had to rely almost entirely upon myself. My monograph, referred to above, furnished much of the material for this section and a point of departure for the rest. The chief additions are the fuller treatment of the later English versions and the detailed consideration of the two manuscripts (C and R) represented in the text.

After the discussion of the English versions, I have undertaken a listing of the variants and analogues of the stories contained in The Seven Sages, a task that I was both eager and loath to enter upon,—eager because of the fascination that such work affords one with literary-historical leanings, and loath because of the conviction that I could not make such a list by any means exhaustive in the time at my disposal. The task was undertaken, however, and I am encouraged to hope that it has not been in vain; though I am now, more than ever, convinced that my list must be far from complete. It is for this reason that I have set the Originals and Analogues at the end of the Introduction, so that, in case a second edition of this volume be called for, the list may be more readily supplemented. For any information as to additions that ought to be made, I shall be most grateful.

In the editing of the text, the reading of the Cotton MS. has been faithfully adhered to except in the following particulars: some twenty emendations of what appear to be scribal errors have been made; marks of punctuation have been inserted, the lines have been numbered, and paragraphs have been indented; capitalization has been normalized according to modern standards; all abbreviations have been expanded; the word division has been modernized; and information concerning the foliation of the manuscript and concerning the number and title of each story has been inclosed in brackets in the margins. Emendations are indicated in the body of the text by brackets, the reading of the manuscript being invariably given in the footnotes. Abbreviated letters or words are italicized. The variations from C exhibited by R, which are presented in the footnotes, have not been edited, but are given diplomatically except for the expansion of abbreviations.

The Notes are few. By taking fuller account of the many conventional phrases and by entering parallel passages from other romances, I could have enlarged this section considerably; but I have excused myself from this labor in the belief that it must have involved, in the main, a repetition of what has been done by Zupitza, Kölbing, Schmirgel, Mead, and others.

The Glossary is larger than I should have wished it. It is not meant to be exhaustive, but, except for a few verbs, like have and be, whose inflection, I felt, must be recorded, includes only such words as, in my judgment, might not be easily intelligible to the average reader into whose hands the book will fall.

Throughout my labors I have been generously aided by others. My chief indebtedness is to the General Editors of the "Albion Series," Professors Bright and Kittredge. It was Professor Bright who first aroused in me a liking for mediæval story; he subsequently aided me most substantially in the preparation and the printing of my Study of The Seven Sages; and he has been of constant service to me in the preparation of the present edition, giving me freely of his time in the reading of manuscript and proof sheets, and aiding me all along by his intelligent sympathy. To Professor Kittredge also my indebtedness is large; he has read all of the book either in manuscript or in proof, and has given me a host of valuable suggestions. A real debt, also, I owe to Professor Morgan Callaway, Jr., of the University of Texas, who has read most of the book both in manuscript and in proof, and who has ever been ready with counsel no less valuable than cheerfully given. I am glad, also, to acknowledge certain services done me by my former esteemed instructor, Professor William Hand Browne, of Johns Hopkins University; by my colleague, Dr. Reginald Harvey Griffith; by my former pupil, Mr. Stanley Royal Ashby, now of Merton College, Oxford; and by the Librarian of the University of Texas, Mr. Phineas Lawrence Windsor. It gives me pleasure, too, to express my appreciation of the courtesies shown me by the authorities in the British Museum, in the Bodleian Library, in the Library of the University of Edinburgh, and in the Peabody Library at Baltimore. INTRODUCTION

A. THE EARLIER HISTORY OF THE SEVEN SAGES

I. THE ORIENTAL VERSIONS

The Seven Sages of Rome belongs to the goodly company of stories which had their origin in the East. The parent version has not come down to us, but it is very generally believed that it was of Indian composition. When the parent version was made, we can only conjecture—perhaps about the fifth century B.C. What form it took is likewise uncertain. The story underlying the framework may first have existed independently of the stories it contains in the form in which we first find it; though, even in that case, it is reasonably certain that the stories were embodied in it before it left India.

From India The Seven Sages passed to Arabia, where, perhaps about the eighth century of our era, it assumed — in the hands of one Musa — the form preserved more or less faithfully in the eight Eastern versions that have survived. This early Arabic version, however, has been lost. Of the eight surviving versions which constitute the Eastern group, one is in Syriac, one in Greek, one in Hebrew, one in Old Spanish, one in Arabic, and three are in Persian. In its Eastern form The Seven Sages is usually known as the Book of Sindibād.

The Book of Sindibād tells the story which furnishes the background or framework of The Seven Sages very much as does the Western typical version, The Seven Sages of Rome. This underlying story may be briefly summarized as follows: A young prince is tempted by his stepmother, the queen. She, being rebuffed by him, accuses him of attempting to violate her, and he is condemned to death. His life is saved by seven wise men, who secure a stay of execution of the royal decree by entertaining the king through seven days with tales showing the wickedness of woman, the queen meantime recounting stories to offset those of the sages. On the eighth day the prince, who has remained silent up to that time, speaks in his own defense, and the queen is put to death.

In this underlying framework the Eastern and the Western type agree in broad outline. But the two types differ radically in the stories they contain; they have, at most, only four stories in common. Another important difference between the two is in the number of stories in each: while in the Western versions each sage tells but one story and there are accordingly no more than fifteen stories in all, usually in the Eastern versions each of the sages tells two stories and there are in consequence at least a third more stories than in any of the Western versions. An even more salient difference is found in that, in the East, the instruction of the Prince is intrusted, not (as in the Western versions 1) to the seven sages, but to one man, the philosopher Sindibād. This Sindibād is the central figure of the Eastern versions; and it is for this reason that the Eastern form of The Seven Sages has been called the Book of Sindibād.

The name Sindibād very probably goes back to India; for it appears in all four of the earlier and most authentic Eastern versions: the Syriac Sindban, the Greek Syntipas, the Hebrew Mischle Sindbad, and the Persian Sindibād-nāmeh.

The name of the King is, in the Syriac and the Greek, Kurus; in the Old Spanish, Alcos (Al-Curus? 2); in the Hebrew, Pai Pur (or perhaps Kai Pur, or King Porus 3); other versions do not name the King. The name of the wicked Queen, as normally in the Western versions, is not given. Neither is the name of the Prince given. The names of the sages are mentioned in only one Eastern version, the Hebrew. 4

The oldest surviving version of the Eastern group is the Syriac Sindban,⁵ the date of which is placed by Nöldeke ⁶ in the tenth century.

² Cassel, Mischle Sindbad, p. 212.

⁸ Cassel, p. 61.

⁴ These names are, according to Cassel (pp. 219 f.), Sindibād, Hippocrates, Apuleius, Lucian, Aristotle, Pindar, and Homer.

⁵ Edited by Baethgen, Sindban, oder die Sieben Weisen Meister, Leipzig, 1879. See also, for an English translation, H. Gollancz in Folk Lore, 1897, VIII, pp. 99 f.; and for a French translation, F. Macler, Contes Syriagues: Histoire de Sindban, Paris, 1903.

⁶ Zeitschr. d. d. morg. Gesellschaft, 1867, XXXIII, pp. 513 f.

The source of the Sindban appears to have been the lost eighth-century Arabic text of Musa. The text of the Sindban is not complete, but most of it remains. A derivate from this version is the Greek Syntipas.

The Greek version, Syntipas, is very much fuller of detail and more elaborate in style than its original. Its author, according to the prologue, was one Michael Andreopulus. As to its date there has been difference of opinion; Comparetti held it to be the second half of the eleventh century, others place it later.²

The Old Spanish Libro de los Engannos,⁸ like the Syriac Sindban, found its source in the lost Arabic text of Musa. Its prologue establishes its date as 1253. In contents and order of stories the Old Spanish version is naturally nearest to the Syriac and the Greek versions. It seems to have exerted no influence whatever on The Seven Sages in Europe.

The Hebrew Mischle Sindbad⁴ stands somewhat apart from the other Eastern versions. It contains three stories which are not found in any other version; and it has one important trait possessed by no other Eastern version in that it gives the names of the sages, a trait which it shares, however, with the Western versions. This and other evidence, later adduced in the section on the transmission of The Seven Sages to the West,⁵ seem to make it not improbable that the Western group found its source in this version. As to the date of the Mischle Sindbad scholars are by no means agreed; Comparetti would place it in the thirteenth century, but Cassel, Benfey, and all the earlier scholars considered it as more ancient than the Syntipas.⁶

⁸ First published by Comparetti in his Ricerche, Milan, 1869; later, with an English translation, in the English edition of Comparetti's book, Book of Sindibād, pp. 73–164.

⁴ Edited as follows: by Sengelmann, with a German translation, Halle, 1842; by Carmoly, with a French translation, Paris, 1849; and by Cassel, with a German translation and abundant notes, Berlin, 1888.

⁶ Comparetti, Book of Sindibād, pp. 64 f.; Cassel, Mischle Sindbad, p. 310.

The Persian versions are the poem $Sindib\bar{a}d$ - $n\bar{a}meh$ $(1375)^1$ and the prose texts of Nachshebī (about $1300)^2$ and As-Samarquandī (late twelfth century). Of these by far the most important is the $Sindib\bar{a}d$ - $n\bar{a}meh$, though the other two versions possess more value for the history of our story. The version of As-Samarquandī is the source of both the other versions. The version of Nachshebī forms the Eighth Night of his text of the $T\bar{u}t\bar{i}$ - $n\bar{a}meh$. This version contains but six stories, only five of which are to be found in any of the remaining $Sindib\bar{u}d$ collections.

The surviving Arabic version is that usually known as the Seven Vezirs. It is an irregular version which appears with considerable variation in several manuscripts of the Arabian Nights, among them a Cairo manuscript (printed at Bulaq in 1836, known as the "Bulaq Text"), a Tunis manuscript (ed. Habicht and Fleischer, Breslau, 1825–1843), a Calcutta manuscript (ed. Macnaghten, Calcutta, 1839–1842), and a Bengal manuscript (epitomized in part by Jonathan Scott, Tales, Anecdotes and Letters, Shrewsbury, 1800). Of these the text preserved in the Bulaq manuscript appears to be the fullest and best. The Seven Vezirs was very late in composition, and has had no influence upon other versions of the Book of Sindibād.

Besides the eight Oriental versions that have been preserved, there are several other versions that are known to have existed at some time in the Christian era, and which we may still somewhat confidently hope to see brought to light. Of these the most significant is the Arabic version by Musa (probably of the eighth century), which served as the immediate source of the Syriac and Old Spanish versions and probably also, but with one or more intermediate stages, of all the other Eastern versions described above. Other versions to which there are references in Oriental literature are a Kitāb-es-Sindbād, mentioned by Masūdī,¹ and two earlier Persian poems,—one by Abān Lāhiqī (who died about 815),² the other by Azraqī (who died in 1132).⁸

Tables showing the number and order of stories in the Eastern versions are to be found in Comparetti's Book of Sindibād, p. 25; Landau's Die Quellen des Dekameron (2d ed., Stuttgart, 1884), table opposite p. 340; and Bédier's Les Fabliaux (2d ed., Paris, 1895), table opposite p. 136. More or less extensive discussions of the content of these stories and their analogues are given by H. A. Keller, Li Romans des Sept Sages, Tübingen, 1836, pp. cxxxi f.; Keller, Dyocletianus Leben, Quedlinburg, 1841, pp. 42 f.; Cassel, Mischle Sindbad, pp. 82 f.; and Clouston, Book of Sindibād, pp. 217 f.

II. TRANSMISSION TO WESTERN EUROPE

Just how The Seven Sages as it appeared in the East in the Book of Sindibād became the story as it flourished in Western Europe is a question not easy to answer. The problem is rendered a most difficult one by the circumstance that the parent Western version has been lost. Indeed, our only knowledge of it is such as is wholly inferential in nature. The date of this parent Western version, however, cannot have been later than 1150.⁴

As we have seen, there is a wide gap between the Eastern and the Western form of the story; there is in the Western form no mention of Sindibād, the sages tell only one story each instead of the two (or more) in the East, and just four of the original stories (canis, aper, senescalcus, and avis) reappear in the Western versions.

- ¹ In his Meadows of Gold, Sprenger's translation, London, 1841, p. 175.
- ² See Clouston, Book of Sindibād, pp. xxxvi f.
- ⁸ Clouston, p. xl.
- ⁴ See p. xxi below. Gaston Paris (Deux Rédactions des Sept Sages, Paris, 1876, p. i) held that the story penetrated into Western Europe in the twelfth century or later; but this opinion can scarcely be reconciled with his placing the date of the Latin Dolopathos between 1207 and 1212 (Romania, II, p. 501), still less with his dating the Keller metrical version (K) about 1155 (La Litt. fr. au moyen âge, 2d ed., Paris, 1890, p. 247).
- ⁵ The Latin names first given the stories of the Western group by Goedeke (Orient und Occident, 1866, III, p. 423) have obtained general currency in the literature on The Seven Sages.

Such far-reaching changes establish conclusively that the parent Western version was not a translation from any Eastern version. They render it extremely improbable, too, that the author of the Western parent version had in his hands a version of the story in its Eastern form; indeed, they seem to me to make it extremely probable that this author had no sort of first-hand acquaintance with any of the Eastern versions. In my judgment, they demonstrate beyond any reasonable doubt that the Western parent version grew out of oral accounts.

Which one of the Oriental versions was the ultimate source of these oral accounts cannot be known with certainty. Negatively we may say that this version cannot have been any of the surviving Persian versions, for all of them are too late. For a similar reason it may be asserted that it was not the Old Spanish version. Nor can it have been the Arabic Seven Vezirs, for, aside from the fact that this version is very late, it contains only one of the four stories which reappear in the Western type. The source of the traditions culminating in the oldest Western version may, then, so far as we know, have been the Greek, or the Syriac, or the Hebrew, or the lost Arabic version of Musa, or some other lost version of which nothing is known.

On the theory of probabilities the case would seem to be strongest for the Greek version as the ultimate source of the Western group, and Gaston Paris 1 and others have assumed this to be the case. But most students of the problem have held that the Hebrew version presents the strongest claims for this distinction, and internal evidence does seem to support this view. The Hebrew version exhibits several minor agreements with the Western form of The Seven Sages which it does not share with any of the remaining Oriental versions. These features peculiar to the Hebrew Mischle Sindbad and the Western typical version are the following: (1) the sages are mentioned by name; (2) there is a rivalry between the sages in their efforts to secure, each for himself, the task of instructing the Prince; (3) the sages, not the King's counselors, defend the Prince; (4) in the story aper, the adventure happens not to an ape but to a man; (5) in the story avis, the deception is practiced on the bird through an opening in the house-top; (6) in the same story a maid figures as a party to the deception practiced by the wife.¹ Just what significance may safely be attached to these agreements one must hesitate to say; they may all be accidental; some of them, as for instance the first, the third, and the fourth, are very natural variations.² At best, they do no more, I think, than establish a slight probability in favor of the Hebrew version as the Eastern original of the Western group; and they certainly do not in any way discredit the theory of oral transmission of the story westward.

The route of transmission may have been by Byzantium or through North Africa and Spain, but was more probably through Syria and the Holy Land. The agent of this transmission was very probably a Crusader, to whom the Book of $Sindib\bar{a}d$, with its Buddhistic flavor, may be imagined to have made a strong appeal. The time of transmission cannot have been later than the middle of the twelfth century, which, as said above, must be made the superior limit for the dating of the first Western version.

III. EUROPEAN VERSIONS OTHER THAN ENGLISH

The Seven Sages has had in Europe a much larger and more complicated history than it had in the Orient. There have been preserved, as we have seen, at best but eight different versions of the Book of Sindibād, whereas there are at least forty different versions of The Seven Sages properly so-called, and these, if we are to believe the bibliographers, are preserved in upwards of two hundred manuscripts and nearly two hundred and fifty editions.

² Or may they be traceable to an influence of some early Western version on the Hebrew?

That there is a very wide difference between the Eastern and the Western type has already been shown. And in explanation of this wide difference a basis has been assumed for the Western form of the story in oral accounts. Where these oral accounts first took literary form has not been, and probably never will be, satisfactorily determined — perhaps in Italy, perhaps in France. The earliest Western text was doubtless written either in French or in Latin; but in which, also remains, as yet, entirely conjectural.

The oldest form, apparently, under which the Western type has survived is that preserved in the Dolopathos. There can be little doubt, however, that the more widely known Sept Sages de Rome, of which there survive many manuscripts dating from a period but a little later than that of the earliest version of the Dolopathos, preserves more nearly the form and contents of the Western parent version. And it was under this form that the story acquired its marvelous popularity in France, whence it made its way into nearly every other country of Europe.

The Dolopathos. — The Dolopathos exists in two versions, the Latin prose text of Joannes de Alta Silva² and the Old French poem by Herbert.³ Of the former there are known, besides the original manuscript discovered by Oesterley, three late copies pointed out by Mussafia,⁴

- I Students of the relationship of these two types must be on their guard against certain errors which for many years pervaded the entire literature on the subject. Early scholars, for some unknown reason, assumed and industriously propagated the heresy that the late Latin version, the Historia (H), was the source of the poetical Dolopathos (and other Western versions), and then, by a necessary inference, that the Historia was composed by Joannes de Alta Silva, the real author of the Latin Dolopathos. See, for example, Deslongchamps, Essai sur les Fables Indiennes, Paris, 1838, p. 179.
- ² A manuscript of which was first discovered by Oesterley in 1873, and published by him in the same year: Joannis de Alta Silva Dolopathos, sive de Rege et Septem Sapientibus, Strassburg. See reviews by Gaston Paris in Romania, II, pp. 481 f.; by Studemund in Zeitschr. f. deutsches Alterthum, XVII, pp. 415 f., and XVIII, pp. 221 f.; and by Köhler in Jahrb. f. rom. u. engl. Lit., XIII, pp. 328 f. Several manuscripts pointed out prior to this by Mussafia (for which see below), and at first supposed to reproduce faithfully the text of Joannes, were soon shown to be corrupt copies made in the fifteenth century.

an Innsbruck,¹ and a British Museum manuscript.² The latter is preserved, so far as is known, in but three manuscripts.³

Joannes de Alta Silva, the author of the Latin Dolopathos, was a Cistercian monk of the monastery of Haute Seille. His work bears the title Dolopathos, sive Opusculum de Rege et Septem Sapientibus. It was dedicated to Bishop Bertrand of Metz, who had jurisdiction over the monastery of Haute Seille from 1184 (when it was transferred from the see of Toul to the see of Metz) to 1212; and, since Joannes would probably dedicate to his own bishop rather than to one at the head of another diocese, it has been argued very plausibly that the work was written during those years. Oesterley would make the date 1184 or at the latest 1185. Gaston Paris in 1873 favored a dating between 1207 and 1212, but in 1890 he placed the date at the end of the twelfth century.

The Old French poem of Herbert was made from the Latin prose text of Joannes toward the end of the first quarter of the thirteenth century: according to Montaiglon, between 1223 and 1226; according to Gaston Paris, before 1223.

The Dolopathos agrees with the Book of Sindibād in that the Prince has only one instructor. For this reason it has been conjectured that the Dolopathos was founded on some Oriental original, but in my judgment the variation is quite natural. Equally valueless for establishing a near kinship with the Book of Sindibād is the agreement which the Dolopathos shows with the Nachshebī version in the suppression of the Queen's stories.

9 In the Eastern versions, always Sindibad; in the Dolopathos, Virgil.

For the Dolopathos has only one story (canis) in common with the Book of Sindibād, while with The Seven Sages of Rome it has no less than four stories in common (canis, gaza, puteus, and inclusa), only one of which (canis), it will be observed, appears also in the Oriental versions. This makes it reasonably certain that Joannes was in some way acquainted with some version of The Seven Sages of Rome. There can be only one alternative supposition, namely, that both the Dolopathos and The Seven Sages of Rome developed independently of each other and almost contemporaneously, the one drawing only one story (canis) from the traditions brought from the East, while the other drew this story with three others besides (aper, senescalcus, avis), — with the additional coincidence that both received, as the result of like influence and environment, three stories (gaza, puteus, and inclusa) which were not in the Eastern framework. That such was the case is, to say the least, extremely improbable.

But in any case the prose Dolopathos was made not from written but from oral sources. This is expressly stated by Joannes — who says he wrote "non ut visa, sed ut audita,"—and is borne out by the introduction of the Lohengrin story 1 (which takes literary form here for the first time), as well as by the striking changes made both in the framework and in the stories.

The Herbert version is very long, comprising nearly 13,000 lines. Both in extent and in style it stands in marked contrast with the metrical version of the Sept Sages de Rome edited by Keller (K), which, with nearly twice as many stories, has only 5060 lines. The Dolopathos has an introduction of 4800 lines where K has but 68 lines. In metrical form the two agree; both are written in the octosyllabic couplet.

The King in the Dolopathos bears the name Dolopathos, and rules over the island of Sicily. The Prince is called Lucinius; his mother, Auguste. The names of the stepmother and the sages are not given. The instruction of the Prince begins, as normally, when he has reached the age of seven. He is sent to Rome and put under the care of the poet Virgil, whose figure is supreme throughout the story and gives to it one of its strongest claims upon our interest. The sages, who are, because of Virgil's prominence, placed somewhat in the background, come up as in the remaining Western versions, one each day, always just in time to save the Prince's life. The Prince relates no story at all, Virgil telling the eighth (and last) story.¹

The order of stories in the Dolopathos is canis, gaza, senes, creditor, viduae filius, latronis filius, cygni eques, inclusa + puteus.

The Seven Sages of Rome. — The Seven Sages of Rome, unlike the Dolopathos, includes a very large number of versions. Here belong, besides all English versions (the Middle English poems, the text printed by Wynkyn de Worde with its prose derivatives, and the Rolland version), all the French and Latin versions save the Dolopathos, the numerous versions in Italian, German, and Dutch, together with many manuscripts and editions, representing more or less independent traditions, in Spanish, Scandinavian, Celtic, Russian, Polish, Bohemian, and Bulgarian. The Seven Sages, then, is to be found either in manuscript or in print, or in both, in nearly every language of Europe. Nor has its vogue been confined entirely to Europe, for it has been published at least twice in America.²

The ultimate Western source whence all these sprang has not come down to us. The date, too, of this parent version is not known, but in view of its influence on the Dolopathos and the Marques de Rome (a sequel to The Seven Sages, written early in the thirteenth century), as also in the light of the comparatively large number of manuscripts in prose dating from the first half of the thirteenth century, it must be placed as early as 1150,⁸ and it may fall in a time considerably earlier. The oldest versions preserved are in French.

The normal number of stories in The Seven Sages of Rome proper is _ fifteen ⁴; of which the Queen relates seven, and the seven sages tell one each, the Prince closing with the fifteenth. The scene of action is prevailingly Rome, though with two versions — K and D — it is Constantinople. The Emperor's name is, in most versions, Diocletian; variants are Vespasian, Marcomeris, and Pontianus.¹ The Prince is not named in the earliest versions, but in later versions he appears variously as Florentine, Diocletian, Stefano, and Erasto.² The sages are named Bancillas, Ancilles or Anxilles, Lentulus, Malquidras or Malquidrac, Cato, Jesse, and Maxencius or Merous.³

The interrelation of the various forms under which The Seven Sages appears has been the subject of almost continuous investigation for more than half a century. The first serious attempt at an orderly classification was made by Goedeke in 1866. Goedeke was followed two years later by Mussafia, in a study which possesses much merit and which contributed not a little toward clearing the way for subsequent investigation. But it is to Gaston Paris above all that credit is due for bringing order out of chaos. The "Préface" to his Deux Rédactions contains the most significant contribution to the study of The Seven Sages that has yet been made. It need hardly be added that the excellence of his work has been recognized on all sides, and that his conclusions have, with one or two exceptions at most, been universally adopted.

Paris classifies under eight different heads, as follows 7:

- 1. S, the Scala Celi abridgment, in Latin.8
- 2. H, the immense group of which the Latin Historia Septem Sapientum is the type.
 - 3. K, the Old French poem published by Keller.
 - 4. I, the "Versio Italica."
 - 5. M, the anomalous version known as the Male Marrastre.

¹ See K, D*, and H, respectively.

² See the Middle English versions, H, I, and Erasto.

³ There are numerous more or less radical variations in the spelling of these names; and there are with a few of the later versions (see the names in H and I) some substitutions.

⁸ See, for bibliographical data, the discussion of these types given below.

- 6. D,¹ the "Version Dérimée," the first of the Deux Rédactions edited by Gaston Paris.
- 7. L, the group of French manuscripts of which the first Leroux de Lincy text is the type.
- 8. A*, the large group typified by the Italian prose text published by A. d'Ancona.
- 1. S comprises only one version, found in manuscript in the Scala Celi (a compilation of the early fourteenth century made by Joannes Junior [or Parvus]²) and in a Vienna codex entitled Summa Recreatorum (fifteenth century).⁸ Both manuscripts are in Latin prose. The text of the Scala Celi was published at Lübeck in 1476, at Ulm in 1480, at Strassburg in 1483, at Louvain in 1485, and at Seville in 1496; and was reprinted by Goedeke in 1866.⁴ It is also to be found in a Spanish translation made by Diego de Cañizares in the fifteenth century. An edition of this text from a Madrid manuscript has been recently made by A. Paz y Mélia (Madrid, 1892).

S is an abridgment of a lost Liber de Septem Sapientibus. Its most salient peculiarity is its brevity. This results from an industrious pruning of unessential details, especially in the transitions from story to story. The stories themselves are much compressed, but are not substantially altered. The names of the sages and the Prince are omitted, but the name of the Emperor — Diocletian — remains.

Another significant feature of S is the substitution of the stories filia and noverca for Roma and inclusa, a feature which appears elsewhere only in L.⁵

As to the date of the lost Liber de Septem Sapientibus upon which S was based, nothing is known with certainty, but it must be not later than the middle of the thirteenth century.⁶ As to its source, similar uncertainty prevails. Its nearest relationship is with L, with which it shares, as just noted, the filia-noverca feature. But it is not probable that S was based on L; the more probable view is that L was influenced by S.

2. H. The prevailing type of this group is the Latin prose Historia Septem Sapientum Romae, for a long time supposed to be the source of all other versions of The Seven Sages of Rome. Variants of the Historia type are the Historia Calumniae Novercalis and Pontianus: Dicta aut Facta Septem Sapientum.

The oldest manuscripts of the Historia proper are in Latin prose. From the Latin, H has been translated into English, French, Spanish, German, Dutch, Danish, Swedish, Icelandic, Armenian, and several of the Slavonic languages.

Of Latin manuscripts of the Historia no less than twenty-eight have been pointed out¹; and at least thirteen fifteenth-century editions of the Latin text have been preserved.² The oldest text in manuscript is that found in an Innsbruck codex dating from the year 1342. This was published by G. Buchner in 1889.³ The Historia, more or less altered, is also to be found in a great many manuscripts of the Gesta Romanorum. Oesterley ⁴ describes at least thirty-five manuscripts in which all or a part of The Seven Sages appears. The oldest edition of the Historia appears to be that published at Cologne in 1475 by Johann Veldener.

It was probably from the Latin Historia that the English translation printed by Wynkyn de Worde was made. And it was from the Wynkyn de Worde edition that the metrical version by Rolland, the Copland edition, and the various later English versions were derived.

Of the French translation of the Historia at least eight early editions have survived. The oldest of them, printed at Geneva in 1492, was reprinted by Gaston Paris in 1876.⁵

In Spain the Historia has never secured a very firm foothold; though a Spanish translation, printed at Burgos in 1530, has passed through six editions.¹

In Germany, however, the Historia has been even more popular than in France; indeed, H seems to have been the only version which found acceptance in Germany. J. Schmitz, in his dissertation, Die ältesten Fassungen des deutschen Romans von den sieben weisen Meistern, Greifswald, 1904, pp. 1 f., describes twelve manuscripts of the German translation of H; and H. Fischer, in his dissertation, Beiträge zur Litteratur der sieben weisen Meister, pp. 1 f., tells of seventy-two different editions of this translation. Moreover, there are in German several metrical versions derived from H: that of Hans von Bühel, entitled Dyocletianus Leben,2 the date of which — 1412 — is, happily, incorporated into the text (ll. 9479-9480); an anonymous poem 8 probably later than,4 and influenced by, the Hans von Bühel version; and a tragedy written in 1560 by Sebastian Wildt. — In the German group also belongs the Latin Ludus Septem Sapientum, a much botched translation of the German prose text, printed by Paulus Reffeler at Frankfurt about 1560.

The Dutch translation of the Historia is preserved in some fifteen or more editions,⁵ the oldest of which appeared in 1479.

The Danish translation has been printed at least four times,⁶ the oldest edition, according to Nyerup, being that of 1673.

In Swedish the Historia has appeared in two different versions: one an abridgment found in a Copenhagen manuscript of the fifteenth century, published in 1888–1889 by G. E. Klemming ⁷; the other a very full version published by P. O. Bäckström in 1845.8

An Icelandic version in manuscript, mentioned by Nyerup (p. 152), has apparently not been published.

H in the Slavonic languages has been the subject of two interesting articles by Murko.¹ According to Murko the Historia has been translated into Bohemian, into Polish, and into Russian, and, in its variant form Pontianus, also into Hungarian. The Bohemian translation is preserved in a manuscript of the second half of the fourteenth century, and also in seven editions.² A derivate from the Bohemian translation is a Bohemian comedy made in 1558.³ The Polish translation has passed through eight editions.⁴ Of the Russian translation there are, according to Murko, forty manuscripts belonging to the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.⁵ These all go back to the Polish version.⁶ A modern Russian edition, printed at Moscow in 1847, is a translation from the Armenian.¹

The Armenian version is found in an Ispahan manuscript of 1687, of which three editions have been made (in 1696, 1720, and 1740).8

The Pontianus and the Historia Calumniae Novercalis, the two Latin prose derivates from the Historia, differ but slightly from the Historia proper. The variations exhibited by the former are only textual apparently, and are insignificant. The latter differs from the Historia mainly in the suppression of all Christian features and in the occasional substitution of new names for those usually found. The Pontianus is preserved in two editions (Strassburg, 1512, and Vienna, 1826), and in a Hungarian translation printed at Vienna in 1573 and later edited by H. Gusztav (Budapest, 1898). Of the Calumnia there have been three editions, all printed at Antwerp (1489, 1490, 1496).

The chief distinguishing features of H, aside from its peculiar order of stories, are the introduction of amatores and amici (the latter appended to vaticinium), the fusing of senescalcus and Roma, and the unique fullness of detail. The extravagant fondness of H for pointing the moral also calls for mention.⁹

⁹ For still other features peculiar to H, see G. Paris, Deux Rédactions, pp. xxxiv f.

The Emperor in H is called Poncianus rather than Diocletianus, under the influence perhaps, as Paris has suggested, of the Gesta Romanorum; for the author of H apparently wished to begin with the same formula as that so common in the Gesta, but found there already a story beginning "Dioclecianus regnavit," and accordingly substituted Poncianus for Dioclecianus. H also makes some changes in the names of the sages, displaying a preference for the spelling Craton for Cato, and substituting Josephus, Cleophas, and Joachim for Jesse, Ancilles, and Maxencius.

The date of composition of H, traditionally assumed to be very early, G. Paris showed ⁸ to be the first half of the fourteenth century—probably about 1330. Its source Paris proved ⁴ to be some manuscript belonging to A.

3. K, the Old French metrical version published by Keller,⁵ is perhaps the most precious of all French versions of The Seven Sages proper. It has come down to us in only one manuscript (Bib. Nat. fr. 1553), which was written in the late thirteenth century. But the actual composition of the poem must date from a period considerably earlier — according to Gaston Paris ⁶ about 1155.

The King in K is Vespasian, who is represented as being the son of Methusaleh. The first wife of Vespasian is a daughter of the Duke of Carthage. The name of the Prince is not given. Soon after the death of the first Queen the scene of the story is changed to Constantinople. But it is not long before the Prince returns to Rome, where he is instructed by the sages, as in other versions.

K has the same stories as D and A, but in a different order. The agreement, both in order of stories and in contents, is, as a rule, closest with D. In the stories vidua, Roma, inclusa, and vaticinium, however, K exhibits a very close, at times even verbal, agreement also with A. Gaston Paris accounted for this by assuming for A and K a common source (likewise the source of D), which he designated as V.⁷

Another Old French metrical version, closely related to K, is to be found in a late thirteenth-century manuscript belonging to the Library of Chartres.¹ The text of this version is incomplete, beginning with the end of tentamina. The order of stories from this point on — Roma, avis, sapientes, vidua, Virgilius, inclusa, vaticinium — is unique, but is nearest to that of K. Apparently its textual variations from K, though numerous, are not of any very great significance.

4. I. The "Versio Italica" was first so styled by Mussafia in his study of the Italian recensions of The Seven Sages.2 This group comprises six different versions: (1) Il Libro dei Sette Savi (preserved in a Modena manuscript of the fourteenth century; published by Cappelli, in Scelta di Curiosità Litterarie, Bologna, 1865, LXIV); (2) Storia d'una Crudele Matrigna (fifteenth century; published by G. Della Lucia, Venice, 1832; by Romagnoli, Scelta, etc., 1862, XIV; and by Roediger, Firenze, 1883); (3) Storia di Stefano, a fifteenth-century poem in ottava rima (about 6000 lines; described by Pio Rajna in Romania, VII, pp. 22 f., 369 f., and X, pp. 1 f., and published by him in Scelta, etc., 1880, CLXXVI); (4) a Latin "Versio Italica" (preserved in a Vienna, a Lemberg, a Munich, and a British Museum manuscript, all of the fifteenth century; published by Mussafia, Vienna Academy, Sitzungsb., Phil.-hist. Cl., 1868, LVII, pp. 94-118); (5) L'Amabile di Continentia (fifteenth century; edited by Cesari, Bologna, 1896); and (6) a very popular late version entitled Erasto (variously translated and published, as explained below).

This group is held together by the very peculiar order of its stories: the sages in I lead off with the story-telling, the first sage's story, canis, taking first place in the list, the Queen's first story, arbor, taking second place; and so on through to the end. A happy consequence of this reversal of order is the crowding out of the story senescalcus.

I falls into two subgroups: one comprising the first four versions in the list given above; the other the last two—the Amabile and the Erasto.

A peculiar feature of the first subgroup 5 is the naming the Prince Stefano. The Emperor and the Empress are not mentioned here by name, and so likewise with the sages except in the metrical version (3), where they are known as Eleuzies, Ansiles, Lentulis, Machiladas, Chatone, Epsse, and Charaus. The first two versions of this group — those edited by Cappelli and by Della Lucia and Roediger — do not differ substantially from each other. The Latin version (4) was probably based on some Italian version belonging to the group, but is not a close translation of any one of them. Its author must have been an Italian. The poetical version (3) is the most independent of the four versions comprised in the first subgroup.

The Amabile and the Erasto, which compose the second subgroup, are in contents very similar. In both the Prince is called Erasto, and the wicked Queen, Aphrodisia. The sages are known as Euprosigorus, Dimurgus, Thermus, Enoscopus, Philantropus, Agathus, and Leucus (with variants). Both agree in making many additions to the original, the chief of which is the inserting of several new stories just before the last story, vaticinium.

But the Amabile has not enjoyed the popularity accorded the Erasto. The Amabile survives in only one manuscript (that edited by Cesari, as above), while the Erasto has had a vogue second only to that of H and A*. In Italian it has passed through at least thirty-five editions 2 (one of them a poem by Maria Teluccini, Pesaro, 1566), and it has also been translated into French, Spanish, and English. The first French edition recorded is that printed at Lyons in 1564. Cesari (p. cxxi) catalogues nine other editions in French. There appears to have been but one edition of the Spanish translation (Amberes, 1573). The English translation was made from some French text by Francis Kirkman (The History of Prince Erastus, London, 1674; also London, 1684).

The parent version of I was probably not earlier than the fourteenth century. The source of this parent version must have been some manuscript of A^* .

5. M, the Male [or Fausse] Marrastre, is even more anomalous than is the "Versio Italica." The Prince in M is called Phiseus, and Marcus, son of the sage Cato, figures prominently; but what distinguishes M sharply from other versions is its substitution of six new stories (designated by Gaston Paris, l.c., p. xxv, as filius, nutrix, Antenor, spurius, Cardamum, and assassinus) for puteus, senescalcus, tentamina, Virgilius, sapientes, and Roma. The source of M Paris believed to be some much mutilated text of A. The new stories, which are distinctly inferior to those they displace, were probably, with one exception, the invention of the author. Only three complete manuscripts and a fragment (Berne 41) of M are known, all of which belong either to the fourteenth or to the fifteenth century. There is as yet no edition of M.

² Cesari, Amabile, pp. cxxi f., enumerates thirty-eight editions, all except three of which belong either to the sixteenth or to the seventeenth century.

With M are to be associated the numerous sequels or continuations of The Seven Sages, of which the most important is the Marques de Rome.² This type originated in Picardy, probably in the first half of the thirteenth century. Johann Alton, who has edited the Marques ⁸ from a manuscript of the Library of Arras (written down by Jehan Damien in 1278), describes ten Old French manuscripts, and Leroux de Lincy mentions two others.⁴ None of the stories in the Marques are the same as those in The Seven Sages, but some of them (as for instance the fifth, which resembles medicus ⁵) are obviously modeled after them. The Marques doubtless grew out of A*,—according to Alton, with M as an intervening stage, but Gaston Paris held that M was later than the Marques and the rest of the sequels.⁶ The Marques has, fortunately, not crossed the borders of France.

6. D*. The "Version Dérimée," a unique French prose manuscript published by Paris as the first of his Deux Rédactions (pp. 1–55), is thus called because of the numerous instances of rhyme still discernible in the text, and which establish for it a metrical original. Some of these rhyming passages fall in with K, but not all of them. Moreover, the order of stories in D* differs from that of K. Accordingly D* cannot have been based on K, but the two doubtless go back to a common source, now lost, which Paris designated as V.

D* styles the King Marcomeris, son of Priam, and makes the Prince's mother the daughter of the King of Carthage, as with K. As with K, also, D* lays the scene of the story at Constantinople. It abridges at the beginning, but later elaborates freely. Two independent additions at the end are the attempts of the Queen to escape punishment: one by means of a judicial combat, which is fought between the Prince and her nephew, Frohart; the other by asking of the Emperor, as a last favor, a toise (that is, something which may be encircled by the arms) to be burned with her, which being granted, she demands the Emperor himself. Both of the attempts are frustrated by the Prince.

7. L comprises all manuscripts of the type of the first Leroux de Lincy text (Roman des Sept Sages, pp. 1-76). At least seven Old French manuscripts preserving the L tradition either wholly or in part are known to survive, and there is also a metrical version in Catalan (3424 octosyllabic lines rhyming) in a fourteenth-century manuscript belonging to the Library of Carpentras. An edition of the latter, by Mussafia, appeared in 1876 (Vienna Academy, Denkschriften, XXV, pp. 151 f.).

The most distinctive characteristics of L are its employment of the stories filia and noverca, and the omission of the stories vidua and vaticinium. In the employment of the filia-noverca feature L clearly betrays the influence of S, which, except for the reversal of order of puteus and tentamina, it tracks closely also for the remaining eleven stories. For these eleven stories, however, L shows a much closer agreement with A*; indeed, for these stories L is textually all but one with A*. Still, Gaston Paris believed A* to be later than L, and he was, in consequence, driven to the view that L was based on some manuscript of S. To explain the difference between L and S after the eleventh story, Paris conjectured that the author of L used a manuscript of S which was mutilated toward the end, and that he was obliged, accordingly, to draw on his memory for the concluding stories. There are reasons, however, for discrediting in part Paris's conclusions here, as will be shown below in the discussion of A*.

¹ These are MSS. Bib. Nat. fr. 189, 1444, 19166, 22933, 24431, Bib. Nat. Moreau 1720, Ars. B. L. fr. 245, and Chartres 620. P. Meyer, in Bulletin de la Soc. des anc. Textes fr. for 1894, pp. 39 f., mentions three other manuscripts which he by implication groups with L, but his report is not explicit.

8. A* is for English, French, and Italian, if not, in fact, for the entire Western group of The Seven Sages, the most important of all groups. In English it includes all nine of the Middle English manuscripts that have been brought to light; and in French, no less than twenty-one Old French manuscripts.¹ To it also belong three different early Italian versions, two early Swedish versions, a Dutch metrical version, and the Welsh version. And ultimately based on A*, as has been shown, are all manuscripts of I, H, M, and Marques.

The nine Middle English manuscripts of A* represent not more than two different versions. These will be discussed at length in the next division of this Introduction.²

The Old French manuscripts are all in prose, and apparently represent only one version. Four of these manuscripts (Brussels 9245, Ars. B. L. fr. 283, Bib. Nat. fr. 95, and Cambridge Gg. VI. 28) show a contamination with L.⁸ A part of MS. Bib. Nat. fr. 2137 was published by Leroux de Lincy in 1838 in the appendices to his Roman des Sept Sages, pp. 79–103,⁴ and an edition of MS. Bib. Nat. fr. 95 has recently been published by Plomp.⁵

The Italian versions belonging to A* are the Libro dei Sette Savj, published by A. d'Ancona (Pisa, 1864, pp. 1–94) and preserved in two manuscripts of the fifteenth century; a Storia favolosa di Stefano, preserved in a Padua manuscript; ⁶ and the prose version published by H. Varnhagen from the early fourteenth-century British Museum MS.

¹ These are MSS. Bib. Nat. fr. 93, 95, 1421, 2137, 5586, 20040, 22548, 25545, Bib. Nat. Nouv. Acq. fr. 1263, Bib. Nat. Moreau 1691, Ars. B. L. fr. 246, 283, Brussels 9245, 9433, 10171, 11190, Cambridge Gg. I. 1, Gg. VI. 28, Harl. 3860, St. John Baptist College (Oxford) 102, and Berne 354. For a description of most of these, see H. P. B. Plomp, De Middelnederlandsche Bewerking van het gedicht van den vii Vroeden van binnen Rome, Utrecht, 1899, pp. 18 f.

² Pp. xxv f.

³ The story noverca has been appended to the first of these. In the second the same change has been made, and in addition Roma has been supplanted by filia. The last two of the four manuscripts contain seventeen stories each, filia appearing as the thirteenth story and noverca as the seventeenth. See Plomp, pp. 32 f. See Plomp also, p. 31, concerning a slight contamination with H detectable in MS. Bib. Nat. fr. 5586.

⁴ The variants of the rest from MS. Bib. Nat. fr. 19166 are given in footnotes to his edition of the latter manuscript, pp. 1-76.

⁵ In an appendix to his dissertation, De Middelnederlandsche Bewerking, etc., Utrecht, 1899. ⁶ Described by Cesari, Amabile di Continentia, pp. lviii f.

Addl. 27429. The last two of these agree in substituting for puteus a story named by Varnhagen mercator. The Storia favolosa, in calling the prince Stefano, betrays the influence of I. All these Italian versions are in prose.

In prose also are the two Swedish versions, one preserved in a four-teenth-century manuscript, the other in a fifteenth-century manuscript.²

The Dutch version is in verse, and comprises 4514 lines. It is found in a Brussels manuscript of the fourteenth century. There is an edition of it by K. Stallaert (Gent, 1889).

The Welsh version, Seith Doethon Ruvein, a prose redaction, much condensed, purports to have been written by a Welsh priest, Llewelyn. It appears in the famous Llyfr Coch o Hergist (Jesus College, Oxford), a manuscript of the fourteenth century, and in four other manuscripts of later execution: Jesus College MS. 3, Peniarth MS. 180, Cardiff MS. 5, and Cardiff MS. 6.8 An edition based on the Peniarth manuscript, which is a late copy of Jesus College MS. 3, was published by R. Williams in Selections from the Hengwrt MSS., London, 1880, pp. 301-324. An English translation, by G. H. Jones, is printed in the continuation of this volume, London, 1892, pp. 647-662.4

- 4 The order of stories in the Welsh version is as follows: (1) arbor, (2) canis, (3) aper, (4) medicus, (5) gaza, (6) puteus, (7) ramus [see note on ll. 1689 f.], (8) Romalupus [see note on ll. 3063 f.], (9) Virgilius, (10) vidua, (11) sapientes, (12) inclusa, (13) senescalcus, (14) tentamina, (15) vaticinium, — avis being omitted. This order finds nothing closely parallel to it elsewhere. It is nearest, however, to the order of A*, with which it agrees for the first six stories, the ninth, the eleventh, and the fifteenth. And a comparison of motif quite confirms this presumption in favor of a basis for the Welsh version in A*. The Middle English form of A*, however, was not used, as is shown by two particulars in tentamina in which the Welsh agrees with the Old French as against the Middle English: (a) it is at the end of the first year of married life that the wife complains to her mother, and (b) the wife, on leaving the table on the occasion of the last test, "went to fetch a knife for her lord." The names of the sages in the Welsh version are Bantillas, Augustus, Lentillus, Malquidas, Catonias, Jesse, and Martinus. The Emperor is called Diocletian, and his first wife Eva; the names of the second wife and the Prince are not given.

The Emperor in A* is called Diocletian. The Prince is not named in the Old French and the Dutch versions, but in the English versions 1 he is called Florentine, and in one of the Italian versions (under the influence of I) Stefano. As to the name of the cruel stepmother all versions are silent, but the Prince's mother is called in the Middle English versions either Milicent or Helie. The sages are known (as with K, D*, and L) as Bancillas, Anxilles, Lentilioune, Malquidas, Caton, Jesse, and Maxencious,2 with many variations in spelling. The order of stories in A* is (1) arbor, (2) canis, (3) aper, (4) medicus, (5) gaza, (6) puteus, (7) senescalcus, (8) tentamina, (9) Virgilius, (10) avis, (11) sapientes, (12) vidua, (13) Roma, (14) inclusa, (15) vaticinium. This order is, for the first eleven stories, the same as that of L, with which, as noted above, A* is for this part textually almost identical. The order of A* is also very near that of S; but A* preserves a different tradition from that of both L and S in that it does not contain the stories filia and noverca. In the omission of these it falls rather with K and D*, but at the same time it differs from them considerably in the order of stories.

The most ancient texts of A* are in Old French. At least nine Old French manuscripts belonging to the thirteenth century are known.³ Besides, the Marques de Rome, which itself belongs to the first half of the thirteenth century, was, as pointed out above, inspired by A*; so that the composition of A* can pretty safely be placed in the twelfth century.

The source of A^* Gaston Paris believed to be L and V (the hypothetical Old French metrical version), the text to the end of the eleventh story being taken from L, and the rest drawn from V. This view so far as it concerns V is probably correct, but there are grounds for discrediting the theory so far as it concerns L. The chief of these is that L is obviously composite in nature, preserving in its two parts two comparatively distinct lines of tradition; L is besides, imperfect

² The spelling here is that of MS. Cotton Galba E. ix (C), which furnishes the text edited in this volume.

⁸ The fullest information as to the date of the Old French manuscripts is that given by Leroux de Lincy, l.c., pp. vii f.

⁴ Deux Rédactions, pp. xviii f.

⁵ Moreover, it has not been shown that S, upon which Paris assumed L to have been based, was older than A*. Indeed, Goedeke (Orient und Occident, III, p. 397) ventured no earlier dating for S than the first half of the thirteenth century.

in one of these parts, and is quite illogical in its conclusion. Other grounds are the early vogue of A^* (not only in French, but also in English, Dutch, Welsh, and even in Scandinavian) and its closer kinship with K. Much more plausible, then, than the theory that A^* was for its first eleven stories drawn from L is the theory that L for these stories was drawn from A^* . Assuming this to be the case, we may find the source of A^* in some lost metrical version, perhaps the source of K and K0, and possibly the parent version of the entire Western group of The Seven Sages.

B. THE ENGLISH VERSIONS

The English versions of The Seven Sages of Rome fall into two distinct groups, the Middle English versions and the Early Modern English versions.

The Middle English versions are preserved in nine manuscripts, all belonging to the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries. Only two of these manuscripts (C and R, which furnish respectively the text and the variants printed in this volume) are copies of the same text. Of the rest, one (As) was probably based directly on some French manuscript and hence has no connection with any other English manuscript. The remaining eight manuscripts all find a common source in a thirteenth-century English manuscript now lost. The source of this lost manuscript, as also of As, was some Old French manuscript belonging to group A*. All the Middle English versions are in the octosyllabic couplet.

The Early Modern English versions of The Seven Sages have no connection with the Middle English versions, but represent a quite distinct line of tradition, all of them going back to H. This group comprises the prose version printed by Wynkyn de Worde, with the many derivatives therefrom, and a Scottish poem by John Rolland of Dalkeith. All of these were printed yery soon after their composition.

I. THE MIDDLE ENGLISH VERSIONS

The nine Middle English manuscripts of The Seven Sages are as follows:

- 1. Cotton Galba E. ix (C), in the British Museum.
- 2. Rawlinson Poet. 175 (R), in the Bodleian Library.
- 3. Auchinleck (A), in the Advocates' Library at Edinburgh.
- 4. Arundel 140 (Ar), in the British Museum.
- 5. Egerton 1995 (E), in the British Museum.
- 6. Balliol College 354 (B), in the Library of Balliol College, Oxford.
 - 7. Cambridge University Ff. II. 38 (F), in the Cambridge University Library.
 - 8. Cambridge University Dd. I. 17 (D), in the Cambridge University Library.
 - 9. Asloan (As), in the Library of Lord Talbot de Malahide, Malahide Castle, Ireland.

A Brief Description of the Manuscripts. — 1. C. MS. Cotton Galba E. ix. 1 The Seven Sages occupies folios 25^b to 48^b. It is written in double columns, 47 lines to the column. The text of The Seven Sages is complete, comprising 4328 lines. The handwriting is strikingly regular and clear; it belongs, according to the most reliable authorities, to the first third of the fifteenth century. Lines 1 to 134 and 3108 to 4328 are printed in Weber's Metrical Romances, Edinburgh, 1810, III, pp. 1 f. and 108 f. C furnishes the text for the present edition of The Seven Sages, comprising pp. 1-145 of this volume.

- 2. R. MS. Rawlinson Poet. 175 (new number 14667). The Seven Sages extends from folio 109^a through folio 131^c. It is written in double columns of 44 lines each. The text is incomplete, two folios which should follow the folio numbered 125 having been lost. Moreover, in the binding of the manuscript the two folios which should come just after folio 123 were placed just after folio 125 and numbered 126, 127. R is a copy of the same manuscript as that from which C was copied, but it differs from C in spelling (and occasionally in wording), in the addition of a couplet after 1. 2364 (according to the numbering of C), in the omission of two couplets (in C, 11. 1279–1280 and 2843–2844), and in the omission, pointed out above, of two folios comprising 11. 3673–4022 in C. 3974 lines of R remain. The manuscript is written in a hand of the middle of the fourteenth century. No edition of R has been published, but its variants from C are published in the footnotes to this edition, pp. 1–145.
- 3. A. The Auchinleck Manuscript.² The text of The Seven Sages occupies folios 85^a to 99^d. It is fragmentary at both beginning and end; but 2646 lines ³ remain. The date of the manuscript is about 1320.⁴ A was published by Weber in Metrical Romances, Edinburgh, 1810, III, pp. 1-153; it comprises, however, only ll. 135-2779 in this edition, C having been used for the remainder. A collation of this edition with the manuscript was published by Kölbing in Englische Studien, VI, pp. 443 f. Copious extracts of A, together with an analysis of the entire poem, may be found in Ellis's Specimens of Early English Metrical Romances, London, 1811, III, pp. 1 f. (the same, ed. J. O. Halliwell, London, 1848, pp. 405 f.). Textually A is comparatively pure. Its dialect is Kentish.

² Described by E. Kölbing, Engl. Stud., VII, pp. 178 f.

⁸ Of these the first line, "For be mede of mi seruise," is omitted in Weber's edition in order to avoid a clash in rhyme with C.

⁴ See Kölbing, Arthour and Merlin, p. lx; Brandl in Paul's Grundriss, II, i, p. 653, and the N. E. D. under Benison, Boil, Boy, Grace, Hale, etc.

- 4. Ar. MS. Arundel 140. This, a paper manuscript, belongs, according to Ward (Catalogue of Romances, II, p. 224), to the fifteenth century. The Seven Sages occupies folios 152 to 165^b. The text is fragmentary at both beginning and end, beginning near the conclusion of aper and ending shortly after the opening of vaticinium; 2565 lines remain. The manuscript is much faded, and in many places illegible, at the end of the b-columns and the beginning of the c-columns. Single lines have been lost after 11. 618 and 2549; after 1. 919 an extra line, without a corresponding rhyme, has been introduced. Ar is imperfect also in its meter; the number of lame lines is not small, and there are likewise a good many imperfect rhymes. The dialect is Kentish. No edition has yet appeared.
- 5. E. MS. Egerton 1995.² This also is a paper manuscript, written probably in the second half of the fifteenth century. The Seven Sages occupies folios 3 to 54^b. It is written in single columns, with initials in red and with very regular capitalization. The text comprises only 3588 lines, but is complete. The meter is comparatively good, and the rhyme very regular. The dialect is not strongly marked, but appears to be Kentish.³ This text has not been published.
- 6. B. Balliol College MS. 354. This manuscript was written early in the sixteenth century, and according to Coxe (Catalogus, I, p. 110) is in the hand of John Hyde; the colophon, however, concludes with the words, "Quod Richard Hill," whence we are pretty safe in inferring that Richard Hill was the scribe. The Seven Sages begins with folio 18a and ends with folio 54b. The text is complete, in 3708 lines. Abbreviations are few. The rhyme is pretty regular. Sometimes the same rhyme is used for a leash of four or more lines. The dialect is Southern. No edition of the text has been printed, but the Early English Text Society has for several years been advertising the entire manuscript as calling for publication.

¹ The lines in C corresponding to the first and last lines of Ar are 1041 and 3848.

² For a general description, see Ward, l.c., II, pp. 218 f.

³ The representative of Anglo-Saxon y is usually e, but is occasionally y, as in the rhymes kynne: lynne (1317–1318) and wynne: syne (1635–1636). Occasionally, too, E affects a Northern pronunciation, as in kynge: yonge (93–94) and yonge: connynge (3581–3582).

⁴ See articles 31 and 98 of the manuscript.

⁵ A few forms in which Anglo-Saxon y is represented by e are probably to be traced to a Kentish original.

- 7. F. Cambridge University MS. Ff. II. 38 (formerly "More 690"). This is a paper manuscript of about the middle of the fifteenth century. The text of The Seven Sages occupies folios 134ª to 156d, and is incomplete, folios 141 and 144 having been lost entirely and folio 135 in part; 2555 lines remain. The rhyme is not often incorrect, but unrhythmical lines abound, especially in the first half of the poem. The dialect is somewhat mixed, but is clearly that of some one of the Southern counties. As in B, there are traces of a Kentish source. Extracts from F are printed in Halliwell, The Thornton Romances, Canden Society Publications, XXX, pp. xliii f.; Wright, The Seven Sages, Percy Society Publications, XVI, pp. lxx f.; and Petras, Über die mittelenglischen Fassungen der Sage von den Sieben Weisen Meistern, Breslau, 1885, pp. 60 f.
- 8. D. Cambridge University MS. Dd. I. 17.2 This manuscript belongs to the end of the fourteenth century, and is written on parchment. The text of The Seven Sages is complete, but is obviously the work of a careless scribe; no less than thirteen couplets have been vitiated by the loss of one of their lines, and there are other serious textual crudities. The dialect is Southeast Midland, with a liberal intermixture of Northern forms. An edition of D was made by Thomas Wright in 1845 (Percy Society Publications, XVI, pp. 1 f.). A collation of this edition with the manuscript was published by Kölbing in Engl. Stud., VI, pp. 448 f.
- 9. As. The Asloan Manuscript. This manuscript, according to Varnhagen, who has described it in Engl. Stud., XXV, pp. 321 f., was written about the beginning of the sixteenth century. The Seven Sages occupies folios 167 to 209 inclusive, and comprises about 2800 lines.

¹ See Halliwell, The Thornton Romances, London, 1844, pp. xxxvif., and the Cambridge University Library Catalogue of Manuscripts, II, p. 408.

² See, for a general description, the Cambridge University Library Catalogue of Manuscripts, I, pp. 15 f., and W. W. Skeat, William's Vision of Piers the Plowman, E. E. T. S., 1869, XXXVIII, pp. xxiii f.

⁸ The N. E. D. under Carol, 6, dates the manuscript somewhat later—about 1425; Morsbach, Mittelenglische Grammatik, Halle, 1896, p. 9, for some inexplicable reason would place it around 1300.

⁴ These are the lines coming immediately after or immediately before lines 1312, 1417, 1696, 1719, 2094, 2293, 2695, 2840, 2960, 3057, 3134, 3365, and 3395.

⁵ The manuscript is also described by J. Schipper, Poems of Dunbar, Vienna, 1891, Part I, pp. 5 f.

The text is incomplete, the stories vidua and Roma having been omitted entirely.¹ The rhyme of As is good, but the rhythm is often faulty; particularly awkward are certain daring enjambements.² The dialect is Scottish. A complete transcript of As, made by D. Laing in 1826, belongs to the Library of the University of Edinburgh. An extract of 196 lines (the story avis) was published by Varnhagen in Engl. Stud., XXV, pp. 322 f., with his description of the manuscript. An edition of the entire poem by the same scholar has for several years been advertised by the Scottish Text Society as "about to appear."

The Interrelation of the Manuscripts. Of the nine Middle English manuscripts, only two — C and R — are copies of the same text. Five other manuscripts, however, — A, Ar, E, B, and F — are closely related to each other and to the text reproduced by C and R, and, together with these two, make up the group which I designate as Y.

The close interrelationship of the manuscripts that constitute Y may be graphically shown by the following table, the result of a line-for-line comparison for the section which C, R, A, Ar, E, and B³ have in common,⁴ the comparison being restricted to identical lines ⁵ and similar rhymes.

¹ There are, according to Laing (see his transcript), other lacunæ, but of less moment; among them a lacuna after l. 61, which Laing takes to involve the loss of an entire folio, but which probably amounts to less than ten lines.

In Rome cite than was thar sevyne Sagis, the wisest vndir hevyne.

 $^{^2}$ As, for example, in the following couplet (ll. 19–20):

⁸ F, owing to the radical irregularities which characterize that part of its text which corresponds to the section used for this comparison, is excluded from the table.

This table clearly demonstrates a close kinship between the seven manuscripts concerned. It will be shown later that F, also, is for a large part of it very near to these manuscripts. But despite such close kinship as is here demonstrated, no one of the seven manuscripts is based on any other member of the group; all go back to a common Middle English source, now lost, which I designate as y.

Of the remaining two manuscripts, one, D, though it differs from Y considerably in motif and quite radically in wording, seems nevertheless to be nearly related to Y. But it cannot have been based on any one of the manuscripts that make up Y, since it is in some respects more faithful than any of them to the Old French source. Accordingly, we have to assume that its source was the manuscript (or some derivative therefrom) upon which y was based, — a manuscript, therefore, which is the parent of all except one of the Middle English manuscripts. This lost manuscript — the source of C, R, A, Ar, E, B, F, and D— I designate as x.

As was probably drawn directly from the French. This I have been unable to establish conclusively, but there is no substantial evidence of a basis upon any other one of the extant Middle English manuscripts.

The grounds for these generalizations, and further details as to the mutual relations of the Middle English manuscripts, may best be presented in a consideration of each of the manuscripts separately. I first consider the manuscript which has served as the basis of the text edited in this book.

r. C. Both Petras ¹ and Kölbing ² held C to represent a distinct version of The Seven Sages, a translation made directly from the Old French and related with other Middle English manuscripts only through a common Old French source. That this view is erroneous, however, a glance at the table given above will show; for it is inconceivable that two quite independent translations should have, in a total of less than two thousand lines, 26 identical lines and 338 similar rhymes. ⁸ Such close agreement clearly contradicts any theory of independent translation; it indisputably proves a near relationship between C and the rest of Y.

The exact nature of this relationship, however, does not at once appear. The tabular evidence would indicate either that C was based on some other one of the manuscripts included in the table, or that these manuscripts were based directly or indirectly on C, or that they are related with C through a common source.

One naturally thinks first of all of a basis for C in R; but it is shown below, in the section on the Cotton-Rawlinson redaction,4 that the two go back to a common source, the lost manuscript cr. That C was not based on any of the other manuscripts of Y is established by the circumstance that in several instances C is more faithful to the Old French than is any one of them. For example, in l. 3264 C reads Hungeri in accord with A* and K, while the other Middle English manuscripts substitute either Pletys or Poyle. Again, ll. 3039-3042 faithfully reproduce the Old French (see note to ll. 3039-3042), while the other related manuscripts are silent here. Other passages in which C is unique in its fidelity to the French are pointed out in the notes to ll. 2988, 3612, 3765-3768, and 4195-4196. And further evidence supporting this conclusion is afforded by the numerous passages (see note to 1. 1189) in which C falls in with F as against other manuscripts; for a basis of C upon F, in the light of the latter's radical peculiarities, is entirely out of the question. It is quite clear, then, that C was not derived from any other of the Middle English manuscripts that have been preserved.

It is also easily demonstrated that no other of the Middle English manuscripts was based on C; for there is not one of them save R

⁸ These are the figures for C and A; for C and Ar the number of similar rhymes is even larger.

⁴ Pp. lxvi f.

(whose relation to C is discussed later¹) that is not in one or more passages closer to the French than is C. Thus in medicus, C is the only one of the Middle English manuscripts, save R, that omits mention of the burning of the nephew's books, a feature which is constant in the French versions; so, likewise, in omitting the name of the tower—

Cressent—in Roma. Moreover, there are in C a number of additions (among them ll. 1335-1342, 1520-1526, 2537-2544, 2595-2600, 3886-3892, 3909-3922) of which there is no trace in any other text.

We are, accordingly, driven to the conclusion that C is related to A, Ar, E, B, and F through some Middle English manuscript which was either y or a copy of y, and that it reproduces this manuscript in a few particulars more faithfully than do any other of the manuscripts that go back to it.

- 2. R. The Rawlinson manuscript, as the tabular statistics make obvious, is merely a copy of the text preserved in C. It is in an earlier hand than C, but C was not copied from it; neither was R copied from some manuscript of which C was a faithful transcript; but the two are independent copies of the same original, cr. For further particulars concerning the relation of R and C,² see below, pp. lxxi f.
- 3. A. The oldest of the Middle English manuscripts is the Auchinleck. This manuscript is in the Kentish dialect the dialect, in all probability, in which the immediate source of Y was written and doubtless reflects better than any other manuscript the phonology and the inflections of this parent version (y). In wording, too, A must be nearer to y than is any other of the manuscripts. In some instances, indeed, it reproduces the very words of the French; as, for example, in l. 666, "Deu vous doint bonjour" = L 15, "Diex vos doint bon jor" (where B 652, "Deux vous garde bonjour," is the only other manuscript which approximates A), and L 743, "in pount tournis" = $L(A^*)$ 17, "sur le pont torneiz" (where other manuscripts employ an English phrasing). Other and perhaps better evidence of A's fidelity to its source is found in the comparative table of lines and rhymes given above, in which it is shown that, with two exceptions, all the manuscripts

² R being merely a copy of C, it will be unnecessary in the rest of this section to differentiate between the two. When mention is made of C, it may be understood that what is said of it holds also for R.

⁸ C and R in such a comparison must, of course, count as one.

there taken account of have more in common with A than with any other manuscript.

But that A was not the source of Y is proved by its omission of sundry passages found both in other members of Y and in the Old French. This abridgment is most violent in the conclusions to certain tales - in particular, aper, gaza, Virgilius, avis. Thus A has nothing corresponding to C 1041-1058 (= Ar 1-20, E 949-968, B 933-948, $L(A^)$ 25), nor to C 2370-2376 (= Ar 1280-1288, E 2204-2222, B 2244-2252, L(A) 55), while against C 1472-1490 (= Ar 456-479, E 1401-1426, B 1393-1420, L (A*) 34) it has only six lines, 1387-1392.

¹ An illustration of this fault of A may be given by the citation of A, Ar, and L (A*) for the last of the passages alluded to.

- Ar 456 Loude bei gonne on hym to crye, And saide, "Lentylyon, kybe by mastry, Helpe by disciple at bis nede." pe master a-lyst bo of his stede,
 - And grete be Emperour on his kne. 460 Unnebe wold he hym see. be Emperoure saide, "bou fals man, Be hym bat al men-kynde wan, bou art fekell and fatoure, Avoi! fet messires Lantules, pourcoi dites vos ce? Ge le vos dirai, fait li emperères, je vos avoie baillie mon fil à aprendre et à endoctriner, et la première doctrine que li avez faite, si est que vos li avez la parole tolue; l'autre qui veult prendre ma fame à force. Mes ja Dex ne vos en doint joir; et bien sachiez que tantost comme il sera morz, vos morroiz apres, et seroiz destruit ensement.

The lines corresponding to this in A are the following (1387-1392):

And th' emperour wel sone he fond: He gret him faire, ich understond. Th' emperour saide, "So God me spede, Traitour, the schal be quit thi mede! For mi sones mislerning, Ye schulle habbe evil ending!"

This proves that neither C, Ar, E, nor B was based on A. F, for these passages, is either fragmentary or badly garbled, so that nothing can be inferred from them as to its history; but it will be shown later, under the discussion of F, that this manuscript, too, was not based on A. As for D and As, some details in which each of them is alone in its loyalty to the Old French establish also that neither one of them was derived from A.

That A was not based on any other extant Middle English manuscript goes without saying, for it antedates all of them. It is likewise not to be believed that A was based on any manuscript older than itself of which some one of the extant manuscripts is a transcript; the expressions cited above in which A is alone in its fidelity to the Old French contradict any such theory.

Our conclusion must be, then, that A goes back to y independently of all other known manuscripts, and that it has had no direct influence on any other one of them. In both incident and phrasing it is, as will appear below, nearest to Ar, but there is no conclusive evidence that this nearness is traceable to any contamination of the two manuscripts.

4. Ar. The Arundel manuscript, like the Auchinleck, is fragmentary, but is nevertheless one of the most important of all the manuscripts that have been preserved. It is probably a hundred years younger than A, and is upwards of fifty years younger than R; yet in its fidelity to y it yields only to A, and that only in the body of the stories, for in the transitional parts, as has been shown, A sometimes abridges freely. E, B, and C unite with Ar in retaining most of the passages omitted by A, but all three of these manuscripts exhibit features of their own which are obviously not traceable to y. E abridges often, as will appear below; B freely alters rhyme and word-order, and sometimes makes changes in motif; while C makes a number of slight additions and is otherwise independent, at times, in both phrasing and incident. F, though in all probability very close to y in the second half, is for the first half the most garbled of all the Middle English manuscripts. Ar, in contradistinction to these, rarely has an incident peculiar to itself or even a couplet, but is almost invariably paralleled, whether in content or in wording, by one or more of the nearly related manuscripts. In the first 1900 lines it adds only one couplet, ll. 1871-1872.

When Ar is paralleled by only one other manuscript, this manuscript is usually A. Thus Ar 552, "I wyll become wode and wylde," finds nothing closely corresponding to it in any other text save A (l. 1462), which is identical with it; so Ar 668, "Pane cam he rynnyng as a lyuarde" = A 1580, "And he com als a leopard"; Ar 676, "Behote heme pens a pours full" = A 1588, "Bihote hem pans an handfolle"; Ar 1518, "To loude pou spake by Latyn" = A 2396, "Al to loude thou spak thi Latin," — none of which find any close correspondence in any of the remaining manuscripts. Such agreements with A go far toward confirming the theory of Ar's nearness to y. Nor are certain agreements of Ar with E against all other manuscripts contradictory to this theory; they merely indicate that E is probably for the passages concerned near to y.

As to the relationship of Ar to other manuscripts, it has already been shown that despite its nearness to A it could not have been based on A, since it reports faithfully certain passages which A omits. Neither could it have been based on C, since Ar in various places is nearer to the Old French¹; nor on E, since Ar falls in with A, C, and B in reproducing sundry lines which E discards (see below); nor, finally, on B, since B was of later composition. And that Ar was not based on F, D, or As is too obvious to require any demonstration.

It is not so easy to show that some one or more of the manuscripts were not based on Ar, but this would seem to follow from the circumstance that Ar exhibits a few features peculiar to itself, — for example, the rhymes to ll. 171-172, 227-228, 463-464, etc., and the spelling Julius and July in Roma where all other manuscripts better preserve the Genus and Jenvier of the French.

5. E. The Egerton manuscript is, happily, complete, but its value is somewhat impaired by the rather frequent slight omissions it makes. Among single couplets omitted are the following: after l. 996 (= C 1083-1084), after l. 1024 (= C 1111-1112), after l. 1400 (= C 1469-1470), after l. 1500 (= C 1581-1582), after l. 1530 (= C 1625-1626), after l. 1558 (= C 1655-1656), after l. 1578 (= C 1679-1680); and after l. 2472 (= C 2679-2690) several couplets have been lost.

Except for these omissions, however, the scribe of E adhered to his original rather slavishly. He rarely varied either incident or rhyme, as appears clearly enough from the comparative table of lines placed in evidence above. The most striking variation is that made just before the end, beginning with l. 3561, for which see the note on ll. 4325 f. of this edition.

E, then, must be grouped with A and Ar as one of the manuscripts nearest to.y.

Its nearest relationship, as the comparative table indicates, is with Ar; its next closest relationship, with B. After Ar and B it is nearest to A. The tabular statistics given above do, indeed, seem to indicate that E is nearer to A than to B; but this seeming discrepancy is explained by the greater freedom exercised by B in the change of word-order, which affects rhyme as well as the identity of the line otherwise. And a comparison of incident and phrasing is conclusive in establishing a nearer relation to B. In senescalcus, for instance, where A, C, and D, in agreement with the Old French, report that the king at the beginning of the story despised women, according to E, Ar, and B he took great delight in women. So also there are occasional couplets which are peculiar to E, Ar, and B; among them the following for the first fifty lines: E 965-968 (=Ar 17-20, B 945-948) and E 977-980 (=Ar 29-32, B 959-962).

But despite its nearness to Ar, B, and A, E cannot have been copied from any one of them. That it was not based on Ar is established by its preserving certain lines which Ar is alone in omitting (e.g., E 987-988, 1621-1622, 1809-1810). That it was not based on B is obvious from the rhyme evidence given in the statistical table. And that it was not based on A was demonstrated under the discussion of A by the citation of passages preserved by B but arbitrarily omitted by A. The deriving of E from any other of the Middle English manuscripts is put out of the question by the tabular evidence adduced at the outset.

It is also certain that no other Middle English manuscript was based on E. For A, C, and D antedate E, while Ar, B, and F all at some point exhibit greater fidelity to the lost originals. Perhaps E and B were transcribed not directly from y, but from a manuscript intermediate between them and y.

6. B. The Balliol manuscript, next to the Cotton and Rawlinson manuscripts, is the fullest and longest of all Middle English manuscripts, — this, however, in the main not because of independent additions so much as because of the avoidance of such curtailments as characterize A and E. Still B does occasionally make independent additions: in the first thousand lines of the passage from which the tabular statistics were drawn it has 16 couplets which do not appear elsewhere; and occasionally the addition is of even more moment, as in ll. 1693 f., where B reports that the steward is put to death by pouring molten silver and lead down his throat.

But the most characteristic feature of B is the large number of trifling alterations in phrasing and in word-order. This is to be accounted for, in part, by the scribe's effort to improve the rhythm of lines which, owing to the loss of inflections, had by the time at which he wrote—the sixteenth century—become imperfect; in part, to a timid effort to adjust the phraseology and word-order to the usage of his time.

The relationship of B to other manuscripts is not very obvious. The comparative table near the beginning of this section seems to indicate a closer relationship with \mathbf{Ar} and \mathbf{A} than with any other manuscripts. But a comparison on the basis of slight omissions and additions tends to contradict this, and points to \mathbf{E} as being nearest to \mathbf{B} . In almost every instance in which \mathbf{B} agrees in an addition or an omission with any other manuscript, this manuscript is \mathbf{E} . To be specific, there are in the first thousand lines of the constant element in $\mathbf{Y} (= \mathbf{B} 933 \text{ f.})$ a total of ten such variations, of which nine are in agreement with \mathbf{E} . There are also certain minor details which \mathbf{B} and \mathbf{E} have exclusively in common.

But B was not derived from E, since it retains certain couplets which were omitted by the scribe of E but which are, except for this, constant in Y. Among these are B 1007-1008 (= C 1111-1112, A 1019-1020, etc.), B 1391-1392 (= C 1469-1470, A 1385-1386), B 1533-1534 (= C 1625-1626, A 1500-1499), and B 1589-1590 (= C 1679-1680, A 1549-1550). That B was not based on either A or Ar has already been shown. That it was not based on any other one of the manuscripts is too patent to justify an attempt at demonstration.

That no one of the remaining manuscripts was drawn from $\bf B$ is established by $\bf B$'s posteriority in date and by the abundance of slight variations (as, for instance, the additions mentioned above) which characterize it.

7. F. Before entering upon a discussion of the relationship of F (Cambridge University MS. Ff. II. 38) to other manuscripts, it will be well to state briefly some of the peculiarities of the manuscript.

It has been pointed out under the brief description of the Middle English manuscripts that the text of F is fragmentary, and comprises only a little upwards of 2500 lines. The fewness of lines in F, however, does not arise so much from its fragmentary condition—for F contains all or parts of fifteen stories—as from a radical abridging of the first eleven stories. The introduction and the first eleven stories comprise in F only 1439 lines, while the last four stories comprise 1116 lines, or more than E or B for the corresponding passages.

Even more noteworthy than this abridgment of stories are the substitution for senescalcus and Virgilius of two new stories (for which see the notes to ll. 1689 f. and 2159 f.) and, coincident with this, a sweeping change in the order of stories. Only eight stories (1, 3, 5, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15) retain their usual order; the two new stories take the places (7 and 9) of the stories they supplant; and, for the rest, 2 changes place with 8, 4 with 12, 6 with 2, 8 with 4, and 12 with 6, — with the result that the order of stories in F is: (1) arbor, (2) puteus, (3) aper, (4) tentamina, (5) gaza, (6) vidua, (7) The Riotous Son, (8) canis, (9) The Squire and his Borrow, (10) avis, (11) sapientes, (12) medicus, (13) Roma, (14) inclusa, (15) vaticinium.

In the content of the first eleven stories, owing to the compression to which they have been subjected, there are naturally many minor variations from the usual version. These are partly in the nature of omissions; as in arbor (which comprises only 16 lines), where no mention is made of the merchant's journey, nor of the trimming away of the branches of the old tree; and in sapientes, where the account of Merlin's interpreting the stranger's dream is omitted. There are also a number of striking alterations and additions. Thus aper deals with a swineherd who, having lost one of his flock, fears to return to his masters, and has climbed a tree and is eating some acorns when the wild boar comes up; puteus substitutes for the curfew law a law according to which any husband found away from home at night with any other woman than his wife must be stoned to death; tentamina adds a fourth trial of the husband, in the killing of his hawk; avis makes the paramour a priest, and records that the wife was put to death by her enraged husband; and vidua reports that there was only one thief which the knight was to watch, and adds to the mutilations of the husband's corpse the cutting off of two fingers.1

¹ For a more detailed presentation of the peculiarities of F, see the editor's Study of The Seven Sages, pp. 64-66.

How to account for such freedom in F is not at once clear. One would think of a basis for the first eleven stories in oral accounts; but this is rendered extremely improbable by the fact that throughout this part there is frequent agreement in rhyme, and now and then agreement in whole lines, with other Middle English manuscripts. Or, again, it might be supposed that F was made from some very fragmentary manuscript, but there is no substantial basis for this supposition, and the changed order of stories is entirely against it. The most plausible theory is that the redactor of F had before him a complete manuscript, which for some reason—possibly to conceal his source—he arbitrarily altered for the first eleven stories, and then, growing weary of his task, reproduced, for the rest, practically what he found.

Accept this explanation, and the problem of F's relationship becomes very simple; for if the variations of the first part of the text are attributable to the scribe of F, this part is of little value for purposes of comparison, and we are accordingly restricted to the last part as the basis for investigation.

For this part F presents comparatively close textual agreement with E, B, C, A, and Ar (the last two unhappily fragmentary here). No single important detail and but a very small percentage of the rhymes have been changed, while lines identical with lines in one or more of the rest of the manuscripts are numerous. This agreement is closest with Ar, and next in order with E; thus, for the 845 lines (F 1440-2285) which F, Ar, and E have in common, F has only 53 lines identical with lines in E, but 116 identical with lines in Ar. Again, for this section, F preserves in agreement with Ar 26 couplets which do not appear in E. And there are a few passages in which F agrees only with C, in some of which passages, it should be noted, F and C are nearer to the Old French than are any of the rest of the Middle English manuscripts (see the note to 1. 1189). In the light of these agreements with C it is impossible to derive F from A, Ar, E, or B. Neither can we derive F from C; that is precluded by the agreement of F with Ar and other manuscripts where C is free.2 We must conclude, then, that F was based on y independently of any other extant manuscript; and, conversely, in view of F's mutilations of its original, that no other of the extant Middle English manuscripts was based on it.

² See, for instance, the notes to ll. 2537-2544, 2595-2600, 3164-3170, 3443-3446, 3886-3892, 4009-4012, 4133-4136, etc.

8. D (Cambridge University MS. Dd. I. 17) is even freer than F; but unlike F, it is free throughout its entire extent.

Among the peculiarities of D are the following:

(1) The queen, known in Y as Milicent (or Ilacent), is called Helie (or Elye); (2) in canis, the knight, after learning the truth about his greyhound, drowns himself in a fish pool in his garden; (3) in medicus, the barrel incident is omitted; (4) likewise, in gaza, the accounts of the finding of the headless body and of the subsequent efforts to identify it are omitted; (5) in Virgilius, Merlin is substituted for Virgil; (7) in the same story, the entire repisode—that of the image with the arrow—is omitted; (8) in sapientes, the finding of the child Merlin and the incident dependent thereon are omitted; (9) in the same story, after all the sages have been slain and the caldron is clear, Merlin and Herod ride outside the city gates and Herod regains his sight; (10) in Roma, there are three heathen kings instead of seven; (11) in vaticinium, the father and the son at the beginning of the story are on their way to visit a hermit on an island in the sea; (12) in the same story, the city to which the father comes in his distress is "Plecie."

It was because of such abundant deviation from the typical Middle English version of The Seven Sages that Wright ¹ and Petras ² held that D had its immediate source in some Old French manuscript and was unrelated to any other Middle English manuscript. And this view does seem to derive some support from the variations just cited, for three of the twelve features enumerated as peculiar to D among Middle English manuscripts are, nevertheless, found in the Old French. In explanation of these agreements with the Old French it is necessary to assume either that D is unrelated to other Middle English manuscripts save through the French, or that it was based on some Middle Englishmanuscript nearer to the Old French than are any of the rest of the Middle English manuscripts known to us.

That the latter of these two theories is the correct one is established, I believe, by certain textual parallels between D and the manuscripts belonging to group Y. Between A and D, for example, there are, for

Some of these agreements are, in all probability, merely accidental, but not all of them; it is highly improbable that two independent translations should have, in a total of 2500 lines, four lines identical and upwards of forty similar rhymes.²

In the light of these agreements, then, and in view of the rarity and insignificance of the situations which D has in common with the French as against the remaining Middle English manuscripts, it can hardly be held that D represents an independent translation from the Old French. The evidence adduced seems to warrant no other conclusion than that ¹ For a fuller list of such textual parallels between D and A, and for a partial list of the parallels between D and E, see the editor's Study of The Seven Sages, pp. 78 f.

 $^{^2}$ That is, one similar rhyme out of every thirty couplets. The percentage is much larger for the first hundred lines of D: a comparison of D with E for these lines shows one identical line and eight similar rhymes, or one similar rhyme to six couplets.

D and Y have a common Middle English source, a manuscript now long since lost.¹

This source could hardly have been y, since the manuscripts composing Y differ but slightly despite the fact that each of them goes back to its source independently of all other members of the group. Consequently we must assume for D and y a basis in one and the same Middle English translation of the French, a manuscript which I designate as x.

9. As. The relationship of the Asloan MS. to other English manuscripts is even more difficult to determine than is that of D. For As, while it agrees in a number of instances with the Old French as against the remaining Middle English manuscripts, exhibits an even larger number of situations in which it differs from both Middle English and Old French: it is, in brief, the most free of all the English manuscripts.

A comparison with other Middle English manuscripts and the Old French L (A*), K, D*, and H, made on the basis of the first 600 lines, reveals the following details peculiar to As:

(1) The Queen dies when the Prince is three years old; (2) the sages are introduced in the following order, their names being spelled as indicated: Bantillas, Aunxullus, Lentalus, Catone, Malcome, Ampustinus, Cratone; (3) the sages call together masons and have them build the hall in which the Prince is to be taught; (4) the Emperor, when he is advised by his barons to marry again, says that he is already old and that marriage might shorten his life; (5) Bantillas accompanies the Prince to court; (6) as soon as it develops that the Prince will not speak at all, the Emperor asks Bantillas if the child has become dumb, to which Bantillas replies that he spoke well enough that morning; (8) the burgess in arbor is called Cornele; (9) Bantillas, in the introduction to canis, reminds the Emperor that the Prince's offense is not by Rome's laws a capital offense, since the Queen was not a maid.

The same 600 lines have no details in which As agrees with the Middle English against the Old French, but they have the following details in which As agrees with the French as against the rest of the Middle English manuscripts:

(1) The Emperor seals the message he sends to the sages with his own ring (not in A*, K, and D*, but in H); (2) the Prince, on approaching the royal palace, bows courteously, but is silent; the Emperor conducts him to a hall of state and asks him how he is pleased with the sages; (3) the Empress, on hearing of the arrival of the Prince, fits herself out in royal manner and proceeds, accompanied by her maids, to the hall of state; (4) arrived at the hall of state, the Empress learns of the child's persistent silence; ¹ she asks that she be allowed to try to make him speak, and so leads the Prince away, against his will, to her chamber; (5) in arbor, the fruit of the pine refreshes the people of the city; and when the burgess has the pine cut down the people lament that he has been so great a fool (this, as (1), only in H); (6) the knight in canis, at the end of the story, breaks his spear in pieces, renounces all joy in arms, and goes to the Holy Land.

Such agreements with the Old French quite establish that As was not based on any other of the extant Middle English manuscripts or on the lost y. They do not, to be sure, prove that As was not ultimately based on x (the common source, posited above, of y and D), but they beget a strong prejudice in favor of that view. In truth, in the light of the frequency of the exclusive agreements with the French, I should not hesitate to assert that As was surely an independent translation from the French, were there not (as in the case of D) a few lines in As which find rather close parallels in some of the manuscripts comprised in Y. These lines are for the first 600 lines of As the following, C being used as the representative of Y:

As

Within na mar space than sevyne zeir.

(36)

That I sall him all science leir, . . . That I haf and my fellouis baith. Than rais the secound sage full raith.

(35, 37-38)

C

Within be terme of seuyn zere.

(64)

I sal him lere ful right and rath pat I can and mi felous bath.

¹ The agreement here with the Old French is very striking. As (212-217) reads:

Scho said: "My Lord, is this your child?"
"3a," he said, "bot he is exild Fra speche, that na word speke may he."
Than said scho: "He sall ga with me
To chalmer or we twa disseuer;
He sall speike anys and he speke euer," which is a pretty close paraphase of L (A*) at this point (p. 10): "Sire, fait elle, est ce vostre filz? Oil, fet li empereres, mes il ne parole mie. Sire, s'il onques parla, bailliez le moi, je le ferai parler."

As

(963–964; see also A 881–882) pe bare for tene pan whet his tuskes, And wrot pe erth vp al in buskes.

(991-992)

He closed his yen als he wald slepe, And be hird ban toke gude kepe.

(1013-1014)

It may be that these agreements are to be traced, as with D, to a development of As from x, but I think not; they are, in my judgment, merely accidental agreements growing out of the sameness of the Middle English romancers' vocabulary.

Authorship. — Concerning the authorship of the Middle English versions nothing of moment is known. A colophon 1 to B does ascribe that text to one Richard Hill, 2 but this ascription doubtless signifies nothing more than that Richard Hill was the scribe of the manuscript whence B was copied, or that he was the redactor of the B text. Interesting is the conjecture of Kölbing 8 that A was written by the author of the

² Just who this Richard Hill was I have been unable to find out. From article 31 of the manuscript we learn that he was "hansed" at Barow in 1508, at "Briguis" in 1511, and at Antwerp in the same year; also that he was made free of the merchant adventurers of England at Barow, May 25, 1508; and that he was sworn at Grocers' Hall, November 10, 1511. But further than this I have been unable to learn anything.

⁸ Altenglische Bibliothek, Leipzig, 1890, IV, p. civ.

Kentish versions of Arthour and Merlin, Alisaunder, and Richard Coer de Lion, but his conjecture has no tangible support. Quite as interesting, but also quite as valueless, is the ascription, on a fly-leaf of the Rawlinson manuscript, of the R text (then also, of necessity, the C text) to Richard Rolle of Hampole. There is no evidence that the pious Yorkshire monk ever had any literary connection with The Seven Sages of Rome. Other references to authorship are lacking. The nature of the framework and stories might be thought of as favoring lay authorship for the parent version, but it does not by any means establish it. Until other manuscripts are brought to light or other sources of information are discovered, we must remain in ignorance as to the authorship of the Middle English versions of The Seven Sages.

Place and Date of Composition. — The place of composition of the manuscripts that have survived is presumably indicated by the dialect of these manuscripts; that is, for C and R the north of England (Yorkshire probably), for A, Ar, and E Kent, for B and F the south of England (perhaps Kent), for D the southeast Midland, and for As Scotland. As for the lost manuscripts, y was almost assuredly written in Kent, since all but one of the manuscripts derived from it are either in the Kentish dialect or show a Kentish influence; x, the parent of all the known Middle English manuscripts save As, also probably belonged to Kent, since all circumstantial evidence favors the view that y represents x much more closely than does D. It should be added that it is just those manuscripts — A, Ar, and E — which reflect the Old French most faithfully that are most obviously Kentish in dialect.

The time of composition of the Middle English manuscripts is probably, with one exception, roughly indicated by the handwriting of the manuscripts.⁴ The one exception is C, which, although written in a hand of the first third of the fifteenth century, was composed not later than

¹ On the verso of the paper fly-leaf at the beginning of the volume; in a much later hand than that of the manuscript proper. It is a list of the contents of the volume, to which is added the following: "All writ by Richard Role or Hampole a native of Hampole near Doncaster in Yorkshire where he died in among the Cistercian nuns An°. Dom. 1349."

² Indeed, Ritson believed the redactor of C was most likely a monk (see his Ancient Engleish Metrical Romanceës, London, 1802, III, p. 229).

⁸ See the detailed consideration of the dialect of C given below, pp. lxiii f.

⁴ These dates have been given above (pp. xxxvii f.) in the formal description of each of the manuscripts.

the middle of the preceding century. For determining the date of y, A is of most importance. This manuscript dates from about the year 1320, so that y must have been written before that date—in the first years of the fourteenth century probably. If we assume for y a dating about 1300, we must assume for x, whence y and D were derived, an even earlier dating; about the year 1275 is, I feel, a conservative guess.

Source. — The source of the Middle English versions ¹ was some form of the Old French version A*, manuscripts of which have been published by Plomp, De Middelnederlandsche Bewerking van het gedicht van den VII Vroeden, pp. 1-51, and (in part, with variants from L for the rest) by Leroux de Lincy, Roman des Sept Sages, pp. 79-103. All the Middle English manuscripts save F (which, despite its freedoms, was derived from the typical Middle English form of the story) preserve the same order of stories as that of A*, and all except F, D, and As, which are very free at times, agree pretty closely with A* in content. All other Old French versions differ from the Middle English type in the order of stories, and are likewise further removed from it than is A* in the content of stories and of the framework.

In view of the fact that both x and As were in verse, one would incline to look for a source for them also in verse, but there is no substantial evidence that there ever existed a metrical form of A*. Still it must be observed that neither of the manuscripts of A* which have been published preserves faithfully the form from which the Middle English versions were derived, for there are a few details in which the Middle English manuscripts agree with other Old French versions as against A*. The chief among these is the incident in Virgilius of the images cast by Virgil for the east and west gates of Rome, an incident which is related by K (ll. 3960 f.) and D* (p. 41), but which does not appear in the printed manuscripts of A*. Less important details in which x is nearer to other French versions than to A* as printed are pointed out in the notes to ll. 2106-2108 and 2111-2112.

II. LATER ENGLISH VERSIONS

The later English versions include (1) the translation printed by Wynkyn de Worde, (2) an edition by William Copland (now lost), (3) a metrical version by John Rolland, (4) a dramatic version by Dekker, Chettle, Haughton, and Day (probably never printed), and (5) a large number of later prose versions derived from the Wynkyn de Worde text. These constitute a distinct group, in no way related with the Middle English versions except very indirectly through different, though distantly related, Old French sources.

1. The translation printed by Wynkyn de Worde is in prose. Its date is not definitely known. A penciling in the British Museum copy — the only copy known to exist now — places the date conjecturally in the year 1505, but in the British Museum Catalogue the date is given conjecturally as 1515. A reprint of the British Museum copy was made by L. Gomme for the Villon Society in 1885.²

The British Museum copy is in black letter; it is without pagination, but comprises 8r leaves. It begins as follows: "Here begynneth thystorye of pe ·VII· Wyse Maysters of rome conteynynge ryghe fayre & ryght ioyous narracions & to pe reder ryght delectable." The text

¹ According to Clouston there should also be included here another metrical version of The Seven Sages of Rome, by one Robert Brenant. Clouston says (The Book of Sindibad, p. 356): "The Bodleian Library, Oxford, has . . . a curious metrical version entitled: Sage and prudente Saynges of the Seven wyse Men, by Robert Brenant, with a comment, London, 1553, small 8vo, black letter." A diligent hunt through the catalogues of the Bodleian Library, in which I was generously aided by several officials of that library, brought no confirmation of this assertion. It seems that Clouston has been led astray by Hazlitt, who catalogued in his Handbook, pp. 660 f. (London, 1867), under the same heading with sundry authentic editions of The Seven Sages of Rome, a work of the same title as that cited by Clouston, but by a Robert Burrant rather than by Robert Brenant. A copy of Burrant's book is preserved in the British Museum, and bears the title, The sage and prudent saiynges of the seuen wisemen, with the imprint, London, 1553. Examination of this work reveals that it has no connection whatever with The Seven Sages of Rome, but is really a version of The Seven Sages of Greece or Dicta septem sapientum Graeciae. It should be added that this piece of composition is not at all, as Clouston reports, in verse, but is bald and dull enough prose.

² The History of the Seven Wise Masters of Rome, London, 1885. A few pages missing in the British Museum copy the editor supplied from the 1671 prose derivative described below.

proper begins: "Somtyme in he Cyte of Rome was an Emperour named Poncianus a man of grete wysdome." The colophon is as follows: "Thus endeth the treatyse of the seuen sages or wyse maysters of Rome. Enprented in Flete strete in he sygne of the sone. by me Wynkyn de worde."

The Wynkyn de Worde edition was translated by an anonymous translator from some member of the Historia family, probably one of the Latin prints rather than the Old French translation. As a translation of H it is comparatively close, though it abridges at times and also occasionally makes independent additions.¹

2. No copy of the Copland edition has survived so far as is known,² but a copy of it was in existence less than a hundred years ago if the bibliographers are to be relied on. According to Dibdin,⁸ Ritson possessed a copy, which, according to some, he had secured from Baynes. Dibdin further reports a memorandum by Ritson giving the introductory lines and the colophon of his copy. The introductory lines are, except for slight variations in spelling, the same as those quoted above as introducing the text of Wynkyn de Worde. The colophon likewise is very close to that of de Worde's edition; it runs as follows: "Thus endeth the treatyse of the seuen sages or wyse Maysters of Rome. Imprinted at London in Flete strete at the sygne of the Rose Garland, by me William Copland." Such close agreement between the two here establishes a very strong probability that the Copland edition was no more than a reprint of the earlier edition.⁴ The date of the Copland

² Clouston, The Book of Sindibād, p. 236, asserts that a copy is "preserved in the Glasgow University Library"; but later, on p. 355, he contradicts this.—Keller, Sept Sages, p. lxxx, confounds the Copland print with a Caxton print variously entitled Treatyse of the Seven Points of Love, Ghostly Matters, and Orologium Sapientiae, a treatise quite different from The Seven Sages of Rome (see Blade's Catalogue, p. 20, and Buchner, Lc., pp. 96 f.).

⁸ Typographical Antiquities, London, 1816, III, p. 170.

⁴ Douce, however, in a note on a fly-leaf of the Bodleian copy of the 1653 edition of The Seven Sages, asserts that the edition of 1693 (a copy of which is in the British Museum) was a reprint of the Copland edition, in which case we must conclude that Copland's edition differed somewhat from that of de Worde in phrasing.

edition is not known, but the bibliographical authorities place it between 1548 and 1561.

3. The metrical version by John Rolland of Dalkeith is in the Scottish dialect; its metrical form is the heroic couplet. The original edition bears the date 1578, but the colophon gives the date as 1560, and Laing, who has published a reprint of it, has rightly concluded that 1560 is the date of the composition of the poem. The Rolland version seems to have been very popular in its day, passing through at least seven editions (1590, 1592 [two editions], 1599, 1606, 1620, and 1631) in little more than half a century after its first appearance. It does not possess, however, any considerable literary worth.

Sundry conjectures have been made as to the source whence Rolland drew. Laing held that he used either the Copland print, or some Latin or Old French text of H. Petras, who did not know of the edition by Wynkyn de Worde, considered the question at some length,⁴ and concluded in favor of the Old French translation of H⁵ as Rolland's original. But that neither of these views is correct, and that the Rolland version was the rather based on the edition by Wynkyn de Worde, has been conclusively proved by Buchner in his dissertation ⁶ referred to above. This he established by showing that where there are differences between H (either Latin or French), the Wynkyn de Worde version, and the Rolland version, the last two versions are in almost every instance in accord with each other. Buchner cites a large number of textual parallels between the two English versions in further support of this conclusion.

4. The dramatic version of The Seven Sages of Rome has been lost. Henslowe tells us that it was acted in London in March, 1599–1600,

² D. Laing, The Seven Sages in Scottish Meter by John Rolland of Dalkeith, published for the Bannatyne Club, Edinburgh, 1837. A new edition under the editorship of George F. Black is promised by the Early English Text Society. — W. A. Shaw, in the sketch of Rolland's life in The Dictionary of National Biography, erroneously asserts that the 1578 edition was also "reproduced in Sibbald's Chronicle of Scottish Poetry"; in reality only 48 lines of the poem appear there (J. Sibbald, Chronicle of Scottish Poetry, Edinburgh, 1802, III, pp. 285-287).

but there is no evidence that it was ever printed. The following receipt, signed "W birde," appears in Henslowe's Diary under the date March 1, 1599¹: "Receaved of mr hinchlow the 1 of march to paye to harry chettell Thomas decker william hawton & John daye for a boocke called the 7 wise mrs the some of x1s". Three other entries² under the same date record three other payments — of £38 in all — for the expenses of bringing out the play. And there are further entries for March 2 and March 25 of the same year. According to J. O. Halliwell Haughton was chiefly responsible for the play, the rest — Chettle, Dekker, and Day — merely assisting him in his undertaking. Other information concerning the dramatic version of The Seven Sages I have sought for in vain.

- ² Besides these twenty-six prints there are others variously reported of which I have been unable to trace copies. Hazlitt (Bibliographical Collections and Notes, London, 1882, p. 653) points out that a license was granted to Thomas Purfoot in 1565–1566 to print The VII. Masters of Rome; and Brunet (Manuel, Paris, 1864, V, col. 298) catalogues an edition of The hystoric of the seven

These twenty-six editions may be roughly classified in three groups. To Group I belong the first ten editions. This group follows pretty closely the text printed by Wynkyn de Worde. Its only noteworthy changes are in the phrasing and in the addition of a prefatory address to the reader.

Group II, made up of editions 11 to 15 inclusive, furnishes a free paraphrase of the Wynkyn de Worde text (or of Group I). Four of the group—12, 13, 14, and 15—bear the title, Roman Stories; or The History of the Seven Wise Masters of Rome. The first member of the group (11) differs from the rest in inserting near the end four stories that are not found elsewhere in the collection.

Group III includes the last eleven of the editions described. This group is characterized by a radical condensing and botching of its original, and is cheaply got up in every way. The first three of the group represent a middle stage in the progressive mutilation of the original. The rest are more condensed.

The source of these later editions was the text printed by Wynkyn de Worde. Whether the edition of 1653 (1) — probably the parent of all the rest — was based directly on the Wynkyn de Worde edition, or was related to it indirectly through the edition printed by Copland, cannot now be established, since no copy of the Copland text has survived.

C. THE COTTON-RAWLINSON REDACTION

Description of the Manuscripts. — The text of The Seven Sages of Rome presented in this volume is that of the MS. Cotton Galba E. ix (C). In the footnotes to the text are given the variants from C exhibited by the MS. Rawlinson Poet. 175 (R), a copy of the same redaction as that represented by C. A general description of both C and R has been given above (pp. xxxvi f.); a more detailed description of these manuscripts is given here.

wise Maisters of Rome by Purfoot, London, 1633, and reports that this edition was reprinted in 1666, 1674, and 1684. Mention is also made by Douce in some notes on the leaf opposite the title-page of the Bodleian copy of the 1653 edition (I) of "an edition printed by Pinson in London with cuts," a few leaves of which, says Douce, were at the time of his writing (after 1829) in the possession of a Mr. Inglis. Douce also asserts, in the same place, that there was an edition of The Seven Sages in 1682.

MS. Cotton Galba E. ix (C). — The Cotton manuscript came to the British Museum from the collection of Sir Robert Bruce Cotton. It had escaped from the fire of 1731 with but little injury apparently, the only damage of any significance being a slight shriveling at the inner corners of some folios, — this, however, only in rare cases sufficient to render the text illegible. The manuscript is now inclosed in a hand-some modern binding.

Besides The Seven Sages of Rome the Cotton codex contains copies of Ywain and Gawain, Minot's poems, The Gospel of Nicodemus, The Pricke of Conscience (incomplete), and a number of briefer poems and fragments. The Seven Sages is the second article in the volume, and extends from folio 25^b to folio 48^b. It is written in double columns, 47 lines to the column, and comprises 4328 lines.

The date of the manuscript is early in the fifteenth century.1

The handwriting of C is large, round, and easily legible. Occasionally there are slight obscurations (as in ll. 525, 871, and 1526–1530), traceable perhaps to the dropping of some chemical upon the vellum. Of insertions above the line there are the following:

of (579), the first e of honeore (594), r in burias (632), ls of als (757), iii (809), the first e of nedder (841), w of now (866), r of buriase (1036), be (1151), & after for (1163), w of wyne (1189), him (1192), his (1322), o of so (1355), r of seriantes (1531), o of opind (1595), vs (1674), sal (1806), ze (1894), clothes (1992), bat (2192), s of scho (2422), him (2638), h of eghen (2720), i of boiland (2727), be (2735), me (2925), come (3515), the first a of answare (3996), d of brend (4253), and k of tok (4315).

Most of these are paler than the rest, but are probably in the same hand. Deletions occur as follows: a maner after maner (304), a second mani (1192), a second went (1539), a second sho said (2012). The only erasures of which we can be sure are an e at the end of child (499), and what I take to be the word fowretenight (2611), for which four skore has apparently been substituted.

¹ See Ward, Catalogue, II, p. 213, and Hall, Poems of Minot, Oxford, 1887, pp. viii f. According to some, however, the manuscript belongs to the fourteenth century; see Tyrwhitt, Canterbury Tales, London, 1775, IV, p. 330, note; Ritson, Ancient Engleish Metrical Romanceës, London, 1802, III, p. 229; and Morris, The Pricke of Conscience, Early English volume of the Publications of the Philological Society for 1862–1864, Berlin, 1863, p. iv, all of whom date the manuscript in the second half of the fourteenth century. Schleich, Ywain and Gawain, Appeln and Leipzig, 1887, pp. i and xxiv, suggests that the date is even earlier. The N. E. D. under Clergy (C, 1.62) and Cope (C, 1.3523) gives the date as "c. 1320," but this evidently in consequence of a confusion with A, the editors overlooking the fact that A does not begin until l. 135 and ends with l. 2779 in the Weber edition, from which they cite.

There are comparatively few scribal errors. We can be sure, I think, only of the following (all of which I have emended as indicated):

Empoure for Emperoure (317), lul for luf (323), message for messages (356), said omitted (443), ymp omitted (617), bi for bis (645), tre omitted (677), him omitted (831), sware omitted (933), roson for reson (941), lighly for lightly (1079), tweft for twelft (1168), nothin for nothing (1402), knele for kneled (1477), whedes for wheder (1538), wakeman for wakemen (1621), tomorw for tomorow (1666), reswon for resown (1685), chanber for chamber (1766), playng for playing (1932), bo for bou (2126), noneking for nonekins (2167), merual for meruail (2196), bat for bai (2257), bai for ban (2263), bat for ban (2308), bat added (2345), are for ayre (2345), neght for negh (2562), And for Als (2685), withowen for withowten (2694), shied for cried (2862), lered for fered (2998), righwisdome for rightwisdome (3038), Tale omitted (rubric to inclusa, p. 110), wighly for wightly (3374), me for mene (3842), might omitted (3943), be omitted (4018), gignyfy for signyfy (4022), and omitted (4111), w for we (4172), sebn for sebin (4326).

And there are some instances in which the scribe has perhaps made an error but of which I take no account in the text proper; see the notes to ll. 180, 283, 677, 840, 1008, 1868, 1918, 2012, 2611, 4105.

The manuscript is comparatively rich in rubrics and rubricated characters. There are altogether thirty-one rubrics in the poem: that at the beginning, which gives the title of the poem, and one before each of the prologues and stories. All these are in prose. In color they are red throughout. The initial letters of the first line of the poem and of the first line of each of the prologues and stories are also in red, with now and then a trace of blue. Besides these, there are numerous rubricated characters or flourishes—in red or blue, or in both—within the body of the introduction and of the stories, characters which almost invariably appear at the beginning of the smaller divisions of thought and which I take to indicate paragraph division.²

 $^{^1}$ All these errors except the first of those indicated for l. 2345 and that for l. 2862 are corrected by R.

² These characters appear before a few lines which do not logically introduce a paragraph (as 2491, 2903, 3555); and they are also sometimes omitted before lines which clearly begin new paragraphs (as 363, 1435, 1817, 1955, 2001, 3157, 4259, 4279).

The rubricated initial letters of the first line of the poem and of the first lines of the prologues and stories are always large capitals. The initial L at the beginning of the poem extends over three lines; and the initials at the beginning of each of the stories and of ll. 27, 141, 215, 295, 353, and 477, extend over two lines; the initials of the prologues cover but one line. Capitalization is, aside from the partial regularity just indicated, rather irregular. The initial letters following the rubricated characters that indicate paragraph division are doubtless to be taken as capitals, though they are not always written as capitals. With other lines the initials are usually not capitalized. Within the line, proper names are, as a rule, capitalized, though there is inconsistency here also.

Thus, while Malquidas and Caton are always capitalized, Bancillas seems in some places (as in l. 439) to be spelled with a small letter. Emperor and Empress are with very rare exceptions capitalized. The names of places, as Rome, Nauerne, Poyl, are usually capitalized, but not invariably so. Capital F is, as a rule, indicated by ff. In l. 2868, by a scribal oversight probably, robbed is spelled with a capital.

Abbreviations are abundant. The commonest of all is naturally that for and, which word is never spelled out except in ll. 1059, 2685, 13289, and 4255. Next most common is some combination with the letter r; of such combinations there are the following: ar, ra, er, re, ri, ro. Here also should be mentioned the curled r, which I take to have the value of re; it is exceedingly common. It normally appears only at the end of a word, but in three instances — Floreentine (394), couret (2694), and smeretly (3538)—it has medial position. Abbreviations of the nasals are not very common; so also with the abbreviations s, es, and us. The abbreviated pat and with are also very rare, pat being spelled out always except in ll. 1, 641, 1558, 2012, 2334, 2343, 3321, 3360, 3601, and with always except in ll. 2278, 2803, 3074. Occasionally, and especially in the rubrics introducing the tales and their prologues, Roman letters are used for numerals.

In spelling the most radical irregularity prevails. The letters i and y, u and w, a and o, interchange with the greatest freedom. And

² Sometimes, however, the scribe writes re instead of the curled r; see 1. 30 and the note thereon.

The manuscript has only one mark of punctuation, a period written above the line, and this appears only four times: after has, l. 1971; after Emperowre, l. 2403; after hus, l. 2667; and after washs, l. 3850. This mark is of variable value; in l. 1971, it has the value of a comma, in l. 2403 it appears where present usage requires that there be no punctuation whatever, in l. 2667 it has the value of a colon, and in l. 3850 the value of a semicolon.

MS. Rawlinson Poet. 175 (R). — The Rawlinson manuscript was presented to the Bodleian Library in 1756 by Dr. Richard Rawlinson. It came into Rawlinson's possession from the Thoresby Collection, and had at one time belonged to a "Christofer Fauell," and prior to that time perhaps to a "Raphe Wormond." ¹

The manuscript is not stout, containing besides The Seven Sages, only two poems of any considerable length, — The Pricke of Conscience and The Ghost of Guy. The Seven Sages includes folios 109^a to 131^c. It is written in double columns of 44 lines each. The handwriting is that of the middle of the fourteenth century.² The text is imperfect: the two folios which should follow folio 125 have been lost, and two other folios, which should come immediately after folio 123, are incorrectly placed just after folio 125. In consequence of the loss of these leaves R contains only 3974 lines.

The text of R, however, is in the main well preserved. There are a few insignificant obscurations within the line, but the only blemishes worthy of note are at the upper outer corners of about a dozen leaves where the manuscript has been partially worn away or faded. Perhaps the most serious blemish of this sort is found on folio 130, where about ten words have been obliterated.

Scribal deletions and insertions are commoner than in C. Scribal errors, however, are no commoner, though some of them are more violent than in C; as, for instance, the inverting of bere and may in l. 113 and the substituting of wist for noght in l. 224, both of which changes destroy the rhyme.

The rubrics in \mathbf{R} are the same as those in \mathbf{C} , but rubricated letters are fewer and smaller in \mathbf{R} ; and of the rubricated characters regularly used in \mathbf{C} to indicate the smaller breaks in thought there are none in \mathbf{R} .

In capitalization \mathbf{R} is the more regular of the two. The initial letter of the first word in each line is always capitalized except when this letter is β or v. Within the line there is less of regularity; names of persons are almost always spelled with capitals, but names of places—especially Rome—are frequently spelled with small letters. The word py, in avis, is regularly capitalized. The scribe seems to have shown less care as to capitalization in the first half than in the second.

Abbreviations in \mathbf{R} are much more abundant than in \mathbf{C} . With and pat, rarely abbreviated in \mathbf{C} , are almost invariably abbreviated in \mathbf{R} . The nasal abbreviations, also, are commoner in \mathbf{R} than in \mathbf{C} ; so also with abbreviations in s and r, except in the case of the curled r, which never occurs in \mathbf{R} . \mathbf{R} abbreviates and only when it appears initially.

In spelling R differs consistently from C in using yh where C uses g, and gch initially where C uses gh. R differs from C, too, in preferring always ll and ll in words ending in l and ll, and in avoiding the character ll in medial position. R very often differs from C in other respects also, as the footnotes show, but I can discover little regularity in these differences.

Relationship of the Two Manuscripts. — The nearness of C and R to each other is obvious enough from the fewness and the insignificance of the variants indicated in the footnotes to this edition. But neither of them was copied from the other; each is an independent copy from the same lost original, which I have designated as cr.

That C was not copied from R is established by the following circumstances: that C does not contain the couplet arbitrarily inserted by R after l. 2364; and that it preserves, in agreement with other manuscripts of Y, the two couplets (ll. 1279–1280 and 2843–2844) which R omits.

That R was not copied from C (or from some earlier manuscript of which C is a faithful transcription 1) follows from certain agreements between R and other nearly related manuscripts where the scribe of C made arbitrary changes; thus, in 1. 758, R has Of in agreement with A 698 and E 678 where C reads For; in 1. 1248, R has parof in agreement with Ar, E, B, F, while C has Hereof. Further confirmatory of this is the retention by R in 11. 443, 831, 3943, 4111, of words (said, him, might, and and respectively) which C illogically omits.

Date of Composition. — The dates of the manuscripts C and R have been given above in the detailed description of them ²: C, according to the best authorities, belongs to the first quarter of the fifteenth century, R to the middle of the fourteenth century. Our concern now is not, however, with the age of these manuscripts, but with the age of the redaction whence they were derived, the lost manuscript cr. It has been shown above, in the section on the interrelationship of the Middle English manuscripts, that this manuscript was made from another Middle English manuscript, that it is, indeed, merely a slightly amplified and otherwise mildly altered copy of the lost manuscript (y) which served also as the original of at least five other Middle English manuscripts (A, Ar, E, B, F). It remains to show at what time this elaborating of y was done, — in brief, to determine when cr first assumed manuscript form.

For determining this, the date of R, the older of the two manuscripts copied from cr, is of most moment. This, as we have seen, is about the middle of the fourteenth century. The year 1350, then, may be accepted as the superior limit for the dating of cr.

It seems to me impossible to determine whether or not cr was written much before 1350; for there is no external evidence bearing on the point, and of internal evidence there is only that of the final e, which is in the case of cr by no means definitive. There are in the first thousand lines of C 10 words which probably pronounce their final e,1 and there is, besides, at least one word — erth, 1. 180 — for which the meter seems to call for the addition of a syllabic e. A like examination of the last thousand lines of the poem reveals 5 words which probably have syllabic final e2 and 3 uninflected words which should apparently add this e⁸: in all, 19 words in 2000 lines, or one example to each 105 lines. Clearly the number is too small to warrant the conclusion that cr is much older than R. For although scholars are agreed that in the spoken language of the North final e had become silent by the middle of the fourteenth century, many of them hold that in the written language the final e retained its syllabic value sporadically for another hundred years.4 There is, however, nothing in these statistics to discredit a dating for cr somewhat earlier than the date of R; and it may well be that cr was written in the first quarter of the fourteenth century.

² Pp. lxvii and lxx.

⁸ Pp. xl f.

Dialect. — The dialect of both C and R is Northern, as is sufficiently established by the following data⁵:

1. Anglo-Saxon \bar{a} is regularly represented by \bar{a} . Of 194 rhymes in which some derivative of A.S. \bar{a} appears, this vowel is represented by a in 179 instances; by a, in 15 instances. With 138 of the 179 rhymes in a both rhyme words contain a derivative of A.S. \bar{a} ; in the remaining 41 instances the derivative from A.S. \bar{a} is made to rhyme with an a having some other history. These 41 instances are as follows:

lare: ware (43-44), rath: bath (73-74), ware: lare (109-110), ane: tane (157-158), sare: care (313-314), bare: mare (383-384), skath: bath (575-576), bathes: clathes (791-792), place: gase (887-888, 945-946), tane: -bane (1219-1220), sare: ware (1257-1258), gase: mase (1269-1270), smate: bat (1301-1302), care: sare (1425-1426), stane: tane (1577-1578), bare: sare (1703-1704), dame: hame (1941-1942),

¹ These are knaue (15), teche (125), fele (162), stede (165), riche (266), riche (386), grete (653), grete (656), speke (772), and slepe (794).

² These are mylde (3349), gude (3351), Dame (3469), riche (4236), and same (4286).

³ These are ilk (3666), swith (3687), and hert (4157).

⁴ See, for instance, Morsbach, Mittelengl. Grammatik, Halle, 1896, pp. 14 and 110.

⁵ These statistics are based on C, with which R usually agrees. All striking or significant variations exhibited by R are noted.

swa: ta (2007-2008), klathe: scathe (2027-2028), mare: care (2093-2094), ware: sare (2365-2366), gare: wideware (2415-2416), wrath: skath (2443-2444), place: gase (2553-2554), man: ilkane (2953-2954), hame: Iame (2967-2968), ware: sare (3169-3170), same: hame (3285-3286), grace: fase (3323-3324), tase: gase (3429-3430), care: mare (3591-3592), -mare: bare (3603-3604), gane: leman (3613-3614), ware: mare (3637-3638), gase: place (3649-3650), man: gane (3795-3796), haste: -maste (3885-3886), bate: state (3905-3906), ware: mare (3973-3974), rath: bath (4197-4198).

The 15 instances in which A.S. \bar{a} is represented by o are the following:

two: go (13–14), one: done (471–472), clowes: trowes (1021–1022), so: go (1151–1152) (1157–1158), so: mo (1161–1162), so: do (1667–1668), Iohn¹: none (1717–1718), go: so (2335–2336) (2549–2550), so: do (2751–2752), Iohn: none (2939–2940), to (= toe): also (3103–3104), so: vnto (3161–3162), done: one (3557–3558).

In only 8 of these at best (471-472, 1021-1022, 1667-1668, 1717-1718, 2751-2752, 2939-2940, 3161-3162, 3557-3558) is the evidence of any real significance, since in the rest both vowels concerned are developments of A.S. \bar{a} . Within the line $\bf C$ uses o for A.S. \bar{a} quite as rarely as in the rhyme. $\bf R$ shows a greater fondness for o; in 61 instances within the line $\bf R$ spells with o where $\bf C$ uses a, while there are only 7 instances in which $\bf C$ spells with o where $\bf R$ has a.

2. The present participle ends, with rare exceptions, in and. Thus:

stand: cunand (335-336), tipand: cumand (491-492), grouand: stand (623-624), slepeand: wepeand (889-890), haldand: hand (1321-1322), hand: brinand (2171-2172), hand: taisand (2175-2176), wand: criand (2459-2460), murnand: stand (2523-2524), brinand: singand (2827-2828), glowand:-brand (3111-3112), land: dweland (3247-3248), tipand: lykand (3521-3522), sayland: land (3893-3894). The only exception is furnished by the word hand-haueing, which in two instances (749-750) (1563-1564) is made to rhyme with ing; and this exception is probably only apparent, since it is likely that hand-haueing had lost its participial value.

Within the line there are no examples of the ending in ing. There are, however, within the line no fewer than 26 examples of the ending in and. The verbal noun regularly ends in ing, but in one instance it has the ending and (land: ofrand, 2655-2656).

3. The inflection of the present indicative is for both second and third person singular invariably (e)s(e); for the plural, es except in one instance, where the subject is a pronoun. The evidence of the rhyme for the second person singular is briefly as follows: slase: case (755-756), clowes: trowes (1021-1022). For the third person singular the rhyme evidence is abundant:

tentes: sienz (35-36), standes: handes (547-548), palays: sais (621-622), bathes: clathes (791-792), place: gase (887-888) (945-946), hawes: gnawes (999-1000), alegance: grantes (1267-1268), gase: rase (1809-1810), wries: lyes (2505-2506), place: gase (2553-2554), hase: case (2623-2624), likes: biswikes (2747-2748), failes: counsailes (2977-2978), sayse: hernays (3251-3252), bus: bus (3475-3476), rase: gase (3507-3508), gase: place (3649-3650), grace: tase (3701-3702), tase: was (3709-3710), cries: signyfies (4003-4004), tels: zelles (4027-4028), ayse: sais (4179-4180).

Of the plural only the following instances (all third person) are furnished by the rhyme: clowes: trowes (1021-1022), glose: lose (2343-2344), likes: biswikes (2747-2748), cries: signyfies (4003-4004), and tels: zelles (4027-4028). The one form in which the inflection is not es (glose, l. 2343) was probably abbreviated in the interest of the rhyme.² Within the line the verbal inflections in both C and R are essentially in accord with the inflections indicated by the rhyme.

In other phonological and inflectional peculiarities there is nothing to contradict the evidence thus far adduced: the prefix ge in the perfect participle is always dropped, and the en of the perfect participle of strong verbs is regularly retained; the infinitive usually loses its inflection except in the case of contract verbs; A.S. palatal e is usually represented by e; e and e and e are the regular representatives of A.S. e and e and e are the feminine of the third personal pronoun singular is invariably e or e and e are e and e are the regular representatives of A.S. e and e are the feminine of the third personal pronoun singular is invariably e or e and e are e are e and e are e are e and e are e and e are e and e are e and e are e and e are e are e and e are e are e and e are e are e are e and e are e are e and e are e are e and e are e and e are e are e and e are e and e are e are e and e are e and e are e are e

Northern words abound. Among words or forms that are either mainly or wholly Northern are the following:

aghteld, and (=if; 4 instances), are (=formerly; 9 instances), at (=to; 10 instances), at (=that; 4 instances), boun (or bowne; 8 instances), bus (3 instances), byforn, couenand (or cownand), cunand (or kunand), fra (57 instances), graith, graythly, zing (4 instances, two in the rhyme), hethen (3 instances), mensk, oboune, quite (= white), sen (= since; 19 instances), spir, ta (= take), til (= to; 54 instances), tine, tite (11 instances), tiband, traist, bir (7 instances), busgat, vmbithoght, vntil (= unto), wer (= worse).

These statistics quite establish that both C and R are in the Northern dialect. A few of the peculiarities instanced — as, for example, the es of the second and third person singular of the present indicative — are, indeed, found also in the Midland dialect, but these, unsupported by forms that are exclusively Midland, clearly have no significance.

In demonstrating that \mathbf{C} and \mathbf{R} are Northern, we also demonstrate that their source, \mathbf{cr} , was Northern; for while it is not unlikely that the scribes of both manuscripts departed somewhat from their original in the matter of dialectal forms, it is inconceivable, in the light of the rhyme evidence for O.E. \bar{a} , the inflection of the present plural indicative, the ending of the present participle, and the abundance of Northern words, that they had before them any other than a Northern document. We have to conclude, then, that the home of \mathbf{cr} was North England. There is nothing either in the forms or in the phraseology to show that this redaction was not made in the neighborhood of York. The agreement with the two oldest and best manuscripts of The Pricke of Conscience—the same in which \mathbf{C} and \mathbf{R} are found—is close both in wording and in orthography.

Meter. — The measure in which the Middle English Seven Sages is written is the octosyllabic couplet, a form much in vogue in the fourteenth century, as witness The Hous of Fame, The Romaunt of the Rose, Confessio Amantis, The Pricke of Conscience, and Cursor Mundi.

The Cotton-Rawlinson redaction exhibits all the freedoms and irregularities of meter that were allowed in the better poetry of the time, and it also affects certain licenses which the better poets shunned. Of lines wanting the initial thesis there are, by my count, 860, or about one in every five lines. Of dissyllabic initial thesis there are 36 instances; of reversal of stress in the first foot, 28 instances. And there appear to be no less than ten lines (84, 601, 1868, 1901, 1918, 2168, 2972, 3021, 3497, 3576) of three stresses 1 (though some of these, as 1868 and 1918, it is easy to see, may be traceable to scribal error). Overfull lines are not uncommon (see Il. 530, 767, 830, 843, 1008, 1021, 1595, 2219, 2269, 2417, 2511, 2803, 2827); and there is sometimes a violent wrenching of accent (as in Il. 699, 793, 1096, 1374, 1453, 1851, 2033, 2360, 2607, 3125). Less tangible faults there are too, — among them a lack of variety in accent and in pause.

But despite this array of irregularities and faults, the meter of C merits real praise. For although it lacks such correctness and variety and fluidity as is to be found in Chaucer or in Gower, it has nevertheless more than average smoothness, and a correctness, both in rhythm and rhyme, that is extraordinary. In these regards C will scarcely suffer in comparison with any other of the romances of the time; nay, more, it will very well bear comparison with the work of some of the most famous religious writers of the time. In both smoothness and correctness it is quite the equal of The Pricke of Conscience; and it is, in these respects, immensely superior to the oldest surviving text of the Cursor Mundi.

¹ It is due to Professor Kittredge to say that he takes some of these lines to be normal.

SOME ORIGINALS AND ANALOGUES

1. Arbor. - Found only in The Seven Sages of Rome.

An exceedingly simple story, which does not lend itself readily to variation or elaboration. The chief variations are the following: (1) As calls the burgess Cornele; (2) H represents the tree as having the peculiar virtue of curing leprosy, and adds that when the burgess had hewn it down he was anathematized by the poor folk of Rome.

Arbor has made no appeal to other story-tellers. If there are variants or analogues of it, they have quite escaped the notice of editors and students of The Seven Sages.¹

2. Canis.² — Found in all versions of The Seven Sages: in the Book of Sindibād,³ in the Dolopathos, and in The Seven Sages of Rome.

In the Eastern versions canis is much briefer and simpler than in the Western versions. The former naturally make no mention of the tournament; and they also omit the nurses 4 and the cradle feature. The mother leaves the child in the father's care; the father, however, is called away by a messenger of the king, whom he serves as armor-bearer or in some similar capacity. In the Sindibād-nāmeh the protecting animal is a cat. In the Dolopathos the father, having become stricken with poverty, has left his native land shortly before the action of the story, and has taken a humbler home in a province near by. Besides his dog he possesses an eagle, which he has taken with him on a stag hunt at the time when the incident happens to the child. The mother is also away from home at the time, begging bread. —In the many versions of The Seven Sages of Rome the only noteworthy variation is that of H in adding a pet falcon¹ to the actors in the story; it is the falcon that first discovers the presence of the snake; he then awakes the dog by flapping his wings.

⁸ I indicate by an asterisk all analogues cited which I have not been able to verify.

A. Wünsche, Leipzig, 1885, p. 102; and (31) Thomas Howard, The Seven Wise Mistresses of Rome (example of the second mistress), London, no date.

In 1 the protecting animal is a serpent; in 2, 3b, 5, 7, 22, and 23 a mongoose; in 3, 4 f, and 6 an ichneumon; in 4a, 4b, and 4c a weasel; in 16 and 17 a werewolf; in 20 a bear; in 21 a polecat; in 23 a fisher's son. The attacking animal is a wolf in 1, 15, and 18; a hobgoblin in 16 and 17 (except in the Curtin version); a tiger in 20; a dragon in 23. In 25 the child is saved by the dog from being burned to death. In 3, 4, 5, 6 (as in the Book of Sindibad) the child had been left in the care of his father; 14, 15, 18, and 20 make no mention of the mother. Only seven versions reproduce the nurse feature: 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 19, 25; and in 9, 12, 13, and 25 there is only one nurse. 11 and 19 are derived from H, which they track pretty closely. 10 also had its basis in some version of The Seven Sages of Rome, probably K. 14 and 15 are so much condensed that their source can hardly be traced. In I the dart which kills the snake (here the protecting animal) also ' kills the child. In 16 and 17 (except for the Curtin version) a hand is reached down a chimney in an effort to steal the child; this hand is bitten off by the werewolf and laid in the cradle beside the child. In 20 the child flees for safety into a jungle, whence it emerges only after the father's return and after his discovery of the carcass of the tiger. In 23 the snake stings the child on the neck and then makes his escape, the mongoose, which had been tied near by, having been unable to protect the child. After the cobra has got away, however, the mongoose manages to bite the string in two, and forthwith hastens to the jungle in search of some snakeroot. Returning, it is killed by the mother, who later discovers the snakeroot, applies it to the child's neck, and thus saves its life. In 23 the fisher's son, having been accused by the queen of slaying the prince, dies of remorse, and is changed into marble; the princess then, in the course of three years, weeps a dishful of tears, which she pours over the marble form of the fisher's son, and he is restored to life. 25, the most modern redaction of the story, runs briefly as follows: A child is left one day by its nurse asleep in its crib in the nursery. The pet dog of the family is also in the room, asleep on a bed. A spark from the fireplace lights on the gauze covering of the baby's crib and sets it afire. The baby awakes, and screams. The dog, thus aroused, snatches the child from the cradle, and rushes with it from the room and around a bend in the hall. Here he meets his master, who, mistaking the situation, begins to beat him, and would have killed him, but is interrupted by the nurse, who has meantime discovered the fire.

None of the last five analogues (27-31) reflect canis very faithfully. In 27 dog, child and wolf all appear, but the dog, an old and worthless creature, protects the child from the wolf in accordance with a former agreement between the two, the dog's purpose being to prevent his master's carrying out a threat to kill him. In 28 a poor man owes a debt, and having nothing wherewith to pay it, gives up his dog. The dog protects his new master's property so faithfully that he holds the debt to be canceled and sends the animal back to his former master. The latter meets the dog on the way, and, jumping to the conclusion that he has proved unfaithful, straightway takes his life. 29 is a variant of 28; the dog here, however, cancels his former master's debt by killing the paramour of his new master's wife. 30, a commentary on Proverbs, xvi. 7, is briefly as follows: Some shepherds, having milked their flocks, leave the milk in the care of a dog; a serpent comes and licks up some of the milk from the bucket. When the shepherds return and are about to drink the milk, the dog falls to barking, but they do not understand its significance. The dog then drinks some of the milk, and dies. 31 tells of a pet lion which, after killing a wild boar that was about to kill its mistress's father, is himself killed by a steward who has misinterpreted his action in killing the boar.

3. Aper. — In both the Book of Sindibād and The Seven Sages of Rome.¹

The Eastern and the Western versions of aper do not differ materially. The most striking variation is in the manner in which the boar meets his death; in the Western versions he is invariably slain by the shepherd; in the Eastern versions, however, he dies either in consequence of holding his head back too long in expectation of more fruit, or, as in the Sindibād-nāmeh, in consequence of rushing too violently upon the trunk of the tree in which his intended victim has taken refuge. Another noteworthy variation is the employment by all the Eastern versions save the Mischle Sindbad of a monkey in the place of the shepherd of other versions. Slight variations exhibited by the Western variations are the substitution by the Middle English versions (except D, F, and As) of a haw tree for the fig tree, and the addition by H of a motive for the shepherd's venturing into the forest, in that the emperor of the land had offered his daughter and his throne to any one who would slay the boar.¹

More or less distant analogues of aper appear in

The first of the analogues cited is evidently patterned after aper as according to H, for it reproduces the offer of daughter and crown to the one who shall kill the boar. But it also makes some interesting variations; for instance, it has instead of the fig tree of the usual version a

² For fuller bibliographical information concerning the Pantschatantra and the various Bidpai redactions, see analogues 3 and 4 of canis.

⁸ It will be observed that the Anvār-i Suhailī and Le Cabinet des Fées each contain two versions of aper, both that of the Book of Sindibād and that which appears normally in other Bidpai collections.

pear tree, in which there is a grapevine which supplies the shepherd with fruit; the boar, after eating his fill of the grapes, falls asleep without the usual stimulus of the shepherd's scratching; the shepherd then beheads him with an ax. The second analogue resembles most the version found in the Sindibād-nāmeh, but doubtless owes nothing to it. It has to do with a boy who, having been chased up a tree, falls out of the tree in consequence of the boar's violent gnawing at its roots; the boar then rushes headlong at the boy, but, missing him, comes upon the tree with such force that he strikes his tusks clear through it and dies. 3a and 3b tell the story as according to the Book of Sindibād, except that they report that the boar comes to his death in consequence of an attempt to climb the tree. The remaining analogues are but distant ones, and may never have had any real connection with aper or its original. They have to do with a monkey that escapes by his presence of mind from some hostile animal — a tortoise, a crocodile, a whale, or some other sea animal. This animal is at first a friend of the monkey, but later, at the instigation of his wife, who is very jealous, tries to do him mortal injury. The wife feigns illness as an excuse for requesting of her husband the heart of the monkey, which, she holds, is the only remedy for her ailment. This animal is transporting the monkey on his back to the home of the wife, when the monkey, learning of his former friend's sinister intent, announces that he has left his heart on a limb of the tree in which he lives (or, as with 5b, he has a presentiment that the wife is convalescent), and so he is permitted to return to his home; after which he stoutly refuses to leave again. II substitutes a fox for the monkey, a whale for the crocodile, the king of fishes for the crocodile's wife. In 12 both monkey and tortoise appear, but the queen of the fishes takes the place of the monkey's wife.

4. Medicus appears only in The Seven Sages of Rome, but the various redactors differ considerably in their report of it. D, for instance, makes no mention of the barrel feature; and the Welsh version is silent both as to the barrel feature and as to the disease of Hippocrates. In D and K the disease of Hippocrates comes by way of retribution for his selfishness in sending his nephew to Hungary rather than go himself. The barrel feat is then done only to counteract a popular loss of faith in him when it has become apparent that he cannot cure himself. It is not until after all this, and just before his death, that he slays his nephew. With H the nephew is Galen.

I have found but two variants of medicus: (1) Sansovino, Cento Novelle Scelte, Day II, novel 4, Venice, 1561, pp. 72 f. (the same in a French translation in Les Facetievses iovrnees, by G. C. The first of these is based on A*, which it tracks pretty closely. Its chief departures from A* are in omitting mention of the diet (beef and water) presented by the nephew for the cure of the prince, and in reporting that the father of the prince was a miller. The second variant is more distant. It runs briefly as follows: A young prince is very ill, and his physicians can do nothing for him. A skillful physician from a distance is sent for; he comes, feels the pulse of the patient, then asks for a private consultation with the queen, as in The Seven Sages. The queen admits that she had at one time made merry with another than the king. The physician prescribes a diet of porridge, curds and whey, and brewis.¹

5. Gaza.²—In all versions of the Western group of The Seven Sages, including the Dolopathos.

In The Seven Sages proper the story is very simple; the thief, in order to escape detection, employs only one ruse: in order to account for the lamentations of the dead man's family he stabs himself in some unvital part. The Dolopathos version, on the other hand, is very elaborate: the thief saves himself first (as in The Seven Sages of Rome) by stabbing himself; then—a feature peculiar to the Dolopathos—by asserting that a child belonging to the family, which is crying mysteriously, is crying for its mother; later he rescues his father's body by fitting himself out in clothes that are white on one side and black on the other, thereby deceiving forty guards, half of whom are clad in white, half in black; next he lies with the princess, who puts a black mark on him, but he marks similarly others in the palace; finally he thwarts an attempt to detect him by giving to a child, who has singled him out from a number of suspects, a bird in exchange for a knife which the child gives him. He is rewarded for all his shrewdness by the hand of the princess. Besides these variations, which come in the second half of the story, the Dolopathos introduces another striking variation at the very beginning, in relating that the father had been at one time keeper of the treasury, and had been driven to steal only in consequence of the son's extravagance.

Only one of the variants mentioned, that of Sansovino (7), tells the story in its simpler form as found in The Seven Sages of Rome. This version must have been derived from The Seven Sages of Rome, since it differs from it in only one minor detail: in that the son stabs his mother rather than himself. All the other variants, I believe, go back, either directly or through some other medium than The Seven Sages proper, to the version of Herodotus (1). They are, accordingly, with only one or two exceptions, fuller than is the version of The Seven Sages of Rome. The expansion comes in, in part, at the beginning, where other feats of roguery, performed by the robber before breaking into the king's treasury, are detailed; but the chief expansion always comes with the second half of the story. The ruses employed by the thief to escape detection afford opportunity for almost endless elaboration, and the story-teller has in many cases taken liberal advantage of this opportunity.

In 6, 8, 10, 15, 16, 17, 18, 21, 25, as in The Seven Sages of Rome, the robber cuts himself so as to explain the conduct of the dead robber's wife or other relative. In 16 he stabs his sister; in 29 he falls down a tree; in 36 he throws a child of the dead robber into the fire. In 4, 5, 12, 28, 32, 35, 37 the wife (or other relative), in order to account for her emotion on witnessing the headless corpse exposed on the streets of the city, lets fall and breaks an earthenware vessel (jar, goblet, bottle, or the like) which she is carrying, - this, I should add, at the suggestion of the youthful robber. In 1, 5, 9, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25, 28, 32, 38 the robber intoxicates (or drugs) the guards that have been set to watch the headless body, then steals the body away from them and gives it burial; in 27 and 30 he sings the guards to sleep. In 18, after intoxicating the guards, he dresses them up in monks' clothes. In 9, 16, 34 he frightens the guards away from the body by means of a flock of goats to whose heads he has attached pots containing candles. In 4, 27, 28, 30, 31, 32, 35 he steals some money that has been scattered (or otherwise exposed) by the king; in 34 he steals a golden bowl; in 16, the king's crown. In 4, 6, 15, 16, 23, 25, 27, 31, 32, 34 he steals some animal (camel, goat, gazelle, stag, hind, calf, pig, or ostrich) belonging to the king. The king sends out beggars to ask for a piece of this animal's flesh, hoping thereby to detect the thief; the mother (or other kinsman of the murdered man) stupidly gives one of these beggars a piece of the fresh meat; in 6, 9, 25, 27, 31, 32 the young thief kills the beggar; in 4, 23, 34, 35 he discovers that the beggar has marked his house, and so he marks other houses. In 6, 8, 18, 28 he lies with the princess, and she sets a black mark on him, but he marks similarly others in the palace; in 25, 31, 34, 36 the princess clips off a bit of his beard or his mustache, and he does the same for others 1; in 12 she cuts off a piece of his garment. In 4, 22, 28, 35, 37 the young robber escapes from the princess by leaving with her the hand of the murdered robber. In 15, 26, 36, as in the Dolopathos, he is detected by a child, who gives him an apple or a knife; he also gives the child some gift, and then contends that this was the motive of the child's gift to him. In 28 a camel with extraordinary divining powers kneels before his door; his house is then marked, but he marks similarly other houses. In 32 a hind detects him in like fashion, and he kills it. In 12 he exposes a man of straw at the window of the king's bedroom, and thus draws the king out of the palace, after which he enters and steals a sheet from the latter's bed.

In 4, 5, 25, 26, 27, 30, 35, 36, 37 the thieves are uncle and nephew; in 1, 2, 22, 28, 31, 38 they are brothers; in 10, 14, 15, 17, 18, 20, 21, 23, 33 they are not related to each other; in the remaining versions they are father and son, as in the Dolopathos and The Seven Sages of Rome. In 6, 17, 18, as in the Dolopathos, the hole through which the robber had entered the treasury is discovered by burning some green straw in the building and then noting how the smoke makes its escape; in 31, 34, 35 the hole is discovered by sealing up the treasury and then observing how any light is admitted to the building. In 4, 5, 12, 17, 18, 23, 25, 29, 34 these means of discovering the opening in the well are recommended by some old man, generally a robber. In 25 father and son enter the king's larder by way of a tunnel; the father eats so much that he is unable to make his way out, and the son beheads him. In 36 both nephew and uncle fall into the pitch, but the son manages to extricate himself. In 33 twelve robbers break into the king's stable; the master thief (a boy), who has been set to watch at the door, raises a hue and cry, and beheads the robbers one by one as they come out. In 1, 4, 6, 12, 14, 15; 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, 26, 27, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36 the young thief ultimately marries the princess.

6. Puteus.¹ — In all versions of The Seven Sages of Rome except the Italian prose version edited by Varnhagen; also in the Dolopathos, but in a condensed form; not in the Book of Sindibād.

In the Dolopathos, puteus is appended, incongruously enough, to inclusa, — the wife who has figured in inclusa becoming once again, in the appended story, the object of a husband's jealousy, and being locked in prison by this second husband as in inclusa. All mention of the curfew law is omitted in the Dolopathos, and so also with the punishment which, in conformity to this law, was meted out to the husband. The wife admits her husband late in the night after he has promised never to lock her up again; and on the next day he orders the tower to be torn down. D falls in with the Dolopathos - quite by accident, of course — in omitting mention of the curfew law. In L and D the wife. when overtaken in her infidelity, pleads that she had left the house because of illness; in H, because her mother, who was very ill, had sent for her. Another variation made by H is the wife's making her last will and testament before dropping the stone into the well. In D the husband tells the watchman that he had left his chamber because he heard outside a pet spaniel that had been missing. In D* and K the husband. after his untoward adventures, falls sick and dies.

Variants or derivates of puteus are to be found as follows:

Zschorke, Peter Rothbart, a play (see Keller, p. cxciii).

It is probable that most, if not all, of these variants were ultimately derived from The Seven Sages of Rome, from which they differ materially only in that they omit mention of the curfew law. Molière (8) introduces a slight variation, in that the wife, instead of throwing a stone into the well, threatens to stab herself to death. With the Sussex version (9) she throws a log in the well; she had been teaing and gossiping at a neighbor's. With 1, 2, 4, 5, 8 the parents or some close kinsmen of the wife are called on to witness the infamy of the husband after he has been locked out. With Boccaccio (6) the wife's friends come to her aid and give the husband a beating. With Hans Sachs (5) the husband had been out carousing, and had returned home late; it was still later, after the husband had been put to bed, that the wife went out to meet her paramour.

7. Senescalcus. — In all versions of The Seven Sages, whether Eastern or Western, except the Habicht text of the Seven Vezirs, the version of Nachshebī, the Dolopathos, the "Versio Italica" (I), and the Middle English manuscript F.

In the Book of Sindibād the story shows the following variations from the typical form in The Seven Sages of Rome: the part of the seneschal is taken by a bath man; it is the wife who is spokesman when the husband returns in the morning to protest that it is time for her to return home; no mention is made of the prince's banishing the husband; the husband either hangs himself or dies of sorrow. The Western versions exhibit more numerous variations, but the only version that alters the story radically is the Welsh, which condenses it to about ten lines. With D* and H the seneschal acts as leech; with K a leech is called in, but, since he cannot effect a cure, the seneschal is resorted to. With D* the seneschal requires the king to remain in his chamber for seven weeks. The reward offered by the king ranges from nine marks in the Welsh version to one thousand florins in H. With L, when the seneschal returns in the morning, he reminds the king that there had been an understanding that the woman he had procured should leave without having her identity known to any one. In all versions except D* and K the king threatens to have the steward put to death unless he leave the country before sunset.

Of variants of senescalcus there are happily but few. I know of only three: (1) Gower, Confessio Amantis, Bk. V, ll. 2643–2825, ed. G. C. Macaulay, London, 1901, II, pp. 19 f. (E. E. T. S., Ex. Ser., LXXXII); (2) Hitopadesa, Bk. I, Nos. 8 and 9, tr. E. Lancereau, Paris, 1852, pp. 78 f.; (3) Masuccio, Novellino, No. xv, tr. W. G. Waters, London, 1895, I, pp. 223 f.¹

The Gower version is clearly based on some version of The Seven Sages of Rome, — Macaulay (II, p. 496) thinks on L.² The Sanskrit analogue (2) is perhaps related to senescalcus, but is free. The story is briefly as follows: A prince, having fallen in love with the wife of a merchant's son, finds his love returned, but the wife nevertheless remains deaf to all dishonorable proposals. The prince takes the husband into his employ. Soon afterward he commissions the husband to procure a woman for his enjoyment, which the latter does; the prince gives her money, but does not defile her. The husband, inspired by this with confidence and carried away by cupidity, takes his wife to the prince the next time he is commissioned to find a woman. The prince enjoys her carnally, and the husband is filled with regret. The version of Masuccio (3) is also free. Here a cardinal bribes a penurious husband to allow his wife to spend the night with him. The husband comes for his wife before day the next morning; the wife gives him the money that had been agreed on between him and the cardinal, and refuses to return to him. In neither the Italian nor the Sanskrit story is mention made of the prince's (or cardinal's) disease; both are silent also as to any punishment meted out to the husband.

¹ The two stories in the Decameron (Day III, novel 5, and Day II, novel 10) mentioned by Landau (Quellen des Dekameron, 2d ed., p. 86) as analogues, are too remotely analogous to be included in this list.

² Though in omitting mention of the diet of bread and water it associates itself with D.

8. Tentamina.1 — Only in The Seven Sages of Rome.

There are numerous slight variations. K, D*, and the Welsh version omit mention of the second marriage, and H and D of both first and second. With K the wife first has an opportunity to relate her woes to her mother on the occasion of an annual feast; with L and the Welsh version she meets her mother first after the expiration of one year of her married life. With L, D*, and K the mother merely proposes that the husband shall be tested, the wife contriving the tests. With L, H, and K the tree is cut down while the husband is hunting; with these versions, also, the wife first orders the gardener to cut down the tree, but when he demurs, takes the ax and hews it down herself. With H the wife kills the dog by throwing it against the wall of their chamber; the dog had offended the wife by jumping on her bed. With F an additional test — the killing of the husband's hawk — is inserted after the second test. With D* and K the priest of whom the wife is enamored is called Guillaume. The excuse the wife gives to her lord for leaving the table on the occasion of the third test is, with L, that she wished to get his knife and his chessboard; with H, to get her own knife; with F, to bring some wine. With D the wife is bled on the night of the feast after all the guests have left; instead of the barber a brother aids the husband. L, D*, K, and D omit the mother's bit of counsel with which Y, H, and the Welsh version conclude.

The first of these variants was derived from L, to which it adheres very closely. The second and third go back to H. According to the second the tree which the wife cuts down is a laurel. The third derivate is somewhat condensed.

9. Virgilius.2 - Only in The Seven Sages of Rome.

The story falls into two parts: the first (I) telling of the image with the bow and arrow; the other (II) telling of the image with the mirror, the Salvatio Romae of Virgilian fable. The most radical variations are those of D, the Welsh version, and H. Both D and the Welsh version omit I altogether; H reverses the order of I and II. With H, too (under the influence, probably, of the Alexander Neckam version and the Gesta Romanorum), instead of the image with a mirror we have a large figure holding in its hand a golden apple; this figure is surrounded by as many smaller figures as Rome has provinces, each of them having in its hand a bell with which it signals to the central figure whenever the province over which it watches rebels. D attributes the Salvatio Romae to Merlin. Among minor variations are the following: the king at the time of the story is Octavius Cæsar (H); is "Gracian" (the Welsh version); beneath the image with the bow are two fountains, one of cold water, one of warm (H)3; the part of the Lombard is played by the archbishop of Carthage (D*, K); the part of the king of Apulia, by the king of Hungary (D^, K) , or the king of Poland (the Welsh version), or merely three kings (H); the part of the two brothers, by four sages (D^, K) , or four knights (H); the brothers bury their gold under the city gates (L, H), a part of it in a deep ditch, the rest at three several crossways (D^*) ; no mention is made of setting the foundations of the tower afire (L, K, H, D); instead of melted gold in the conclusion to the story powdered gold is used (D).

There appears to be no literary version that combines the two parts (I and II) of the story as in The Seven Sages.²

The only one of these which was probably derived from The Seven Sages is the third. According to 1 the bronze statue was situated in Naples, and protected the city from Vesuvius; in 2, 3, 4, 5, as in The Seven Sages, the arrow was aimed at a fire (or a lamp), which it extinguished when shot off. The last four parallels (6, 7, 8, 9) relate the well-known story of the image bearing the inscription, "Hic percute," which directed one to a cavern containing another image, which held a bow with arrow aimed at a brilliant carbuncle. According to the Anglo-Latin version of 7, Diocletian was the emperor in whose reign these images were set up.

¹ The story of the death of Crassus as related in The Seven Sages seems to have been popular in semi-historical works. Lydgate tells the story (Bochas, Bk. VI, chap. v, London, 1527, p. 154²); and he also tells a similar story of the death of Galba (Bochas, Bk. VII, chap. vII, p. 170²).

² The nearest approach to a fusion of the two that I have found is the much garbled version in von der Hagen's Gesammtabenteuer, II, pp. 525 f.

The first four of these appear to have had their origin in The Seven Sages of Rome, — probably in A*, surely not in H. The version of ¹ See in particular for Virgilius II, Comparetti, pp. 299 f., 303 f., and Massmann, pp. 421 f.

² It must of course remain an open question whether or not Chaucer's mirror owes anything to the Salvatio Romae; the chances are, I think, that there is no connection between the two. The same is true of Merlin's mirror in the Faerie Queene (9).

⁸ For still other parallels see Comparetti, p. 299; Massmann, pp. 424 f.; and C. G. Leland, Unpublished Legends of Virgil, New York, 1900, pp. 49 f. For very distant analogues sometimes cited as variants, see Gesta Romanorum, ed. Herrtage, chap. I, pp. 1 f. (not in the Latin version); and John Lane, Continuation of Chancer's Squire's Tale, ed. F. J. Furnivall, Chancer Society Publications, 1888, p. 193.

Gower (1) may have been based on D, with which it agrees in the omission of Virgilius I. According to Gower, Hannibal was among those who were besieging Rome and who had suffered in consequence of the magical power of the mirror. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, tell of a mirror with virtues similar to those accredited to the mirror in The Seven Sages, but none of them tells of the efforts to destroy the mirror, some of them indeed (Chaucer among them) merely describing the mirror. The remaining variants relate the story of the Salvatio Romae, in the main, as according to H.

10. Avis.¹—In all of the regular versions of the Book of Sindibād and in all versions of The Seven Sages of Rome except the Welsh version ²; not in the Dolopathos.

In the Book of Sindibād the bird is a parrot; the wife is at first ignorant as to the means whereby her husband learns of her unfaithfulness, but suspects her maid; only in the Mischle Sindbad is mention made of going on the house top; the instruments used to deceive the bird are a hand mill (all versions), a mirror (all versions), a taper (Sindibād-nāmeh and Sindban), a sponge (Syntipas), a bellows (Sindibād-nāmeh), and a grindstone (Sindibād-nāmeh). With the Hebrew version the husband drives the wife away from home as soon as he learns of her falseness; the deception of the parrot (which is allowed to accompany the wife) takes place later, at the wife's new lodgings. Only in the Seven Vezirs does the husband ever learn of the deception practiced on the parrot.

In the Western form of avis the variations are even more numerous than in the Eastern forms. With As the burgess is named Balan (later Annabill). With F the wife's paramour is a priest; with D* and K, a knight, called Gerard le filz Thierry. With D*, K, and D it is a manservant (or a boy) who assists the wife in befooling the bird. Among the means employed to this end are the dropping of small sandstones (K, D*, H, As), flashing a candle (D*, Ar), and breaking great blown bladders (D). With D* and K the husband puts the wife to death; with B he gives her a beating and sends her to her paramour; with F the wife and her paramour put the husband to death. But the most radical variations are two additions made by As¹, devices employed to protect the paramour from the husband, who has in each instance returned home sooner than expected. These are abridged and slightly altered versions of two well-known stories, usually told separately. According to the first of these the paramour saves himself by rushing past the husband as he enters, brandishing as he goes a sword, the wife explaining that he had been chased into the house by three knights who sought to take his life. In the second instance the paramour is saved through the wiliness of the wife and her mother in holding up a sheet between the husband and the paramour long enough to enable the latter to escape.²

Variants and analogues of avis occur as follows:

(1) John of Capua, Directorium vitae humanae, ed. Derenbourg, pp. 89 f. (the same with slight variations in North, Fables of Bidpai, ed. Jacobs, pp. 185 f., and Anvār-i Suhailī, ed. Eastwick, pp. 241 f.); (2) Tūtī-nāmeh, ed. C. J. L. Iken, Stuttgart, 1822, pp. 10 f.; ed. G. Small, London, 1875, pp. 14 f.³; (3) The Forty Vezirs, ed. Gibb, London, 1886, pp. 33 f.; ed. ¹ These are reproduced in the note to l. 2440.

² The first of these tales appears in the Book of Sindibād (all versions: see Comparetti, Book of Sindibād, p. 25; Cassel, Mischle Sindbad, pp. 283 f.; Clouston, Book of Sindibād, pp. 35 f., 148 f.); but, as Varnhagen has pointed out (Engl. Stud., XXV, p. 322), the immediate source used by As was probably Petrus Alphonsus, Disciplina Clericalis (or its French derivate), where both stories appear side by side. See, for the first of the stories, Clouston, Book of Sindibād, pp. 228 f.; Schmidt, Disciplina Clericalis, pp. 49 f., 127 f.; Roesle, Le Castoiement d'un Père à son Fils, pp. 17 f.; Caxton's Fables of Aesop, ed. Jacobs, London, 1889, II, pp. 279 f.; von der Hagen, Gesammtabenteuer, II, pp. xxxii f.; Boccaccio, Decameron, Day VII, novel 6; Schmidt, Cukasaptati, pp. 104 f. For the second story see Schmidt, Disciplina, pp. 49, 126; Roesle, l.c., p. 16; Oesterley, Gesta Romanorum, pp. 473, 732; An Alphabet of Tales, No. DXXXVI, ed. M. M. Banks, II, p. 360 (E. E. T. S., CXXVII).

³ Somewhat analogous also to avis is the framework of the Tūtī-nāmeh as a whole, according to which a parrot saves his mistress from meeting with a paramour during her husband's absence by entertaining her with stories until the husband's return. See Crane, Italian Popular Tales, pp. 168 f., for some Italian stories with a framework derived from the Tūtī-nāmeh.

I, pp. 37 f.; (5) Firenzuola, Discorsi de gli animali, Venice, 1552, pp. 37 b f. (the same in French, P. de la Rivey, Deux Livres de Filosofie fabuleuse, Lyon, 1579, p. 143); (6) G. C. (the same abridged and otherwise slightly altered in Jātaka, No. 145, The Jātaka, tr. Chalmers, Cambridge, 1895, I, pp. 309 f.); (8) John of Capua, Directorium, ed. Derenbourg, pp. 130 f.; (9) The Book of the Knight de la Tour Landry, E. E. T. S., 1868, XXXIII, p. 22.1

Of the foregoing, 1, 3, 4, 5, 6 are very near to the Oriental version of avis. 5 and 6 appear to have been derived from 1. 2, 7, 8, and 9 are distant analogues. In 2 the bird refrains from telling of the wife's misconduct because it would bring about the separation of husband and wife; the husband learns the truth from a stranger. The wife, however, suspects the parrot of having betrayed her, and she accordingly pulls out all his feathers, then throws him hard against a wall, and leaves him for dead. The parrot recovers, and ultimately succeeds in reconciling husband and wife. 7, one of the Buddhist birth-stories, is a tale of two parrots set by a Brahmin to observe the conduct of his wife during his absence. The parrots observe the wife's misdoings, and one of them calls her to account; she wrings his neck forthwith. The other parrot is silent until the return of the Brahmin; then he tells him all; after which he flies away to the woods. 8 tells of two birds that had been taught to speak a strange language. Certain foreigners who are visiting the master of the house tell him that the birds say that his wife has committed adultery with the gate keeper. The wife, charged with the crime, asserts that the birds know only the words which the foreigners have heard, and that they have been taught these by a slave whose advances she had repelled. The husband questions the birds, and is satisfied that the wife's story is true. Birds and slave are put to death. 9 tells of a magpie that informs its master of his wife's misconduct in eating an eel which the master had been saving for some friends who were to visit him. The wife wreaks vengeance on the bird by plucking all the feathers from its head.

^{- 1} Chaucer's Manciple's Tale is also sometimes cited as a variant of avis, but the two are very distantly related if at all. There is, however, an obvious reference to avis in the prologue of The Wife of Bath's Tale, ll. 231 f.; see Skeat's note on Cant. Tales, D, l. 232, and his article in the Academy for April 5, 1890, p. 239.

11. Sapientes. - Only in The Seven Sages of Rome.

The chief variations are that of D in suppressing the clerks' search for Merlin, and that of the Welsh version in repeating that the king declined to follow the counsel of the youth, and hence was ultimately slain by the clerks. And there are a number of lesser variations. D* and K depart from the usual 'order in reserving the account of the custom instituted by the clerks until just after the king's instructions to them to find a cure for his blindness. With the same versions the king's horse always balks at the gates of the city when the king wishes to ride thereout. With H the king is blind only when outside his palace. The time allowed the clerks wherein to find a cure for the king's malady is, with Ar, E, and B, seven days; with L, eight days; with H, ten days; with F, twelve days; and with K and D*, fifteen days. Neither L nor H mentions the old man who tells the clerks about Merlin. D* seems to confuse the old man with the man who comes to Merlin to have his dream interpreted. Both K and D* have Merlin explain to the clerks while on the way to the city the cause of the king's blindness. With L Herod shows Merlin much honor in recognition of his services, and retains him as his counselor.

Sapientes was probably invented by the redactor of the parent version of The Seven Sages of Rome. There is, to be sure, a very distant analogue in the Kalila and Dimna,— the story of King Beladh (see Knatchbull, chap. 14, pp. 314 f.)¹; but I do not believe that there is any connection between the two stories. And there is one interesting variant, a story told by J. Vogl, Die ältesten Volksmärchen der Russen, pp. 45 f. This story is based on H, but differs from it in several details. The setting of the story is Russian, the king and queen being czar and czarina. The stranger's dream is to the effect that he beheld in his garden a tree under which were innumerable reptiles, and that shortly thereafter his garden was flooded. The sages, to whom he first relates — The story is silent, it will be observed, as to the king's blindness, as to the seven springs under his bed, and as to the slaying of his evil counselors.

his dream, tell him he must have drunk too freely the night before. The dream is then told to a boy (= Merlin), who interprets it correctly. The cause of the king's malady is found to be the presence of seven reptiles under his bed; these reptiles vanish as soon as the clerks are beheaded, and simultaneously with this the czar regains his sight.

12. Vidua.1 - Vidua, though much older than any of the extant versions of the Book of Sindibad, first found a place in our collection in the Occident, and then only in The Seven Sages of Rome. The story as told in the various versions of The Seven Sages is remarkably constant. As usual, H is somewhat less constant than the rest; it intensifies the story by adding to the mutilations normally recorded, first, the cutting off of the husband's ears, and then a still greater indignity, for which see the note to 1. 3018; and it shows a similar fondness for the blood-curdling in having the knight, by way of emphatic conclusion to the story, strike off the head of the widow with his sword. The Welsh version also presents some noteworthy variations; according to this version the husband was the "sheriff of Lesodonia"; he is buried in a church (hence there is no mention of the lodge over his grave); the mother of the widow is the chief of those who implore the widow to leave the tomb of her husband; the husband's hair is entirely plucked from his head in order that he may be bald like the robber (see variants 6, 18, and 58 below).

Vidua has had a tremendous vogue. Professor Harry Thurston Peck asserts that "no anecdote of the kind has ever had so great a vogue"²; and Joseph Jacobs goes even farther in asserting in the introduction to his edition of Caxton's Aesop (I, p. 13) that vidua is "perhaps the most popular of all stories."⁸

Of the foregoing the first fifty-nine are surely variants of vidua; the next five versions (60-64) reproduce with variations a Chinese story which probably found its origin in vidua; the rest are all in some way analogous to vidua, but it is doubtful whether they have any real connection with it.¹

Very few of the variants were derived from The Seven Sages, probably not more than seven at best: 23, 12, 27, 11, 14, 49, and 59; and we can be by no means certain that all of these were derived from it. Of much more significance for the history of the story have been Petronius and Phædrus. The Phædrus version has given rise to most of the fable variants. And the Petronius version has been even more popular, especially with those who have dramatized the story; perhaps one fourth of all the variants cited acknowledge in some way a source in Petronius.

¹ There are sundry other stories that have been cited by Grisebach and others as variants of vidua, but which prove on examination to be either copies of variants listed here (as in the case of the fable collections in particular) or very distant analogues having no real connection with our story. In the latter class fall the story from the Daçakumāracarita cited by Benfey (Pantschatantra, I, pp. 436 f.) and Grisebach (pp. 67 f.) and the closely related story from the Pantschatantra (Bk. IV, No. 5, ed. Benfey, II, pp. 303 f.; see Grisebach, pp. 68 f.). Here also belongs the supposed variant in the Yvain of Chretien de Troies (see Foerster, Romanische Bibliothek, Halle, 1891, V, pp. xiii f.), as has been demonstrated with much finality by A. C. L. Brown in his essay on Iwain (Studies and Notes in Philology and Literature, Boston, 1903, VIII, pp. 1 f.).

Variations in the telling of the story are numerous, but are generally of slight consequence. In 12 the husband had been slain in battle; in 47 he had died at an oyster feast; in 27 and 49 (as normally in The Seven Sages) he had died from a wound in the hand. Only two versions — 23 and 49 - reproduce the feature of the lodge built over the grave for the widow's protection, though at least sixteen versions (5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 23, 49, 57, 58, 59) represent the husband as having been buried in a grave. With at least twenty-one versions (1, 2, 3, 5, 13, 20, 21, 24, 25, 29, 32, 37, 39, 40, 41, 43, 44, 47, 49, 50, 52) the husband's body has been placed in a sepulcher or sarcophagus. In 1, 2, 3, 24, 25, 29, 32, 37, 39, 40, 41, 43, 44, 48, 50, 52, 56 a faithful maid-servant remains with the widow in the sepulcher. In 43 one of the knight's retainers is introduced as a foil to the maid; he marries the maid at the same time that the knight marries the widow. In 3, 5, 6, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 20, 21, 23, 26, 27, 29, 31, 40, 41, 44, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 57, 58, 59 only one robber has been hanged; in 30 and 32, two robbers; in 56 (as in The Seven Sages), three robbers; in 52, seven robbers; 1, 2, and 39 are indefinite as to the number. The knight (or sentinel) set to watch the gallows goes to the wife because of thirst in 2, 3, 5, 21, 23; because of cold in 48, 49, 51, 54; because of the light he detects in the sepulcher in 10 and 41; he is attracted by the wife's lamentations in 1, 12, 17, 18, 30, 33, 58, 59; by two or more of these causes in 6, 11, 13, 14, 15, 17, 22, 29, 41. In 1, 25, 29, 40, 41, 50, 54, 56 the knight takes food to the widow and induces her to break her fast; in 50 he makes the maid drunk with wine. In 58 he takes the widow by the hand and conducts her back to the city, but she returns the next night. In 17 he takes her to his own home, and feasts her.

In 17 and 22 the body of the thief had been stolen before the knight learned of the widow. In 8, 10, and 19 the knight himself had stolen the body and given it burial, he and the robber being kinsmen. In 9 and 39 the stealing of the robber's body and the subsequent exhuming and hanging of the husband's body are omitted; in 9 the knight goes to the widow in pursuance of a boast made to his squire that he could win her love; in 39 he is introduced by the maid, who wishes to dissuade her mistress from her resolution to remain in the sepulcher. The maid also encourages the knight in his suit in 39, 40, and 54; in 54 the maid goes so far as to fit out the knight in the clothes of the husband.

Most of the variants are silent as to the mutilating of the husband's body; and in none of the variants is the mutilation so extensive as it is in H. With 22, 27, and 48 the mutilation consists in knocking out one tooth; with 23, in knocking out the fore teeth; with 30 and 31, in cutting off one ear; with 10, in making two wounds in the husband's forehead similar to wounds that had been made by arrows in the robber's forehead; with 18 and 58, in pulling the hair off the husband's head; with 6, in pulling off the hair, cutting off one leg, and knocking out an eye; with 51, in breaking the legs and arms and besmearing the face with blood and dirt.

In 11, 14, 18, 21, 37, 50, 58 the knight marries the widow; in 12, 19, 22, 49 (as in The Seven Sages), although he has promised to marry her, he refuses to do so after he has witnessed her falseness to her dead husband. In 54 he gives her a diamond ring at their parting.

60 is the Chinese story from the Kin-kou-ki-kouan, which runs somewhat as follows: A wife had promised her husband not to marry a second time until after the mold on his grave had become dry; shortly after the husband's death one Chouang finds the widow fanning the husband's grave in order to dry it off as quickly as possible. Chouang relates the incident to his wife, who is indignant at the story and stoutly contends that if her husband were to die she would never marry again. Chouang determines to test his wife. Accordingly he feigns to have died, having first employed his disciple, Wang-Sun, who is privy to the whole scheme, to make suit for his wife's love. Wang-Sun is successful in his suit, and arrangements are made for their marriage. Just before the appointed hour, however, Wang-Sun feigns illness, and sends word to the widow that the only possible cure for him is the brain of a man recently dead. She has begun to chop open the coffin into which Chouang had been put, when he drops his feigning and the whole truth is revealed. The wife hangs herself; Chouang burns his house and goes to another country.

Ultimately based on 60 are 61, 62, 63, 64, and possibly also 65, 66, and 67. These exhibit the following variations: the wife who furnishes the initial episode had agreed not to marry again so long as a certain stream flowed past her husband's grave, but is seen, soon after her husband's death, busily engaged in digging a ditch in an effort to change the course of the stream (63); the thing mentioned by the husband's accomplice as the sole cure of his feigned illness is the heart of one newly deceased (62,66), or the nose (63); Chouang, after the death of his wife, marries the widow who first figures in the story (62).

68 is the well-known story of 'Wooden John.' 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, are even more distant analogues, and, as I have said above, are perhaps in no way related to vidua, though most of them have been variously cited as variants of it.

13. Roma. 1 — Not in the Book of Sindibād nor in the Dolopathos.

Roma is one of the stories which were rejected by L and S. In H it was fused with senescalcus, the seneschal, who had been banished at the end of that story, appearing now as the besieger of Rome. In D, instead of seven kings warring against Rome, there are only three. D calls Janus Gynever; H suppresses the name altogether. The tower is called Cressent by L, K, Ar, E, F. With L, K, D, F the Saracens think Janus is God come to the aid of the Romans. K, D*, H, E, D are silent as to the crowning of Janus as king. The Welsh version fuses with senescalcus the fable of the shepherd who binds his dogs and delivers them up to a wolf.²

Variants or analogues of Roma are to be found in (1) Bede, De Divisionibus temporum, ed. Migne, Bedae Opera, I, p. 659; (2) Philip de Thaun, Li Cumpoz, ll. 651 f., ed. E. Mall, Strassburg, 1873, pp. 23 f.; (3) the Pantschatantra, Bk. I, No. 5, tr. Benfey, II, pp. 48 f.; tr. Schmidt, pp. 54 f.; and (4) W. Radloff, Proben der Volkslit. d. türk. Stämme Süd-Siberiens, IV, p. 200.⁸

Of these, the first two—both told by way of explaining how the month of January came by its name—are clearly variants of Roma, though it is not likely that either was the source of it. They possess, in common with Roma, not only the general framework of the story, but even the details of the flaming sword and the mistaking of Janus for God. Neither, however, mentions the visor or the mirror.

The third is also a variant of Roma, though it bears few specific resemblances to it. This story is briefly as follows: A weaver who had fallen in love with a princess enjoys her often, pretending to be the angel $N\bar{a}r\bar{a}jana$. The king, to whom the daughter imparts her secret, is delighted, and presumes upon the supposed relationship to treat unjustly his neighboring kings. The latter make war upon him, and he, finding himself hard put to it, seeks the aid of the supposed Nārājana. For a time the weaver sends no answer to the king, but when the supply of food has been exhausted and the city is about to fall, he sends word that he will on the morrow come to the king's rescue; he directs the king to lead his army against the enemy, and promises that he will appear in the air at the same time and render the enemy powerless. At the appointed time the weaver ascends a high place and attempts to impersonate Nārājana. The real Nārājana now, fearing that he might lose the confidence of the people in case the weaver failed, takes the form of the weaver, and, with a bow and a pane of glass among other things, so frightens the king's enemies that they are completely routed. The weaver then discloses the whole story to the king, who, besides giving him his daughter in honorable marriage, rewards him richly.

The Russian analogue (4) is very distantly related to Roma if at all. According to this story a young thief fits himself out in a variegated coat, over which he draws a goat's hide covered with little bells. He then sets out, mounted upon a camel, which is similarly fitted out with goat's hide and bells, in search of a certain prince. When the robber is yet a long way off, the prince hears the noise of the bells and sends his wife out to ascertain the cause of it. As the robber draws nearer, he proclaims aloud that he is the Evil One and that the end of the world is at hand; in consequence of all which both the prince and his wife lose their minds.

Paris believed Roma to be Oriental in origin, and to have been ultimately derived from the Sanskrit story (3) summarized above, into which elements of the Saturn and Janus myths were introduced in the Occident. The mirror feature is perhaps to be traced to the influence of the Virgilian Salvatio Romae.

14. Inclusa.¹ — In the Dolopathos (metrical version) ² and in all versions of The Seven Sages of Rome except L and S.

The Dolopathos version differs considerably from that of The Seven Sages proper. According to the Dolopathos a Roman, having been much annoyed by his friends, who persistently entreat him to marry, has an image of a beautiful woman made, sets it up on a pillar before his door, and asserts that he will never marry until he has found a woman as beautiful as the image. After a while he learns from some pilgrims that there lives in Greece a woman quite as beautiful as the image, and he forthwith sets out from Rome to visit her. Arrived at the home of the lady, he finds her husband absent from their castle, but the lady is reluctant to give up her lord. The Roman finally wins her love, however, and it is upon her suggestion that he asks the privilege of building a house near the tower in which she is imprisoned. The Roman subsequently entertains the husband at dinner, presenting the latter's wife as his own wife recently come from Rome. The two then fly. The husband, as soon as he has learned of the deceit practiced on him, follows after the couple, but does not overtake them until they have reached Rome. When the husband comes up with the Roman, the latter tells him that his wife has died on the way to Rome; he proposes, however, to make amends, in part, by presenting to him the image which had stood before his door, which he asserts is the body of his wife, who after her death had turned to stone. The husband accepts the image and returns with it to Greece.

The variations exhibited by other versions are slight. The country in which the knight finds the lady is, in E, F, and D, Apulia; in Ar, Plessis. D is silent as to the killing of the mason. D* omits the incident of the ring. According to H the lord of the castle first discovers the ring on the hand of the knight when the two are hunting together. D says nothing of the marriage of the knight and the lady. It elaborates, however, in reporting that the lord of the castle, after learning of the falseness of his wife, throws himself from the tower and breaks his neck.

Of these the second is almost surely derived from The Seven Sages—apparently from some manuscript of L; and 6, 11, and 12 are also derivates probably. Only 2 and 12 tell of the knight's dream of the lady. With 1 the lady is a Roman by birth, but had been sold to an Ephesian captain. In 12 the lady sought is unmarried, but is the daughter of the bailie of London. 8 and 12 are silent as to the secret (usually underground) passage. In 1, 3, and 4 the husband is persuaded that his wife is really one of the latter's sisters. The ring incident reappears in 2, 6, 9, 11; the incident of the dining, in 3, 4, 6, 9, 10, 11. 12 omits all these episodes. In 5, the most elaborate of all the variants, the husband thinks he detects his wife, first by a mole on her face; then by fitting to a piece of apple she has in her hand a piece that he finds at her chamber; later he is forced to marry her to the suitor; he succeeds, however, after the ceremony is over, in boxing her cheeks and making her face bleed; but when he returns to her chamber. he finds that she, in order to prevent detection, is lacerating her own face. In 10 the husband thinks he has detected his wife by a birthmark behind her ear. In 9 the husband's suspicions are aroused by a pet dog which the wife has given the suitor; in 13, similarly by a sword, a dagger, and a bracelet; in 14, by a dagger and a watch. The wife deceives her husband by disguising herself as a young dervish in 10; as a slave, in 14. In 4 the husband is made drunk and brought to believe that he is a Turk; acting on this belief he gives up his wife and sets out for Ispahan. In 5 the husband, after losing his wife, enters a madhouse. In 3 and 13 the husband, after the wife has been stolen, pursues the couple; in 3 he overtakes them and regains his wife, but later loses her again. 10 is told from the point of view of the husband; the several pieces of deception are practiced on him in order to cure him of his jealousy. In 7 the wife leaves a dummy at her window, and thus deceives her husband until she is safely out of his reach. In 14 the suitor, after taking the wife to his own land, refuses to marry her. 15 is incomplete, but is surely related to inclusa.

15. Vaticinium. 1— In all versions of The Seven Sages of Rome except L; not found in the Dolopathos nor in the Book of Sindibād.

In H vaticinium appears in combination with amici, a very early version of the story of Amis and Amiloun. Other variations introduced by H are (1) the substitution of a nightingale for the two ravens which figure in the opening episode, (2) the laying the scene of this episode at the house of the father rather than in a boat at sea, and (3) the specifying Egypt as the land into which the son finally comes and in which he attains such miraculous distinction. The remaining versions record the story essentially as in the Middle English redactions.

Among the derivates or parallels of vaticinium are the following:

(1) Sansovino, Cento Novelle Scelte, Day IV, novel 5, Venice, 1561, folios 144^b f. (the same in G. C. D[e] T[ours], Les Facetievses iovrnees, Day VII, novel 4, Paris, 1583, folios 218 f.); (2) Lope de Vega, El pronostico cumplido, Coleccion de las obras sueltas, Madrid, 1777, VIII, pp. 264 f.;

The first of these reports vaticinium according to the version of The Seven Sages, except that it takes no account of the steward and omits the episode of the foot-washing. 2, 8, and 9 were also probably derived from The Seven Sages; and it is not unlikely that most of the remaining analogues are ultimately connected with it, though they all differ in sundry respects from it.

The prophecy which occasions the father's anger is made by birds (or a bird) only in 1, 10, 11, 12, 13; in 2 this prophecy is made by a magician; in 5, by an angel; in 14, by a mysterious voice. The prophecy originates with the son in 8 and 9. In the same versions the immediate occasion of the son's making the prophecy is a reprimand administered to him for some slight offense. The substance of the prophecy is, in 1, 5, 8, 13, 14, that the father will one day serve the son; in 9, that the father will some day wash the son's feet; in 11, that the father will drink from the water in which the son has bathed his feet; in 10, that the mother will wash the son's feet and that the father will drink from his bath; in 7, that the son will supplant the father on his throne (for in 7, as also in 5 and 8, the father is a king). In 3 and 4 the father's wrath is occasioned merely by the son's report that he has learned the language of birds.

Only in 1, 2, 12, and 13 is the son cast into the sea, as in The Seven Sages. In 13 the son is put into a barrel before being cast into the sea; in 12 he is killed, but he soon comes back to life again. In 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 14 the father gives the son to a servant (or servants) with instructions to put him to death; the servant takes the son some distance from the father's home and sets him free; he then returns and presents to the father, as evidence of having obeyed the latter's commands, either a little finger of the son (7) or the heart of a dog which he asserts is the son's heart (6, 9, 14).

In 5 and 7 the father is the king to whose court the son finally comes and at which he distinguishes himself. In 3, 4, 6, 8, 9, 14 the son becomes Pope. In 6, 8, 9, and 14 the fulfillment of the prophecy and the reconciliation between son and parents take place at Rome, whither the parents (in 14, only the mother) have come to do penance for their ill treatment of their son.

I: "Versio Italica," a group of Italian and Latin redactions, MSS. of which have been published by Cappelli, Mussafia, and others.

K: the O. F. metrical version published by Keller.

L: the O. F. prose version published by Leroux de Lincy, Roman des Sept Sages, pp. 1 f.

M: "La Male Marrastre" (unpublished).

R: MS. Rawlinson Poet. 175 (unpublished; but its variants from C appear in the footnotes to this edition).

S: the Latin proseversion preserved in the Scala Celi, and republished by Goedeke, Orient und Occident, III, pp. 402 f.

W: Weber's edition of A.

x: the lost M. E. MS. whence y and D were derived.

Y: the group of M. E. MSS. (A, Ar, E, B, F, C, R) derived from y.

y: the lost M. E. MS. whence Y was derived.

Proces. Abbreviated only in C. For abbreviations in both C and R, see the Introduction, pp. lxix and lxxi respectively.

- 1. here. The curled r, of which C is very fond, is printed re. R never has the curled r, but uses instead r or re. See note on 1. 30 (ayre) for final re in C.
- 2. 50wre. Always spelled with a g except in l. 2700 (yowre). The letter g in C is graphically the same as g (see note to l. 491). R has g where C has palatal g. Weber consistently substitutes g for the palatal g. No account of this substitution is taken in the footnotes.
- and. C abbreviates and both initially and medially except in ll. 1059, 2684, 3289, and 4255. R always spells out initial and, but abbreviates and medially, with only a few exceptions. In ll. 29, 42, 74, R abbreviates only the n in and.
- 3. Repeated in l. 256. Other lines repeated are 40 (= 3194), 439 (= 457), 631 (= 2181), 2363 (= 3051), and 2577 (= 3061). For lines identical except for one word, see note to l. 10.

tome, leisure. Also in ll. 256 and 980, and not uncommon in other texts. Weber remarks in his Glossary that tome is "a curious alteration of the word time for the sake of the rhyme."

- 6. Dyoclician. All M. E. versions call the Emperor Diocletian; so likewise do the O. F. versions A*, L, and S. Of other versions H reads Pontianus; K, Vespasian; D*, Marcomeris, the son of Priam; and the Dolopathos, Dolopathos. Diocletian figures also in the Erl of Tolous.
- 7. Rome. The scene of The Seven Sages is laid in Rome in all western versions except K and D*, in which at the beginning of the story the Emperor is ruling in Constantinople.
- ro. pe fayrest lady pat bare life. Repeated, except for the interchange of had with bare, in 1. 3272. For other lines identical except for one word, see the notes to 11. 79, 123, 1153, 1765, 1836, 2368, and 3022. For lines entirely identical, see note to 1. 3.
- rr. auenant. Weber reads auenaunt. Other instances of inaccuracy in Weber's text are indicated in the footnotes to ll. 15, 46, 54, 56, 57, 63, 72, 78, 86, 90, 92, 93, 97, etc.
- 12. Milisant. This name for the Empress seems to be peculiar to Y; it appears elsewhere only in B and F, however, for E is silent as to her name and the text of A and Ar is wanting at this point. D calls the Empress Helie. As, like E, does not mention her name. D* says that she was the daughter of the king of Carthage. The Welsh version calls her Eva. In the Dolopathos she is known as Auguste.

14. Pe fayrest pat on fote myght go. See also "pe fayrest lady pat bare life," l. 10, and "pe fairest lady pat had lyfe," l. 3272. A list of typical expressions similar to these is given by Kittredge in Studies and Notes, I, p. 36 f., where attention is also called to the frequency of such expressions in M. E.

15. knaue. The final e appears to be syllabic. There are, however, only a few instances in which the final e has syllabic value; see the Introduction, p. lxxiii.

- 17. This line does not begin with a rubricated letter in the MS., but is preceded by a flourish in red and blue, which I take to indicate paragraph division. Sometimes, however, as in Il. 2491, 2903, 3555, this flourish appears where there is no logical justification for paragraph division, and I have accordingly disregarded it. In other instances this flourish is omitted where the thought clearly calls for indentation; as in Il. 363, 1435, 1817, 1955, etc.
- 18. D reserves mention of the death of the first Empress until just before its account of the marriage to the second Empress.—According to H the first Empress on her death-bed sends for the Emperor and tells him that she knows he will marry again, but requests that the second wife shall have "no power nor governaunce" over the Prince and that he be reared far away from court and not under her tuition.
- 21. Wheper. Medially C sometimes has β , sometimes th; R avoids β medially.

 23, 24. alde: balde. A very common rhyme in M. E. romance; see Kölbing's note to Sir Beues (A), l. 52 f. and Hall's note to King Horn (L and O), ll. 17, 18.
- 25. Florentine. Both MSS. spell with f instead of F, f being regularly used for capital F. R is more partial to f than is C, using it often where there is no occasion for capitalizing.

The name Florentine, like Milisant, is peculiar to Y; it appears here and in A, E, B, and F, the text of Ar at this point having been lost. D and most of the O. F. versions are silent as to the Prince's name. As and H call the Prince Diocletian; I calls him Stephen, and the Dolopathos, Lucinius.— How the name Florentine came to be used in Y is not clear. It is possible that it is due to the influence of the romance of Octovian, in which one of the princes who figure in the story is called Florentine (variant, Florent); see Octovian, Il. 311, 686, 703, 759, 789, etc. On the other hand, it is possible that the Octovian was influenced by The Seven Sages, though this is unlikely, since the name Florent appeared in the O. F. original of the M. E. Octovian. The name Florentine also occurs in some of the O. F. manuscripts of Amis and Amiloun (see Kölbing, Altengl. Bibk., II, p. cxxvii); and, in its briefer form, in Gower's "Tale of Florent," Conf. Amant., Bk. I, Il. 1407 f.

28. whise. See also whise (or whiser), ll. 154, 334, 2799; wharm, l. 2906; whif (or whife), ll. 1559, 1593, 1598, etc.; and whit, l. 3741. In some instances, however, a w is used instead of wh; see wat, l. 2962; wen, ll. 1131 and 2315; and wils, l. 1344.

30. ayre. C has final re rather than curled r in about forty instances; see ll. 115, 143, 208, 508, 520, etc.

31. It was nothing. For other instances of it was (or it es) where Mod. Eng. uses there was (or there is), see ll. 750, 1101, and 1877. Morris, Pricke of Conscience, p. xviii, observes that the construction is frequent in the Northern dialect.

Kellner, Engl. Syntax, p. 179, instances no less than six examples of it from the first 2500 lines of the Cursor Mundi.

- 53. Bancillas. Except for As, the names of the sages are essentially the same in all M. E. MSS., Bancillas, Anxilles, Lentilioun, Malquidras, Caton, Jesse, and Maxencius. In As they are called Bantillas, Anupullus, Lentalus, Catone, Malcome, Ampustinus, and Cratone. In L and A* their names are the same as in this edition except that Merons appears there instead of Maxencius. In H their names are Bantillas, Lentulus, Katho (or Craton), Malquidrac, Josephus, Cleophas, and Joachim, in the order given. Whence the name Bancillas is derived it is impossible to say. Cassel (Mischle Sindbad, p. 225) takes Bancillas and Anxilles to be variants of the same name, which he holds is Sibylla.
- 66. Anxilles. Is it possible that Michael Anchialus, a philosopher and writer of Antioch in the twelfth century, is the original of this name? See note to l. 53 for Cassel's suggestion of a derivation from Sibylla.
- 68. him semed. Other instances of the impersonal verb with its grammatical subject unexpressed occur in Il. 91, 223, 226, 296, 340, 442, 449, 472, 693, 695, 780, 814, 934, 975, 1146, 1181, 1509, 1522, 1570, 1582, 1619, 1669, 1777, 1810, 1811, 1865, 1907, 1999, 2052, 2425, 2431, 2563, 2663, 2747, 2815, 2850, 2853, 2872, 2905, 2970, 2994, 3159, 3169, 3196, 3215, 3243, 3343, 3388, 3400, 3476, 3610, 3633, 3747, 3794, 4050, 4086, 4134. In all except eighteen of these instances a pronoun in the dative case precedes the verb. In seventeen instances the verb is think (A.S. byncan), or its preterite, thoght.
 - 69. Of sexty winter. Peculiar to this text.
 - 76. sex zere. F reads five years; L (A*), seven years; D*, two years.
 - 78. white als swan. There are five other such comparisons in the poem; see ll. 122, 1012, 3110, 3112, and 3282.
 - 79. Identical with l. 121 except that blayke there takes the place of white here. See notes to ll. 10 and 3.
 - nathing brown. See Kölbing, note to Sir Tristrem, l. 2313; and Kittredge, Studies and Notes, I, p. 62 f. "This trick of reinforcing a word by adding to it the negative of a word of opposite meaning is," says Kittredge (l.c., p. 62 f.), "one of the most familiar stylistic mannerisms of Middle English versifiers."
 - 80. Lentilioune. Derived from Publius Cornelius Lentulus, politician and conspirator (put to death B.C. 63), or from some other one of the prominent Romans who bore the name Lentulus.
 - 84. This line in both C and R has but three stresses; other lines that are too short are 601, 1868, 1901, 1918, 2168, 2972, 3021, 3497, 3576.
 - 86. geres fiue. So L (A*) and H. F reads five years; D*, six years.
 - 88. Malquidras. According to Cassel (Mischle Sindbad, p. 224) derived from Melchior, but this view is surely untenable.
 - gr. Him thoght scorn. According to W. van der Gaaf, The Transition from the Impersonal to the Personal Construction in M. E., Heidelberg, 1904, p. 115, this idiom is very rare; he cites only one example: "Hure thoughte most scorn" (Brunne's Chron., l. 2407). The construction with the personal pronoun as subject, however, he shows to have been common from the fifteenth century on.

- 92. rosing, "boasting, self-commendation" (see Scottish roose). Weber reads josyng, which he defines as rejoicing, adding that the word is "still used in the Scottish dialect"; but neither the N. E. D. nor the Century Dictionary takes account of any such word. Halliwell's entry of josyng in his Dictionary of Archaic and Provincial Words is doubtless wholly traceable to Weber's entry.
- 104. Caton. Not Cato the Censor (as Cassel suggests, I.c., p. 233), but the so-called Dionysius Cato, author of the famous Catonis Disticha, which is referred to in the next line. See Skeat's note to Cant. Tales, G, 1. 688.— The name is spelled Craton in As and H.
 - 105. boke of Catoun = Catonis Disticha de Moribus ad filium.
 - 115. seuen zere. As and H read three years; D*, five years.
- 119. Iesse. Cassel (l.c., p. 224) suggests that the original of this name is Josephus, the historian.
- 121. blayke, "light, yellow." (Cf. N. E. D. under Blayke.) See L (A*), p. 3: "les cheueus plus jaunes que cire merrie"; and B, l. 101: "His here was yelow as the safferon."

nothing broun. See note to 1. 79.

- 122. With eghen faire als a faukoun. B, the only other one of the M.E. MSS. that preserves this comparison, has (l. 102): "He looked lustely as a Fawcon." See note to l. 78.
- 123. were. Apparently a substitution of the preterite for the present in the interest of the rhyme; see l. 433, which differs from this line only in the substitution of be for were. Another instance of abnormal adjustment of form to rhyme is pointed out in the note to l. 2211.
- 126. inwith. See Skeat's notes to Cant. Tales, B, l. 1794, and Legend of Good Women, l. 86.

geres thre. So E, B, and D*. As and H read two years.

- 128. ge. The other masters have addressed the Emperor as bou, and Iesse has used the possessive bi in ll. 123, 124. Both MSS. use bou and ge indiscriminately in addressing one person. See, for ge, ll. 323, 326, 329, 331, 549, etc.; for bou, ll. 72, 342, 343, 344, 347, 426, etc.
- 129. Maxencius. Possibly to be traced to the Roman emperor, Marcus Aurelius Maxentius, whose father was a colleague of Diocletian; but, with greater likelihood, to the monk Joannes Maxentius, of the sixth century A.D. L (A*) substitutes Merons for Maxencius, which Cassel (l.c., p. 224)—rightly, I think—would trace to the Maro of Virgilius Maro.
- 129 f. Pe seuind Maister, Maxencius...he. The text affords sundry other examples of the pleonastic pronoun subject (see Il. 317 f., 489-490, 531, 811, 884-885, 1108, 3145-3146, 3749-3750, and 4247-4248), but none in which the construction is so loose and in which the two elements are so far removed from each other.
- 130. right wis. Perhaps to be read as one word; see rightwis in ll. 2134, 3038, 3238, and 4296. But MSS. and Weber divide as here; E, l. 123 ("The VII. mayster of grete clergy"), also seems to favor this reading.
- 134. The text of A begins with the line corresponding to this. This line, which does not appear in Weber's text, reads as follows: "For be mede of mi seruise."

- 139. In A, E, B, F, and L (A*), as here, the seventh sage stipulates no definite time within which to make good his offer; in As, D*, and H he specifies one year as the time.
 - 147-154. An amplification peculiar to this text.
- 151. 3e profer. The pres. plu. ind. with a personal pronoun subject in direct contact with it is regularly uninflected in fourteenth-century Northern texts; see Rodeffer, The Inflection of the Pres. Plu. Ind., Baltimore, 1903. The rule is invariably observed in this text; see ll. 261, 265, 323, 329, 1891, 2026, etc.
- 169. Pai said in Rome dwel might he noght. In As this bit of counsel is offered by Lentulus; in D and H, by Caton.
- 176. A myle fra toun, bi a reuere. So also A, E, B, and As. L (A*) has merely "un liue près de Rome."
- 180. erth. R reads erthe, which is probably the correct reading. The rhythm of the line is otherwise exceptionally bad. Final e is sometimes syllabic in both C and R; see note to l. 15.
- 191. Ars Metrike. See N. E. D. under Arithmetic for the confusion in M. E. of ars metrica with arithmetica. E reads ars musike; B, ars logike. R, probably by error of the scribe, substitutes als for Ars.
- 193. child sege. The uninflected genitive occurs twenty-one times; see Il. 287, 914, 1126, 1346, 1387, 1430, 1438, 1496, 2053, 2803, 3089, 3131, 3217, 3220, 3364, 3762, 3778, 3997, 4191, and 4296. In nine instances this genitive is followed by a word beginning with s.
 - 201-206. An amplification peculiar to this redaction.
- 211. Was none so witty. See also l. 964: "was . . . a . . . forest"; l. 1690: "was a king"; and l. 2542: "es none so wise man."
- 215. his maisters. According to As it was the wise Caton who first conceived of this.
- 217. leues sextene. L illogically reads "douze feuilles," but later corrects to read as here.
- 218. iubarb, the houseleek. See N. E. D. under Jubarb. The N. E. D. quotes Holland's Pliny, 1601, II, p. 237: "The lesse Sengreen or Iubarb growth upon walls . . . likewise upon the tiles of house-roofs"; and Bradley's Family Dictionary, 1725, s.v.: "The Great Jubarb is a Plant that has great Pulpy and thick Leaves, . . . sharp at the Ends like a Tongue." R spells Iubark. As reads edoke (see N. E. D. under Edocke). Other M. E. MSS. and the O. F. MSS. read ivy.
- 222. foure. Dissyllabic apparently; so, also, foure (l. 3882), werld (l. 448), thurgh (ll. 1802, 1851, 3407), pour (l. 2169), fire (l. 3112), and gold (ll. 3558, 3589).
 226-233. An independent addition of this redaction.
- 229, 230. doun: won. Apparently a slightly inaccurate rhyme; but see done (l. 685), and the rhymes bowne: Caton (ll. 459-460), Emperoure: Sauiore (ll. 345-346), and Emparowre: honeore (ll. 593-594). Other rhymes which are at least graphically imperfect are greues: lifes (ll. 951-952), high: negh (ll. 985-986), well: still (ll. 1587-1588), gardinere: fire (ll. 1935-1936), and brend: assent (ll. 2321-2322).
- 230. won. This spelling (or its variant, wone) occurs also in 11. 729, 988, 1454, 1546, 2784, 3620, 365%, and 4091, rhyming in three cases with sone, twice with sun (son), and once with on. Though anomalous, the form is occasionally met with in other MSS.; see, for example, the text of Troilus in MS. Camb. Gg. IV. 27, ll. 901, 1485, 4378, 4553, etc.

257. lat we be. A very common formula for transition; see Schmirgel, Appendix to Kölbing's Sir Beues, E. E. T. S., Ex. Ser., LXV, p. l.

264. fandes. Either an imperative (in which case the change of construction is very awkward), or a noun, meaning attempts.

269. an emperise. According to H, the daughter of the king of Castille.

283. vnhid. Just the opposite of what is meant. Professor William Hand Browne, of Johns Hopkins University, has kindly suggested to me that vnkid (= unrevealed) should perhaps be substituted for it.

285. a seriant nyce. The Welsh version has instead "a wicked hag"; see G. H. Jones's translation, p. 647: "And one day she came to the house of a wicked hag, with but one eye, and without a tooth in her head, and she said to the hag: In God's name, where are the children of the Emperor? He has none, quoth the hag. Woe is me, said she, that he is childless! Thereupon the hag took pity on the other hateful woman, saying: Thou needst not do that; there is a prophecy that he will get children, and perchance it will be that he will get them by thee, since he will not get them by another; and be not sad, he has one son, who is being nurtured by the Wise Men of Rome."

299, 300. a counsailoure, A wiche. The counseling with a witch, though it reminds somewhat of the amplification of the Welsh version reproduced in the note to 1. 285, was in all probability an invention of the redactor of cr. The hag in the Welsh version plays the part of the seriant nyce of this version; the $r\delta le$ of the witch here finds nothing corresponding to it in the Welsh.

317 f. pe Emp[er]oure and his . . . wife . . . pai. See note to 1. 129 f.

340. Me think. Also in Il. 449, 1582, 3197, 3215, and 3610. The verb is uninflected in every instance, as was normal in Northern works of the fourteenth century (see van der Gaaf, The Transition from the Impersonal to the Personal Construction in M. E., p. 93 f.). The verb think = think (A. S. Bencan), however, is regularly inflected; see Il. 1205, 1350, 3472, 3872.

348. vnderon. Variously used in M. E. to mean: "Nine o'clock in the morning; the period from nine o'clock to noon; the canonical hour of terce; ... noon or afternoon; also, a noon meal."—Century Dictionary. Here the meaning is perhaps nine o'clock in the morning (see note on prime, l. 359, and Skeat's note on Chaucer's use of the term, Complete Works of Chaucer, V, p. 275); perhaps midday (see F. Tupper, Jr., Anglo-Saxon Dag-Mal, Pub. Mod. Lang. Assoc. of America, 1895, X, p. 164 f.).

359. prime. Probably high prime, or nine o'clock in the morning; see note on 1. 348, and Skeat's note referred to there; also Tupper, I.c., p. 158 f.

363. The line clearly begins a new paragraph, but there is neither rubric nor flourish in the MS. See note to l. 17.

378. hastily. According to As, Il. 148-149, they are commanded to bring him home, "In the fest of the Trinite, Or ellis dreidles that all suld de"; similarly H, p. 10: "quod sub pena mortis in festo Penthecostes filium suum ad eum ducerent."

393. a gardine. Called in l. 482, "Boys Saynt Martine." See note.

394. Floreentine. The curled r occurs medially only here and in couret, l. 2694, and smeretly, l. 3538.

- 400. Catoun. In F it is Ancilles who observes the stars; in D*, Bancillas.
- 428. Dissyllabic thesis in each of the first two feet.
- 448. werld. To be read as a dissyllable (see note to l. 222).
- 476. scho. So always in R, but C has sho except here and in 11. 619 and 2422.
- 482. Boys Saynt Martine. L (A*), p. 9: "bois saint Martin"; H, p. 9: "viridarium sancti Martini." Other M. E. MSS. preserving the name are A, E, B, and F. An industrious hunt through guidebooks and atlases reveals nothing with the name of St. Martin, either in Rome or in its environs, which answers to the description here given. The church, St. Martin in the Mount, which is very ancient, is neither outside of the city nor near the Tiber. Is it possible that the name is, after all, to be traced to the Campus Martius? There seems to be such a confusion of Mars and St. Martin in Mount Martyn, Octavian (L passim), where Montmartre (Paris) is meant. For a sketch of the life of St. Martin and an account of the traditions concerning him, see Chambers, Book of Days, under Martinmas.
- 487. For other examples of sudden transition from indirect to direct discourse, see ll. 565, 1127, 1241, 2371, 3183, 4066, 4145, and 4156.
- 491. When be Emperiz herd tipand. C is less faithful to the original here than are some of the rest of the M. E. MSS. In A (l. 423 f.), E (l. 385 f.), and B (l. 403 f.), as in L (A*) (p. 9), it is the Emperor who first receives tidings of the approach of the Prince; he goes out to meet him, gives him a cordial welcome, and conducts him to his palace. The Empress then first appears.

Emperiz. The only instance of this spelling. The letter z, which, as pointed out in the note to l. 2, is identical in C with palatal z, is used elsewhere only in Sarezins, or Sarzins (ll. 3073, 3122, 3136, 3144), perzayued (l. 3452), and benzown (l. 3811).

498 f. The story of the stepmother's advances, the young prince's repulsion of her advances, and her outcry in consequence, had its ultimate origin perhaps in the scriptural story of Joseph and Potiphar's wife (Genesis, xxxix. 7-20). But the motif was not uncommon in mediæval fiction; see W. H. Schofield in "The Lay of Guingamor," Studies and Notes, 1897, IV, p. 237, and in "The Lays of Graelent and Lanval," Pub. Mod. Lang. Assoc. of America, 1900, XV, p. 147 f.; see also Kittredge, "Arthur and Gorlagon," Studies and Notes, 1903, VIII, p. 255, note 3.

512. F and D* add that she assured him that she would slay the Emperor and thus get him out of their way.

524. According to H (p. 13) when the Empress has failed in her efforts to induce the Prince to speak, she brings him writing materials and has him answer her in writing.

530. couercheues. To be read as a dissyllable.

533. al to-drogh. Al to-raced occurs in 1. 535, and al to-rent in 11. 541 and 551. See Skeat's note on al to-rente, Cant. Tales, B, 1. 3215. The scribe of C wrote alto as one word in each instance.

542. Hir hare, hir face was. Was is perhaps a plural; perhaps a singular traceable to the asyndeton. The regular form for the pret. ind. plu. is war (see ll. 34, 37, 161, 187, etc.), but was is used with a plural subject in ll. 623, 1319, 1692, and 4136, and perhaps also in ll. 3567 and 3692. Es also is used as a plural in l. 2144. See Kellner, p. 48 f.

554, 556. Ger, gers. Both C and R pretty consistently differentiate between the singular and the plural of the imperative, distinguishing the latter by an inflectional s (see, for the singular, Il. 59, 71, 135, 545, 565, etc.; for the plural, Il. 2, 41, 316, 577, etc.). The apparent inconsistency here may perhaps be explained as only apparent, Ger being accounted for by its proximity to bi (l. 553), and gers by its proximity to ge (l. 557); for, as pointed out in the note to l. 128, bou and ge are used indiscriminately. It may be, however, that in gers we have an example of an inflected imperative singular, which Rodeffer, Inflection of Pres. Plu. Ind., pp. 45 and 47, asserts is found in some Northern texts. Other instances of the inflected form where only one person is addressed are: Trowes, l. 938; Gose, l. 2706; Biddes, l. 2734; Smites, l. 3013; takes, l. 3081; and thinkes, l. 3472.

575-578. Peculiar to this redaction.

579. Pe knightes. In F the Prince's life is saved the first day, not by the knights but by a steward; see ll. 380-393:

Then come forthe the steward,
And seyde: "Syr, thys was not forward
When that y helde the thy londe,
When two kynges bade be batell with wrong.
And then bou swere be heuen Kyng
Thou schuldest neuer warne me myn askyng.
Geue me thy sones lyfe to-day,
Gentyll Emperour, y the pray;
And let hym to-morowe be at by wylle,
Whethur bou wylt hym saue or spylle."
"I graunt the," seyde the Emperour,
"To geue hym lyfe, be Seynt Sauyour!
All for the respyte of a nyght
For the mede that y the hyght."

Heading p. 20. Proces. The name given to the poem as a whole (see the general heading, p. 1). It is used here and in the headings to the next four prologues with its usual value, I take it, of story, though the word prolong (see note to heading p. 49) is used in the corresponding place in the headings to the last ten prologues.

601. This line as it appears in both MSS. is too short (see note to 1. 84). A, 1. 533, reads, "He that schal in thin eld age," thus fortifying the line by the use of a word which, in C, is used in the rhyme of the line preceding.

612. pine-appel tre, pine tree. A, E, B, and F read pinnote tre (= "pine-nut tree" = pine); As, L (A*), D*, and H have simply pine. Weber defines pinnote tre as "a red-stocked or round-leaved vine"; see his Glossary.

620. a man. According to As, 1. 289, named Cornele.

- CALIFORNIL
- 623. parein was mani trese. See note to l. 542 for several other instances of was with a plural subject. The form here and in l. 1319 is perhaps due to the inversion of subject and predicate.
- 628. herber. Used here probably with the first of the five different meanings entered in the N.E.D. under Arbour: "a plot of ground covered with grass"; though it is quite possible that it means a bower or shady retreat (see N.E.D., Arbour, 5).
- 631. So it bifel opon a day. Used again in l. 2181, and in Sir Beues (A), l. 4008; Amis and Amiloun, l. 925; Perceval, l. 2141; and Erl of Tolous, ll. 181, 493, 997. See also Lib. Desc., l. 31: "As hit befell upon a day"; and Sir Thopas, Cant. Tales, B, l. 1938: "And so bifel upon a day," where Chaucer is making fun of the formula.
- 665. pe ymp . . . wex ful fast. With As, l. 335, on the contrary, "The going tre na better sped."
- 667, 668. was, standes. Other examples of the commingling of the preterite and the historical present are furnished by ll. 821 f., 828 f., 998-999, 1009-1010, 1123 f., 1134-1135, 1365 f., 1456 f., 1470 f., 1598 f., 1838-1839, 1942 f., etc.
- 668. maister. The same word is used in O.F.; see L (A*), p. 13: ".i. petit piniaus d'unes des maistres racines."
- 677. ald [tre]. The reading of C here is perhaps admissible, but the reading of R, though less rhythmical, suits the context better; and R has the support of A, l. 617: "And, for the elde tre is so i-hewed."
- 687. so mot I the. Repeated in Il. 1153, 1447, 1571, 1612, 2117, 3014, 3022, 3059, 3309. On its frequency in M. E. verse, see Zupitza's note to Guy of Warwick (B), l. 615. Zupitza records seventeen instances of it in Guy of Warwick.
- 688. Pe ald tre bitakens pe. As, 1. 355 f., adds that the gardener betokens the sages; F, 1. 434, that the boughs betoken the sages.
- 689. vnto. There appears to be confusion of idiom here, the idea involved in bitakens (l. 688) suggesting that of is like in this line, with the consequent adjustment of preposition.
- 699. Bot sertes it sal noght swa. R inserts be after noght, which improves the line metrically. There are, however, other instances of the omission of the infinitive after the auxiliary: in Il. 1680, 1749, 1903, 3275, and 3381. In three of these instances (Il. 1680, 1749, 3275), the construction is the not uncommon one with intransitive verbs of motion (see Mätzner, Grammar, II, p. 45 f., and Kellner, p. 45), but in the other two instances, as here, the omitted infinitive is clearly not a verb of motion. Mätzner cites no examples of the latter construction, but the Canterbury Tales furnishes at least one example; see the Man of Law's Tale, B, 1.738: "If ye wol aught" = "If you wish to say anything."
- 700. ride and ga. Likewise in Il. 2766 and 3862; see also ride ne go, l. 1152, and ryde or gane, l. 3937. On this locution see Kölbing, note to Ipomedon (A), l. 1164, and Kittredge, Studies and Notes, I, p. 17.
- 723. hailsed. A and B appear to reflect the O. F. here more faithfully than do the rest of the MSS. L (A*), p. 15, has: "Diex vos doint bon jor"; A, l. 666: "Deu vous doint bonjour"; B, l. 652: "Deu vous garde bonjour."

738. Pe deuil of hel I zow biteche! One of the "literary commonplaces" frequently encountered in M. E. verse; see Kittredge, Studies and Notes, I, p. 49.

744. to safe goure grace. The N. E. D. cites no example of this form of the common expletive, save your grace. It occurs again, however, in this text in 1. 2398.

749. hand-haueing. The present participle in -ing appears only here and in l. 1563 (hand-haueing: nothing). The word hand-haueing had probably lost its participial value.

752, 753. Peculiar to this redaction.

753. For paire bolt es ful sone shot. For comments on this proverb, see Kittredge, Studies and Notes, I, p. 27; and Skeat, note on Parlement of Foules, 1. 574 (Complete Works of Chaucer, I, p. 523).

paire. Imperfectly adjusted to its antecedent. Other instances of faulty reference are found in ll. 1353, 1697, and 2307.

. 755. Here F introduces puteus, canis becoming the eighth tale in that MS.

775 f. For certain variations among the different versions of The Seven Sages, in the telling of canis, and for sundry derivatives and analogues of the story, see the Introduction, pp. lxxviii f.

776. a day of pe Trinite. So A, E, B, and L (A*); D: in May; D*: "une feste solonnelle a Penthecostes."

782. grehownde. According to H the knight had also a pet falcon. This bird plays a prominent part in the story: it is the first to spy the serpent, the dog having fallen asleep; it awakes the dog and puts him on his guard by flapping its wings.

788. A faire childe. D, 1. 730, adds that the child was twelve months old.

789. thre norices. D, l. 754: two nurses; As, l. 447: one nurse; all other MSS., as C. There is no mention of the nurses in the Welsh version and the Dolopathos, nor in the Eastern versions.

804. lay. Hardly with the value of lay, reclined; but rather, remained, had a position. So also, probably, in l. 3333. See N. E. D., Lie, 4.

805. vice. O. F. vis, viz, a winding stair; here perhaps the landing at the head of such a stair.

811. Pe childe .. . it. See note to 1. 129 f.

837. stulpes. O. N. stolpi, a post. Here the posts (or upright extensions of the legs) of a cradle. A rare word, the lexicons citing only two examples of it: from Palladius on Husbondrie, I, l. 1054, and Prompt. Parv., p. 481.

840. Buth. The MS. seems to read bitth, the stroke of the t extending farther to the left than usual. R has Both. The spelling buth occurs nowhere else, either in C or R; and it is not unlikely, I think, that it is due here to scribal error.

857 f. Here, as often in the poem, the style is exceedingly broken and choppy; see, in particular, ll. 3679 f.

863. pe lady oft in swown gan fall. On the frequency of swooning in the mediæval romances, see Mead, note to Squyr of Lowe Degre, 1. 90.

865. Allas . . . þat I was born! For other examples of this formula, see Mead, note to Squyr of Lowe Degre, l. 68, and Zupitza, note to Athelston, l. 387.

871. what pam was. That is, "what was to pay with them."

886. in sonder he him slittes. In the O.F. versions he cuts off the dog's head; so also in As, l. 473. A and D, however, fall in with C. Other M.E. MSS. are either silent or fragmentary here.

920 f. There is much variation as to the kind of penance done. A, E, and B are in accord with C. According to L (A*), p. 21, and D*, p. 9, the knight goes into exile; according to As, l. 484, and H, p. 18, to the Holy Land. According to D, l. 882 f., he goes into his orchard, to a fish pool, leaps in, and sinks to the bottom.

940. Cf. l. 2128: "To trow hir wordes and leue be wise."

949. Whannow. Also in Il. 1603 and 2141. Not recorded in the dictionaries. I take it to be an agglutinated form of what now.

963. here by west. Though this appears in all the M. E. MSS. except Ar, D, and F, the first of which is fragmentary here, while the other two are independent, there is nothing corresponding to it in any of the O. F. MSS. that have been published. With the Welsh version the scene of the story is "a forest in France." The phrase here is probably "merely formal"; see Hall's note to King Horn, 1. 5.

963 f. For a summary of the variations among the different versions of The Seven Sages in the telling of aper, and for a list of the analogues of the story, see the Introduction, pp. lxxxii f.

F abridges aper and otherwise alters it extensively. With F (II. 606-633) the story runs as follows:

Hyt was a swynherde yn bys cuntre, And kepte swyne grete plente. So on a day he fayled a boor, And be-gan to morne and syke sore; He durste not go home to hys mete For drede hys maystyrs wolde hym bete. He clambe hye vpon a tree, And akcorns for hunger ete he. Then was ber a boor yn bat foreste That was a wondur vylous beste; And comyth rennyng to the tree, And fonde akcorns falled grete plente, And ete of be akcorns swythe faste, And leyde hym down at the laste. The swynherde, bat was yn the tree, Wyste not whodur he myght flee, That nye hym-selfe he waxe all madd For thoght and sykyng that he had. Then the swynherde hym be-thoght To be-gyld be best, yf bat he moght; And clambe down fro bogh to bogh Tyll he myght reche be boor well ynogh. He clawed be boor on the bakk, And full well lykud he that; He thoght bat he clawed so swete That at the laste he felle a-slepe. Then be swynherde toke owt a knyf smert, And smote the boor to the herte.

- 968. In H the king of the country offers his daughter and the succession to his throne to any one who will kill the boar. A similar offer is made in vaticinium (all versions) to any one that shall interpret the actions of the three ravens.
- 972. The infinitive, a verb of motion, is omitted here, as in 11. 1680, 1749, 3275; see note to 1. 699.
 - 975. Bifel pus. See note to l. 68.
- 981. hode. L (A*) reads: "ses girons"; and, in like manner, A, E, and B: barm, or lap. The hood was sometimes thrown back so as to hang down from the shoulders (see N. E. D. under Hood).
- 985, 986. high: negh. Apparently an imperfect rhyme, but probably not so in reality. The spelling heghest occurs in 1. 3984, and the noun derived from high is spelled heght in 1. 2527. See note to 11. 229-230.
- 987. ferly fone. L (A*), p. 23: "Il ne pot autretant trover des alies comme il soloit faire devant"; A, E, B, D*: he can find none; F, l. 618: "fonde akcorns falled grete plente."
- 988. Forby he was won to done. That is, in comparison with what he was accustomed to find. The relative is omitted also in ll. 2533, 3433, 3630, and 3821. See Kellner, pp. 61 f., 315.
- gg2. buskes. Apparently with the meaning of "clumps," "grassy or bushy clods," "tufts of sod."
- 1008. An unusually clumsy line. R omits hand, and so reads perfectly. It is probable that the scribe of C erroneously inserted hand under the influence of hand in the preceding line.
- ro28. with sorow! Professor Kittredge reminds me that the phrase is a common M. E. curse.
- 1041. With the line corresponding to this the text of the Arundel MS. (Ar) begins.
- 1059. And. One of the four instances in C in which the word is spelled out. See note to l. 2.
- 1081, 1082. "You should not slay your son on that account unless you knew he deserved to be slain." Worthi is similarly used in l. 2536.
- 1086. Ypocrase. The celebrated physician, Hippocrates, 480 B.C. to about 357 B.C. It is barely possible that medicus grew out of the story (perhaps apocryphal) of Hippocrates's diagnosis of the case of Perdiccas II, king of Macedonia, who had invited him to his court. Hippocrates discovered by certain external symptoms, so the tradition goes, that the king's illness had been caused by his having fallen in love with his father's concubine. See W. A. Greenhill in Smith's Dictionary. Hippocrates also figures in Lonelich's Holy Grail, chapters 35–37, E. E. T. S., Ex. Ser., XXVIII, pp. 17–40, and is often mentioned in M. E. literature.
 - 1087. neuow. According to H, named Galen.
- rioi f. For a digest of the peculiar features of the different versions of medicus and for the discussion of some analogues of the story, see the Introduction, pp. lxxxiv f.
 - 1103-1104. slike: like. The same rhyme occurs in ll. 3443-3444 and 3587-3588.

1107. D, in accord with a convention of ancient and mediæval story (see, for instance, Beowulf, l. 2184 f., and the Sir Perceval legend), has it that for a long time in his youth the nephew had appeared to be very dull.

to Piers Pl., C, III, l. 157, and IV, l. 47; Kaluza's note to Lib. Desc., l. 1046; and Mead's note to Squyr of Lowe Degre, l. 243. R reads florance, thus furnishing an example of the use of the word fifty years earlier than the first example cited by the N. E. D.

1131. Wen. See note to l. 28.

1135. syn, sinew, A and F reading senewe and senows respectively. The dictionaries record no other example of a monosyllabic form of the word in English; but the form sin appears in O. N. and O. Fries.

1146. On al manere wit bus me. "In every way it behooves me to know." See, for a similar use of the infinitive with bus, l. 3476.

1153. See notes to ll. 3022 and 10.

1168. in Auerell. The phrase is found only in Y; in which it is constant.

r169. Pe Eril of Nauern. So, with slight variations, the rest of the M. E. MSS. L (A*), however, has: "li quens de namur"; D*: "roy de Frise"; and H: "dux de Burgundia." Navern is frequently met with in the M. E. romances. It is a variant of Navarre; see Huon of Burdeux, E. E. T. S., Ex. Ser., XLIII, p. 632 and passim, where it is closely associated with Aragon; see also Minot's Poems, iv, l. 70 (ed. Hall, Oxford, 1887, p. 13), and Hall's note on the line (L.c., p. 57).

ri78. I prai be hat no man weten. The infinitive, weten, has no governing verb. Instead of hat four MSS. have let, which was doubtless the original reading; see A, l. 1090: "let no man wite"; Ar, l. 150: "late no man hat i-wete"; E, l. 1094: "lete no man hyt wete"; F, l. 1555: "let no man hyt wete."

1184. beres fless. Peculiar to C and R. L (A*), p. 27: "char de buef"; and so, in effect, A, Ar, E, B, and F.

bro. So A and B. E substitutes blood, and H aquam. The O.F. versions are silent.

1189. with wyne. So also F, l. 1575. Other passages in which F and C unite in differing from other MSS. are ll. 3077–3078, 3099–3100, 3159, 3213–3214, 3339–3340, 3488, 4060, 4063–4064, 4073–4074, 4209. In four of these instances — 3099–3100, 3488, 4060, and 4063–4064 — F and C are faithful to the O. F.

1192-1193. gaf him... Vnto pe leche. An awkward reduplication of the object, avoided by all the other MSS. save A (ll. 1098-1099) and F (ll. 1567-1568). See Mätzner, Grammar, II, p. 19.

1193. siluer and golde. Ar, l. 159: "A wer-hors i-charged with siluer and gold."
1207. Son. So also A; E, B, Ar, and F, however, read: "on the third day."
The O. F. versions are silent.

1207 f. In D* this episode is placed just after the tun episode.

1224 A, Ar, E, F, D, L (A*), D*, and H add here that he also burned his books, which is perhaps a reminiscence of the fable according to which Hippocrates burned the books at Cos which were under his charge as librarian, his purpose being to conceal the use he had made of them in his own books.

1243. fele. Ar, E, B, F, L (A*), and H: "in a hundred places."

1265. slas. R has sla. Other instances in which R uses the subjunctive where C has the indicative occur in ll. 1654, 1862, 1869, 2513, 2545, 2967, 3034, 3162. In l. 1549 R uses the indicative where C has the subjunctive.

1267. do him alegance. "That is, give him relief," "suspend the judgment you have passed against him." See N. E. D. under Allege, v. 1.

1274. Wepid. The subject is omitted, as in l. 3630. Such an omission seems violent to the Mod. Eng. ear, but examples are common in the best M. E. verse; see the "Prologue" to the Cant. Tales, ll. 33, 600, and 811. See also Macaulay's note to Conf. Amant., Bk. I, l. 1895, and Zupitza's note to Guy of Warwick (B), l. 10.

1279, 1280. These lines are omitted by R. That the omission is arbitrary is shown by their appearing in A (ll. 1189–1190), Ar (ll. 253–254), E (ll. 1195–1196), and B (ll. 1177–1178), where the same rhymes occur as in C. For another arbitrary omission by R, see ll. 2843–2844. For a couplet arbitrarily added by R, see note to l. 2364.

1302. What was he pat? I am not sure what this means. The context seems to call for the interpretation, "who (or, what sort of fellow) was he that did so?" a question with the value of a request for the telling of the story suggested in the lines preceding. pat appears to be merely a bit of pleonasm employed, despite the violence it involves, to meet the exigency of the rhyme.

1311 f. For a summary of the peculiar features of the different versions of gaza, and for a list of the originals and analogues of the story, with a discussion thereof, see the Introduction, pp. lxxxv f.

1316. Octouian. The romance of Octavian is well known; the M. E. versions have been published by Weber, Metrical Romances, III, p. 157 f.; Halliwell, Percy Soc., No. XIV; and Sarrazin, Altengl. Bibk., III.

1317. toure. According to A, Ar, E, B, L (A*), D*, named Cressent. This tower also appears in some versions of Roma; see note to l. 3121. The name Cressent is later given in this text (ll. 2147, 2152, etc.) to Crassus; see note to l. 2147.

1318. his tresoure. Mention is made of the wealth of Octavian in William of Malmesbury's Chronicle (tr. Giles, p. 178). It is also referred to in Conf. Amant., Bk. V, l. 4731; Macaulay (Conf. Amant., II, p. 502), in a note on this line, observes that "The treasures of Octovien (or Octavian) were proverbial," and cites, in evidence of this, Rom. de Troie, ll. 1684 f. and 28594 f.

1319. was. For other examples of was with a plural subject, see note to 1.542. klerkes twa. A, Ar, E, and B add, with the support of L (A*) and D*, that there had formerly been seven clerks, five of whom had gone to some other country.

1320. A liberal man. L (A*), D*, and H add that he had one son and two daughters.

1331. Sir, at zowre will. With L (A*), D*, A, Ar, E, B the son remonstrates with the father at first. With H, p. 25, he expressly approves of his father's plan: "Ait filius: 'Bonum est consilium. Melius est de thesauro eius accipere, eo quod in omnibus habundat, quam hereditatem nostram vendere, et ego cum sororibus meis semper in miseria permanere.'" 1336. pe fader went in. A, Ar, E, and B, in agreement with L (A*), p. 30, report that both father and son went in.

1335-1342. Peculiar to this redaction.

1349. he wald tel to na man. According to H, p. 25, he reports to Octavian, who rebukes him.

1353. pam. Other examples of faulty reference are pointed out in the note on baire, 1. 753.

1375. smite my heuid. In D*, p. 35, the father foretells the incidents of the following day, and instructs the son as to the course he is to pursue. In H, p. 26, the son does not demur at all to his father's counsel, but beheads him at once. In some of the variants of gaza the idea of beheading the father originates with the son, who carries this idea into execution in the face of much remonstrance from the father.

1382. say. This word in the Cotton MS. looks more like aay, but must be say, as with R.

rager. it wald be wer. That is, "it would be the worse for him [the son]," "would go hard with him."

1394. Into be pit be heuid he slang. With this D ends its version of gaza.

1404. wont. R inserts was before wont, but unnecessarily. See, for example, Milton's On the Morning of Christ's Nativity, l. 10, and Paradise Lost, I, l. 764; V, l. 123; and VI, l. 93.

1427. in pe cheke. A, Ar, E, B, L (A*), D*, H: in the thigh; F, in the hand.

1445, 1446. be deuil ... Bot ... gang! I take this to mean: "The devil hang him if he does n't throw your head into a privy!"

Heading p. 49. Prolong. Evidently a variant (traceable to scribal error) of prologue (see the forms prolonge, Alexander, ed. Skeat, E. E. T. S., Ex. Ser., XLVII, Il. 2730, 5066, and Prolong, Bokenam's Lives of Saints, Altengl. Bibk., I, p. 237). Prolong occurs also in the headings to the prologues of the rest of the stories. In the headings to the first five prologues the word Proces is used instead, though hardly with the same meaning as Prolong; see note to heading p. 20.

1481. "A, lord," he said. R omits he said, and thus spoils the meter; but it has the support of Ar, l. 467.

1496. for hir owin ded sake, "for her own deed's sake"; see note to l. 193 for other examples of the uninflected genitive.

1507 f. For a summary of the peculiar features of the different versions of puteus, and for a list of the variants and analogues of the story, see the Introduction, pp. xc f.

1508. A riche man. According to F, l. 494 f., he had already wedded two wives; and D, L (A*), and H stress the fact that, though he was an old man, he had taken a young wife.

1520-1526. Peculiar to this redaction.

1527. ane vsage. D places this detail just before the arrival of the watchman (see l. 1621).

1534. him. So also in R, although both MSS. have pam in Il. 1531 and 1535. 1535. men sal pam driue. According to F, l. 502, they are stoned to death.

1568. In L (A*), p. 36, she argues in her defense that she had gone out of doors because she had been ill; in D*, p. 19, because of an attack of toothache; in H, p. 21, because her mother, being ill, had sent for her.

1580. well. In the Welsh version (tr. Jones, p. 652), a fish pond.

1587, 1588. well: still. See, for other imperfect rhymes, the note to ll. 229–230. A, l. 1472, avoids the difficulty by reading snelle in place of still.

1621. wakemen. C has wakeman, but Bai in ll. 1625 and 1627 confirms the reading of R, which I have adopted.

1680. my reson may noght forth. That is, "my judgment does not prevail." The infinitive, a verb of motion, is omitted, as in 1l. 1680, 1749, and 3275, and in the corresponding line in A (l. 1550): "Mi tale ne mot nowt forth."

1689 f. For a summary of the peculiar features of the different versions of senescalcus, and for a discussion of the analogues of the story, see the Introduction, pp. xci f.

In H senescalcus is fused with Roma. In F senescalcus appears to have been supplanted by a story otherwise entirely foreign to The Seven Sages. Owing to the loss of a leaf of the MS. the conclusion of the story is lacking. The fragment which remains is as follows:

Hyt was a knygt of bys contre, And a noble-man was he; And he had a sone feyre, A godely chylde, schulde be hys heyre. The chylde louyd wele spendyng, And ryet yn all thynge; Tauerns and dyces louyd he, And horys louvd he grete plente. Thus he spendyd all bat he myst wynne, Tyll bat hys catell waxe all bynne. He hym bethoght yn all wyse How he my t hys fadur sle with some queyntyse. So hyt befelle vpon a day, He feyned hym syke and yn hys bed he lay, And seyde ber was a boor yn bat forest That was a wondur vylous beest: "Fadur, but yf y haue a brede of hym, Y dye fro tho and all my kynne." The godemans hert was full sore That hys sone schulde dye for be brede of a boor. He dyst hym on a gode palfray, And to the wode he went hys way. The chylde spekyth with felows twelfe, And the threttethe was hym-selfe, And mette hys fadur vndur a tree,

And assayle hym harde can he.
He hewe hys fadur very smale,
All yn pecys, as seyb bys tale;
And home he went to bedd ageyn,
And couyrd hym warme, hit ys not to leyn.
The tydynges come to that cyte;
For hym was dole and grete pyte,
For that noble knyght was sloon. [ll. 1053-1085.]

The Welsh version also substitutes another story for senescalcus. In Jones's translation (p. 652) this story runs thus: "A man of Rome had a tree with sweet fruit, growing in his garden, with a fine straight branch rising from the stock of the tree, and reaching to the sky. And if the man held the tree and its fruit dear, still dearer was the branch because of its loveliness. Between me and God, said the gardener, if thou wouldst follow my advice, thou wouldst order the branch to be cut down from off the tree. Why? said he, Because it is not sure whether thou wilt obtain the fruit of the tree, so long as yonder branch is a step for one to ascend, and to support evil persons and thieves; and there is no way to climb the tree or get the fruit save by yonder branch. By my faith, said he, for all that, none of the branch shall be cut off, any more than before. Be it so, said the gardener. And that night thieves came to the tree and plundered the tree of its fruit, and left it quite bare, with broken branches, by the next morning." - The first half of the story, it will be observed, tracks arbor tolerably closely. The conclusion is probably an invention of the Welsh redactor.

1690. Was a king. See note to l. 211.

1691. Poyle and Calaber land. According to L (A*) and D he ruled merely over Apulia; according to D* he was king of Egypt; according to the Welsh version, king of Germany.—Apulia and Calabria, being nearly associated geographically, were often referred to together in mediæval story.

1691, 1692. Bath Poyle and Calaber land Was. For other instances in which was is used with a plural subject, see note on 1. 542.

1693. in luf had he no delite. So L (A*), p. 39: "Il desdaingnoit fame seur toutes riens"; and similarly A and B: "he loved women very little." But Ar, l. 652, and E, l. 1594, report illogically that he had great delight in women.

1705. medcines. A, Ar, E, L (A*): "barley bread and water."

1722. Ten pownd. A, Ar, B, L (A*): twenty marks; E: twenty pounds; D*: a hundred marks; the Welsh version: nine marks; H: a thousand florins.

1729. Pe steward . . . couaitus. On the covetous steward in mediæval story see Mead, Squyr of Lowe Degre, p. xxx.

1749. I mot nedes partill. See note to 1. 699.

1749, 1750. The logic of this speech is quite worthy of the character into whose mouth it is put.

1765. Except for one word, identical with 1. 2471. See note to 1. 10.

1766. chamber. The reading of R; C has chamber, which I take to be a scribal error, but the same spelling is found in William of Palerne, ll. 685 and 771.

1781. it es forth dais. So also Ar, l. 719, E, l. 1659, and B, l. 1677. A, l. 1629, has instead, "hit is dai," the rhyme word corresponding to dai being awai.

1801. According to B, ll. 1691–1696, the king decreed that the steward should be put to death by having molten metal poured down his throat (a motif borrowed perhaps from Virgilius):

The kyng bade men shuld hym lede With-owt be town, in-to a mede, And knyt his hondes hym behynde, And to a poste nakyd hym bynde, And melte syluer and eke lede, And powre in-to his mowth till he be dede; And thus be styward loste his lyff.

1802. Thurgh. Dissyllabic apparently; see note to l. 222.

1836. Except for the ordinal, identical with l. 2782; see note to l. 10.

1857, 1858. to nyce, For to force. See, for a similar construction, ll. 2395-2396. 1862. dose. R reads do (see note to l. 1265), but inconsistently sets thinkes, in the next-line, in the indicative.

1868. A line of three stresses, unless old is to be read as two syllables. See notes to ll. 84 and 222.

1877 f. For a summary of the peculiar features of the different versions of tentamina, and for certain analogues of the story, see the Introduction, pp. xciii f.

1877. it was whylum. See note to l. 31.

1879. a nobil whife. C seems to be alone in telling of each of the first two wives separately. D^* and K omit mention of the second wife; F, D, and H omit mention of both the first wife and the second.

1885. in liking sted. The meaning appears to be: "in a vigorous condition of body" (and hence predisposed to a second marriage). Sted is probably a noun, since the participle takes the form stad in 1. 984.

1901. The line is too short. See, for other such lines, the note to 1.84.

1903, 1904. litel pai mai of preue note, Or els noght. I take this to mean: "They (old men) are equal to little, or nothing, of secret enjoyment" (or "sexual intercourse"); see A, ll. 1743-1744: "Litel thai mai do, withouten gabbe, That yong womman wolde habbe"; with which Ar, ll. 843-844, E, ll. 1779-1780, and B, ll. 1793-1794, are in essential agreement. But it is possible that βai goes back to βong wemen (l. 1901), in which case note is the infinitive and preue a noun (=proof).

1907. Hir liked noght his oper spell. That is, "She did not like his talk (his empty declarations of love, or his scoldings because of his jealousy) either."

1910. According to K mother and daughter meet on the occasion of an annual feast; with $L(A^*)$ and the Welsh version they meet at the end of the daughter's first year of wedded life.

1918. Ald men er oft ful fell. A line of three stresses (see note to 1.84) unless ald is to be read as a dissyllable (see note to 1.222). The insertion of sibes after oft would save the line; see 1.2110: "pat old men oft sibes er fell"; or it may be, as Professor Bright suggests, that ald should be changed to alde.

1922, 1923. moght, mai. The logic of the change in tense does not appear to me.

1924. I have set a colon after this line since it seems that bis of 1. 1921 refers forward to 1. 1925 f.

1929. With D the mother merely suggests that the husband be tested, and does not in any case specify the test; the wife bethinks herself of each of the tests after the corresponding conference has been brought to an end.

1935, 1936. gardinere: fire. For other seemingly imperfect rhymes see note on ll. 229–230. Perhaps the rhyme is a reflection of the Kentish original, though C interchanges e and i pretty freely; see, for instance, the rhyme getin: weten (ll. 1177–1178). A (ll. 1765–1766), which has the same rhyme, spells fer; but Ar (ll. 865–866), E (ll. 1799–1800), B (ll. 1813–1814), which also have the same rhyme, spell as here.

1943. Wheper pe gardenere wald or noght. In L (A*), K, and H the gardener objects to cutting down the tree, and the wife does it herself. The reading here is possibly a faint reflection of that detail.

1977. pi. In R only the first letter of this word remains. After this letter there is an erasure of either one or two letters. Perhaps the scribe first wrote bis, then, observing his mistake, proceeded to erase, but erased two letters instead of one, and forgot to rectify the mistake.

1982. According to $L(A^*)$ the husband had just returned from the chase. She removes his cloak and puts a robe on him.

1988. on be ladies barm. With H, p. 38, the dog jumps up on the lady's bed; she kills him by throwing him against the walls of her chamber. With L (A*), p. 46, the wife subsequently regrets that she had killed the dog.

2009. A preste. L (A*), p. 47: "le provoire de ceste vile"; K, l. 2676: "le chapelain, Guillier"; D*, p. 27: "Messire Guillaume, le chappellain de la parroisse."

2012. no. Probably a scribal error for noght, which is the reading of R; though no with the value of not does sometimes occur in M. E., — as in William of Palerne, ll. 67, 85, 127, etc.; and Ipomadon (A), l. 24.

2019. anoper gyn. F (ll. 761-788) inserts another test before the final test: the killing of the husband's hawk.

2026. ett. This unusual form of ete appears also in ll. 2038, 2861, 3566, and 3580; in l. 2038 it rhymes with set.

2032. A grete feste. D*, p. 27: "la feste de la Toussains." With F the feast is in honor of the relatives of husband and wife.

2033. What helpes to mak lang tale. The stress on the inflectional syllable of helpes is clumsy, though it is not without parallels (see Il. 793, 2360, and 3125). The difficulty might be avoided either by emending lang to langer (see the corresponding line in B (l. 1917): "What nedyb to make lengar tale"), or by inserting it before to (see a list of parallel expressions by Kittredge in Studies and Notes, I, p. 24 f., in which a majority of the closest parallels to this line insert an object after the verb).

2037. Onnence. See N. E. D. under Anent. The meaning here appears to be by the side of.

2038. According to F he calls in at this juncture some minstrels for the entertainment of his guests.

2042. stirt oway. According to F her excuse for leaving the table is to get some wine; with H, to get a knife; with L (A*), to get her husband's knife and his chessboard.

2053. on pe morn. D: on the night of the feast. D is also independent in substituting for the barber a brother of the husband.

2062. be thrid time thrawes best. This I take to mean: "the third time throws best," "the third throw is the luckiest"; with which compare the sayings, "the third time's the charm," "the third time tells the tale," "the third time never fails." Another form of the proverb is, as Professor Kittredge suggests, "the third pays for all" (Twelfth Night, V, i, 40), "the third payes home" (Mirror for Magistrates, ed. Haslewood, I, p. 68).

2080. Elsewhere it is said explicitly that both arms were bled. C implies this in the word first, but nowhere says so explicitly.

2091-2094. These lines, though nothing corresponding to them is found in the O.F. versions, appear also in A, Ar, E, and B.

2105. mi dede . . . es neste. "My death is next," "The next time he will take my life."

2106-2108. This detail is omitted by D, L (A*), and D*, but it appears in A, Ar, E, B, and H.

2111, 2112. Omitted by D and the continental versions.

2116. thrinfalde. Cf. Brin (Brinne, thrynne) (O.N. Brinnr), which usually means threefold, but which means three in Havelok, ll. 716, 761, 1977, and 2091, and in Gawayne and the Green Knight, l. 1868.

2133. borowd, i.e., "redeemed," "set free"; see N. E. D. under Borrow, 4. Heading p. 73. Neghend. This ordinal appears only here and in heading p. 74, and in both places it is abbreviated. The spelling I have adopted is that of the Pricke of Conscience, 1. 3988.

2143. aght. See Einenkel, Mittelengl. Syntax, p. 116, and Kittredge, Studies and Notes, III, p. 321, for examples of the impersonal use of this verb in Chaucer. See also van der Gaaf, l.c., pp. 146-148, for sundry other examples, together with a suggestion as to the origin of the construction.

2144. thinges pat me es. See notes to ll. 2280 and 3527. Er is the regular pres. plu. form; see ll. 43, 363, 850, 1414, 1794, 1918, etc. Es (is) is also sometimes used with a plural subject in the Cursor Mundi, the Pricke of Conscience, Ywain and Gawain, and other Northern texts; see Rodeffer, Inflection of the Pres. Plu. Ind., pp. 40, 43, 46, 48, 52, 58, and Kellner, p. 48. For examples of was used with a plural subject, see note to l. 542.

2146. trowes. As pointed out in the note to 1. 151, the pres. plu. ind. is invariably uninflected when it comes in direct contact with a personal pronoun subject. Here, however, the verb is not in direct contact with its subject, and hence is inflected; see Rodeffer, l.c., p. 61 f. and passim. Another example is furnished by takes, 1. 3982.

2147. Cressent. A variant of Crassus, which is the reading of L (A*) and E; A and B have Cressus, and Ar Carfyus or Carfus. The name Cressent is given to the tower of Octavian in gaza, and, in some versions, to the tower in Roma; see the notes to ll. 1317 and 3121.

2159 f. For a digest of the chief variations of the different versions of Virgilius, and for a list of analogues, with a discussion of their source and interrelation, see the Introduction, pp. xciv f.

In F Virgilius is supplanted by a pointless story, which, after Halliwell (in his brief description of F, Thornton Romances, p. xliv), I call "The Squire and his Borrow." This story, like the story substituted for senescalcus (see note to l. 1689), is peculiar to F. It runs as follows:

Hyt was a squyer of thys contre, And full wel-belouyd was he; Yn dedys of armys and yn justyng He bare hym beste yn hys begynnyng. So hyt befelle he had a systur sone, That for syluyr he had nome; He was put yn preson strong, And schulde be dampned and be hong. The squyer faste thedur can gon, And askyd them swythe anon What byng he had borne a-way; And they answeryd and can say, He had stolen syluyr grete plente, Therfore hangyd schulde he bee. The squyer hym profurd, permafay, To be hys borowe tyll a certen day, For to amende that he mysdede. Anon they toke hym yn that stede, And bounde hym faste fote and honde, And caste hym yn-to preson stronge; They let hys cosyn go a-way, To quyte hym be a certen day. Grete pathes then vsed he, And men he slewe grete plente; Moche he stale and bare a-way, And stroyed the contre nyght and day: But vpon be squyer boght he nothyng, That he yn preson lafte lyeng. So that tyme came, as y yow say, But for the squyer came no paye: He was hanged on a galowe tree. For hym was dole and grete pyte, When the noble squyer was slon; For hym morned many oon. That odur robbyd and stale moche byng, And sethyn was hangyd at hys endyng. [ll. 1114-1149]

2160. Virgil. D substitutes Merlin for Virgil.
2163. He made a fire. See, for the history of this detail, p. xciv.

2163-2194. The whole of this first episode, which I have characterized in my discussion of the analogues of the story as Virgilius I, is omitted by D. H, p. 42 f., describes first the images of Virgilius II, then takes up the fire, etc., and later returns to the episode connected with the images of Virgilius II.

2164. on be pauement. According to A and Ar, in the market-place (cheping).

2168. See, for other lines of three stresses, the note to l. 84.

2177. on brede, "over a wide surface," "very legibly."

2181. Identical with 1. 631. See note to 1. 3.

2182. a Lumbard. According to L (A*) he was studying at Rome; K and D* have instead of the Lombard a Carthaginian bishop.

2198 f. L (A*), p. 51, omits these two images, but they appear in K, D*, and H. H, perhaps under the influence of the Gesta Romanorum, reports the first part of Virgilius II not as do other versions of The Seven Sages, but according to the version of Alexander Neckam; see H, p. 42: "Arte sua magica quandam turrem construxit et in summitate turris in circuitu tot ymagines, quot essent in mundo prouincie. In medio vnam ymaginem fecerat, que pomum aureum in manu sua tenebat. Quelibet imago campanellam in manu sua tenebat; quelibet imago propriam faciem ad prouinciam ei assignatam vertebat. Et quocienscumque aliqua prouincia volebat contra ciuitatem romanam se opponere ac rebellare, illa ymago illi prouincie assignata campanam pulsabat. Tunc omnes alie imagines eciam pulsabant. Romani hoc audientes se armabant et ad illam prouinciam domandam toto conamine pergebant et humiliabant, ita quod nulla prouincia non poterat tam priuate ac discrete se de Romanis vindicare, quin per ymagines turris Romani essent premuniti."

2204. With be ball be childer plaide. With K and D*, they toss the ball at a certain time every Saturday.

2209. A merure. The famous Salvatio Romae. Tradition has it that this mirror was to be seen at Florence as late as the seventeenth century; see G. Naudé, Apologie pour tous les grands Personnages, Paris, 1625, p. 627. According to another story it was, at about the same time, among the treasures of the Abbey of St. Denis in France; see J. F. Doublet, Histoire de l'Abbaye de S. Denys, Paris, 1625, p. 347.

2211. ere. An error in concord made probably for the sake of the rhyme; perhaps, however, by attraction, or by an adjustment to the notion of plurality inhering in ilk. See note to l. 123; also l. 2307, where ilka man appears as antecedent of baire. Or is ere, as Professor Bright queries, a scribal error for were?

2215. Pe king of Poyl. So also A, Ar, E, B, and L (A*); K and D* have instead the king of Hungary; H, merely three kings.

2227. Twa clerkes. L (A*), p. 51: ".iii. bachelers qui frère estoient," but later (p. 52): "li deus freres." A, Ar, E, B, D: two brothers; K and D*: four sages; H: four knights.

2231. pam, i.e., the two coffers.

2234. at be west zate, etc. D: in "lyttyl pyttys twaye"; L (A*): at each of the three gates of the city; K: in three ditches; D*: one in a deep ditch, and three others at as many crossings.

2236. pat thoght wele what sold forper fall. "Who knew well what else would happen." pat refers to the twa clerkes.

2253. rest. In other versions they report that they learn of the whereabouts of the treasure in a dream.

2262. pis vowche we safe. "This we present to you"; see Century Dictionary under vouchsafe I, 2.

2263. Pan. It is barely possible that the MS. reading, βai , is correct, but the context gives the very strongest support to βan , which is the reading of R.

2280. Es. I take this to be a singular, the compound subject being conceived of as a unity. But es is used with a plural subject at least once; see note to l. 2144. And was is several times used with a plural subject; see note to l. 542.

2281, 2282. In al Poyl, etc. H, p. 44: "tantum . . . quod omnes equi romani non portarent"; similarly L (A*), p. 52: "si grant que à poine le porroient trère tuit li cheval de vostre cort"; D*, p. 43: "tresor tel que oncques Ottovien ne Nabugodonosor n'avoient eu la pareil."

2294. Els, "provided that." See N. E. D. under Else, 5, where attention is called to the similar use of anders in German.

2307. paire. For other instances of faulty reference, see note to 1. 753. See also note to 1. 2211.

2311. if, apparently with the meaning of although.

2313. With D*, many people were killed; and with K, thirty houses were destroyed.
2321, 2322. brend: assent. Apparently an inexact rhyme (see note to ll. 229-230 for others); but perhaps not really inexact: see the spelling brent, l. 2133, and cf.
Morris, Pricke of Conscience, p. xxix: "In Hampole Judith rhymes with writt, but Morris, Pricke of Conscience, p. xxix: "In Hampole Judith rhymes with writt, but what is still more curious is that David rhymes with Judith. It would thus appear that d at the end of words was pronounced as t." See also the note to ll. 2541-2542.

2329 f. L (A*), p. 54: "Si prannent or fondu, et li coulent par mi la bouche, et par mi les eulz, et par mi les orilles, par mi le nez; si li distrent: Or vosis, or convoitas, or auras, et d'or morras." According to D, l. 2064 f., they pour powdered gold into his eye-sockets and into ears, nose, etc.

2343. glose. Perhaps to be explained as a contract form, perhaps as due to Midland influence, perhaps as an uninflected form with relative subject (see Rodeffer, l.c., pp. 39, 41, 43, 56), but probably as an uninflected form abbreviated in the interest of the rhyme.

2345. The MS. reads: "And bou wil mak him bat bine are," which makes nonsense. I have stricken out bat (though it appears also in R), and have changed are to ayre (the reading of R). See A, ll. 2157-2158:

> And desire to make thin air, He that sschall the schende vair;

Ar, ll. 1257-1258:

And desiren to make byne eyere
Of him bat schall be bryng to wykyd spare;

and E, 11. 2183-2184:

And bu desyrest thyne agre to make That shalle done the moche wrake.

2346. payre, impair, injure. See N. E. D. under Pair and Appair. The word in this aphetic form appears three times in Piers the Plowman, and a score of times in its full form; see Skeat's glossary to his edition.

2360. The accent upon the second syllable of thanked is violent. See note to l. 2033.

2364. After this line R inserts, without the support of any other MS., the following couplet:

His turmentoure sone gert he call, And fech his son into be hall.

2368. Identical with 1. 3178, except that the noun in that line is plural. See note to 1. 10.

2395, 2396. Similarly Il. 1857-1858: "made my son to nyce, For to force."

2398. To saue sowre grace. See note to 1. 744.

2411 f. For the features peculiar to avis in the Book of Sindibād and in the different versions of The Seven Sages of Rome, with a discussion of the analogues of the story, see the Introduction, pp. xcvii f.

2412. a burias. In As, at first called Annabill, later Balan.

2415, 2416. "But she was as women are the world over" (i.e., tricky, faithless). For the history and uses of the phrase, vnder hyr gare, see N. E. D. under Gore, and Skeat's notes on the Cant. Tales, A, ll. 3236–3237, and B, l. 1979. Here the phrase is practically an expletive.

2417. a py. D: "a popinjay."

2419. in Frankis langwage. L (A*), p. 55: "la langue romainne"; As: "in Romane leid"; Ar, B: "in Romayns langage."

2424. anoþer. According to F, a priest; with As and D*, a knight; according to K and D* later, "Gerard, le filz Thierry" (see note to 1. 4145).

2440. Here As inserts two episodes, as follows:

He enterit ban till his paramour; And scantly had bene bar ane hour, Quhen be lord callit at be get. Wpe fraitlye can be lady get And left be knycht gretlie abasit. Bot hir moder him wp has rasit And gaf him in hand ane nakit swerd And bad him he suld speik na word Bot evynn befor be dur stand still, Ouhill be lord enterit at his will. The lord enters and saw him stand Sa with ane nakit swerd in hand. He stottit sumthing and syne couth speir: "Quhat art bow bus bat standes heir?" Bot he spak na word mar nor myn. Than said hir moder: "Sonn, mak na dynn. Thre knychtes to sla has chasit bis man And for girth come he hidder ban.

And we haf savit him as we may, Quhill we trow baj be gane away. 3ongates he stude, for he nocht wist, Bot ze had bene baj bat him mist; He dar not zit steir for be feid. And bus he savit is git fra deid." The lord said ban: "In all, i se, 3e haf done bar gret cherite. And barfor hartfully thank i sow. And i sall fande to kepe him now; For with me sall he sit one-ane, Quhill he be seker his fais are gane." And gart him sit with him rycht bar And maid gud cheir and mery fair. The pyot, bat be mann knewe, Scho sesit hir sang and maid na glewe. The knycht zeid hame ban at be last. For the source of these two episodes see the Introduction, p. xcviii, note 2.

2448. vnto chamber. According to D and D* she entertains him in the hall, in full view of the bird.

2449 f. This stratagem is variously reported. The version of L (A*), pp. 56-57, is as follows: "Quant il fu anuitié, ele prant sa chamberière, si li baille .i. grant plomme plein d'eve et .i. cierge tout ardant, et .i. maillet de fust. Quant vint vers la mienuit, ele la fet monter sur la meson, ileuc endroit où la pie estoit; si commance à férir du maillet sur les essanles; et quant ele avoit assez féru, si reprenoit le cierge, le boutoit par entre les essanles, que le clarté en venoit à la pie, enmi les eulz. Après si prenoit le plomme et versoit l'eve sus la pie. Et tele vie mena de si au jor; et quant il fu ajornez, si descent, le maillet en sa main, et le cierge en l'autre. Li amis à la dame s'en ala."—The maid also figures in A, Ar, E, B, As, H, and the Mischle Sindbad. D* and K substitute for the maid a trusted manservant; D has instead a boy.—According to As, K, D*, and H one of the devices for befooling the bird is the dropping of small sandstones over the cage; with D, another device is the breaking of great blown bladders.

2473-2476. Peculiar to this redaction.

2491. Before this line there appears in the MS. the rubricated character which is used to indicate paragraph division, but paragraph division here is illogical. See note to l. 17.

2511. his menge. With other versions, both English and French, his neighbors. 2522 f. D abridges the second half of avis, omitting the merchant's discovery of the wife's deception and his regret for killing the bird.

2533. He toke a staf was gude. For other instances of the omitted relative see note to 1. 988.

2535. flemed hir. So L (A*), p. 58: "chace sa fame hors de sa mason." With B, he sends her to her paramour; with K and D*, he puts her to death; with F, the wife and her paramour, a priest, bring the husband to death; with As and H, the husband breaks his spear in three and goes on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land.

2537-2544. Peculiar to this redaction.

2541, 2542. R has here the rhyme berd:-erth, which is, however, a perfect rhyme perhaps; see note to ll. 2321-2322.

2562. negh. The MS. has neght, a form which I cannot find paralleled and which I take to be a scribal error.

2577. Identical with 1. 3061. See note to 1. 3.

2579 f. For the characteristic features of the different versions of sapientes, and for various analogues of the story, see the Introduction, pp. c f.

2588. A custume. K and D* reserve the account of this custom until just after the king's instructions to the clerks to find a cure for his blindness.

2595-2600. Peculiar to this redaction.

2602. With F, the clerks build a treasure-house just above the city's gate.

2605 f. With K and D*, the king's horse balks at the city gate whenever the king attempts to go outside the city; with H, the king becomes blind whenever he goes outside his palace, but he regains his sight on his return to the palace; with L, in like manner apparently, Herod is blind only so long as he remains outside the city. With the Welsh version, the king's blindness is occasioned, so he dreams, by sparks from a caldron; see p. 657 of the translation: "Each night the king saw in his sleep a cauldron with seven feet and vapor rising therefrom, just as though there had been a mighty fire beneath; and sparks, it seemed to him, came from them about his eyes and blinded him, as he thought."

2607. a. R reads any, and is supported by Ar, 1. 1481; but C has the support of B, l. 2451. In either case the rhythm is bad.

2609. asked pam. With F, ll. 1326 f., he threatens to hang them unless they will account for his malady.

2611. four skore. The original reading of the MS. has been imperfectly erased, and the space has been filled in with what I take to be four skore; four is quite legible, as also the re of skore. This reading, however, is unique. Ar (l. 1485), E (l. 2413), and B (l. 2455) read, with R, seuen; A (l. 2363) has fourten; F (l. 1336) has xii.; L (A*) (p. 59) has viii.; and D* (p. 21) has xv. According to l. 2633 the clerks go in search of Merlin for fourteen days, which would seem to lend some support to the reading of A, but, obviously enough, it does not necessitate that reading.

2619. sone efter. According to B, two days after.

2630 f. D omits the search for Merlin. D* retains the episode, but alters it considerably; see pp. 21, 22 of that version.

2631-2634. Apparently peculiar to this redaction.

2635 f. In the introduction to his edition of Arthour and Merlin (Allengl. Bibk. IV), p. civ, Kölbing pointed out a resemblance between the lines corresponding to these in A (Il. 2389 f.) and a passage in Arthour and Merlin. This passage (Il. 1195 f.) is as follows:

On a day, as ich sou telle, po ich bre sechers snelle, pat were ysent fram be king, To hauen of bis child findeing, Comen al bre bi cas In-to be toun ber Merlin was,
Merlin in be strete bo pleyd,
And on of his felawes him trayd, pat him seyd loude to:
"Foule schrewe, fram ous go:
pou art al bi\u03b3eten amis, pou nost who bi fader is,
Ac some deuel, as ich wene, pe bi\u03b3at, ous euer to tene!"

On the strength of the resemblances between this passage and parts of A, and because of certain agreements in phraseology and rhyme Kölbing (l.c., pp. lx f., lxxxii), inclined to the belief that A and the Auchinleck version of Arthour and Merlin were by the same author; but, as I have shown (A Study of The Seven Sages, pp. 85 f.), any inferences to be drawn from these agreements must hold all but equally well for Ar and for E as for A.

2638. called him lurdan. Omitted by K and D*.

2645. Merlyn. K substitutes Jesse for Merlin.

2650. According to F, Merlin adds that his first counsel to the king will be to put the clerks to death.

2657. With A, Ar, and E, Merlin declines the besant.

2663. in pi myding. A, E, B: "in pi donghel"; L (A*): "en mi ton foier"; K, D*: "in the ruins of your house" (recently burned). In the Welsh version the interpretation of the king's dream is as follows (see Jones's translation, p. 657): "The cauldron that thou seest in thy sleep, betokens this city; the seven feet [see note to ll. 2605 f.] that thou seest are the seven men that govern it, brimming over with too much riches and working treason against thee unless they are at once slain."

2681. So L (A*), p. 60: "li sages em pristrent à lor volanté." Other M. E. MSS, omit this detail.

2685. Als. C reads And, which I take to be a scribal error. This view has the support of R and the context. The fact that and is spelled out here whereas elsewhere in C (except in ll. 1059, 3289, and 4255) it is abbreviated, and the nearness of another and, also support this view.

 $2685~\mathrm{f.}$ With K and D*, he now tells them of the presence of the caldron under the emperor's bed.

2694. couret. See note on 1. 394 for two other instances of medial curled r.

2700. yowre. Elsewhere in C invariably spelled with a z.

2762. According to F, after slaying the masters he dealt out to the poor the treasure they had amassed. According to the Welsh version he did not follow Merlin's counsel, and consequently was finally put to death by the masters.

2768. H, p. 34, adds: "Merlinum ad divicias et honores promouit."

2798. Parof pe burd think mekil shame. That is, "Of that it behooved thee to be much ashamed," "You should be much ashamed of that"; cf. Ar, l. 1673: "pou aughtyst, sir, peireof to schame." Burd is a form of the M. E. preterite of A. S. gebyrian. For its history, see van der Gaaf, l.c., pp. 4 and 40 f. For other M. E. examples, see van der Gaaf, pp. 40-41, and Mätzner, Allengl.

Sprachpr., II, 1, p. 371, under buren, biren, beren. To the citations there given should be added An Alphabet of Tales, E. E. T. S., CXXVI, pp. 82, 98, 135, 155, 156, 165 (burd), and p. 119 (burde).

2811 f. For a summary of the chief variations of vidua in the different versions of The Seven Sages, and for a listing and discussion of the numerous variants and analogues of the story, see the Introduction, pp. ci f.

In H vidua is told by the seventh sage rather than by the sixth. The sixth sage then tells the story amatores, which appears in no other version of The Seven Sages of Rome, but originally belonged to the Book of Sindibād.

2812. a knight. A, Ar, B, D: a sheriff; A*, p. 80: ".i. vicomte en Loherainne"; D*, K: "ung conte de Lorraine"; the Welsh version: "a sheriff of Lesodonia."

2813. a ful faire whif. According to F and D* (under the influence, perhaps, of tentamina), a young wife. F also has it that the knight had never permitted her to go a half mile from him.

2819. als pai plaied. So H, p. 64: "cum taxillis ludebant." But A*, p. 80: "dont il voloit doler .i. boudon"; K, D*: while he was cutting a stick; F: while paring a pear; the Welsh version: while he was cutting a spearshaft.

2820. in hir fynger. A*, p. 80: "el pouce"; and so also E, B, K, D*. F, H: in the hand; A, Ar: "in the wombe."

2822. With D* and H, he swoons; with H, she dashes water in his face, whereupon he revives somewhat, and has her send for priest and sacraments. He asks after a priest also in F. In the Welsh version he stabs himself in the breast.

2826-2829. An instance of C's tendency at times to amplify in the interest of picturesqueness. Other MSS, that have this detail are quite general, or merely assert vaguely that a mass was celebrated before the burial. See note to 1, 3148.

2827. series, wax candles, or tapers. From O. F. cerge (cirge, cierge), Lat. cereus. See N. E. D. under Cierge.

2830. broght vnder molde. With A*, D*, and D, he was buried outside the city (A*, p. 80: "Li cors fu portez au moustier, dehors la vile, où il avoit .i. cimetière nouvel"). According to the Welsh version he was buried inside a church, and hence there is no mention of the lodge.

2843, 2844. This couplet R arbitrarily omits. See note to 11. 1279-1280.

2850. hir frendes was ful wa. Was is used with a plural subject in several instances (see note to 1. 542); but here I think it most likely that the construction is impersonal, the grammatical subject being omitted (see note to 1. 68) and frendes being in the dative case. Cf. "so was her wa," 1. 1397; Sir Tristrem, 1. 2769: "him was ful wa"; Amis and Amil., 1. 352: "be is ful wo"; King Horn (C), 11. 115, 116: "Ofte hadde horn beo wo, Ac neure wurs ban him was bo"; Chaucer's Book of the Duchesse, 11. 565 and 572: "me is wo"; and the common exclamation, "Woe is me!" The same construction is perhaps used again in 1. 3745. See Einenkel, p. 112 f.; Zupitza, note to Guy of Warwick (B), 1. 1251; and Hall, note to King Horn, 11. 115, 116.

2862. cried. The MS. has shied, which is, I take it, a scribal error due to dittography. Professor Bright suggests, however, that shied may be a scribal error for shried, aphetic form of ascry.

2865. outlaws thre. F and H, in accord with many of the variants of vidua, mention only one robber. So also with the Welsh version at first, but later it appears that there were several robbers. All other versions of The Seven Sages are in accord with C.

2871. Anoper knyght. With K, named "Gerart le fil guion"; with D*, "Hervieu le filz Guyon."

2903. Preceded by a rubricated character, but obviously not the beginning of a new paragraph. See note to l. 17.

2905. me es ful kalde. An interesting impersonal construction. Van der Gaaf in his dissertation, The Transition from the Impersonal to the Personal Construction in M. E., takes no account of it, and I have met with no parallels.

2908. In þis close. R has instead, "Here in, sir," repeating l. 2902. The divergence of R from C is unusually wide.

2962. wat. See, for similar forms, note to 1. 28.

2972. The line is too short. See also 1. 3021 and the note thereon. For other such lines, see note to 1. 84. A, 1. 2664, avoids the difficulty by reading spousi in place of wed. Ar, 1. 1790, reads: "With pat bou wylt my leman be"; and E, 1. 2675, similarly: "If pu wylt my lemman be."

2988. In hir faith sho was ful fals. So A*, p. 84: "moult fu tost ses cuers muez et changiez." Other M. E. MSS. are silent here.

2992. had a wonde. H, p. 67, adds that his ears had also been cut off.

2997. draw owt bi swerde. With D, she draws a knife.

2998. thar, needs. The pret., thurt, occurs in l. 1522. See Cant. Tales, A, l. 4320, D, ll. 329, 336, 1365, H, l. 352; see also N. E. D. under Dare, A, 9, and van der Gaaf, l.c., p. 154.

fered. The MS. reads lered. But fered has the support of both R and the context.

3002. According to H his excuse is as follows (p. 67): "Dum erat vivus, socius meus erat et ideo dedecus militi vivo esset quod talem despectum mortuo perpetraret."

3011. His forteth. So all other M. E. MSS. except F and D, which are in accord with A*, p. 84: ".ii. des denz"; with A* also are K and H.

3018. smate his fortheth out. F, H, and the Welsh version each add a third mutilation here. The addition of F is as follows (ll. 1015-1020):

"Dame," he seyde, "y vndurstonde He fayled twaye fyngers of hys honde." "Syr," sche seyde, "so mot y the, He schall anon fayle thre." Sche toke hys swyrde be hys syde, And smate of thre fyngers yn þat tyde.

H makes the following addition (pp. 67, 68): "Latro, qui erat captus, duobus testiculis carebat. Si vero iste cum testiculis inuentus fuerit in patibulo, dicetur quod ille non sit et sequetur confusio.' At illa: 'Tam timidum hominem nunquam vidi; tamen bonum est te esse securum. Succide testiculos eius cito, ut suspendatur!' At ille: 'O bona domina, parcas michi!...' At illa: 'Et ego faciam pro tuo amore!' Statim testiculos eius abscidit."

According to the Welsh version (in agreement with certain derivatives of vidua, as the versions of Marie de France and Walter of England), the knight reminds the widow that the robber was bald, and she has accordingly to pluck the hair from his head; see Jones's translation, p. 656: "Yes, said the knight then, the robber was bald. I will make him bald, said she; and she took her husband's head between her knees with her two feet on his two shoulders. No woman shearing or man shaving ever was as quick as she in plucking her husband's head. And quickly from his forehead to the crown of his head she left not a hair without plucking it away more than the parchment-maker leaves on parchment."

3021. The line is too short; see 1. 2972: "If but bou wil wed me," and the note to 1. 84, where sundry other such lines are pointed out. Professor Kittredge, however, suggests that this line should be scanned as follows:

Sír, now sál þou wéd (x) mé.

3022. See note to l. 1153.

3028. H, p. 68, adds that the knight then drew his sword and struck off the widow's head.

3038. righ[t]wis. The reading of R; C has righwis. The scribe of C also omitted the t after igh in wightly, l. 3374.

3039-3042. This speech of the Emperor is omitted by other M.E. MSS. It appeared in the O.F., however; see A*, p. 85: "Dex, dit li emperières, se je pooie savoir qui auroit tort, ou lui ou ma feme, certes je en feroie si cruel jugement comme mi baron sauroient esgarder."

Headings p. 104. Threttende. The word appears only in these two headings, and in both instances it is abbreviated. The spelling adopted is that of the Pricke of Conscience, l. 7173.

3057, 3058. herd ge neuer be geste, etc. Also in the O. F. (A*, p. 85, and K, l. 2347). Evidently a bait thrown out to the Emperor, for the romancer scarcely means to imply that we have in Roma the origin of the Feast of Fools.

3058. pe foles feste. The Feast of Fools was the famous mediæval celebration at New Year; it was held by the inferior clergy in cathedrals and collegiate churches. See, for an extensive bibliography of the subject and for a very substantial discussion of its history and meaning, E. K. Chambers, The Mediæval Stage, Oxford, 1903, I, pp. 274-335.

3061. Identical with l. 2577. See note to l. 3.

3063 f. For a summary of the chief variations in the different versions of Roma, and for a discussion of its analogues, with a suggestion as to its origin, see the Introduction, pp. cviii f.

In H, as has been observed in the note to 1. 1689 f., Roma is appended to senes-calcus. The version of Roma as it appears in the Welsh redaction is unique in that it presents a fusion of the story with the fable of the wolves and the sheep (Rom., III, 13; Caxton's Aesop, ed. Jacobs, II, p. 87). In Jones's translation (p. 653) the story runs thus:

"There was a wealthy and strong city in the East, and seven proper and wise men were keeping and governing the city. And it was not in the garrison, nor in the citizens, that the strength of the city lay, but in the learning and cleverness of the men. And meanwhile there came a cruel and mighty king, to try to subdue the city. And after sitting before the town, and planting engines against it, the king did not prosper, because of the cleverness of the men within, guarding their city. And when the subtle king saw that the town was not taken by fighting, he at once promised to retire from it, saying he would not fight the multitude in the city, on condition they would send him the seven men aforesaid. And the senseless people, without seeing the treachery and the smart that was hidden underneath the leaves, believed the lie and deceit of the king's promises, and took the men, and put them in bonds, thinking to send them out to him.

"And then rose up one of the wise men and spake thus, Good sirs, said he, it will befall you through believing yonder cruel king, after giving us into his power, as the wolf formerly cheated the shepherd. How was that? said they. A cruel and wicked wolf was seeking occasion and opportunity against the shepherds and animals, to slay them, but fleet mastiffs, which the shepherd had, allowed him no rest, either in forest or field. And when the wolf saw this, he promised peace and quiet everlastingly to the shepherd and his beasts, if he caught the dogs and bound them, and gave them over to him. And the foolish shepherd believed the wolf's lying words, and sent the dogs to the wolf, and he quickly killed, first, the dogs, then the beasts, and at last the shepherd. Right so will ye all be put to death by yonder cruel king, if ye believe him, after he has slain us. As God lives, we will not believe him, or ever give you up into his power. And then by their counsel they overcame him and slew him."

3065. seuyn hathen kinges. With D, only three kings; with H, merely one, the steward who had figured in senescalcus.

3077, 3078. Found elsewhere only in F; see note to l. 1189.

3087. A moneth. So also A, Ar, E, B, F. A*, p. 86, has ".vii. mois"; D, seven days; D*, three months; and K, six months.

3097. Genus, the Janus of Roman myth. D does not mention the clerk's name till later (in l. 2730), when it calls him Gyneuer.

3099. And efter him es named Ienuere. So A*, p. 86: "et pour celui Genus dit l'en jenvier"; similarly F, l. 1694: "And aftur hym men calle a mony of pe yere." Other M. E. MSS. are silent here, or reserve this detail until the very end of the story. According to Ar, which calls the sage Julius, the month named after him is July.

3104. With swerel tailes, etc. Some of the other MSS. are a trifle more faithful to the O. F. here; see Ar, E, B, F: "squirrel tales a thousand and more" = A*, p. 86: "queues d'escureus plus d'un millier."

3106. The text of A ends with the line corresponding to this (in Weber's edition, l. 2780).

3110. See note to 1. 78.

3111, 3112. tonges... bright glowand, etc. A*, p. 86: "dont les langues furent ausi vermeilles comme charbons qui art." — See note to 1.78.

3114. With Ar, E, and B, he also sent word to the enemy that he was ready for battle.

3121. a towre. A*, p. 86: "la tour du Cressant"; so also K, Ar, E, F. See note to l. 1317.

3132. ane angel bright. A*, p. 87: "Li diex des Crestiens"; so also K, D*, F, and D.

3144. gode wane = large number or quantity; Weber renders: "in good manner, gallantly." Wane occurs also in ll. 265 and 3542.

3148. mekil gold and gude armowre. According to A*, p. 87, merely "grant avoir"; other MSS. either omit or are equally unspecific. See note to ll. 2826–2829.

3151-3156. This feature seems to be peculiar to Y; it appears here and in Ar, B, and F, but is omitted by D, A*, K, D*, and H.

3159. And pou mun be ful fayn, may fall. So F, l. 1744: "And pou schalt, so hyt may be-falle." For other instances of the impersonal construction without a grammatical subject, see note to 1.68.

3164-3170. An addition of this redaction.

3188. Maxencius. A*, p. 88, adds that he was thirty-seven years old, yet knew all the seven arts.

3194. The same as 1. 40. See note to 1. 3.

3213, 3214. This couplet appears elsewhere only in F. See note to 1. 1189.

3235 f. For a summary of the Dolopathos version of inclusa, with the chief variations among the several versions of The Seven Sages of Rome, together with a listing of the derivatives and analogues of the story, see the Introduction, pp. cix f.

Inclusa is omitted by L and S, and in H is put into the mouth of the Queen (see Paris, Deux Rédactions, pp. xxxii f.).

3236. Hungery. So also Ar, E, B, F, D; but A*, p. 89, has Monbergier.

3239 f. For other examples of dream-begotten love, see Dunlop, History of Fiction, ed. Wilson, I, pp. 258 f.

3254. him dremyd. See Chaucer's Sir Thopas, B, l. 1977: "Me dremed al bis nyght, pardee," and Rom. of Rose, l. 51: "That it was May thus dremed me."

3259. monethes thre. So also Ar, E, and F. According to B, one month; according to D, A*, K, and D*, three weeks.

3264. Hungeri. Inconsistent with ll. 3236 f., according to which the knight had, three months before, left Hungary. A* also has Hungary here, but has the knight set out from Monbergier. Ar, which, like C, makes Hungary the home of the knight, avoids any inconsistency by reading Pletys here (see note to l. 4136); in like manner, E, F, and D substitute Apulia for Hungary here.

3272. Except for the verb, identical with l. 10; R has bare instead of had, and hence is quite identical with l. 10.

3275. might noght out. For other instances of the omission of the infinitive, see note to 1.699.

3276. A*, p. 90, adds here: "En la tour avoit huis de fer bien barrez. Li sires emportoit les clés tot jourz." This information C brings in later, in ll. 3347-3348.

3282. white so flowre. This comparison appears also in Ar, E, and F, but is not in A*. It is naturally very common; see Kaluza's note to Lib. Desc., l. 1489, and Hall's note to King Horn, ll. 15-16. For other comparisons in C, see note to 1.78.

3294. At pe ches. Peculiar to this redaction. See notes to 11. 2826-2829 and 3148.

3301 f. D reserves the knight's explanation of the cause of his flight until later (see D, Il. 2961 f.), when the knight explains, at the instance of the wife, the occasion for his returning home.

3314. mystere. The same word is used in the O. F.; see A*, p. 90: "car je ai grant mestier de soudoiers."

3335. A letter. So E and F; but A*, p. 91: ".i. gros jon crues dedanz,"—with which Ar, B, and D are in accord. According to D, she made of some rushes a karole or wreath, which reached all the way from the window to the ground.

3339, 3340. Elsewhere only in F; see note to 1.1189.

3347, 3348. See note to 1. 3276.

3349. on a day. According to A*, p. 91, eight days after the incident of the letter.

3354. A litel place in for to lig. With D*, p. 45, "ung pou de terre . . . pour faire une estable a ses chevaulx."

3377, 3378. Mai I traist on pe, For to tel my preuete, i.e., "May I trust you so much as to justify me in telling to you my secret plans?" F, ll. 1920–1921, reads with absolute clearness: "'Maystyr,' he seyde, 'may I truste to be To telle be my preuyte.'"

3379. aghteld, purposed. See N. E. D. under Ettle.

3381. Pat he sold whatsom he wolde. Other instances of the omission of the infinitive after an auxiliary are cited in the note to 1.699. Here, as in 1.699, R expresses the infinitive. Weber, in ignorance of R, inserted do after sold.

3398. paire. An awkward reference. For instances of imperfect concord between reference word and antecedent, see note to baire, 1, 753.

3399, 3400. C does not hold to the O. F. here; according to A*, p. 92, it was the knight who now rejoiced: "Quant li cheualiers on ce, si fu moult liez." Ar, B, and F are in accord with A*.

3426. D* omits the incident of the ring.

3433. See note to 1.988 for other instances of the omission of the relative pronoun subject.

3440. saw his whiues ring. According to H the earl first saw the ring on the knight's hand one day while the two were together on a hunt; see p. 60: "Cum vero per totum diem luderent, ad quandam aquam venerunt et ibi sedebant. Miles vero iuxta regem incepit dormire habens manum extensam, in qua erat anulus in digito, quem regina ei dedit. Rex, cum anulum vidisset, statim noticiam eius habebat et ait in corde suo: 'Iste est anulus meus, quem in signum amoris regine concessi.'"

3443-3446. An amplification peculiar to this redaction.

- 3488. For I sal zeme it wonder wele = A*, p. 93: "je le garderai moult bien." The only other MS. to preserve this detail is F. See, for other evidence of the nearness of F to C, note to 1. 1189.
- 3489, 3490. Dame, he sayd, . . . A sight parof pat I might se. A similar example of ellipsis in expression of a wish is furnished by ll. 4299-4300.
- 3492. Sir, gladly at Zowre will. A*, p. 93: "Sire, dist ele, puisq'il vous plest, si le verroiz." The only other MS. to preserve this passage is B (l. 3180).
 - 3497. The line is too short; see note to 1. 84.
- 3527. es. Probably singular, though tipandes is used in the preceding line as a plural. For es with plural subject, see note to l. 2144.
 - 3538. smeretly. See note on 1. 394 for two other instances of medial curled r.
 - 3558. Gold. Perhaps to be read as a dissyllable. See l. 3589 and note to l. 222.
- 3567, 3568. was... Mete and drink. Mete and drink are perhaps thought of as a unit (see note to 1. 542).
- 3576. A line of three stresses apparently. See, for other such lines, the note to l. 84.
 - 3589. gold. See notes to ll. 222 and 3558.
- 3612. Pai toke vp mete, and clathes drogh. A*, p. 95: "les tables furent ostée." Other M. E. MSS. are silent here.
 - 3626. was gane obowt. That is, "was in the act of starting to go."
- 3630. Keped him. See note to 1.988 for other instances of the omission of the relative pronoun.
- 3669 f. D abridges the conclusion to the story, omitting the marriage of the lady and the knight.
 - 3679 f. The style here, as often, is exceedingly broken and choppy.
- 3687. The line can be read as tetrameter only by a liberal disregard of word and sentence accent. The emending of swith to swithe would give to the line a perfect rhythm.
- 3692. Whare his godes in was. Apparently an example of was with a plural subject (see note to 1.542); but it is more likely, I think, that godes is used here as a singular, though the N.E.D. cites no example earlier than the sixteenth century.
 - 3718. wex sary. With D, he destroyed himself by leaping out of his tower.
- 3747, 3748. "For she well knew that nothing was to be gained by mooting (arguing, disputing about) that matter any further."
- 3749, 3750. For other examples of the pleonastic pronoun subject, see note to 11. 129 f.
- 3754. Him for to preche wald sho noght prese. This I take to mean, "She did not hasten to complain to him"; an interpretation which derives some support from 1. 3748.
- 3765-3768. So A*, p. 97: "Quant la messe fu chantée, il s'asamblèrent, si s'arestèrent en une bele place devant le moustier." None of the rest of the M. E. MSS. are faithful to the original here.
 - 3776. An independent addition of this redaction.
 - 3779. A*, p. 97: "La noise et li criz fu granz que l'en n'i oïst pas Dieu tonant."

3798. al vnder. This may mean: "put to death" (see A*, p. 98: "et mi mestre tuit .vii. destruit"); but probably means merely: "brought low," "disgraced" (see l. 3800, and Ipomadon (A), ll. 1428, 3681, and Minot, II, l. 18).

3799. for, "in order that."

3800. flemed. Weber erroneously renders: "flamed, burnt."

3805. here bi west. Peculiar to this redaction. See note to 1. 963.

3819 f. For the characteristic features of the different versions of vaticinium, and for a discussion of the variants and analogues of the story, see the Introduction, pp. cxii f.

3821. Other instances of the omitted relative pronoun subject are pointed out in the note to 1. 988.

3822. fiften winters. So also E and B. But A* reads twelve years; F, seven years; and Ar, four years. The collocation is stereotyped; see the numerous instances cited by R. Fischer, How The Wyse Man Taught Hys Sone, Erlangen, 1889, pp. 51 f., and Hall's note to King Horn, L and O, ll. 17, 18.

3823 f. In H the scene of this episode is laid at the house of the father.

3832. In an yle. So also D; and similarly A*, p. 98: "por aler à .i. reclus qui estoit seur .i. rochier. Other M. E. MSS. are silent.

3834. Twa rauenes. D: three ravens; H: a nightingale."

382. Foure daies. So E, B, F, and K; according to A*, p. 99, and D*, p. 48, three days.

3886-3892. An independent addition. The redactor of cr elaborated more freely in vaticinium than in any other story. Other passages in this story which find nothing corresponding to them in other texts are Il. 3896-3906, 3909-3922, 3976-3982, 3997-4000, 4197-4202, and 4289-4296.

3923. be castele. According to E, B, and A* (p. 99), thirty miles distant from the island.

3925. sald be childe. According to E, for twenty pounds; according to A*, p. 99, for twenty marks.

3960, 3961. wald wend . . . If. The context indicates that this should be interpreted: "would go to learn if."

3962. The line is noteworthy for its cumbrous succession of heavy monosyllables.

3978. puruay. Here used apparently with the meaning either of collect or of come together, though neither the Century Dict., Stratmann, nor Skeat gives either meaning.

3982. takes. See note to l. 2146.

4009-4012. C is free here; A*, p. 100, has instead: "se li oisel ne s'en aloient, vous n'en seriez jà creuz."

4050. so bifell. Cf. l. 975: "Bifel bus"; and see note to l. 68.

4063, 4064. Omitted by all other M. E. MSS. except F; see note to l. 1189.

4105. his. R has bis, a better reading.

4133-4136. Peculiar to this redaction.

4136. His fader and moder was. Other examples of was with a plural or a compound subject are pointed out in the note to l. 542.

pe town. According to L, K, and D this town was Plecie (Plesseiz, Plessis). According to A*, p. 101, the town was somewhere within the young king's realm, but was not the town in which he lived. According to H the land which it falls to the young king to rule over is Egypt.

4145. Gerard Nories son. So B, l. 3572, and F, l. 2461; but E, l. 3458, has "Barnarde Norysshe sone." A* has instead "Gerard fils de Thierry."

4195, 4196. Here again this text is nearer to the O. F. than are the other M. E. MSS., all of which omit this detail; see A*, p. 102: "son père li corut à l'estrier, car ne sot pas que ce fust son filz."

4200. Pai set trestes and bordes on layd. See Rich. Coer de Lion, 1. 102 (ed. Weber, II, p. 7): "They sette tresteles and layde a borde." Trestes are trestles or large stools; see Century Dict. under trest, 2. Concerning the meal table in the Middle Ages, see Schultz, Höf. Leben, I, pp. 80, 432.

4209. and held it vp. According to A*, p. 102, the son would not allow his father to do this service: "mes li rois ne le vost pas soufrier."

4228. him changed hew. Other M.E. MSS. are silent; A*, p. 102: "fu moult esbahiz."

4257. I had leuer haue died. A*, p. 102, with greater concreteness: "mès je ne le féisse, ainçois me lessasse desmembrer."

4267, 4271 f. Similarly A*, pp. 102-103: "por ce que je doutoie et avoie paour qu'il ne vous destruisist, et qu'il ne vous tolist l'empire." B is the only other M. E. MS.-to reflect the O. F. so faithfully. According to E the Empress was afraid the Prince would put her to death; according to F, that he would destroy both her and the Emperor.

4283. gaudes. Weber erroneously reads gandes, and renders: "wiles, mischievous designs."

4291. wath, harm, danger. See Cursor Mundi, l. 871; Pricke of Conscience, l. 4558; and Gawayne and Green Knight, l. 2355.

4299, 4300. See note to 11. 3489-3490.

4303. or none, "before noon." The regular Northern form for Mod. English none is nane.

4325 f. E, which is elsewhere very conservative, ventures here an addition of some thirty lines (3561-3588), as follows:

And whenne that hys fadyr dede was,
He lete make a nobylle plas,
And a fayre abbeye he lete begynne,
And seuyn schore monkys brought there-yn,
And euyr more to rede and synge
For hys fadyr, with-owte lesynge.
And tho was the chylde made Emperoure,
And kept hys londe with grete honoure;
Of al knyghtys he bare the prys,
And a-monge alle men moste wys.
And moste he louyde stedefastenys,
In worde and dede, more and les;
And therefore God gaffe hym goode lyf,
And brought hym fayre owte of stryf.

Nowe haue ye hyrde, euery man,
Of the Emperoure Deoclycyan,
And allso of hys fals wyfe,
And howe the chylde come owte of stryffe;
And of the maysters ye haue hyrde,
The wysyste men of alle myddelle-hyrthe,
How they sauyde the chylde so yonge
Thorowe hyr wysdome and hyr connynge.
And nowe ben dede the Maysters Seuyn.
Ihesus, that ys Kyng of Heuyn,
Graunte us er we hens wende
Houselle and shryfte and goode ende,
The blysse of Heuyn aboue,
Ihesu for his modyr loue.

ALBION SERIES OF ANGLO-SAXON AND MIDDLE ENGLISH POETRY

Under the general editorship of JAMES WILSON BRIGHT, Professor of English Literature in Johns Hopkins University, and GEORGE LYMAN KITTREDGE, Professor of English in Harvard University.

THIS series is intended to be exhaustive for the Anglo-Saxon period, and will include the best portion of Middle English poetry up to (but not including) Chaucer. The texts have been critically edited with introductions, explanatory notes, and glossaries that adapt them to the practical needs of the class room.
